Officials brief congressmen on Iran attack

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top Defense Department officials briefed members of Congress behind closed doors Wednesday on the Navy's downing of an Iranian jetliner, but key questions remained unanswered even as lawmakers affirmed their support for the commander who fired the missiles.

Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci and other Pentagon officials conducted the secret briefings for House and Senate members, who characterized some of the information as confusing and said several important details have yet to be unearthed.

Administration officials said the cruiser USS Vincennes fired two missiles in the Strait of Hormuz because it thought it was under attack by an Iranian F-14 fighter.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said "a lot of the questions that have come up... are going to have to await the technical data package" of computer records from the Vincennes.

Nunn said the questions include electronic signals received by the Vincennes from the jetliner, details of the warnings sent by the ship, the jet's speed, altitude and whether it was descending toward the ship as Pentagon officials have said.

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., ranking Republican on the Armed Services panel, said, "We're still in the dark about a number of things. There are a lot of things we don't know."

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said Pentagon officials told House members that U.S. ships in the region had received specific intelligence warnings that an attack on American forces was likely over the July 4 weekend. Those warnings heightened fears about the ship, he said.

Aspin said a pair of F-14s had been moved from a military airfield elsewhere in Iran to the joint military-civilian airfield at Bandar Abbas.

Rep. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., said, "The ship's captain had every reason in the world to feel threatened. I don't think he had any choice but to shoot it down."

Meanwhile, State Department officials said the United States remains willing to open an "authoritative dialogue" with Iran to discuss improving relations. Iran has expressed a similar interest in return, said deputy spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley.

Mayberry seeks new murder trial

By Traci Auble
The Daily Iowan

Convicted murderer James L. Mayberry, who is currently serving a life prison sentence for the 1985 murder of an Iowa City resident, has requested a new trial, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Mayberry was convicted in the July 2, 1985, stabbing death of Julia Wise at the Hilltop Trailer Court in Iowa City. He was accused of trying to rape Wise, then stabbing her to death in her trailer.

During Mayberry's trial the Johnson County District Attorney's office pieced together physical evidence linking him to the scene and used Mayberry's own statements to show how he fatally stabbed Wise in her Hilltop Mobile home.

Mayberry appealed his conviction to the Iowa Supreme Court in 1987, but the high court upheld his conviction.

The documents filed in Johnson County District Court stated Mayberry's arguments for a new trial include insufficient evidence, denial of a mistrial after testimony that he refused to take a lie detector test and ineffective counsel.

Jon Kinnamon, Mayberry's lawyer, said Wednesday that Mayberry asked for the new trial because questions about his conviction remain.

According to the Iowa state code a person can be convicted of first-degree murder if the jury finds sufficient evidence that there was premeditation or if the murder was committed during a forcible felony.

Kinnamon said the county attorney merged the two standards and if Mayberry could prove that merging standards was an error, Mayberry has a right to a new trial.

He said his petition for a new trial raises a new issue, as is required by state law.

"The petition is prohibited from raising issues already used," Kinnamon said. "You must raise new issues and explain them."

Kinnamon suggested that other issues may be raised as the case progresses. He said he had no idea how long it would take to settle the case, adding that he would like to see it resolved within the year.

"It's not something that can be decided instantly," Kinnamon said. "It will take some time."

Mayberry's request for payment of court costs, representation and legal services have been approved by Sixth District Court Judge Kristin Hibbs, according to court records.

OASIS comes to UI library

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

The UI Main Library staff was prepared for an onslaught of questions concerning the recently expanded computerized card catalog, but the transition has been quiet so far.

UI Reference Librarian Helen Ryan said signs were placed on the Online Access System for Information Sources terminals at the UI Main Library to announce the addition of main library holdings to the system. OASIS now allows users to search for more than 680,000 of the UI library system's 2 million holdings throughout campus.

"We expected to have a big problem with users at first," Ryan said. "We geared up for a lot of one-on-one instruction and we've had almost none."

More than 60 OASIS computer terminals arrived at the UI last week and will be in use throughout the UI libraries by the end of August.

"I think people like the system," Donna Hirst, UI librarian and project manager for library automation, said. "It is extremely easy to use — by author, title, subject. Location and call number are also shown."

Data conversion for the project began in 1979 when new holdings and selected titles were put in machine-readable form to allow users to search by author, title or subject by computer.

OASIS was first implemented at the UI Law Library to catalog the law holdings and then test-piloted at UI Health Science Library with a limited database. Six terminals installed at the UI Main Library

U.S. seizes 72 tons of marijuana

SEATTLE (AP) — A Panamanian-registered ship seized on the high seas with more than 72 tons of marijuana was towed into port Wednesday, and the Coast Guard said its capture was the largest drug bust ever on the West Coast.

Officials said the Encounter Bay had endured 60 rounds of machine-gun fire about 600 miles offshore last Friday and surrendered only when threatened with cannon fire.

The ship was towed into port under tight security by the Coast Guard cutter Boutwell, which was flying a makeshift "pot buster" flag.

The crew of 18 — thought to include three from America, one from England, one from New Zealand and 13 from Indonesia, Thailand and Singapore — were photographed and fingerprinted aboard the Boutwell in preparation for an appearance before a U.S. magistrate.

Admiral Robert Kramek, installed last week as regional commandant, used the occasion to criticize funding cuts in the Coast Guard's patrol budget. He said the bust was the "biggest ever on the West Coast."

The Associated Press

Members of the Coast Guard display the contents of one of four containers from the Panamanian-registered Encounter Bay. The ship, which contained more than 72 tons of marijuana, was towed into Seattle Wednesday after being seized by the Coast Guard.

Cecil Allison, captain of the Boutwell, said the Encounter Bay appeared headed for the Strait of Juan de Fuca, which separates Canada's British Columbia and the northeastern corner of the state of Washington.

Family and friends of the Boutwell's crew cheered the cutter's arrival and the makeshift flag of a marijuana leaf marked diagonally by a red line.

"Noriega, put this in your pipe and smoke it," said a banner held aloft by Allison's family. Panama's Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega came under federal indictment in Florida earlier this year on charges of drug trafficking.

The 180-foot Encounter Bay was not flying a flag when it was spotted last Friday.

Leftover cash may pay for UNI boilers, spending programs

DES MOINES (AP) — The state ended its budget year with enough leftover cash to pay for a major heating project at the University of Northern Iowa as a revenue surge showed "underlying strength in Iowa's economy," officials said Wednesday.

Budget experts warned it is too early to assess the impact of this year's drought on tax dollars flowing into the treasury but said it could be a major blow to the state's fragile economic recovery.

In releasing his final revenue report for the budget year which ended last week, Department of Management head Pat Cavanaugh said the economy "produced stronger than expected state revenues and, in most cases, exceeded previous projections."

"That was particularly encouraging," said Cavanaugh, who is Gov. Terry Branstad's top budget adviser.

Cavanaugh said after all of this year's bills are paid the state will have $61.7 million in the bank, all of which is earmarked for new spending programs.

Cavanaugh said he's estimating that the state will collect about $10 million more than had been projected and will recommend that Branstad certify that money for the UNI boiler. The boiler project is an $11 million effort approved by lawmakers for funding only if there was enough money left over.

The UNI boiler was at the top of a list of $16.3 million in construction projects legislators wanted done if enough money was available.

While at least $10 million of that total will be available, Cavanaugh said, it's unlikely there will be extra cash to fund the entire list.

A major loser would be a $1 million drive to renovate the state capitol.

Also included was money to begin planning for a prison expansion. Lottery proceeds are earmarked for that program if general state dollars fall short.

Cavanaugh said the state collected $110.9 million more during the fiscal year which ended last Thursday than in the previous year.

That's a growth rate of about 4.4 percent and "revenues reflect a continuation of the turnaround in Iowa's economy that began in 1987," Cavanaugh said.

Cavanaugh said the tax collections "more clearly indicate real growth in the Iowa economy."

The increase was broad-based, Cavanaugh said, coming from higher collections of sales taxes, along with personal and corporate income taxes. Sales taxes are looked at closely because they are generally considered a measure of consumer confidence.

"Despite the elimination of the sales tax on machinery and equipment, the rate of growth was strong, indicating continued consumer confidence and a stable economic climate in Iowa," Cavanaugh said.

For the month of June, state revenues grew $19.9 million over the same month last year, an 8.6 percent growth.

Personal income tax collections were up 9 percent for the year, exceeding the 8.4 percent which had been forecast.

Cavanaugh won't make a final accounting of last year's state budget until Sept. 30, when the books are officially closed. He said a final decision on how much of the list of new projects could come at that time.

Cavanaugh did raise a warning flag about this year's dry weather. He said there's been little impact.

Charities sought to share $300,000

Employees of the state of Iowa are now searching for Iowa charities to share the proceeds of an estimated $300,000 fund drive this fall.

The new statewide giving campaign will raise money for charities which provide health and human need services to Iowans. Applications are being taken from charities which wish to receive funding from the campaign.

Charities must meet several qualifications to be eligible. They must be non-profit, tax-exempt organizations which provide service directly to Iowans, and they must be able to provide detailed financial information.

Applications from charities must be submitted by the July 25 deadline. Those interested should contact Campaign Administrator George Pratt at 515-246-6548 or write him at 1111 Ninth St., Des Moines, Iowa, 50314.

