

UI students from Asia adjust well

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

Adjusting to life in America can be a difficult process, but it is one which most Malaysian students are prepared for by extensive exposure to American culture in their native country.

About 1.5 percent of students attending the UI are Asian, according to a 1986 report from the U.S. Department of Education. Most of these students are from the People's Republic of China, Republic of China, Malaysia and India.

UI Malaysian Student Association President Chee Kong Loo said 20,000 to 30,000 Malaysians attend U.S. universities and about 200 Malaysians are active in the UI student group.

Loo said foreign students are often stereotyped as being quiet and overly studious. He blames this on the pressure students feel to succeed in school from both high family expectations and strict educational backgrounds.

But Loo, a UI senior majoring in marketing, said experiencing American culture is also important to foreign students. A member of Alpha Kappa Psi business fraternity and Phi Beta Delta international honor society, Loo said social organizations help UI foreign students.

"Those organizations have really enriched our life in Iowa City," Loo said.

Loo, Choy Hoong Lee, Choonghanchu and Yinpeng Wong are all Malaysian Chinese students who are active in the UI Malaysian Student Group.

UI senior Lee said many Malaysians are Americanized at an early age through compulsory English classes and popular American television programs including "Dallas," "MacGyver" and "Dynasty."

Yinpeng, a business student, said she is impressed by the way American women participate in class.

"I feel more at home now, seeing that American girls really speak out and are not as timid as we sometimes are," she said.

All four dress like most American students, wearing casual shorts, shirts and tennis shoes, but some of their fellow Malaysian students wear Islamic traditional veils and robes.

UI sophomore Chooghanchu said "tudung," or covered dress, reflects strong religious beliefs in a country where Islam, Christianity and Hindu are the main traditions.

"I guess it is just like any other country where you have different levels of religions," Chooghanchu said.

UI Foreign Student Adviser Theresa Gangl-Ghassemilouei said it is important to realize there are many different nations which are categorized as Asian, but that all have varied cultures and people.

She said native students are sometimes intimidated by foreign students' apparel which may make them appear quiet or reserved, when in reality they are as "fun-loving and interesting" as anyone else.

"I think in terms of the images and stereotypes, it sometimes kind of blocks some from having any interaction with them," she said.

She added many foreign students attend university level classes in their own countries before transferring to American universities.

Bentsen draws cool response from NAACP

WASHINGTON (AP)—The designated Democratic ticket of Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen got a cool reception today from the NAACP, many of whose members had hoped the vice-presidential nomination would go to Jesse Jackson.

There was only scattered applause from delegates to the annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People when the Massachusetts governor and the Texas senator entered the crowded ballroom.

It was in marked contrast to the rousing scene Tuesday night when Jackson addressed the same group.

In fact, the first burst of enthusiasm from the audience came as NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks, who introduced Dukakis, turned to the governor and said, "You know, knowing Jesse has been good for you."

The audience applauded, and Dukakis smiled.

In his speech, Dukakis promised that as president his "door is going to be open."

Then he went on, "I've learned a lot from Jesse and I've learned a lot from you."

Bentsen followed Dukakis to the podium and said, "There can be no question where a Dukakis-Bentsen administration would stand on the important civil rights issues of the day."

"Mike Dukakis and I are committed to making a difference for America," Bentsen said.

Some delegates booed when Dukakis turned the microphone over to Bentsen, and Hooks jumped in to ask the delegates for a warmer welcome. Once again, the loudest applause came when Hooks referred to Jackson. Hooks looked at Bentsen and said he had "a tough act to follow... Many of our delegates, as you know, wanted to see Jesse in this position."

At that point delegates stood and cheered and applauded.

"I sympathize with you," said Hooks.

Before Dukakis entered the room,

Michael Dukakis

Lloyd Bentsen

Hooks told delegates to tear up hand-lettered signs many were carrying that read, "Jesse is qualified" and "What's wrong with Jesse?"

"Those of you who brought those signs, tear them up and act your age," said Hooks.

The signs reflected disappointment that Dukakis had passed over

Angry Jackson hints at convention battle

Fight for vice presidency may not be over

CHICAGO (AP)—An indignant Jesse Jackson hinted broadly Wednesday at a possible convention fight in Atlanta next week, saying the floor was "wide open" when the No. 2 spot on the Democratic ticket is decided.

Jackson, rebuffed in his bid for the spot that likely Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis gave to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, returned to Chicago to plan his convention strategy and to prepare for the bus caravan that will take him and his supporters to Atlanta.

Aides said he was "flabbergasted" at the way the announcement of Bentsen was handled. Jackson heard from reporters Tuesday that he had not been chosen, although Dukakis said at a news conference Wednesday that he had tried unsuccessfully to reach Jackson before the news got out.

Two Democratic sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Jackson was told privately Monday afternoon that he would not be picked. One source said Dukakis emissary Paul Brontas told Jackson "he would bring the ticket down" if nominated for vice president.

"After yesterday, many people have a sense of indignation and a sense of insult," Jackson said at a news conference.

As to whether that feeling would result in a bitter fight in Atlanta next Thursday when the vice presidential nomination is taken up, Jackson took a wait-and-see approach and stopped short of saying he would engineer a dispute.

He confirmed that his supporters planned to put his name in nomination for the presidential spot on the ticket, but would not say whether they would do so for the vice presidential spot as well.

"At this point I'm not in the partnership," he said, adding: "I'm not suggesting that I will compete for a place on the ticket but the floor is wide open on Thursday night when the recommendation is made."

Jackson said that "so long as we stay within the rules and follow the process" the possibility of such a fight was there.

He said he spoke briefly with Bentsen earlier Wednesday, describing the conversation as a "courtesy call that I appreciated very much."

But he said that the choice of Bentsen was a blow to the progressive Democrats who had helped bring the party "back to life."

"The conservative wing is now in the equation," Jackson said at a news conference.

He said his supporters have "earned a place in the Democratic equation" but "so far no talks have taken place along that line."

Jackson said he would leave today on the "Rainbow Express" bus caravan that will stop in Indianapolis; Louisville, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn.; and Chattanooga, Tenn. on the way to Atlanta.

At each stop, he will be registering people to vote and raising money for a political action committee, "Keep Hope Alive."

Jesse Jackson makes a point as he addressed the NAACP Convention Tuesday evening.

Report compares teaching time at universities

By Hilery Ljvengood
The Daily Iowan

A report recently released by the state Board of Regents shows that UI educators spend only 60.7 percent of their total working hours teaching and preparing for classes.

This percentage is significantly lower than the figure for educators at Iowa State University, 76.1 percent, and the University of Northern Iowa, 73.9 percent.

But UI faculty say they aren't working less than their counterparts at other state universities. Rather, the UI's emphasis on research oriented studies accounts for this trend.

"We are the primary general research university in the state," said Bruce Gronbeck, former president of the UI Faculty Senate.

"UNI has primarily a teaching mission, and ISU's primary research area is their technical research, but the UI is a general research institution," he said. "You'd expect us to spend more time on research and scholarship than our counterparts at the other two institutions."

"There may be some concern about the appropriateness of faculty efforts... whether it's appropriate for a faculty to spend 40 percent of its time doing things other than teaching. I think it is," Gronbeck said.

However, the self-reported figures given by UI educators may not be totally correct, according to UI

Dean of Academic Affairs Phillip Hubbard.

"I'm not sure if it (the percentage) reflects the full involvement of the faculty at the doctoral level," he said. "I'm not sure if they counted that as teaching, and many do more of this than teaching in the classroom."

The efforts of professors, associate professors, assistant professors and instructors at the three state universities are evaluated in the regents faculty activity report.

The three universities have submitted biennial reports to the regents since 1976.

"In the past it has simply been necessary for the university to do this periodically to calculate teaching needs, to set our overhead rate when we apply for grants and to see how diversified faculty activities are," Gronbeck said.

During the 1986-87 academic year, UI educators worked an average of 57.4 hours per week, the highest among the three universities, according to the report.

This figure is 55.4 hours for educators at ISU and 56.4 hours for UNI educators.

According to Elizabeth Stroud, UI coordinator for institutional data, the hours per week have stayed relatively the same since the survey was begun. The average salary for educators during this time period was $38,863, she said.

This report attempts to analyze time spent by educators on various activities during a typical week during the academic year. But, the figures are only estimates.

"Everybody has to estimate how much time they spend in a typical week. I take the results to be quite accurate, or as accurate as you can get under these circumstances," Gronbeck said.

"The faculty makes a sincere effort to make a correct representation of their time, but without a log they can't be sure," Hubbard said. "Accuracy is reasonably good, especially when averaged out among the university."

The board will review this report Friday in Okoboji at its monthly meeting.

Funds awarded to 4 UI medical researchers

Four UI researchers in the College of Medicine recently received grants and awards from public and private sources.

Melvin Marcus, professor of internal medicine, will investigate the sensitivity of three commonly used diagnostic techniques for detecting coronary obstruction with a $135,000 grant from the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute.

