Range draws fire

By Heather Maher
The Daily Iowan

A proposed outdoor firing range on the Iowa City landfill to train local law enforcement personnel has angered some residents whose property adjoins the planned site.

At a meeting of the Johnson County Board of Supervisors Tuesday, the board heard arguments from local law enforcement officials as well as from concerned residents who live in close proximity to the five-acre tract of land where the range is being planned.

Neva Haman, whose land is adjacent to the landfill, expressed concern with the noise level the firing range would produce. "I'm not concerned about the safety of it because I believe it will be safe," she said. "But no matter how safe it is, the noise will still be there."

The site is being planned as an alternative to the current officer training program, which involves having personnel commute twice a year to Cedar Rapids to practice on the Cedar Rapids Police Department's practice range. According to Detective Michael Goldberg, head of training for the Iowa City Police Department, the current plan adds expenses for taxpayers.

"Every time we go up there, we lose one-and-a-half hours of officer time at a considerable cost to the city and taxpayers," he said. "By having a local firing range, we could do on-site training and have officers who are being trained still respond to duty calls."

Iowa City Police Chief Harvey Miller said he also feels a local firing range is greatly needed to "save big bucks" and that the landfill is an ideal site for it.

"Right now we're paying our people overtime to go to Cedar Rapids," he said. "And if we built the range some other place, we would have to pay big construction costs."

The advantage of constructing the firing range on the landfill is that it is already owned by the city, has wide-open spaces and could be worked by using dirt already normally unearthed by landfill operations.

Floyd Pelkey, assistant supervisor of Iowa City's Solid Waste Division, said he is not worried about the plans and feels the construction of the range will not affect daily landfill operations.

"As we trim our dirt normally, we would have to haul it anyway, so we could just as easily move it to where they need it," Pelkey said. "It's not in our way," he added, referring to the site. "It won't hinder our flow of operations in any way, so I have no problem with it going in."

Goldberg assured the board that considerable effort had been put into the search for an appropriate site, and the firing range developers were sensitive to the needs of the area residents.

But Mary Hebl, a resident of property adjacent to the landfill, said she was still concerned about the plan. She told the board that she was worried that property values would decrease if the range were allowed to be built.

"I think the property will be devalued — we've got the BMX raceway and the model airplane field now," she said. "What's to stop more noisy things like this from going in?"

Haman said approximately eight residents who live near the landfill are opposed to the planned range. She added that she felt if a developer should ever want to build in the area, no one would want to purchase the homes.

Regents to assign $2 million in lottery funds for research

By John Bartenhagen
The Daily Iowan

The appropriation of $2 million in lottery monies for research at the three state universities is expected to be approved at the state Board of Regents meeting in Sioux City today and tomorrow.

According to regents documents, the UI is expected to receive more than $1.3 million of the total, with Iowa State University expected to receive $185,000 and the University of Northern Iowa $500,000.

The $2 million in funding is part of a total $7 million in appropriations made to the Lottery Research and Development account for fiscal year 1988.

The state Legislature has already earmarked $5 million in lottery research funds for projects at Iowa State and UNI, with ISU receiving $4.75 million of that total.

The UI has submitted six research and development proposals totaling almost $2 million for the regents' approval. According to regents documents, four of those proposals are to be recommended for funding, including:

- A $325,000 request for a research and development program in biochemical engineering. The program would focus on applying biochemical engineering to produce new high-valued products from corn and soybean oils and wastes; to remove toxic chemicals from soil and water; and to develop new medical diagnostics.

- A $528,982 request for the development of a three-dimensional dynamic morphology machine. According to the UI's funding application, the system is expected to lead to significant advances in understanding leukemia and related cancers.

- A $225,000 request for a capital markets institute. The purpose of the institute would be to promote both the growth of the financial services industry in Iowa and the effective use of financial markets.

- A $230,000 request for a regional tissue culture and hybridoma facility. The facility would be used in the production of tissue culture reagents and monoclonal antibodies.

- A $500,000 request for a computer technology center and a $127,000 request for a screening program for carries high-risk individuals are not recommended for approval.

Also on the agenda for the regents meeting is a request by UI Hospitals and Clinics for $15 million to build a new operating room suite and cafeteria.

The project is to include a 25-room operating suite, a 30-bed post-anesthesia care unit and support space built on the fifth and sixth floors of the Colleton Pavilion Clinic Wing.

The UI also requests that it be allowed to establish a school for gifted students on the UI campus.

The school would be named the Connie Balin National Center for Gifted Education and would be paid for by gifts, grants and a $750,000 appropriation from the state Legislature.

The UI will also ask the regents to double the price of parking violations on the UI campus with the increases to go into effect at the beginning of the next school year.

One item not on the agenda for the regents meeting is the report on the proposed UI Laser Center. The report on design development for the center was withdrawn, according to UI Director of Planning and Administrative Services Dick Gibson.

Officials request cutbacks during warm weather

By Jay Casini
The Daily Iowan

As temperatures soared over 100 degrees in Iowa City for the second day in a row Tuesday, the extended wave of blistering temperatures has forced Iowa City officials to ask residents to conserve water.

Ed Moreno, assistant superintendent of the Iowa City Water Department, said the department is asking people to voluntarily curtail water consumption for the duration of the heat wave.

"At this time the Iowa City Water Department is requesting the water consumers of Iowa City to conserve water usage during the drought we are currently experiencing," Moreno said.

The temperature in Iowa City again set a record Tuesday as it reached 101 degrees for a second day in a row.

Moreno said the high temperatures have not caused critical water shortages yet, but said shortages could occur if conservation steps are not followed.

"Curtailling of lawn watering, car washing and other conservation measures such as economizing in home usage and garden watering is being requested in order to assist the water department to meet higher than normal water demand," Moreno said. Moreno said city water and fire officials were concerned about "the adequacy of reserve water quantities should a building or brush fire occur that would need a large amount of water to put it out."

Iowa City Fire Marshal Larry Kinney said the fire department hasn't experienced any significant problems related to the heat wave yet, but said continued high temperatures could be dangerous.

"If you look at the realistic figures, we're all going to feel the effects of the heat and water drought sooner or later," Kinney said.

According to Moreno, the extreme temperatures and low river flow are increasing algae activity in the Iowa River. Moreno said the water department has initiated treatment changes to minimize taste and odor problems caused by the increased algae growth, but said an increase in taste and odor problems does not negatively affect the safety of the water.

Iowa-Illinois Gas & Electric Company has also asked customers to curtail consumption during peak usage hours.

The peak alert, which is automatically enacted by the Iowa City Utilities Board when the temperature exceeds 95 degrees, requests

Local officials baffled by suicide increases

By Traci Auble
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City has experienced an unusually high number of suicides in the past week, but local mental health officials say the suicides aren't necessarily part of a trend.

In the past week, five persons have been involved in suicide incidents. On June 15, a UI Hospitals and Clinics nurse's aide, Brian Diggins, 26, was found dead of suffocation in a hospital restroom.

On June 16, Iowa City residents Cecilia L. Williams, 40; Delbert Williams, 31; and Ronald D. Phillips, 37, were found dead in a car parked in a field 1 mile west of Coralville. They were victims of carbon monoxide poisoning.

The fifth suicide was an attempt Saturday night by a 15-year-old who jumped off the parking ramp on the corner of Linn and Burlington streets.

Iowa City Crisis Center Program Director Mary Martinez said the high number of suicides in the past week is unusual in that this is not generally the time of year when stress and depression are highest.

She added that she was not aware of any reasons why the five chose to commit suicide publicly.

"This is not a typical time of year for an increased rate of suicide," Martinez said. "But people who commit suicide are usually expressing anger — it's their way to communicate to people."

Most people may think a Midwestern town or city wouldn't be stressful, but Martinez said Iowa City is actually an area of high stress.

"College students are a high-risk group, and so are people in the

Running on coal

Fluidized bed boiler helps UI rely 95 percent on coal

By Paula Roesler
The Daily Iowan

UI Physical Plant officials expect the UI to burn 140,000 tons of coal in 1989, bringing to 95 percent the UI's dependence on coal as an energy source.

But a new fluidized bed boiler — currently being installed and to be in operation by December of this year — will save the UI an average of $2 million per year over the boiler's expected life of 25 years, UI Physical Plant Associate Director for Utilities John Schenk said.

"By using coal not only are we relying on a product from within this country, but we are saving money for the university by using it," Schenk said.

The high-tech boiler cost about $12 million, he said. But the overall project cost, including a new coal handling system, a new water treatment system and a water-conserving closed loop cooling system, is $29 million, he said.

The new boiler, now being installed in the new Physical Plant addition, will be able to burn 50,000 tons of the 140,000 tons of coal expected to be used in fiscal year 1989; the other 90,000 tons will be burned in the five oil- or gas-fired boilers already operating in the Physical Plant on the corner of Burlington Street and Riverside Drive, Schenk said.

"The biggest problem we have in this country as a result of coal is the acid rain (which is caused in part by sulfur dioxide pollutants in the air)," Schenk said. "The fluidized bed boiler that we're going to be using is actually going to be improving on that because the SO₂ emissions out of that boiler are considerably lower than the other boilers that we have."

The five boilers now in operation currently burn an inexpensive Kentucky coal, but the new boiler may be burning Iowa coal, Schenk said. The original five boilers aren't designed to burn high-sulfur Iowa coal, he added.

According to Mary Howes, a research geologist for the Iowa Department of Natural Resources Iowa City Bureau, the market for fossil fuels is struggling, especially in Iowa, because other states have the capacity to produce more coal with higher quality. But new technology will make it possible to use higher-sulfur coal with less pollution, she said.

The pollutants of high-sulfur coal are potentially more harmful to the environment than are pollutants of coal with less sulfur, but if it's possible to treat the high-sulfur coal or its pollutants economically before releasing by-products into the air, money can be saved by using the lower grade, high-sulfur coal.

According to environmental engineer Dan Rodriguez of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's air compliance division in Kansas City, Kan., until the mid-1980s EPA officials felt that most high-sulfur coal should be washed before use or that coal-burning plants should be required to install scrubbers in their furnaces, but he said that line of thinking has changed. Now the EPA allows some plants to use limestone in lieu of smokes-tack scrubbers to reduce the amount of pollutants released into the air, he said.

