

NRC study: Palo nuclear plant flawed

By David Vestal
Special to The Daily Iowan

The steel-and-concrete radiation containment structure at Palo's Duane Arnold Energy Center, is almost certain to fail in the event of a serious accident, a Nuclear Regulatory Commission study says.

Duane Arnold, operated by Iowa Electric Light and Power Company, is located approximately 10 miles northwest of Cedar Rapids.

The NRC study, presented at a February 24 NRC workshop in Baltimore, Md., was prepared by a special task force formed by the commission specifically to address containment structure safety.

According to published reports, the containment safety issue has bitterly divided the NRC in recent months. Adding fuel to the controversy are charges that General Electric, the containment designer, knew of the design flaws as early as 1972 but took no corrective action.

The containment structure, which surrounds the reactor, is designed to prevent the release of deadly radioactive material into the atmosphere in the event of an accident.

The focus of the NRC study was whether General Electric's "Mark I" containment design, used in 24

U.S. "boiling water" reactors like Duane Arnold, can withstand the extreme heat and steam pressure generated in an accident so severe that the reactor core melts.

After examining in detail what would happen if tons of molten uranium fuel hit the steel lining the walls of the Mark I containment, the NRC task force concluded that in such an event "the evidence is strong" that the Mark I is likely to fail.

The task force added that containment failure could occur very early into an accident, leaving little time for public evacuation or other protective measures.

The study is the strongest endorsement yet of a separate February 1987 NRC reactor safety study that found that the probability of an early containment failure for Mark I systems in the event of a severe core meltdown could be as high as 90 percent.

But according to Steve Swails, manager of nuclear licensing at Duane Arnold, these figures on containment failure are misleading.

"No one knows for sure" whether a containment would rupture, Swails said, because "no one has actually melted down a core to see what happens."

"Ninety percent is higher than any figure I've seen," Swails said. "But the figures the experts come up with always depend on what assumptions they make, and they usually make worst-case assumptions."

"I personally don't think the core would melt through (in the event of a meltdown)," Swails said.

The containment would only be necessary if there were a core meltdown, and Swails dismissed that possibility, saying the chances of a reactor accident severe enough to result in a meltdown are infinitesimal because of the plant's redundant safety systems.

But critics of the Mark I point to NRC statistics stating there is about a 45 percent chance of a

Lottery winner arrested

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A woman who won $5 million in a lottery only to end up with her house being seized for back taxes has now been arrested and accused of plotting to kill her daughter-in-law.

Mary Ellen Futch, 64, on Saturday "negotiated a contract with our undercover detective for $5,000" to kill the wife of her youngest son, Hillsborough County Sheriff's spokesman Jack Espinosa said.

Futch was ordered held without bond and charged with soliciting for the first-degree murder of Peggy Futch, 23. If convicted, she faces a prison term of up to 30 years.

Her son, Henry Futch, said money troubles had left his mother distraught, but he and his wife said they were still shocked.

"She was over here yesterday, laughing and drinking coffee," Peggy Futch said. "We had our spat, but I would apologize to her or she would apologize to me."

Like other members of the family, Peggy Futch said she could not believe the plot was serious and did not think her mother-in-law belonged in jail.

Mary Ellen Futch won her jackpot in a Lotto drawing in Ontario, Canada, on Sept. 15, 1984, and received $5 million in a lump sum. She bought the ticket at the Toronto airport during a vacation.

With the money she bought a house to be near her son, whom family members said she doted on. News reports at the time said she once tipped a man $7,000 just to play pool with her son.

She also gave away some money, then made bad investments in Canada. And the Internal Revenue Service said she failed to pay any income tax in the United States, as the law required.

The IRS, which claims she owes $5 million in back taxes, interest and penalties, has seized her home and plans to auction it off Wednesday, Henry Futch said.

Espinosa declined to comment on a possible motive for the alleged contract-murder deal.

Neighbor Patsy Rice said Mary Ellen Futch once asked her to try to break the couple up. "The money did cause a lot of problems," Rice said.

Futch conceded his mother was overprotective.

"She never would let me have any friends," he said. "She would always chase them off whenever I'd bring one home."

Her daughter-in-law said she was worried about Mary Ellen Futch, who suffers high blood pressure and heart problems.

"I don't think jail is the place," Peggy Futch said. "I think that's too hard on her."

