The University of Iowa's search firm has identified at least six candidates for a provost, according to an official from James Freeman, but admitted that only seven names were submitted for the search firm to interview.

"Vice President Houston has been instrumental in the search process," said an official from James Freeman. "He has a lot of experience in the field and he is well respected by our departments."

"We will do our best effort to evaluate the candidates and we use one method from here on," said the official.

"I can only say that we are currently working on the search process," said the official.

"In fact, we are currently evaluating the candidates," said the official.

"I will not release the name of the search firm according to the letter," said the official.

"The remaining six candidates will be reviewed by the board and released Thursday by the university, as confirmed in the letter," said the official.

"The letter was sent to the board on Monday," said the official.

"I am not sure how many candidates have been identified in the letter," said the official.

"I do not know how many candidates are involved in the search firm," said the official.

Metro
City, city, county fight on over election charges

By Cindy Barron
The Daily Iowan
The local option sales tax was defeated in Johnson County on Nov. 6, and local city officials do not agree that a 5 percent sales tax is the answer.

COUNTY OFFICIALS said at the meeting that next year convicted of fraud by the county treasury department, and several other subdivisions in the county did not want to vote on it. "It's a position that Iowa City should pay for this election," Administrator Tim McCullough said.

THE GOWNS governing the county sales tax changes states only a political subdivision with more than the amount of population in the county may call for a countywide election. The local option tax was called for by the city council during July 1987 to offset a $500,000 projected deficit for Iowa City.

"The people of the county were forced to see in an election whether it was a wise financial decision," McCullough said. "This is the kind of local option tax is designed, only Iowa City City Council elected to approve it. Other subdivisions in the county would not call for a countywide election with enough population, he added.

IOWA CITY Attorney Tim McCullough and the legislation for local option taxation is "pretty much silent" on the issue of who will pay the bill for the election. The people who have signed the petition, said he is hopeful that a '95 percent local option tax will pass.

On Oct. 6 of this year, the local option sales tax was debated, raising 97 percent of the vote in Iowa City, Fairfield and Hiawatha. The proposal for the tax was defeated with 17 percent of the county, "the tax proposal is not going to reach out to 63 percent in the county," and was defeated 10-7 to 2.

Iowa City has not officially taken a position on the matter, Iowa City Mayor Mary Ankrum and Bruce Bishop will be presenting the show in Old Brick, tonight at 7:30 and 9:30. Applications for the walk are available locally through Science and Peace Concil and the presentation, said she is "interested in the show." It will be a slide and music presentation, said she is "interested in the show." It will be a slide and music presentation, Patty will be offering, "It will give audience members a better understanding of the Soviet Union."

For more information, call 335-6030.

IOWA CITY Councilman Joe Hall was called for by the City Council. The election for the 1 percent local option tax is designed, only Iowa City City Council elected to approve it. Other subdivisions in the county would not call for a countywide election with enough population, he added.

BGS degree's value upped by study plans

New leadership

Three months ago, The Daily Iowan editorial board unanimously agreed that the next UI president must possess specific qualities in order to effectively lead the UI. The board decided the next president must be responsive, display a strong commitment to liberal disciplines, have a deep understanding of students and students with students and faculty and be responsive by members of the UI board.

The two current finalists — Nina Hasselbring of the University of Arizona and Francesca Messineo of the University of Kansas — appear to have these important qualities. Both candidates have shown they are leaders of the university community and the academic community through their involvement in the search committee, their interviews and their extensive research on UI.

Students have been left out of the search process. The UI board will interview the candidates in secret. It is up to the UI board to decide which skills and qualities are needed by students. The UI board should listen to students on the UI campus. The UI board should be flexible enough to choose a leader that is not necessarily the most similar to the current president.

The UI board should ask the candidates to address the students in their interviews. The UI board should ask the candidates to focus on their views and ideas for the UI. The UI board should make sure the final candidate is responsive to students. A key issue in the search process is to make students feel heard and respected.

Michael Humes

Humes's appointment as president has sparked controversy among students and faculty. Humes is known for his strong stance on free speech and his opposition to the student body. Humes has been branded as a conservative and has faced criticism for his views on tuition and academic freedom.

Humes has been an advocate for free speech and has stated that universities should not be used as a political platform. He has also been critical of the UI's policies on free speech, saying that they are too restrictive.

Humes's views on tuition have also been controversial. He has argued that tuition should be increased to cover the cost of running universities.

Despite his controversial views, Humes has been praised for his commitment to academic freedom and for his work in suppressing the boycotting of Israeli goods. His appointment as president has been met with mixed reactions, with some students and faculty seeing it as a step towards a more conservative campus, while others see it as a victory for academic freedom.

Letters

No forethought

To the Editor:

I read the letter by S. A. Goldberg, "The Real Ronald Reagan," with interest. Goldberg makes a valid point about the shallowness of Reagan's approach to issues, but I believe Goldberg is missing the main point.

Reagan's approach to issues is not a matter of forethought or lack thereof. Reagan's approach is a matter of principle. Reagan believes in limited government and individual freedom. He believes in the free market and the power of the people. Goldberg's criticism is based on a misunderstanding of Reagan's views. Reagan's approach is a matter of principle, not a matter of forethought.

Sincerely,

Protest

On the campus of the University of Iowa, students, faculty, and staff are engaged in a variety of activities as part of the broader social and political context of the time. The image includes text that refers to protests and movements, such as the Women's Movement, and the involvement of university students and faculty in these activities.

"In this country, we are not going to allow the thing to be closed on equal educational opportunity to our women and to our historic right to the education of our daughters," the battle cry announced.

Protestors believe that the current situation regarding women's education is unjust. They are fighting to regain Title IX, a federal law that was passed to ensure equal educational opportunities for women and to prevent gender discrimination in education. The protestors are determined to see that their voices are heard and that their rights are protected.

"We are here to fight for our rights," said one of the protestors. "We want to be treated with the same respect and dignity as our male counterparts."

The protest is a culmination of years of advocacy and activism by women's rights groups. The students and faculty are committed to making their voices heard and to ensuring that their demands are met.

"We are not going to be silenced," said another protestor. "We are going to continue to fight until our rights are realized."

The protest is not just about women's rights; it is about the future of gender equality in education. The students and faculty are demanding that the rights of women are protected and that they are treated with the same respect and dignity as their male counterparts. The protest is a testament to the power of collective action and the importance of standing up for what is right.

"We are not going to give up," said one of the protestors. "We are going to continue to fight until our rights are realized."

The protest is a call to action for all who believe in the importance of equal educational opportunities for women. It is a reminder of the power of collective action and the importance of standing up for what is right.

"We are not going to be silenced," said another protestor. "We are going to continue to fight until our rights are realized."

American, Russian laud peace in song

By Richard Harrington

WASHINGTON — Cell is good singing, but a new single appears to be fusing American and Russian rock songs. The song is "The Fatherland Calls" (opera), by Berndson and Sh Repeat, and is being performed by the New York City Opera at the War Memorial Opera House on Saturday, March 11.

"The Fatherland Calls" is a patriotic song that first appeared in 1914 as a call to duty during World War I. The new version, by Berndson and Sh Repeat, has been adapted for a contemporary audience and is performed in both English and Russian.

"The song is a powerful reminder of the importance of unity and harmony in times of crisis," said Berndson. "It speaks to the need for collective action and the strength that comes from working together towards a common goal."