Biochemistry Professor John E. Donelson will work on developing a vaccine against onchocerciasis, using a $151,000 grant from the Edna McConnell Clark Foundation. Onchocerciasis, a leading cause of blindness in Africa, is a tropical disease of the skin and eyes caused by a parasitic worm.

Masataka Kawai, UI associate professor of anatomy, will receive $99,000 over three years from the American Heart Association to study the basic function of muscle contraction.

The American Heart Association has also given a three-year Clinician-Scientist Award to Robert F. Rea, associate in the Department of Internal Medicine. The award will allow Rea to learn new techniques for investigating how the nervous system controls circulation in humans and how nervous system mechanisms affect high blood pressure in certain laboratory animals. Rea will conduct the research with Allyn Mark, UI professor and director of the cardiovascular division in internal medicine.

Iowa City School Board plans 1988-89 priorities

By Heather Maher
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City School District priorities for the 1988-89 school year were formally established at a regular meeting of the school board Tuesday night.

The submission of administrative plans for the forthcoming year is required of the district superintendent — David Cronin — as part of the annual State of the District report under board policy.

The proposed district policies this year include plans to review elementary course curricula, re-examine high-school graduation requirements, investigate the establishment of a management team to work with the school board and evaluate the district's foreign language program.

Board member Betsy Hawtrey presented the policies to the board, saying, "These priorities are submitted to us to accept, refuse or amend as we wish."

A recent development in the district that has led to a new policy is the addition of the Iowa City School District into the Urban Network, an organization of the eight largest school districts in Iowa. Iowa City's membership in this group makes it an automatic participant in the Students at Risk project, which has been incorporated into the 1988-89 policies.

Cronin said students at risk are defined as students who are having difficulty in school for any number of reasons.

"These are students who, for a variety of reasons, are encountering difficulty in school that could result in them not achieving potential, perhaps even causing them to drop out of school," he said.

"Some young people are involved in things — in terms of social activities or emotional problems — that place themselves at jeopardy as to their future," he added.

The Students at Risk program plans a statewide effort to draft legislation that would try to help troubled students. Included in the legislation are proposals for grants to fund the project as well as plans to identify individual students at risk so extra funds can be allocated for schools with a high number of these students.

A local effort started last year to help troubled students was begun by administrators, parents and teachers and, according to Cronin, will be complemented by the state effort.

"This effort will fit nicely with Urban Network's — our goal this year is to come up with a variety of solutions and strategies to help students who find themselves in these situations," he said.

Other 1988-89 policies include lobbying for legislative action for an improved schools budget. According to Cronin, the budget forecast for the coming year is not encouraging and steps must be taken to ensure the district can continue to offer comprehensive and quality education.

"For this year we are projecting a budget shortfall of $550,000 to $600,000, and it's pretty early at this point, but we expect to fall short by the same amount this year," said Cronin.

Among the factors that will have an impact on the district's budget are decisions by the board and voters concerning an enrichment tax, the financial conditions of the state and its ability to honor its educational budget commitments, and any changes made in Iowa's School Finance Law, Cronin said.

Drought insurer faces legal action in wake of unpaid farmers' claims

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The chorus of complaints against a New Jersey insurer offering drought insurance grew Wednesday as a group of Indiana farmers filed a lawsuit and regulators in Iowa filed charges against the company for allegedly renegeing on the offer.

Critics have accused Federal Insurance Co., a subsidiary of Warren-based Chubb Group Insurance Cos., of backing off on its promise to pay awards for lack of rain.

Chubb says it was swamped with applications in the final days of the enrollment period, which lasted from May 1 to June 17, and that applications exceeded the amount of coverage it wanted to provide. The policy promises a payoff if rainfall falls below a set level.

Because of the flood of requests from about 10 Farm Belt states, Chubb has promised to return premiums and said it is working with state insurance departments on the matter.

But 29 farmers in east-central Indiana say the company is unfair and filed a lawsuit Wednesday in Jay Circuit Court alleging Chubb acted in bad faith by renegeing on $2.5 million worth of the insurance. The suit seeks unspecified damages from Federal and Pio-Gard Agency of Ohio Inc., based in Des Moines. The suit said Pio-Gard sold the policies on or about June 15.

Earlier Wednesday, Chubb spokeswoman Mary Lu Korkuch said the company had a "108-year history of being equitable and acting with integrity," and said the company was hoping to settle the situation as soon as possible.

She did not return telephone calls later in the day seeking comment on the Indiana lawsuit and Iowa action.

On Wednesday, Iowa's state insurance commissioner held a news conference to announce charges of misrepresentation against Federal, which sold 1,500 policies to Iowa farmers.

Commissioner William Hager said only four of those policies had been put in force despite an average $1,000 premium paid by each farmer.

Iowa would seek to force the company to live up to the policies' terms or return double the premiums paid, said Hager.

The commissioner specifically charged Federal with failing to file endorsements with state regulators until after ads were run, failing to certify Iowa sales agents and failing to issue more than four policies despite accepting 1,500 applications.

An administrative hearing on charges in Indiana is set for July 26.

Chubb returned premiums to an Elkton, Ky., agent who took out policies for 42 neighboring farmers in Tennessee and Kentucky, but the farmers have voted to reject the refund, the agent said.

Agent Bill Knuckles said the farmers asked him at a meeting Tuesday to send the checks back to Chubb with a demand that the company provide coverage.

Charges might be filed by Michigan insurance officials against Chubb, unlicensed agents in Michigan who sold the policy, and the Chubb agent that developed it, based in Jericho, N.Y., said an official of the state insurance bureau.

The official, Eric Nordman, director of property and liability, said Chubb officials have promised to contact Michigan farmers and offer them twice their premiums as compensation.

Rains deliver respite, but heat will return

DES MOINES (AP) — Iowa's weather is returning to the hot, dry drought conditions which settled over the state for much of June, the National Weather Service said Wednesday.

"We're forecasting it that way," forecaster Chuck Myers in Des Moines said. "It looks like from today on that the pattern's going to go back where it was a couple of weeks ago, before we had this brief respite with the rains."

Other than a slight chance for rain Wednesday night, the next several days will be dry, Myers said.

"It's a pretty positive bet we'll be dry," he said. "Dry and hot and relatively humid."

Hot and humid weather with little prospect for rain is forecast for Friday through the weekend. Highs will be in the mid-80s into the 90s with lows in the 60s and 70s.

Myers said the weather service is not predicting the scorching triple-digit temperatures which hit the state in June, but the forecast is for continued hot weather.

"I'm not so sure about 100-degree weather but definitely 90-degree weather," Myers said. "I don't see any change until at least early next week. It may even last longer than that."

Spotty yet significant rain fell early Wednesday across northern and northeastern Iowa with Estherville getting 0.62 inches of rain, Mason City 0.2 inches and Eldora 0.36 inches.

Harry Hillaker, acting state climatologist, said record temperatures were recorded on seven days in June, with Sioux City recording the highest temperature of the month at 108 degrees on June 21.

UI's Health Iowa promotes student awareness

By Stephen Hamill
Special to The Daily Iowan

During the coming academic year, UI students will be encouraged to stay healthy by Barb Petroff and her team of health experts.

As coordinator of Health Iowa, the educational branch of UI Student Health Services, Petroff said she hopes to increase student awareness of responsible alcohol use and sexual activity.

"Our program is primarily health promotion, as well as disease prevention," said Petroff.

Four graduate assistants, a health educator and a dietician are helping Petroff. The program is funded by Student Health, UI Student Services and special grants.

Petroff said her team needs to build on its successes of the past year to ensure that substance abuse and sexually transmitted diseases on the UI campus do not follow the upward national trend.

Health Iowa's Lisa Broek said the number of STD cases on the UI campus is growing.

"Many students have never even heard of genital or venereal warts when they come here. I am surprised at how many times I have to define STDs," Broek said.

In 1988-89, Petroff said she has some goals for the Health Iowa staff.

"We have three main goals — to organize and strengthen the alcohol abuse prevention efforts on campus, to increase awareness of sexual health and to develop a cardiovascular program," Petroff said.

Petroff said she supports Health Iowa's concentration on alcohol abuse prevention partly because a recent survey of the UI campus found that eight out of 10 students use alcohol. In addition, the study found that 80 percent come from families in which at least one member has a drinking problem.

"We know that there is a problem with alcohol abuse, with irresponsible use of alcohol and other drugs, too. But the drug of choice is alcohol," Petroff said. "We are not saying become teetotalers, we know that is not a reality. 'Just say no' is not a reality, but rather, giving students some skills and some information that they can use personally so that they can avoid problems."

Petroff, a registered nurse with a master's degree in health education from the University of Northern Colorado, said Health Iowa addresses a complete range of health and lifestyle topics.

"There's quite a breadth to this program. It's quite comprehensive," Petroff said.

Petroff said.

Petroff said Health Iowa also offers workshops, ranging from weight management to stress control, that are available to any campus group, along with private consultations and individual assessments.

"We are a stepping stone to help link the person with the service that he or she is going to benefit from," Petroff said.

Health Iowa will begin the new academic year with a health fair Nov. 2 at the Union.