The new charity drive replaces the state employee United Way campaign. This year, the state's 22,000 employees will have the opportunity to donate to dozens of Iowa charities.

UI parking attendants recount dangers of job

By Lisa Swegle
Special to The Daily Iowan

Only parking enforcement attendants know what it is like to be on the other end of a parking ticket.

Writing parking tickets can be a dangerous business. Becky Eister, an Iowa City parking attendant, said she has been spit on, pushed against meters and called "just about every name in the book."

Eister estimates she is harassed by 20 out of every 100 people she tickets.

"I get tired of being harassed on the street, being called names," Eister said. "But that happens on every job."

Eister said people occasionally try to scare her into taking back tickets, but said it never works because departmental policy stipulates that once a ticket has been issued, it cannot be canceled.

"We just can't take a ticket back, and they just don't seem to understand," Eister said.

If a person reaches his car before the attendant can write the ticket, they can move their car without being ticketed, Eister said.

A UI parking enforcement attendant said some people have told him that he doesn't deserve a job.

"We run into a few who think we're out to get them, but we're not," he said. "We don't stand around and wait for meters to expire. We don't have time."

Eister said the best method for dealing with protesters is simply ignoring them.

"I generally ignore them and get a smile on my face because that gets them really mad," Eister said. "I just tell them I'm doing my job, give them my supervisor's (phone) number and just start walking."

One attendant recalled one excuse that did work. A man who had parked illegally at UI Hospitals and Clinics said his wife was having a baby and they had to hurry to get inside the hospital.

The attendant tore that ticket up. "We have the whole hospital area, so you do run into a few who have pretty good excuses sometimes," he said.

At any one time during the day, up to 11 city and UI parking officers are out ticketing cars.

Five city parking attendants work daily during weekdays with four working on Saturday, Eister said.

The city attendants operate on a rotating schedule which enables them to switch areas weekly.

Eister said she usually makes it through her rounds once every hour.

In one day, a single illegally parked car can add up a lot of fines, Eister said, because attendants will give multiple tickets.

Eister said attendants will ticket the same car every 30 minutes if it violates a 30-minute meter.

According to UI Parking Operations Manager Linda Gritsch, no more than six UI parking attendants are out ticketing at the same time. Attendants rotate among five campus areas once a week.

From July 1986 to June 1987, 148,000 Iowa City parking tickets were issued and 110,000 were paid, according to Iowa City account clerk Barb Wells.

About two-thirds of those tickets were meter violations, Wells said, because there are more meters than prohibited zones and the meters are patrolled daily.

According to Gritsch, the UI Parking Department issues about 100,000 tickets a year, and the majority of those are also meter violations.

Gritsch said many UI students complain that the UI has a horrible parking situation.

"We hear about it every day," Gritsch said. "They don't like the situation in town, but right now we can't do anything about it."

According to Wells, the number of tickets issued in Iowa City would "probably be right in line with other towns."

"You drive up to Cedar Rapids, and you see their people out just as much as our people are out," Wells said.

Wells said Iowa City's downtown parking situation has improved in the eight years she has worked with the parking department due to the construction of two new ramps.

"It's just kind of a bad situation," Wells said. "People are going to get tickets, and they are not going to be happy about it."

After $15 in fines, an offender's vehicle can be towed if found in violation on the street, Wells said.

Eister said she notices the same offenders on the street over and over.

"A lot of them figure it's just easier to pay the tickets than to keep feeding the meter," Eister said. "But it doesn't take long to reach $15."

"To some, it's just a big game," Eister said. "A lot of them are habitual offenders, students thinking, 'I'll get out of here before they can catch me.' Well, some do and some don't."

Eister said that even parking attendants get caught sometimes.

"It can happen to anybody," Eister said. "It does to me. If I get held up, I get held up. I'm just as bad as the next guy."

U.S.-Soviet walkers press onward

ESMOINES, Iowa (AP)—Soviets and Americans walking for peace kept up their pace despite the hot, dry weather Wednesday, heading for a welcome on the steps of the state capitol Thursday afternoon.

The 220 Soviets and about 130 Americans left Grinnell on Wednesday and stopped for lunch at five churches in Colfax. They were to spend the night at the Fitzgerald farm near Mitchellville where they were to be greeted by Des Moines banker John Chrystal.

While they made a stop in Amana on Tuesday, the Soviets got a quick lesson in American softball in a two-inning game at a community picnic. At Middle Amana, a peace pole made by R.C. Eichacker of Amana was unveiled by Alisa Golenpolskaya, a 12-year-old girl from Moscow, and Travis Hergert, 8, of Middle Amana.

The pole, to be on display for the 1988 World Ag Expo in September, contains phrases in eight languages.

"Each language says the same thing: 'May peace prevail on Earth,'" Eichacker said. Eichacker is walking with the Soviets on the Iowa portion of the trip.

The peace walkers are to visit Des Moines on Friday before flying to California on Saturday morning for the final leg of the walk.

ICLU study reveals legislators' votes on civil liberties

DES MOINES (AP) — Nearly half of Iowa's House members compiled a perfect voting record on civil liberties issues this year, but none of the 50 senators matched that mark, a study released Wednesday said.

The Iowa Civil Liberties Union released its annual survey of legislative voting records and said 49 of the 100 House members voted in favor of the group's position on all five of the issues selected, primarily privacy issues.

The lowest score among House members was Rep. Tom Miller, a conservative Republican from Cherokee and former newspaper publisher, who voted with the ICLU only once.

The split essentially was along partisan lines, with only six of the 42 House Republicans agreeing with the ICLU on all the issues and 43 of the 58 House Democrats having perfect records.

None of the 50 senators agreed with all six of the issues selected by the ICLU.

The issue which caused the break was a measure which would have established mandatory AIDS testing for persons convicted of prostitution. That overwhelmingly passed the Senate, despite opposition from the ICLU. The organization fought the requirement on privacy grounds.

Twenty-six Senators agreed with the ICLU on all positions except the AIDS testing, compiling an 83 percent voting record. That 26 included four Republicans.

Sen. Forrest Schwengel, a Fairfield Republican, technically got the lowest score because he didn't agree with any of the six test votes selected by the civil liberties group. However, he missed almost all of this year's session because of illness and isn't seeking re-election.

The next lowest scores went to Senate Minority Leader Cal Hultman, R-Red Oak, and Sen. Dale Tieden, R-Elkader, who each got a 17 percent rating by agreeing with the ICLU only once. They both supported a measure keeping secret the records of video rental businesses.

The basically partisan split carried through to Iowa's congressional delegation, the group's rating said.

U.S. Sen. Tom Harkin, a Democrat, backed the civil liberties group on six of the eight test votes listed while Republican U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley voted against the group all eight times.

In the House, 5th District Republican Jim Ross Lightfoot opposed the group on all nine test votes, while 6th District Republican Fred Grandy backed the civil liberties position twice.

Second District Republican Tom Tauke and 1st District GOP House member Jim Leach backed the civil liberties group on five of the votes.

Fourth District Democrat Neal Smith and 3rd District Democrat David Nagle agreed with the civil liberties group on eight of the nine votes selected.

The votes checked by the group came on measures to toughen laws forbidding employers from using polygraph tests on workers, a series of AIDS-related measures, privacy of library and video rentals and free speech protections for school newspapers.

Iowa woman arrested in multiple renting of home

DES MOINES (AP) — A 34-year-old Des Moines woman was arrested for allegedly renting the same two-story white house to at least nine families and collecting deposits from most of them.

Grace Bloomquist, who police say used the name Grace Shepherd, is charged with second-degree theft and is being held on $5,750 bond.

Bloomquist spent a year in the women's prison at Mitchellville following a theft conviction in 1987. She was released Jan. 27.

A chance meeting by at least three of the defrauded tenants in the alley by the house at 2 a.m. brought the confusion to light recently.

Many of the victims have forwarded their mail to the Walker Street address and have disconnected their telephone, gas and electric service from their previous residences.

Carol and William Buckley moved to Des Moines from San Antonio, Texas, in a pickup with their four children. They were ready to move into the Walker Street house late last month.

"I came up here the first time on the bus with my three smallest children from San Antonio — that's 3 1/2 hours, by the way — to find a house," said Carol Buckley. "I thought I was so lucky to find this house the first day."

searched UI Law Library holdings. The UI Law Library was equipped with listings for all UI machine-readable library materials last August and the UI Health Science Library started using the complete database in June.

Hirst said implementation of public access to the system is scheduled for August — or as soon as the additional terminals are installed.

Each of the 10 departmental libraries will receive five or six OASIS terminals and several terminals will be installed on the fourth and fifth floors of the Main Library, she said.

Hirst said the on-line conversion is a continuing process and will provide future advantages for library users and staff.

"The system is an integrated library system and it provides services to the campus, but it's also a library management system," Hirst said.

OASIS will eventually support all library operations including inventory, ordering and circulation, she said.

Hirst said about $770,000 has been spent for the conversion thus far, with the majority of the funds used for computer hardware for the on-line catalog system.

Ryan said OASIS makes the library more efficient.

"Automating a library does not cut back staff," she said. "What we're doing is providing more access."

Ryan said some people feared an on-line catalog would not be well received by UI library users, but added those fears have not proved valid because most users are computer literate.

The OASIS system is "user friendly," Ryan said, and will offer a number of useful features in the future.

