V.I.P.'s tee off at Finkbine

Annual tournament attracts stars, pros

By Paula Roesler
The Daily Iowan

It was a 30-star event. At least Monday's temperature held at a balmy 85 degrees and the sunlight poured onto a somewhat green green as professional and amateur golfers and a variety of celebrities played 18 holes at the 1988 Amana V.I.P. Golf Tournament held at Iowa City's Finkbine Golf Course.

"We heard a lot of compliments from the pros who were practicing on the green yesterday about how nice it looked," Ann Collins, the tournament's public relations manager, said.

"Many top-notch golf courses are brown this time of year," she said. "We've had to water a lot to make sure the course looked nice. Luckily, the university installed a sprinkling system after last year's tournament."

This year marked the tournament's 22nd anniversary, Collins said. The first tournament was at a country club in West Virginia, but the second year Amana decided to move the event to the UI Finkbine Golf Course, where it has been held ever since, she said.

The tournament has grown since 1966 when there were 20 professional golfers, Collins said. There were 43 professional golfers, 30 celebrities and about 10,000 spectators at this year's tournament, she added.

Marty Tunning, who works at an Iowa City accounting office, attended his third tournament this year with his father and mother-in-law.

"It's great out today, but we would've been out here regardless of the weather," Tunning said. "I just like coming out and watching the pro golfers. I've also been watching Mike Ditka."

Collins said Amana tournament officials try to make the event appealing to a diverse audience by inviting a cross-section of golfers and celebrities.

"Obviously we want people who are known to the public, but probably more than that we want people with good personalities," she said.

"This year we've got new faces like Heather Farr and Clarence Rose, golf legends like Billy Caspar and gallery favorites like Hubert Green," she said. "And if you don't like sports, we have celebrities."

Roy Mennen, a non-golfer from Cedar Falls, has attended every Amana tournament since 1977. He said the size of the crowd has shrunk a little since the late 1970s, but he said the tournament is just as much fun.

"Today I've been watching Joe Gallison from 'Days of Our Lives,' but they've got a lot of stars, everybody from Ernie Banks to Fuzzy Zoeller, Goober, just oodles of them."

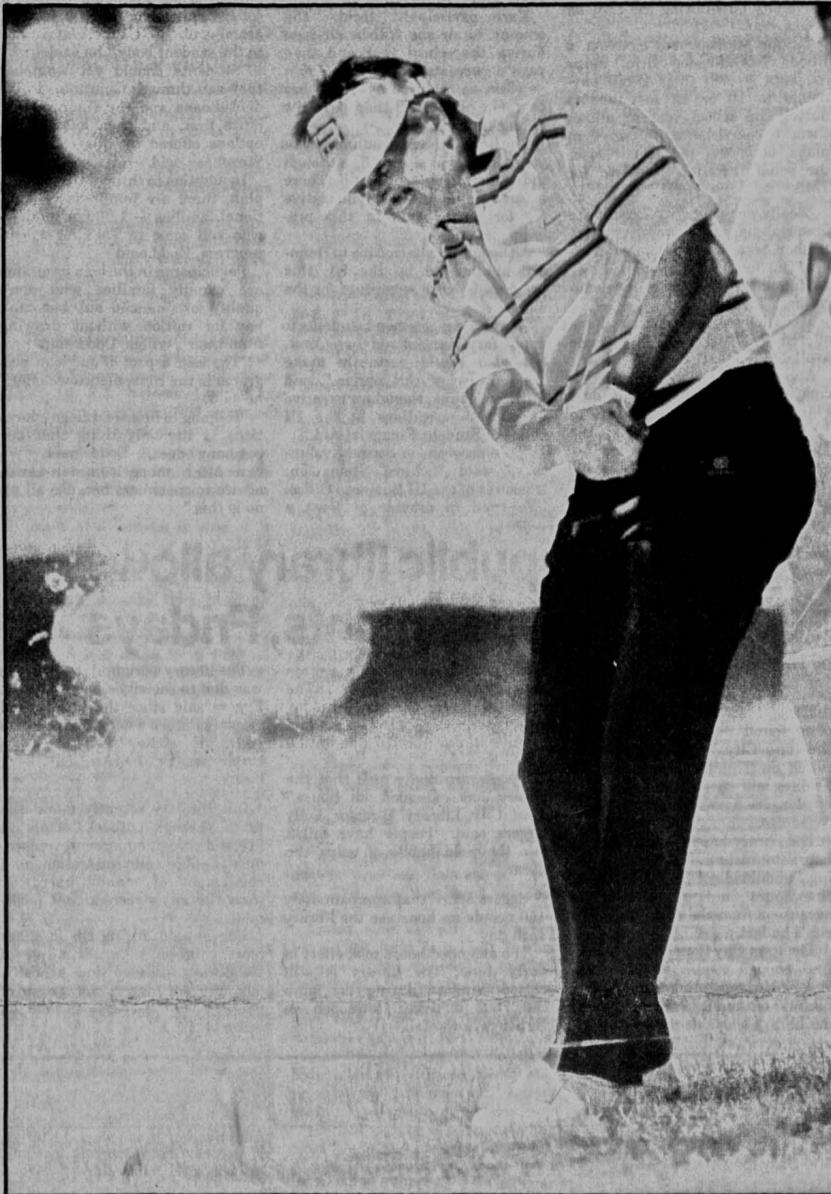

But there were also a lot of behind-the-scenes people that helped to organize and execute the tournament.

Collins said 190 Amana employees worked in various capacities as volunteers, Amana high-school students ran the food and beverage tents and area Jaycees worked as marshals.

According to volunteers Jim Buesing and Wes Lamp from the Walcott Jaycees, professional golfers and hackers alike need silence to concentrate on their games. Buesing and Lamp worked as tournament marshals to ensure a minimum of spectator hubbub on the green.

"As marshals it's our duty to keep people quiet when the golfers are on the green," Buesing said. "How do we do it? We hold up signs that tell them to keep quiet. If that doesn't work we could probably use the signs to hit them over the head."

Tickets for the tournament were $7 by order or $9 at the door. Amana donates ticket proceeds for UI scholarships.

Quake shakes coast

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A strong earthquake made San Francisco skyscrapers sway visibly Monday and halted train service and some court trials, but no injuries or serious damage were reported.

Some people dived under desks when the quake was felt at 11:43 a.m. PDT over a large area, extending from about 60 miles north of San Francisco, to the Santa Cruz area 70 miles to the south. It lasted up to 10 seconds.

The state Office of Emergency Services in Sacramento and the University of California seismographic stations at Berkeley said the quake hit 5.2 on the Richter scale of ground motion, while the U.S. Geological Survey office in Menlo Park said the quake registered 5.0. A quake of that magnitude can cause considerable damage in populated areas.

Train wreck in Paris kills at least 15

PARIS (AP) — A speeding commuter train struck the rear of a stationary one Monday at an underground platform in the Gare de Lyon, killing at least 15 people, injuring dozens and trapping more in the wreckage, officials said.

Police said 15 bodies had been found so far and they could not immediately determine how many people remained in the wreckage, or whether any still were alive.

It was one of the worst accidents in years in the Paris area.

Unofficial estimates put the number of injured at 32, including 12 people in serious condition. Passengers in shock wandered through the station or sat on the platform beside the twisted wreckage.

About 250 rescue workers struggled to pull people from the tangle of metal. Forty fire engines, 15 ambulances and a helicopter were at the station.

Police said it would be several hours before the last survivors or bodies were freed. They said both trains were crowded with commuters when the accident occurred at 7:10 p.m. (1:10 p.m. EDT) but the total number of passengers was not known.

Rescuers pulled the first body from one of the cars about two hours after the accident. Witnesses said the impact of the speeding train hitting the one parked on the tracks forced the cars of the first train into and on top of the other.

One car was slashed open and another was inside it, as if fitted there.

Police cordoned off the area, but from an adjacent platform it was possible to see the twisted wreckage and the emergency medical center set up to treat the injured.

Homelessness on rise in Iowa City

Shelter aids homeless in local area

By Cathy Jackson
The Daily Iowan

As students shuffle into Van Allen Hall on their way to class, they pass two men lounging on benches near the entrance. Although these men don't look like bums, they don't quite fit into the crowd of young faces.

But they are without a home. They are waiting for the Emergency Housing Project, 331 N. Gilbert St., a shelter for the homeless, to open for the evening.

Amidst a field of sunbathers on the beach of the Coralville Reservoir, an old man carrying a large garbage bag is picking up a beer can. He is the only one on the beach in street clothes — long, grimy pants and a big button-down shirt. Most people ignore him, and he continues on his way.

He could be using the money from the can to help pay rent, but, just as likely, he is using it to eat.

In Iowa City, a town of just over 50,000 people, many of whom work for the university, homelessness has not been considered a leading problem. But in Iowa City — in the malls and libraries by day, and cars, steam tunnels or the Emergency Housing Project by night — at least 75 to 100 people, including children, are without a home, according to EHP Director Mary Larew.

"With Iowa City being on the interstate, being a college town and having the university hospital, the psychiatric hospital and the mental health institution in Mt. Pleasant, it creates a situation where we have more than our share of homeless," Lloyd Gehring, the

In Iowa, there are an estimated 7,500 homeless, according to "Out in the Cold," a report by the National Coalition for the Homeless and the Des Moines Coalition for the Homeless. And this figure is steadily rising.

In 1987, the EHP provided shelter for about 860 people, 100 more than in 1986.

"We have 22 beds, but on some bitterly cold nights last winter we used the couches and cribs and were able to accommodate 28," Larew said.

Along with private donations, 22 local churches and a synagogue help finance the EHP, which also receives funds from the Stewart B. McKinney Act, a large federal Street man finds home in project

He and his friends call themselves "bos," a street man's slang for hobo. But Robert Addington has another nickname — "Gypsy Bob."

"I used to read palms and write poetry," he said of the name's origin.

Addington also used to be a husband, an alcoholic, a can collector and, in his most distant past, a television technician.

Now, absorbing a lazy June evening on the porch of the Emergency Housing Project, Addington, 55, wishes he could live on his own.

His story, he says, is "not a nice one."

About a month ago, Addington went to UI Hospitals and Clinics when he fell and hit his head. The doctors discovered cancer in his lungs and his hip bone and told him he had less than six months to live.

"I was living on Third Avenue and had applied for Social Security, but the landlord evicted me — didn't give me notice, he just went in and took my stuff out," Addington said.

