County supervisors ponder building new Butler Bridge

By Craig Sternert

Johnson County Board of Supervisors will hold a public meeting Wednesday to discuss the feasibility of building a new bridge over the North Delaware Street crossing between Iowa City's North Delaware Street and the Coralville

River.

The bridge deck, built by the Johnson County Board of Supervisors, will be removed in the near future.

The board will also set aside 4 p.m. for an informational hearing for people who frequently use the bridge.

Student Senate fills vacancy

Olson appointed to take Saxton's former seat

By Monica Seigel

The Daily Iowan

The Student Senate of the University of Iowa Student Senate Executive Asso- ciate President Scott Larsen presented the unannounced appointment Tuesday of Monica Seigel to the seat for the remainder of the 1987-88 sen- ate year. Larsen made the announcement during the Student Senate Executive Committee meeting.

Seigel, an Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, native, was elected to the senate University Appointments Committee. She is a member of the appoint- ment committee and generally represents students. She has the most qualified credentials.

Tuesday was an all-lower senate, and her lack of experience on the committee should not halt her decision-making factor in fill- ing the executive associate president position, as she is well-versed in the committee as well.

Larsen and Senate President Randy Hewitt in the unannounced appointment Tuesday was asked to resign from the seat of the 1987-88 sen- ate year. Hewitt is a member ofthe Saxton said Tuesday she was...
Plans for deficit reduction floundering

By Kate Tomaselli
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The Soviet government announced Tuesday it would reject the United States' proposal for a new round of cuts in defense spending, a move that could stall efforts to achieve a balanced-budget agreement.

The Soviet declaration came after President Ronald Reagan, speaking in a rare televised address from the Oval Office, renewed his call for a national commitment to fiscal discipline.

"We can no longer afford to squander the wealth of our nation," Reagan said. "We must make the difficult decisions that will lead to a brighter future for all Americans."

The Reagan administration had hoped that the Soviet offer, made in response to the president's speech last week, would provide the momentum needed to move the budget talks forward.

But the Soviet move effectively ended any hope of a quick resolution to the budget impasse.

"We cannot negotiate in good faith with a country that is not prepared to make serious concessions," said White House spokesman Larry Speakes.

The Soviet declaration was a setback for the administration's effort to restore the momentum of the budget talks, which have been slowed by a series of delays and disagreements.

The administration had hoped to reach an agreement by the end of the year, but the new round of talks was unlikely to produce any significant progress.

Meanwhile, the nation's economic prospects continued to deteriorate, with inflation and unemployment remaining high and the budget deficit widening.

"We are facing a serious crisis," said a White House economic aide. "We need to act now to restore confidence in the economy and to give our people a sense of hope."

Reagan selects woman to lead Labor

by Fredrick Johnson

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan, Tuesday nominated Ann Dore McLaughlin, a former undersecretary of the Department of the Interior to a cabinet post, to succeed William Brock III, who was fired over the past week in a Cabinet reshuffle.

Miss McLaughlin, 41, who holds a law degree from Georgetown University, is being confirmed by the Senate, where a vote is expected Wednesday. McLaughlin would replace William Brock III, who was fired over the past week.

Reagan's action came after he was informed of the threat to Brock's job as secretary of labor, officials said.

Reagan, a combative conservative political commentator and television talk show host, is the only woman in the Reagan Cabinet.

McLaughlin noted that the first woman to fill a Cabinet post, Frances Perkins, was a predecessor in the Roosevelt administration, the first woman to undertake this kind of responsibility.

Reagan, who also has served at the Treasury and in public relations posts at the Republican National Committee and at the Treasury but has no professional experience in labor administration, "will give the Labor Department fresh and original thinking," McLaughlin said.

McLaughlin would be the only woman in the Reagan Cabinet.

McLaughlin noted that the first woman to fill a Cabinet post, Frances Perkins, was a predecessor in the Roosevelt administration, the first woman to undertake this kind of responsibility.

"WE'RE GOING TO TAKE A PRETTY GOOD look at her, but it doesn't seem like she's drawing any serious opposition," said Paul Hackett, a spokesman for the Senate Finance Committee, which is headed by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. He said that the panel has not decided when it will hold hearings on the nomination.

McLaughlin is a well-known commentator and television talk show host.

McLaughlin has been defeated twice in primaries in her husband's campaign.

McLaughlin, who also has served as secretary of labor, also has served as a labor mediator, arbitrator and labor commissioner.

With the resignation in career public relations executive, to Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Days of decision

With Iowa's first-in-the-nation caucuses just three months away, political attention is fixated on the nation's heartland. Consequently, polls by The New York Times and CBS News and the Associated Press show a.'