Such plans will allow students and faculty to use OASIS in their homes or offices, Ryan said. A book delivery system is another possible on-line service available with OASIS.

on the budget because of the drought to date but "that may begin to become apparent over the next couple of months."

"Right now, I believe it is too soon to make any revenue adjustments," Cavanaugh said. "We'll wait and see what happens throughout the remainder of the summer. We'll have a better sense in October what impact it will have on the economy."

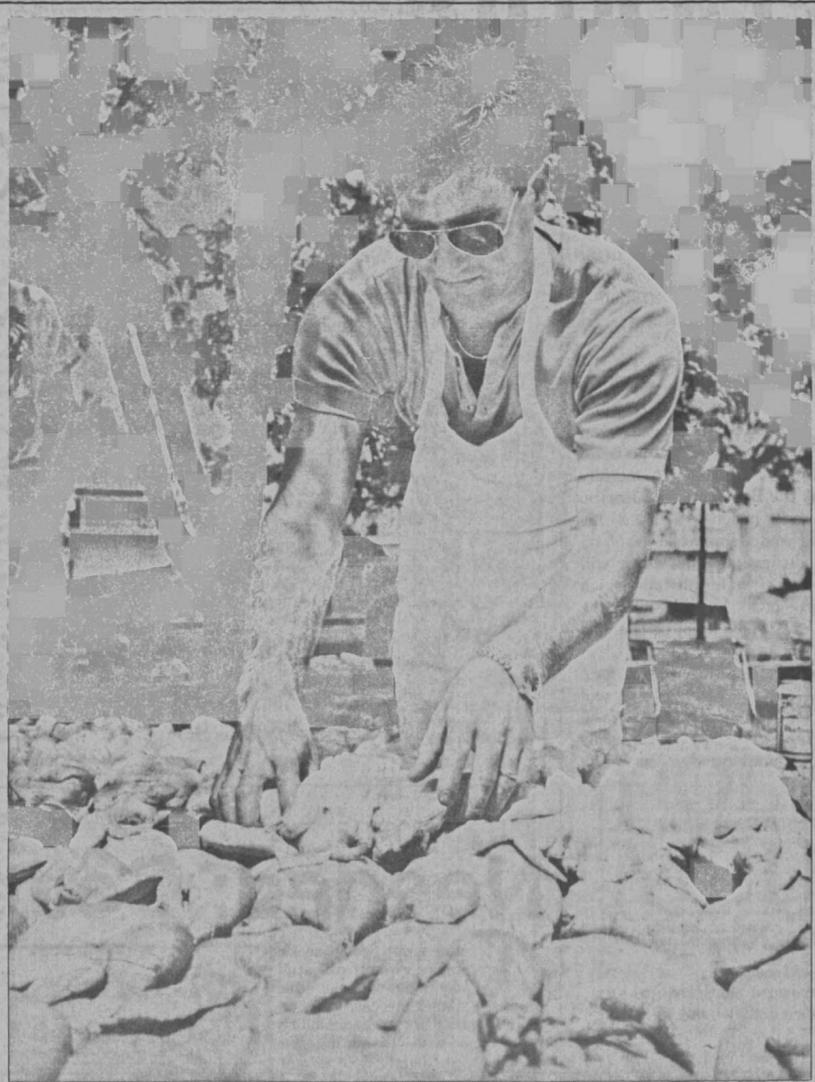

Budget experts have estimated that higher farm prices will offset crop losses. A panel of economic experts is scheduled to meet today to review projections about the fiscal year which began on Friday.

"It is not likely that the current drought had any significant effect on the state's receipts in fiscal year 1988," Cavanaugh said. "However, the extent to which the drought will affect Iowa's economic recovery and the state's fiscal year 1989 receipts may begin to be apparent over the next couple of months."

That panel has estimated growth for the year at 3.5 percent, and Cavanaugh said he doesn't anticipate making changes in the forecast until there's a clearer picture of the drought's impact.

During the fiscal year just completed, the state collected $2.620 billion, up from the $2.509 billion the previous year, Cavanaugh said.

Ex-Iowan murders family

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Friends suggested financial or marital trouble may have caused a former Iowan to kill his children and wife before committing suicide, but investigators say a motive may never be known.

"It's still a great mystery," said Rich Mreen of the Clay County medical examiner's office after autopsies were performed on the bodies following the shootings Tuesday in north Kansas City.

The autopsies showed that Molly Parks, 4, had been shot three times in the chest. Her brother, Scott, 11, was shot twice in the chest.

Their mother, Beverly, 40, was shot in the head and abdomen. The shotgun used in the shootings was found next to the body of 41-year-old Cass Parks, who apparently shot himself in the head after killing his family.

Investigators were not sure in what order the shootings took place.

"It appears he may have shot the mother first and then went downstairs and shot both kids," Mreen said. "But it could have been the reverse."

The shootings came a year and a day after the family had moved into the rented home from State Center, Iowa.

"I felt a little sorry for them," said Betty Brush, a neighbor of the Parks in State Center. "I don't think they had a lot. It was kind of a financial struggle for them."

Parks, who had been married to his wife for 21 years, was self-employed as a furniture repairer. A 1987 income tax return found by authorities listed his gross income as $5,500.

"I know they were having financial difficulties," said Alana Mary Camacho, who attended a Bible study class with Mrs. Parks.

Helen L. Walker, Beverly Parks' sister, said she was shocked by the murders and suicide and said the couple was not having any marital problems that she knew of.

Branstad lobbies for aid, fears extent of drought

DES MOINES (AP) — Gov. Terry Branstad, worried that the full extent of the drought hasn't hit home in Washington, D.C., on Wednesday opened a lobbying drive to get more federal drought aid.

"The further you get away from the fields, the more difficult it is to know what's really happening out there," said Branstad. "I think there's awareness there's a severe problem, but the extent of the damage that's occurring day by day now may not be fully realized in Washington."

The governor said he has two new proposals for drought aid, including allowing cattle to graze on the most fragile farmland and further steps to assure cattle farmers have access to government-owned grain.

Meanwhile, aides said Branstad could declare a statewide emergency as early as Friday.

Branstad's comments came as he left for a one-day lobbying trip in Washington, where he's scheduled to meet today with Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng and the state's congressional delegation.

A major reason the personal lobbying is needed, Branstad said, is to make sure that federal farm officials understand the extent of the damage and the immediate need for assistance.

"I've been all over the state in the last three or four days," Branstad said. "What was considered premature concern, maybe, a couple of weeks ago is becoming very critical."

While Branstad has generally not been critical of Lyng and other administration figures, one bone of contention between the two sides has been the timing of assistance.

Lyng has argued that more time is needed to assess overall crop damage, while Branstad insists it's already clear that major damage has occurred.

"The next week or so is very critical, and if we don't get the rain, especially if the temperatures continue to remain in the high 90s and around 100 degrees, we're going to sustain substantial losses that even rain two or three weeks from now is not going to correct."

"It's becoming very critical, and we want them to know the extent of the problem," Branstad said.

To underscore that effort, Branstad said earlier this week that he was considering declaring a statewide drought emergency, a step which would allow state vehicles to be used to transport water and feed. It would also free Branstad to use the Iowa National Guard to help in drought efforts.

Spokesman Dick Vohs said the declaration could come as early as Friday.

A task force the governor assembled to study the drought is scheduled to meet on Friday, and Vohs said Branstad was likely to want to hear that panel's recommendation before acting.

The aid programs the governor said he'll seek include expanding farmers' access to crops on the most fragile farmland taken out of production for 10 years in the Conservation Reserve Program.

While farmers have been allowed to harvest a single cutting of hay from that land, Branstad said he'll push for permission to allow livestock to graze on those acres.

Dry spell may mean sharp decline in Midwestern wildlife population

DES MOINES (AP) — Conservation experts said Wednesday that this year's drought could bring a lull in expanding wildlife populations but say they are more worried about the long-term impact on animals of putting fragile land into production.

"The biggest danger is we've set a precedent," said Duane Sand, of the Iowa Natural Heritage Foundation.

Wildlife population in Iowa has been booming for two years, in part because federal farm programs called for taking a substantial amount of land out of production. That land is planted instead with crops like hay and oats that aren't harvested and provide ground cover for pheasants and other wildlife.

As the drought has hit the nation's Farm Belt, agriculture officials have given permission for farmers desperate for livestock feed to harvest those crops, including much of the 25 million acres taken out of production for 10 years under the Conservation Reserve Program which is designed to protect highly erodible land.

Sand said that land provides the best habitat for wildlife and any steps to keep it in production would take a toll on animals.

Allowing use of the land this year sets a dangerous precedent, he said. Sand said soaring commodity prices may make it attractive for farmers to continue to farm those acres in coming years.

"It may be hard to keep that from being opened up more frequently in the future," Sand said. "We may have some real difficulty getting conservation reserve signups next year, given the return they can get because of higher commodity prices."

Experts are monitoring the short-range impact of the drought, Sand said, but initial estimates see little immediate danger.

Animals use the cover crop for protection during spring nesting and rearing seasons which generally are completed by July 1. The next time they will need the protection will be during the winter, Sand said.

"Most of the nesting and rearing benefit was accomplished," he said. "I think there was minimal damage to wildlife habitat there."

As winter nears, conservation experts will be monitoring the availability of both food and cover for small animals.

