GO柏ckers as Kennedy nomination nears

By Scott Noller

The Supreme Court decided on the city's 1st million Iowa State and Engineering Center on Tuesday. The majority of the building, the largest state-trust building, is under construction. The court was deciding on the size of the building and the amount of money needed to build it. The project was approved by the Iowa State Legislature and was expected to cost $150 million. The court ruled in favor of the university, allowing it to proceed with the project. The decision was a victory for the university, which had been working on the project for several years. The building, which will house the Iowa State University's College of Engineering, is expected to be completed in 1990. The court's decision was welcomed by university officials, who had been concerned about the project's funding. The decision was seen as a positive step for Iowa State University and its efforts to expand its facilities.

Regents see higher salaries as top priority for next year

By Scott Hauser

Increasing faculty and staff salaries and benefits at the major universities remain the top priority of this year's Board of Regents. The board approved an across-the-board 13 percent raise for professors and staff for 1988-89.

"It's a long time coming," said UI President Philip徘said the regents will need to increase salaries, $12.2 million for professional and scientific staff, $10.6 million for general service staff increases and about $2 million for health and dental insurance.

The UI, Iowa State University, and Northern Iowa officials have repeatedly stressed to the regents the need for faculty salaries by 13 percent for the next 10 years, according to the regents district plan.

The third priority is $1 million to increase any increases and fringe benefits by 13 percent and $3 million to finance library acquisitions, supplies and equipment.

Receiving $350 million for faculty salary increases, $350 million for professional and scientific staff, $30 million for general service staff increases and about $2 million for health and dental insurance.

NATIVE AMERICANS WAVE BEADS FOR VETS

By Rebecca HimlChoot

Calling government "the main source of repressed rage in the world," congressional witness Walter Williams testified for a government intervention in the American experience before a crowd of about 100 at the University of Iowa on Tuesday night at the Union Main Ballroom.

Williams, a distinguished professor of economics at George Mason University and the author of several books and articles advocating a free enterprise system, argued for the need for less government intervention in the economy.

"Free enterprise is threatened not because of the failure of capitalism, but because of the failings of those who are responsible for it," Williams said. "We're seeing that today in the form of government intervention in the economy."

Williams stressed the need for less government control over businesses and the economy, arguing that the government's interference is a barrier to innovation and growth.

"The government is not capable of making decisions that are as good as the decisions made by the market. The market is a much better mechanism for allocating resources," Williams said.

Williams also discussed the impact of government intervention on the economy, pointing to examples of government programs that have failed to achieve their intended goals.

"The government's interventions in the economy have often failed, and in many cases have actually hurt the economy," Williams said.

Williams ended his testimony with a call for a return to free enterprise principles and a reduction in government intervention in the economy.

Sanctions are not working

Malcolm Wallop

WASHINGTON — As the president's special envoy to South Africa, I asked his office to explain why we are reluctant to impose sanctions on South Africa. While I understand that sanctions are intended to pressure the South African government to change its policy on apartheid, I believe the South African government should not be allowed to escape responsibility. Specifically, I believe that the South African government is responsible for the continued existence of apartheid.

The South African government has been able to maintain apartheid despite the fact that it is a minority government. The white population is less than 20% of the total population, yet the government has been able to maintain apartheid.

Moreover, the South African government has been able to maintain apartheid despite the fact that it is a minority government. The white population is less than 20% of the total population, yet the government has been able to maintain apartheid.

I believe that the South African government should be held accountable for the continued existence of apartheid. The United States should impose sanctions on South Africa to pressure the government to change its policy on apartheid.