"We will be doing a college lifestyle fair with a series of forums which deal with hot health topics that students would be interested in," Petroff said.

Petroff said experts from the medical, nursing and counseling areas will present information and answer questions.

"It would be a real contribution from the service area of this university to the academic community," Petroff said.

A week before the health fair, Petroff said she will be organizing a series of AIDS workshops for rhetoric classes, examining both scientific information and intimate communication.

According to Petroff, "negotiating sex ahead of time" is crucial in the prevention of AIDS. Petroff said she has not yet had to deal with an AIDS-infected student, but said she is concerned about STDs on campus.

Petroff said the staff at Health Iowa met its goal for the past academic year.

"I am very proud of our staff and of the people on this campus who have worked toward the same goal," Petroff said. "Last year our goal was just to generally increase student participation in health promotion activities."

In 1986, six students attended Health Iowa's AIDS workshops. In 1987 this figure jumped to 3,300. Overall, the figure for student involvement in Health Iowa workshops increased more than 100 percent.

"We use the slogan of working smarter not harder, although we ended up doing both," Petroff said. "We really did put in a lot of extra hours beyond the 40-hour week in order to accomplish this. But we were so enthusiastic that we were not complaining."

Broek said the benefits of health education need to be fully appreciated.

"The whole of society has been geared to treatment," Broek said. "If a headache occurs, an aspirin is prescribed. The cause of the headache needs to be examined."

Reagan will visit farm, in spite of recent rainfall

DU QUOIN, Ill. (AP) — When Herman Krone's drought-stricken farm in southern Illinois was picked for a visit today by President Ronald Reagan, his corn crop was shriveling and his pastures were parched.

But his farm recorded nearly 2 inches of rain this week, turning the fields into muddy pastures.

And 25 miles away in Marion, near the Williamson County Airport where Air Force One will land, motorists drove through flooded downtown streets.

"Four or five days ago my corn looked like pineapples... leaves drying," Krone, 63, said Wednesday. Until Monday's rain "the grass would just crack under your feet."

"The grass is starting to come back, and if I can get some continued rain, I could get some recovery on my pastures," said Krone, under a dark, cloudy sky. Today's forecast is for mostly sunny skies, hot and humid with highs in the 90s.

Still, agriculture experts insist that recent rain — up to 4 inches over some of the flatland region — won't help much of the already damaged corn crop. But the Reagan visit, they say, is a good gesture on the president's part and should help get federal aid for farmers who have substantial crop loss.

Reagan is scheduled for stops in Moline, Ill., and neighboring Davenport, Iowa, before he returns to Washington.

"Even though it has rained, when the president looks at the crops, he's going to see a bad situation," said Steve Newman of the Illinois Farm Bureau. "As you know there's nothing like looking at the problem square in the face and making some decisions."

At the 2,800-acre Krone farm, for example, Reagan will see some 400 acres of Krone's 1,200-acre corn crop irreversibly damaged by drought, or an estimated $35,000 loss.

Corn stalks that should be 10 to 12 feet high by this time of year only measure from 2 to 5 feet with burnt, brownish tassels, Krone said.

Ronald Reagan

And the dry spell also has parched 125 acres of pasture used to feed Krone's 150 head of cattle. For the past month, he's had to feed the cattle alfalfa hay.

"My farm will be a good representation of the drought, although it has rained here," said Krone, standing in a blue-and-beige "Agratech" cap, a gray T-shirt, faded blue jeans and leather work boots.

UI study of marijuana effects suffers from lack of volunteers

By Stephen Hamill
Special to The Daily Iowan

UI researchers studying the effects of chronic marijuana use on learning ability are having trouble finding enough participants who use the drug on a daily basis.

Robert Block, an associate research scientist in the UI Department of Anesthesia, said the study needs to attract more chronic users.

"The main thing is to find out if there are or aren't any impairments associated with chronic use," Block said.

"It would be much more desirable to get a larger sample of heavy users," Block said. "This is very important, because if there are any impairments that are related to chronic marijuana use, you would be much more likely to see them in people who use it more frequently."

Block said he hopes to attract more than 200 subjects to the UI study.

"We are especially interested in getting people who use it more or less every day, and that's the hardest thing," Block said.

Block said many potential participants were concerned about confidentiality in the study.

"There are ordinary guarantees of confidentiality in research," he said. "But in addition to that, because we are asking for sensitive information about the illegal use of drugs, we also have arranged to obtain a confidentiality certificate issued by the Department of Health and Human Services through the National Institute on Drug Abuse."

"By getting this certificate what we are trying to do is to reassure people that their records wouldn't be available in any criminal cases," Block said.

Sara Farnham, one of three research assistants working on the UI study, also attributed the reluctance of chronic users to fears about confidentiality.

"They will be safe if they become involved in the study," Farnham said. "No one can sue them or get information (on their drug usage)."

Farnham said the initial lack of heavy marijuana users in the study may be made up with people who "picked up the habit in the 1960s and are now in professional careers but are scared of drugs such as cocaine."

The study is being funded by a $260,000 grant from the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

Dubuque-area ballplayers to appear in 'Shoeless Joe'

DYERSVILLE, Iowa (AP) — When Jude Milbert isn't pitching for the Dyersville Whitehawks, he's dressed in a woolen uniform and wears a small glove to field ground balls for the 1919 Chicago White Sox.

Milbert is one of several semi-pro baseball players appearing in the movie "Shoeless Joe," the story about an Iowa farmer who hears a voice telling him that Shoeless Joe Jackson, his long-gone baseball hero, will come back to life if the farmer builds a baseball field in his corn field.

The movie will star Kevin Costner as Iowa farmer Ray Kinsella. Also starring are Burt Lancaster, James Earl Jones and Amy Madigan.

The filmmakers have two teams. One imitates the 1919 White Sox who played in the World Series. The other represents various other teams of the time.

The movie is being shot in Dubuque with the baseball scenes filmed at Don Lansing's Dyersville farm.

The 31-year-old Milbert, who played for Coe College in Cedar Rapids, said he's having fun but isn't used to the long hours and the heavy, woolen uniforms worn by the White Sox' Joe Jackson and other stars of that era.

"We've had to learn to use the old gloves. Some of them you can fold up and put in your back pocket," Milbert said Wednesday afternoon. "Some of them were used in 'The Natural' and I guess are valued at $800 apiece."

"You have to use two hands, and you can't make diving catches or backhands," said Milbert.

Milbert and the other players are making $100 a day for their parts, which don't include dialogue.

"We don't do any talking or chatting on the ball field. In fact, there aren't any speaking parts at all," Milbert said. "But we all had to get our hair buzzed, and no facial hair is allowed."

Dukakis

Jackson in his search for a running mate. Several delegates expressed disgruntlement less over the fact Jackson wasn't chosen as over the fact Dukakis did not notify him in advance of the selection of Bentsen.

Jackson first learned of the selection of Bentsen from reporters when he flew into Washington's National Airport.

At a news conference this afternoon, Dukakis explained that he had tried to reach Jackson by telephone to tell him of Bentsen's selection, but couldn't reach him at first. When he did reach Jackson, Dukakis said he told Jackson he was sorry to have missed him on the first call.

In any case, Dukakis said, "I made my choice and I'm very happy with that choice, and I think most Democrats across the country are."

As for Jackson, Dukakis said, "I want Jesse Jackson to be deeply involved in this campaign as a party leader."

While the response at the NAACP convention was tepid, Dukakis and Bentsen got a somewhat better welcome today before the Congressional Black Caucus, and a rousing reception at a separate session of House Democrats.

"He sent one single message," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore. "He wants to work with us and reach out to us. That's what the Congress wants to hear."

Disagreements exist for Dukakis, Bentsen

WASHINGTON (AP) — Michael Dukakis sought Wednesday to emphasize the economic issues of jobs and growth that he and his vice-residential choice, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, agree on. But the two men differ on a range of other issues.

Among them:
● NICARAGUA — Bentsen, like many southern Democrats, has consistently voted in favor of the Reagan administration's policy of providing military aid to the Contra rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista regime. He has said he believes force is the only way to pressure Managua into making democratic reforms. Dukakis opposes Contra aid, instead preferring diplomatic solutions to Nicaragua's political problems.

● REAGANOMICS — Bentsen, as a member of the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee, supported President Ronald Reagan's successful 1981 proposal for cuts in individual income taxes. "I really thought taxes should be cut," Bentsen said Wednesday, adding that concerns about a mounting federal deficit had prompted him to vote against the third and final increment of the tax cut. Dukakis has termed the cuts "a disgrace" that led to huge deficits and damaged the U.S. trade balance.

● OIL — As an oil-state lawmaker, Bentsen has consistently sought preferential tax treatment for the petroleum industry and has favored an oil import fee, positions diametrically at odds with attitudes in the oil-consuming Northeast and with Dukakis' stance.

● SCHOOL PRAYER — Bentsen has voted in favor of a constitutional amendment to allow prayer in public schools. Dukakis opposes it.

● WEAPONS — Bentsen has supported the modernization of the U.S. strategic force, including votes for the B-1 bomber and the MX missile. Dukakis opposes both weapons systems.

