Trial reaches end; Mecham is impeached

FREQUENTLY asked. But a week ago, Gov. Mecham was convicted on two articles of impeachment in a trial before the Arizona Senate, becoming the first U.S. governor removed from office by impeachment in the first 50 years of the Republic.

But in this trial, as the Senate decided against hearing Mecham face state office for life, it was not possible for Mecham to run for office again in the state. If Mecham is ever convicted of the charges of bribery, he will be barred from office for life. He is also a candidate for the U.S. Senate in a race held all of the state.

Mecham, 43, a former Republican who also was a registered Democrat, said he would run in the 1988 primary election, was convicted in a 21-0 vote by the state-controlled Senate on Feb. 5.

The immediate effect of the impeachment, if confirmed, is that the state will suffer a financial loss of $600,000 in the state retirement fund. But it is not clear whether that was one of the factors that was considered.

Arkansas Gov. Dave McDaniel, who was impeached and convicted in a February trial in the state, is bidding for their party's nomination.

The charges were filed in February against four members of the state legislature and two members of the state government.

But the Arkansas trial, the first of its kind in the state, has resulted in a financial loss of $600,000 in state funds.

The Senate then voted on the charges and Mecham's conviction was confirmed by a vote of 21-0.

But the Senate then voted to convict and remove Mecham from office.

The state's constitution requires Mecham to resign, and he did so in March, leaving the governorship to his successor, Rose Mofford, a Democrat who had been a member of the state legislature.

Hancher named among best arts-presenting organizations

By Jay Easter

The Daily Iowan

On Monday, the Iowa City Community Foundation announced that Hancher was one of only two arts organizations to be chosen among the 21 arts organizations selected to be profiled in a forthcoming book by the Iowa City Community Foundation.

Branstad said he was pleased with the selection but that it was not surprising, given the organization's history.

"I think that is very important," Branstad said. "Hancher has been recognized in this way for all of the meaningful things that they do have been done over the years."

Branstad said the organization is known for its frequent and frequent use by community groups.

"We hope that we can grow and demonstrate that," Branstad said, adding that the organization has also been successful in its role in outdoor venues.

"When you're at the UI, you can have been involved with many different venues," Branstad said. "Because we are in a university setting, we have the potential to be successful in many different settings."

Branstad starts task force to stem youth exodus

He said many high school and college graduates are leaving because Iowa is seen as a poor state and by promoting the professional fields emphasized by the state's colleges and universities.

"From 1980 through 1987, we've had an industrial loss in population due to the problems of agriculture and everything related," he said.

"We've also seen manufacturing in small businesses. It's a degree to which better opportunities are available in other parts of the country," he said.

"UNFORGETTABLE," in the past we have not done as good of a job as we could to do in the future of providing job opportunities in the growing fields that bright youths are getting their training," he continued.

The Branstad panel will be coordinated by Russ Cross of Newroz Business Credit in Des Moines and David Fischer, an Iowa State University engineering student.

"We're taking their talent elsewhere because they feel challenging opportunities don't exist in this state. I don't want to leave Iowa," he said.

U.S.: Economic blockade is possible for Panama

By Jim Anderson

United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is considering a near-total economic blockade of Panama, officials said Monday. The United States is offering to lift the blockade for the court of military necessity, if the United States can be assured of the good faith of Panama's military leaders, according to sources in the State Department.

If the United States finds that it is not receiving assurances of good faith, it will impose economic sanctions on Panama. The military leaders of Panama and the United States are meeting this week to discuss the possibility of such an economic embargo.

The United States has been offering economic aid to Panama in the past, but has not been able to agree on a formula that satisfies both nations. Panama has rejected economic aid from the United States because it is perceived as an interference in its domestic affairs.

The United States is also considering the possibility of military action against Panama if the military leaders fail to agree to economic sanctions. The United States has not ruled out the possibility of military action, but is seeking a diplomatic solution to the current crisis.

The United States is also considering the possibility of economic sanctions against other countries that support military action against Panama.

Mecham

A THIRD article charging Mecham with accepting a $30,000 campaign check was dropped but was kept in to avoid the possibility of its being used in either the 1986 or the 1988 gubernatorial campaigns.

But the recall was forced by the collection of more than 70,000 signatures by the American Friends Service Committee, which has offices in 15 U.S. cities.

"We had specific allegations," said Mecham, who until recently was a state lobbyist hearing British Lady Margaret that he would be back in his office in three days.

University sued for ‘sexism’ in athletic funds allocation

Temple charged with favoring men’s sports

By John W. Martin

United Press International

Proponents of equal rights for women, armed with a court ruling this week, must now decide how to respond to a lawsuit brought by Temple University.

The complaint, filed in Philadelphia by the National Women’s Law Center, alleges that Temple has engaged in a pattern of favoring men’s athletic programs over women’s. The suit seeks damages and a court order requiring Temple to change its policies.

Temple, a major university in the Northeast, has long been known for its strong athletic programs. But the suit alleges that the school has repeatedly violated Title IX, the federal law that requires educational institutions to provide equal opportunities for men and women in their athletic programs.

The suit, filed in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, claims that Temple has failed to provide equal opportunities for women’s athletics programs. It also alleges that Temple has discriminated against female athletes by failing to provide adequate facilities, coaching, and financial support.

The suit follows a series of legal challenges to Temple’s athletic programs in recent years. In 1990, the school reached a settlement with the U.S. Department of Education that required it to provide equal opportunities for women’s athletics. But the suit alleges that Temple has not followed through on the settlement.

Temple has not yet responded to the suit, and it is not clear how the school will respond.

The suit is the latest in a series of legal challenges to the way universities handle their athletic programs. In recent years, a number of universities have faced similar lawsuits, and many have been forced to make significant changes to their athletic programs.

The suit against Temple is likely to be closely watched by other universities, as it could set a precedent for similar lawsuits. It is not clear how the court will rule on the suit, but it is likely to be a major battle over the rights of female athletes.

The suit could have significant implications for universities across the country. It is not clear how the court will rule on the suit, but it is likely to be a major battle over the rights of female athletes.

IN CINCINNATI, Kan. Daniels, after hitting into double plays his first two hits of the season, cracked a triple-hitting hitter and the game-winning hit a single in the 11th inning Monday, winning the Cincinnati 1-0 to be a tie over the Iowa Cardinals.

The home run was not enough to wait before a crowd 5,000 that set a attendance record in the Iowa--Western National League President Barrier. The Cardinals went on and won the Eastern first half. In the second game, Daniels' first pitch Monday landed in the hands of the home plate umpire to win the ball game for the Cardinals.

THE TRIBUTES provided a fitting tribute to a great Black Hawk. The Iowa--Western President said the following:

"We congratulate you on your success. We hope you will continue to be a success in your future endeavors."

The Big Ten conference baseball team played in a tournament game on Tuesday, May 2, 1988.

The Hawkeyes are coming off a disappointing finish at the Big Ten tournament last weekend. Iowa was eliminated from contention for the conference title, but managed to hold their own and finish 4-5 in the tournament.

The Hawkeyes played well and had a lot of ups and downs in their tournament games. They played well in their first game against Northwestern, but then had a rough game in their second game against Michigan State.

In their third game against Minnesota, the Hawkeyes played well and were able to hold their own, but then had another tough game against Ohio State.

The Hawkeyes finished the tournament with a win against Purdue, but were eliminated from contention for the conference title with a loss to Iowa State in the final game.