Rawlings delivers debut speech

By Hilery Livengood
The Daily Iowan

UI President Hunter Rawlings III promised to increase both minority student and faculty populations at the UI in his first speech Saturday at the Iowa Black Alumni Association's 25th reunion dinner.

"As I assume the presidency at the University of Iowa, I want to assure you that I have placed among my highest priorities the goals of increasing our minority enrollment, enlarging the representation of minority groups on our faculty and enhancing the cultural diversity of our entire intellectual community," he said.

Rawlings said he plans to continue and improve on the tradition of strong minority education at the UI, citing Opportunity at Iowa, a program aimed at recruiting more minority students to the UI, as a good example of the UI's efforts in that area.

"Opportunity at Iowa would not be possible without the strong foundation of support for minority education already in place at the University of Iowa," Rawlings said. "We must continue to expand this base of support.

"I believe the University of Iowa should do more than make modest gains each year in minority education. I want us to crash through the barriers," he said. "Crashing through the barriers is what we must continue to do."

The decrease in minority enrollment at universities across the nation was a theme in many speeches made Saturday night. At the UI the problem must be addressed by both administrators and alumni, Rawlings said.

"We simply must achieve a more equitable representation of minorities in positions for which a college education is required," Rawlings said. At the UI, "we seek to offer all our students access to greater cultural diversity as part of their basic educational development, and that's something that's not often talked about."

Rawlings assumes the presidency of the UI today, filling a position vacated July 1, 1987 by former President James O. Freedman. Rawlings is former vice president for academic affairs and research and dean of the graduate school at the University of Colorado, Boulder.

UI President Hunter Rawlings speaks to a crowd of about 200 guests attending the Iowa Black Alumni Association's 25th annual reunion Saturday night in the Union.

UI black alumni honored at reunion

By Hilery Livengood
The Daily Iowan

Thirty-seven years after becoming the first black woman to earn a doctorate in political science from an American university, Jewel Limar Prestage returned to the school where she earned that degree — the UI.

Prestage, along with Grambling head football coach Eddie Robinson, were the two UI alumni honored at the Iowa Black Alumni Association's 25th anniversary reunion Saturday night in the Union Ballroom.

Prestage and Robinson received the association's 1988 Hall of Honor Service Awards.

"Receiving this award is overwhelming, it's awesome," Prestage said. "That 37 years later I have accomplished things which inspired the university to honor me, that leaves me with a wonderful feeling of accomplishment."

Prestage came to the UI in 1951 after exhausting all possibilities for higher education in her native Louisiana. At that time women were not admitted to graduate schools in Louisiana and many other southern states, she said.

"Iowa was as close as anywhere that I could go to graduate school. I came here because I couldn't find access in my home state," Prestage said.

But Prestage said setting a first in her field wasn't her aim when she came to the UI.

"I did not know I was pioneering as a black woman in the educational community until 15 years after I received my degree," Prestage said. "I can't say I was motivated to do something that no one else had done."

She is currently dean of the School of Public Policy and Urban Affairs at Southern University in Baton Rouge, La.

The other award winner, Eddie Robinson, is best known by football fans as the "winningest" coach in the sport's history.

Robinson has coached at Grambling University, a small, predominantly black school near Shreveport, La., for 45 years. He earned his master's degree in Physical Education from the UI in 1954.

Willie Davis, a former All-Pro Green Bay Packers lineman and a friend of Robinson, accepted the award on his behalf. Robinson was unable to attend the reunion due to a prior professional commitment.

Robinson is a worthy recipient of the award and also excited about the honor, Davis said.

"I know he is proud of the fact that he is one of you, and there's no one who's been a better father figure to more athletes than Eddie Robinson," Davis said.

Robinson's victory record as well as the academic and career records of athletes he coached make him an outstanding individual, Davis said.

"Robinson has graduated more athletes and put more athletes in the NFL than any other coach alive," Davis said. "That's an accomplishment we all can be proud of."

Davis also commented on UI President Hunter Rawlings' welcome address to the alumni association.

"I don't know what your new president will be like, and I don't know what your old president was like, but if he (Rawlings) lives up to his promises, this association won't have to worry about living up to any of its objectives in the future," Davis said.

Shultz visit to 9 nations draws fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz sets out today on a 10-day visit to nine Latin American countries, intending to discuss ways of bringing new pressure to bear on Nicaragua's leftist government and to call attention to democratic gains elsewhere in the hemisphere.