● BALANCED BUDGET — Bentsen voted for a constitutional amendment requiring Congress to adopt a balanced budget every year except in wartime, or if three-fifths of members approve of waiving the requirement. Dukakis opposes such an amendment.

● DEATH PENALTY — Bentsen generally supports imposition of the death penalty and has voted for it in the Senate. Dukakis is opposed to the death penalty.

Poor choice

Mike Dukakis' selection of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas is a shallow political overture to party conservatives that casts serious doubts over his candidacy and may spell the beginning of the end for the Democrats in 1988.

Of all the candidates on Dukakis' list, Bentsen is so conservative he is virtually a Republican. Though as chairman of the Finance Committee he has recently championed comprehensive trade legislation on behalf of his party, his overall voting record in the Senate reflects a conservative agenda on issues from Contra funding to gun control. According to a Congressional Record report cited in The New York Times, during the first year of the Reagan administration, Lloyd Bentsen's voting record was the most pro-Reagan of all Democratic senators.

Personally, Bentsen is as "establishment-oriented" as Dukakis or Bush. The son of wealthy Texans, Bentsen earned millions of his own in insurance and banking during a 14-year hiatus from public service. Since his return in 1970 (ironically, defeating George Bush in a race for the Senate), he has been a consistent friend of big business, particularly the oil industry.

Most important, as a solution to the Jesse Jackson question, Bentsen is a complete disaster. Jackson's success in the primaries, if it fell short of earning him an invitation to the ticket, spoke volumes about the strength of his message and the voting power of liberal Democrats. To select Bentsen is to betray Jackson and to alienate his powerful Rainbow Coalition.

Dukakis has never been an exciting candidate, owing his success instead to sound management style and virtually error-free political judgment. But in attempting to balance the ticket with a conservative Washington insider, Dukakis has made a colossal error, undercutting the liberal agenda that made his candidacy so attractive in the first place.

Closed minds

Director Martin Scorsese's new film, "The Last Temptation of Christ," has caused a group of Southern California Protestant ministers to threaten a boycott of businesses owned by MCA if Universal Pictures releases the picture.

After reading screenplays of the picture, the ministers claim that the film represents Jesus as "a mentally deranged and lust-driven man who convinces Judas Iscariot to betray Him." The ministers have declined invitations to view the film.

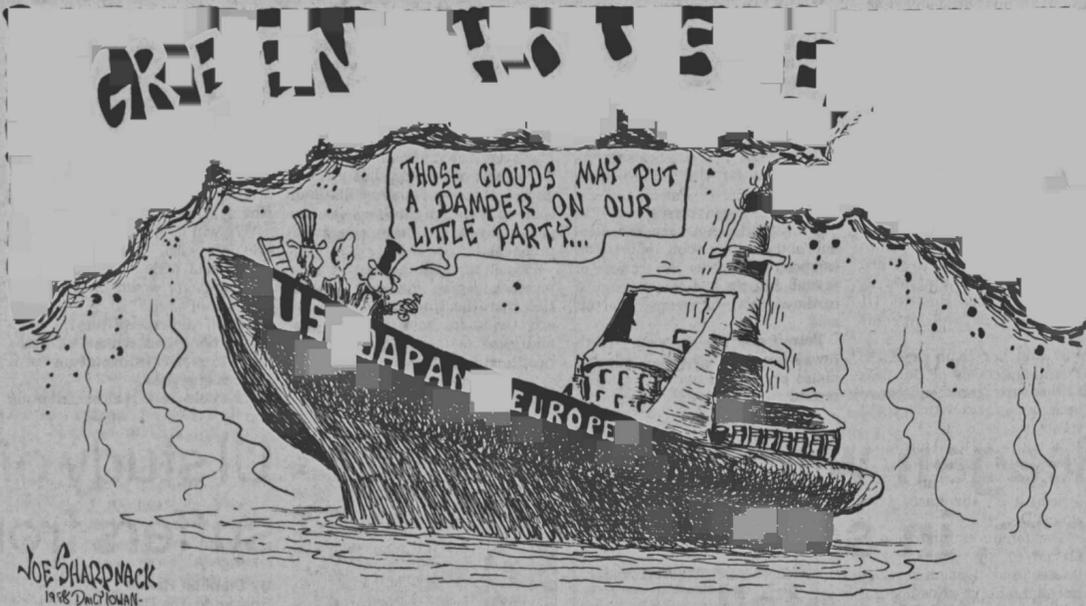

A statement from Universal Pictures refers to the complaints of the "fundamentalist leaders" as "inaccurate and exaggerated" due to the fact that they have refused to see the film.

Several of the ministers claim that the release of the film will cause many Christians to lose their faith. They contend that although they want to destroy the film, they are not asking for censorship. But if destroying a film isn't censorship, what is?

One's interpretation of the biblical narratives is a personal decision — as is an audience member's interpretation of a film's content. But if the film does not interpret the Bible in the same way that the viewer does, does that give someone the right to prevent other people from seeing the film? If the minister's boycott is effective, other people will be denied the opportunity to view the film and interpret it for themselves. This occurrence would be nothing short of censorship.

Don't settle for Bush mediocrity

The Bush campaign is becoming worried and beginning to say things it would ordinarily not want to hear itself say. Last week on a talk show I heard a Bush aide respond to the claim that the V.P. has not shown he has a plan for the country; that after three months of campaigning and hundreds of speeches, no one can tell what George Bush's vision for America is. So the moderator said to the aide, "Why doesn't George Bush put forth his plan?" The aide acted astonished and said, "He has set forth his plan. He's been talking about it for months."

All I could think was a great big, quiet, "OH!" That was it. We've been hearing his plan? Lord, talk about a fiery messenger. Talk about a man of vision. And I didn't even know this until one of his aides pointed it out. If Bush is elected, should I expect someone to get on TV after each of his speeches and say, "What you have just heard is an inspirational pep talk," or, "What you have just heard is a warning to the Soviets." To me, that sounds too much like what I have already heard for seven years; "What the president meant was . . ." or, "The question the president thought he was answering . . ."

Why is it that behavior that would flunk you out of a freshman comp class is excused in a president or vice president? Why is it that Americans can be so easily satisfied with mediocrity? Why is it that Bush can get on TV and call Ted Koppel "Dan" for 30 minutes and maintain massive support, instead of being hooted right across the border? I mean, if I were on "Nightline," I would at least check first who I'd be talking to. If necessary, I'd put a little card in front of me that had written in big, black letters: "TED." These are not complicated tricks. George Bush could get this kind of advice almost anywhere if he wanted it. But why does he seem to need it?

The simplest, most concrete reason is that the man is walking in a trance most of the time. George Bush, like Dukakis, is struggling through the greatest effort of his life. They are both living from breath to breath. In terms of stress, the job of running for president is probably equivalent to being a single mother with seven babies in the house.

The man has many speech writers and coaches and handlers and experts of various stripes advising and directing him. But he is functioning at the limits of his ability and has for months already and will for many months more. It is understood that mistakes will be made and when they are made they are forgiven by the party faithful. And the ease of this forgiveness, the quickness of the forgiveness, are also fairly simple. They forgive him because George Bush himself isn't really what's important.

They're not voting for him; they're voting for a Republican and he happens to be it. Ask them and they'll say they're voting for a way of life, a political philosophy, a social agenda. But they're really just voting Republican. Bush is the guy who met all the rules and requirements and was in the right place to be the nominee. In a sense, Bush is like the person who walked into the grocery store to buy some Cheez-Wiz and found that he was the one-millionth customer. No one would argue that George Bush is the best candidate the Republicans could put up, only that he is the candidate.

Which brings me to my thesis sentence. This infamous doctrine of allegiance to party plays directly into the hands of politicians of the lower sort. It enables them to foist upon the country candidates no self-respecting person would vote for if only he could come to understand that loyalty to himself is his first and highest responsibility, not loyalty to any party name.

In my home state of Oklahoma, any car thief or canvas tent preacher could be elected to public office if he were a Democrat. It didn't matter what he said or believed as long as he stood under the Democratic banner when he said it. And the good citizens of Oklahoma would dutifully go to their polling place and check all the Democratic boxes whether they recognized the names or not. And it's not any different in Iowa or California or Massachusetts. They wouldn't admit to this in Massachusetts, of course. They wouldn't admit to it in Oklahoma, either. The cultures are different but the people think the same.

It ultimately doesn't matter who the leader is so much, only that he's their leader. And they don't like it when you point out that the leader of their party is blind or goofy or doesn't know who he's talking to at that moment. The important thing is that everyone sticks together and moves as one. The party has become even more important than the individual running at its head. And blind party allegiance, by any other name, is a herd instinct.

Have you ever wondered what it is like to be the middle fish in a larger school of fishes? Every time the school decides to go left or right, you have to be on your toes or you'll bump into the fish beside you. Careful attention must be paid at all times to those around you. This, incidentally, is why fish have eyes on the sides of their heads. It's absolutely essential to running with the pack. The fish in the school might all look rather simple-minded when viewed through the window of a glass-bottom boat, but to the fish it's business as usual.