The new boiler will reduce sulfur emission by adding lime to the coal prior to the burning process. The limestone reacts with and neutral-izes the sulfur so the coal's by-product isn't as harmful.

The EPA approved the UI's new boiler in June 1987, after the boiler underwent "prevention of significant deterioration of air quality" tests, Rodriguez said.

The new boiler and the type of coal it will process had to pass emission-level evaluations for the following pollutants: sulfur dioxide, nitrous dioxide, carbon monoxide, fluorine, berylline and particulate matter such as ash before receiving approval, he said.

The EPA sets pollutant emission limits based on the type of coal to be used and the particular plant's ability to use their chosen brand of Iowa-Illinois customers asked to conserve

Iowa-Illinois Gas & Electric Co. has asked area customers to conserve electricity during daylight hours.

To help reduce peak electric demands, Iowa-Illinois is asking customers to avoid using high-wattage appliances such as air conditioners and electric clothes dryers during daylight hours.

Customers can also reduce electric demand by turning their air conditioner up a few degrees or by running the air conditioner intermittently.

The peak alert will remain in effect in Iowa City as long as the temperature remains above 95 degrees.

Events held for Gay and Lesbian Pride Week

The Iowa City Gay and Lesbian Pride Week Committee will sponsor a multimedia presentation by Eric Garber entitled "Taint Nobody's Business: Gays and Lesbians in Jazz-Era Harlem" today at 7:30 p.m. in Phillips Hall Room 100.

Also as part of the Gay and Lesbian Pride Week celebration, Tess Catalano and Rosi Gowdey will perform a concert tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Communication Studies Building Room 101.

In addition, the statewide Pride Week rally will be held on June 25 at 12 p.m. on the Pentacrest. A march through downtown Iowa City will follow.

All events during the week are free and open to the public. Contact the Women's Resource and Action Center at 335-1486 to arrange child care during the events.

UI asks regents to appoint Rawlings as professor

Despite the recent UI hiring freeze, the UI Classics Department could gain a new professor.

The UI is asking the state Board of Regents to approve the appointment of new UI President Hunter R. Rawlings III as a full professor in the Department of Classics with tenure. The regents meet today and tomorrow in Sioux City.

The UI is also asking the board to approve a resolution which would require Rawlings to live in the presidential mansion at 102 Church St. Rawlings' occupancy of the mansion is needed to perform the official duties of the president, a report released Monday said.

Rawlings will earn an annual salary of $143,000 when he assumes the position of UI president on Aug. 1.

Police claim registering, locking bikes deter theft

By Belinda Bloor
The Daily Iowan

With the number of bicycle thefts in the Iowa City area averaging about 30 to 40 each summer month, according to the Iowa City Police Department Records Division, bicycle owners should be aware of ways to avoid letting a bike become another statistic.

Iowa City Police Chief Harvey Miller suggests that bike owners register their bicycles with the police department and keep a record of the type, style, size and serial number of the bike. The police department uses registration information to identify the owner of a recovered bicycle.

A bike owner can register a bike anytime at the police department, 410 E. Washington St., and there is no charge for the service, according to a police department news release.

"Bike theft is a crime of opportunity," Miller said.

One of the best ways to avoid giving a bike thief the opportunity to steal a bike is to lock it up carefully. Nick Hofer, manager of the Ordinary Bike Shop, 215 N. Linn St., suggests using a U-shaped or horseshoe lock, which usually costs about $20 to $40.

"This type of lock is extremely secure. The only problem is that you need to use it right," Hofer says.

The right way to lock up a bike is to secure both wheels and the frame, he explained. With the horseshoe lock, the only way to accomplish this is to remove the front wheel and place it beside the middle of the bike.

Hofer says this is important even for bikes with bolted on wheels, which can easily be removed by a thief looking for just bicycle parts.

Another way to help prevent a bicycle theft is parking it in a safe place. UI Campus Security Director William Fuhrmeister suggested securing it to a bike rack in a lighted area. A dark, out-of-the-way rack is most inviting to someone looking for bikes to steal.

A final suggestion for keeping a bike safe is for the owner to engrave the bike with a driver's license number. Thieves often will avoid bikes that have identifying marks on them, according to a bicycle brochure published by the city.

If efforts to prevent a bicycle theft fail, all hope is not lost. The recovery rate for stolen bicycles is very high, Miller said.

But many of the recovered bicycles are not claimed by the owners. Unclaimed bicycles are sold at auctions held by the police department twice a year.

Preventing a bike theft may require a bit of effort, but if a bicycle owner values his or her property, the time is well worth it.

"Bicycles are a big investment for young people," Fuhrmeister said. "They have to take the precautions to protect them."

Supervisors approve position within ambulance department

By Heather Maher
The Daily Iowan

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors approved the formation of a new position in the Johnson County Ambulance Department Tuesday — deputy director of ambulance services.

The new post carries a job description that includes quality assurance, employee protocol review, orientation of new employees and improvement of the current audit system for medical units.

In proposing the new position to the board, Johnson County Director of Ambulance Service Dave Cole said he doesn't feel he can adequately perform all of the duties required of an ambulance director and that this wasn't the first time the formation of a deputy director position had been proposed to the board.

"By having a second person in management it would benefit the employees to have two people instead of just one to deal with grievances," he said.

Supervisor Robert Burns said he was in favor of the new post. "During my time on this board, this is something I have seen repeatedly — that the ambulance director needs an assistant who is not union. I think it's very much needed," Burns said.

Cole said that although the post will most likely be filled by a half-time worker already employed by the Johnson County Ambulance Service, a public advertisement will be placed in local newspapers.

In other business, the board decided to send a letter to Heritage Area Agency on Aging in Cedar Rapids, to encourage the agency to raise salaries of Johnson County Congregate Meal program employees.

The program, which provides meals to elderly citizens at a senior center or at their homes, recently had its 1988-89 contract renewed by Heritage. In the new contract, the number of meals served each day increased from 265 to 272, but a requested 5 percent increase in employee salaries was denied.

Bob Welsh, who serves on the Johnson County Nutrition Committee, said that although the overall contract price went up, the increase was due only to the added number of meals served each day, rather than the cost of raw food materials or salary raises.

Board member Dick Myers expressed concern that in denying the salary raise request, Heritage didn't fully realize the need for salary increases.

Referring to the program employees, Myers said, "These are very modestly paid people and they do a great service to the community. I hope this isn't a trend for these agencies to deal unrealistically with community workers such as these."

Myers proposed the letter to Heritage, which he said will "ask polite questions and suggest a standard 3.5 percent salary increase."

There are 120 staff members at the crisis center, most of them volunteers. Martinez said he handles about 375 people a year from age 12 to 80, but the majority of cases are in their 20s and 30s.

Iowa Crisis Center Program director Julie Aschenbrenner said her records last year had the highest rate of suicide attempts with 29 people in September had the lowest rate of 12 people.

"It doesn't really seem to be a slight increase in suicides in the spring because people seek help through the winter. Spring will be better, but it isn't," Aschenbrenner said, "but a slight increase in suicides in the spring because people seek help through the winter. Spring will be better, but it isn't."

As for the national statistics, Aschenbrenner said there were 29,453 suicides in about 12.3 suicides per 100,000 people.

Bob Jackson, Iowa City Health director of clinics, said it is unusual to have a high rate of suicides in the spring but he doesn't think this time of year has much to do with the suicides.

"We work day in and day out with people who have been in different times in their lives," Jackson said. "We're not sure why this occurs right now. There's no easy answer." Martinez said people

Taking bids

Physical plant ponders coal bids for new boiler; may use Iowa coal

By Paula Roesler
The Daily Iowan

UI Physical Plant officials are currently evaluating bids by coal vendors for the contract of the coal to be burned in its new boiler during fiscal year 1989.

On May 31, the UI began taking bids for the one-year contract.

Eight bids by five companies, two of which mine Iowa coal, are under review by UI Physical Plant Associate Director for Utilities John Schenk and Physical Plant Manager Don Hall.

"This boiler has the capability of burning Iowa coal," Schenk said. "Whether we burn Iowa coal or not will depend on the bidding process."

Schenk said Kentucky coal burned in the UI's five stoker boilers is purchased from the Minneapolis-based Centran Corp., one of the bidders for the new contract and the company now in its fifth year of a five-year contract with the UI.

Bids are being evaluated based on price, quality of coal and other considerations. Lower-quality coal tends to have a higher sulfur content. When burned it emits a sulfur dioxide pollutant. When large amounts of the pollutant are released into the air, it may result in acid rain and other environmental problems.

But the new boiler reduces sulfur to a certain extent by adding limestone to the coal during the process. The limestone neutralizes the sulfur, decreasing the sulfur dioxide emission level.

Schenk said coal with a high sulfur content is usually relatively inexpensive, but the savings is offset if a lot of limestone must be added to neutralize the sulfur.

Besides sulfur emission, Schenk said one of the primary characteristics of the coal to be evaluated is the ash by-product it creates when burnt.

"The Iowa coal tends to be a high-ash coal, so that is another cost factor," Schenk said. "If I have more ashes to dispose of, it costs me money to dispose of it. So that's a cost factor that has to be taken into account."

One of the in-state mining companies vying for the 1989 coal contract, American Coal Corp., has offered to haul the ash waste to landfills, Schenk added.

Schenk said because of Iowa's 5 percent bidding preference law, even if one of the out-of-state bids is marginally less than a bid from an in-state business, the in-state bidder still has a chance of winning the contract.

"If we can use the 5 percent Iowa preference that we can give to producers and manufacturers within Iowa, one of the Iowa coal companies becomes cheapest," he said.

But Schenk said until all the bidders have been fully evaluated, they are all playing on a level field. Bidders that mine coal within Iowa include American Coal Corp. based in Bussey, and the Lovilia-based Iowa Coal Co.

Out-of-state bidders include Centran Corp., which already holds the coal contract for the UI's five stoker boilers. C. Reiss Coal Co., based in Sheboygan, Wis., has two bids. And the Great Lakes Coal & Dock Co. of St. Paul, Minn., has three bids.

