By John Bartenhagen
The Daily Iowan

SIoux CITY, Iowa — The state Board of Regents granted permission Wednesday to UI Hospitals and Clinics officials to proceed with the planning of a $13.7 million project involving the construction of a 25-room operating suite, a 30-bed post-anesthesia care unit and space for support functions.

In a written report, UI Hospitals Director John Colloton said the project is the last step in a 20-year capital replacements program designed to update obsolete hospital facilities.

John Tinker, head of anesthesia at UI Hospitals, said the new project will replace the 21 operating rooms and 25-bed post-anesthesia care unit that is mainly housed in the original 1927 hospital facilities.

"The operating rooms we have now were built for surgery done in another era," Tinker said. "The lack of enough large operating rooms causes delays in patient surgeries and means that surgeries have to be done under crowded conditions."

The construction will involve the addition of a fifth and sixth floor to the Colloton Pavilion West Wing. The operating suite will be located on the fifth floor with support facilities on the sixth floor. The entire project requires 43,000 square feet of space.

Including the cost of the new project, a total of $248 million will have been spent on the capital replacements program, Tinker said.

No state funds have been used for the program, with $238 million coming from patient charges and $10 million funded by gifts and federal grants.

The board also approved Wednesday the planning or enactment of several other capital improvements on the UI campus, including:

- The approval of a $3 million budget for Phase B of the Psychiatric Pavilion Replacement project and the approval of a $757,930 architectural agreement for Phase C of the project.
- The project represents the last two phases of a three-phase project designed to alleviate life safety, environmental and functional deficiencies in the UI Psychiatric Hospital, which was built in 1919.
- The approval of a $3.2 contract with the Weitz Construction Company for the construction of the UI Field House Addition.
- Permission to proceed with a $1.4 million patient, visitor and staff dining facility expansion in UI Hospitals. Preliminary plans would add 658 seats to current dining facilities.

• The approval of a $680,000 renovation of the Agricultural Medicine Research Facility on the Oakdale Campus. The space will be used for laser research until completion of the UI Laser Center.

In other funding measures, the board tentatively approved fiscal 1989 budgets for the three regents institutes pending final approval; approved preliminary budgets for special purpose appropriations; and authorized the submission of $2 million in lottery funded research at the three universities to the Iowa Economic Department of Development.

The $229,699,342 general UI budget represents a 7.4 percent increase over the fiscal 1988 budget but reflects no increases in non-salary appropriations. The UI projects a decline of 800 full-time students from fiscal 1988, but tuition rate increases will generate an additional $4.8 million in tuition revenue.

Other UI budgets approved by the regents Wednesday include: $199,021,000 for UI Hospitals and Clinics; $10,597,400 for the UI

Board names first laser science chair

By John Bartenhagen
and Paula Roesler
The Daily Iowan

SIoux CITY, Iowa — UI officials announced Wednesday that North Texas State Professor Arthur L. Smirl will be the first of three endowed chairs in laser science at the UI.

"He'll be bringing in a lot of research funding with him," UI Assistant to the President Carla Cooper said at the state Board of Regents meeting Wednesday. "We're delighted with this appointment."

Smirl's primary appointment will be in the UI Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering, with an affiliate appointment in the UI Department of Physics and Astronomy.

"Some people were concerned for a while that we would have trouble attracting people, but we never lowered our sights," UI Interim President Richard Remington said Wednesday. "The appointment of such a world-class scientist to our faculty adds further distinction to the Iowa laser group."

Smirl joins William Stwalley, professor of chemistry and physics and director of the UI Center for Laser Science and Engineering, and Susan Allen, professor of chemistry and electrical engineering, as well as seven other faculty members who will staff the UI Laser Center.

Stwalley said Smirl attracted about $1.4 million dollars in research funding in 1987, adding he would arrive on the UI campus about Sept. 1.

"He will help to develop the world-class laser center we're establishing here at the university," Stwalley said.

Smirl is currently a professor at North Texas State University in Denton, Texas, and is a senior staff physicist on leave from the Hughes Research Laboratories in Malibu, Calif.

At North Texas State, Smirl served as a distinguished research professor of physics and chairman of the Center for Applied Quantum Electronics, which he co-founded.

To accommodate Smirl, the UI received approval Wednesday for the renovation of the agricultural medicine research facility on the UI Oakdale Campus. Smirl will

Law school's Vernon to replace Remington

By James Cahoy
The Daily Iowan

The state Board of Regents is expected to approve the appointment today of UI law Professor David Vernon as acting vice president for academic affairs and dean of faculties at the UI.

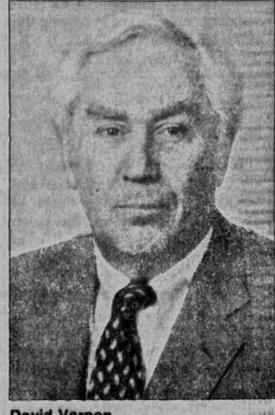

Vernon will replace UI Interim President Richard Remington at the position. Remington will resign from the academic vice presidency on July 31 when he concludes his yearlong appointment as interim president and becomes a member of the UI faculty.

Remington will be taking a year's leave of absence beginning Sept. 1 to join the School of Public Health at the University of Texas Health Sciences College in Houston.

Vernon has agreed to serve as vice president for academic affairs and dean of faculties until a successor is named to replace Remington. He said Wednesday he currently has no intention of making the position permanent.

"I'm just filling in for the academic year," Vernon said. "The only permanent job I want is teaching at the law school."

Vernon said he made the decision to take the position after spending five hours in Colorado with newly appointed UI President Hunter Rawlings III. He said he saw the position as an opportunity to help maintain continuity in academic affairs at the UI.

"He (Rawlings) told me what he wanted me to do and I agreed," Vernon said. "Our views are very compatible."

Gay violence shadows Pride Week

By Cathy Jackson
The Daily Iowan

Iowa's homosexual community is celebrating its culture this week during Gay and Lesbian Pride Week in Iowa City. But concerns about anti-gay violence may cast a shadow on the festivities.

The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force recently released a report showing violence against gays has risen 42 percent in the last year.

The study links the increase to the AIDS epidemic, which has made the nation's homosexual community more visible, and, in turn, more vulnerable to attack.

"Anti-gay and lesbian violence is an enormous and growing problem, but it shouldn't be allowed to overshadow Gay and Lesbian Pride Week as a celebration of our community," Dave Tingwald, a Pride Week organizer, said.

Still, Tingwald said the figures — a record 7,008 incidents of abuse, from verbal abuse to murder, were reported in 1987 — don't even touch the tip of the iceberg.

"People are afraid to report anti-gay and lesbian abuse," he said. "It's certainly a frequent and chronic problem, but people are afraid of coming out of the closet, afraid they won't be given equal protection by the police."

Michael Blake, a member of the UI Gay People's Union, said police brutality is another reason victims are reluctant to report abuse.

"A lot of violence against gays and lesbians has been perpetrated by law enforcement agencies," Blake said. "Sometimes police are antagonistic towards homosexuals, too."

Tingwald thinks this gap between police and homosexuals correlates with former laws against gay and lesbian relations and current laws against sodomy in about 25 states.

"Historically everywhere and currently in a lot of places, we're regarded as a problem to be dealt with, not as citizens to protect," Tingwald said.

But a local law enforcement official said he thinks problems with police hostility may have another cause.

"I think it's more the officer thinking he's more of a man than anybody," Officer Robert Stika of the Iowa City Police Department said. "Some of them just think they're more macho than anybody else."

Stika said although he has heard of police brutality in big cities, the relationship between police and the homosexual community in Iowa City is a good one.

Still, Iowa City offers some alternatives for victims who need help but don't want to turn to the police.

The UI Gay People's Union offers the Gay Line, a confidential listening and referral service, Tuesday through Thursday nights from 7 to 9 p.m.

"We also work with the Rape Victim Advocacy Program because of male rapes," Blake said.

Tingwald said it will take time before police records reflect a more accurate number of anti-gay and lesbian violence statistics.

"It's going to take a proven pattern that anti-gay and lesbian violence will be dealt with effectively before people will start reporting more," he said.

Britain hopes for return of hostages from Iran

LONDON (AP) — Iran's ranking diplomat in London said Wednesday he is "very optimistic" that better relations between his country and Britain will lead to freedom for Englishmen held hostage in Lebanon.

Charge d'Affaires Mohammad Akhond Zadeh Basti made his comments as the first British lawmakers to visit Iran since the monarchy was overthrown in 1979 returned to London. The legislators said Tehran will use its influence with the kidnappers.

They called the mission a success but said they could not raise the question of American hostages because of intense hostility in Iran toward the United States.

The Independent newspaper reported Wednesday that Syria has located the hiding place for 15 foreign hostages believed held by the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God, in the Shiite Moslem slums of south Beirut.

It added, however, that the Syrians said the hostages cannot be rescued by force and negotiations with Hezbollah are needed.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles Redman said: "That report is not new. We have never been able to confirm the exact location of the hostages, and we cannot confirm this latest report."

"Although information on the hostages is conflicting and rarely reliable, we have always believed that some of them are in Beirut's southern suburbs."

Eighteen foreigners are missing in Lebanon, including nine Americans. Held longest is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, who was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Basti was asked on Channel 4 television news whether diplomatic progress could mean the release of the three Britons held — Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, journalist John McCarthy and teacher Brian Keenan.

"I'm very optimistic about the process that has been initiated ... and I believe that there are wonderful areas where the two countries can talk, can discuss, and I believe that the opportunities are ample," he replied.

Asked whether it would take months or years, Basti said: "Let us not be hasty. Let us welcome the initiatives as they take their own course. I think that one has got to be very optimistic in the context of the latest diplomatic move."

Both governments reduced their diplomatic representation to caretaker status last year, but on June 10 they announced agreement to exchange compensation for damaged embassy buildings.

On Sunday, the British legislators flew to Tehran on a private mission organized by Waite's boss, archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie.

Conservative Cyril Townsend said the delegation met with Alireza

Moayeri, deputy prime minister; Hojatolislam Mehdi Karroubi, deputy parliament speaker; and Mohammed Javad Larijani, deputy foreign minister.

Townsend said his group could not deliver a request by a support group for Anderson that a U.S. delegation be allowed into Tehran. He said the proposal "would have been totally counterproductive" and "frankly daft ... at the present time" because the Iranians "have an obsession about the United States."

They "see the United States in a very different category to Western Europe, so I'm afraid the Iranian lever for American hostages in the Lebanon is not one one can easily pull," he said.

Small Business Council holds financial seminar

A seminar titled "Strategic Planning for Business — The Financial Aspect" will be held on June 28 in Iowa City. The Small Business Council of the Iowa City Area Chamber of Commerce will sponsor the event.

Panel discussions will be held at the seminar. Topics and speakers from Iowa City banks include "Prior to Loan Applications" by Lynn Rowat of First National Bank; "Application Process" by Roger Reilly of Hills Bank and Trust; "Projections and Ratio Analysis" by Terry Vorbrich of Iowa State Bank; and "On-going Relationship with Bank and Customer" by Les Baumbach, also of Iowa State Bank.

The seminar will be held in the Johnson Room of the Iowa City Holiday Inn from 8:30 to 10:30 a.m. Registration will be at 8 a.m. that day.

Governor's award honors local firefighter

The Governor's Award for Meritorious Service was awarded to Coralville volunteer firefighter Don Gregory at the annual Iowa State Fire School in Ames on June 22.

Volunteer firefighters are awarded the honor for civic contribution, involvement in fraternal organizations and leadership in their department.

WRAC to sponsor film and brown bag lunch

Staff members of the UI Women's Resource and Action Center and the Free Medical Clinic will hold a discussion on "AIDS: The Ethics of Loving" on June 29 at 12:10 p.m. at WRAC, 130 N. Madison St.