See related story Page 7A

The first stop is Guatemala, where Shultz will meet with the foreign ministers of four Central American countries in an attempt to come up with a common strategy for exerting diplomatic pressure on Nicaragua to establish democracy.

Shultz on Sunday said that a statement which he said was drafted mostly by the foreign ministers of Guatemala, El Salvador, Costa Rica and Honduras is still open to discussion. "We're not trying to ram anything down anyone's throat. Having drafted it, they are not so sure they want to issue it," Shultz said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

A senior administration official, who briefed reporters on Friday, said it was unclear whether the Guatemala meeting will result in a joint statement of principles designed to prod Nicaragua into complying with its stated commitment to move toward democracy.

The official, who insisted on anonymity, said a consensus on a common policy toward Nicaragua has been difficult to reach.

The special U.S. envoy to Central America, Morris Busby, has been consulting on that issue with officials from the four Central American democracies.

Meanwhile, a Guatemalan legislator accused the State Department of trying to pressure the four countries into signing a virtual "declaration of war" against Nicaragua.

The legislator, Edmund Mulet Lesiur, representing a political party known as the Union of the National Center, said President Vinicio Cerezo rejected a demand by Busby to abandon Guatemala's policy of "active neutrality" by agreeing to the document.

Mulet said Honduras and El Salvador had agreed to sign it, while Guatemala and Costa Rica turned it down.

The U.S. Embassy in Guatemala City issued a statement Sunday categorically denying Mulet's statements, made in an interview with a Guatemala City newspaper.

"The United States has not 'pressured' Guatemala or any other country. The United States has not asked Guatemala to abandon 'active neutrality,'" the embassy said.

A fragile cease-fire remains in place in Nicaragua but there has been no progress on a final settlement between the Sandinistas and the Contra rebels. The impasse has produced calls by conservative members of Congress for a renewal of military aid to the rebels.

In public statements this past week, rebel leaders have maintained that the truce has helped the Sandinistas by enabling them to strengthen their overall military position at a time when the Contras have been denied lethal aid from the United States.

The administration has contended that the Sandinistas also have stepped up internal repression since the truce went into effect four months ago.

UI students selected for 1988 fellowships

Deborah Fink and Deborah A. Symonds have been selected for postdoctoral fellowships on "Rural Women and Feminist Issues", sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation.

The two were chosen by the UI Women's Studies Program for the 1988-89 fellowships, which are supported by a $250,000 grant from the foundation.

The grant allows the program to award six postdoctoral fellowships over a three-year period to scholars interested in issues related to rural women.

Fink was a visiting assistant professor in the UI Women's Studies Program during 1984-1985.

Symonds is currently a visiting professor at Bucknell University.

Volunteers needed by local agencies

Numerous volunteers are needed for Iowa City area agencies and services.

The Nelson Center needs volunteer weavers experienced in dressing loom with sectional warp beam to occasionally assist weavers there. For more information, call 337-7326.

The Iowa City Public Library needs volunteers to assist with circulation duties and maintenance of furniture and woodwork. For further information, call the volunteer coordinator at 356-5200, or visit the library community services office on the second floor of the library.

The Visiting Nurses Association of Johnson County is seeking a volunteer to assist in filing medical records. A health professional volunteer is also needed to update professional materials. The volunteers would work two hours per week and are being asked for a six month commitment. Call the volunteer coordinator at 337-9686 for more information.

Volunteers are needed by the Elderly Services Agency to visit the homebound elderly in Iowa City. Call Joan Cook at 356-5218 to help with this program.

Volunteers are needed by the Community Mental Health Center to help people move. Vans and small pickups are also needed. For additional information, call Carole Lear at 338-7884.

Local public library awarded $1,000 grant

The Iowa City Public Library has been awarded $1,000 for its Summer Reading Games program for children. The money comes from a Gannett Foundation grant.

The Gannett Foundation also awarded a $1,000 grant to the Iowa City Tennis Association to sponsor a summer tennis program for youths age 7 to 18.

Iowa City Fire Department plans study of services

By Cathy Jackson
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Fire Department may improve its fire suppression and prevention services over the next five years as part of a Fire Emergency Services Master Plan beginning this week, according to Iowa City Fire Chief Larry Donner.

Donner said the master plan — a first for Iowa City — will begin with a study of the fire department's current capabilities that should take six to nine months to complete.