"We still have to look at the coal companies who are bidding and ask, 'Can they really meet our requirements?' Just because we've gone out and said we need 50,000 tons and they've bid doesn't necessarily mean they have the mines or the capabilities of producing that," Schenk said.

The contract will be awarded during the state Board of Regents' July meeting.

coal-burning technology.

Iowa coal contains 4 to 5 percent sulfur — a higher sulfur count than that in coal mined in other states. Wyoming coal contains less than 1 percent sulfur, and coal mined in Kentucky and Pennsylvania contains about 2 percent sulfur.

Rodriguez said coal to be used in the new boiler is allowed to have a sulfur emission potential of 11.5 pounds sulfur dioxide per 1 million Btu, but the EPA stipulates the coal's sulfur emission potential must be decreased by 90 percent during the burning process.

Coal has between 10,000 and 12,000 Btu per pound; there are about 20 to 24 million Btu to a ton, Schenk said.

The coal to be used in the new boiler will cost between $1.20 and $1.25 per million Btu, he said. Coal for the other five boilers costs about $1.57 per million Btu. Natural gas costs about $2.50 per million Btu, and oil costs from 4 to 6 cents per million Btu.

The UI also uses natural gas and oil as energy sources. But now that new coal-burning technology is becoming available, the UI's reliance on the expensive and/or imported energy sources is declining.

U.S. Treasury, farmers may benefit in drought

DES MOINES (AP)—If winners do emerge from a drought scare that has sent grain prices skyrocketing, it will be farmers lucky enough to keep crops intact and those with unencumbered carryovers of surpluses from prior harvests, a farm economist said Tuesday.

The U.S. Treasury also could benefit if the dry spell continues over the nation's Grain Belt, but "agriculture as a total would be a net loser," Iowa State University economist Robert Wisner said.

In the meantime, despite grain prices that are nearly double last year's highs, "People are apprehensive of what might happen," said Peter Brent, who coordinates a hot line for troubled farmers for the rural advocacy group Prairiefire. "Everybody's sitting tight, praying it will rain."

In Iowa, which was sweltering through its third straight day of triple-digit temperatures, soybean prices rose to an 11-year high at elevators on Tuesday, with one bid reaching $10 a bushel. Corn rose to its highest level since September 1984, with bids over $3 a bushel common in all areas except southwest Iowa.

The high prices reflect fears that drought will curb harvests at a time when 96 percent of the state's top soil is reported too dry, as is 91 percent of its subsoil. Still, agriculture officials said timely rains could save most of the crop, although 12 percent of the soybean crop is reported in poor condition and 1 percent is very poor, while 7 percent of the corn is poor and 1 percent is very poor.

Eric Wahl, who raises corn, soybeans and hogs at Monticello in northeast Iowa, said he's not had any significant rain since Mother's Day, more than six weeks ago, and "the few sprinkles we've had since haven't been enough to wash the dust off the corn leaves."

"We have the potential for a pretty reasonable crop" if rains resume, he said.

The UI College of Medicine and the Weeg Computing Center will collaborate to produce five educational health care videodiscs during the next two years.

The UI is joining a consortium of 15 institutions in the United States and Canada in producing the discs, a program partially financed by the IBM corporation.

Participating schools each will create five videodiscs covering a variety of medical disciplines. After the discs have been reviewed, they will be shared by all institutions in the consortium at no cost.

"This will be an important adjunct to our teaching," said Carol Aschenbrenner, associate dean of the College of Medicine and co-director of the program. "This is an opportunity for us to apply computers in medical education in ways that are effective and educational, rather than just entertaining."

This health care project is the latest videodisc program to be developed at the UI, which is a leader in videodisc production, according to Don McClain, an associate director at Weeg Computing Center and the program director for the consortium project.

"When IBM visited Iowa City, we were told that we were further along in our videodisc development than any of the other schools in the consortium," he said. "We're one of the leaders in this field."

The UI has produced videodiscs since 1978. Since then, "videodiscs have become an important educational tool" at the UI, said Joan Huntley, the research and development leader in the UI Computer-Assisted Instruction Lab.

Students can expect the use of the discs in classrooms to increase in the coming years.

"Instead of being viewed as innovative, within the next five years videodiscs will become much more commonplace, and students will begin to expect their use in the classroom," Huntley said.

for when examining an infant." Approximately 1,000 students have studied with the discs since the program was started.

Loretta Lough, the senior physical therapist at the UI Hospital School, said, "The program has been used here since 1984 at three levels of physical therapy education and also for students in the College of Medicine."

"Using the videodiscs gives students a chance to see a variety of patients when their clinical time is limited," Lough said. "It gives them an alternative to classroom time and learning by the books."

Videodiscs are 12-inch optical reflective discs which hold both audio and video images. The cost of producing a disc is between $75,000 and $125,000, and about 80 percent of that sum is the salaries of the participating faculty members, Huntley said. The cost of reproducing a disc ranges from $10 to $18.

All videodiscs created at the UI have been financed with internal funds. "We have not gotten some of the large grants for videodisc development work which other universities have received," said McClain.

There are about 50 videodisc players on campus, five of which are open for student use.

Asking for it

The South African government on Friday submitted to Parliament long-awaited proposals for creating a multiracial constitutional convention which would assist blacks in their quest for representation at the national level.

The South African government, headed by President Pieter Botha, claims to have worked long and hard to include blacks in this sort of national forum through which they can assist the white ruling party on matters of constitutional legislation.

According to the Botha government, this advisory body would represent the first time that blacks would be involved in national policymaking, and it would hasten a move toward direct power sharing between whites and blacks.

The plan, proudly prepared by the minority white power structure, is nothing more than a weak attempt at appeasing the 23 million blacks in South Africa who rightly seek the most basic of human rights. In reality, the plan for this "advisory body" is a worthless concession and one which will most likely be looked upon with severe contempt by black leaders.

The government has already precluded the net value of this action by admitting that there are absolutely no plans to allow any blacks to be seated in Parliament. The reason? That's an easy one. If blacks were allowed to join the unitary one-person, one-vote electoral system, blacks would eventually outnumber whites in the governing institution. God forbid.

That Botha publicly illuminated this move as some sort of reform is an outright insult. But that he has also said this advisory body is the most to be hoped for by the black majority is just plain dangerous. By precluding the fact that the balance of power will remain totally skewed in favor of his white regime, Botha risks further incensing a desperate people.

Test-ban time

Last month, against the prevailing opinion of the Reagan administration, the House voted to ban all but the smallest nuclear weapons tests. After initial Senate rejection, the bill was referred to a joint conference committee, where it is currently under consideration.

Congress must pass this important legislation.

As long as nuclear weapons keep the peace between East and West, few would deny that they must be reliable. But recently, serious questions have been raised by physicists at the Almagordo Laboratory — one of the two federal facilities where nuclear warheads are made — about the necessity of nuclear testing in maintaining a reliable stockpile.

The growing opposition among weapons scientists raises serious questions about the relevance of previous warhead tests to the existing strategic environment, but it's not the first time. In fact, it is an axiom widely held in the arms-control community that large-warhead testing is a holdover from an era when weapons were less reliable and testing was considered vital to deterrence.

Certainly after 43 years the appearance of reliability has been well established. In fact, of the approximately 20 tests conducted annually, only one or two is related to reliability, and weapon failure is rare.

If testing has become politically and technologically obsolete, it is no less provocative than it used to be. Perhaps it is more so — a burr under the saddle of future arms-control accords with the Soviets, who recently interrupted testing for 19 months in the hope of encouraging us to do the same.

A full review of the government's testing program, past and future, is long past due. Meanwhile, the margin of failure a test-ban might cause is small compared to the tremendous good will it would generate.

Trouble at home

Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis has done well for himself. In the course of the primary elections, the apparent Democratic presidential nominee has built a broad-based coalition of support and has proved he has the endurance to withstand the blistering heat of life in the political spotlight. Early polls measuring his chance for victory in the November general elections show he holds a sizable lead over the Republican candidate, Vice President George Bush.

The impressive following Dukakis has won is certainly cause for celebration among Democratic party faithfuls. For a party that has lost four of the past five presidential elections, the prospect of Dukakis heading the ticket is similar to a last-place ball club's hope after signing a blue chip draft choice: At last, someone who can bring victory.

The good feeling Dukakis seems to have generated may be well deserved. His record over 11 years as governor of Massachusetts leads one to believe that he may be capable of returning both efficiency and decency to the highest levels of government.

But a Dukakis bid for the presidency, which will be based largely on his promise to expand the "Massachusetts Miracle" to benefit the country as a whole, could be seriously weakened by signs of mismanagement at home. As someone who promises fiscal security and prosperity, Dukakis must explain why his state budget for fiscal year 1988 will show a $300 million deficit. If he is incapable of balancing Massachusetts' $11 billion budget, how will he handle a $1 trillion federal budget?

These are the types of issues which have derailed previous Democratic candidates — and they are among the most likely to be used by the Bush campaign. A prudent Dukakis would do all that he can to repair this chink in his armor.

Avoid these even if famished

"Never eat at a restaurant called Mom's." The old advice still holds, but it's only the beginning.

Avoid any restaurant that advertises "All you can/kin/care to eat." Or that gives out bumper stickers. Or that uses "name the state capitals" placemats.

Steer clear of any place that has an 'n' in its name. Cork 'n' Fork. Surf 'n' Turf. Meat 'n' Greet. Unless, as somebody once suggested, you want 'ndigestion.

Run the other way if the restaurant billboard is bigger than the restaurant itself, or the celebrity owner's name is written so large you're certain he's never set foot in the place.

Phrases that ought to make you think twice: "Kids eat free with fill-up." "Bus driver eats free." "Buses welcome." (Especially when accompanied by a sign that says "No waiting.")

Be wary of restaurants where the waitresses dress like pilgrims. Or cowgirls. Or wenches. If the management does that to the employees, what might it do to you?

Rule of thumb: If a restaurant invites you to "create your own" anything, don't.