"It's possible with the drought there may be a real shortage of food supplies," Sand said.

Lack of rain delays bond election

FARLEY, Iowa (AP) — Fearing that drought conditions in northeast Iowa may dry up support, officials in western Dubuque County are asking a delay in the vote on a $7.8 million school bond issue.

John Hacke of Bernard, president of the Western Dubuque County Community School District board, said he will ask board members Monday night to postpone the bond election from September because farmers and businesses may be hurt by the drought.

"Because of conditions at this time a majority of people are asking me to postpone the bond issue," Hacke said.

Some in the district think the issue should be brought to a vote.

"My thinking right now is we should be going forward," board member Joe Ertl of Dyersville, Iowa, said.

The district will use the money from increased taxes to renovate four schools and build an elementary school in Dyersville.

Weather won't raise food prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's grain reserves are large enough to prevent major shortages for the rest of the year and keep consumer food prices in check despite the drought, an Agriculture Department official said Wednesday.

"Consumers should not see skyrocketing prices," Ewen Wilson, assistant secretary of agriculture for economics, told a hearing by two House agriculture subcommittees. But he added that there could be a squeeze in the supply of some crops.

"Diminished stocks of soybeans and oats will mean tight supplies if the drought persists," he said. He also said grazing conditions on June 1 were rated 68 percent of ideal and that hay prices are up 22 percent from last year.

Wilson reported that 65 percent of the winter wheat crop, which amounts to three-quarters of all U.S. wheat production, already has been harvested and that progress is "well ahead of normal."

In contrast, he said, "the spring wheat crop is in bad shape with almost two-thirds of the crop rated in poor to very poor condition due to the drought."

The nation started this year with stocks of 1.27 billion bushels of wheat, well above the average of the last decade, Wilson said. He said that amount plus winter wheat already in the bins from the current harvest add up to a 10-month supply.

That supply, exceeding 2 billion bushels, includes wheat for domestic use and for shipment to overseas markets, Wilson said.

The greatest production loss is in durum wheat, which is used for pasta, he said. The condition of hard red spring wheat also is generally poor, but stocks equal to 80 percent of annual use are available, he said.

Among feed grains, Wilson said, corn is generally in fair condition and in 10 of the 17 major producing states, 25 percent or more of the crop is rated poor or very poor. In six of the 11 major sorghum-producing states, at least 25 percent of sorghum acreage is rated poor or very poor.

Undersea earthquakes rock Japan

TOKYO — Two strong undersea earthquakes rocked the northern Japanese island of Hokkaido early this morning, but officials reported no damage or casualties. The Central Meteorological Agency said the first tremor struck at 12:54 a.m. with a preliminary reading of 6.4 on the Richter scale. The quake's epicenter was 36 miles under the seabed off the coast of Kushiro, 556 miles northwest of Tokyo, the agency said. The second quake jolted the same region an hour later with a reading of 5.7 on the Richter scale, the agency said. There were no reports of damage or casualties from either quake, said the police officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Roh Tae-woo outlines reunification plan

SEOUL, South Korea — President Roh Tae-woo called Thursday for an end to the bitter confrontation between North and South Korea and outlined proposals to reunite the divided peninsula peacefully. Roh, in a nationally televised speech, said his government's unification policy calls for broad trade, humanitarian, cultural and political contacts with the communist north to end tension. "We must all work together to open a bright era of South-North reconciliation and cooperation," he said. Roh outlined a six-point package calling for exchange visits, family reunification, trade and an end to confrontation between the two Koreas. The two nations technically remain at war because no peace treaty was signed at the end of the Korean War in 1953.

Yugoslav workers storm Parliament

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Thousands of workers from Yugoslavia's largest rubber and shoe plant forced their way into the Federal Parliament on Wednesday, demanding changes in the government and protesting low living standards. They later were evicted.

In an action unprecedented in Communist Yugoslavia's postwar history, about 4,000 demonstrators clashed with security police in front of the Parliament building. Police were unable to keep them from entering.

The protesters filled the main lobby of the domed building for about half an hour before security men forced them to leave. Uniformed police used only their hands to keep the demonstrators away from passers-by.

They demanded a 100-percent pay increase and changes in the government's economic austerity program and national leadership.

The workers said their average monthly wage is about $62.50. The monthly salary of an average Yugoslav is about $120. The demonstrators called for the resignation of Foreign Trade Minister Nenad Krekic. He was director of the plant two years ago, and workers blame him for their plight now.

Chernobyl fallout still affects Lapland

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Swedes in the northern region of Lapland still suffer from the fallout of the Chernobyl nuclear accident, more than two years after the Soviet disaster, according to a study.

Recent tests on a group of 30 Lapp reindeer herdsman showed cesium levels in two-thirds of them were above the safety limit, which the National Radiation Protection Agency has set at 90,000 bequerel.

The bequerel is a unit that measures the activity of a radioactive substance such as cesium-137, an element of the nuclear fallout. The herdsman eat the meat of reindeer that graze on plants polluted by radioactivity from the April 1986 nuclear accident in the Soviet Ukraine, according to the tests, done at the Institution for Radiophysics in the eastern city of Umea.

Mother dresses child as pig as punishment

HAYWARD, Calif. — An unemployed single mother pleaded not guilty to child abuse Wednesday after tying her son's hands, dressing him up in a pig costume and putting him on public display as punishment for shoplifting.

Mary Francis Bergamasco's father said she feels bad about embarrassing her son but felt nothing short of that punishment would stop his mini-crime spree.

Bergamasco, 29, was charged with misdemeanor child abuse for taping a cardboard pig nose to the crying seven-year-old boy's face, tying his hands behind his back and placing him on the porch of their apartment building on June 28 with a sign reading: "I'm dumb pig (sic). Ugly is what you will become everytime you lie and steal. Look at me squeel (sic). My hands are tied because I cannot be trusted. This is a lesson to be learned. Look. Laugh. Thief. Stealing. Stocks ride wave of selling down

NEW YORK — A late wave of selling drove stock prices lower Wednesday, reversing the advance that carried the market to new 1988 highs the day before.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 27.03 on Tuesday, fell back 28.45 to 2,130.16. Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 189.63 million shares.

Dukakis' VP search draws criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — Michael Dukakis has a passion for order, but choosing a vice presidential candidate is proving anything but an orderly process he can carry out with a minimum of public scrutiny. Not until he clinched the Democratic presidential nomination on June 7 would Dukakis even discuss the process by which he would choose a running mate and then it was only to say it would be "a good, thoughtful, deliberative process."

But with interviews in Boston on Tuesday and Wednesday of three prospective running mates, the Dukakis search began to resemble the parade to North Oaks, Minn., four years ago when Walter Mondale was looking for someone to complete the Democratic ticket.

Looking back on his experience, Mondale conceded that "I don't think it built confidence."

The 1984 Democratic nominee suggested that Dukakis "pursue a different way of looking at vice presidential candidates." And Dukakis started out determined to take Mondale's advice. Campaign aides were forbidden to talk about the process.

"I'm going to cast my net far and wide," said the Massachusetts governor. "Nobody's ruled in, nobody's ruled out," was a favorite response to questions about whether this or that individual was under consideration.

The first major leak was that Dukakis had all but settled on Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey for the No. 2 spot on the ticket.

Dukakis quashed that report with a statement saying that only he and confidant Paul Brontas, the lawyer in charge of the search, could speak with any authority about who might be in or out of contention.

But if Dukakis seriously believed he could control the information about how he was going about choosing a running mate, he underestimated the intensity of the scrutiny it would undergo as well as the impossibility of muzzling Jesse Jackson.

The first indication of who were the serious contenders for the No. 2 spot came when Brontas began asking individuals for detailed personal and financial information.

Inevitably, names began to come out. Among the first were Sens. Bob Graham of Florida and John Glenn of Ohio.

The Dukakis campaign must have known that those names would come out.

Less predictable and more embarrassing was that at the same time there were leaks of the names of prospects who had turned him down — Bradley and Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia and House Majority Leader Tom Foley of Washington.

When Dukakis visited the Capitol last week for a day of meetings with members of Congress, he eluded reporters most of the day but then told them he had met individually with Graham, Glenn, Nunn and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas. Nunn later said he had told the governor he was not interested.

The entire process has been played out to background music provided by Jackson who has insisted he deserves consideration for the vice presidential nomination.

He called the other contenders "unknown quantities" and suggested that his qualifications were far more impressive.

At the same time, Jackson wouldn't say if he'd accept the job if offered. At one point he said he'd made up his mind but had told no one, including Dukakis, of his decision.

Dukakis solicits black vote

BOSTON (AP) — Democrat Michael Dukakis Wednesday met with civil rights leaders as part of his continuing effort to expand his support among blacks.

Among 20 national and local black leaders at the meeting were NAACP executive director Benjamin Hooks, National Urban League President John Jacob, the Rev. Joseph Lowery of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and Coretta Scott King, the widow of Martin Luther King Jr.

Still later, Dukakis addressed the Greek Orthodox Ecumenical Congress, which was holding its convention in Boston. The likely Republican nominee, Vice President George Bush, is to address the same group on Thursday.

In his speech, Dukakis said Attorney General Edwin Meese's announcement that he was resigning was a step in the right direction — but not enough to make up for ethics breaches by Reagan administration officials.