Students and other members of the Iowa City community are invited to join the discussion on loving and ethics sponsored by WRAC.

Local award winners announced by center

The Iowa City Center for Social Justice has announced the winners of its Recognition of Excellence awards for local businesses and organizations.

The recipient of the Business of the Year Award is Hoppers and Brother Printers. Ecumenical Towers received the Community Service Agency Award.

Winner of the Employee of the Year award was William Wynkoop, a clerk at Iowa City Pawn and Military Surplus. Mary Larew, director of the Emergency Housing Project, received the Community Service Worker Award.

The awards, given for the first time this year, honored businesses, organizations and individuals for outstanding performance in serving the public with excellence.

Laser center director honored by society

William C. Stwalley, director of the UI Center for Laser Science and Engineering and UI professor of chemistry and physics, has been elected to the position of fellow in the Optical Society of America by the society's board of directors.

In selecting Stwalley, the OSA board cited his "distinguished contributions to the understanding of alkali metal vapor spectroscopy and atomic interactions and its application to laser development."

Stwalley, who earned his doctorate in physical chemistry from Harvard University in 1968, came to the UI as a chemistry instructor in 1968 and attained the rank of full professor of chemistry in 1975 and affiliate professor of physics in 1977.

He currently is engaged in laser research and in directing the new Center for Laser Science and Engineering.

Study skills, self-esteem highlighted in workshops

By Sara Langenberg
The Daily Iowan

University Counseling Service will be offering a study skills workshop this summer to all students interested in practical information about making studying easier and more efficient.

The workshop will meet in Westlawn S330 every Monday for the next four weeks from 3:30 to 5 p.m. and will feature different studying strategies each day. Some topics of interest are test-taking, paper-writing and effective reading and studying techniques.

Renee Redd, psychological counselor at UCS, said the programs offered at UCS are not lectures but tailored to each individual. She said the small-group format facilitates a process of figuring things out together.

Redd stressed the importance of self-discipline for students who attend the workshops offered by UCS.

"We try to help students assess their own strengths and weaknesses and help them to use the environment to their advantage," she said. "But their education is their responsibility. They need to take the active role."

Two UI students who are hoping the program will help them with self-discipline are Tricia Brooks and Wendy Weigelt. Both are juniors in the UI Radiology Program and said they are hoping their attendance at the study skills workshop will improve their study habits.

"I don't know how to study. I just don't," Brooks said. "I want to improve my study habits because my high school was a total blow-off. I could get B's without studying, so I just didn't study."

Weigelt said she was directed to the study skills session by one of her instructors in the radiology program who knew that she was interested in hints for studying medical terminology.

She added that she thinks the university should have something like the study skills program for incoming freshmen.

"They did when I first came here, but it was something that you had to pursue yourself," she said. "I think that they should really publicize it."

Consultation services are the primary function of UCS counselors, but UCS offers a variety of programs designed to help the average student in a variety of ways.

The study skills workshop is only one of the programs being offered by UCS this summer. In the area of academics, UCS also offers drop-in sessions for students with learning disabilities.

On July 11 and July 13, a workshop directed at couples will meet at 7 p.m.

A series of discussions, readings and self-exploration exercises is being offered as part of a self-esteem improvement program for women on June 23 and June 28 from 1:30 to 3 p.m. The group will focus on common self-esteem problems of women; the impact of women's relationships, work life, and cultural values on self-perceptions; and the high cost of low self-esteem on women's lives.

For those confused about their career goals, UCS will be offering two workshops to help clear the air. "Interpreting Your Career Inventory" is being held from noon to 2:30 p.m. on July 11 and from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. on July 21. The workshops will be held in the Career Information Center, Union Room 286.

UI conducts twins research study

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

Sisters Julie Carraway and Jill Asprey may not look eligible to participate in twins research, but looks can be deceiving.

They are fraternal twins — siblings who share 50 percent of the same genes — and thus qualify to participate in a nonverbal thinking skills study administered by the UI College of Medicine's Department of Psychiatry beginning this month.

The study is designed to help explain the manner in which different types of thought processes relate to an individual's genes or the environment.

Julie, 23, is 5-foot-8 with brown hair, hazel eyes and of medium build, while Jill is 5-2 with blonde hair, dark brown eyes and thin build.

"People don't even realize we're sisters. There are not a lot of similarities," Julie said.

Jeff Gilger, a UI doctoral fellow in psychiatric genetics and head of the twins research project, said twins are the best group to shed light on how environmental factors affect thought processes because they usually share common environments as well as like genes.

The study provides a scientific method to see to what extent human dissimilarities are based on heredity. Researchers use statistical analysis to compare fraternal and identical twins and to learn the extent to which nonverbal skills are influenced by basic biological processes.

Gilger said about 30 sets of twins were tested in California, and at least 15 more pairs of same-sex, fraternal twins are required to complete the study, which began in 1985 at the University of California-Santa Barbara and the University of Southern California. The project is funded by a grant from the National Institute of Mental Health through UCSB.

Twin project participants will record responses to puzzles, mazes and film slides on computers. Later this year the data will be subjected to statistical analysis to pinpoint nonverbal characteristics.

Julie, who lives in Cedar Rapids, said she decided to participate in the study when Jill, a nurse at UI Hospitals and Clinics, saw a newspaper ad in Iowa City.

She said the research exercises were not difficult since most were based on common sense, but added that she and Jill seemed to have difficulty with similar tests.

Julie said she never felt pressure from her parents to be like her sister, and they didn't dress alike after about age 3 because they wore different sizes in clothing.

But she said she has liked being a twin, especially when she was a child.

Youth dies of injuries in ramp fall

By Traci Auble
The Daily Iowan

The most recent victim of an apparent suicide in Iowa City — a 15-year-old male who jumped off the parking ramp at the corner of Linn and Burlington streets Saturday — died Tuesday at UI Hospitals and Clinics.

Jamie J. Olson, a senior at Iowa City West High School, died from injuries sustained in the fall from the third story of the ramp. The death has been labeled a suicide by Iowa City police, although the Johnson County Medical Examiner's office has yet to confirm it as a suicide.

If confirmed, Olson's death would be the fifth suicide in a week in Iowa City. According to statistics from the Iowa City Crisis Center, only two suicides were confirmed all of last year.

In response to the latest death, Iowa City Crisis Center Program Director Mary Martinez and Jenny Naso of the United Action for Youth issued an open letter to area teenagers Wednesday.

The letter was an invitation to all teenagers in the community who are finding it difficult to deal with the suicide of a friend to seek help at the centers.

"We are really worried that someone else is going to hurt themselves as they deal with their feelings about his death," the letter states about the latest death involving Olson. "If you want to honor his memory and his wishes, learn to deal with your problems in ways that aren't self-destructive."

The letter also urges teenagers to call the crisis center at 351-0140 or United Action for Youth at 338-7518. Both centers are available 24 hours a day.

An Iowa City man was taken to Mercy Hospital for injuries sustained when his bicycle hit an open car door Wednesday, according to police reports.

The man received injuries to his left shoulder and a bruised knee. He was treated and then released, according to a spokeswoman for Mercy Hospital.

Report: An Iowa City man was arrested and charged with consumption in public Tuesday night, according to UI Campus Security reports.

John David Van Brocklin, 29, address not available, was arrested by UI Campus Security at the Lindquist Center at about 7:35 p.m., according to the report.

Report: An Iowa City man accidentally placed several personal items in the wrong car Tuesday night and has filed a report with the police in case the owner of the car turns in the items, according to police reports.

The items are: a pair of brown-rimmed prescription glasses, a red-and-white cooler and an Emerson AM/FM dual cassette stereo, according to the report.

The man told police the car, a dark blue Ford Fiesta with Iowa license plates, was identical to and parked near his own car, according to the report.

Theft: Cash and a necklace valued at $480 were reported stolen from a home on North Pine Street Wednesday, according to police reports.

A woman reported that a gold necklace valued at $180 and $300 in cash were stolen from the home, according to the report.

The incident is currently under investigation by the Iowa City Police Department, the report said.

Report: An Iowa City man reported that tomato plants were ripped up in his backyard sometime Tuesday after 10:30 p.m. The man told police he had also received a threatening message on an answering machine, according to police reports.

The man is unsure if the events are related. There are no suspects at this time, but the man told police he will keep the taped message in case of future incidents, according to the report.

High temperatures may cause heat strokes

By Mary Brill
The Daily Iowan

With temperatures continuing to hit record levels in Iowa, many residents may be unaware of the dangers of heat in the summer heat.

But according to local physicians, heat strokes can include a red, flushed face; severe dehydration; and loss of consciousness.

Heat exhaustion may be prevented by resting and drinking water while a heat stroke is more serious and requires immediate attention, Weber said.

"If medical attention is not given promptly, of course we can't guarantee the situation," Weber said. "There is mortality."

People taking a regular dose of medication may be susceptible to heat, Weber said. Psychological stress may interfere with the body's tolerance of heat. Some people also have a slight heat intolerance.

A heat stroke occurs when body temperature reaches 103 degrees, according to Dr. H. H. Hoss, director of the Emergency Department at Mercy Hospital.

Several people have come to the emergency room with heat strokes in the unusually hot weather.

"Just being out is enough to cause physical stress, especially during prolonged exposure to the sun," Hoss said.

Water is the best liquid because it is absorbed by the body quickly, Hoss said.

"It's better to prevent than to cure in the first place," Weber said. "Adding that drinking water and refraining from outdoor activities during the hottest part of the day can prevent a serious heat stroke."

SIoux CITY, Iowa — The Board of Regents Wednesday approved a proposal to establish a national center for gifted education at the University of Iowa.

The regents today are expected to approve the three-year appointment of Professor Colangelo, currently chair of the UI College of Education counselor education division, as center director, effective July 1.

Prospects for the center were first discussed last year when the state Legislature passed legislation calling for the creation of such a center and approval of a $750,000 endowment for the center. Private donations will provide the center's initial support.

Today in Des Moines, the regents are expected to divulge the amount of a

High temps may cause heat stroke

By Mary Brill
The Daily Iowan

With temperatures continuing to hit record levels in Iowa City, many residents may be concerned about the dangers of being outside in the scorching heat.

But according to local doctors, preventing heat strokes and heat exhaustion can be as easy as sitting under a shady tree with a tall glass of ice water.

It is important to recognize the difference between heat exhaustion and a serious heat stroke, according to Leslie Weber of the UI Hospitals and Clinics Department of Family Practice.

Fainting and lightheadedness indicate the body is suffering heat exhaustion due to loss of fluids, Weber said. Symptoms of a heat stroke include a red, flushed complexion; severe dehydration; confusion; and loss of consciousness.

Heat exhaustion may be relieved by resting and by drinking water, while a heat stroke is more serious and requires immediate medical attention, Weber said.

"If medical attention is sought promptly, of course we can control the situation," Weber said. "But there is mortality."

People taking a regular medication may be susceptible to heat exhaustion, Weber said. Psychoactive medication may interfere with heat loss, thereby decreasing the body's tolerance of heat. Some antihistamines also have a slight effect on heat tolerance.

A heat stroke occurs when the body temperature reaches 104 degrees, according to Charles Huss, director of the Emergency Department at Mercy Hospital.

Several people have come to the emergency room with varying degrees of heat sickness during this unusually hot week, Huss said.

"Just being out is enough, particularly during physical activity or prolonged exposure to the heat," Huss said.

Water is the best liquid to drink because it is absorbed by the body quickly, Huss said.

"It's better to prevent the problem in the first place," Weber said, adding that drinking plenty of water and refraining from exercise during the hottest part of the day can prevent a serious heat stroke.

Rain offers little relief to crops; legislators ask government's help

DES MOINES (AP)—A light rain fell over much of Iowa's parched crop land Wednesday, but officials said it fell far short of the drenching needed to rescue the state's corn and soybeans.