Addington, who said he has filed a lawsuit against the landlord, moved to a friend's house in Coralville. But three weeks ago he moved to the EHP because he needed to be closer to the hospital.

He plans to stay in the shelter until soon after July 1, when he'll have enough Social Security checks (he has one now) to pay the first month's rent and deposit on an apartment. He's signed up for low-income housing and hopes to

New payment plans offer student loan alternatives

By Hilery Livengood
The Daily Iowan

UI students depending on financial aid loans for the upcoming school year now have another alternative for paying their six university bills during the 1988-89 school year.

Tuition Management Systems, a Rhode Island-based firm, helps students stretch their U-bill payments to 10 or 12 installments during the school year or allows them to participate in two loan plans, according to Steven Dodd, the senior account executive for TMS.

"Really we're not an alternative to financial aid, rather an alternative to short-term loans for some families. Our focus is to make it easier for families to finance college educations," he said.

The alternative payment plans offered by TMS were first made available to UI students last year.

Approximately 200 families participated in the Monthly Budget Plan, making tuition payments in 10 or 12 installments during the 1987-88 school year, Dodd said.

This year involvement has already tripled, with 600 families participating. Dodd expects another 400 to enroll in the program by the July 31 enrollment deadline.

"With this program, parents are able to make their payments in smaller, more reasonable chunks without paying interest charges," Dodd said.

Each participant decides the amount he or she will be charged during the school year and then pays a percentage of that amount as often as required by his or her payment plan. TMS then pays the UI each month.

The first payment deadline for this year's plan was June 15, although individuals may still enroll. There is an annual $30 administrative fee for participants in this program.

Although an alternative to financial aid offered by the UI, this program is not a substitute for the aid.

"We would recommend students to apply for financial aid here first, but also would certainly make them aware of this option," said Cathryn Wilcox, the administrative director of operations at the UI Office of Student Financial Aid.

"This program is entirely voluntary," said Richard Stevenson, treasurer of the UI Business Office. "We tried to provide at least a couple of different alternatives to students to finance their college educations which seem to get increasingly expensive, as we all know.

"We sought to ease the financial burden, if not the dollar costs of a college education. This is just an attempt for the UI to be of service to the student body," he said.

"Students should get whatever they can through Guaranteed Student Loans and the financial aid office first, and then look at the options offered by this company," Stevenson said.

In addition to the monthly budget plan, there are hundreds of additional families — 1,000 or more — who will come to TMS for a loan program, Dodd said.

Participants in the loan programs are usually families who don't qualify for financial aid, but can't pay for tuition without drawing from their savings, Dodd said.

"The best aspect of our loan programs is the convenience we offer," he said.

"Helping to finance college educations is the only thing that our company does," Dodd said. "We can offer more common-sense advice to customers because all we do is this."

Extra staff at public library allows service Thursday nights, Fridays

By Traci Auble
The Daily Iowan

Those Iowa City residents who often found themselves forgetting the Iowa City Public Library was closed on Thursday evenings and Fridays will be glad to know they no longer have to adjust their schedules.

The library has now extended its hours to include Thursday evenings and Fridays. In March 1987 the hours had to be reduced because of financial cutbacks in the city's budget.

The Iowa City Council was able to find enough money in the city's budget this year to restore hours. Because of the increased allocation, the library was able to hire the 2½ extra people needed to maintain the current library hours. The extended hours are on Thursday evenings from 6 to 9 p.m. and Fridays all day from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m.

"People are really glad that the library has extended its hours," Iowa City Library Director Lolly Eggers said. "People have fallen into their old habits of using the library."

Eggers added that approximately 150 people an hour use the library each day.

The extended hours took effect in early June. The library is still closed Sundays during the summer, but is likely to reopen on Sundays in the fall.

The library's original cut in hours was due to the city's lack of funds. Eggers said since the library had grown so much in the past several years it either needed more employees or had to cut back hours.

But the city recently found the funds through cutbacks made in fire and transit equipment replacement, police administration and repayment of money borrowed from the city's recreational facilities.

Eggers said during the summer more children take advantage of the library facilities since school is out, but the biggest age group of users is still between 18 and 45 years old.

An Iowa City woman was charged with assault without intent to cause injury Monday after she allegedly struck her husband, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Lisa Kaiser, 25, 239 Bon Aire Trailer Court, admitted to striking her husband because he allegedly pushed their 18-month-old son down. As a result of the assault the victim suffered a cut over his right eye, according to court records.

The assault came after a verbal argument during which Kaiser tried to call the police. Her husband allegedly ripped the phone off the wall, and Kaiser then hit her husband with it, causing the injury, according to court records.

A preliminary hearing in the case is set for July 15.

Rodriguez allegedly rang up the sale at $3 and collected $2 in payment. Rodriguez admitted to conspiring with three females regarding the theft, according to court records.

A preliminary hearing in both cases is set for July 14.

Since 1980, the number of homeless in the nation has increased in scope and number. In 1985, U.S. Department of Health Human Services recorded an estimated 1.5 million homeless, according to Jonathan Kozol's "Homeless and Her Children," a book America's homeless released last year. This figure has jumped between 3 and 4 million in the five years.

"They may be evicted, no reserves, they have no money and if they don't work or they lose their job, they're out on the street," Jan Rutledge.

Some of them are homeless because they want to be, she said.

"The Iowa City landlords worry about charging all the extra fees and guarantees because we've got these college students who will pay them," Addington said.

This is the first time Addington has been eligible for social payments because, as he admits, he hasn't been responsible. "I don't drink anymore, but I'm alcoholic," he said. "They need Social Security for cooperation. I'd get to drink and forget about appointment stuff."

So, for three years, Addington walked the streets collecting money. He claims, with a toothless grin, that he made enough money from the street to pay half the utility rent on an apartment he was sharing with a friend.

Addington said he still has every one of the people who have evicted him and living in public housing.

"They are completely depressed with their lot in life."

Jan Rutledge, managing attorney for the Iowa City branch of Legal Services of Iowa, an independent, federally funded agency offering legal services for low-income individuals, said laws passed in the 1970s releasing many people from mental institutions paved the way for what is called the de-institutionalization of the mentally ill.

"You have an influx of people coming out of mental institutions to communities too strapped for resources," Rutledge said.

Beginning in July, the Stewart B. McKinney Act will also allocate funds to help the chronically men-

"They like to be free, they like to travel. They have what I call 'the circuit' — they know where to go in towns and cities where the facilities are pleasant and the people are accommodating. These people feel they aren't harming anyone and they're just enjoying their existence without the responsibility," says Mary Larew, director of the Iowa City Emergency Housing Project.

The average homeless family includes a parent with two or three children.

The root of this problem is simple: a lack of affordable housing across the nation.

"Homelessness is caused by running out of homes that are affordable for people," Rutledge said. "The problem is that there isn't enough housing that people can afford."

The number of households paying more than one-half of their income for rent jumped from 3.7 million in 1975 to 6.3 million in 1983, according to a March 1988 report of the National Housing Task Force.

"Between 1970 and 1983, median rents increased at about twice the rate of median incomes," the report said.

"What that means is that if a person who is paying so much of their income for rent has one thing go wrong in their lives, they may be evicted because they have no reserves, they can't put anything aside," Rutledge said. "And if they lose their job, then, bang, they're out on the streets."

Even as rents increased in the 1970s and many people were paying a large part of their income just for housing, the government was still building subsidized and low-income housing — but that stopped in 1980.

"I think people may not be aware of the tremendous shutdown of federal resources," Rutledge said. "Basically what's happened in the past eight years is that there's been almost no new construction of subsidized housing and those units that do exist are severely threatened for various reasons."

Rutledge also said low-income units have been eliminated in the last 20 years because of urban renewal projects, and many cheap rentals have been converted into large, expensive apartment buildings or condominiums. This has contributed to the wave of "new" homeless.

"In San Antonio I met a father with two boys who had been sleeping for four months next to the highway not far from the Hyatt Regency Hotel," writes Kozol. "He sold blood plasma twice a week to buy food for his kids."

This is happening right now in Iowa City. A woman staying at the EHP with her four children complained about the bruises on her arm from selling plasma.

She and her four children must find places to go until 5 p.m. every day when the EHP opens for the night.

"We've never had to wander the streets and act like bums," she said. "You feel worthless, you feel no good."

Larew said several families in Iowa City have lost their homes because they are barely making ends meet.

"We've had a number of families here who have lost their homes because of lack of income, or people who have been evicted from their domiciles with no money and no relatives to depend on," Larew said.

But the people who seek shelter from the EHP are a diverse lot. About 15 percent are from Iowa City and the rest are from all over the country.

"Most are really nice people who just find themselves in really bad circumstances," Larew said. "You can't help but get a particular attachment to some people."

"They may be evicted because they have no reserves, they can't put anything aside, and if they don't get their check for a week or they lose their job, then, bang, they're out on the streets," says Attorney Jan Rutledge.

Some of them are homeless because they want to be, Larew said.

"They like to be free, they like to travel," she said. "They have what I call 'the circuit' — they know where to go in towns and cities where the facilities are pleasant and the people are accommodating. These people feel they aren't harming anyone and they're just enjoying their existence without the responsibility."

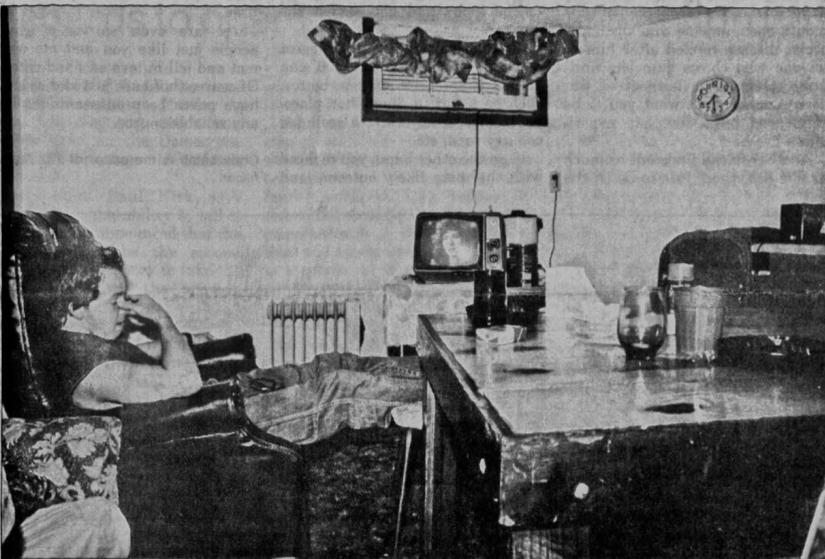

Others are homeless because they are sick or handicapped.