Think again about the restaurant whose proudest boast is "Clean restrooms." Or "Harbor view." Or "Ample parking."

And never set foot in any place that claims, "Our prices are too low to advertise." Nothing's too low to advertise. Unfortunately.

A few more phrases that should make you cautious: "Where the locals dine." "Where the elite meet to eat." "As seen on TV."

It goes without saying that you want to steer clear of any restaurant that hires somebody to dress up like a gorilla and wave people into the parking lot.

Or gives you a doggy bag before you even order.

Or describes anything as "a meal in itself."

Shun any restaurant that gives its gift shop top billing.

Or that sells T-shirts and bumper stickers with any slogan similar to the following: "I got crabs (scrod, stuffed, fried, etc.) at Lucky Louie's Seafood Snackery."

And while we're at it, avoid snackeries. And eateries. And food bars. And hot bars.

If a restaurant promises your dinner will be an "event," even a "memorable event," you can be pretty sure it won't be.

Flee if the waiters threaten to sing and/or dance.

Especially if they dress up like monks and sing Gregorian chants. Unless you're on a retreat.

Be suspicious of anything labeled "home-style." Or "country-style." Whose home? Which country?

A few more words and phrases that should make you wary: "Ye olde." "Quaint." "Charming."

Forget any place that displays plastic effigies or photographs of what you are about to eat.

Or whose decor incorporates any of the following: Plastic plants, plastic flowers, plastic grape, plastic muskets, plastic pewter-look mugs. Never eat at a restaurant that serves "vittles" or "fare" or "fixin's."

Especially if they are described as "finger-lickin'," "lip-smacking," "tummy tickling," "tummy warming" or "rib sticking."

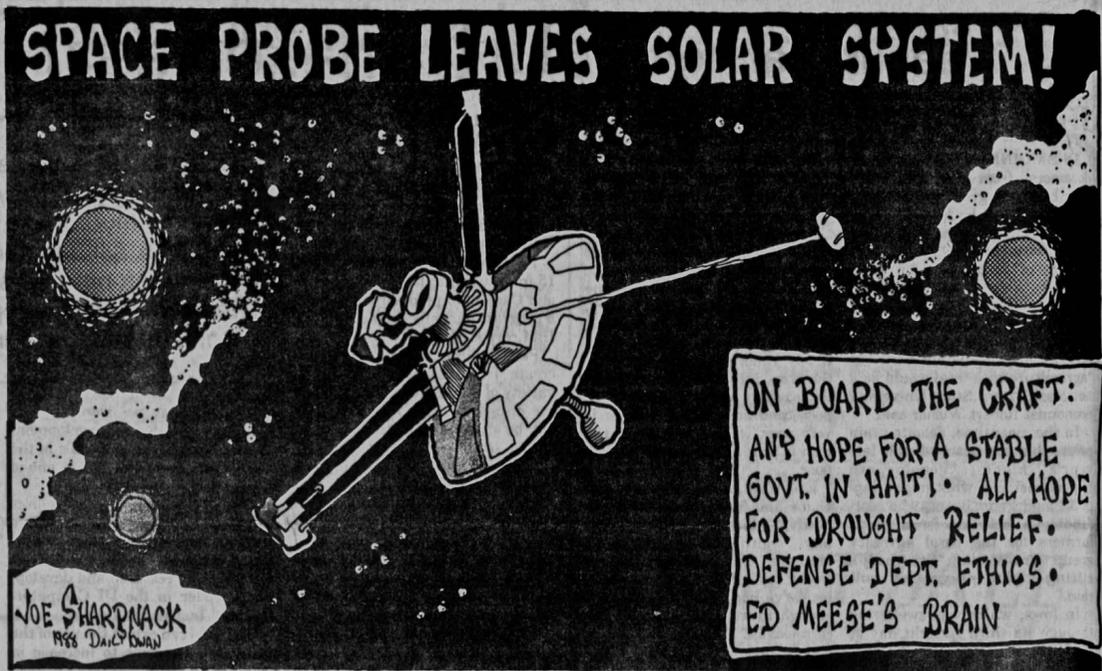

Steer clear of anything "dipt," as in "Try our famous honey-dipt chicken."

Avoid any restaurant that has menus on which all the s's are spelled with f's.

Or that has a pepper-grinder the size of a baseball bat.

Or incorporates the word "gourmet" or "famous" into its name.

Non-traditional pupils do well

At the UI commencement in May, two McClains, separated from each other by almost 35 years, received their degrees. They were mother and daughter.

Three cheers to Joan McClain, the mother. She did something most people don't — she resumed the education that had been interrupted by her marriage nearly 40 years ago.

Being stuck with an incomplete formal education is not a new situation. There are many who never attend or complete college or high school. The reasons are as numerous as they are diverse. Let me reel off a few:

Some lack the right opportunity. Improper guidance and counseling at home, school or both is another reason. The world is getting increasingly competitive, and I would think parents and teachers who are genuinely interested in their children's future cannot afford to be lackadaisical in this respect. But some of them are. Usually the students are also faced with a whole host of youthful diversions which relegate the textbooks to an inferior status. This at times is coupled with an inability or unwillingness to comprehend the importance of an education.

Marriage and employment can also disrupt education. There are situations where education has to be subservient to these. The circumstances at the moment might favor marriage over education. There may be a pressing need to work just to keep body and soul together.

Then, there are those who realize they'd rather study and undertake something other than what they're currently engaged in. I think that's a bold move. Once you are more or less entrenched in a particular field, it is not easy to throw security to the winds and venture into an unknown area where the payoff is, after all, not guaranteed.

When education is interrupted, several years often elapse before thoughts of resuming studies recur: "I wish I had decided otherwise..." "If only I had continued my education..." "Had things been a little different at that time, just a little different..."

Wishful thinking is usually the beginning and the end in most cases. The psychological deterrents can be quite strong: "I'm much too old now. I'd be as comfortable in a class of bright young kids as a sardine would be trekking across the Sahara..." "My brain cells have degenerated with time. I may turn out to be too dumb to grasp all these newfangled notions..." "Can I, at this age, stand the rigors of college life?"

Although the ranks of "non-traditional" students — the ones who have made their wishful thinking a reality — are on the rise, there are still more that hold back because of such psychological deterrents. The deterrents aren't altogether imaginary. In any situation, the ones that don't conform to the mainstream — be they minority groups, tourists, international students or non-traditional students — are faced with the problems peculiar to the odd ones out. The play of imagination on these problems bloats them into bizarre, larger-than-life proportions. But once they are under way, most non-traditional students come to grips with the situation, utilize it to the hilt and enjoy it.

The secret lies in motivation. Non-traditional students study because they have yearned for an education and have an intense desire to succeed, to prove to themselves and to others that what they seek is within their reach.

A few non-traditional students arrive with some amount of work experience or a different background — factors that I firmly believe enhance the mechanics of their education, even if the factors have no direct relationship to what they are studying, for education is inter-disciplinary.

Vishwas Gaitonde

Education is also a continuous process. However worn out and trite that statement may sound, it is still true. Learning does not cease with the acquisition of a diploma. A diploma may be necessary for employment, but it really doesn't mean anything more than evidence that a student has been put through a certain drill and has emerged from it satisfactorily. How a student proceeds to use what he or she has learned, modifies it and fits it into the broader aspects of life (the inter-disciplinary element) is what counts. A person with a bachelor's degree may well end up more "educated" than one with a doctorate!

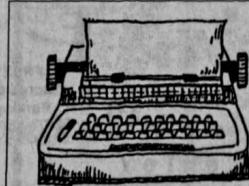

By making the study of the field systematic, the university assists the student in getting an initial understanding of the matter. From then, the onus for progress lies with the student. The material to be taught can be organized in various ways. What I like most about the American system is its flexibility (which is also one of the reasons I'm here). There is an assorted fare of courses on the menu to place your order as per your taste and needs. You can enter a field for your graduate education different from your undergraduate as long as you can handle it. In other countries — India, for example — the usual mode is a set syllabus, and the whole class uniformly plods through it. A few courses offer some amount of choice but overall, this is restricted.

Flexibility, paradoxically, is the system's disadvantage, too. Professors' interests largely determine the courses they teach. If a department lacks faculty whose interests cover the field adequately, there will be ugly gaps in the curriculum. Also, students can get bewildered with so many offerings to choose from. In their over-enthusiasm and confusion, they could botch up their programs. There are academic advisers to help them steer their way, but this calls for a good rapport. And if the advisers are buried under bunches of students, they won't function at their most effective.

Non-traditional students have an edge here in that they more or less know what they want. They are more apt to go in for what's more suited to their needs. They're part of the continuous process that education is, only they negotiate their way differently.

So if you are twiddling your aging hair and wondering if a cap with tassels is ever going to cover it, stop and fill out that application form instead.

Guerrillas attack Soviet soldiers

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Soviet soldiers under attack by Moslem guerrillas have evacuated Kandahar, Afghanistan's second-largest city, for the safety of its heavily fortified airport, Western diplomats said Tuesday.

Insurgents have had Kandahar under siege for a month and say they have formed an arc around the city, cutting off roads on the north, south and east.

Those claims were supported by reports from diplomats, who said Afghan troops were driven to the city limits and that the Red Army, leaving Afghanistan under an agreement signed April 14, moved its men to the airport.

According to the diplomats, Soviet commanders are limiting use of their helicopters to avoid losing them to guerrillas armed with U.S.-made Stinger rockets and other anti-aircraft weapons.

Indian rebels renew war on Sandinistas

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — A group of Atlantic Coast Indian rebels declared they were renewing their warfare against the leftist Sandinista government, said a statement published Tuesday night in the opposition newspaper, La Prensa.

The Sandinista government rejected peace negotiations with the Sandinistas and said the government would have to "revise its dictatorial policies to implant the conditions for a true democracy in our country."

The rebel Yatama Indians seek a form of self-government for the indigenous tribes along the so-called Mosquito Coast of the Atlantic. The Sandinistas have reached agreements with other Indian rebel groups to lay down their arms.

South Africans debate blacks' role

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Parliament's three racially segregated chambers held their first full-scale joint debate Tuesday, discussing a bill that would expand blacks' political role while keeping them out of Parliament.