"Yesterday, we lost an attorney general, but we gained a measure of self-respect," Dukakis said. "And next year, if all goes well, we're going to have a president who will insist that those who accept the privilege of public service must understand the meaning of public service."

He added: "If someone in my administration is caught breaking the law, we won't make excuses for him — we'll prosecute him . . . The way to clean up Washington is to clean out those who are indifferent to breaches of the public trust and the public laws."

Michael Dukakis

The meeting with the civil rights leaders was described by participants as upbeat and more substantive than a recent session the same group had with Bush. Members of the black delegation said they were particularly pleased with Dukakis' pledge to make full employment a priority.

"I cannot recall an issue he disagreed with us on," Hooks said.

Whether blacks will support Dukakis without Jackson on the ticket is largely up to Jackson. Hooks said. "I think that they basically will follow, though some will be disappointed, (they) will follow his leadership," he said.

Bush had a surrogate invade Dukakis' home turf Wednesday to criticize a Massachusetts furlough program that allowed the release of a first-degree murderer who then escaped and raped a Maryland woman.

But the surrogate, Pennsylvania Sen. Arlen Specter, was ambushed by Dukakis supporters, including Sen. John Kerry, the state's current and former attorney general, several county prosecutors and several police chiefs.

Bush vows to appoint Hispanic

DALLAS (AP) — Republican George Bush on Wednesday promised to name a Hispanic-American to his Cabinet if elected president, but he refused to make the same commitment to blacks, women or other minorities.

"Other groups have been represented in the Cabinet and Hispanics have not," the vice president said.

Bush, certain to be the Republican presidential nominee, made his pledge before the annual convention of the League of United Latin American Citizens, the largest and oldest Hispanic civic group. The audience, apparently dominated by Democrats, gave the vice president only scattered applause.

Tony Bonilla, an influential Democrat whom Bush singled out by name as a person he had tried to recruit, was unmoved by the vice president's promise.

Bonilla said it was "a little patronizing" for Bush to offer to put a Hispanic in his Cabinet after serving eight years in the Reagan administration without one.

"The vice president needs to say to the president right now, 'We have goofed. We have not reciprocated to the Hispanic community" for their support, said Bonilla, a former chairman of LULAC and the head of the National Hispanic Leadership Conference.

Bush said he had discussed the issue with President Ronald Reagan, but he added, "I'm not president of the United States."

In making his pledge, Bush told the audience that it was "good to acknowledge that some things are, at this point, owed." He said his promise was something "I have never made before, to anyone, to any group."

However, he said, "It is time. It is time, and it's long overdue, and that is a solemn pledge."

At a news conference later, Bush said he would not make similar promises to other groups and considered it a one-time pledge.

State park hit by forest fire, lightning blamed for damage

By The Associated Press

A forest fire consuming 6,000 acres of timber in South Dakota's Custer State Park near Mount Rushmore by Wednesday forced the evacuation of 600 people and spewed a smoky haze visible 160 miles away.

Extremely dry conditions in Custer State Park were contributing to the spread of the South Dakota fire, which authorities believe was started by lightning Monday night.

Firefighters had difficulty building a fire line because the blaze was burning in a very steep, rocky area, fire spokesman Jerry Hagen said. Planes were dropping fire-retardant chemicals once an hour, but Hagen said the fire was nowhere near being contained.

Smoke billowed thousands of feet into the air, with the plume visible in Rapid City, 25 miles away. A haze from the smoke hung over a large part of western South Dakota and was visible from Pierre, 160 miles away.

All entrances to the park were closed Wednesday and 600 people were evacuated. Authorities said no structures had burned, but buildings were not considered safe.

northwest Wednesday and was 7 to 8 miles south of Mount Rushmore National Memorial.

Gov. George Mickelson declared an emergency, releasing state resources to fight the blaze, and planned to view the fire by helicopter, said his press secretary.

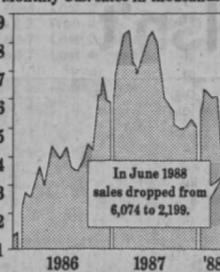

Afternoon winds hampered efforts to douse a 1,500-acre fire in the Bridger-Teton National Forest in Wyoming, but crews in the Shoshone National Forest to the north were controlling the way a 1,650-acre fire was burning.

Three other fires in Wyoming covered about 1,900 acres of backcountry in Yellowstone National Park.

Samurai Sales

Monthly U.S. sales in thousands

Samurai purchases plummet

NEW YORK (AP)—Sales of the Suzuki Samurai plunged 70.6 percent in June from a year earlier, the automaker said Wednesday in its first sales report since Consumers Union charged that the vehicle tips over too easily.

American Suzuki Motor Corp. said it sold 2,199 Samurais in June, down from 7,479 in June 1987.

June's sales were the lowest since December 1985, the month after the car's U.S. introduction.

The dramatic decline demonstrated the influence of Consumers Union as well as the impact of television news, which showed clips of the Samurai tipping over onto its outriggers in test runs.

Suzuki said it was not surprised by the decline and expected sales to increase in coming months. A spokesman said, "Suzuki continued to express absolute confidence in the safety of the Samurai."

Asked for comment, Consumers Union spokesman David Berliner said, "If it is a reflection in any way of the public giving credence to our findings, then I think that is a good sign."

Consumers Union, the non-profit publisher of Consumer Reports magazine, has said Suzuki should recall the vehicle and give refunds to owners.

Armenians accuse Soviets of violence

MOSCOW (AP)—Armenian activists said Wednesday that Soviet Army paratroopers fired on protesters trying to shut down Yerevan's airport and killed up to five people. A Soviet official denied there had been any clashes or deaths.

"The rumors that an Armenian was killed are groundless," Foreign Ministry spokesman Vadim Perfiliev told a news conference.

But Perfiliev and the activists agreed that some 2,000 people had tried to shut down Zvartnots Airport and that troops quashed what the activists said was a political protest in the southern republic related to a simmering territorial dispute.

Since February, Yerevan has been the scene of massive demonstrations by Armenians demanding annexation of Nagorno-Karabakh, a mostly Armenian region of neighboring Azerbaijan. Until now, the protests reportedly have been peaceful.

The Communist Party daily Pravda said that during a Tuesday rally in Yerevan's Theater Square, someone began calling for a blockade of Zvartnots Airport and that a large column of people headed toward it on foot.

Pravda said planes were allowed to land, but that demonstrators "grossly disrupted order" and prevented them from taking off again. Hundreds of passengers were stranded, it said.

The evening television news program "Vremya" said 3,000 people took part in the protest and that 60 flights were grounded along with 14,000 passengers.

Perfiliev told the Tass news agency that more than 400 people swarmed into the airport's terminal, while another 1,500 gathered outside.

He said the demonstrators impeded the sale of tickets and the collection of luggage, ventured onto the landing strip, stopped passengers from entering the terminal and paralyzed the work of the airport dispatcher.

For an hour, internal security troops with bullhorns ordered the protesters to leave, then intervened to evict them. "They were forced out, but there were no clashes or fights," Perfiliev said.

Knight-Ridder Graphics Network

Protesters then began hurling rocks and bottles, and 36 people "had to seek medical assistance," Perfiliev said.

The government daily Izvestia said the demonstrators demanded that the airport staff shut down operations.

"An intervention by the forces of order became necessary," the paper said. "Unfortunately, in the clashes that ensued, some violators of law and order suffered, as well as several policemen." It gave no further details.

U.S. destroyer locks guns on news helicopter in Gulf

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates (AP)—The U.S. destroyer John Hancock locked its gunsights on a news helicopter Wednesday after two warnings to keep clear apparently were lost in the cacophony of Persian Gulf radio traffic.

The John Hancock also had a routine radio exchange with an Iranian jet fighter but did not contact an Iran Air passenger jetliner a few miles away.

Iran Air resumed passenger flights Monday to the busy Dubai airport after a three-day suspension. The United States says the USS Vincennes, which had just finished a skirmish with Iranian attack boats, shot the jet down in the belief it was an Iranian F-14 fighter.

An Iran Air spokesman confirmed the arrival in Dubai of Flight 657 on a scheduled flight late Wednesday morning from Shiraz, and said it returned to the central Iranian city after refueling and taking on passengers. It flew within several miles of the John Hancock, which was off the United Arab Emirates and in radio contact with many commercial aircraft in the Dubai air corridor.

Monitoring of radio traffic showed Dubai air controllers in constant touch with the Iran Air jet as it approached for landing, but the John Hancock made no attempt to establish contact.

John Hancock crewmen were wary of some other aircraft, however. They included an Iranian warplane, but the type was unclear in the noisy radio chatter.

The exchange with the military aircraft was cordial. The John Hancock asked politely for its name and intention, and the Iranian pilot responded in excellent English that he was "making routine daily check flight."

A tense moment came when the destroyer challenged a helicopter approaching from the direction of Iran through the haze of a sandstorm that reduced visibility to a few miles.

Its request for identification went unanswered and the John Hancock assumed a heightened state of readiness, ordering other aircraft in the area away and locking its weapons on the helicopter, which approached to within five miles.

Radio contact finally was established with the chopper, which was chartered by an NBC news team.

An officer of the John Hancock was heard saying: "Be advised, sir, we did pass two warnings to you. The direction of your approach and the flight profile you exhibited did cause us to lock you up with weapons. Request you guard this frequency more closely in future."

