Branstad criticizes Democrat tax plan

by Grant Barnes

THE DES Moines Register

October 2, 1986

DES MOINES -- Gov. Terry Branstad said Monday he prefers a '90-style tax cut plan that would ultimately save Iowans $3 billion by fiscal year 1992.

The Iowa governor was critical of the tax reform proposal introduced by the Democratic National Convention in Miami last week.

"I'm very concerned," Branstad said in a speech to the American Farm Bureau Federation in Des Moines, Iowa. "Our tax system is broken, and it's time to turn the page on this tax and budget mess."
Snyder visits UI today

Molly Snyder, who was appointed as the new vice president and provost and as dean of the college of education, will visit the University of Iowa campus on Tuesday for a one-day visit. Snyder, who will begin her duties on July 1, is visiting the campus to familiarize herself with the various academic departments and the university's overall operations.

Election head meeting

Chrischilles' study of drug use by college students was recently released by the University of Iowa. The study, which was conducted over a two-year period, found that the use of illegal drugs among college students continues to be a serious problem. The study also found that the use of alcohol and tobacco is also becoming more prevalent.

Salary in both departments

A recent study by the University of Iowa found that female faculty members earn less than their male counterparts in both the Department of Medicine and the Department of Surgery. The study also found that women are less likely to be promoted to higher ranks.

Police

A man was arrested at a local bar for possession of a firearm. The man, who was carrying a handgun, was found in possession of the weapon while at a local bar. The man was later released on a bond.

Campaign '88

Bob Kerrey, the Democratic candidate for governor, has announced his intention to run for the position. Kerrey, who is currently serving as the mayor of Omaha, has been a strong advocate for education and social welfare programs.

Youth program seeks new housing site after dispute

By Anna Marie Wallace

The Daily Iowan

An Iowa City youth program is looking for a site to house adolescent girls because the current home was sold, leaving the program in the process of finding new housing. The Youth Services Program, Inc., is in need of a new home to move its clients, but the current home housed by the Youth Homes Development Corp. in Iowa City is being sold.

"We're very upset about not getting the house," said Youth Services Program board member John W. Colloton. "We're worried about the children's safety because we're not sure how long it will take to find a new home."

The youth program is currently housed in a building on the University of Iowa campus. The building has been used as a temporary home since 1978. The program provides services to adolescent girls with behavior disorders, who are typically发展到都 or have been developmentally delayed. The program is currently serving 15 girls in the Iowa City area.

The current location is located in a residential neighborhood, and the program is seeking a new home that will better serve its clients. The program is looking for a site that will provide adequate space and support services for the girls.

The program is working with the University of Iowa to find a new location. The university has agreed to provide the program with a new site, but the location has not been determined yet.

The program is also seeking funding to purchase the new location. The program currently receives funding from the state and federal government, as well as from private donations.

The late CIA Director William Casey continues to make waves. His name has been front and center in a controversy over veiled threats made there. In his latest book, Veil: The Secret Wars of the CIA, 1981-1987, Woodward, The Washington Post reporter who helped bring this story to light in a 1986 book, once again in open conflict with the government. The book, compiled with assistance from former CIA director William Colby, has caused a stir in Washington and has been the subject of much debate.

Woodward's book provides a glimpse into the inner workings of the CIA and the political maneuvering that took place during the Reagan administration. The book has been praised for its detailed account of the CIA's role in international affairs and its impact on global politics.

The book has also raised questions about the role of the CIA in the Iran-Contra affair, a scandal that involved the sale of arms to Iran in exchange for the release of American hostages in Lebanon. The profits from the arms sales were used to fund the Contras, a group of rebels in Nicaragua. The scandal ultimately led to the resignation of several high-ranking officials, including President Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz.

In his book, Woodward discusses the role of the CIA in the Iran-Contra affair, including the involvement of the agency in the funneling of American money to the Contras. The book also provides insight into the relationship between the CIA and other government agencies, including the Department of Justice and the Central Intelligence Agency.

Despite the controversy, Woodward's book has been a critical success, and it has been praised for its thorough investigation of the CIA's role in various international affairs.

Dukakis

He won a well-financed campaign — which has often been more about ideology than issues — for one of the most important offices in the country.

"The thing I'm doing is to be a governor," Dukakis said. "The thing I'm working toward is to be a governor who is responsive to the people of Massachusetts."

He continued: "I want to be a governor who works constructively with the other branches of government to make Massachusetts a better place to live and work."
Readings

When asked about teaching at the Writers' Workshop, he prefers to talk about his students' experience first, mentioning some of his notable former students. Then, in reply to another question, he makes a digression about his protected species - a sentence about butterflies. Finally, he returns to the topic of teaching and says something about the importance of feedback.

The future for many players is uncertain as they prepare for the upcoming season. For some, the future may be in the NFL or the NBA, but for others, it may be a career in coaching or business. The decision to play or not play is a tough one, but with the right mindset, they can make the right choice.
Players deserve pension, real fans

T're NFL strike is upon us and here to stay for the long haul. This is where it's at, I'm sure of it. Football is going to take a long time to come back into the stands and toward the lower floor, I plan to be back in my seat next week.

But the strike won't go anywhere. Members of NFL teams, in the past few weeks, have ruled the middle of the field before games and waved flags in a colorful demonstration. This time, they are going to make a statement.

Players hold fast; fans return tickets

The players' strike entered its third week, as the heart of what the players are arguing about is in the players' pensions, drug testing and guaranteed contracts. And it's not measured in football life. And it's not measured at the end of the year. It's measured in not being able to work straight when, as a football player, you can't walk straight.

Players hold fast; fans return tickets

Chances are fans aren't going to take my $16.50 at the game, and no negotiations scheduled. But the strike won't go anywhere. Members of NFL teams, in the past few weeks, have ruled the middle of the field before games and waved flags in a colorful demonstration. This time, they are going to make a statement.

Fry: Dan's

By Eric J. West

During the NFL strike, fans may find themselves with more time to reflect on the game and the people involved. One such person is Dan Fry, owner of the New York Giants. Fry was interviewed recently about his thoughts on the strike and its impact on the team.

"We're all waiting for the players to come back," said Fry. "We want them to come back, and we want them to come back strong. It's been tough on us, but we're hoping for the best."

Fry continued, "I understand the players' concerns. They want more money, and they want better conditions. But we have to remember that we're in this together. We're all trying to make a living.

"It's been a tough time for all of us," said Fry. "But we're hoping for the best. We're hoping that the players will come back and we can get back to playing football.

The players' strike entered its third week, as the heart of what the players are arguing about is in the players' pensions, drug testing and guaranteed contracts. And it's not measured in football life. And it's not measured at the end of the year. It's measured in not being able to work straight when, as a football player, you can't walk straight.

Players hold fast; fans return tickets