The political attention is, of course, good news for Iowa. Not only does this often offer the first opportunity to hear the voices of those running for the nation's highest elected office, but Iowa's relatively small size allows for individually personal contact with the candidates. But the Iowa caucuses also mean that Iowa has not yet been confirmed in the decision-making process. The general election will fall in November of the next year, and that is when the outcome will be decided.

In the remaining months before the political process shifts into high gear, the voters of the state and the nation should begin to take notice of the subtle — and not so subtle — differences between the candidates. Clearly, the nation's two major parties are split in the air, avoiding the verdict of the crucial undefined vote. That means that the citizens of Iowa remain but a few steps away from a fateful conclusion. State voters now have a chance to actively participate in making the decision in 1988.

Little White lies

On Monday, White House and congressional officials moved quickly to quell reports that Iowa State Social Security benefits and services were being used to fund the federal deficit. According to White House spokesman Martin Fleischer, "The president's policy is very strong that Social Security is not one of the programs that we should be tampering with. It is a matter of national concern."

In response to the White House's strong statements, the Associated Press reported that "Social Security is not one of the programs that we should be tampering with. It is a matter of national concern."

In this context, it is worth noting that the White House's strong statements and the AP's report are not so far apart. Both contain the same message: that Social Security is not one of the programs that we should be tampering with. It is a matter of national concern.

But there is a difference between the two. The White House's statement is a general policy statement, while the AP's report is more specific, referring to a particular program. In other words, the White House is asserting that Social Security is a matter of national concern, while the AP is reporting that it is not one of the programs that we should be tampering with. This difference is important because it highlights the way in which different sources of information can sometimes be at odds with each other.

In the past, such disagreements between government officials and news organizations have sometimes been a source of frustration for those trying to find out the truth. However, in this case, the two statements are not at odds. Both convey the same message: that Social Security is a matter of national concern.

So what we see is Reagan's "moral" rationalities telling citizens that the federal deficit is a matter of national concern, while the AP's report is more specific, referring to a particular program. In other words, the White House is asserting that Social Security is a matter of national concern, while the AP is reporting that it is not one of the programs that we should be tampering with. This difference is important because it highlights the way in which different sources of information can sometimes be at odds with each other.

The problem is that while the White House's moral rationalities are telling citizens that the federal deficit is a matter of national concern, the AP's report is more specific, referring to a particular program. In other words, the White House is asserting that Social Security is a matter of national concern, while the AP is reporting that it is not one of the programs that we should be tampering with. This difference is important because it highlights the way in which different sources of information can sometimes be at odds with each other.

Helen Thomas

With the Soviet Union and the United States both having programs that we should be tampering with, it is clear that we need a better way of looking at the world. One way to do this is to consider the differences between the two countries more objectively about each other.

For example, with the Soviets running for the nation's highest elected office, but Iowa's citizens to take notice of the subtle — and not so subtle — differences between the candidates. Clearly, the nation's two major parties are split in the air, avoiding the verdict of the crucial undefined vote. That means that the citizens of Iowa remain but a few steps away from a fateful conclusion. State voters now have a chance to actively participate in making the decision in 1988.

A good exchange

A recently unnoticed agreement on the exchange of students between the United States and the Soviet Union has gone unnoticed by the general public. This agreement, which has been in place for more than a decade, is a good example of what can be accomplished when governments work together.

The agreement began as a traditional goodwill gesture by the Soviet Union to present itself as a friend of the United States and to promote cultural exchange. However, over time, the agreement has evolved into a valuable exchange of ideas and experiences.

Under the terms of the agreement, students from the United States are able to study in the Soviet Union, and vice versa. This exchange has allowed students from both countries to exposes themselves to different cultures and ways of thinking.

The exchange has also been beneficial for the students themselves. Many of them have reported that their experiences abroad have helped them to develop greater empathy and understanding of other cultures.

Therefore, it is important that this agreement continue to be supported and that efforts be made to expand it in the future.
Weinberger exit won't change arms talks

By Robert C. Tuth

WASHINGTON — The expected resignation of Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger from the Reagan administration will not alter arms control policies, but it is likely to make member nations more cautious about negotiating deals they believe are disadvantageous. Weinberger's profound suspicions of the Soviet Union might weaken any U.S. effort to make a new strategic arms agreement with Moscow.

"I doubt that his resignation will make any substantial difference," said Leslie Gelb of the Council on Foreign Relations. "But this is not to say that it won't alter the dynamics." Weinberger, who has been widely regarded as the administration's most influential brake on the arms control process, was particularly outspoken in his opposition to arms control negotiations or agreements with the Soviets.

"Weinberger was not so much opposed to arms agreements per se as he was afraid that such agreements would lead to a slippery slope toward a new era of defense in which the Soviets would be better armed and support for large U.S. defense budgets would disappear," said Gelb.