"A number have had trouble getting jobs because of emotional or physical handicaps," Larew said.

tally ill homeless in both Linn and Johnson counties.

But in the past eight years, a new sector of the homeless population has appeared. These people are working people, families and children.

"The chilling fact, from any point of view," writes Kozol in his book, "is that small children have become the fastest-growing sector of the homeless. At the time of this writing there are 28,000 homeless people in emergency shelters in the city of New York . . . about 10,000 are homeless individuals. The remaining 18,000 are parents and children in almost 5,000 families.

find a place there.

"The Iowa City landlords don't worry about charging all the deposits and guarantees because they've got these college students who will pay them," Addington said.

This is the first time Addington has been eligible for social security payments because, as he readily admits, he hasn't been responsible.

"I don't drink anymore, but I'm an alcoholic," he said. "They denied me Social Security for lack of cooperation. I'd get to drinking and forget about appointments and stuff."

So, for three years, Addington walked the streets collecting cans. He claims, with a toothless grin, he made enough money from that alone to pay half the utilities and rent on an apartment he was sharing with a friend.

Addington said he still knows every one of the people collecting cans and living in public spots around Iowa City.

"They're just like middle-class people — some are nice, some are not," he said. "I only know one in this town who's strictly no good — he'll steal from you, run off with your cans. A lot of times two of you go together to collect cans — he'd be there one minute, and then he'd be gone with your cans."

Although he's got friends all over town, Addington said they've been treating him differently since they found out he's sick.

"They're finally learning to understand that I'm still Gypsy Bob," he said.

And Addington's family (his wife died in 1980) can't help him. They live in Arkansas and know nothing of his situation. He said he wants to wait until he can visit and tell them in person.

But he still insists, "I don't need no help."

Earthquake

USGS spokeswoman Pat Jorgenson said the epicenter was about 16 miles south of San Jose on the San Andreas Fault. The USGS' National Earthquake Information Service in Golden, Colo., said preliminary readings put the center about five miles east of Santa Cruz.

The 38 trains that were running on Bay Area Rapid Transit lines were briefly halted to allow a check for track damage, but were quickly returned to operation.

Southern Pacific halted freight trains and San Francisco Peninsula commuter trains under a company policy requiring a check of track following a quake of 5.0 or greater.

At the 20-story federal building in San Francisco, attorney Anthony Smith was making his closing argument to a jury when the quake hit.

"As you can see, my argument is reaching the powers that be," Smith told the jurors, according to associate Reid Dworkin, who was in the courtroom. He said a couple of spectators rushed out and U.S. District Judge D. Lowell Jensen stopped the trial briefly.

Tommy Anderson, a U.S. Marshal's office employee on the 20th floor of the federal building, said he was "looking out the window at City Hall. I could see the building move in relation to other buildings."

Walt Glines, news editor of The Dispatch in Gilroy, about 25 miles east of Santa Cruz, said half the workers in that newspaper's city room "didn't even notice" the quake, which seemed to hit in two waves.

"The first time, I thought it was a caffeine rush. But when the second one hit, I knew," he said.

At International Business

Machines Corp. in South San Jose, officials told workers to get under their desks for protection.

"We felt it extremely hard," said plant operator Brenda Jones. "It was a very heavy shake. Everything just rocked very heavily."

She said officials checked the buildings for cracks or other damage but found no immediate problems.

On Sunday, an earthquake measuring 4.5 to 4.7 on the Richter scale shook a wide area of Southern California, including downtown Los Angeles, but no serious damage was reported. At least four people were treated for minor injuries.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by ground motion recorded on a seismograph. Each increase of one number means the ground motion was 10 times greater.

Teacher seminar 'talks business'

By Stephen Horan
The Daily Iowan

Today's one-day seminar, "Beyond the Classroom! Career Transitions for Teachers," held in the Union Iowa Room, will offer tips for teachers wishing to explore business opportunities.

Some persons may wonder why the seminar is needed in light of the recent teacher salary increases implemented throughout the state. Current salary for beginning teachers is $18,000.

Although ex-teachers working in the private sector can pull in more income, UI Placement Associate Rebecca Anthony pointed out that salaries are not the main issue. "Rather, it is that there are not many job openings," she said.

Statistics show that about 50 percent of education graduates leave Iowa after graduation, many of these for jobs in surrounding states. Each year, Illinois alone draws out 23 percent of the Iowa education graduates.

Perhaps more disheartening is that 40 percent of the Iowa education graduates never plan on teaching in a classroom.

One of the main objectives of the seminar is to help participants identify teaching skills transferable to the business sector, according to Anthony and UI Director of Business and Iowa Placement Nancy Noth, who organized the seminar.

On hand will be two panels made up of former teachers and various members of the business community offering practical advice on business opportunities and hiring practices. The seminar will also offer the nearly 100 teachers attending advice on changing jobs, writing resumes and interviewing.

The participants are a mixed bunch. Some will be arriving from the surrounding states, and teachers with 20 years of experience will interact with new education graduates.

"This seminar is not a recruitment center," Anthony said, emphasizing that "no teacher should assume to leave with a job. Rather, the seminar should help identify the teacher's existing strengths and help transfer them into marketable skills."

Branstad, Lyng meet to discuss drought

DES MOINES (AP) — Gov. Terry Branstad accurately predicted Monday that the federal government would approve additional drought relief measures for Iowa farmers.

Branstad met with Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng on Friday to push for more aid. The governor said at his morning news conference that he was almost certain federal restrictions on set-aside acres would be relaxed further.

Monday afternoon Lyng announced that counties already approved for emergency haying and grazing of set-aside and conservation reserve program acres could sell that hay to anyone.

Lyng also decided to approve the Emergency Feed Program for counties already eligible for the Emergency Feed Assistance Program. That allows producers to purchase Commodity Credit Corporation-owned grain at 75 percent of the county loan rate.

The USDA also permitted silage production on 10-year conservation acres.

"I think this timely decision will make a great difference to Iowa's producers," Branstad said following Lyng's announcement. "I'm gratified that he acted so quickly."

Federal agriculture officials have "learned their lesson," Branstad said and are moving far more quickly than in past crises to provide assistance to farmers.

"I think clearly they've been much quicker to respond this time than in the past," Branstad said at his regular meeting with reporters. "In this case they've expedited the procedures. Branstad had said, "I'm optimistic we're going to see quick action on the livestock issues this week."

Allowing the sale of hay was needed, Branstad said, to assure it can be distributed throughout the state.

Officials said last week that there's an adequate amount of hay to feed livestock, but it's not being distributed. In some cases, federal regulations prevent its sale, they said.

Branstad said farmers must be assured they'll have access to feed to head off mass sell off of livestock.

"We've begun to see some pretty massive liquidation of livestock herds, particularly cattle," the governor said.

Branstad said Midwestern governors may go to Washington to push for the programs.

He was less optimistic about Illinois Gov. James Thompson's proposal to divert water from Lake Michigan into the Mississippi River in a bid to speed barge traffic stalled by low water in the river.

Thompson made that proposal at a governor's meeting last week.

Branstad also said proposals to divert Great Lakes water to the Mississippi River will fail because of broad opposition throughout the Midwest.

"Governor Thompson definitely caused a lot of fireworks . . . with that recommendation," Branstad said. "It met with uniform opposition from the other Great Lakes governors."

Authorities seize, destroy 140 pounds of marijuana

CLARINDA, Iowa — Sheriff's deputies destroyed about 100 marijuana plants and seized about 40 pounds of processed marijuana Monday on a farm in Page County, authorities said.

Sheriff Ron Franks estimated the crop of cultivated marijuana was worth $100,000 and said it could be made. Franks said the farm's owner did not know about the marijuana.

"There is no doubt in my mind that the plants were growing on the land without any knowledge of the owner," he said.

Franks said it was unusual for marijuana to be harvested at this time of year, but because of dry and hot conditions, the crop was ahead of schedule.

Baled marijuana was discovered along a creek and wooded area on land that was idle under the federal set-aside program, Franks said.

Franks said deputies and reserve officers searched about 200 acres at the farm.

Of Meese and men

Last Thursday, Chris Stalvey, a Washington, D.C., bicycle messenger, walked into the Justice Department only to be turned away at the door.

His delivery was routine. He was neither packing a weapon nor a subpoena aimed at Meese; therefore, he posed neither a threat to "national security" nor a threat to Ed Meese's "integrity."

The only thing the messenger had on him was his message, in this case, the root of his problem.

Evidently, the attorney general of the United States is above the First Amendment. Ed Meese had decreed that certain T-shirts were off limits in the Justice Department. And the messenger just happened to have on one of these shirts emblazoned with "Experts agree! Meese is a Pig!"

Now whether the text is true or not is immaterial. The point is that the First Amendment guarantees the freedom of expression, within certain limits.

Unfortunately for Ed Meese — and fortunately for the rest of us — these limits are rather broad.

Yelling "Fire!" in a crowded theater, painting swastikas on synagogues and publishing the plans for the stealth bomber fall outside of the limits. Anything that can be seen as a "clear and present danger" to the public falls under the discretion of the law — but only after close scrutiny, and rarely prior to the offense.

But the embattled attorney general lumps harmless T-shirt slogans into the same category as inciting mass panic, swastikas and national secrets.

On Saturday, the attorney general rescinded the "interim policy" against the T-shirts. A small victory for Stalvey, but a much larger one for the American people. It shows that the most basic tenet of the Constitution remains sacred, even in the Meese Justice Department — a department that over the last eight years can be equated with oxymorons such as "jumbo shrimp" and "military intelligence."

Depleted arsenal

George Bush had better get a hammer and nail down a few issues for his campaign to use in November. Right now it appears that all the "good ones" are being taken away from him.

The strength of the economy, always a showpiece issue for the Republicans, is questionable. The trade deficit is down, but only because of the relative strength of foreign currencies. If the dollar takes an upswing, as it did Monday, look for trade deficit numbers to swing back into the $190 billion range.

Housing starts are down and unemployment is up slightly. Essentially, the economy, while healthy and showing growth on the surface, has problems and is anything but stable. If for any reason it takes a slight turn downward, look for Mike Dukakis to win big.