Sometimes I suspect that the American public must look very similar to one looking out the window of the White House. And I believe more all the time that they like it that way.

Our fans just can't riot like theirs

As a sports fan, I suppose I should be pleased that in 1994 the planet's most popular sports event — the World Cup soccer championship — will be held in this country for the first time. But all it does is make me nervous.

For years, I've watched the highlights of international soccer competition on the TV news. And the highlight is usually a riot by the fans. I'm not talking about an American-style sports riot, which comes in several tame varieties.

We have the baseball riot. In its mildest form, it's two or three beer-soaked louts wrestling in the stands until the cops haul them away. At its most ferocious, it's fans climbing light poles or overturning a few cars to hail a World Series victory.

Hockey fans sound nasty, but they almost never brawl. In fact, the closest thing to a riot I've ever seen at a hockey game was when players leaped into the stands to crack the skulls of some rude fans.

What I'm saying is that for all the beer they drink, all the noise they make and all the bets they lose, American sports fans are reasonably well behaved. You'll see more punches thrown at a country-and-western concert than a sporting event.

But when you talk about international soccer competition, you're talking mayhem, mauling, stomping. First they announce the final score, then they give the body count.

They don't mess around. A few years ago, some British fans got angry at some Italian fans. So they pushed over a wall, crushing more than a dozen Italians to death.

The British fans are the most notorious in Europe, and deservedly so. Their idea of a whoopee celebration is to stick someone with a knife or a jagged bottle, toss ball bearings, or pitch someone off the top of the stands or in front of a subway train.

But the British aren't the only ones who take their soccer seriously. Latin Americans, known for their frisky natures, have had some dandy riots.

After a big game in Colombia, some fans in the upper deck expressed their displeasure with the outcome by dropping fireworks and urinating on the fans in the lower deck. This caused a stampede to the exits that left 24 people flat and very dead.

Sometimes it doesn't take a riot to get soccer fans killed. A locked door will do it. In Greece, somebody forgot to unlock an exit after a game and 21 fans were squeezed to death. The same thing happened in Moscow and dozens died.

There have been riots in China and Mexico. And when Austria beat West Germany in a World Cup soccer game, one German fan was so upset that she tried to strangle a cheering Austrian. The man was quite shaken, since the angry woman was a nun.

You don't even need a soccer game to have a soccer riot. In Hungary, actors performed a play poking fun at soccer. If the police hadn't hidden the actors under the stage, a mob of more than 1,000 indignant fans would have dismembered them.

I've never understood why soccer affects its followers that way. It's not as violent as hockey, football or boxing and it doesn't have the subtle tension of baseball. If anything, it's always struck me as being kind of dull — a bunch of bowlegged guys named Heinz or Jorge butting the ball with their heads.

Maybe because it's the only game in which players use their heads to propel the ball. Assuming that the fans of soccer also play the game that butting of a ball with their heads might make their brains.

That may be why soccer, the world's most popular team sport, is never caught on in this country. In our favorite games, we throw, catch and kick balls; hit them with bats and rackets; dunk them through hoops; and put them into little holes. But we don't butt them with our heads.

If anything, a ball bouncing off the head of an outfielder or a punt receiver is considered funny, and we laugh derisively.

So what will happen when all those soccer teams and their fans are here, and Heinz and Jorge start bouncing balls off their heads, and millions of Americans who know nothing about the game start laughing?

Do we want British skinheads rioting in our streets, Colombians urinating on the lower deck or nuns grabbing our throats?

We don't need that. And if any indignant soccer fans are going to write me nasty letters, I will tell you in advance that I won't take you seriously unless you enclose a statement from your physician saying that you don't have a flat spot on your head.

Responsibility claimed for Greek blast

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A previously unknown group linked with Palestinians said Wednesday it was behind the terrorist raid on a Greek cruise ship. At the same time, the PLO strongly condemned the attack.

A statement signed "The Organization of the Martyrs of the Popular Revolution in Palestine" claimed responsibility for Monday's attack on the City of Poros cruise ship.

The statements, delivered to a Western news agency in west Beirut, were typewritten in Arabic on paper that carried no letterhead, unlike the usual communiques from Palestinian groups. There was no way to authenticate the claims.

Meanwhile, in Baghdad, Iraq, Bassam Abu Sharif, spokesman for PLO leader Yasser Arafat, declared:

"The Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestinian people, being themselves victims of state-organized terrorism, strongly condemn this criminal attack on the Greek ship and the car bombing . . .

"Greece is a country known for its friendly attitudes toward the Palestinian cause, and we cannot but condemn such attacks," he added.

Greeks notify U.S. of military base shut-down

ATHENS, Greece — The government on Wednesday issued a formal shut-down notice for the four U.S. military bases operating in Greece.

The notice is a legal formality that is not expected to result in any of the bases being closed.

Greek and American officials currently are negotiating a new agreement on the bases to replace the existing accord, which expires Dec. 31.

"The foreign ministry verbally informed the United States Embassy of the Greek government's decision to terminate the Defense and Economic Cooperation Agreement," government spokesman Sotiris Kostopoulos said in a statement.

According to the Greek interpretation of the current five-year accord — signed in 1983 by the United States and the socialist government of Premier Andreas Papandreu — Greece is obliged to issue a notice terminating the agreement five months before it runs out. Papandreu has said he is willing to sign a new agreement.

The four U.S. bases in Greece — two near Athens and two on the southern island of Crete — have been operating since the early 1950s.

Iraqi forces seize western Iranian city

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iraqi forces punched across the border Wednesday and seized the western Iran city of Dehloran, and 20,000 Iranians were killed or wounded in the last two days, the official news media reported.

Baghdad radio said the capture of Dehloran, 30 miles east of the border, was part of the third phase of the "We Depend on God" offensive.

The radio, monitored in Nicosia, quoted an unidentified senior military commander as saying that 20,000 Iranians have been killed or wounded and 5,155 captured since the latest thrust was launched Tuesday.

There was no confirmation from Tehran to the Iraqi reports. But Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, also monitored in Nicosia, reported "pitched battles" in the southern sector of the 733-mile warfront.

FBI agents criticized for library visits

WASHINGTON — An FBI official testified Wednesday that criticism of the bureau's Library Awareness Program has been "overblown," and that agents making official visits to libraries are interested solely in the activities of Soviet spies.

James Geer, assistant director-intelligence division, told a House panel that the program is narrowly focused, principally on scientific and technical libraries in the New York City area.

Geer said the FBI made 21 contacts with greater New York libraries between late 1985 and 1987. Most visits simply alerted librarians to use of their facilities by Soviet agents engaged in recruiting and information-gathering, he said.

Organizations of librarians and civil liberties groups have asserted there is a pattern of FBI interest in libraries across the country, and have accused the bureau of intimidating library employees.

They said the bureau was trying to enlist library personnel as spies, to identify patrons who might be gathering information for foreign powers. Librarians, they said, were given broad requests to monitor patrons with Russian or Eastern-European sounding names.

Computer trading gives stocks a lift

NEW YORK — A late round of buying attributed to computer program trading gave the stock market a lift in the waning moments of an erratic session Wednesday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials closed with an 11.73-point gain at 2,104.37. Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 218.93 million shares.

Cuban, S. African negotiators reach early agreement on Angola, Namibia

UNITED NATIONS (AP)—Negotiators for Angola, Cuba and South Africa agreed that Cuban troops will leave Angola and South Africa will end its 73-year rule over Namibia, Assistant U.S. Secretary of State Chester Crocker said Wednesday.

The countries' military and political negotiators agreed on a statement of principles that now must be approved by their respective governments. Another meeting was scheduled for early August.

"The Angolans, Cubans and South Africans were able to reach agreement on a set of principles which constitute the essential elements of a political settlement in southwestern Africa," said Crocker.

The parties did not agree on a timetable for the Cuban withdrawal at this week's private meetings, Crocker said during a news conference at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations.

An estimated 50,000 Cuban troops back the Marxist Angolan government in its fight against rebels supported by the United States and South Africa. Namibia, also known as South-West Africa, lies between Angola and South Africa and has been ruled by the white-minority South African government since 1915.

Crocker said that if the peace process "catches fire," a detailed settlement could be finalized in "two or three more rounds" of talks.

Private talks began Monday among the Americans, led by Crocker, South Africans led by Neil van Heerden — that country's director-general of foreign affairs — and a joint Angolan-Cuban delegation.

The talks took place under tight security at the U.S. Coast Guard station on Governors Island in New York harbor, and concluded Wednesday morning at the negotiators' hotel, across from the United Nations building.

Discussion of the mechanics of South Africa's withdrawal from Namibia would begin at the August meeting. A venue has not yet been set, but Americans close to the process said that Geneva and Rio de Janeiro had been suggested.

Crocker said implementation of any ultimate settlement would involve U.N. civil and military administrators moving into Namibia to replace withdrawing South African troops, in compliance with U.N. Resolution 435.

Details of the set of principles, which Crocker said were "a couple of pages" long, will not be released until the governments have approved them.