"It didn't amount to much," said Harry Hillaker, the acting state climatologist. "At best, it may have bought us another one or two days."

Iowa's secretary of agriculture, Dale Cochran, warned that a return to sweltering, dry conditions over the next 10 days could doom half the state's corn crop.

However, the widespread scattered showers and forecasts of slight chances for additional rainfall stalled a rally that had pushed soybean prices to an 11-year high on the Chicago Board of Trade. Soybean contracts closed mixed, ranging from a decline of 1 1/2 cents to a gain of 9 1/2 cents a bushel, with contracts for July delivery up 8 cents at $10.54 1/2 a bushel. Corn, which has more critical current needs for moisture, resumed its rise after a mixed opening. At Iowa elevators, corn was bid as high as $3.16 a bushel and soybeans as high as $10. The rain also came as Cochran summoned a task force of farmers, state and federal officials to try to find a way to ease the problems caused by the drought.

"With the searing heat we've had, the situation has become very, very serious as our crops begin to deteriorate," Cochran told the initial meeting of the panel. "In the next 10 days, if we don't get rain we could lose 50 percent of our corn crop."

In Washington, a congressional drought task force met with U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Richard Lyng, who was urged to take all steps in his power to provide relief.

Rep. David Nagle, D-Iowa, said the focus of immediate efforts is on assuring feed for livestock and that legislative action to help deal with crop losses would be delayed until officials determine the extent of the damage.

Rep. Fred Grandy, R-Iowa, said he wrote Lyng seeking permission for farmers to harvest oats as well as hay on land idled under federal farm programs. But Nagle said Lyng on Wednesday ruled out such action. Nagle said Lyng agreed to provide low-interest loans for farmers who lose 30 percent or more of their net income, and the northeast Iowa congressman said he would urge Gov. Terry Branstad to apply for such assistance for Iowa.

The rain, meantime, helped drop temperatures a few degrees from the blistering readings of the past three days, but temperatures still were flirting with triple-digit levels and record highs were recorded at Des Moines and Dubuque and tied at Ottumwa, Sioux City and Waterloo.

The high temperatures were 98 in Des Moines, breaking a record of 96 set in 1933; 97 in Dubuque, surpassing the 95 of 1911; 97 at Ottumwa, tying a record set in 1933; 99 at Sioux City, equalling a mark set in 1930; and 97 at Waterloo, matching the high recorded in 1940.

Larry Nelson, an employee at Amana Central Air Conditioning and Heating at Sioux City, said crews have backlogs repairing air conditioners and installing new ones.

Regents approve center for gifted

By Paula Roesler
The Daily Iowan

SIoux CITY, Iowa — The state Board of Regents Wednesday approved a proposal to establish a Connie Belin National Center for Gifted Education at the UI.

The regents today are expected to approve the three-year term appointment of Professor Nicholas Colangelo, currently chairman of the UI College of Education counselor education division, as the center director, effective July 1.

Prospects for the center named after former regent Connie Belin were first discussed last spring when the state Legislature passed legislation calling for the creation of such a center and appropriated a $750,000 endowment for the project. Private donations and grants will provide the center with additional support.

Today in Des Moines, the UI will divulge the amount of a "substantial" contribution by a private donor, according to UI Interim President Richard Remington.

"I can't say how much it is, but let's just say it's a very generous contribution," Remington said at the regents meeting here Wednesday.

Private endowments will provide the salary for a new senior faculty member to work on the center's staff.

The center will act as a national resource for educators, providing instruction for teachers in gifted education and internships for education majors and educators. It will also create coursework for gifted education majors, disseminate information on gifted youngsters and conduct research.

"There's a lot of uncertainty about the area of gifted education right now," regent Mary Williams said Wednesday, adding that educators in the last 10 years have defined gifted education as a priority.

"This will provide an opportunity for higher education institutions to work with K through 12. This is really long overdue," Williams said.

The center will also allow students to participate in talent searches and summer institutes.

A biannual national conference on gifted education to be hosted by the center is expected to bring leading researchers and practitioners of the field to Iowa.

Existing UI programs to be integrated into the center's program include the Governor's Summer Institute for Gifted and Talented Education, the Honors Opportunity Program, the Iowa Inventors Project, and the Connie Belin Fellowship Program in Gifted Education.

Belin, who served as a regent for three years until her death in June of 1980, was a teacher, a member of the West Des Moines School Board and a board member of the Iowa Talented and Gifted Program.

conduct his laser research at the renovated laboratory until the UI Laser Center construction is finished, which may be as soon as 1989, Remington said.

"We have the unique opportunity of making great use of a little-used space," Remington said. "Dr. Smirl has the physics laboratory needs, and we are pleased we can meet them.

The endowed laser science chairs include positions in chemistry, engineering and physics and were established in 1986 with $1.5 million dollars in state lottery money and $1.5 million dollars in matching funds from the UI Foundation.

In other action Wednesday, the regents approved renaming a UI building in honor of Robert Hardin, former dean of the College of Medicine, who died last Jan. 2. The UI Health Sciences Library will be renamed the Hardin Library of Health Sciences.

Vernon

Vernon, who has been a law professor at the UI since 1966, is an internationally known authority in the fields of contracts and the conflicts of law. He served as dean of the UI College of Law from 1966-71.

After being named as the Iowa Law School Foundation Professor in 1971, Vernon served as special assistant for academic affairs to former UI President Willard Boyd from 1973-74.

In 1986, Vernon was named Allan D. Vestal Professor at the College of Law. That same year, Vernon was also a Fulbright Scholar and Visiting Fellow at Victoria University in Wellington, New Zealand.

A native of Boston, Vernon earned law degrees from Harvard and New York universities. He is the author of numerous scholarly articles and has taught at the Universities of Houston, New Mexico, New York and Washington. He has held 16 visiting professorships in the United States and abroad.

Budget

Psychiatric Hospital; $5,861,200 for the UI Hospital School; $3,788,800 for the UI Hygienic Laboratory; and $3,032,112 for the Oakdale Campus.

The board will finalize state university budgets at its July 15 meeting. State universities are allowed to use tentatively approved budgets until final review.

Needed moratorium

On a recent visit to a farm in southeastern Minnesota, Democratic presidential contender Jesse Jackson blamed the Reagan administration's farm policies for driving 650,000 farmers out of business in the past eight years. In the paraphrased words of singer Billy Bragg, it's no consolation that Reagan will not serve another term. Enough damage has already been done.

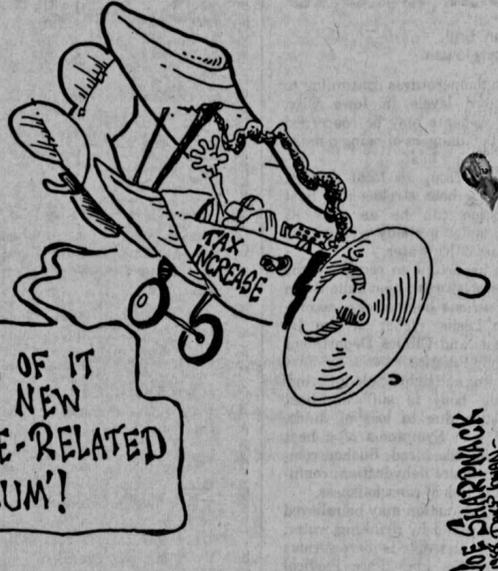

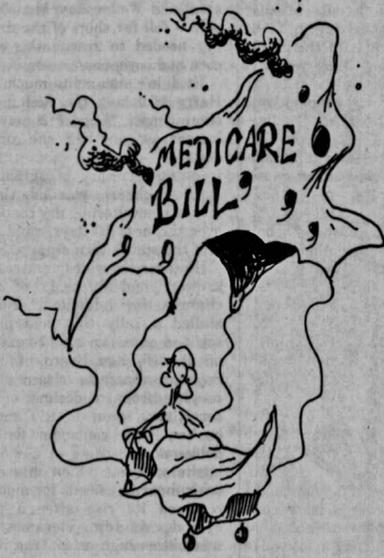

Threatening to intensify the damage are the possibly disastrous consequences of the current drought. Decreased productivity resulting from the drought may push debt-ridden farmers, already teetering on the edge of bankruptcy, off their farmland. A moratorium on farm foreclosures, as proposed by Jackson, would allow such farmers an extension on their outstanding loans.

If Reagan's farm foreclosure policies are not remanded and revised, the already astronomical number of working people affected by his administration's obtuseness will undoubtedly skyrocket.

Legislation granting a moratorium on farm foreclosures, even if only temporarily, would be a godsend for many farmers currently wallowing in uncertainty and a boost to a declining Midwestern morale.

The call of the 'Y': Yuppie Lust in West L.A.

It's not everybody's problem, but it's mine. I have a hard time staying poor, or think I do.

Justin Cronin

This world has its Mother Teresas and Boxcar Willies, but for each of them there is a Donald Trump to even the score. Where that leaves most people is somewhere in the middle. Half of these are covetous SOBs, and I am one of them.

This is a particularly embarrassing state of affairs for someone who is allegedly a starving artist. Yuppie lust is my private shame. Only in the company of other afflicted individuals does it go public — as it did in Los Angeles last March, when I visited a high-school friend who not only liked money, but had it, too.

My friend had been transferred to L.A. by First Boston, an investment bank based in New York. First Boston is just another bank in exactly the same way that God is just another weatherman. It is the cradle of arbitrage, corporate raiding and billion-dollar greed.

I had seen my friend a couple of times when he was still working in New York. In those days, he didn't look at all well — haggard, thin and dazed, like a salesman coming off a three-day bender. They were working him to death, he said, and for what? Sure, the money was good, but he didn't even have the time to spend it. Quite earnestly he told me he was thinking of "giving the whole thing up" and "doing something meaningful" with his degree in Third World economics, "his first love."

I didn't know what happened to those noble ideas, but I did know that in the wake of Black Monday he had gone to Los Angeles. He had survived the mass-firings that had taken other, less capable men.

I telephoned from Iowa City to let him know I was coming. "Mr. McPhail's office," a voice said.

"You're kidding," I said, appalled.

"Mr. McPhail? Mr. McPhail's office?" At least in New York he had answered his own phone.

I don't know why it bothered me so much that he had an office and a secretary. Actually, that's a lie — of course I knew. It bothered me because I was jealous, because my alleged "office" was a sheet metal desk in a canteen of similar desks in the remotest possible corner of the English-Philosophy Building. I didn't even have good light, let alone a telephone and somebody to answer it.

Things got worse. At LAX, he shook my hand roundly, grabbed my bag and walked me out to his brand-new, jet-black Saab 9000. It probably — no, definitely — cost more than I had made in the previous three years. Curbside, it looked like an abandoned cruise missile.

"Nice car," I said, resorting to understatement. The glare coming off its hood was so arresting I feared for the well-being of my retinas. And it was 9 o'clock at night.

"Gets me around," he said. With something that looked like a doctor's beeper, he made his car chirp. I jumped. "Alarm," he said. Indeed, I thought. "Get in," he said.

We turned out of the airport and headed for Santa Monica. While we drove I fidgeted with the onboard computer for climate control, inspecting my friend out of the corner of my eye. He was trim, tan and dressed like a GQ model. He maneuvered his Saab through traffic with the abandon of a combat pilot, and in truth, I didn't think I'd ever seen him look better. Money, in his case, was obviously a fun thing to have.

We had dinner at a restaurant that might well have been a set for "Miami Vice." The place was filled to its pastel rafters with people who were handsome, bronzed and nakedly rich. Lumpy, pale and poor, I felt my heart burn with envy. Who were these wonderful people? And why was I not among them?

Over avocado burgers and imported light beer, I broached the subject. "You're a yuppie, aren't you Ken?" I asked. Two blocks away, surf pounded on a pristinely manicured shore, where society's castoffs were being prodded with nightsticks and told to move along. I tried to focus on that; tried, and failed. "A Y-person."