The pilot, who has flown the gulf for more than a year, replied: "I am on this frequency from the time I leave Dubai and never take it off. I am afraid your transmissions weren't heard."

She said the administration did not know yet whether the Iranian crisis arises from responsible claims.

Oakley said it would not be possible to have a normal relationship with Iran as long as the Iran-Iraq war continues, American hostages continue to be held by pro-Iranian militants in Lebanon and Iran engages in international terrorism.

As Congress returned from the Fourth of July recess, legislators wanted to know what led Capt. Will Rogers to order the Vincennes' missiles fired, but they refused to second-guess him.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said, "The people we have out there on those ships are in a very difficult, untenable situation when they have to make judgments of that kind in such a limited time frame."

Senate GOP leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said anyone tempted to "Monday morning quarterback" should "remember the intense pressure on a commander in combat."

He said they should also "remember another American warship, the Stark, and recollect the national anguish we endured when it failed to defend itself against an apparent threatened attack."

Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., chairman of a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on the Mideast, said, "It looks to me as if the Navy acted appropriately. I don't know what else they could have done."

Some lawmakers said the United States should consider compensation to families of the victims. House Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said compensation may be appropriate, "not as a matter of requirement, but as a matter of compassion and conviction."

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said there would be nothing to preclude U.S. reparations, which he said would not constitute "any admission of guilt" but would be "an act of generosity."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said he had no idea when the administration might decide on compensation but that it would probably await the outcome of a Navy investigation into the downing of the airliner.

Fitzwater also said the United States hasn't received a response from Iran to Reagan's message, sent through Swiss intermediaries, that the United States had not intended to shoot down the airliner.

'Big Business' is light, funny; 'Coming to America' isn't

By Locke Peterseim
The Daily Iowan

In "Big Business," we have two pairs of Lily Tomlins and Bette Midlers in the cutthroat world of big business (hey, nifty title!). The result of this nature/nurture nightmare is 90 minutes of hilarious low-altitude, high-concept comedy, featuring more mistaken identities than a whole season of "Three's Company."

Tomlin and Midler don't turn out the performances of their lives, but even on an off day, their hamming is infinitely funnier than most of the "comic performances" polluting our screens these days. Tomlin is the two Roses — one a country-girl crusader with wicked snake-bite aggression, the other a big-city save-the-whaler who one of Midler's characters snidely refers to as "wisp, wisp, wisp." Midler's Sadies are her usual wicked heavy-weight self — City Sadie, a flame-topped Joan Collins, and Country Sadie, a down-on-the-farm sophisticate wanna-be.

Director Jim Abrahams is probably never going to be asked to guest-host "Masterpiece Theater," having, along with the zany Zucker Bros., brought us such sophisticated comedies as "Airplane!" and "Ruthless People." On his own, Abrahams doesn't display a whole lot of cinematic finesse or inventiveness, but he does juggle "Big Business'" hyperactive screwball plot with solid comic craftsmanship, turning out a film that works — it makes you laugh.

On the other hand, "Coming to America" springs from just as deep a premise as "Big Business," aims for the same highly discriminating audience, requires just as much intellectual prowess from them and yet "Coming to America" is everything "Big Business" isn't — dull, inept and unfunny.

If anyone can think of a good reason why director John Landis shouldn't be strung up by his ears in the middle of the Mojave desert so that wild coyotes can snap at his genitals, please speak up.

This man may have made a few enjoyable films ("Animal House," "American Werewolf in London") and maybe even a good one ("The Blues Brothers"), but he is, for the most part, a childish, sexist master of low comedy who's spoiled-brat, "anything for my art" filmmaking attitude killed two children and one actor. Landis weaseled his way out from under the hobnailed heel of Justice, and in the years since has filled our theaters with gems like "Spies Like Us" and "Three Amigos" (proving Landis' aptitude for taking big-name comic actors and squandering their talents in his humorless arias of bad taste).

Landis' latest crime against humanity is the annual Eddie Murphy vehicle, "Coming To "America." Murphy goes for a big stretch here by not playing a smart-ass, street-wise cop or criminal. Instead he's aiming for gentler, more naive laughs as a pampered African prince who comes to America (another title that makes sense!) to experience poverty and find a bride "who will arouse (his) intellect as well as (his) loins."

The premise is clever, and it's nice to see Murphy in something besides a gray sweatshirt and without a gun in hand. But, unfortunately, he's yet to master the art of acting without shouting or shooting. His comic timing is always fine, but in playing the little prince as a fish out of water it's Murphy himself who's flopping on the beach.

His character in "America" is a bit of a wet dream — a king-to-be whose every wish is fulfilled; who is bathed, fed and bred in the highest luxuries, but is also intelligent, kind and heroic. You can just see Murphy looking over the script and saying, "Yeah, I think I can handle that."

Much of the problem is Eddie's ego. He now produces and helps write all his films (he will have his directorial debut next year), and it looks as though there is no one in Hollywood who is going to say "nay" to anything he wants to do, no matter how base, foul, rotten, rancid, diseased or otherwise impoverished of value it may be.

"Coming To America" makes a lot of noise about the equality of women and the evils of materialism, and yet nothing on the screen echoes the platitudes of the script. Murphy talks a good game about wanting a woman who is more than a "pretty fool," but two minutes later he and the film pull a belly laugh from a "fat lady" gag. Or in one scene Murphy tells his sidekick (Hall) to forsake material possessions while in the next scene the prince sends huge diamond earrings to woo the object of his affections.

The film's final message seems to be that it's great fun to be humble and poor for a little while, as long as you can go back to the gilded carriages and adoring subjects in the end. What makes "America" so dangerous is that it does a good job of faking this kind of false nobility — the film seems to be a nice, sweet romance, but the genteel illusion hides a slimy underside of smirking sexism.

And last, but not least, "Coming To America" simply isn't funny. It's tedious, boring and, if not blatantly offensive, at least annoyingly irresponsible.

Eddie Murphy needs to stop coasting on 3-year-old successes and start working again. And John Landis has a date with a coyote.

Hemingway's favorite hangouts in Havana, La Florida and Bodeguita del Medio, are popular tourist attractions.

"Everyone adored him," Fuentes said. Asked about Hemingway's reputation for womanizing, he laughed and said: "A man who doesn't love women is not a man."

Fuentes remembers the day, but not the date, the writer began work on "The Old Man and the Sea," which was published in 1952 and made into a movie in 1957.

"We were sailing and he was reading," Fuentes said. "He would read and then look at me. Then he said, 'Did you see a boat?'"

"It was a small skiff and he told me to see if it needed help. There was an old man pulling in a marlin, and a young boy. The man yelled for us to get away but the boy was nice. Hemingway told me to give them supplies — milk, pineapples, oranges and crackers."

Garner's beef days are over

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Actor James Garner won't be pushing beef anymore. An actress, a model and two basketball stars will replace him as celebrity representatives for the Beef Industry Council.

Garner's 18-month contract ended June 30, said David Ivan, spokesman for the National Cattlemen's Association.

"We were happy working with Jim Garner, and he did a very fine job for us," Ivan said. "We understand he has signed an exclusive contract to do Mazda (automobile) ads."

The new representatives are actress Lauren Bacall, model Kim Alexis, the Boston Celtics' Larry Bird and the Los Angeles Lakers' Michael Cooper.

Bird and Cooper each signed $100,000 contracts to be included in the council's new television and print campaign beginning in September, Ivan said. Fees for Bacall and Alexis were not disclosed.

Papa's skipper reminisces

COJIMAR, Cuba (AP) — The old man looked out at the sea and began the story of how he came to be skipper of Ernest Hemingway's yacht for more than 20 years.

"There was a storm and I heard someone yelling for help," Gregorio Fuentes said. "It was 1928 on Dry Tortugas. It was Hemingway, and he and his companions were out of food."

Gregorio Fuentes, who is 90 now, pointed a wrinkled finger at a picture of the famous writer on the wall, and glanced at it from time to time as he told his tale.

The old sailor sat on a shabby, flowered overstuffed chair in the living room of his cottage in this pastel-washed fishing village. His wife of 67 years, Dolores, was in the kitchen nearby.

He said he gave the novelist two bottles of rum and arranged for the yacht to be towed back to Key West, then "we waved goodbye and he said he'd see each other in Cuba." Fuentes went to work on merchant ships in Europe after that, and when he returned home a decade later was told an American had been looking for him.

It was Hemingway, with the offer to be captain of the Pilar. Fuentes held the job until the author's suicide in 1961.

When that happened, Fuentes was on a warship for the Cuban government. Fidel Castro had gained control of the island 90 miles from Florida in 1959, and Cubans were on alert for an American invasion.

"I read in the newspaper that he died," Fuentes said, reaching for a large Cuban cigar. "He was a friend. I understood. He had a disease. ... He couldn't live with that. It's better what he did."

His former association with the famous writer has made Fuentes a minor celebrity in Cuba, where Hemingway's home in San Francisco de Paulo is a museum.

The club's next meet is the Iowa City Invitational Saturday and Sunday at the new pool at Mercer Park.

Former Iowan may be new Minnesota AD

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — University of Minnesota interim President Richard Sauer said Wednesday he will recommend Holger Christiansen, associate athletic director since 1985, to become interim athletic director.