Secondly, the classic Republican issue, strength in defense, has been rudely stripped away. The administration, which has prided itself on its military buildup, has been found to be a hotbed of graft and corruption. Surprise! Now instead of being able to chide Dukakis about being naive and "anti-national security" about his wishes to slash the defense budget, George Bush is going to find himself trying to block criticism of his administration's massive waste of taxpayer money.

About all George has in his arsenal now is a lame attack on the Duke's Massachusetts budget, and the prison furlough "issue." Weak stuff for an incumbent V.P. Bush's one "big" issue will be his foreign policy experience. Expect to hear a lot about China and the CIA this summer, because it's George's only life preserver in the heavy seas the Bush campaign is going through.

Tied for third

An independent study group recently released a report which evaluated and ranked nearly 100 countries according to the status of women and how they were treated in comparison with men in their respective countries. Not surprisingly, no country received an "excellent" rating, and the highest rating did not go to the United States.

The country rated most non-discriminatory was Sweden, followed closely by Finland, with the U.S. running third. The ratings were based on measures of women's status in the areas of health, marriage, children, education, employment and social equality.

That the United States came in third at first seems surprising, due to the pervasive discrimination which still plagues our workplaces, government sectors and society in general. But when one realizes that also in the "tied-for-third-place" category were Cuba, East Germany, Hungary and the Soviet Union, the results seem to be more in line with reality.

While our administration's priorities continue to focus on absurd defense allotments and the American public persists in the belief that sexual discrimination has all but been erased, the working women of our country grudgingly accept 60 cents for their male counterpart's dollar, struggle against the obstacles of child-rearing and continue in their bid for parity.

Do's and don'ts of blind dates

There are two types of people who go on blind dates: We're one type and they're the other.

We're good people for the most part. But as for those other folks... I don't think I have to name names. They know who they are.

If it weren't for blind dates, they'd have no dates at all. For this reason, they actually look forward to blind dates. We, on the other hand, regard blind dates as an insult to our own ability to get a date — then we end up with one of them, adding insult to insult.

Does this mean we shouldn't go on blind dates? Of course it does. But it doesn't mean we won't. And if you do, be sure to take precautionary steps.

For starters, nearly all blind dates originate through a friend or a roommate, the two people who are most likely to know that recently you've been spending more time alone than a Maytag repairman.

They don't like to see you alone and unhappy so they try to fix you up. They tell you it's for your own good — the same line your mom would use to get you to eat lima beans. Blind dates are the lima beans of romance.

With your own good in mind, they will lie to you so that you will probably have the worst night of your life. Even if they don't tell you lies, don't expect the truth. Their descriptions will likely be vague and more loaded than Billy Martin at 3 a.m.

Listen for euphemisms. If they say, "She has a nice personality," it probably just means that she hasn't taken an ax to anyone lately. If they say, "She makes her own clothes," it probably just means she hasn't taken an ax to anyone lately. If they say, "He has nice shoes," it probably just means he hasn't taken an ax to anyone lately, and so on.

You can learn a lot about the animal, vegetable or mineral by asking your friend the right questions and correctly interpreting the answers. Here are a few sample questions: "If she's so great, why aren't you going out with her?"; "No, I mean, really, if she's so great, why aren't you going out with her?"; "How large is the bowl he eats out of?"; "When he walks into a room, do mice jump on chairs?"; "When he hitchhikes, does he have to wear a wide load sign?"; "Is she ever confused with inanimate objects, like hat racks and paperweights?";

Should you trust their answers? Probably not. That's why whenever possible you should demand a sketch of the subject by a police artist.

Of course, if you knew too much about your date, it would take all the mystery out of the evening, wouldn't it? A guy I know thought he had asked all the right questions and then his date turned out to be eight months pregnant. Some mystery is OK, but you don't want too much mystery.

As a general rule, you should probably avoid going out with anyone who chews tobacco with his mouth open, anyone who has had a social disease named after him or anyone who chews gum she finds under seats in movie theatres. But then again I don't want you to be influenced by a few bad experiences I've had.

Another friend finds out as much as she can, then, just to be on the safe side, refuses to go on a blind date without a wooden cross or a garlic necklance.

If you agree to the date, rehearse your opening line beforehand. To get past the initial discomfort, you should sound pithy yet personal; inoffensive yet provocative. Something like, "Do you know when you sneeze the stuff comes out of your nose at 180 miles an hour?" Not quite you? What about, "Have you considered how many dead animals there are on the road in the spring?" Or "Where do you suppose toejam comes from?"

Offer to drive. In fact, insist on it. And make sure you have plenty of gas. The last thing you want to do is run out of gas on a secluded country road with a horny Pee Wee Herman-type with body odor and cooties.

Because conversation will initially be somewhat stilted, immediately go someplace where you don't need to talk. Movies were created with this in mind; in fact, the theater management is aware of the existence of blind dates and knows you may be looking for a way out. That's why you're always instructed to take a moment to look around and familiarize yourself with all the emergency exits.

Another good thing about theaters is that, if necessary, you can tell your date you're going out to the lobby for one of the "special value" 55-gallon drums of popcorn and then just don't come back. After a day or so she'll get the idea and go to the lobby and get herself the popcorn.

If the chemistry is good, suggest going somewhere where you can get to know this person better, such as a bar, a diner, her place, your place, a haystack, a secluded country road, etc.

If, on the other hand, you're faced with the more likely outcome and the chemistry is poisonous — and you didn't abort the date at midnight — you must deal with the kiss-off.

If you would rather walk naked, covered with butter and mushrooms, through a village of starving cannibals than kiss this vermin goodnight, you must see to it that your date feels the same way. When the time for a good night kiss comes, say something along these lines: "I'm not feeling well, and I could very well throw up at anytime. How about a good night kiss?"

Another method, successfully employed by a friend of mine, is more subtle. If she doesn't want to tell the guy he's a gutter germ but still wants him to know that she won't kiss him now or at any time in this millennium, she just says, "I'm sorry but I don't kiss a guy on the last date."

Given the horror stories we've all heard and indeed lived through, why do so many of us continue to go on blind dates? Simply because blind dates picque our most basic romantic desire: to meet Mr. Right or Ms. Right and live happily ever after. Because it's not someone we already know, it must be someone we don't know.

This hope keeps us betting on a long shot. So what if one blind date looks more like Alfred E. Newman than Paul Newman or more like David Brinkley than Christie Brinkley? There's always next time.

There are even stories of good people just like you and me who met and fell in love on blind dates. Of course those are just stories and have never been substantiated by any reliable source.

1968 convention was not dull

We're closing in on the 20th anniversary of the 1968 Democratic convention in Chicago. That means newspapers, magazines and TV stations are going to look back and ponder the significance of that wild week in Chicago.

We'll see flashbacks of protesters taunting cops and cops chasing protesters. There will be paddy wagons, tear gas, banged heads, the national guards and shaggy poets chanting their mantras in Grant Park.

The long-haired hippies who have become short-haired puppies will talk about their idealistic anti-war sentiments. The retired cops will ask why idealists thought they could end a war by lobbing bags of do-do at them. And aging Chicago politicians will say that if it hadn't been for Mayor Daley, Abbie Hoffman and his dope-ridden pals would have carried off Chicago's womenfolk and eaten babies.

Me? I'll probably write something or other when the time comes. But right now, when I think about that crazy, turbulent, violent week, all I feel is nostalgia. I get so sentimental my eyes are teary.

How can I feel sentimental and nostalgic about a week that has been described as one of the most disgraceful in Chicago's history, if not in the history of American politics?

That's easy. It was the last political convention that was fun, that wasn't carefully orchestrated and a big bore.

I'm speaking selfishly, of course. To those who had their hairy heads cracked or their political careers disrupted, it wasn't a big hoot. But, hey, every four years I have to cover these things. And given a choice between long, droning speeches or rioting in the streets, I'll take tear gas anytime.

In 1972, both parties went to Miami. You try sweating out Miami in August, while listening to George McGovern, a personality kid, put a nation to sleep. Or watch a thousand Republicans in white shoes gaze reverentially at Richard Nixon or Spiro Agnew.

Spend a week in New York just to watch Jimmy Carter floss his teeth. Or go all the way to Kansas City to see if Gerald Ford will stumble off the stage.

I have to admit that 1980 in Detroit had its bright side. A lot of the small-town Republicans genuinely feared that Detroit's black population might cook them in pots.

And next month we're going to Atlanta where it will be 102 degrees and humid, and thousands of news people will spend a week asking each other, "Do we know what Jesse Jackson wants yet?"

After that, it will be New Orleans, where it will be 105 degrees and humid, with Republicans hoping for a miracle: George Bush stepping before the cameras to make his acceptance squeaks, but instead ripping off his coat and shirt and suddenly becoming Rambo.

If the television networks were smart, they wouldn't show any of it. They would just get out all the old film clips of the 1968 convention in Chicago. Wouldn't you rather watch a fat cop chasing Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin? Wouldn't you like to see, just one more time, Dick Gregory being lifted bodily into a paddy wagon?

Five years ago a big California politician told me that Chicago would never get another convention because of the bitter memories of 1968. Instead, he told me, they would hold the 1984 convention in San Francisco because it is so civilized a city and would help the Democrat's image.

So they did, and on the first day of the convention a big, burly man named Erma came around the press rooms and announced there would be an ejaculation contest that afternoon.

One of these years they're going to wise up and come back to Chicago where we know how to show them a good time. I'm sure we have a few canisters left over.

Bush trails Dukakis in poll

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican George Bush is facing "the worst of both worlds," a new poll suggested Monday, getting little help from voters' satisfaction with the short-term state of the economy while being hurt by fear about the long-term fate of the nation.

The vice president trails Democrat Michael Dukakis in the survey conducted for the Times Mirror Corp. However, the Massachusetts governor is not well-known to most of the public, and that gives Bush an opening to tighten the race, the fall, said analyst Norman Ornstein.

"This poll doesn't tell who will win the election," Ornstein told reporters. "For most Americans, Michael Dukakis is a blank slate. In the next couple of months, there will be a lot written on the slate and not just by Dukakis, but by the media and by George Bush and the Republicans."

The survey, the latest in a series for the media company conducted by the Gallup Organization, based on in-person interviews with 3,021 adults from May 13-22, has a margin of potential sampling error of 2 percentage points.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican George Bush is facing "the worst of both worlds," a new poll suggested Monday, getting little help from voters' satisfaction with the short-term state of the economy while being hurt by fears about the long-term fate of the nation.