"Other arms control initiatives, such as the one currently under discussion, and other activities that benefit the U.S., would likely be put on hold," said John Mearsheimer of the University of Wisconsin. He noted that China, India, and Pakistan are likely to become more aggressive in their pursuit of nuclear weapons and ballistic missiles. "Weinberger's departure could make it easier for Congress to pass arms control legislation, but it's unlikely that it will result in any new agreements that would benefit the U.S."

McGwire wins rookie award

BY NEW YORK CITY: (AP) - Mark McGwire, the Oakland Athletics first baseman who broke the rookie home run record early in the season, was named the National League's Rookie of the Year by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

"A lot of people kept yelling, 'Did I hear that right?'" McGwire said when he learned of the award. "I think I'm going to have to pinch myself a few times because this is all so new for me."

The 23-year-old McGwire, who led the league with 58 home runs and 133 runs batted in, received 16 of 15 voting. The voting was announced Thursday.

"I'm very honored," he said. "This is a great honor for me and my family."

"He's had a tremendous year," said John Currier, the Athletics hitting coach. "He's become a leader in this clubhouse, and I think it's been a great year for him."

Getting some kicks

McGwire has the credentials to win the National League's most valuable player award this year, said Larry MacPhail, one of the Hawkeyes' all-time great players.

"He's got the same numbers as the M.V.P. candidate in the American League," MacPhail said. "He's hit .315 and has 100 home runs and 130 runs batted in."

"I think he's going to win the award," MacPhail said. "I think he's going to win it by a good margin."

A total of 1,107 votes were cast for her, and the final tally for the year-round saw her as the most outstanding player of the season.

"I'm very happy," she said. "I've been working hard all year to get here."

"She's a great athlete," said her coach, Ray Johnson. "She has a natural ability to lead the team, and she always gives her best."

"I'm very proud of her," said her mother, Barbara Bar. "She's been working hard all year to get here."

Football

This year's Northwestern team is one of the strongest in recent memory, said coach Mike MacPhail.

"They're a good team," he said. "They have a lot of experience, and they play hard."

"I think we're going to win the game," he said. "I think we're going to play well."

Tar Heels’ Reid, Bucknall suspended

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (UPI) — North Carolina basketball players L.D. Reid and David Bucknall have been suspended for the Tar Heel season opener against Syracuse Nov. 21, Coach Dean Smith announced Tuesday.

The suspensions came after Reid and Bucknall were charged with batsman crimes during an alleged altercation with a North Carolina State student at a Raleigh night club.

Smith said he was处罚ing the pair as a "precautionary measure." "I had to suspend them to get the message across," Smith said.

"Although the players were verbally harassed and pushed in an effort to prevent some kind of a response, I am making disciplinary steps because they got involved," he added.

Smith said both the players understood the reason for their actions.

The suspensions came after a year of growth for both C.H. State student and Reid is accused of spiking in the student’s face.

Neither player commented Tuesday on the incident.

The Daily Iowan

_The Daily Iowan_ doesn't exactly have the reputation of Cable's, but the fine audience that attended the members of the UI student jazz ensemble, Tuesday night, Johnson County Landmark, 215 S. Linn St., was more than we could have anticipated.

PERHAPS THE MOST impressive work of the evening was delivered by Juanita Valdez, a former University of Iowa tenor saxophone player, Brett Johnson, who played the soprano saxophone, and the University of Iowa's Chicago syndrome, which is a style of music that is often played at jazz festivals and competitions.

On the other hand, the second of the next two numbers, "Dance in Rainbow," was a gregariously energetic, driving, and charming way to end the evening. The title was inspired by the colors of the rainbow, and the music was a perfect way to end the night.

Los Lobos brings basic rock to Hancher Auditorium show

By Jeff Rynott

Los Lobos, the LA band whose flagship album, "Bazaar California," was covered by Rolling Stone with the line, "Los Lobos will be the most important band you've never heard," have been described as a "rock 'n' roll band" with influences ranging from Puerto Rican dance to Spanish gypsy music.

The band's music is a blend of rock, blues, and Latin rhythms, creating a unique sound that has earned them a dedicated following. Their live performances are known for their energy and the band's ability to engage the audience.

The Los Lobos show is expected to be a high-energy event, with the band delivering a setlist that will likely include hits like "Everybody Wants to Rule the World," "Looking for a Love," and "The Pearl." Fans can expect a night of great music and an unforgettable experience. Don't miss this opportunity to see one of the most influential bands of the 1980s perform live at Hancher Auditorium.

Los Lobos will be joined by guest musician, Chris Hidalgo, who will add a new dimension to the band's sound with his accordion playing. This will be a night not to be missed by fans of all genres of music.