Christiansen, a former Iowan, would replace Paul Giel, who was fired Tuesday by Sauer in the wake of an investigation into allegations that athletes were paid money by a university official, as well as other problems.

Sauer will recommend Christiansen to the Board of Regents, which is to vote on the appointment Friday.

Christiansen would be paid $78,000 in the interim post, the university said.

"Holger has been in the department. He knows and understands it," Sauer said. "He's a solid administrator who allows us to go ahead with some continuity."

Fire damages Iowa Cubs' stadium

DES MOINES (AP) — Fire caused extensive structural damage to the bleachers Wednesday at Sec Taylor Stadium, where the American Association Iowa Cubs play baseball, authorities said.

No one was injured in the fire that started about 3:45 p.m. Firefighters reported smoke pouring from the concession area when they arrived a few minutes later.

Iowa Cubs General Manager Sam Bernabe blamed an electrical short in a popcorn warmer for sparking the blaze.

The Cubs game against Indianapolis wasn't changed from its 7:30 p.m. start. But stadium officials said two bleacher sections would be closed and ticket holders would be seated elsewhere.

No players chosen in supplemental draft

NEW YORK (AP) — All 28 National Football League teams declined Wednesday to select any of the 17 players available in a supplemental draft.

Former Tennessee State punter David Hood and running back Brian Davis, who flunked out of Pittsburgh, were the best-known of those in the draft.

The process was for players not eligible for the regular college draft last April and was held as a weighted lottery, giving the teams with the poorest records the most chances. But no team wanted any.

Most of the players were relatively unknown, in contrast to last year when Seattle selected All-American linebacker Brian Bosworth. He decided to turn pro after completing his degree requirements rather than use his final year of eligibility at Oklahoma.

Norman will pull out of British Open

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Australian star Greg Norman reinjured his left wrist during a practice round this week and has decided to pull out of the British Open later this month, The Orlando Sentinel reported Wednesday.

Norman aggravated the wrist sprain Monday at the Big Cypress Resort where he was playing his first full practice round since the injury forced him to withdraw from the U.S. Open June 17, the newspaper reported.

On the advice of his surgeon, Norton Baker, Norman decided to withdraw from the British Open and stay out of action for at least a month.

Norman injured the wrist at the U.S. Open in Brookline, Mass.

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Pierre Page, who has spent the last eight years with the Calgary Flames' organization, Wednesday was named head coach of the Minnesota North Stars.

Page, 40, succeeds Herb Brooks, who, along with the rest of the North Stars' coaches and scouts, was fired last month. The announcement of the NHL team's firings came June 14, the same day new General Manager Jack Ferreira was hired.

Ferreira introduced Page at a Wednesday news conference. Page (pronounced Pah-zhay) was Ferreira's top choice since June 22, when the general manager decided not to rehire Brooks.

Free agent Davis signs with Nuggets

DENVER (AP) — Walter Davis, a six-time NBA all-star and the all-time leading scorer in Phoenix Suns' history, became the second unrestricted free agent to change teams when he signed a contract Wednesday with the Denver Nuggets.

Pete Babcock, Nuggets president and general manager, made the announcement during a news conference but would not disclose terms of the contract, in keeping with the club's policy. However, Davis said the pact was for two years.

"The contract I signed is for two years. That's what I want to play," said Davis, who had announced previously that he would retire after next season. "At that time, I had back problems. My back feels great now."

"I think I would be selling myself short if I retired now. I'll re-evaluate it again after two years," he said.

Iowa State may expand Hilton Coliseum

AMES (AP) — Iowa State officials are looking at adding seats for basketball games at Hilton Coliseum.

Warren Madden, Iowa State's vice president for finance, said "it's more than 50-50" that several hundred seats will be added, possibly in time for the 1989-90 basketball season.

Special box seats could be part of the expansion package. The coliseum has a listed seating capacity of 14,020 for basketball but the Cyclones packed an average of 14,238 fans into Hilton for the last season.

chances for the making the Olympic Trials.

Nasti said he will have to have a good outing in each event to qualify.

He injured his right ankle and fell in a motorcycle accident before the regional qualifying meet, but he said that's not likely to be a factor.

"I just want to go out and have a good meet," said Nasti, who was a Big Ten champion and an all-American in the floor exercise this last season.

Thome echoed both Bachman and Nasti when talking about goals, but he was a little more confident about making the top 18.

"I feel like I'm in the running for the team," he said.

Thome also is looking to excel in his best event — the high bar.

The 1988 Big Ten champion scored a 9.9, a school record, at the recent conference meet.

Thome and Nasti also are co-record holders at Iowa with an all-around optionals score of 57.30.

Dawson isn't shocked by information trading

NEW YORK (AP) — Andre Dawson says he isn't surprised that owners exchanged information about him.

Commissioner Peter Ueberroth says he encouraged the practice and doesn't see anything wrong.

And Tim Raines says that if given another chance at free agency, he may leave Montreal. Dawson and Raines are among the players referred to as the "January 8 Eight" in the Major League Baseball Players Association's post-hearing brief involving their charge that the club owners conspired not to sign free agents.

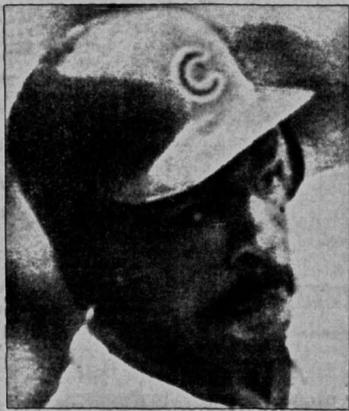

Dawson's name appeared on notes taken by Philadelphia Phillies owner Bill Giles on Jan. 28, 1987. Giles wrote down numbers next to Dawson's name which matched the contract offered to Dawson by the Chicago Cubs five weeks later. The notation was "5-700 Dawson." Dawson was paid $500,000 by the Cubs for 1987 with bonuses that raised him to $700,000.

"I don't think that's a coincidence," Dawson said. "That's probably one of the reasons they (the Phillies) never made an offer. They were probably too embarrassed to make an offer like that."

He could benefit from any monetary awards if the arbitrator George Nicolau finds the owners guilty of collusion. But Dawson waived his right to become a free agent again when he signed a two-year contract with the Chicago Cubs this spring for a guaranteed $4.15 million.

"I'm where I want to be. That's behind me now," Dawson said. "I took a gamble. I realized where the game was headed and what the owners were trying to do. I put myself out on a limb and I had a good season. This year, I'm taken care of."

Raines was another of the eight players who became the first to go past the Jan. 8 deadline for re-signing with their former clubs. He says that he would consider leaving the Expos if Nicolau rules against the owners and then makes Raines a free agent. Arbitrator Thomas Roberts made seven players free agents last January when he ruled in a 1985 case.

Andre Dawson

"I can't say I'm pleased. I wish it would never have happened," said Raines, who signed a three-year contract for $5 million on May 1, 1987, the day he was eligible to re-sign with Montreal. "A lot of guys really only get one opportunity at free agency. I didn't want to go free agent but I was forced. But that's behind me now. I've got another opportunity. I'll look at my options again."

Lance Parrish, who left the Tigers and signed with the Phillies at a cut in salary, could become a free agent again if Nicolau rules against the owners.

"We're just waiting for whatever decision he comes up with and (will) abide by it, Parrish said. "But I don't know what that will be. Like everybody else, I'm waiting to see what the decision is."

Ueberroth, in an interview published in Wednesday's editions of The Washington Post, said again that he did not think owners conspired against signing free agents.

"If there's any collusion, boy, you've got me," Ueberroth said. "I've never been able to get those 26 (owners) to agree on anything."

All-Star vote is sorry joke

Here we go again. It's time for another round of "complain because your favorite player didn't make the All-Star team" time.

Every year it's the same line. Some player is apparently overlooked in the fan balloting process. You know, someone like the current league leader in RBIs or batting average. There are always a dozen every year.

It's very tiring listening to the groaning and moaning of a Cleveland Indians fan because Joe Carter isn't in the starting lineup and neither is Cincinnati rookie third baseman Chris Sabo.

"Just look at these stats. Stats don't lie," they say.

But when did anyone say this absolutely ludicrous system of balloting was going to be fair.

Who is to say that St. Louis' Ozzie Smith is the best representative to start at shortstop for the National League. Shouldn't it be the Cubs' Shawon Dunston? Cubs' announcer Harry Caray has been trying to make that case all season.

The whole process is simply a popularity contest like the one everyone had in high school to determine who was going to be prom king and queen. That part, I'm afraid, is here to stay.

And USA Today has made balloting even more exciting (cough, cough) by adding a contest, as if the world needed another Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes to enter.

Enter today and you could win. And, incidentally, you can vote for favorite player to determine the starting lineups for the All-Star game in Cincinnati.

And wasn't it ironic that former Reds star Johnny Bench did all of those commercials for the promotion of this voting extravaganza.

Let's change all of this nonsense that lame duck-Commissioner Peter Ueberroth has put into place. Everything was OK before when people voted because they wanted to see a former great like Reggie Jackson in the starting lineup, even though he was having a below average season by anyone's standards.

Voting was simpler because it was based mainly at the 26 major league parks, where in the middle of the fourth inning an usher handed everyone a dozen cards and the public address announcer urged them to vote for the hometown players.

That still happens, but it doesn't seem the same when someone cuts out something from the newspaper and their main goal is winning a prize.