The vice president trails Democrat Michael Dukakis in the survey conducted for the Times Mirror Corp. However, the Massachusetts governor is not well-known to most of the public, and that gives Bush an opening to tighten the race in the fall, said analyst Norman Ornstein.

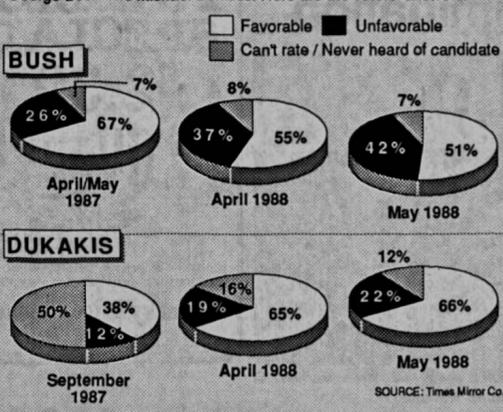

"This poll doesn't tell who will win the election," Ornstein told reporters. "For most Americans, Michael Dukakis is a blank slate. In the next couple of months, there will be a lot written on the slate, and not just by Dukakis, but also by the media and by George Bush and the Republicans."

The survey, the latest in a series for the media company conducted by the Gallup Organization, is based on in-person interviews with 3,021 adults from May 13-22. The margin of potential sampling error was 2 percentage points.

The horse-race numbers for the poll gave Dukakis 53 percent of the registered voters and Bush 40 percent.

Poll shows Dukakis pulling ahead of Bush

Since last year, Gallup-Times Mirror has asked voters their opinions of George Bush and Michael Dukakis. Here are the voters' answers:

Seven percent of voters were undecided.

Bush's relatively weak showing could be partly a result of being saddled with the role of vice president. But conventional wisdom would also suggest that he should benefit from the nation's economic prosperity during the final six years of the Reagan administration.

Indeed, many people are optimistic about their own finances and the national economy over the coming year. Fifty-four percent think they will be personally better off next year, while only 10 percent say their financial situation will deteriorate.

Twenty-four percent think the national economy will improve in the next year, and 46 percent believe there will be little change. Twenty percent are pessimistic.

But Ornstein said, "Bush has gotten the worst of both worlds," pointing to poll findings that the public is very concerned about the long-term future and a feeling that things are out of control.

Only 41 percent of the public was satisfied with "the way things are going" in the country while 54 percent were dissatisfied, the poll said.

An indicator of the depth of the fears was the finding that 37 percent said it is likely or certain that the U.S. economy could collapse in the next 10 years because of foreign competition.

Thus, Bush is not getting a boost from the economic picture while he is suffering from concerns about the Reagan administration's stewardship.

Richards to open Democratic convention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ann Richards, populist and Texas state treasurer, was chosen Monday to deliver the keynote speech and "set the tone" for the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta next month.

Party chief Paul Kirk said Richards "has the ability to tell it like it is" as he announced that the 54-year-old will be the second woman in party history to take the podium to deliver the opening address of the meeting. She is the first woman to hold statewide office in Texas in half a century.

Kirk said the Democratic nominee-to-be Michael Dukakis was consulted on the choice and was interested in having a woman to step to the podium on July 18.

"He was very hopeful that we might make a selection of a woman," Kirk said, "not only because of the importance of the family concerns, the issues of stress and struggle that women are going through in their daily work lives and family lives, but I think it is symbolic of the importance of women to the American family and the realities of all of that."

"And the fact that, let's face it, that is a strength of the Democratic Party and a weakness of George Bush and the Republicans," Kirk said.

Richards, whose sparkling rhetoric has been said to brighten many a party gathering, emerged over the weekend as the likely choice for the spot, which offers a national audience to impress or disappoint. The only other woman ever to have the role was former Rep. Barbara Jordan, also of Texas, who shared the job with Sen. John Glenn.

Kirk said he was happy to announce that Richards would "set the tone for Democrats in Atlanta and draw the distinctions between the party of the working American people and the party of the establishment."

Massachusetts Legislature refuses inquiry into prison site controversy

BOSTON (AP) — A Democratic-controlled legislative committee Monday refused to investigate whether the Dukakis administration gave favorable treatment to owners of a proposed Massachusetts state prison site.

Meanwhile, with the Federal Bureau of Investigation conducting an inquiry into the matter, the co-owners of the property have hired a prominent political consultant who has worked for Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, the likely Democratic presidential nominee.

Also Monday, the state Division of Capital Planning and Operations reversed an earlier stand, announcing it would keep two appraisals of the prison site secret and make public only its offering price. The group was expected to consider changing its stance once again and make the figures public.

The value of the property is a key issue to those accusing Dukakis of favoritism.

The state Legislature's Human Services Committee, in a close vote, rejected a bipartisan proposal to probe Dukakis' support for building a prison in the tiny central Massachusetts town of New Braintree.

Letterman returns tonight

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC's "Late Night with David Letterman" returns to the air tonight with the first new shows since the strike by the Writers Guild of America forced the popular talk show into reruns three months ago.

As of Monday, Letterman was expected to come back without his writers, though the show's producers were still trying to work out a guild waiver that would allow the writing staff to work, too.

"Late Night" head writer Steve O'Donnell stressed last week that whether or not they were at work, Letterman was going on the air with the writers' blessings and in no way was trying to disadvantage the guild, of which Letterman is himself a member.

"We've been having meetings all week and we've decided the best thing is to get the show on the air," O'Donnell said.

Letterman is not violating the strike as long as he writes his own material, which he will do if his writers aren't allowed back to work.

Nuclear fears bar U.N. agreement

UNITED NATIONS — Worries about whether Israel and South Africa have nuclear weapons contributed to the lack of agreement on disarmament policy at a monthlong special General Assembly session, a U.N. official said Monday.

Yasushi Akashi, U.N. undersecretary-general for disarmament affairs, told reporters "the United Nations did not fail. . . . The membership failed the United Nations."

"I think it is a temporary setback, but . . . it should be looked at in the overall context of the continuous process of the United Nations to identify and broaden the areas of common interest in multilateral disarmament," Akashi said.

Delegates to the special session debated throughout last week and into Sunday morning on disarmament issues.

The main difference at the session, which ended Sunday, was between sweeping disarmament proposals advanced by the Soviet Union and developing nations, and more cautious suggestions of the United States and some of its Western allies.

By Sunday morning, delegates had given up trying to write a mutually acceptable document and the session adjourned.

Suspected terrorist released

MEXICO CITY — A Puerto Rican separatist who is wanted in the United States for terrorist activities has been released from prison and sent to Cuba, the Mexican government said Monday.

William Morales was flown to Cuba on Friday after completing five years of his eight-year sentence, said Interior Department spokesman Octavio Campos.

The U.S. Embassy in Mexico City said the U.S. government was "outraged and surprised by reports that Mexican authorities may have released William Morales, whom we understand had several years left to serve on Mexican homicide and attempted murder charges."

Soviet shipments to Nicaragua drop

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union has continued to ship arms to Nicaragua despite a cease-fire and peace talks between the Sandinista government and the U.S.-backed Contras, but the amount of war material being delivered appears to be dropping rapidly, Pentagon figures show.

Defense officials who spoke only on condition they not be named said Monday it was too early to predict Soviet intentions for arming Nicaragua for the year.

On the other hand, "there is a feeling that perhaps the Russians are less enthusiastic right now under (Soviet leader Mikhail) Gorbachev about handing out their resources around the world."

The slowdown in deliveries to Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government comes at a time when U.S. aid to the Contra guerrillas has been cut completely.

President signs lie detector legislation

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan signed without fanfare Monday legislation strictly limiting the use of lie detector tests by private employers.

Reagan made no statement on the legislation, and his decision to approve the bill was contained in a terse White House bill-signing announcement.

Congress had approved the legislation to protect job-seekers from inappropriate use of polygraph exams by companies. The congressional Office of Technology Assessment had estimated that as many as 2 million such tests were administered in 1987, about 90 percent of them by private employers.

The bill prohibits an employee from being discharged, dismissed, disciplined, discriminated against or denied employment or promotion solely on the basis of the test. To take action against the worker, an employer has to have additional supporting evidence under provisions of the bill that Reagan signed.

Senate votes additional anti-drug funds

WASHINGTON — The Senate voted Monday to slash the proposed 1989 Internal Revenue Service budget by $241 million and use the money for the Customs Service's anti-drug program.

The anti-drug measure was part of a larger bill that also calls for a 4 percent pay increase in 1989 for all federal civilian employees except members of Congress, and 4.1 percent for military personnel. The Senate approved an amendment requiring that no future pay increase for members of Congress take effect until voted on separately by the House and Senate.

The White House had opposed reducing the IRS spending. It cautioned that the "impact of this reduced level on returns processing and taxpayer services would be devastating." IRS Commissioner Lawrence Gibbs had complained that the reduction could cut revenues by $1.4 billion next year.

Stocks drop sharply

NEW YORK — Rising interest rates and commodity prices helped send the stock market into a broad retreat Monday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 38.94 points last week, dropped back 34.50 to 2,108.46. Volume on the floor came to 264.41 million shares.

Reagan advocates end to AIDS discrimination

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ronald Reagan hinted Monday he is ready to back efforts to bar discrimination against people who suffer from the deadly disease AIDS, saying "we've got to get moving to give people hope."

Accepting the final report of a 13-member commission he named a year ago, Reagan said it "represents an impressive effort and significantly increases our level of understanding to deal with AIDS."

Reagan announced in a written statement that in response to the commission's nearly 600 recommendations, he had directed Ian MacDonald, a special assistant for drug policy, to recommend within 30 days "a course of action that takes us forward."

Retired Adm. James Watkins, the commission's chairman, told reporters he was most heartened by an additional statement President Reagan made in connection with the panel's principal recommendation — the enactment of federal legislation prohibiting discrimination against victims of the deadly disease.

"At Adm. Watkins' suggestion, I have also directed Dr. MacDonald to include among his priorities consideration of specific measures to strengthen implementation of the policy guidance from 'AIDS in the Workplace,'" Reagan said.

These guidelines, which outline the rights of AIDS sufferers, were recently spelled out by the Office of Personnel Management, the agency responsible for the federal government's more than 2.3 million civilian employees.

Watkins, talking to reporters in the White House driveway, said while he did not want to jump to conclusions, Reagan's statement "sends the first signal that we're on the way" toward protecting AIDS victims against job, insurance and housing discrimination.

The former chief of naval operations said the commission hopes that the OPM guidelines, which other federal agencies may embrace on a voluntary basis, will be made mandatory by Reagan in an executive order.