"Labels are easy," my friend said. "Whatever I am, they sure pay me well for it."

I thought: I could do this. I'd done well in school, owned one interview-quality suit. What was the difference, I reasoned, between packaging commercial mortgages and adding to the world's already ample volume of bad literature? I couldn't think of a thing, other than money. The world was full of bankers, full of so-so writers. I suddenly saw that both of us were a dime a dozen, only one of us was a lot richer.

Later that night we sat in his apartment drinking delicious Tanqueray martinis. "What happened to Africa?" I asked, hungrily eyeing his track-lighting, his windsurfer, his sleek modern furniture of chrome, leather and marble. "When I saw you last you said you were going to quit and go to Africa."

He laughed. "Oh, they talked me out of that. I'm 26 years old, and you know what? If I don't buy property by the end of the fiscal year I'll be taxed into next week. Every dollar you make suddenly becomes indispensable. I don't see myself going back, not anymore."

Not going back? I assumed he meant not going back to where I was. Maybe it was the heat, or the ritzy gin, but all that night I tossed and turned. Usually I dream in black and white, but that night I dreamed in green.

Bad trouble was coming, I knew. The next day I excused myself and telephoned another friend I had in town. He was a "stand-up comic, studying to be a bartender," and lived in East Hollywood, in an apartment building inhabited largely by Iranian immigrants and their loud children. It looked, for all the world, just like a Daytona Beach motor court.

My relief at seeing him was immense. Our first night together, we drove his dilapidated Toyota to a shack at the beach famous for its Velveeta cheeseburgers and 60-cent draft beers.

"Tell me," he said across the dim light of the bar. "Tell me all about what you're doing."

I had to think. I told him I was writing stories, that I hadn't published anything, that I was having second thoughts.

My second and better friend — better in the sense that our futures overlapped somehow — started to laugh. "McPhail sure has a nice car, doesn't he? Well forget it. You wouldn't even know how to drive such a thing."

I sipped my beer. It cost me 60 cents, exactly what I could afford. It was also exactly what I wanted at that moment. It was — what do they say? — it was me. "No, I don't think I would," I said, and our cheeseburgers arrived.

Scholarships may soon be awarded correctly

Although many variables are taken into consideration when student financial aid is doled out, several factors weigh more heavily than others in influencing the amount a student receives. Things such as residency, academic achievement, standardized test scores and what type of aid you're applying for are all important, and therefore evaluated. But seemingly, the single most important factor influencing the attainment of loans, grants and, namely, scholarships, is the amount of money your parents make.

Simply put, the more your parents make and are subsequently able to contribute to your education, the less likely you are to receive aid. If aid is given out, the amount will generally decrease as the net income of your guardians increases.

This makes perfectly good sense. If financial aid was drawn from a bottomless hole with enough for everyone applying, there would be no need to meticulously evaluate student's needs on a case-by-case basis. But college finances are perennially strapped, and the need to give out aid to only those applicants truly in need of the assistance is sound practice and a financial necessity.

In a nutshell, these are the basics of applying for and receiving financial aid if you're a "regular student." Now, on the other hand, if you're an athlete who happens to also be going to school, you can throw these criteria out the window. In the big-bucks world of NCAA athletics, aid is distributed not on the basis of who needs it but rather on the basis of who's the best athlete. Sound strange? — I didn't think so.

Division I athletics generate unbelievable amounts of money, and college athletic departments are therefore in a position to extend scholarship offers to as many prospective student athletes as the NCAA allows them to. The actual number of scholarships a school can offer depends, in large part, on the sport in which the student will participate. Basketball, baseball, wrestling and — especially — football are the biggest beneficiaries of the practice of extending attractive scholarships to potential students, or, rather, potential athletes, or, rather, potential revenue.

This is not to say that student athletes don't deserve to have their educational costs supplemented if they're devoting time and energy to their respective sport. If a student spends a good deal of time on the field or in the gym and therefore is unable to hold a necessary part-time job, then by all means help this student out financially. This will ensure that he or she can continue his or her education, pursue his or her sport and hopefully generate revenue for the athletic department as well.

But athletic scholarships are handed out more in an attempt to deliver to the program the best athletes, regardless of their ability to pay for their education, and not to provide opportunities to those athletes who are gifted yet also in need of financial assistance. This is wrong, unless of course one admits that the purpose of university athletics is primarily one of making money — with providing spectator entertainment and encouraging the athlete to strive to be the best he or she can be, as a priority on a secondary level.

For years, the practice of offering the best athletes the most comprehensive and attractive scholarships in an attempt to secure their talent has been uncontested in the sense that their ability to pay for their education meant little when the most choice packages were offered. As a rule, the best athletes got the best scholarships even if their parents made great sums of money. If an athlete was borderline Division I material, he or she would receive the comparable scholarship — borderline aid and financial supplementation.

For the first time, though, the NCAA is rightfully considering an alternative form of distributing scholarships, a form which is not only more in line with how financial aid is given to the typical student, but also one in which the athletes most deserving of financial aid will receive it. Specifically, the recommendations from a special NCAA committee focus on athletes from middle-class and wealthy families.

According to Peter Likens, president of Lehigh University, "One main objection many of us have is free rides for the wealthy." Likens is a member of the recently appointed NCAA committee that will most likely be instrumental in changing scholarship distribution procedure.

If this committee's goal is realized, a drastic change will be seen in the methods of scholarship distribution. Those athletes truly deserving scholarships will receive them, and they will also receive the chance to attend an institution of higher learning. The best athletes will probably still get their hearty scholarships, they just may not receive the bloated expense stipends they may have become accustomed to if their parents can afford to help them out. The bottom line, and a simple one at that, is that in the future there will be a direct correlation between the amount of aid an athlete receives and the amount that athlete actually needs. Fairly simple procedure, don't you agree?

Complacent Democrats face long road ahead

The recent poll showing Mike Dukakis way ahead of George Bush in Iowa may make Democrats complacent, feeling a Dukakis victory is in the bag.

That complacent feeling should be put on hold.

Recently the Des Moines Register pointed out that Jimmy Carter held a similar lead over Gerald Ford here in August 1976 and went on to lose the state.

Nationally, Nixon was way ahead of Humphrey in 1968 at this point in the race. Yet that election went to the wire. Being strong in the summer polls is nice, but it doesn't always count for much.

John Dornfeld

Dukakis is doing well nationally partly because he's had more favorable publicity lately than Bush. In addition, Bush's faults are known, for the simple reason he's been in the national public eye longer than Dukakis.

Dukakis' faults, except for his glaring dullness in four languages, are not generally known outside Massachusetts, where he has served as governor for three terms.

In that time he's made hundreds, if not thousands, of decisions. No one making that many decisions is going to make correct ones every time. He's made mistakes.

Those mistakes aren't well-known yet. But Bush and his people will work extremely hard in the fall to make those mistakes known to the national public.

Plus, Dukakis has a set of decisions to make over the next two months that will greatly affect his chances at the presidency.

Those decisions deal with these areas: what to do about Jesse Jackson and his supporters; who to pick for the vice presidential spot on the ticket; and the final shape of the Democratic Party platform.

Mistakes in any one of these areas could easily doom a Dukakis presidential campaign.

Plus, things look good nationally for the Republicans right now. Unemployment is at its lowest mark since the mid-1970s. Reagan and Gorbachev signed a major agreement on nuclear weapons a few months ago. Inflation is still low, and the U.S. is not technically at war with any nation now.

This doesn't mean things are hopeless for Dukakis. Much of the prosperity we've experienced in the past few years has been paid for with deficit spending. The botched Noriega deal and the defense scandal just now coming out both make the current administration look bad.

Plus, it's only now that Midwest manufacturing and agriculture are seeing the prosperity both coasts have enjoyed for years. People in this part of the country still remember how hard the recession of the early 1980s was and how defense contractors and Wall Street investors lived it up in the meantime.

A recession or tremendous inflation triggered by the drought could eliminate prosperity. If that happens, all bets are off.

And don't forget the Iran-Contra affair. As long as the public is bored with it, Bush is off the hook. But if evidence surfaces showing Bush knew more than he's telling, or that he did something really stupid, he's in a for a long, long campaign.

But Bush will have enough money to run a long, hard campaign. He will have some power of incumbency in a decade when incumbent politicians of all types have done very well.

Don't let anyone fool you. This year's presidential campaign is going to be close. Dukakis and the Democrats cannot afford to be complacent or underestimate Bush.

RIVERSIDE, Iowa (AP) — Fest organizers don't think putting undue pressure on who will be born here or 2228, to become dis-starfleet commanders.

Riverside, which four appointed itself as the birthplace of Capt. Jan of the starship Enterprise "Star Trek" television series, holds its fourth Friday and Saturday.

'Squarts' are hot summer fad

By Lisa Swegle
Special to The Daily Iowan

Limited "squarties" are available of "squarts" and "squeeze bottles," the latest fad to hit the Iowa City area.

QuikTrip and Wendy's are each marketing 32-ounce plastic squeeze bottles which have a sealable plastic straw. Refills of pop are available for a cheaper price when the container is brought back.

QuikTrip Vice President of Corporate Marketing Wyatt Phillips said QuikTrip stores sold as many "squart" squeeze bottles the first week as the corporation projected selling all summer.

Matt Goodlaxson, manager of a local QuikTrip, said sales are booming.

"Far and away, they're one of the best sales items we've ever had," Goodlaxson said. "They took off faster here, but they're popular everywhere. We can't get them in fast enough."

Phillips estimated that the latest shipment of two truckloads will only last three days.

"We're having trouble keeping them in," Phillips said.

Several convenience store chains around the country have marketed a squeeze bottle in the past year, but QuikTrip started selling its version four weeks ago in its five-state company region, according to Phillips.

"The bottle itself has been around for a long, long time in one form or another," said Phillips. He added that sports teams have used similar containers as water bottles for years.

After one week of Iowa City Wendy's squeeze bottle offer, supplies are sold out, according to David Carlson, manager of Wendy's on Riverside Drive.

The fast food chain is currently test-marketing the plastic containers in the Iowa City area and in Kansas.

"Once it's determined that they sell well here, the company may go nationwide with them," said Carlson.

Theories behind the success of the squeeze bottle container vary.

"It's a summertime item. People can always stop here on their way to the reservoir or golf course or whatever to get them refilled, and it's really convenient for everyone," said Carlson. Goodlaxson said the QuikTrip containers were extremely popular at first among UI students because "you could sneak them into the library. You could slip them into your backpack and they wouldn't spill."

"Since then, I know people like to use them at the beach," Goodlaxson said.

UI Assistant Professor of Marketing Cathy Cole said the bottles are a gimmick similar to coupons which build store traffic.

Cole said companies hope people will buy cookies or other snack items when they return to refill their pop containers.

"It's mainly to get you to go back," Cole said.

The squeeze bottle fad is part of an overall trend of young people's preference for pop instead of coffee, Cole said.

Cole said she has read that coffee consumption is way down in the 20-year-old age group and said this trend holds true among her students.

"I notice in my classes, if I teach at 9 o'clock in the morning, that students will bring in a Coke instead of a cup of coffee," she said.

When she was 20 years old, Dunkin' Donuts had a similar coffee-cup promotion. Refills were available for approximately 20 cents. She said QuikTrip and Wendy's are adapting to younger people's increased pop consumption by offering a mobile container for pop.

UI graduate student Rich Selby is waiting for the next shipment of squarts to come in so he can buy one.

"My roommate has one and he's been rubbing it in my face," he said. "I go to QuikTrip every day, if not twice a day, and I see people coming in and out with them."

One reason he wants a squirt is because "it won't spill on my way to work."

UI graduate student Linda Hug called the squirt "a kind of glorified Tupperware container" but said she bought one because of the novelty and good price. Quarts of pop are 10 cents cheaper with the container.