"There are some large gaps that remain," Crocker added. "For example, the existing gap on the timing of the Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola is a major issue. I think the parties agreed that this was not the time to come to grips with that issue, and we agree with that judgment."

"But they do recognize . . . that there's going to have to be a compromise, that there's going to have to be no losers, that it's going to have to be something that can be verified to the satisfaction of everybody," Crocker said.

Lt. Gen. Antonio dos Santos Franca, who leads Angola's armed forces and is known by his nom-de-guerre of Gen. N'Dalu, added: "My government is waiting to discuss the withdrawal of the Cuban troops."

South Africa had said it will accept a U.N. Security Council resolution calling for Namibia's independence under black majority rule once the Cuban troops withdraw from Angola.

Van Heerden had told reporters in the last two days that negotiators were "talking turkey" and the peace process was "on track."

The U.S. goal is a full Cuban troop withdrawal in one year, the same time span the U.N. resolution sets for granting independence to Namibia. Angola and Cuba have insisted the Cuban withdrawal should take place over four years.

The United States is a party to the talks because it has been supporting the anti-communist rebel group UNITA, or National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, with money and weapons since 1985. A civil war has been under way in Angola since it gained independence from Portugal in 1975.

DEA steps up war on marijuana

WASHINGTON (AP)—The chief of the Drug Enforcement Administration said Wednesday the government will use paraquat and other herbicides in a stepped-up campaign to eradicate domestically grown marijuana.

At a news conference, DEA director John Lawn said paraquat, which was banned from use on national forests in 1983 because of environmental concerns, would be one of three herbicides used in the program, Operation Stop Crop 1988.

The other two herbicides cited by Lawn — 2, 4d and glyphosate — are not involved in the 1983 federal court decision and could be used in spraying on public lands, DEA spokesman said.

A DEA spokesman, Cornelius Dougherty, subsequently said that paraquat would be used in spraying for marijuana eradication on private land, not on public property, in light of the court ruling.

Paraquat, which is used in agriculture to clear fields before planting and after harvest, is highly toxic and can cause serious harm when inhaled or absorbed by human beings or animals.

Attorney General Edwin Meese said "the real environmental damage is not from" the herbicides, but rather from what is being done by the illegal growers of marijuana. He said the traffickers are "cutting down trees . . . damming streams and pouring pesticides and fertilizer" into streams, from which water is pumped for irrigation of the marijuana crop.

Meese said Operation Stop Crop is designed to rid the country of marijuana-growing efforts by drug traffickers who have in many cases dispersed their operations into national forests and other remote areas to avoid detection.

ICAO considers Iran's complaints, investigates gulf airliner downing

MONTREAL (AP)—The world's governing body for civil aviation convened a special session Wednesday to consider Iran's complaints against the United States for shooting down an Iran Air passenger jet over the Persian Gulf.

An asked the 33-nation governing council of the International Civil Aviation Organization to begin an investigation into the May 3 disaster, in which all 290 people on board were killed.

In its original request, Iran also asked the ICAO to condemn the "hostile and criminal acts" of the United States.

But as delegates gathered at the United Nations agency's headquarters in Montreal, the U.S. permanent representative, Edmund Stohr, told The Associated Press that a condemnation was unlikely.

"They'll never get it," he said. Stohr also said the U.S. delegation, headed at the session by Richard Williamson, assistant secretary of state for international organization affairs, would welcome an independent ICAO probe into the Iran Air incident.

"We'll be the first to ask for it," Stohr said.

"ICAO members will listen to the facts carefully and want to know all of the facts before taking any action," he said, predicting that the council will order an investigation at the end of the two-day meeting.

ICAO officials predicted that members may choose to focus on improving coordination between civilian air traffic and military authorities.

With the United Nations Security Council due to discuss the matter today, there were indications that Iran was having trouble generating support for a condemnation of the missile attack by the USS Vincennes on the Iran Air A300 Airbus.

Stohr said the United States had "an awful lot" of allies on the ICAO council.

"The United States, along with quite a few other countries, have kept the shipping lanes open, and that allows people in the gulf to sell their oil," he said. The U.S. military action also enables Japan and the world "to have oil which they might not have otherwise."

Iran is one of ICAO's 159 member countries but does not sit on the council.

Alli Akbar Gholrainsi, the Iranian representative to ICAO, said on Tuesday that Iran has not yet located the airliner's "black box" flight recorder which could settle disputes over the plane's location and altitude.

The United States maintains the airliner ignored warnings and appeared hostile, while Iran says radio traffic reveals no such warnings, and the plane was on a normally scheduled route from Bandar Abbas to Dubai.

In background documents, Iran accused the U.S. force in the gulf of violating international law and the civil aviation conventions by interfering many times since May 1987 with Iranian air traffic, causing flights to divert.

'Ruffian,' 'Games' titillate, jar

By Bill Stuelke
The Daily Iowan

The house was packed in Theatre A of the UI Theatre Building for the opening of two Joe Orton one-act plays, "The Ruffian on the Stair" and "Funeral Games." The audience was subsequently treated to excellent acting, direction and set design. "Ruffian" is an early Orton work which slapped the audience in the face with its assault on morals and popular culture. "Games" comes late from Orton's career and is a paragon of black humor and farce — what theater people call "Ortonesque."

The action in "Funeral Games" takes place in a lower-class London flat during the '60s. The play has only three characters: Mike, Joyce and Wilson. Mike, played by Victor Lazarow, is a retired boxer who performs odd (often illegal) jobs. Joyce, a retired prostitute played by Jennifer Bacon-Blaine, is his girlfriend. Wilson, played by Jim Hanna, is the "Ruffian."

If George Bush were a fictional character, Wilson is the character he would be. Wilson tries to be aggressive, but he's not. His goal in life is to be the brother of a millionaire.

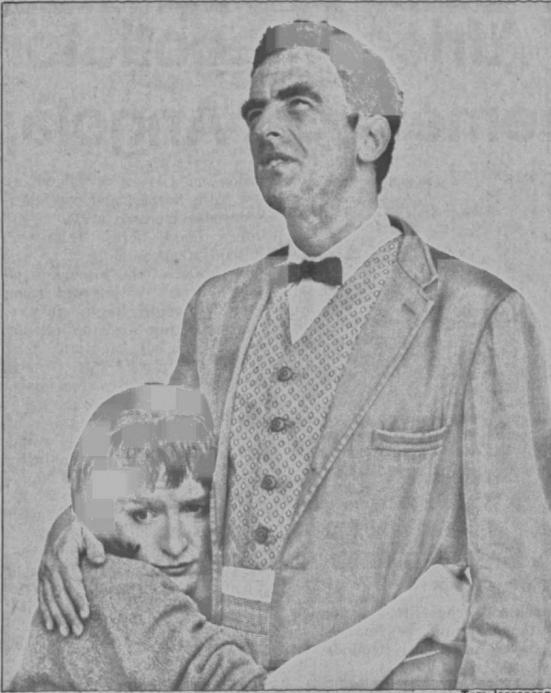

Unfortunately, this dream cannot be realized, because Mike has killed Wilson's brother for money. Wilson figures out who did it and now wants Mike to kill him because life is meaningless. (Wilson's relationship with his brother went beyond brotherly love.) Wilson attempts to make Mike kill him by convincing him that he (Wilson) is having an affair with Joyce.

"The Ruffian on the Stair" was Joe Orton's first play. It was first performed on radio in 1964. One can see a few Orton characteristics in the play, but this play is very different from typical Orton work.

The mood of uneasy humor is set early on with an explosive scene between Joyce and Wilson. Wilson suggests to Joyce that he could kill her, and there would be nothing she could do. From that point on, a disturbing feeling looms over the audience. In Orton's later work, he uses black humor to unsettle the audience.

Ridicule of authority is also an Orton trait. In "Ruffian," though, this trait doesn't appear much. There is only a slight stab at the British Legion and a small cut to the Jesuits.

There are, however, many references to Orton's personal life — a characteristic he held to. Homosexuality and a twisted "family of idiots" are familiar motifs.

Joyce (Jennifer Bacon-Blaine) confronts her husband, Mike (Victor Lazarow) at the conclusion of "The Ruffian on the Stair" by Joe Orton. The play is part of an evening of one-acts presented as part of the Joe Orton Summer Theatre Festival.

"Ruffian" is not a farce. Theatergoers who have been faithfully attending the Orton festival will not recognize this as Orton's work. This play has real characters with real and intense feelings. Slapstick, so prevalent in "What the Butler Saw," cannot be found here. The play was brilliantly executed by all three actors. Their interactions with each other were precise and convincing. The audience was held captive the entire hour. Though there were funny lines and big laughs from time to time, the main thrust Orton had in mind was that of running his audience through the wringer. He wrote later about this play: "...laughter is a serious business, and comedy a weapon more dangerous than tragedy."

On the other hand, calling "Funeral Games" a farce is an understatement. The antics in this play make "Butler" look like "Mutiny on the Bounty." The material in "Games" is ripe for unbridled horseplay. Written late in his career, it's much more typical of Orton's work.