When pressed to say whether

James Watkins

Reagan had made a commitment to sign such an executive order, Watkins said, "Well, take it easy. I think it's coming."

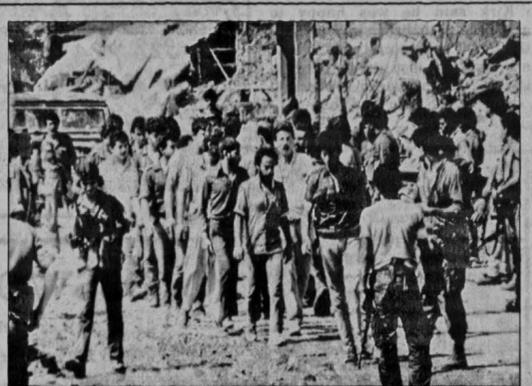

He said doctors in many places are caught in a Catch-22 situation: They can be sued for revealing a person's infection with AIDS, and they can also be prosecuted for not disclosing this to health authorities.

"We've pointed out that we think it's time to bring the country together on that issue. They're caught between rocks and hard places," Watkins said.

The AIDS commission actually urged Reagan to sign such an executive order, saying that would send a message by the nation's top officials about discrimination against AIDS sufferers. In a separate recommendation, the panel urged the broadening of Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 to include protection for non-government workers as well.

Watkins called Reagan a "compassionate humanitarian" and said the president had indicated his thinking might have changed somewhat on the AIDS virus when Reagan related an anecdote about a woman who had written him that two of her children became infected with the AIDS virus as a result of a blood transfusion she once had.

"The president felt moved by the story, and I told the president this was not atypical," Watkins said.

AMA offers ideas about halting illegal drug use

CHICAGO (AP) — The nation is losing the "war on drugs" by concentrating on catching traffickers rather than treating abusers, contends a report considered Monday at the American Medical Association's annual policymaking convention.

"The heart of the problem lies in the demand," the report says. It recommends against legalizing drugs, but calls for the federal government to ease restrictions on those who may receive methadone treatment.

The 420-member House of Delegates, a legislative body representing the AMA's 295,000 members, is expected to act on the proposed drug policy before the convention ends Thursday. The report is by the AMA's board of trustees.

"We think this lays out a blueprint for the American people to effectively do something about the drug problem," said Lonnie Bristow, an AMA trustee and internist from Berkeley, Calif.

"We frankly hate to see money just going down the tubes while our nation talks about whether we should have the Army and the Navy patrolling the borders to interdict drug sellers," he said.

He said the AMA board's report shows the nation's much-publicized war on drugs has "been a failure because it's had the wrong focus."

"As long as we concentrate on the supply end of the problem, we're just pouring money into a sieve," Bristow said in an interview Sunday.

"We need to be spending a far greater percentage of the available funds on treatment of drug addicts. If we treat the drug addicts successfully, then we reduce the demand for drugs."

The report recommends that the federal government expand drug treatment programs, ease regulations to permit private doctors to treat opiate addicts with methadone and beef up drug education programs aimed at adolescents. It does not say how much extra money should be spent to pay for these efforts.

The report notes that one federal rule makes it difficult for addicts to get treatment by, in general, only admitting to methadone programs people who have been addicted to heroin for at least a year.

It recommends modifying the rule to let doctors running such programs admit any patient physically dependent on opiates.

"The need for new treatment centers is acute," the report notes. "Only about 150,000 of the estimated 1.4 million IV (intravenous) drug abusers currently are in treatment. Heroin and cocaine addicts face waiting lists of up to a year to enter treatment programs in many areas."

The AMA board reiterated its opposition to widespread random drug testing of employees working in private industry.

Lohaus, Branstad and Davis were declared winners of contest and owners of Iowa hole.

— Last year, when caddy singer Roy Clark teed off opening hole he needed to hit Mulligan. This year he fared better, and only sliced the ball.

Carlucci: Reform needed in procuring defense contracts

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci said Monday that if military procurement contracts are shown to be tainted, the government may terminate them, but he cautioned against hasty reforms.

"I shouldn't think it would be necessary to have convictions before we act," Carlucci said. "If we have sufficient evidence that a contract is tainted, we will take action to deal with that situation."

What is done will depend on the nature of the contract, how important the weapons system is, and what the alternatives, termination liabilities and processes are, Carlucci said in a midday speech at the National Press Club.

But "the last thing we need now are hasty, piecemeal changes that, despite good intentions, ultimately may make matters worse," he said.

"I urge those who are ready now to condemn and abandon our entire procurement system to withhold judgment until the facts are in, and to keep in mind that no system can offer perfect protection against the human factor. There is simply no way to devise a system that is greed-proof," Carlucci said.

He added that former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and Deputy Defense Secretary David Packard will help him determine "whether additional changes in the procurement system are in order" after the facts are in.

As many as 100 military contracts may be tainted because Pentagon officials and private consultants allegedly provided classified information to defense contractors to help them bid for lucrative contracts, according to Henry Hudson, the U.S. attorney coordinating the case.

Carlucci said that "to date, quite justifiably, U.S. Attorney Hudson has not provided me with even the names of people who are under investigation, because he is saving that for the grand jury."

"So it is totally impossible for us to make any judgments at this point on what contracts might be tainted. But if there are contracts tainted, we will take appropriate action to deal with them," Carlucci said.

"We must vigorously prosecute anyone guilty of betraying our honest colleagues and public trust for personal gain," he added. "But we must wait until the facts are out before making judgments on the system."

• JoAnne Carner's and Leonard Thompson's fivesomes were tied until late in the day for team best ball at 56, but both eventually lost out to Julius Boros' team, which shot a 55.

Boros helped co-found the Amana V.I.P. Tournament.

• Three eagles were recorded on the day — Zoeller three-stroked the 15th, as did Hubert Green. Doug Tewell eagled the second hole.

• Spanky McFarland had fun despite spending the early morning hours autographing unlicensed posters of himself. "They give you all the tools to have fun, and if you don't it's your own fault."

• A basketball backboard was put up behind the first tee, as was done last year, for an informal shooting contest. Those shooting free throws were allowed five shots each. Their scores: Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad, 4 of 5; Boston Celtic Brad Lohaus, 4 of 5; Iowa basketball Coach Tom Davis, 3 of 5; Long Beach State basketball Coach Joe Harrington, 2 of 5; Iowa State basketball Coach Johnny Orr, 2 of 5. Tom Watson made two of three shots.

Lohaus, Branstad and Davis were declared winners of the contest and owners of Iowa hams.

• Last year, when country singer Roy Clark teed off the opening hole he needed to hit a mulligan. This year he fared better, and only sliced the ball little.

• Attendance at the game was the same as past year's — about 10,000, according to Ann Collins, publicity director for the tournament. "It's been around 10,000 the last several years, so we're pleased with it. It's been really good."

• Some of the "famous" caddies at the V.I.P.: Iowa assistant basketball Coach Gary Close for Iowa Men's Athletic Director Bump Elliott; Iowa women's golfer Kelley Brooke for Bob Goalby; Iowa women's golf Coach Diane Thomason for Curt Byrum; and Daily Iowan Sports Editor Eric Hess for Lohaus.

• Best quote of the day: "I feel good about everything. This is America," said Chicago Bears Coach Mike Ditka, when asked how he felt about the upcoming season.

• Worst quote of the day: "I have no idea. That's his choice," Branstad said, when asked who he thought Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis would choose as a running mate.

• Blaine McCallister, who finished tied for third with a 67, bogeyed only for the second time in 54 holes, dating back to his rounds in the Atlanta Open.

• Hometown favorite Dave Rummels, a native of West Branch, Iowa, and former Iowa golfer, expressed a similar opinion of many golfers Monday — that the greens were slow. "I played some good golf today. I had some trouble adjusting to the greens; they were lot slower than what I'm used to."

• Dan Pohl, who finished tied for second with Zoeller at 66, said he will bypass the upcoming British Open but will play in the Western Open at Oak Brook, Ill. He added he is undecided about whether to play in the Hardee's Golf Classic at Coal Valley, Ill.

• When all was almost said and done, Lou Graham's caddy and marshalls came off the course with the scorecard-standard reading -12. A slight mistake, as Graham finished with a 1-under-par 71.

The mishap brought a few laughs from his following.

McCallister saw opportunities slide past the cup on the final three holes. He was 5-under after 14 holes and birdied the 15th to pull within one stroke of Watson.

But McCallister left a 15-foot, uphill birdie attempt short on No. 16. He then pushed his tee shot on the par 3, 17th to the far right side of the green. McCallister almost holed that birdie try, a 40-foot putt that missed tying him with the leader by about an inch.

On the par 4, 18th, his final hope, McCallister's 160-yard approach shot fell short of the green and into the fringe, about 30 feet from the pin. He tried to putt instead of chip the shot, but it bounced several times and left him five feet short.

He proceeded to miss that putt and make bogey for a 5-under-par 67.

"It (the missed birdie try on No. 17) took a lot out of me," McCallister said. "The greens on the back were extremely slow, but overall I played a good round. It's a good golf course and a lot of fun."

Tewell, who started his round on the back nine, was 5-under after 16 holes. On the par 3, 8th hole (Tewell's 17th), he left a 12-foot birdie putt a foot short and parred the 18th to tie McCallister at 67.

"I'd like to play the Tour at Finkbine," Tewell said. "I played good today. But the slow greens really hindered me today — I'm sure it did everyone."

"I think I could have been 10- or 11-under par the way I was playing, but I left a lot of birdie putts in the hole short."

Watson, a five-time British Open champion, said he thinks his future success on the golf course in the last years of his career depends on his putting.

"My game is in good shape," Watson said. "The only question is whether or not I'll be able to make a few putts. It's a big mystery on the greens, and I hope the feeling comes back soon."

Whether it does or not, the 38-year-old Watson said he accepts the aging process and its effects on his game.

"Every career has to end sometime," he said. "I hope it's not ending right now. I hope I have some good golf left."

"Don't you ever get tired of all of that," I asked.

"No," he said. A simple answer. He didn't need to say any more. It was the tone of voice which was assuring.

Hole by hole, Lohaus played his shots, some embarrassing, some impressive.

For someone who warned Monday's onlookers that he may hit a few spectators, he played exceptionally well. Except for the injured Styrofoam cooler on the 17th hole from an errant tee shot, everyone escaped the wrath of a Lohaus ball.