"We'll take a look at our current capabilities and compare them with what we'd like to see," Donner said. "We'll focus on strategies to bridge the gap if a gap exists."

When the study is finished, firefighters and department personnel will develop a five-year plan for reducing fire risk in the community.

"We'll set some targets and try to put together a program for meeting those targets within a five-year period," Donner said.

But Donner stressed the initiation of this plan, which was first discussed in June, is not a result of the outbreak of five major fires in the last four months.

"It's a good idea to take a look at what you've got periodically," he said. "We've had more serious fires this year than last year, but so far we've been able to deal with them."

Fires occurring in the past four months include an April 4 blaze set in the UI International Center, which caused an estimated $100,000 in damage. Since then there have been two other fires in and around the building.

A fire May 10 also destroyed Gay's Locker and Meat Market, 1421 Waterfront Drive.

In July, eight cars and some materials near Burge Residence Hall were set on fire, and fires at Windshire Condominiums and the Mar-Ke Motel in Coralville caused more than $180,000 in damage.

Donner didn't attribute the recent rash of fires to any one phenomenon.

"Our business is cyclical in nature," he said. "Some years are just busier than others."

The Iowa City Fire Department has been receiving help from the Johnson County Mutual Aid Association, a network of 12 Johnson County fire departments that provide each other with firefighters and equipment when needed.

Association Chairman David Meyer, Lone Tree, Iowa, said several fire departments in Johnson County are busier than usual this summer.

"There have been more fires because of the weather — a lot of grass fires," he said.

Donner said the heat is also drying out buildings this summer, making them more susceptible to fire.

Investigators organize probe into fiery Altoona train crash

ALTOONA, Iowa (AP) — Police and fire officials watched burning tank cars from a distance waiting for the fires to die Sunday while federal investigators began probing a fiery train crash that killed two and forced evacuation of more than 1,000.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board met for an hour with police Sunday and began to lay the groundwork for a probe of Saturday's fiery crash in a corn field northeast of this Des Moines suburb.

Police on Sunday began allowing those evacuated to return home, though they discouraged that step.

"We are telling them of the dangers and leaving it up to them," said Altoona Police Chief Britt Adair.

Mayor Tim Burget said fires were burning up fuel faster than expected and that officials were making arrangements to have fire fighting gear and heavy equipment on hand Monday morning in hopes of beginning a cleanup of the debris.

"At this point, things are looking better all the time — it looks good at this time. We're getting confident nothing is going to happen," the mayor told reporters.

Federal investigators began their work Sunday, but said findings would not come quickly.

"This is a long process, and it could take anywhere from six to nine months," said Edward Dobranetski, who is heading a six-member NTSB investigating team.

Their probe was hampered by a fire which continued to rage in two tank cars containing denatured alcohol, with officials warning there was still a danger one could explode.

After hazardous material experts examined the wreck Sunday, Adair said officials decided to simply allow the fire to burn out, a process which could take until late Monday.

"As long as we sit and watch it, we're in a safe situation," Adair said. "If we try to mess with it we could be in trouble."

Officials earlier had feared that a jammed pressure release valve on one of the tanks could spur an explosion, but Adair said the inspection revealed valves on both cars working.

"Pressure is being relieved on both tanks," he said. "It's very dangerous, there's no question about it."

"At this point, I'm keeping the governor apprised," said David Roederer, an aide to Gov. Terry Branstad. "There really hasn't been any change."

Police swept through the area Saturday evacuating residents, sending them to local churches and elementary schools for the night. By Sunday, crowds had thinned as most found other arrangements for an expected long absence from their homes.

Security was tight around the scene. Warren Winter, a part-time photographer for The Associated Press, said highway patrol troopers confiscated his film after he slipped through the barriers and took pictures of the wreckage.

"I saw one fuel tanker burning like mad," he said. "It's a big burning mess."

Dobranetski said the probe was being broken into "investigative teams" who would begin the probe before meeting later Sunday to review initial data.

"Drug testing will be done," he said. "It's required by law."

He would not speculate how two trains ended up on the same track headed in opposite directions.

"The safety board has declared this to be a major rail accident," he said. "This was our organizational meeting."

Police cars and fire engines were scattered throughout this city of 5,700 just outside Des Moines keeping all roads to the crash site sealed. Branstad toured the scene Saturday night, but was kept a mile away from the crash itself, and aides were keeping him informed of developments.