"I've gotten a lot of interesting comments on it," Hug said. "It's fun."

Wendy's and QuikTrip plan to sell the squeeze bottles at least through the summer.

Church asks Drake for renewal of ties

DES MOINES (AP)—A proposal to renew Drake University's ties to the Disciples of Christ Church merits discussion by the school's board of governors, university president Michael Ferrari said.

The Christian Church founded Drake and wants to restore its relationship that soured when the Des Moines university closed its Divinity School in 1968, church officials said.

John Humbert, president of the Christian Church, said he hopes Drake's study will lead to a restoration of its relationship with the church.

"We have long cherished the relationship we have had with Drake," said Humbert.

A national commission recommended that Drake administrators explore the possibility of signing a covenant with the 1 million-member mainline Protestant denomination.

Humbert said the covenant is a mutual relationship that is supportive of the liberal arts tradition and in no way intrudes on academic freedom.

indicated its willingness to assist in student recruitment and would provide scholarship monies for deserving students. . . . The Task Force recognizes reaffirming the covenant by the University could be misunderstood," the commission's report said.

"Over the past few years I've been trying to strengthen the bonds between the institutions," said Ferrari, citing as an example his installation in the First Christian Church across the street from Drake.

"The church is the founding constituency of the university, and the university ought to conduct itself in a way that demonstrates respect and its gratitude to the church."

But Ferrari said he opposes re-establishing the divinity school or allowing the church a role in Drake's curriculum, educational philosophy or governance.

A fall 1987 survey by the American Council on Education of Drake freshmen showed that less than 4 percent belonged to the Christian Church.

Gay Games medalist reflects on experience

By Lisa Swegle
Special to The Daily Iowan

As part of Iowa City Gay and Lesbian Pride Week, a four-event gold medalist from the 1986 Gay Games II athletic competition shared his experiences with a slide presentation on the event at the Union Tuesday night.

Because of his job and other pressures, Gary said he did not want his full name revealed. He has not openly admitted his homosexuality in his home community since personally acknowledging that he was gay five years ago.

One of three athletes from Iowa who participated in the games, Gary was a gold medalist in the 30- to 35-year-old age division in the 1,500-meter, 5,000-meter and 10,000-meter runs and 26.1-mile marathon.

Gary said 17 sports ranging from billiards to basketball to bodybuilding were represented at the August 1986 Gay Games II in San Francisco.

Founded in 1982 by 1968 Olympic javelin gold medalist Tom Waddell, the Gay Games is the largest event sponsored by homosexuals.

Patterned after the Olympics, the games involved 3,500 athletes from 17 different countries. Gary said the games are open to all ages, and heterosexuals as well as homosexuals can participate.

Despite his success, Gary said the athletics were secondary to his personal growth through the trip.

"I was mainly there to experience the gay community in a city with much freedom and respect for the gay community," he said. "The medals were satisfying, but they were a bonus."

In 1985, Gary said he was ranked as one of the top 50 runners in Iowa. His time in the 10,000-meter race at the Gay Games II was 33 minutes, five minutes off world-class pace.

Gary said participation was considered the most important element at the games.

"The person who finished last got as much applause as I did," Gary said.

Gary said his participation in the games was therapeutic, giving him a sense of pride in his homosexuality.

In the midst of AIDS, homophobia and homosexual-directed violence, Gary said the games are "one of the bright spots" for the gay community.

Gary said his medals from the games are displayed in the privacy of his bedroom.

Gary Games III is scheduled for August 1990 in British Columbia, Canada. Gary said he is planning on competing in the event, but said he doesn't know when he will be able to acknowledge his Gay Games success in his hometown.

Iowa has a quiet tolerance for homosexuals, Gary said, as long as they "don't rock the boat."

In 1986, he was featured anonymously in a series on homosexuality in his town's newspaper.

"A couple of people figured it out and had the courage to come up and speak to me, and I really appreciated that," Gary said. "One of my main heterosexual competitors came up to me and said, 'It's okay with me and I totally respect you as a human being.'"

Gary said running has been a way to prove his masculinity to himself and a healthy outlet for frustration.

At the games, Gary said, "I could be an athlete and a homosexual and enjoy being with others with similar interests."

Gary said he read about the games in the gay magazine Advocate and paid the $40 registration fee. The Gay Coalition of Des Moines was one of Gary's sponsors and donated money for a uniform in Hawkeye black and gold.

Gary said the uniform attracted several people who approached him to talk.

Now, Gary is traveling around Iowa and Minnesota presenting the slide presentation about the games.

Gary said he hopes to recruit more people to represent Iowa in the 1990 games and said it is not too early for athletes to start training and planning.

Riverside celebrates Trekfest

RIVERSIDE, Iowa (AP)—Trekfest organizers don't think they are putting undue pressure on boys who will be born here on March 26, 2228, to become distinguished Starfleet commanders.

Riverside, which four years ago appointed itself as the "future birthplace" of Capt. James T. Kirk of the starship Enterprise from the "Star Trek" television and movie series, holds its fourth Trekfest Friday and Saturday.

Tim B. Putney, a Trekfest organizer, said he's not worried about Riverside producing a native son to live up to Kirk's exploits.

The festival includes a tent raising and volleyball tournament Friday and a parade, fan club meeting and demolition derby Saturday at a park in Riverside.

Putney said a large model of the USS Enterprise spaceship built for the town park two years ago is holding up well in the Iowa weather.

Indian police raid Sikh hideouts

AMRITSAR, India — Police raided hideouts of suspected Sikh extremists in Punjab state on Wednesday, and the death toll in a bomb attack a day earlier in Amritsar rose to 29.

A.A. Siddiqui, a deputy inspector general of the Punjab police, blamed the Amritsar bombing and two others this week on the Barbar Khalsa gang, one of a dozen Sikh extremist groups operating in Punjab.

Siddiqui said law enforcement officials launched "a massive combing" operation aimed at suspected Barbar Khalsa hideouts. He also said that patrolling has been stepped up and that the government has renewed warnings to citizens not to touch suspicious objects.

Police said that 11 people were killed across Punjab state late Tuesday and Wednesday in attacks blamed on Sikh extremists.

The latest deaths raised to more than 1,370 the number of people killed in Punjab by Sikh extremists since the start of the year.

Chinese leader condemns Mao Tse-tung

BEIJING — Senior leader Deng Xiaoping confidently assessed his own economic policies Wednesday while condemning as "leftist mistakes" those followed by Mao Tse-tung for two decades, an official report said.

The Xinhua News Agency said Deng acknowledged that his market-style economic reforms face serious problems, including inflation and wage inequities that have caused widespread discontent. He said the problems will take five or six years to resolve.

But in a meeting with visiting Ethiopian President Mengistu Haile Mariam, Deng criticized China's policies from 1957 through 1976 for "bringing the country to a virtual standstill," Xinhua said.

Deng apparently did not mention Mao by name. Mao died in 1976 after 27 years as the most powerful man in Communist China.

Criticism of Mao's 1957 drive to form huge communes and the 1966-76 radical leftist Cultural Revolution have become routine under Deng, twice purged by Mao.

But Deng's condemnation was unusually sweeping, rejecting the entire two decades as a time when China's "productive forces went undeveloped and people's living standards did not improve."

He blamed the era's emphasis on class struggle and policy of isolating China from the outside world.

Joint committee votes to fund atom-smasher

WASHINGTON — A House-Senate conference committee voted Wednesday to spend $100 million on the multibillion-dollar super collider, but decreed no money could be spent next fiscal year on construction of the proposed atom-smasher.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said the bill would also allow detailed engineering and design work.

"This is another step forward in our quest to get the SSC built on schedule and in Waxahachie," Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said, referring to the central Texas site that is on the Department of Energy's list of contenders for the project.

The super collider is expected to provide its host state with thousands of construction jobs, permanent work for as many as 3,000 people and an annual budget of $270 million.

Discovery readied for possible fall flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Technicians began readying the Space Shuttle Discovery on Wednesday for attachment to external fuel tank and booster rockets for the first shuttle flight since the Challenger disaster 2½ years ago.

One day after Discovery was moved 1,000 feet to an assembly building, workers were preparing a giant sling to lift the 80-ton vehicle so it can be joined to its external fuel tank and two 126-foot solid fuel booster rockets.

"This is like a rebirth," said Discovery flow Director John "Tip" Talone. "We're in business again and we're going to stay in business. It's got to be a tremendous boost to the workers here."

The newest launch date is Sept. 3, but National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials said a late August liftoff is still possible.

"A lot of things have to go right to make the end of August; if not, we'll go a few days after that," Forrest McCartney, director of the Kennedy Space Center, said Tuesday.

Acne drug shown to prevent skin cancer

BOSTON — The acne drug Accutane, which can cause birth defects in pregnant women, prevents skin cancer in people at extremely high risk of the common malignancy, a study concludes.

Experts cautioned that the treatment is too toxic to be used routinely by most people who are afraid of skin cancer. But they said it raises the possibility that similar drugs may someday be given safely to prevent this and other forms of cancer.

Until now, medicines have been given almost exclusively to attack cancers once they occur rather than to prevent them.

"This is the first study that has scientifically proven in humans that skin cancer can be prevented by any means," said Dr. Howard Koh of Boston University School of Medicine. "We use sun screens because they should work, but we still have not rigorously proven in a scientific way that skin cancer can be prevented with that method." Sun is considered the main cause of skin cancer.

Stocks surge for second straight day

NEW YORK — Stocks surged Wednesday on news of a strengthened dollar, positive economic reports and eased pressure on interest rates, boosting the Dow Jones average to the highest level since the crash eight months ago.

The Dow average of 30 industrial stocks jumped at the opening bell and advanced strongly. At 1:53 p.m. it surged past the 50-point barrier that automatically triggers the New York Stock Exchange's post-crash "collar" restriction on computerized trading, aimed at curtailing market volatility.

The restriction helped dampen the rally but by the close the Dow average remained 43.03 points higher at 2,152.20, easily eclipsing the previous post-crash high of 2,131.40 set a week earlier. Broader market indices also rose.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE totaled 217.51 million shares, up from 155.06 million the previous session.

Democrats head off Jackson proposal

Jesse Jackson

DES MOINES (AP) — Iowa Democrats are starting early to head off Jesse Jackson's efforts at next month's Democratic National Convention to cut the role of the state's precinct caucuses in the presidential selection process.

Iowans are relying on good relations with likely nominee Michael Dukakis and top national leaders to help but said their efforts may rest with seeing Dukakis elected, state party spokesman Phil Roeder said.

"It shouldn't come as a big surprise," Roeder said. "It seems the losing candidates in races have a pretty good track record of challenging Iowa's place. It's not a big surprise that one of the losers in the race is going to bring this up."

Jackson said in an interview published in Wednesday's editions of The New York Times that his supporters would work at the convention to put big states like California and New Jersey toward the selection process.

Jackson said that "something is skewed" about a process that gives so much importance to states like Iowa and New Hampshire, while bigger states play a smaller role in picking the party's nominee.

"I will stand for a review of the process," Jackson told the paper.

"We're going to submit a plan dealing with ways to give small states and big states a chance. Right now, for example, you campaign almost a year in Iowa and 10 days in California. You do almost no campaigning in the Northwest as a result of that arrangement."

Roeder said a challenge to the state's role in the process was expected, and said top party leaders have been looking to Dukakis and to National Democratic Chairman Paul Kirk for support.

"First of all, Dukakis likes Iowa and second of all Kirk doesn't want this kind of thing to come up at a convention because it does nothing to foster unity," Roeder said.

Jackson could pose a serious threat to Iowa's role in the process, officials said. National Democratic leaders have been looking for places where they can reach an accommodation with Jackson, and his comments about Iowa's role are shared by a broad section of the party.