His favorite club, no doubt, was a No. 1 metal wood which he had spray-painted Celtic green. The announcer made light of it at the first hole. After that, only curious onlookers would catch on to why he would do such a thing.

His play was erratic, he admitted, with one shot placed perfectly in the fairway as the fivesome's best stroke or in an adjacent fairway so far away that one fan said, "Brad, shame on you."

As an athlete, his skill was apparent. After hitting four of five free throws in an impromptu free throw competition, his backswing helped him to hit some beautiful shots.

One of those strokes came on the 13th tee, the hole where surrounding waters can draw in balls quicker than Fuzzy Zoeller delivers a one-liner.

His blast was a six-iron for the left-hander, which shouldn't have surprised people considering how he tosses up a jumpshot. What may be surprising is how his caddy urged him to use that club which landed 25 feet from the cup.

That was a personal victory for Lohaus who had previously spent most of his Amana V.I.P.s watching from behind the ropes rather than playing between the ropes.

It's too bad he three-putted, though.

During the entire tournament, he fielded questions about his golf game and his basketball game. Most of the questions were continual repeats.

Detroit's Dennis Rodman and the now-infamous NBA Playoffs fight was mentioned two or 10 times. Celtic teammate Larry Bird also was named.

The answers were nearly the same at every questioning — "Let's just say Rodman and I are not friends" and "Yes, Larry's a great guy."

Basketball is something Lohaus has little trouble talking about to people, whether it concerns new Celtics Coach and former Iowa player Jimmie Rodgers ("We talk about Iowa all the time) or Atlanta's Dominique Wilkins ("He's dunked over me a couple of times").

Comparing basketball to golf, that's a problem.

"There, there's four other guys with me," he said. "Here, I'm out of my element."

Timely joke spurs Tyson's triumph

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Trainer Kevin Rooney had a little joke for Mike Tyson before his fighter went into the ring Monday night in the undisputed heavy-weight title bout against Michael Spinks.

"He came up to me and told me that he bet both our purses on a first-round knockout," Tyson said. "I thought he was serious. So I said 'fine' and I went out to take him out in the first round."

Whether it was a joke, Tyson used his devastating punching power to send Spinks to the canvas for the first time in his professional career and scored a stunning knockout at 1:31 of their $34 million fight.

Tyson, who improved his record to 35-0 with 31 knockouts, said he knew early that Spinks was in trouble.

"When I came into the ring and saw his face, I knew it was going to be a first-round knockout," Tyson said.

Tyson said he expected Spinks to do one of two things — either to come out punching or to lead him around the ring for 12 rounds.

"I think he was scared to do anything else, so he came out fighting, trying for the TKO or the cut," Tyson said.

Spinks got neither. In fact, he never got a glove on Tyson. And before too long, many in the crowd of 21,000 started realizing what Tyson already knew.

Tyson sent Spinks to the canvas with a right hand that finished off a combination.

"There's no fighter like me. I can beat any man in the world," Tyson said.

Lendl wins 5-set thriller

WIMBLEDON, England (AP)—Ivan Lendl, serving "nuclear rockets," survived a match point in the 14th game of the fifth set and went on to victory Monday, keeping alive his dream of a Wimbledon title.

Lendl, the top seed who never has won the tournament he craves the most, beat unseeded Mark Woodforde of Australia 7-5, 6-7, 6-7, 7-5, 10-8 in a match that took 4 hours, 46 minutes.

As evening shadows gathered over Court No. 1, Lendl held off a match point by Woodforde when the Australian sprayed a forehand wide off a solid volley by the top-ranked player in the world.

The match had just ended when heavy clouds that had shrouded Wimbledon all day began pouring rain. Play was halted for the day, postponing the fourth-round match between two-time champion Boris Becker and American Paul Annacone until Tuesday.

The men's No. 2 seed, Mats Wilander, also had a tough time. He overcame what he considered his biggest obstacle to a shot at the Wimbledon title.

On a busy day at the start of the tournament's second week, the Swede defeated Slobodan Zivojnovic of Yugoslavia 6-4, 7-6, 7-5 and moved into the quarterfinals.

Meanwhile, Chris Evert struggled into the fourth round. She rallied from a set down to beat Katrina Adams, a 19-year-old American who used to idolize the three-time women's champion.

NBA

second-team All-America honors.

The only Iowa State player ever selected in the first round was Don Smith, who went to Cincinnati in 1968.

"I'm kind of nervous, but it's exciting as well," Grayer said. "You never really know what to expect. I'm sure I'll be sitting there biting my nails on Tuesday."

Grayer has worked out with several NBA teams in recent weeks, including the Phoenix Suns, San Antonio Spurs, New York Knicks, Milwaukee Bucks and Miami Heat. If he'd go to Phoenix, which has the seventh and 14th picks in the first round, he'd be reunited with former ISU teammate Jeff Hornacek.

"Just suffice it to say that if Jeff Grayer is one of our picks, he'll be an outstanding pick," Suns President Jerry Colangelo said after Grayer worked out in Phoenix. "He's a very impressive player."

Among the other Iowa collegians, Iowa State's Lafester Rhodes and Iowa's Jeff Moe have the best chance of being selected in the draft, which will run only three rounds this year.

Rhodes, a 6-8 forward, averaged 22.5 points a game as a senior after languishing on the bench during his first three seasons at Iowa State. His mobility and speed are his chief assets.

Draft

"After the year they had this year, I feel I could really help them."

Stokes said he will weigh all the factors before making a decision on his future.

"I'm going to look at all my options," he said. "I think I can make an NBA ball team. You want to play, but you also want to have a good contract."

Kent Hill has been signed in the new United States Basketball League (for 6-foot-4 and under players), and other long-shot draftees with Iowa ties are Al Lorenzen and Jeff Moe.

Caddy eyes unique view of Lohaus

When Brad Lohaus stepped to the first tee, he wasn't exactly ready to play in his first-ever Amana V.I.P.

He noted a slang of "fudge" after being told he was next to play. The Amana tournament at Finkbine Golf Course provided a challenge for Lohaus to gather all of his strengths.

Watching the former Hawkeye basketball player turned Boston Celtic was a keen insight, I found, as his caddy.

No doubt his boyish charm and calm attitude can't help but dominate his personality.

Lohaus presents himself as a 7-foot spectacle whose best quality is obviously the ability to deal with people.

Throughout the tournament, he was barraged with autograph seekers, perhaps more than anyone on the course.

He signed his name about 300 times on hats, programs and other pieces of paper. His seekers wanted photos, at least 75, and he declined only if it was impossible.

One gentleman went so far as jump on the back of a motored cart so as to be the lone person on the course who would be momentarily taller.

It wasn't exclusively the public who sought his attention. From security guards to "Days of Our Lives" star Joe Gallison to the Iowa media, he complied and never felt harassed.

Watson wins his first Amana V.I.P.

5-time British Open champ shoots 65

By Brent D. Woods

Tom Watson fired a 7-under-par 65 and survived late-round charges from four players to claim his first Amana V.I.P. Golf Tournament Monday at Finkbine Golf Course.

Fuzzy Zoeller, Dan Pohl, Blaine McCallister and Doug Tewell had their chances to overtake Watson but couldn't make key birdies on the closing holes.

Watson, who teed off at 7:40 a.m., raced into the lead early by making birdies on the first two holes. He sank a 12-footer on the first green and holed a 4-foot birdie effort on No. 2, a par 5 he easily reached in two shots.

Long and straight from tee to green, it was Watson's putter that faltered slightly and prevented him from matching or besting the course record of 63.

"That's the round I needed at the U.S. Open," Watson said. "I was putting for birdies on every hole. I missed a few putts, but I can't complain. Sixty-five is a pretty good score."

Watson tapped in for par on No. 3 and missed a 20-foot birdie try on No. 4. He missed another makeable 15-foot birdie putt on No. 5 after a 310-yard tee shot but tapped in for birdie on the par 5 sixth hole to go 3-under.

After missing a 3-foot birdie attempt at No. 7 and parring No. 8, Watson ran in an 18-foot birdie on the ninth hole after making a recovery shot from the tree-lined right side of the fairway.

He was 4-under at the turn, with the closest competitor being veteran Gene Littler, who was 3-under at the time.

Birdies on No. 11, No. 15 and No. 17 capped the bogey-free round, which saw Watson miss another short birdie putt at No. 12 and a 10-footer for eagle on No. 15.

Zoeller, who made two bogeys on the round, was 4-under after 16 holes and birdied Nos. 17 and 18 to finish one shot behind Watson with a 6-under-par 66.

"I got off to a slow start," Zoeller said. "I have a tendency to let my hair down a bit on Sunday night, although I really didn't last night, and it was early."

Zoeller, who was partnered with comedian George "Goobar" Lindsey, said a round of 66 can do a lot for his confidence.

"Places like this can be your game around," Zoeller said. "It was really fun. But George Lindsey, I didn't see him all day."

Dan Pohl tapped in for birdie on No. 16 to go 6-under and missed a long birdie try on No. 17 to remain one shot behind Watson.

He saw his chance to tie Watson on the 18th green, where his downhill 18-foot birdie try tipped the cup and he had to settle for a tie with Zoeller at 66.

"I hit the ball as good as I have for a long time," Pohl said. "But I didn't take advantage of some opportunities. I gave away a couple of shots on the par 5s and didn't take advantage of my length off the tee."

"But you have to be happy with a 66."

Fuzzy, Goobar prove to be hard golfing act to follow

By Marc Bona
Sports Editor

On Page 7...

As the sun rose over Finkbine Golf Course Monday, and as the dew slowly melted from the freshly cut grass, one of many sounds could be heard at the 22nd annual Amana V.I.P. Classic.

Glibness. Heading a fivesome that included three Amana Refrigeration Inc. employees, Fuzzy Zoeller delivered his usual comedy routine as he strode down the fairways at Finkbine with comedian/actor George "Goobar" Lindsey. In fact, the two were a modern-day version of Abbott and Costello.

Zoeller began his routine while practicing chipping and driving from the range before his scheduled 8:30 a.m. tee time. "I don't expect much from a caddy," he said. "Just be on the tee. I don't even care if you bring your girlfriend."

Caddy: "Neither do I." Then, with every imaginable club, Zoeller lofted shots with a certain lackadaisical effort but landed them with almost pinpoint straightness every time.

Someone from the crowd yelled,

Complete scores of 43 professional golfers at the Amana V.I.P. Golf Tournament

"Rip it once, Fuzzy!" The 1981 Amana V.I.P. champion turned back at the spectator and said quietly, "It's too early."