The vigil began just before noon on Saturday when two Iowa Interstate trains collided head-on.

Iowa Interstate officials were included in Sunday's meeting. "They are cooperating fully with us," Dobranetski said. "We have not interviewed anyone yet."

He said separate groups would include hazardous materials experts, operations specialists and "we have a mechanical group that will be inspecting the equipment."

The two killed were identified as William Peers of Des Moines, and Larry Buckingham Jr. of Winterset, both long-time employees of the railroad.

Rail officials said the eastbound train was pulling 78 cars, while the westbound train pulled eight. The eastbound train was headed from Council Bluffs to Chicago, while the westbound was a local freight going from Newton to Des Moines.

severe core melt accident occurring in the U.S. within the next two decades.

Although safety concerns have been expressed before about the Mark I design, recent developments have brought the issue into sharper focus.

After the April 1986 Chernobyl disaster in the Soviet Union, industry spokesmen first reported the Chernobyl reactor had no containment structure. Subsequent information, however, revealed the plant did have a containment, the top of which was blown off by the explosion following the overheating and burning of the reactor's core.

The Chernobyl containment was very similar to the Mark I, according to nuclear policy analyst Jim Riccio of the Nuclear Information and Resource Service.

"To build the bigger and stronger containment required to withstand the amount of energy that could be released in a severe accident would simply have priced the Mark I's out of the marketplace. So General Electric had to find a cheap containment. The Mark I is that containment," says nuclear engineer Robert Pollard, formerly with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

would buy the GE containment design.

"If you read the Reed Report, which is GE's own critique of their design, they're exceedingly harsh," said policy analyst Jim Riccio.

around each reactor. GE incorporated this containment design, now labeled the Mark I, into its boiling water reactors.

And according to GE spokeswoman Lynn Wallis, the Mark I containment is a safe design.

"The Mark I has been used for a significant number of years in this country as well as many countries overseas without any problem or impact as far as the public health is concerned," Wallis said.

"The defense-in-depth approach that's used on all reactors in the Western countries relies on several different elements — mitigation as well as prevention, so you really have to look at everything that goes into the safety of the system, not just one element," Wallis said. "That's been done by regulatory agencies and they've concluded that the Mark I meets regulatory criteria as far as health and safety are concerned."

Ken Bossong, director of the Critical Mass Energy Project, disagrees with Wallis's assessment.

"The main problem is that the containment dome is too small and it's not thick enough to handle the pressures that would build up in a containment in the event of a core melt accident," Bossong said. "As a general class, the Mark I design is among the most dangerous in the country."

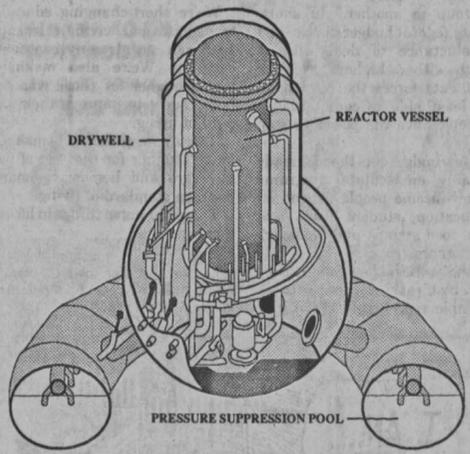

Nuclear engineer Robert Pollard, now with the Union of Concerned Scientists, quit the NRC in 1976 over the safety of the Mark I design.

"To build the bigger and stronger containment required to withstand the amount of energy that could be released in a severe accident would simply have priced the Mark I's out of the marketplace," Pollard said. "So General Electric had to find a cheap containment. The Mark I is that containment."

"It is an eggshell containment," he said. "They have, at most at Duane Arnold, one-inch-thick steel plate, compared to the several feet of reinforced concrete on other reactors."

"Even without a major accident, the chance of busting the Mark I containment is extremely high," Pollard said. "It's just a very weak design which was necessitated by economics."

Duane Arnold Energy Center Reactor

The Daily Iowan/Rod Faccio

In response to Chernobyl, the NRC attempted to measure the consequences of a comparable accident in the U.S. The commission concluded a core melt accident at a boiling water reactor with a Mark I containment structure could kill up to 20,000 people from eventual cancers and could cause up to $12 billion in off-site property damage.