A major concern for Democrats heading into next month's national convention is to avoid offending Jackson, without having the party pushed so far to the left that Dukakis is beaten in the general election.

Presidential race continues with new round of criticism

By The Associated Press

Republican George Bush resumed criticism of Michael Dukakis on Wednesday, saying he has waffled on major issues and permitted a murderer to win a prison furlough. Dukakis, his search for a running mate in full swing, said Jesse Jackson was getting "very serious consideration."

Bush denied he was engaging in name-calling in his attacks on Dukakis and said he would continue to point out differences between himself and the Democratic presidential nominee-to-be.

"It's the record — what he favors and what I favor. It's not name-calling," the vice president told reporters aboard Air Force Two en route to Louisville, Ky.

Bush also accused Dukakis in his talk with reporters of waffling on many issues, including public statements on the B-1 bomber. Dukakis opposed the B-1, but aides say he would not cancel contracts for purchases.

"People need to know: Where's the guy coming from?" Bush said.

Dukakis, spending the day in Boston, was peppered with questions about his vice presidential search — including the polling his campaign is conducting on the running mate question and requests for background information on at least two potential candidates.

He said Jackson's lack of government experience does "not necessarily" rule him out for the No. 2 spot on the Democratic ticket and said he was getting "very serious consideration."

He sidestepped questions about whether Jackson would be a liability on the ticket, based on public polls.

"I'm not going to be checking a lot of polls, believe me," Dukakis said. "We all have our strengths and our weaknesses."

Holding a Statehouse news conference, Dukakis said his search for a running mate would expand beyond the candidates who have been asked for background information. They include Jackson and Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla.

One senator popular with Dukakis, Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey, has said he is not interested in joining the ticket and, according to his office, has not been asked to provide background information.

But Dukakis said that doesn't mean Bradley has been ruled out. He pointedly said Bradley "has not told me personally" that he shouldn't be considered.

Young: Atlanta will be prepared for convention

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young on Wednesday blasted criticism of the city's preparations for the Democratic National Convention, saying reports that the host city will not be ready in time are exaggerated.

"I don't care what people say about Atlanta. Anybody who doesn't like Atlanta can go somewhere else," Young said. "This is a building and growing city and it will be for some years to come, but whatever we need for the convention is going to be ready by the time the convention gets here."

Young was responding to recent news articles that reported bad judgment calls by convention planners working on space for convention sessions and hotel accommodations.

Only 7 out of 43 Iowa delegates support Jackson as vice president

DES MOINES (AP) — Jesse Jackson gets high marks from Iowa Democrats for expanding the party, but few of the delegates who will attend the party's national convention this summer are excited about seeing him as the vice presidential candidate, an Associated Press survey shows.

Only seven of the 43 delegates who have been picked to date think Jackson has earned the right to have the "right of first refusal" to run with likely nominee Michael Dukakis, according to an AP survey.

Party leaders and partisans said that does not surprise them since the Iowa delegation is largely made up of pragmatists looking for a November victory.

"It has something to do with the sentiment this year," Iowa Democratic Chairwoman Bonnie Campbell said. "Everybody is very aware that we truly have the potential to capture the White House. Toward the end, you find people thinking and behaving in more pragmatic ways."

"The genesis of that is the sense that we can win," she said.

Weinberger backs Pentagon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Wednesday he had no apologies to make for his management style despite a mushrooming federal investigation of Pentagon contract fraud.

Weinberger also said he did not know about the federal investigation until it was revealed last week, nor did he have any suspicions of wrongdoing before he left office in November.

"I think the (contract) procedures in effect are proper," Weinberger told The Associated Press.

"We needed to regain military strength quickly and we did. But I didn't exercise any hands-off management technique. I had briefings regularly, once a week or every two weeks, on the major weapons programs."

"But no matter how careful you are, you're not going to be able to eliminate dishonesty," Weinberger said. Weinberger, one of President Ronald Reagan's closest friends and staunchest allies, insisted he had seen nothing in news reports about the FBI investigation to call into question the contracting rules and regulations used by the Pentagon.

He also complained that talk of scandal was prompting lawmakers to twist facts about the administration's performance and to lose sight of the continuing need for a strong defense.

"You don't close a bank because there's been a bank robbery," Weinberger said. "And you don't conclude that we don't need a strong defense because of the actions of some faithless employees."

"Now, a lot of totally incorrect statements are being made in the heat of battle," he continued.

"Senator (Charles) Grassley said 60 percent of defense contracts are awarded competitively. It's really 60 percent. Sixty percent of the contracts by dollar value. It's 82 percent by number of contract actions."

"We need to keep a sense of proportion without jumping to conclusions. The Pentagon awards 52,000 contracts every single day, and inevitably there may be some faithless or dishonest people," Weinberger said.

Weinberger's defense of the Pentagon came just one day after President Reagan offered similar observations, saying bribery and fraud were "understandable" within the huge bureaucracy of the Pentagon and that no one could keep track of all defense employees and military contractors.

While echoing those views, Weinberger made clear he did not condone the misconduct.

"I don't have any hesitancy in saying anyone found guilty of bribing or receiving bribes or giving out classified information ought to be administered full punishment," Weinberger said.

"But it's important to bear in mind that the needs of defense haven't changed at all as a result of these stories."

Israeli leftists attend banned PLO meeting

JERUSALEM (AP) — A delegation of Israeli left-wingers and moderates challenged a 2-year-old law by attending a conference along with Palestine Liberation Organization observers, a participant said Wednesday.

The delegates could face three years in jail if they are found to have violated a law passed in August 1986 which bars Israelis from meeting with members of the PLO, viewed by Israel as a terrorist group.

In the first test case last month, a court convicted four Israelis for meeting with PLO officials in Costinesti, Romania, in November 1986. The four have not yet been sentenced.

Moshe Amirav, an Israeli delegate, told The Associated Press the Israeli group attended a three-day symposium last week along with Palestinian academics at the invitation of the Free University in Amsterdam.

Two PLO officials, Afif Safieh and Ilan Halevy, attended the conference as observers but did not take part in its proceedings, he said.

"The law is stupid. But we will continue meeting in such a way that we won't be able to be accused of anything," Amirav said, adding that none of the delegates had been summoned for police questioning.

The daily Hadashot reported Amirav actually met with the PLO officials, but Amirav denied the report.

Amirav said other Israeli delegates included Nitza Shapira-Libai of the left-leaning Labor Party, a former adviser to then-Prime Minister Shimon Peres on women's affairs; former left-wing legislator Meir Pail; and human rights lawyers Naomi Chazan and David Kretzmer.

Amirav is a former activist in the right-wing Likud Bloc who was expelled from his party for advocating direct talks with the PLO and far-reaching self-rule for Palestinians in the occupied territories.

He enraged party leaders last year by meeting with Faisal Husseini, a resident of Arab east Jerusalem killed by Israeli authorities as the PLO's representative in the occupied West Bank.

He said the academics told him the PLO was ready to recognize Israel and end the Middle East conflict in return for the establishment of an independent Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"We were stunned by their attitude," he said. "They said they recognized Israel and believed there should be two independent states."

Car bomb injures 18, kills 1 in east Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A car bomb in Christian east Beirut killed one person and wounded 18 on Wednesday, while Palestinian militias battled in the city's refugee camps in a power struggle that has claimed more than 50 lives.

A police spokesman said a green sedan loaded with 44 pounds of explosives detonated at 11 a.m. in a narrow alley in the Karantina district.

The blast set six shops on fire and damaged eight cars parked nearby, according to the spokesman, who asked not to be identified.

Wednesday's explosion raised the toll from six car bombings in Lebanon this year to 94 people killed and 251 wounded.

The Lebanese Forces, the main right-wing Christian militia that controls east Beirut, said explosives experts defused another car bomb in Karantina minutes before it was to explode. The Lebanese Forces said in a statement that the car contained a 22-pound time bomb.

The second car bomb was meant to explode shortly after the first one "to inflict as many casualties as possible among rescuers," the statement said.

Police could not confirm there was a second car bomb.

The Lebanese Forces blamed the recent bombings in east Beirut on a rival militia force led by Elie Hobeika, a Syrian-backed Christian leader.

The leader of the Lebanese Forces, Samir Geagea, ousted Hobeika as the militia's commander in a bloody rebellion in January 1986, after Hobeika signed a Syrian-brokered peace treaty with rival Moslem warlords in Lebanon.

Also in Moslem south Beirut on Wednesday, police spokesman said five people were killed and 18 wounded in clashes between the Yasser Arafat's Fatah guerrilla faction and Col. Saeed Mousa's Crowds gather to survey the damage caused by a car bomb that killed at least two people and wounded nineteen others in Christian east Beirut Wednesday.

Syrian-backed Fatah-Uprising.

Mousa broke away from Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization in 1983 and set up headquarters in Damascus, the Syrian capital.

The factions are fighting for control of the devastated Chatilla and Bourj el-Barajneh camps. Both sides are using howitzers, rockets and mortars to pound each other's positions in the camps, already badly battered from years of violence.

Libyan mediators and other Palestinian factions have failed to secure a cease-fire to end the fighting.

Election turmoil plagues El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A schism in the governing Christian Democratic Party widened Wednesday when a second faction nominated its own presidential candidate for next year's election.

In another development, captured rebel documents say a new urban guerrilla group plans to further destabilize President Jose Napoleon Duarte's U.S.-backed government, which has for years been fighting a rural insurgency.

Fidel Chavez Mena, a 48-year-old lawyer and former minister of the presidency and communications under Duarte, was proclaimed unanimously by 180 national delegates gathered at Christian Democratic headquarters in downtown San Salvador.

Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, a businessman and a former foreign minister under Duarte, was nominated by the other faction on April 29.

Rey Prendes, 55, has said he will take the matter to the Supreme Court. In comments to journalists Tuesday, Rey Prendes called Chavez Mena "a thief."

Each faction considers the other's convention illegal. Duarte, honorary party president, called last month for both hopefuls to step aside to make way for a unity candidate in the March 1989 election.

Duarte by law cannot run for re-election and is being treated in Washington for terminal cancer, though his son has said Duarte he will resume his duties in July.

The bitter fighting is further debilitating the Christian Democrats, who were soundly defeated by the rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance, known by its Spanish acronym as Arena, in municipal and legislative elections in March.

ist guerrillas in February. The Associated Press since has obtained a copy of the papers.

The documents call for the creation of The Bread, Land, Work and Liberty Movement — code-named "Fuego," which is Spanish for "Fire" — a guerrilla movement that would extend the rural insurgency into the cities.

Fuego's strategy, the papers say, is aimed at "the overthrow of the dictatorship, the expulsion of the Yankees and the victory of a popular government."

The United States has provided $1.5 billion in economic aid and $455 million in military aid since 1984 to the Salvadoran government. A detachment of up to 55 U.S. military advisers assist the army in its counterinsurgency campaigns against the rebels.

Santiago Flores, a member of the movement's executive committee, told journalists after a June 15 rally in a San Salvador square that the movement represents "many walks of life."

"We are an organization of a political and anti-imperialist nature. We are workers, campesinos (farmers), students who consider that a new movement is necessary," he said.

The rally, in which the group was publicly introduced for the first time, was attended by hundreds of people. But it is not known how large the movement is or who its leaders are.

El Salvador has had an elected civilian government since 1982, but leftist rebels contend it is only a facade for dictatorial military rule. They accuse rightist death squads and paramilitary forces of killing civilians.

The civil war that has claimed 65,000 lives since October 1979 is generally considered to be stalemated, but guerrilla leaders recently pledged to step up their military campaign.

Judge presses North to disclose secrets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The judge in the Iran-Contra case signaled his determination Wednesday to bring Oliver North to trial by ordering him to specify which government secrets he wants to disclose in court.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell, provisionally rejecting a defense challenge to the constitutionality of the Classified Information Procedures Act, announced what he termed a possible remedy to the problems posed by reams of secret documents collected by independent counsel Lawrence Walsh.