Zoeller, who kept whistling and smoking cigarettes throughout the entire day, was the clown prince of the course. On the 16th green, he brought a woman from the gallery and let her hit a shot. After his final putt dropped in smoothly, he rolled the ball to the crowd. He also laid down the pin for Lindsey to use for help to roll in his shot.

Other Fuzzy quotes: — "Would you reach down in that pocket and give me one of them round balls?" he asked, referring to typically ripped-up range balls provided for him.

— "I think you can go ahead and hit it," he said, referring to a poor shot by Lindsey, who stood off the fairway and stared into the gallery.

It was no contest. It was instead one of the shortest heavyweight championship fights in history. The time was 1:31.

Only three title bouts have ended quicker. The only faster knockouts in heavyweight title history were Jim Jeffries' 55-second victory over Jack Finnegan in 1900, Michael Dokes' 1:03 win over Mike Weaver in 1982 and Tommy Burns' 1:28 defeat of Jem Roche in 1908.

Shortly past the minute mark, Tyson put Spinks down to the knee with a right to the body. Spinks got up at the count of two and Tyson was on him like a jungle cat. Then the left and right connected with Spinks' jaw and he went down on his back.

Referee Frank Capuccino began to count and it was obvious the stricken Spinks wouldn't beat it.

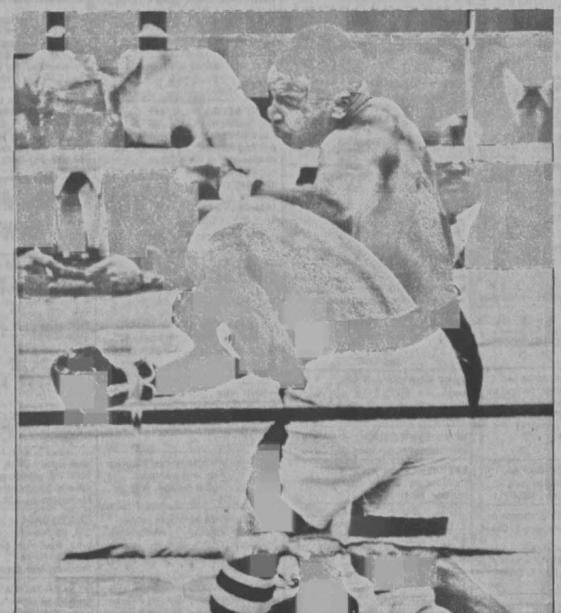

"Whatever he does, I'm going to win," Tyson had said before the scheduled 12-round bout. Spinks never got a chance to do anything.

"No one on the planet can come near me," Tyson had boasted. Tyson, who will be 22 on Thursday, was a 4-1 favorite. It turned out the odds were way out of line.

Tyson swarmed over Spinks at the opening bell and never gave the previously unbeaten challenger a chance. Spinks landed only a left and right.

It was over before a sellout crowd of 21,785 really had a chance to settle in.

There was speculation of squabbling in Tyson's camp and reports that marital problems might trouble him. He answered that question swiftly and ruthlessly.

The Associated Press

Spinks had said before the fight, "I don't know what kind of problems Mike Tyson will present. . . . as soon as the fight ends, I'll be able to tell you."

The 31-year-old Spinks was in no condition to tell anyone anything at the end of this fight.

When Spinks did come around, he said, "I finally found someone who can beat me."

It was the first defeat against 31 victories for Spinks, the former undisputed light heavyweight champion and former International Boxing Federation heavyweight champ.

Tyson, who weighed 218½, six pounds more than Spinks, now has a 35-0 record with 31 knockouts.

Tyson was given more trouble by Spinks before the fight began than in the ring. Because a member of the Spinks camp wasn't in the locker room when the champion's hands were taped, they argued that Tyson's hands should be retaped.

There was also a dispute about which fighter would enter the ring first.

Tyson won that, too.

The champion, clad in black trunks, entered the ring at 10:26 p.m. and the fight began about six minutes later.

Spinks was trying to become the third former champion to regain the heavyweight title. He became the 15th to fail.

For his pain, Spinks got a guarantee of $13.5 million. Tyson's cut from the fight, which was televised on closed-circuit and pay-per-view television, would be in the neighborhood of $20 million.

In boxing's financial district and in the ring, Tyson is the king of the neighborhood.

At age 20, he won a piece of the title and just one month past his 21st birthday became the first undisputed champion since Spinks' older brother, Leon, beat Muhammad Ali in 1978.

NBA will pick over college hoops crop in draft today

DES MOINES (AP) — Jeff Grayer will receive a rare honor for an Iowa collegian if all goes according to form in today's National Basketball Association draft.

The former Iowa State standout is expected to be chosen in the first round, and he could be among the top 10 to 15 picks.

If so, he'd be the first player from an Iowa school taken in the opening round of the draft since Portland tabbed the Iowa's Ronnie Lester in 1980.

"I think I'll go in the top 11 or 12, but where I don't know," said Grayer, who was flown to New York by the NBA Monday to be on hand for the draft.

The 6-foot-5 Grayer played forward at Iowa State, but will be a guard in the pros. The so-called "big guard" position is the strongest in the draft, including players such as Kansas State's Mitch Richmond, Bradley's Hersey Hawkins, Kentucky's Rex Chapman and Georgia's Willie Anderson.

"He's one of the best big guards in the draft in the year of the big guard," said Marty Blake, the NBA's chief scout. "He's a tough kid, a nice kid and played under one of the legends of coaching in Johnny Orr."

Grayer is Iowa State's career scoring leader with 2,502 points and was among the 16 players invited to the final tryout camp for the U.S. Olympic team. He averaged 25 points and 10 rebounds per game as a senior and earned

Ex-Iowa players hope for chance to make future in pro basketball

By Brent D. Woods
Assistant Sports Editor

Many hopes will be shattered and others answered today when the NBA draft begins at 11 a.m.

And some ex-Iowa players are among those on the draft's borderline — definitely not shoe-ins but players with a shot.

Michael Payne, who played at Iowa from 1982-85, is one of those with a chance. He said he feels confident he will be picked up by an NBA team.

"I feel I have just as good a chance as a lot of people," the 6-foot-11 Payne said after a recent Prime Time Basketball League game. "I've improved. I had good tryouts — the (Los Angeles) Clippers tryout went real well for me."

Payne said he thinks he is just now maturing as a player. "I've been lifting and building myself up," he said. "I'm 25 now, and my body has finally caught up with me."

Of course, Payne is looking to hook on with an NBA squad. But it he doesn't, it won't be the end of his world, he said. Other opportunities are knocking.

"I've got some teams on hold in Europe," he said. "I'm in a secure position."

Kevin Gamble, who played for the Hawkeyes in 1986-87, is looking to get back into an NBA uniform after being cut from the Portland Trail Blazers this past season. He went on to play with the CBA's Quad City Thunder but doesn't want to make the CBA a permanent home.

Gamble said he recently had good tryouts with the Milwaukee Bucks and the Charlotte Hornets, an NBA expansion team.

"I played really well in Milwaukee. A lot of people thought they should have signed me, but maybe I'm not what they're looking for," Gamble said. "At Charlotte, it's a waiting process right now."

Gamble said he knows why he was released by Portland, and he doesn't intend to let it happen again.

"I know what I did wrong," he said. "I wasn't aggressive enough offensively. Now that I have a taste of it, I know what it takes to stay there. It's a learning process."

Bill Jones, who finished his Iowa eligibility this past season, is another player with a chance to be a late-round pick.

His versatility improves his chances, as does the addition of 24 new spots caused by the two new expansion teams.

"A lot can happen," Jones said. "If I get drafted, I'll be glad. But if not, I'll get to go to some camps as a free agent."

Iowa's all-time leading scorer Greg Stokes, who played in Europe this past season after leaving the Philadelphia 76ers, won't be eligible for the draft. Philadelphia owns his NBA rights until July 1, when they will either have to sign him or let him become a free agent.

"My agent has been in contact with them (the 76ers)," Stokes said.

Attache killed in Greece

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A bomb believed planted by wing terrorist group on Tuesday and killed the U.S. attaché in Greece, his armor-plated car off the authorities said.

U.S. Navy Capt. William deen was driving to work the blast threw his sedan the small tree-lined street lodged it in a steel fence.

The victim's body was several yards away in the yard of an abandoned house.

There was no immediate responsibility for the blast, senior police officials said. They believed it to be the work of a left-wing terrorist group blamed for political assassinations past 13 years.

The United States and both condemned the blast which came at a crucial relations between the two.

The United States condemned this terrorist outrage as the strongest possible terms. Chief Pentagon spokesman Howard said it was a senseless cowardly murder of a regarded U.S. military officer. Sotiris Kostasopoulos, a spokesman for Foreign Minister K. Papoulias, said the Greek government voiced "disgust at the deed."

"All Greeks, irrespective of political leanings, unreservedly condemn the would-be assassin."

Iowa City action

By Traci Auble
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Council Tuesday night to defer action on proposed firearms training to be built on the low Sanitary Landfill near I Avenue.

The proposed firing range raised concerns from residents close to the site. About 200 residents appeared at the meeting to address the council.

Most of the residents who expressed their concerns about danger and noise of gun shooting, devaluation of property value, the number of days police practicing at the outdoor range.

"This area has already share of burdens. It's becoming dumping ground," Diana T. neighbor of the site, said. "I sincerely hope you'll oppose this range."

Iowa City Police Dept. Training Coordinator Michael Goldberg told the council in the new firing range was planned to reduce departmental costs.

Union v

NEW YORK (AP) — The government on Tuesday sued the International Brotherhood of Teamsters to force reform of the nation's largest labor union.

The civil racketeering lawsuit is the first of its kind against a union dominated by the Mafia.

The civil racketeering lawsuit is the first of its kind against a union dominated by the Mafia. The works for more than 100,000 people in the New York area, filed in federal court in Manhattan, N.Y., by U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani.

"We are not seeking over control of the Teamsters union," Giuliani said in a packed news conference. "This is a use of the racketeering statute in a surgical attempt to take back the Mafia from the Teamsters union."

Meanwhile, two U.S. senators introduced legislation to force the AFL-CIO, of which the Teamsters is a member, to file a lawsuit as overstepping its authority.

Giuliani stressed that the suit is not in any sense a trade unionism or on the part of many Teamsters who are hard working people.

Named as defendants were the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Housemen and Helpers of the 18-member general
