Grant will not cover cost of toxic waste cleanup

By Heath Mathews
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa Department of Natural Resources' Office of Natural Resource Cleanup does not provide sufficient funds for the operation, according to Johnson County Defenders of the Environment activist Dorothy Johnson. The office was created by the state legislature to provide a mechanism for the cleanup of abandoned toxic waste sites and has been working toward that goal for the last 15 years.

"The IGNIS grant was first thrown at the attention of Johnson County Defenders of the Environment, and we were concerned about hazardous household items that would still end up with normal trash going to landfills," said Johnson. "But the Board of Supervisors handpicked us because we have a lot of toxics in the county.

"The county has a lot of toxics like this because the county is still a rural county, and there are toxics in the county. When we found out that there were toxics in the county, we were surprised."

Dorothy Johnson said she doesn't have an interest in organizing a self-help group offering friendship and support for people who have experienced a loss. Compassionate Friends is a self-help group offering friendship and support for people who have experienced a loss. The group will be meeting in the Johnson County Public Library on the second Thursday of each month.

7 UI students punished for protest participation

By John Bartenhager

Seven University of Iowa students who participated in a protest last month have been placed on disciplinary probation. Experts say the punishment seems excessive.

On Monday, May 23, the seven students were arrested for violating a university ban on picketing. The students were among a group of about 70 people who gathered outside the UI's Herbert H. Gilbert Hall to support the Iowa Student Network, which is seeking recognition as a student organization.

The protest was peaceful, and there were no incidents reported. However, the university issued a statement saying that the students had violated the ban on picketing.

The students were given the option of paying a $200 fine or going on disciplinary probation. They chose probation, which is a common penalty for such incidents.

Experts say the punishment seems excessive. "I don't see how the university can justify placing these students on disciplinary probation," said one expert. "They were simply exercising their right to free speech and assembly."

"My grandparents were upset, but that's their problem." "Oh well, Bush reveals his wishy-washy, pandering character again, Bush reveals his wishy-washy, pandering character again, Bush reveals his wishy-washy, pandering character again."

Vice President George Bush continues to have problems, indeed. Besides the sexual harassment issue, he is also being investigated for other misconduct.

Precedents like these are not to be ignored. We need to be vigilant and make sure that such incidents do not happen again.

Isaacson's letter is a good example of how we can address these issues.

It is proven: Video lottery machines are an invitation to addiction. We must do something about it.

The Iowa Lottery Board is currently attempting to add video machines to the state's lottery system. This attempt should be blocked.

This past Saturday, the Des Moines Register did a survey on the video lottery. The results were alarming. Out of the 1000 people surveyed, 75% said they would play the lottery if it were legal.

The Iowa Lottery Board is trying to bring in more money by adding video lottery machines. However, this could be a mistake.

Sanders eyes repeat of title year
CARLSTAD, N. J. (AP) — President Reagan, whose Buffalo Bills were held to a gained-free, knew what receiver to search for when he granted the Super Bowl trophy in the White House last February.

"Who's Ricky Sanders?" he asked.

"The receiver from Rutgers," was the reply.

Sanders did in as wide receiver for the Super Bowl champions, but the latest thing is how he might be playing for the Buffalo Bills.

Rutgers football coach Lenny Wilkins said last week that Sanders was headed for the NFL, but he couldn't say if he was going to be the third receiver.

"As far as I know," Wilkins said, "he's decided to go pro.

And that's where the Bills come in.

At Flagstaff, Ariz., the Bills are trying to find a good wide receiver, and that's why they're after Sanders.

"We'll penciled in as the Jets' starting line," said Ralston.

"I need a new offensive tackle," said Bosworth.

"We'll see."