Gesell gave North until July 11 to list the classified documents he wants to disclose in his defense against charges he conspired with John Poindexter, Albert Hakim and Richard Secord to illegally divert Iranian arms sale profits to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Gesell's ruling, coupled with last week's finding that Walsh did not make use of three defendants' immunized congressional testimony, is a further indication the judge is trying to fashion procedures for bringing North to trial by this fall.

Defense attorneys contended that the classified information law would give Walsh a tactical advantage by tipping him to their strategy and asked Gesell to declare the law unconstitutional.

Gesell acknowledged that a strict application of the 1980 law would be impossible because of the case's "broad intrusion into classified areas of information."

Walsh has identified some 50,000 pages of classified documents that might be relevant to the defense, plus an additional 150,000 pages at various stages of review by an interagency task force.

"It probably was never contemplated that classified information problems of this magnitude would be presented to a trial judge in a single case," the judge said.

But he said that when Congress enacted the law, it gave trial judges leeway "to fashion creative and fair solutions" to problems posed by a large number of classified materials.

"A way must be found to preserve defendants' constitutional rights that still affords adequate protection or national security concerns," the judge said.

Pairings set for Amana-Hawkeye Classic

Long Beach State will meet Georgia in the opening game of the seventh annual Amana-Hawkeye Classic basketball tournament Dec. 2, Iowa officials announced Wednesday. Iowa will take on Brown in the second game.

Judge refuses to grant fight injunction

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A state judge has refused to grant an injunction which would have attached $8 million of the $13.5 million Michael Spinks will earn for meeting Mike Tyson Monday night.

District Judge Michael Wendell ruled on Wednesday that an injunction was not warranted. He said Hilton Hotel Corp., which sought the injunction, had not "demonstrated a reasonable probability" of succeeding in a suit against Spinks and boxing promoter Butch Lewis.

Hilton went to court Tuesday in an effort to attach $8 million of the money Spinks will earn in Monday night's heavyweight championship fight. The hotel claims that is the amount it lost when Lewis and Spinks backed out of a heavyweight unification series sponsored by the Las Vegas Hilton in 1986 and 1987.

The resort had sought to tie up part of Spinks' purse pending a July 25 trial seeking damages. Hotel officials argued that Lewis had no known assets and they would be unable to collect if they obtained a judgment in next month's trial.

North Stars won't re-hire Brooks

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Herb Brooks will not be re-hired as coach of the NHL's Minnesota North Stars, new Minnesota general manager Jack Ferreira said Wednesday.

The statement was released before a 2 p.m. news conference. "After one week of consideration, I have decided to go after a new coach," Ferreira said in the statement. "The tension and misunderstanding evident in my meetings with Herb made me feel uncomfortable having him as coach of the North Stars next season. We want to put past problems behind us."

Ferreira said the decision not to re-hire Brooks was his alone, but has the support of owners George and Gordon Gund.

"It is time for this organization to have a clean slate," Ferreira said. "I intend to find a new coach as soon as possible."

IOC affirms position against apartheid

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — The International Olympic Committee's first special meeting on apartheid was a show of unity with black African nations, which earlier had threatened to boycott this summer's Seoul Games.

Black African sports officials said after the meeting Tuesday at IOC headquarters that they see no reason for staying away.

In a declaration, the IOC reaffirmed its opposition to apartheid as a "scourge in sport." It especially urged the federations governing Olympic sports disciplines "to consider further action" to freeze South Africa out of international competition.

The Olympic body had called international sports federation chiefs and black African sports leaders for unprecedented formal talks on apartheid, South Africa's racial segregation system, which was at the root of recent African boycott threats. African countries pulled out of the 1976 Montreal Games over the issue.

"This meeting was needed because in every Olympic year, we have problems," IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch told a news conference. "We wanted to show the world we are united. All of Africa, almost without exception, will be present (at Seoul)."

Ethiopia and the Seychelles are among six countries boycotting the Games, mainly to back communist North Korea's demand to be a co-host. A record 161 nations have said they will enter the Games.

NCAA ponders reforms after forum

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (AP) — An NCAA forum on issues such as the structure of divisions and aid to athletes generated innovative and provocative proposals and left members in the mood for reform, NCAA Executive Director Richard Schultz said.

But, he added Tuesday, it's hard to predict what changes are likely in the aftermath of the NCAA Presidents Commission forum.

About 500 college and university presidents, chancellors and other administrators attended the meeting, which was scheduled to conclude today.

Schultz and commission chairman John B. Slaughter said the forum achieved its goal of generating debate among NCAA members about key issues. Spirited small-group discussions followed speeches recommending changes in NCAA policies.

"We had presented to us . . . some truly excellent ideas, some ideas that in many ways are mind-expanding and in some cases very radical and certainly controversial," Slaughter said. "But those are the kinds of things that forums like this should present."

Slaughter predicted that legislation concerning membership structure and financial aid will be proposed at the NCAA's annual convention in January.

Panther AD in running for Wildcat job

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Five candidates, including the current Northern Iowa athletic director, have been named finalists for athletic director at Kansas State, the Manhattan Mercury reported Tuesday.

The newspaper said the five will interview this weekend in Kansas City for the job made vacant by the resignation of Larry Travis.

Identified as candidates are Steve Miller and Craig Helwig, both former Kansas State officials; Bob Goin, associate athletic director at Florida State; Bob Bowlsby, athletic director at Northern Iowa; and Randy Hoffman, athletic director at San Jose State.

Patriots sale still in doubt

BOSTON (AP) — Businessman Paul Fireman's plan to purchase the New England Patriots could collapse when the owner of the bankrupt Sullivan Stadium files reorganization plans in U.S. Bankruptcy Court.

Chuck Sullivan told The Boston Globe that he has obtained loans with help from New York financier Charles Allen.

Riley not ready for another guarantee

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Coach Pat Riley wasn't about to issue another guarantee, but his Los Angeles Lakers made it clear they'd like a third straight NBA championship.

Riley jokingly pulled a headband down around his mouth Wednesday before addressing approximately 10,000 fans who crammed onto the south lawn of City Hall. About 40,000 turned out for a parade to celebrate the Lakers' 108-105 victory over the Detroit Pistons in the seventh game of the NBA Finals Tuesday night.

"I just want to say a couple of things, and they aren't going to be very profound," Riley said. "This is the fifth parade we've been involved in, and it's far and away the best we've ever seen."

"Another thing, and I really mean this, without your support and your faith — and I felt this in games 6 and 7 — I don't think we'd be here right now. You did a helluva job for us."

Moments after winning the 1987 NBA title over the Boston Celtics, Riley guaranteed the Lakers would repeat as champions, a feat no team had accomplished since Boston in 1969.

"Also, I'd like to say, and I'm pretty biased about it, but there's no doubt in my mind that you're never going to find, see or watch another basketball team play like the one that sits behind me. Ever."

"It hasn't been done for 19 years, and Buck (Magic Johnson) said today, 'Riley, they said it can't be done.'"

"It was done, we finished the year, we won it again."

Merchandising

said federal marshals used Minnesota's registered trademarks to get a warrant to search vendors selling mainly Minnesota Twins' souvenirs. The Twins trademarks would not merit a warrant, he said, because they had a new logo in 1987 that was not registered.

"Federal marshals came in and stopped sales outside the Metrodome," Hicks said, "35 minutes before the first game and 15 minutes into the game."

Federal officials confiscated merchandise, and Hicks said the resulting news stories helped make more people aware of licensing. Hicks and Van Meter both agreed "shopping" is their chief way of discovering counterfeit merchandise. Stores and vendors are routinely checked to assure merchandise is licensed.

Van Meter said football Saturdays in Iowa City are a major problem because it is hard to control vendors outside of the stadium.

Basketball games are not a problem, she said, because cold weather deters most outside vendors.

"We've never had to prosecute anyone," Van Meter said, "and always settled before it got to court." She added their office will not license anything obscene or relating to alcohol.

At the height of the Iowa-Iowa State rivalry, Van Meter said, obscene t-shirts were a concern. In a similar incident, the manufacturer of a bumper sticker reading, "Damn right, I'm a Hawkeye" was asked to halt its printing.

Van Meter said when using a licensed UI trademark one must sign a licensing contract, pay a license fee and have their product approved. UI then receives royalties of 6.5 percent of the manufacturer's total sales at cost, she said.

Van Meter said the UI currently gains licensing royalties close to $400,000.

Wimbledon

The 20-year-old West German, who won the title in 1985 and 1986, boomed 17 aces to give him a total of 37 in his first two matches.

Top-seeded Ivan Lendl had a more difficult time against Australian Darren Cahill, a grass-court specialist who beat Cash in the third round at Queen's Club. Lendl prevailed 5-7, 6-2, 6-4, 6-4, but not before he gave the Centre Court crowd an uncharacteristic display of showmanship and emotion.

Lendl, who made a couple of behind-the-back returns on service faults, was slapped with a warning for verbal abuse after shouting at umpire Richard Ings in the final set.

"The umpire said I called out 'stupid jerk' when in fact I said 'stupid calls,'" said Lendl, runner-up at Wimbledon the past two years.

Steffi Graf, the women's top seed, lost her Grand Slam shutout streak but still blitzed 18-year-old Karine Quentrec of France 6-2, 6-0.

In quest of the best (?) sport . . .

A few nights ago, a conversation concerning two sports was brought up in newsroom banter. Sports banter usually occurs in lulls in newsroom action, and is always between men who have nothing better to do than contrast and compare teams and sports about which they usually have little knowledge and no control. More of that mindless banter continues here. Beware.

While assessing the virtues of various sports, I said I thought golf is the greatest sport in the world. My choice, of course, was met with disdain.

"Baseball. Baseball is the best sport in the world," came the retort.

Fine. I love baseball. I thought over my statement and amended it. "Golf is the greatest individual sport in the world."

Still, my statement was rejected. And the alarming part of it was, a stature of prominent newsroom person actually said (prepare yourself) that bowling was a better individual sport than golf.

Bowling.

I'm sure many of you will get the impression I am an elitist snob because of remarks which will follow. Fine. I am.

And if you think I'm going to reinforce the stereotypical notion that bowling is more appealing to blue-collar types and golf is more appreciated by middle and upper class members, you're right. I will.

Comparing bowling to golf? It's like pitting a bottle of vintage 1988 Mad Dog to a fine French wine. It's like putting a Pinto up against a BMW. It's like comparing the Los Angeles Clippers to the Los Angeles Lakers.

Come on, any sport makes me wonder if it requires occasional participants to approach a counter in a smoke-filled building, beer bottles clanking loudly, and rent tacky used shoes that have to be routinely disinfected.

At least in golf, you wear your own shoes.

You then roll a ball down a wooden path — perilous gutters, the bunkers of bowling, guarding both sides — and knock down pins. If you don't get them all, you get to go again and try to get the rest.

A fun activity — for about a half an hour — but worthy of a comparison with golf?

Now don't get me wrong, bowlers. Before you send me a new putter packed with plastic explosives, read on. Bowling is not all bad. It's a sport which one can enjoy on a very recreational basis; it doesn't demand a great deal of skill to be enjoyed.

And at its highest levels, pros are proficient and, gulp, talented. Not exactly athletes, but talented at rolling the ball down the alley and knocking down pins.

In golf, one must employ a deft touch and great hand-eye coordination to master driving, long-iron shots, approach shots, pitching, chipping, putting, sand traps, water hazards and wind conditions. The course is never the same, no matter how many times you play it, because of the weather's always changing and you never hit the ball in the exact same place twice. And the pin positions are always different.

Every shot must be evaluated, taking all these factors into consideration.

I'll admit I've simplified bowling and glorified golf. But given the assets of both sports, it's hard not to.