Most prominent black leaders have rejected the bill, which is aimed at negotiating a power-sharing system in which the white minority would retain political and economic control.

The dominant white chamber of Parliament has been seated previously with the 4-year-old Asian and mixed-race chambers, but only for ceremonial occasions and major speeches, not to debate legislation. The only previous joint debates have been in committees, not among the full chambers.

More militant black leaders, as well as many anti-apartheid whites, have rejected the bill outright, saying it is an attempt by the government to evade demands for a one-man, one-vote democracy. At present, the 5 million whites hold political and economic power, while the 26 million blacks have voting rights only in homeland and municipal elections.

Soviet diplomats expelled from Canada

TORONTO — Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney disclosed Tuesday that Canada expelled a group of Soviet diplomats last week for "improper and unacceptable behavior."

Canadian officials said 17 Soviet diplomats and trade representatives in Ottawa and Montreal were either expelled or told not to return, in cases where they were out of the country.

"I will confirm the government of Canada took some action last week in regard to the improper and unacceptable behavior by representatives of the Soviet government in Canada," Mulroney said.

Mulroney said that despite the summit's endorsement of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's reforms, western leaders were "under no illusions" about the Soviet Union.

FAA says smoker owes $3,000

LOS ANGELES — The first person cited for allegedly violating a new prohibition against smoking aboard domestic flights of two hours or less has been sent a letter seeking $3,000 in fines, officials said Tuesday.

The Federal Aviation Administration sent a letter to Darryl Siegel of Seattle, telling him the agency's investigation concluded that he violated the rules while aboard USAir Flight 1355 from Seattle to Reno, Nev., May 12, FAA spokeswoman Elly Brekke said.

They found that Siegel had disregarded a lighted no-smoking sign aboard the flight and had smoked his cigarette in an airplane lavatory; disregarding the rule imposed April 23, which forbids smoking on certain domestic flights, she said.

Stocks soar after seesaw session

NEW YORK — Stock prices advanced sharply late Tuesday and pushed the Dow Jones industrial average back over the 2,100 level after a see-saw session, influenced largely by conflicting signals on inflation and interest rates.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE totaled 155.06 million shares, considerably more than the 116.75 million shares traded Tuesday, one of the slowest days this year.

Counsel rests in Biaggi case

NEW YORK (AP) — Prosecutors rested their case in the racketeering trial of Rep. Mario Biaggi and six others Tuesday after detailing to the jury Biaggi's indictment and conviction in an unrelated case.

The end of the government's case, after three months of testimony by scores of witnesses, paved the way for the defense case to begin Wednesday.

Biaggi, D-N.Y., and his co-defendants are charged with turning Wedtech Corp., a now-bankrupt Bronx defense contractor, into a racketeering enterprise that paid out millions of dollars in payoffs to obtain no-bid government contracts.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Howard Wilson concluded the government's case by reading into the court record — with the jury present — Biaggi's federal indictment in Brooklyn on charges of accepting vacations, paid for by Meade Esposito, the former Brooklyn Democratic chairman, in return for seeking favorable treatment by the Navy and Coast Guard for a client of Esposito's insurance firm.

Wilson also told the jury that Biaggi was convicted of accepting an unlawful gratuity but is appealing the jury verdict.

Biaggi, 70, was sentenced to 30 months in prison for the Brooklyn conviction but has remained free on bail pending appeal.

U.S. District Judge Constance Baker Motley told jurors they could only consider Biaggi's prior conviction for the "limited purpose" of determining his intent regarding extortion and bribery charges in the Manhattan case.

Prosecutors charge that Biaggi demanded and was given 5 percent of Wedtech's stock, which he allegedly split with his former law partner, Bernard Ehrlich. Because of congressional rules limiting his outside income, prosecutors contend, Biaggi placed his stock in the name of his eldest son, Richard, who is also a defendant in the case.

In addition to Biaggi, Ehrlich and Biaggi's son, who is also a lawyer, the other defendants are: Wedtech founder John Mariotta; ex-Bronx

Mario Biaggi

Borough President Stanley Simon; former Small Business Administration Regional Administrator Peter Neglia; and Neglia's friend, Ronald Betso, a former police officer.

Several witnesses, including four former Wedtech executives who pleaded guilty to corruption charges and testified in exchange for leniency, linked Biaggi with the Wedtech stock.

Wiretap yields bribery details

WASHINGTON (AP) — A person, implicated through wiretaps in the Pentagon procurement bribery and fraud probe, agreed within the past few days to cooperate with the government while another person is on the verge of agreeing to tell what he knows, sources familiar with the investigation said Tuesday.

Meanwhile, Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci decided to reassign six Pentagon officials under scrutiny in the investigation. He directed that anyone whose activities come under examination must be moved to different jobs that have nothing to do with procurement.

President Ronald Reagan, at a news conference in Toronto, Canada, during the economic summit, said he was "very upset" about reports of wrongdoing within the multibillion dollar defense procurement industry.

But he praised investigators for ferreting out the misdeeds, and said it was "understandable how such things" could happen in a huge government bureaucracy.

The person who is cooperating with the government is someone whose voice turned up frequently on the court-ordered wiretaps that are a central part of the two-year investigation, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Under investigation are allegations that defense contractors and consultants, many of them former military men, bribed Pentagon officials for contracting details that could be vital in winning contracts worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

It could not be determined whether the person cooperating is a Pentagon employee, a consultant or someone working for a defense contractor.

The government frequently relies on gaining the cooperation of participants in a white-collar conspiracy to win the conviction of bigger targets.

Some of the wiretaps in the two-year bribery probe were in place for 290 days in 1987 and picked up 4,764 conversations, of which 671 were categorized as incriminating, according to federal court records.

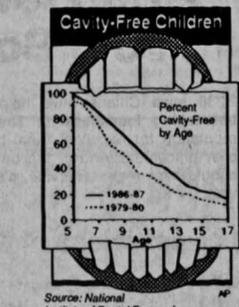

The records identify the matter only as a bribery probe in the eastern district of Virginia, but several sources confirmed that the taps listed in the records involved the Pentagon case.

Fewer cavities reported

WASHINGTON (AP) — Half of America's 43 million school-age children have never experienced tooth decay, a dental problem that affected almost all of America's youth just a generation ago, according to a federal study released Tuesday.

The study included the oral examination of about 40,000 youngsters coast-to-coast. The National Institute of Dental Research found that dental cavities have declined by 36 percent among children aged 5 to 17, and that 49.9 percent of these children had no tooth decay at all.

Officials said the sample population examined was selected to represent the approximately 43 million school-age children in the nation.

Dr. James Carlos, chief of epidemiology at the NIDR, said dental decay has been steadily declining since the use of fluoride became widespread and that the trend probably will continue.

Bomb kills 24 in India; Sikhs blamed

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — A bomb exploded on Sikh extremists in a crowded Hindu cloth market near the Golden Temple on Tuesday evening, killing 24 people, a police official said.

The latest bombing was the fourth attack attributed to Sikh separatists since Sunday. At least 52 people, most of them Hindus, have died in the attacks and more than 130 have been wounded.

Crowds of Hindus angered by continuing Sikh militant violence in Punjab state threw stones at police as they tried to cord off the area struck by the bomb.

The blast ignited a fire that burned two shops in the market and 10 motor scooters. Merchant Tilak Raj said the flames engulfed many people who were trying to flee the scene.

Suresh Arora, the city's senior police superintendent, called the situation "very tense" and officials clamped a curfew in the area.

Arora said the dead included two policemen. Both were clean-shaven Sikhs.

The bomb was hidden inside a plastic bag in the front part of a motor scooter parked at the market, Arora quoted witnesses as saying.

Serbjee Singh, deputy commissioner of Amritsar, blamed neighboring Pakistan for the bombing. He said he expected more attacks in Punjab state by "Pakistani agents."

India blames rival Pakistan for causing trouble in Punjab by training and sheltering Sikh extremists. Pakistan denies the charge. Sikh extremists have been fighting for a separate homeland in Punjab for the past six years.

Witness against Noriega sentenced for smuggling

MIAMI (AP) — A principal witness against Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega of Panama has been sentenced to nine years in prison after pleading guilty to drug-smuggling charges, a prosecutor said Tuesday.

Floyd Carlton Caceres, 38, who appeared before the Miami grand jury that indicted Noriega and later testified in Congress, could be released on parole in three years under federal guidelines.

"If General Noriega comes to trial at some future time, this defendant will be the key witness against him," said Chief Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Gregorie.

Carlton was sentenced late Monday by U.S. District Judge Sidney Aronovitz after a previous guilty plea to one count of conspiracy to import cocaine, said Gregorie.

Upon his arrival here, Carlton, a pilot, told authorities he flew arms to Central American leftists for Noriega and brought cocaine shipments into Panama.

Carlton said he acted as a go-between for the cartel and Noriega, recounting how the general laughed off the smuggler's original $30,000 offer for landing rights in Panama.

"He told me that if these people were begging, they were wrong," Carlton testified through a translator. He eventually got up to $200,000 a flight, Carlton said.

The pilot eventually was accused by the cartel of stealing a cocaine shipment, while at the same time drug agents in Florida intercepted a flight by an associate, who named him as a fellow smuggler.

Carlton tried to make a deal with U.S. authorities without surrendering but was eventually lured to Costa Rica, arrested and extradited.

PUBLIC NOTIFICATION FOR LEAD IN DRINKING WATER

To the Users of the University of Iowa Water Utilities System:

The Safe Drinking Water Act passed by Congress in 1986 requires all water systems to issue a public notice regarding the possible lead contamination of drinking water. The water provided by this system is currently below the standard for lead contamination and is safe to drink.

The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) sets drinking water standards and has determined that lead is a health concern at certain levels of exposure. There is currently a standard of 0.050 parts per million (ppm). Based on new health information, EPA is likely to lower this standard significantly.

Part of the purpose of this notice is to inform you of the potential adverse health effects of lead. This is being done even though your water may not be in violation of the current standard.