There is a small cast for "Games" as well. Pringle, played by Todd Ballantyne, is a reverend of "The Brotherhood." He is a promiscuous leader of a promiscuous sect. Female members have the spirit enter them through rather carnal means. Tessa, played by Jennifer Bacon-Blaine, is Pringle's wife. She can be described as the world's oldest little Catholic schoolgirl. Caulfield, played by Russ White, does Pringle's dirty work. He is shifty and has the arm mannerism of Dr. Strangelove. McCorquodale, played by Ron Clark, is an old "defrocked priest" who has dreams of life before impotence.

The plot is so tangled, to explain it would run this article halfway through the Sports page. In simple terms, it takes this form: Pringle, a greedy reverend with an insatiable sexual appetite, tries to get as much money as possible through various scams. He tries to upgrade his reputation by spreading the rumor that he's killed his wife as punishment for adultery.

The local press, smelling a rat, demands proof of the murder. Rather than going through the embarrassment of being innocent, Pringle must fabricate proof. Tessa threatens to reveal that she has not been murdered after many plot contortions. Caulfield then utters the famous words to Pringle, "Unless you kill your wife, she'll accuse you of not being her murderer."

Not only is the play's dialogue humorous, the physical appearance of the actors is perfectly hilarious. Pringle has wonderfully huge ears, an odd posture and a bulge in his pants which is the perfect complement to his dialogue. Tessa always looks like she just stepped out of class at Our Lady of Unbearable Pain Catholic School.

These one-act plays provide a wonderful contrast between Orton's early work and his late work. The pair of plays is acted and directed beautifully. Even the set for "Games" bursts comedy.

Alternative Theatre program offers the new and different

By Steve T. Donoghue
The Daily Iowan

Tired of Joe Orton? Bored with Rambo and Roger Rabbit? Maybe Alternative Theatre's the answer for you.

Director Frank Bartella's creative brainchild — Alternative Theatre — takes the stage for its third annual Summer Rep run at the Unitarian Church, 10 S. Gilbert St., with a performance of "Baby Hades," an original play by UI graduate student Brighde Mullins, who earned a master's of fine arts at Yale University, where "Baby Hades" was first produced.

"Baby Hades" is the story of three diseased people trying to rescue Las Vegas from the blight of trained performing animals and return the stage to humans, including stagegirls. The title character, Baby Hades (also diseased), for instance, is a Nile crocodile.

The remainder of this summer's program features "Glasnost in 1938," a Russian short story adapted for stage by Branko Dimit-rijevic and staged at Gabe's Oasis, 330 E. Washington St.; "Ubu Roi" by Alfred Jarry, also at Gabe's; and a reading in the Public Library of "Thirty," a play by Frederik Norberg.

None of this is exactly standard for summer theater work. Bartella commented on this variation from the norm. "We're not your basic 'Music Man' summer fare, but we're not going to be hitting the audience with obscenities, either."

Alternative Theatre was founded in spring 1986 by Bartella as an excuse to produce shows by playwrights Frederik Norberg and Stan Ruth. Bartella directed "Manifest Destiny" by Ruth.

Since then, Alternative Theatre has taken on a broader meaning. It is now an avenue for undergraduate and graduate playwrights, directors and actors to have their work produced outside of the University Theatres in a semi-professional situation.

"I've done many shows at the University Theatres," said Bartella. "They give you budgets, technical support, equipment — but for some reason, it's a hell of a lot more fun to do it yourself. You know that every little thing in it is yours. It's probably not technically as slick, but maybe someday."

Bartella strives for a local feel to his productions. "We get people from the community," he said. "This is good quality theater outside the normal university and community establishments, local theater by local people and for local people."

For nine nights starting tonight, Alternative Theatre will present Iowa City with exactly that — an alternative to the stage events currently playing in town. Bartella was well aware of how many prospective audience members view his program.

"They'll go expecting things that they wouldn't see at the UI. The name connotes a difference — more provocative stuff, more hard-hitting, stuff that will leave people walking away trying to figure out what they've seen, rather than saying, 'Well, that was nice — now should we see a movie?'"

NCAA may inquire further at Kentucky

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The lawyer for Kentucky assistant basketball coach Dwane Casey said he expects the NCAA within the next two weeks to give notice of an official inquiry into allegations that Casey mailed $1,000 to the father of a recruit.

"There is a lot of pressure on the NCAA because of its previous investigation into Kentucky basketball where it didn't find anything," attorney Joe Bill Campbell told Louisville's Courier-Journal Tuesday.

Campbell said Casey answered questions from three NCAA investigators for more than five hours Monday night.

A letter of official inquiry would heighten the seriousness of the three-month-old NCAA probe by detailing alleged violations that occurred within the basketball program. Kentucky would then have a chance to respond to the allegations before the NCAA's Committee on Infractions, which would decide if any sanctions were justified.

His primary concern, Campbell said, is how the university would react to the official inquiry letter. "I've been concerned that the university will just roll over and play dead, accepting whatever the NCAA says," Campbell said. "I hope UK challenges it."

Missouri AD moves on to Naval Academy

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Jack Lengyel, the athletic director at Missouri, said being named to the same job at the U.S. Naval Academy Wednesday was a "dream come true."

"I've always believed in total development of the student and student-athlete, and there was nowhere else in the country where you have a better opportunity to do just that than at the Naval Academy," Lengyel said in a statement.

Lengyel, 53, who has been with Missouri since 1986, was selected to become the academy's 27th athletic director from a field of nine candidates after a three-month search.

He replaces J.O. "Bo" Coppedge, Navy's director of athletics for the past 20 years. Coppedge retired this spring, but will stay on to assist the new director. Lengyel's appointment takes effect Aug. 1.

Orioles starting to improve bad season

BALTIMORE (AP) — Six weeks of mediocre baseball. Not bad for the Baltimore Orioles, who only a few months ago were baseball's laughing stock after the game's worst start ever.

Behind some improved pitching from young arms, the Orioles won eight of 13 games going into baseball's All-Star break. They are 22-25 since opening the season with 34 losses in 40 games — starting off with that 21-game winless streak.

And that followed 21 losses in their last 26 games a year ago. Suddenly the foundation for the future looks more promising. "We'd like to put a couple of good months together," says relief pitcher Dave Schmidt. "The front office is building for the future, and we'd all like to be part of that."

Bubka wins again but falls short of 20 feet

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — Sergei Bubka of the Soviet Union won the men's pole vault event in a track and field meet at Barcelona's Serrahima stadium Wednesday, but failed to break his own world pole vault record of 19 feet, 10 1/2 inches.

Bubka failed to clear the height of 19-11 after three tries and ended up at 19-4 1/2. He set the world record three days ago in Nice, France.

Agent calls Boggs' mistress a 'prostitute'

BOSTON (AP) — The agent for Wade Boggs on Wednesday accused the woman who has filed a $6 million lawsuit against the Boston Red Sox "third baseman" of "prostitution and extortion."

"I think it is a sad commentary that society has put Jessica Hahn, Donna Rice and Margo Adams in celebrity status when we all know that her admitted behavior is nothing short of prostitution and extortion," Boggs' agent Alan Nero told ESPN, the television sports network, during a telephone interview.

In an telephone interview with the Associated Press from his Chicago office Wednesday night, Nero said he stood by his statement and accused Adams of choosing "to air her dirty laundry publicly for her own personal profit."

"And Wade prefers to be a gentleman and to not bring the same pain to other people's families she has brought to his," Nero said.

Pre-game show is a sellout

Mickey Mouse. It sure was. It's amazing what drivel television executives will rudely insert before and after a sporting event — like Tuesday night's All-Star Game. The pre-game ceremony, complete with disco Mickey, flag twirlers, chubby Little Leaguers and corny songs, was a little bit hokey and a whole lot sad. All of the above pushed my sensibilities and nostalgia for the game of baseball to the limit, but the pitcher's mound turned Mouseketeer logo pushed me over the edge.

The pre-game ceremony, complete with disco Mickey, flag twirlers, chubby Little Leaguers and corny songs, was a little bit hokey and a whole lot sad.

Now, the obligatory balloons were fine, it's just that Mickey must have sucked the helium out of half of them before they went up to get his voice that high.

I must be a purist. I hate artificial turf, domed stadiums and the designated hitter. And I hate corny ceremonies connected to sports events, especially when the sole purpose is to sell something. Even the Olympics, which once held dignified opening and closing ceremonies, have taken the low road in recent years. Not quite as high on the commercially ridiculous scale as this year's All-Star gala, but certainly close.

Stupid ceremonies have come hand in hand with the deluge of blatant commercialism of sports. Before Tuesday's All-Star Game, we were treated to a commercial for a commercial to come during the game.

The people handling the advertising for the new Bruce Willis movie "Die Hard" wanted to let us know that their expensive 45 seconds of exploding helicopters, burning buildings and blazing guns was coming.

They didn't let us down. Vice President George Bush let us down a little, though, with his limp-wristed, left-handed delivery of the first ball. But after all, he usually makes his pitches from the right.

But the saddest part of the festivities was the Cincinnati crowd. Like most All-Star game crowds, they showed their complete lack of knowledge and respect for the game's best players, some of which, as usual, weren't at the game.