That's like holding a vote for the President of the United States using Entertainment Tonight's exclusive 900 number.

But don't stop there with change. Let's be able to vote for our favorite general manager. The winner in each league could try to make trades before and during the game. Wouldn't you like to see Dwight Gooden for Don Mattingly or Keith Hernandez for Frank Viola? GMs would have a field day.

Let the fans at least choose the starting pitcher. Don't let the managers have all the fun. They get to choose the backups to the starting lineup and all of the pitchers.

Let the fans choose the television announcers for the game. Why can't the networks mix their announcers during the All-Star game? Just think... NBC's Bob Costas and ABC's Tim McCarver or ABC's Al Michaels and NBC's Tony Kubek.

But most of all, let the fans pick who is going to sing the national anthem. Why can't it ever be U2, Frank Sinatra or Frank Zappa?

Armstrong returns focus to Hawkeyes

Iowa's B.J. Armstrong talks with the media Wednesday after learning he would not advance to the final Olympic camp at Georgetown.

By Brent D. Woods
The Daily Iowan

Iowa's B.J. Armstrong doesn't appear bitter. He doesn't even seem a little angry.

Armstrong, who was weeded out as a potential Olympian Tuesday by Olympic Coach John Thompson and his staff, said in a press conference Wednesday that he "feels very positive" about his experience in the Olympic Trials and as a member of the U.S. Select team.

"One thing that I can say honestly is that I worked as hard as I possibly could, and I gave every effort I had," Armstrong said. "I got so close, but yet I was so far away. But it really can do nothing but help me. It's unfortunate that I came up a little short."

Armstrong said he played 15 to 20 minutes per game on the Select team's European Tour and doesn't know exactly what kept him from reaching the final camp at Georgetown.

Virginia Tech's Vernell Coles was the lone point guard to advance to the camp from the Select team.

"I really don't know," he said. "I could probably look at the other players and see what their strong points are, but I thought I played fairly well."

"Coach Thompson gave me as fair a shot as anyone could ask."

The two-day workouts and extra effort Thompson demanded won't go to waste, Armstrong said, even though he won't be shooting it up in Seoul.

He wants to focus the experience toward the positives — like his upcoming senior season as a Hawkeye.

"I see it's going to pay off," he said. "I know it's going to help me. I'm just going to continue the little things I picked up from that, just keep working out, and hopefully carry this attitude on and maybe rub off on some of my teammates.

"I'm excited to be back and my teammates and get things going so we can shoot for next year. The guys all told me to keep my head up."

Armstrong said he will leave for a Nike basketball camp in New York today but will return to Iowa City in a week to finish out the Prime Time Basketball League season.

"I've missed quite a few games so far, but I think it's a great thing," Armstrong said of the summer league. "It keeps you in pretty good game-shape, plus it's pretty good competition."

Though he'd rather be playing at Georgetown instead of Iowa City High School, Armstrong remains philosophical.

"I don't have any regrets," he said. "The guys that are there deserve it. I left my game out on the court, and I wouldn't change anything. Life isn't always what you want it to be."

Dan Bachman, shown practicing on the parallel bars, will join fellow Hawkeye Gymnastics Club members Ron Nasti and Joe Thome at the McDonald's U.S. Gymnastics Championships in Houston. The trio will be attempting to make the men's U.S. Olympic gymnastics team.

Gymnasts set for national meet

By Eric J. Hess
The Daily Iowan

Forty-six male gymnasts, including three from Iowa, will be competing at The Summit in Houston starting today to qualify for the 18 spots available in the 1988 U.S. Olympic Trials.

Dan Bachman, Ron Nasti and Joe Thome will compete at the McDonald's U.S. Gymnastics Championships, which runs through Sunday. All three qualified for the meet through the Central Regional Qualifying Meet held at the North Gym of the Field House June 4-5.

The meet also includes 26 gymnasts who will be competing in compulsory for the 1992 Olympics. Iowa's Jeff Dow and Keith Cousino are included in this group. The top 10 from the 26 will be named to the national team.

The event also plays host to the women's competition. The top 20 women finishers, along with the top 18 men, will move on to the Trials in Salt Lake City in August.

For Olympic team qualifying, this week's meet will count for 40 percent, while the results from the Trials will be worth 60 percent.

Bachman, who still holds records at Iowa in the all-around, qualified with a 12-event score of 114.35, the second-best score recorded at three regional meets and the best score at his regional.

"I'm ready physically," Bachman said. "I'm 100 percent. I don't think I can get into better shape."

Many of the gymnasts who will be participating qualified before the regional qualifying at various meets, including the 1988 NCAA Championships, and four others were petitioned into the meet.

Bachman just hopes this week's event will not be his last gymnastics meet.

His life has been dominated by gymnastics with twice-daily practices and fine-tuning to gain the consistency necessary to become an Olympic hopeful.

"At this next meet," he said, "I can't have any mental breakdowns."

His goal is to complete the six events — high bar, parallel bars, vault, still rings, pommel horse and floor exercise — in both the compulsory and the optionals with complete confidence.

There will be a mental danger, Bachman said, in thinking about all 12 events at the same time. One event at a time is sufficient.

"You always have to concentrate on one thing. It's hit, hit, hit," he said, pounding his hands together.

Both Nasti and Dow are looking at their

Smithwins All-Star game balloting

NEW YORK (AP) — Ozzie Smith of the St. Louis Cardinals led all vote-getters for the second straight year, collecting 2,106,757 votes to become the National League's starting shortstop for the All-Star Game, the Commissioner's office announced Wednesday.

Smith will start at shortstop for the sixth straight year. He is the first player to repeat as the top vote-getter since Rod Carew did it three consecutive years, 1977-79.

Oakland outfielder Jose Canseco easily led the American League with 1,765,499 votes.

Joining Smith in the National League starting infield will be first baseman Will Clark of San Francisco (1,128,048), second baseman Ryne Sandberg of the Chicago Cubs (1,196,386) and Pittsburgh third baseman Bobby Bonilla (966,390).

The NL outfield has New York's Darryl Strawberry (1,683,588), Chicago's Andre Dawson (1,124,694) and St. Louis' Vince Coleman (871,263).

The NL catcher is Gary Carter of the New York Mets, who got 825,407 votes and was selected to start for the eighth straight season, tying Philadelphia third baseman Mike Schmidt's record, which ended with Bonilla's selection this season.

Joining Canseco in the American League outfield are New York Yankees Dave Winfield (1,737,729) and Rickey Henderson (910,573). The AL catcher will be Oakland's Terry Steinbach (690,438).

Wade Boggs was the leading vote-getter among AL infielders as the Boston third baseman received 1,252,976 votes.

He will be joined by Oakland first baseman Mark McGwire (1,255,858), second baseman Paul Molitor of Milwaukee (847,278), even though the designated hitter has not played an inning at that position this season, and injured Detroit shortstop Alan Trammell (917,213). Trammell was placed on the disabled list Tuesday with a broken left elbow.

Winfield was named to his eighth All-Star starting berth, including six straight and seven overall as a Yankee. The former San Diego Padre is hitting .347 with 15 home runs and 62 runs batted in.

Henderson has been named a starter four straight years and also was elected a starter while with Oakland in 1982.

Both leagues will announce their pitchers and reserves on Thursday. Several players will collect contract bonuses for being elected All-Star starters. In the American League, McGwire, the 1987 Rookie of the Year, gets $20,000, Molitor collects $25,000, Boggs $50,000, Canseco $20,000 and Winfield $50,000.

In the National League, Clark gets $25,000, Sandberg $10,000, Bonilla $15,000, Dawson $50,000, Strawberry $25,000 and Coleman $15,000.

The All-Star Game will be played Tuesday night, July 12 at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium. Whitey Herzog of St. Louis is managing the National League team and Minnesota's Tom Kelly handles the American League.

Ed Horton provided the offensive punch for First National Bank with 41 points. Horton, who also grabbed 14 rebounds, said he is using the Prime Time games to hone his jump shot and his ball handling skills.

"I want people to know that I'm a complete player," a sweat-drenched Horton said after the game. "I'm just trying to put together all the things I've learned from (former Iowa) Coach (George) Raveling and (Iowa) Coach (Tom) Davis."

Unable to shake First National Bank, Southgate found themselves with a 74-71 halftime lead on a Bill Jones fall-away jumper.

In the second half, First National Bank came within one point of Southgate, with Horton and Northern Iowa's Steve Phylfe putting the rims to the test on consecutive slam dunks.

But when Horton took a breather with 13 minutes left, Southgate's size and speed took over. A Stokes blocked shot resulting in a lay-up and a Stokes steal to Jones for a breakaway dunk were the bad breakers.

The 90-degree-plus contest was once again a factor. During the final 10 minutes of the second period, the play on the steamy City High court resembled a rubber ball, playground, dunk contest.

"The defense is less intense because of the heat," Jones said.

In the other early game, Fitzpatrick's led The Athlete's Foot 49-37 at half. Northern Iowa's Nick Nurse pumped in 27 for Fitzpatrick's, and Hawkeye Les Jepsen scored 26 and pulled down 17 rebounds for The Athlete's Foot.

In the late games Wednesday paired Hills Bank edged Eby Athletic Company 122-120 at Iowa State Bank downed Hargrave-McElenny 130-118.