EPA and others are concerned about lead in drinking water. Too much lead in the human body can cause serious damage to the brain, kidneys, nervous system, and red blood cells. The greatest risk, even with short-term exposure, is to young children and pregnant women.

Lead levels in your drinking water are likely to be the highest:

- if your home or water system has lead pipes, or
- if your home has copper pipes with lead solder, and
- if the home is less than five years old, or
- if you have soft water or acidic water, or
- if water sits in the pipes for several hours

Lead piping and lead solder are two of the most common sources of lead in domestic drinking water, though the severity of the problem may depend on the age of the piping. The only way to be sure about water's lead content is to have the water tested. University Water Utilities has water test results and can tell you how to reduce the risk from lead contamination. Using water from the cold-water tap and flushing your system for a few minutes before each use, for example, can help lower exposure to lead where piping is infrequent use. Other steps are also helpful, including refraining from use of hot water for cooking or drinking, replacing lead pipes and service connections and using certain types of water treatment.

As your provider of water, the following actions are being taken to assure you of the highest possible quality of drinking water:

- University Water Utilities, in our continuous Water Treatment Plant process, adjusts the pH level to deliver a non-corrosive drinking water that does not dissolve measurable amounts of lead.
- University Water Utilities does not use lead pipe and has discontinued the use of lead solder in our water distribution and plumbing systems.
- University Water Utilities monitors the level of lead in the University water system. Our most recent samples have all tested at less than 0.010 ppm for lead (the limit of test detection), meeting all current standards set by EPA.

For additional information regarding lead contamination of drinking water contact Kenneth E. Lloyd, P.E., Water Utilities Manager or Chris L. Catlin, Water Utilities Engineer, at 335-5168.

The Coolies Ruth Leitman

Coolies satirize rock opera

By Brian Jones
The Daily Iowan

Remember Tommy? Kinda dumb, but he sure played a mean pinball. The Coolies, who appear at Gabe's Oasis tonight, do remember, and on "Doug," they come not to praise Tommy, but to bury him. "Doug" is the touching story of a skinhead who, after murdering a fry cook named Pussycook, catapults to international fame and fortune. Why? Because the cook-book he pilfered from the dead Pussycook is published and becomes a best seller, of course.

Should one become confused, a comic book (sort of a rock opera libretto) is included to help the listener follow the narrative. Welcome to the world of Atlanta's Coolies, where the ridiculous smacks head-on into the sublime. "Doug" is the follow-up to "Dig," a collection of Paul Simon songs done in an, um, different vein. It's the perfect record for anyone who's ever wondered what Simon and Garfunkel might have sounded like as a punk, surf, psychedelic or heavy-metal band. And who hasn't? Although "Doug" sounds perfectly ridiculous, it's actually a viciously clever send-up of nearly every overblown concept album and rock opera. "Cook Book" quotes directly from The Who's "Happy Jack" and "We're Not Gonna Take It," complete with Clay Harper's Daltrey imitation. "Ice Cold Soul" sounds unnervingly like mid-period Kinks. "I Ain't Gonna Eat No More" steals almost directly from The Rolling Stones' "Tell Me" (I... ain't gon-na eat... no mo'). Even the venerated John Lennon is a target on the Coolies' musical dartboard. "Poverty" manages to eerily merge "Imagine" and "Instant Karma." In "Coke Light Ice," the saga of a disaffected skinhead's search for a soft drink with more drink than ice, the Coolies toss musical barbs at REM and The Replacements. Doug, in fact, is a pretty rotten guy, but on the other hand he is "always talking about fighting and killing the Grateful Dead." In an era of overblown melodic heavy-metal bands and pre-teenage girls screaming 'bout love, the Coolies are a breath of appealingly foul air. Appearing with the Coolies tonight are Iowa City's own Merry Pranksters. Wear a chef's hat.

Bugs, Daffy, Dumbo, Donald together in 'Roger Rabbit'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It was a goofy, daffy idea, a Mickey Mouse notion if ever there was one, to combine cartoon characters with human actors in a big-budget film. The Walt Disney Co. is taking a gamble that might have given pause to even its risk-taking founder. "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" reaches the nation's screens today after three years of planning and production and an estimated $40 million in costs. The movie stars Bob Hoskins, Christopher Lloyd and Joanna Cassidy, plus Mickey Mouse, Bugs Bunny, Dumbo, Daffy Duck, Betty Boop, Donald Duck and two cartoon newcomers, the comic Roger Rabbit and his sexpot wife, Jessica. In the film, a down-at-the-heels detective (Hoskins) is hired by a cartoon studio boss to uncover why his star, Roger Rabbit, is unable to perform. The project originated from a book by Gary K. Wolf, "Who Censored Roger Rabbit," which an earlier Disney regime bought for a feature film. A rising young director, Robert Zemeckis, read the script in

Bob Hoskins (left, quite obviously) as detective Eddie Valiant stars in Touchstone's "Who Framed Roger Rabbit."

1982 and was interested in making the film. But the Disney company, beleaguered by flops and takeover threats, was unable to mount the production. Zemeckis bypassed the Disney animation department and hired Williams, a Canadian, as animator. Previewers have marveled at how masterfully the live actors combine with the cartoon figures. "We did it by violating the rules," Williams explained. "Fortunately I never knew the rules..."

U.S. Select Team tops France, 100-82

PARIS (AP) — Charles Smith scored 22 points and Dyron Nix added 17 points and 11 rebounds as the U.S. Select team defeated France 100-82 Tuesday night.

It was the fourth straight victory for the Select team on a six-game European tour. The team, coached by former Iowa Coach George Raveling, won three games in a Finnish tournament over the weekend.

In Tuesday's game, Iowa's B.J. Armstrong was 2 of 6 from the field and finished with seven points.

The tour is intended to choose a few more finalists to join a squad of 16 already chosen for the U.S. Olympic trials. The final tryout camp begins July 17 at Georgetown under John Thompson, the Olympic coach.

Tyson looking cool, ready for fight

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Mike Tyson looked and talked like a man in control.

"The closer to the fight, I mellow out," the heavyweight champion said in an interview Tuesday. "A month away, I hope nothing happens, but the closer it gets to the fight, the happier I am."

All is not well between Tyson and his manager, Bill Cayton, and there have been reports that his four-month-old marriage to actress Robin Givens is rocky.

So there has been a good deal of speculation about whether the turmoil will adversely affect Tyson's performance against Michael Spinks Monday night at the Convention Center.

"I'm a professional," Tyson said. "Whatever happens — your mother dies, someone you love dies — the show must go on."

NFL owners propose contract negotiations

NEW YORK (AP) — NFL owners proposed on Tuesday reopening negotiations with its players union on the contract that expired nearly a year ago. But the union, while not totally rejecting the proposal, dismissed it as "a public relations ploy."

The new offer was made in a letter from Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, to Gene Upshaw, his union counterpart. It suggested a meeting next Tuesday with at least two owners, the first bargaining session since last Oct. 11, three days before the end of the 24-day players strike.

Malone, Moncrief among free agents

NEW YORK (AP) — Thirty-six free agents, including Moses Malone, Bill Walton and Sidney Moncrief, soon will be in position to make NBA history by being able to move to new teams without their old teams receiving compensation.

Under the new labor agreement between the NBA and the union, players who have been in the league seven or more years can be signed without any compensation to their old teams.

The 36, along with 54 other players, will become free agents 24 hours after Tuesday night's Game 7 of the NBA Championships between the Detroit Pistons and Los Angeles Lakers.

Besides Malone, Walton and Moncrief, other players who are unrestricted free agents are Wayne "Tree" Rollins, Artis Gilmore, Rory Sparrow, Elston Turner, Brad Davis, Danny Schayes, Mike Evans, James Edwards, World B. Free, Alan Leavell, Louis Orr, Earl Cureton, Larry Drew, Wes Matthews, Kurt Rambis, John Lucas, Dudley Bradley, Orlando Woolridge, Kevin McKenna, Mike O'Koren, Danny Vranes, Caldwell Jones, Alvan Adams, Walter Davis, Jeff Cook, Maurice Lucas, Mike Woodson, Mike Mitchell, Kurt Nimphius, Tom Chambers, Clemon Johnson, Frank Johnson and Charles Jones.

If the other free agents sign with another team, their old club still will be eligible to receive compensation.

Among that group are Milwaukee's Randy Breuer; Byron Scott and Tony Campbell of the Lakers; Chicago's Sam Vincent; Boston's Reggie Lewis and Dick Minnifield; Houston's Andre Turner; Sacramento's Otis Thorpe and Michael Jackson; Seattle's Dale Ellis, and New Jersey's John Bagley and Duane Washington.

NL's top hitter placed on disabled list

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Braves first baseman Gerald Perry, the National League's top hitter, was placed on the 15-day disabled list Tuesday, retroactive to June 19, the team announced.

Perry, who injured his shoulder diving into second base during Saturday night's game against Houston, was examined in Atlanta Tuesday, said Braves spokesman Glen Serra. Doctors found "sublimation of the left shoulder," Serra said.

Former Georgia Tech football coach dies

ATLANTA (AP) — Bobby Dodd, longtime football coach and athletic director at Georgia Tech, died Tuesday afternoon after a battle with lung cancer. He was 79.

Dodd had a record of 165-64-8 in 22 seasons as Tech's head football coach. His teams went to 13 bowl games, winning nine. He retired as coach after the 1966 season and as athletic director in 1976.

Wisconsin-Oshkosh names assistant AD

OSHKOSH, Wis. (AP) — Lynn King, assistant athletic director at Northern Iowa, was named Tuesday as the first full-time director of intercollegiate athletics at Wisconsin-Oshkosh.

King will assume his responsibilities Aug. 1. The selection culminates a national search which included over 90 applicants.

For the past 17 years, UW-Oshkosh has had separate part-time directors for men's and women's programs.

King, as full-time athletic director, will oversee a combined athletic program of 19 sports for men and women.

King, 42, has served as an administrator at Northern Iowa since 1984.

Ten policemen injured at soccer game

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — Ten policemen were reported injured as soccer fans and gangs of local youths fought running battles in downtown Hamburg Tuesday night after the Netherlands' victory over West Germany in the European Championships.