I'm sure you bowlers have heard enough. You're probably wishing this sporting snob would drop dead.

When I do get to that big sports arena in the sky, I just hope there isn't a bowling shirt with my name on it waiting for me.

Prime Time League action heats up

Marble lifts Southgate to 4-0 record

By Eric J. Hess
The Daily Iowan

Roy Marble and Michael Morgan combined for 72 points as Southgate Development overpowered Hills Bank 165-124 in Prime Time Basketball League action Wednesday in a hot, stuffy Iowa City High School.

Even though Southgate Development finished with all eight of its players in double figures, Hills Bank surprised everyone in the first half, taking as much as a 13-point lead.

"They were pumped," Iowa's Marble said. "They know we are one of the teams to beat."

Hills Bank was led by Greg Atkins, who poured in a team-high 34 points. Atkins, formerly of Upper Iowa, a Division III school in Fayette, Iowa, said his 0-4 team had something to prove.

"Tonight was the chance to show everybody we can play," he said.

After Atkins, Hills Bank followed with Northern Iowa's Jason Reese with 30 points and 13 rebounds, Iowa's Brian Garner with 15 points, former Central College standout Troy Hansen with 14 points and Simpson's Chris Lehman, who netted 14 points and 11 assists.

Hills Bank figures to improve beginning Sunday when Iowa recruits Acie Earl and Ray Thompson join the team after their stints in Illinois all-star games.

"With Acie and Ray, they won't be able to double team (Iowa sophomore Brian) Garner so much. That will open up the lane for him," Atkins said.

Warm gymnasiums were cause for more delays in the action than usual Wednesday as occasionally wipe the City High floors when the heavily-perspiring players fell to the floor.

The heat of the day, however, didn't seem to bother any shooters, especially Southgate Development.

Along with Marble's 39 and Morgan's 33, the scoring machine followed with former Iowa standout Greg Stokes' 12 points and Cedar Rapids Jefferson High School's Cam Johnson, who scored 17. Northern Iowa's Maurice Newby also hit 17, and former Hawkeyes Bill Jones and Ken Fullard scored 24 and 10, respectively. Former Iowa City Regina player Kevin Drahozal added 10.

"I like it when it's extremely hot," Marble said. "You don't have to warm up hard."

It looked like it took Southgate

Development a little time to warm up with its sluggish start. But by the time the second half rolled along, the 4-0 team had Hills Bank down.

Ahead 109-101 late in the second half, Southgate Development erupted for 12 straight points. A period of about 90 seconds off the clock was the difference between an eight-point lead and a 20-point lead.

"We've got so many weapons," Marble said. "All of us seem to complement each other."

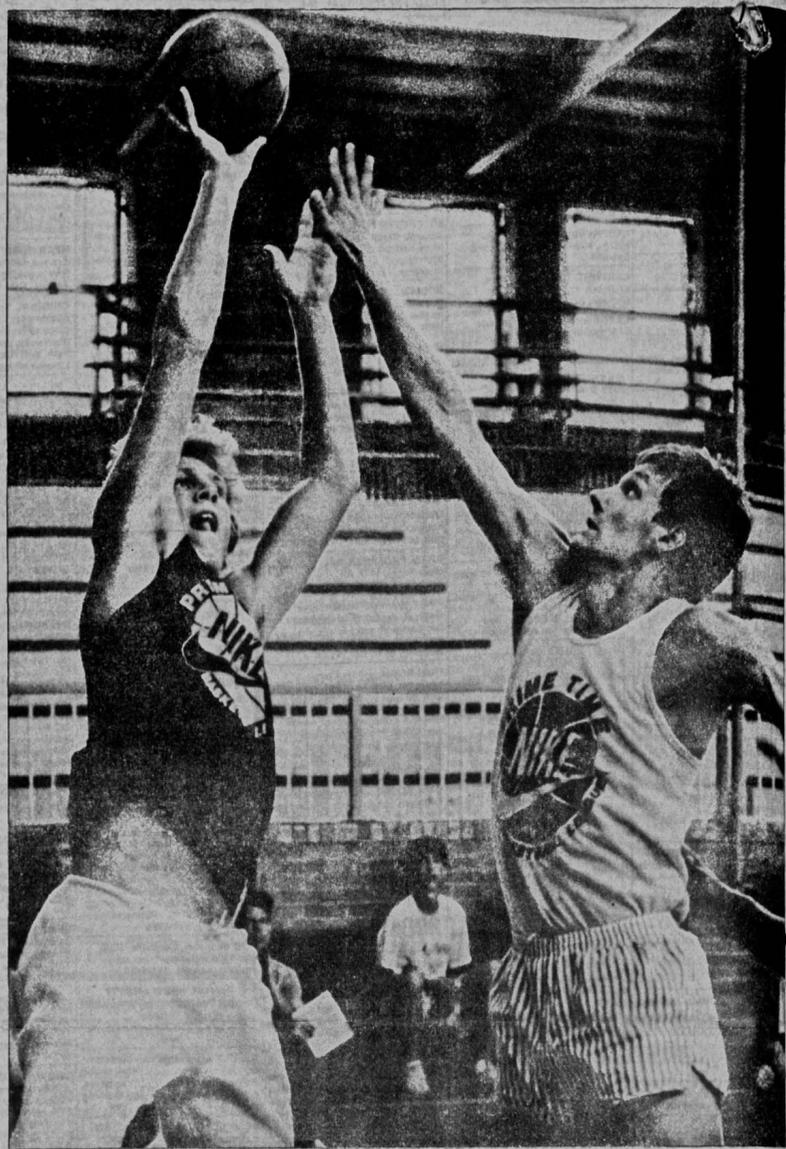

In the other early game Wednesday, Michael Payne scored 26 points and pulled down a season-high 28 rebounds as Hargrave-McEleney topped The Athlete's Foot 113-101.

The Athlete's Foot was led by Todd Hutchenson with 31 points and Kent Pollpeter with 25 points.

Hargrave-McEleney improved to 3-1 while The Athlete's Foot fell to 1-3.

In late games Wednesday, Fitzpatrick's met Eby's Athletic Company and First National Bank met Iowa State Bank.

Action in the eight-team league continues Sunday with First National Bank playing Eby's Athletic Company and Hargrave-McEleney playing Hills Bank at 6 p.m. At 7:30 p.m., Iowa State Bank will face Fitzpatrick's while Southgate Development will meet The Athlete's Foot.

Hills Bank's Jason Reese shoots over Southgate Development's Kevin Drahozal during a Prime Time League basketball game Wednesday night at City High. Southgate Development won, 165-124.

Peth, now a coach, set to return as player

By Marc Bona
The Daily Iowan

If you take I-90 in a northwest direction through Wisconsin, you'll be near a sleepy little Wisconsin town called Tomah.

That fact may not mean much to Iowa basketball fans, but that small town of 5,000 tucked between Wisconsin rivers and woods is the hometown of the University of Denver basketball coach.

Again, that fact may not mean much to Iowa hoops fans.

You see, the Denver basketball coach who grew up in Tomah, Wis., is Dick Peth, former Iowa basketball player (1975-79).

This Saturday, he will be one of about 30 former Hawkeyes coming back for the second Iowa Farm Scholarship Game, a benefit contest that will tip off in Carver-Hawkeye Arena at 7 p.m.

"It's for a very good cause," Peth said earlier this week from Tomah, where he returns once a year to run a basketball camp for 70 4th-through 12th-graders. "And it's a good chance to see some friends."

Part of a series previewing ex-Iowa basketball players who will participate in the Iowa Farm Scholarship Game.

Peth, who was an assistant coach at Denver for three years, replaced the late Floyd Theard — who also played for the Hawkeyes — three years ago and has been head coach ever since. Peth said a bit of competition finds its way into the benefit game.

"I think No. 1 everybody is there to have a good time, he said. "But secondly, everyone has a lot of pride. Basically, it's a set-up of younger players against older players."

Several of the players who will participate Saturday are former teammates of Peth's. Ronnie Lester, Tom Norman, Steve Krafcsin, Clay Hargrave, Kenny Arnold, Kevin Boyle, Mike Gatens and Dan Frost will all be there, he said.

Peth, a scrappy, gutsy guard, has been compared by some as "the Jeff Moe of the 70s," referring to the former Iowa guard who finished his final year at Iowa this past season. The two are similar in that neither was the true star on their respective teams but both were solid, consistent players. Moe spent most of his career as a sixth man off the bench while Peth took a back seat to all-American and three-time team MVP Lester.

Peth, who received a B.S. in physical education from Iowa and master's degree in sports sciences from Denver, said he hopes the future of the game is a secure one: "I always hope it can go. I would like to see the Iowa people support this."

Farm Game tickets available but huge walk-up is expected

Tickets for the Iowa farm Scholarship game are still available, and while sales are down this year a "strong walk-up" is expected for the game, Iowa assistant Sports Information Director Steve Malchow said Wednesday.

The game, which benefits incoming UI students of farm families, tips off at 7 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Malchow said 9,000 tickets were sold for the first game in 1986, but a walk-up count of 5,000 brought the Arena to near capacity.

Tickets are $5 and can be purchased at the Arena Ticket Office, the Union Box Office or any area Hardee's locations.

The Carver-Hawkeye Arena Ticket Office will open at noon the day of the game, and two additional windows will open at 5 p.m.

Doors open Saturday at 5 p.m., and slam-dunk and three-point shooting contests begin at 6 p.m. The game, which will feature former Hawkeye basketball players, will be televised by KCRG-Channel 9.

An autograph session will immediately follow the game.

No. 1 seeds Lendl, Graf net Wimbledon wins

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Defending champion Pat Cash, playing on the same court where Boris Becker was dethroned in the second round last year, avoided a scare Wednesday with a stirring comeback at Wimbledon.

The brash Australian was pushed to the brink by 21-year-old Javier Frana of Argentina before rallying for a 6-2, 4-6, 3-6, 6-1, 6-4 victory before a standing-room-only crowd at Court 1 of the All England Club.

Berating officials and himself after losing two sets in a row, Cash appeared to be following in the footsteps of Becker, who was shocked by Australian Peter Dohan in last year's tournament. But he regained his composure and his strokes to win the final two sets and move into the third round, where he will face countryman

John Fitzgerald.

"He played fantastically well for two sets," Cash said. "There was only one way for him to go, and that was down."

Frana, who was beaten 6-1, 6-1 by Cash two weeks ago at Queen's Club, was playing in his first Wimbledon tournament. But he obviously wasn't intimidated by his opponent or the historic surroundings.

"Once I got onto the court, I forgot where I was and who I was playing," said Frana, ranked 80th in the world.

About 50 yards away on Court 2, Becker was wiping out the memory of last year's defeat with an impressive 6-3, 6-4, 6-4 victory over Karel Novacek of Czechoslovakia.

Counterfeit crackdown may stop bootlegging

By Neil Lewis
The Daily Iowan

Problems with counterfeit sports merchandise, like recent concerns in Cincinnati over this year's Major League Baseball All-Star game, occur during events like college football bowl games and the World Series, according to a UI licensing official.

A week ago, Associated Press reported evidence of counterfeit baseball merchandise in Cincinnati that had been discovered by Cincinnati Reds team officials and law enforcement agents. Officials said Wednesday "bootlegging" — illegally marketing unlicensed products — will not be tolerated.

Pirating of sports merchandise and trademark infringements is increasing, according to Dickie Van Meter, merchandising and licensing director for the UI department of athletics.

Infringement is any unauthorized use of a trademark, knowing or unknowing. Blatant misuse of trademarks is called pirating.

"There's lots of pirating as soon as something gets hot," Van Meter said. "Bowl games attract the most problems." The problem is, he added, there's so much merchandise marketed in such a short period that it is hard to police.

In a counterfeiting crackdown that made national news, the University of Minnesota helped to police non-licensed merchandise during the 1987 World Series.