They gave hearty cheers to the American League enemies and booed their National League stars, like Chicago's Greg Maddux, who has only won 15 games this season. If they wanted to boo every National Leaguer who has helped bury the Reds this year, they'd probably have to hoot 95 percent of them.

It isn't right, this bastardizing of something as sacred as baseball. Baseball is our national sport, and despite the fact that the All-Star Game is not taken too seriously by the fans or the players, it should retain some dignity.

But dignity is a hard thing to come by in a world full of big advertising dollars, megabuck television packages and George Steinbrenners. Steinbrenner has proven that while almost anything can be bought, one can't necessarily buy a winner.

It's just depressing that baseball, and every other major sport, is obviously for sale. Brent Woods is Daily Iowan Assistant Sports Editor.

Davis takes note of Iowa players' summer progress

By Neil Lewis
The Daily Iowan

Iowa Coach Tom Davis got his first chance to look at Prime Time League play, and Southgate Development, made up largely of Hawkeye standouts, breezed by Hills Bank 146-119 Wednesday night at Iowa City High School.

Also on hand was an agent from World Basketball Opportunities, an organization that helps recruit college players for teams in professional basketball leagues like the Continental Basketball Association and European leagues.

Back from a recruiting trip to the Nike camp in Princeton, N.J., Davis said because of a new recruiting rule he could not attend the Prime Time games until July 10th because high school players participate.

"I like to take a look at who's in shape," Davis said. "For example, Les Jepsen, is he more aggressive, is he stronger on defense?"

Davis said he thinks the quality of the league has improved this year with the addition of more college players.

"I think it's good for the players because it's a little more strict than a pick-up game at the Field House," Davis said.

Scott Woltzen, camp director and player representative for World Basketball Opportunities, showed for Wednesday's action to find prospects for an upcoming trial camp, according to Prime Time Commissioner Randy Larson.

Woltzen represents former Hawkeye Al Lorenzen, Larson said, and nearly 100 other college players.

"European coaches, six NBA coaches and all the CBA coaches will be at this camp," Larson said. "They're looking for a big man, whoever's the best big man will probably go."

Southgate's impressive starting lineup, including Roy Marble, Bill Jones and Michael Morgan, was overpowering inside for the smaller Hills Bank team.

With all its big-name players on hand, Southgate jumped out to a 27-15 lead on consecutive slam dunks by ex-Hawkeye Morgan and Drahozal. Southgate went on to lead by 15 at the half.

Marble, Jones and ex-Iowa City Regina player Kevin Drahozal were overpowering on the boards, pulling down 36 rebounds between them.

While most of Southgate's points came from inside 10 feet, Hills Bank relied on former Hawkeye Jeff Moe to drive, dish, and shoot for his team-leading 37 points and 11 assists.

Knox hopes for a repeat performance

COAL VALLEY, Ill. (AP) — Defending champion Kenny Knox put the rest of the field in the $600,000 Hardee's Golf Classic on notice Wednesday.

"I'm playing well the last month. Actually I'm playing better this year than when I came in here last year," said Knox, who fired a tournament record 265, 15 under par, in winning the event a year ago.

"I've been experimenting with my grips," said Knox, a Georgia native who now makes Florida his home. "I feel like I know my golf swing better. I've gone back to V-shape grooves. It's fun going back. I'm able to hit shots I couldn't hit before."

Knox said he doesn't feel he's under any pressure to win here this year.

"It's unique. I found out last week it's hard to win a golf tournament," said Knox, who rallied to finish third Sunday in the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

Knox, 31, is one of 151 pros teeing off today in the first-round of the 72-hole Hardee's Classic, formerly the Quad Cities Open.

Knox, whose 1986 Honda Classic win is his only other championship on the PGA Tour, warmed up by taking part in Wednesday's pro-am and Tuesday's 10-man Shoot-Out over the par-70, 6,606-yard Oakwood Country Club course.

"I did OK in the Shoot-Out," said Knox, who was eliminated on the sixth hole to finish in sixth place. "I didn't want to get eliminated on the first hole. It's a lonely feeling."

That lonely feeling went to Roger Maltbie, while Mark Wiebe, who took the Hardee's crown in 1986, captured the $3,000 top prize in the Shoot-Out.

On Sunday, the first-place prize will be $108,000, up $18,000 from last year. Hardee's, which has agreed to sponsor the event again in 1989, boosted the total purse $100,000 to $600,000 this year. In 1984, it was only $200,000.

Like most of the Midwest, the area has been plagued by record drought, which was bringing President Reagan for an quick inspection of the Quad Cities today.

A little more than a trace of rain fell Sunday morning, the first measurable precipitation in weeks.

But despite the dry weather, the course has not suffered.

"The course is fantastic. The greens are in excellent condition," said Knox.

No rain was in the weekend forecast, but officials insist there is plenty of irrigation water in

Strange says he will let his clubs do the talking at Open

LYTHAM, England (AP) — Curtis Strange, declining to become involved in an "us against them" confrontation, is the chief carrier of American hopes going into the 117th British Open Golf Championship.

"I'll let my clubs do the talking, let my score do the talking. That's the way it should be," the U.S. Open champion said before a final practice round for the tournament that begins today.

His remark was in response to a controversial declaration by British Ryder Cup captain Tony Jacklin that a European victory is all but certain because "we're better than they are." Jacklin listed five Europeans — all members of his last victorious Ryder Cup team — as the men most likely to succeed in the tournament that, except for the United States, is recognized as the world championship.

They are current Masters champion Sandy Lyle of Scotland, defending British Open title-holder Nick Faldo of England, Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Bernhard Langer of West Germany and Ian Woosnam of Wales.

"I can't see beyond a European victory," Jacklin said.

Britain's legal bookies tended to agree.

Ballesteros, who won the first of two British Open titles on the same links at Royal Lytham and St. Annes in 1979, was listed as the pre-tournament favorite at 9-1.

He was followed immediately by Lyle, who won three U.S. PGA Tour titles and one in Britain and leads the American money-winning list this year, at 10-1 and Faldo at 12-1.

Strange, who scored his third triumph of the season in a play-off victory over Faldo at the U.S. Open, and Ben Crenshaw are the leading American players at 14-1.

Postema waits for her call

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Pam Postema quickly cut off questions about how long she thinks it will be before she becomes major league baseball's first female umpire.

"I'm not thinking about that now," said Postema, who will display her skills before a national cable television audience as home plate umpire in Wednesday night's first Triple A All-Star game at Buffalo's new Pilot Field.

"I really don't want to talk about going up to the big leagues — when or where or if — because I don't know anything," said professional baseball's only female umpire. "If you can just limit your questions to the All-Star game or umpiring, I would appreciate it."

Postema, who has avoided talking to the media for most of this season, is tired of the attention her unique situation gets.

"I'm uncomfortable with it," said the Willard, Ohio, native. "I really don't want it, but I understand it. I guess we all kind of like to be noticed, but I don't think it's good for umpires. I think umpires' work should be kept on the field. I don't think there's any need for me to be up there talking."

She added, "I understand that I'm different, but I'm just another umpire out there on the field."

Postema was one of seven umpires being considered for two National League openings and umpired several major league exhibition games before being sent back for her sixth season in the American Association.

"I just was hoping, especially in spring training, that I could just kind of slip in unnoticed, but it didn't work out that way," she said, adding, "Thank you, Bob Knepper."

Knepper, who pitches for the Houston Astros, brought Postema unwanted attention when he maintained women shouldn't be umpires after Postema worked a game he pitched in spring training.

"This is not an occupation a woman should be in," said Knepper. "In God's society, woman was created in a role of submission to a husband. It's not that women are inferior, it's just that I don't believe women should be in a leadership position."

Aside from offering him her mock thank you, Postema didn't want to talk about Knepper. "I don't have anything to say about that comment," she said. "How can I comment on his statement?"

Pres Reagan addresses drought

By Jay Casini
The Daily Iowan

DAVENPORT — President Reagan urged Congress to provide additional relief measures for drought-stricken Midwesterners in a speech that began his career as a homecoming to the city.

Reagan told a crowd of 1,000 at Palmer Auditorium that he was drafting more help for farmers hurt by the drought but warned against using the drought to fund other programs.

"Even in an election year, drought is too big for politics," Reagan said. "Politics should be kept out of the drought relief. Politics on the parched field's end."

Reagan said he endorsed legislation that included forgiveness of advance deficiency payments and federal relief for farmers growing no crops.

Earlier in the day, Reagan urged Congress to provide relief for drought-stricken farmers and Richard Krone. The president was accompanied on his Illinois tour by Republican Sen. Dan Rostenkowski and Illinois Gov. Jim Thompson. Gov. Terry Branstad and Rep. Jim Leach.

"We can't make it rain to ease the pain," Reagan determined to provide drought-stricken farmers relief measures for a drought-aid package.

Reagan said his administration has already initiated relief measures for farmers called on Congress to pass a drought-aid package. However, Reagan said he must not encourage farmers to have not been serious about the drought to please the voters.