A police spokesman said a gang of some 1,000 German fans and local "skins" massed in the Reeperbahn as the clashes continued into the early hours of the morning.

But none of the Dutch fans were involved in the skirmishes, the spokesman said.

Officials said police made at least 30 arrests.

The Reeperbahn, a 400-meter red light area of downtown Hamburg noted for its sex cinemas, was lined with police vans as some 600 riot gear officers restored order.

Bernd Metterhausen, spokesman for Hamburg police, said the violence began shortly before midnight when fans returning from the match began attacking the police.

"We were dealing with that incident when a gang of punks, who live in the harbor area of the city, came up to the Reeperbahn and also joined in."

Allison 'a little bit sharper'

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Veteran driver Bobby Allison, recovering from injuries suffered in a crash at the NAS-CAR Miller 500 in Long Pond Sunday, was "a little bit sharper" and able to squeeze his wife's hand Tuesday morning, a spokesman said.

Allison, 50, of Hueytown, Ala., remained in critical but stable condition Tuesday at the Lehigh Valley Hospital Center's nervous system unit.

Davey Allison said Monday his father had a broken lower left leg, which was in traction, and fractured ribs. He said doctors drained fluid from his father's chest and relieved pressure in his skull, but said there was no further build-up of fluids or internal bleeding.

Wimbledon At A Glance

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — A recap of Tuesday's action at the 102nd Wimbledon tennis championships, and what's scheduled for Wednesday:

Attendance—33,431, an increase of 4,108 from the same date a year ago but 262 below the record set in 1978. Total attendance for the first two days, 62,509.

Weather—Hazy and humid again, but no rain. The high temperature was in the mid-70s.

Results—John McEnroe returned to Wimbledon in triumph. The eighth seeded American, making his first appearance in the tournament since 1985, defeated Horst Skoff of Austria 6-1, 7-5, 6-1 to thunderous cheers from the fans.

Second-seeded Mats Wilander of Sweden also won easily, 6-3, 6-4, 7-6 over Eduardo Masso of Argentina. In the women's draw, top-seeded Steffi Graf of West Germany swept Hu Na of the United States 6-0, 6-0, while defending champion Martina Navratilova beat Sabrina Goleis of Yugoslavia 6-1, 6-2.

NCAA should pay athletes, professor says

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (AP)—The NCAA should increase compensation for athletes because they face more restrictions than students who excel in other extra-curricular activities, a university professor said Tuesday.

Among the recommendations Cecil Mackey, professor of economics at Michigan State, made to a collegiate sports forum were that athletes receive modest monthly cash payments and that trust funds be established to pay them for endorsements and personal appearances.

"It's readily apparent in principle that we do not believe money corrupts," Mackey told a group of college and university presidents, chancellors and other administrators. "Almost everybody gets a piece of the action — except the student-athlete, whose performances generate the revenue."

Mackey, former president at Michigan State, spoke at the NCAA Presidents Commission forum. The meeting is expected to generate proposals for the annual NCAA convention in January.

Mackey told reporters that the chance of college athletes becoming unionized or "complete professionals" would be reduced if his plan was adopted.

"It's not the conventional wisdom," Mackey acknowledged. "I think it's much more realistic."

give the ball to someone. You practically get to call your own fouls again.

If you have an equally phenomenal major college career, you make the pros. Here no one tells you what to do. Your agent waits on your every move. The coach, who now prefers "Mister," turns you loose on the court.

Even the referees "let them play." "Let them play" is a euphemism for "calling your own fouls." Hey, take last night's NBA game for example. If the referees called all the fouls in the game, there wouldn't be any players left by the end of the first quarter.

In the pros, the referees main concern is the ball. Fouls, what are fouls? Let's find that ball.

The circle's complete. Just like in the driveway, the players scratch, claw, brawl and maul each other while the referees watch the ball. If things get too rough, one of the players complains to the referee and he calls a foul the next time the guy is touched. The players are calling all the shots.

Too bad Ernest. You would have liked basketball the way it's played today. It's a pretty macho game. Perhaps if the guys on the bench had horses and banderillas? And the stars of each team had to play one-on-one? Take a second, think about it.

Paul Stolt is Daily Iowan wire editor.

tories by the top women's seeds, Steffi Graf and eight-time champion Martina Navratilova. Both wins were noteworthy — Graf because she posted her second straight Grand Slam shutout and Navratilova's because it was her 42nd straight match victory at Wimbledon, a post-war record.

Roulhac, who is no longer in the NFL. Other athletes who have been included are: former Michigan football player Garland Rivers of the Detroit Lions; Bob Perryman of the New England Patriots; former Pittsburgh football player Tony Woods of the Seattle Seahawks; former Fort Hays State football player Frankie Neal of the Green Bay Packers; former Florida football player Adrian White of the New York Giants; and former Ohio State basketball player Brad Sellers of the Chicago Bulls.

"Eight to 10" athletes who dealt with Walters and Bloom will be cleared of all charges because they signed the NCAA's affidavits before accepting money from the sports agents, the paper said.

Among those in that group are former Alabama basketball players Derrick McKey and Terry Coner.

Late Olson." Frost said he gave up the basketball life for the commodities market when he got tired of the road.

"The traveling, being away from the family, that was hard," he said.

Then it was time to put his business major to work.

"It's really different," Frost said of his job. "It's a world of its own. It can be really high pressure, but it can also be very monotonous when nothing is happening on the market. You have extremes."

Though the trip will be a chance to catch up with many old friends, Frost hasn't lost sight of the purpose of the game.

"It's a worthy cause," he said. "With all these drought problems that's another thing the farmers have going against them."

"Anytime you can help out a cause like this, it's good to be involved."

Frost is also looking forward to playing in front of an Iowa crowd again.

"I really enjoyed the college-town atmosphere (of Iowa City)," he said. "The fans are awesome. Of all the colleges I've been to, and that's a lot when I was with Athletes in Action, I've never seen fans like Iowa fans."

Basketball takes one full circle

Basketball. Next to baseball one of America's best loved and enduring (in every sense of the word) legacies. Now that the NBA season has finally come to a close, it's time for some philosophical reflection.

If Ernest Hemingway would have been a basketball fan, he probably already would have expounded this theory. But since he preferred more macho sports, like bullfighting and shooting defenseless animals, he missed his opportunity to apply the circular theory of life to basketball.

Ol' Ernest was big on life, at least in the beginning. The whole of existence went in a circle, it began with a shot (metaphorically), and for Ernest it ended with one.

During one's life, a series of phases are passed through, each one a little less structured than the previous one. You begin by calling your own shots, progress through phases where someone else calls them for you and in the end begin to call your own again.

The same is true for basketball. Remember your first pick-up game. Flailing arms, squeaking Chuck Taylors, scratches, cuts and abrasions. Then someone yells "foul." And everyone begins to argue the merits of the call.

After a few more games like this, your Chucks and your eight-foot high hoop begins to look rather shabby. But it doesn't really matter because you're in seventh grade. The basket's 10 feet tall and Adidas have replaced the Chucks. Oh, one more thing, there's some math teacher always hanging around who likes to be called "coach."

So coach calls a practice session. You and everyone else you've been playing with show up, new sneakers dangling over your shoulder, an I-got-this-move-that-will-blow-this-guy-away look on your face; excitement hangs in the air thicker than the stench of dirty sweat socks in the locker room.

You're warming up when the coach arrives. Everyone's working hard to impress him. A whistle squeals. Silence falls over the gym just like in the movies. "Line up under the south basket gentlemen," he yells.

Coach struts out to the center of the court and asks for a ball. "Crouch down and follow the ball as I move it." What is this? I thought this was basketball, not boot camp.

The next two hours are hell. You don't even shoot the ball once, let alone use your moves.

On your bike home, you think that basketball may not be the sport you always thought it was. Funny, on TV it looks like fun.

But you survive junior high. The 12-game seasons last forever — the drills longer. And you realize that you never did get to use your moves.

As if the drills and the "set offense" wasn't enough, there's these two guys in striped shirts blowing whistles every time you touch somebody.

After you survive junior high basketball, having never once risked making a shot without being told, you progress to high school.

There's still a guy named "coach" barking out commands, but you can subvert him sometimes — especially when Rhonda, the head cheerleader, is watching. The guys in the striped shirts continue to come to the games, but they don't blow their whistles so much. Maybe they have to keep track of the ball.

After a phenomenal high school career, you're off to a major college. The drills still hurt, the coach is still "coach," but you get to finally use some of your moves.

There's an extra referee on the court, but he really doesn't do much, he mainly just keeps track of the ball. Between the three of them they usually find it most of the time. Every once in a while they blow their whistle but only to

Harmon, others, may pay back schools

By Eric J. Hess
 The Daily Iowan

Former Iowa football player Ronnie Harmon is among more than 40 athletes who have agreed to a pre-trial diversion program to avoid charges stemming from the federal grand jury investigation of sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Monday.

In a copyrighted story, it was reported that the pre-trial deal will force the athletes who signed with agents while still in college to reimburse their former universities for the amount of their scholarships while each was under contract with Walters and Bloom.

The athletes have reportedly agreed to testify at any subsequent trial of Walters and Bloom and perform 100 to 250 hours of community service under a federal probation officer's supervision. The amount of community service per player would depend on the individual.

Iowa Men's Athletic Director Bump Elliott said he hadn't heard anything about a scholarship reimbursement from Harmon.

"If anybody would know, I would know about it," he said. Elliott refused to comment further.

The Journal-Constitution quoted sources in the U.S. Attorney's office in Chicago that "40 to 45" athletes had been offered the deal with the alternative to the deal being indictments on charges including mail fraud.

All of the athletes who were offered the deal have accepted it, so no athletes will be indicted, the newspaper said.

Neither Harmon nor his attorney, Martin Rauch of Rauch and Villa Law Offices in Springville, N.Y., could be reached for comment Tuesday.

The pre-trial diversion program will not begin until the grand jury decides whether to indict Walters and Bloom, who prosecutors claim conspired to defraud the athletes' schools by offering cash and contracts in violation of NCAA rules.

The fraud allegedly continued when several of the athletes signed NCAA-required "student-athlete affidavits," which state they had not signed with an agent or broken any other NCAA rules.

Journal-Constitution sources said indictments could come in the second week of July. Possible charges include mail fraud, wire fraud, tax fraud, extortion, racketeering and obstruction of justice.

According to the paper, players who have agreed to the pre-trial diversion program include: former Auburn football all-American Brent Fullwood; former Temple running back Paul Palmer of the Kansas City Chiefs; former Missouri football player John Clay of the Los Angeles Raiders; former Ohio State football player Cris Carter of the Philadelphia Eagles; former Clemson football players Kenny Flowers of the Atlanta Falcons, Terrence Flagler of the San Francisco 49ers and Terrence

Frost hopes his shooting touch hasn't gone cold

When Dan Frost graduated from Iowa in 1976 after playing two years for new Hawkeye Coach Lute Olson, he didn't hang up the high-tops.

Frost, a forward who majored in business, continued with the sport for 10 years, playing with Athletes in Action.

Two years ago, he traded round-ball for trading bond options at the Chicago Board of Trade. But for a few hours Saturday, Frost will return Iowa City and to basketball to play in the 1988 Iowa Farm Scholarship Basketball Game at 7 p.m.

After scoring in double figures in the first Farm game two years ago, Frost, 33, isn't sure how he will fair this time.

"I haven't played at all," Frost said. "I haven't picked up a ball in six months. I'm going to try to go over to the neighbor's yard and shoot a few to get the rust off a little bit before I come."

Frost, who is originally from Long Beach, Calif., played for Olson in junior college in California and migrated to Iowa when Olson got the head coaching job. He went on to lead the 1975-76 Hawkeyes in field goal percentage, hitting 203 of 337 shots for a .538 mark.

Frost said he didn't know much about Iowa but liked his recruiting trip here and decided to make the trek from the coast.

"I didn't even know Iowa was in the Big Ten, that's how little I knew," he said. "But I did know

About 2,500 tickets sold for game

As of Tuesday afternoon, approximately 2,500 tickets had been sold for the 1988 Iowa Farm Scholarship Basketball Game slated for June 25 in Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

The contest will feature former Hawkeye basketball players and benefit children of Iowa farm families in the form of scholarships. The game will be televised on KCRG-TV Channel 9 at 7 p.m.

Slam dunk and three-point shooting contests will start at 6 p.m. An autograph session will follow immediately after the game.

"We're hoping it will be a lot like the first game, where we had a lot of tickets sold the day of the game," said Rich Wretman of the UI Foundation. "There are still several days left, and it will probably pick up the last couple of days."

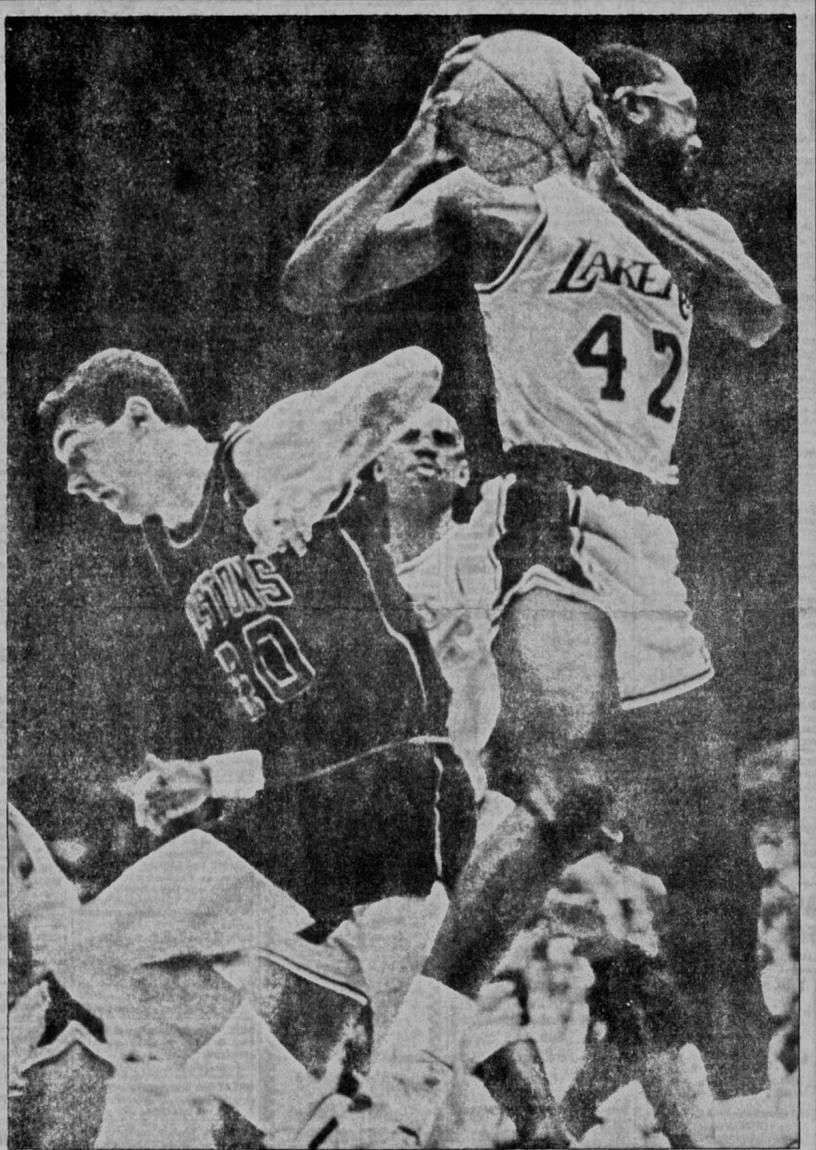

"We hope the Iowa fans will come through like they did last time."

Nearly 13,000 people attended the first farm scholarship game, and Mike Naughton, Iowa ticket manager, said the current pace of ticket sales is about 1,000 behind the inaugural event.

"The rest of the week last time was steady," Naughton said. "We had tremendous sales the day of the game. We're going to see a walk-up type crowd, a late-purchasing type crowd."

Tickets are $5 for general admission and $50 for an MVP ticket, which includes a reserved seat, a parking pass and a ticket to a post-game reception.

Los Angeles drops Detroit for 2nd straight NBA title

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP)—The Los Angeles Lakers, led by James Worthy's 36 points, held off the Detroit Pistons 108-105 Tuesday night and became the first team in 19 years to repeat as NBA champions.

The Lakers, who trailed 52-47 at halftime, hit their first 10 shots of the third quarter on the way to a 15-point lead, then held off a furious rally by the Pistons in the final 12 minutes.

Byron Scott scored 12 of his 21 points during the Lakers' 23-7 rally in the third period, which spanned the first 6:25 of the second half and gave Los Angeles a 70-59 lead. Scott capped the spurt with a 3-point goal.

The Lakers led 94-79 with 7:24 left before the Pistons rallied.

Vinnie Johnson had three baskets and John Salley added five points as Detroit used a 17-4 spurt to close within 98-96 with 2:50 left.

The Pistons got within two points on two other occasions before Magic Johnson hit a free throw with 1:16 to go to make it 103-100. Bill Laimbeer then missed a 3-point attempt and was unable to save the rebound. The ball went out of bounds with 1:05 to go.

After a missed shot by Los Angeles, Dennis Rodman missed a jumper with 39 seconds left.

With a sellout Forum crowd of 17,505 screaming, "Repeat, repeat," during every timeout, Scott hit two free throws to make it 105-100. The Lakers missed three of their next four attempts at the line, however, and the Pistons then trailed by only 106-105 when Laimbeer hit a 3-pointer with six seconds remaining.

But A.C. Green clinched it with a layup with two seconds on the clock.

Worthy was the series' Most Valuable Player. When the game ended, delirious fans swarmed over the court, celebrating the first successful Magic Johnson added 19 points for Los Angeles. Joe Dumars had 25 points for the Pistons, Salley 17 and Adrian Dantley 16.

Isiah Thomas, despite a badly sprained ankle that had him on crutches just an hour before the game, played 19 minutes and scored 10 points in the first half, including consecutive jumpers in the final 27 seconds of the second quarter.

McEnroe advances calmly at Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP)—John McEnroe, who spent his heyday playing the villain, was greeted like a conquering hero Tuesday when he returned to Wimbledon for the first time since 1985.

The three-time champion received enthusiastic ovations before and after his opening-round victory over Horst Skoff of Austria. Each time, he acknowledged the cheers with a wave of his left hand.

"It's a whole new ballgame now," McEnroe said following his 6-1, 7-5, 6-1 victory. "It's almost like starting over."

In the early 1980s, when he was the No. 1 player in the world, McEnroe's tantrums earned him nicknames like "MacBrat" and "Mac the Mouth" from the Fleet Street tabloids. During his recent comeback, he has vowed to keep his temper under control.

He kept that promise against Skoff, who captured a week-court title in Greece over the weekend. McEnroe, the No. 8 seed, kept quiet throughout the match and only once showed anger, waiting the net with his racket after netting an easy volley to give Skoff a break point in the second set.

"For a couple of years, my mind wasn't on the game," said McEnroe, making his first appearance at Wimbledon since his 1985 quarter-final loss to Kevin Curren. "Mentally and physically, I didn't want it badly enough. But now, I think I'm on the right road again."

McEnroe's day of triumphant return was a day of departure for Curren, who was eliminated by Ricardo Acuna of Chile 7-6, 6-7, 7-6, 6-4.

The second day of the tournament also featured easy first-round vic-

Iowa's homosexual community is celebrating its culture during Gay and Lesbian Week in Iowa City. But about anti-gay violence shadow on the festivities.

The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force recently report showing violence against gays has risen 42 percent last year.

The study links the increase in AIDS epidemic, which the nation's homosexual community more visible, and more vulnerable to attack.

"Anti-gay and lesbian an enormous and growing but it shouldn't be an overshadow Gay and Lesbian Week as a celebration of community," Dave Tingwald, Week organizer, said.

Still, Tingwald said that a record 7,008 incidents from verbal abuse to mu-