Besides Chernobyl, the other recent setback for the Mark I was a series in the Cleveland Plain Dealer in May 1987. The Plain Dealer reported that a confidential internal report prepared by GE in 1975, which the company had managed to keep from public scrutiny for 12 years, was highly critical of the Mark I series containment design.

According to the Plain Dealer, the 1,000 page "Reed Report" called the containment design flawed, said the technology to fix the problems might never exist and recommended future contracts be written in such a way that no one

"This isn't coming from public interest groups. This is coming from the people that helped design it."

Questions about the Mark I containment system date back to its initial design in the early 1970s.

The problem for GE planners was that boiling water reactors require a significantly larger volume of water than competitors' pressurized water reactors. The larger volume of water generates more steam, meaning that GE reactors would require larger, stronger and more expensive containment structures.

To reduce costs, GE incorporated a pressure suppression system into its reactors. The system was designed to condense steam released during an accident by directing it into a pool of water, thereby limiting pressure inside the containment.

With the volume and pressure of the steam reduced, a smaller containment structure could be built

Safety of GE containments questioned by nuclear plants

David Vestal
Special to The Daily Iowan

Some utilities that use General Electric containments in their nuclear power plants are now questioning the adequacy of those systems.

Last November, GE settled a lawsuit involving the ill-fated Zimmer reactor in Ohio for $78.3 million. Zimmer's owners had charged GE knowingly sold them a flawed containment design, and sought damages approaching $1 billion.

Analysis

While GE declared the Zimmer settlement a victory, utilities in California, Washington and Nebraska are suing GE for alleged design defects in their Mark I series containments.

Officials at the Nuclear Regulatory Commission have yet to decide what, if anything, to do in light of the accumulating data on the Mark I, the containment design used in the Duane Arnold Energy Center.

According to NRC Public Affairs Officer Sue Ganger, final recommendations on Mark I improvements will be received from the containment task force this summer and the NRC will act on the recommendations in the fall.

The industry does not expect any further regulation by the NRC. "As far as the industry is concerned, the Mark I controversy is resolved," said Tom Price, director of public relations for NUMRAC, the nuclear utility owners trade organization. "The NRC has said that at this point they have no plans to take any further steps regarding the Mark I containment," Price said.

"These plants are ticking time bombs. The likelihood of an accident increases as a plant gets older, and there is pretty solid physical evidence of that," says Ken Bossong, director of the Critical Mass Energy Project.

Nonetheless, the Mark I is still a hot topic within the NRC. Inside NRC, a widely read industry newsletter, reported in February that the Mark I safety controversy has "divided the (NRC) staff."

The article said that "an increasingly bitter bureaucratic battle" over the Mark I at the NRC has even led to "threats involving job security and research funding."

There is "literally a war going on," the article said, between those who take the position that a containment failure "is almost a certainty in the event of severe core melt" and "senior staff members who are doing everything they can to make sure the game is played by industry's rules."

Mark I critics charge that if no action is taken by the NRC, the danger of plant accidents will increase. "These plants are ticking time bombs," said director of the Critical Mass Energy Project Ken Bossong. "The likelihood of an accident increases as a plant gets older, and there is pretty solid physical evidence of that."

"So even if there has not been an accident in the past, as all these GE plants continue to operate, become more brittle, and age, the likelihood of an accident increases substantially," Bossong said.

Given the current regulatory landscape, Mark I opponents like Robert Pollard of the Union of Concerned Scientists doubt any further regulatory measures will be forthcoming.

"I really do believe nothing rational is going to get done until somebody dies, in which case they won't need me to tell them something needs to be done," Pollard said.

At least until the safety debate is resolved, the 24 plants that depend on Mark I containments, including Duane Arnold, will continue to operate.

Planned waste dump creates area concern

CLEAR LAKE, Ind. (AP) — A regional dump for radioactive waste planned for Michigan is creating fallout in Indiana among residents who fear the site could contaminate food and water supplies.

The federal Low Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980 requires each state to find a safe and adequate disposal for low-level radioactive waste. A compact of Midwestern states has chosen Michigan as the first host for a collective dump that would also serve Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri and Wisconsin.

Michigan officials say a site selection is unlikely before late 1990 or early 1991, but local grocer Lawrence Davis believes the repository will be placed near Hillsdale, Mich., about 15 miles from this community nestled in the northeast corner of Indiana.

"The Michigan watershed contains 95 percent of the usable (surface) water supply in the United States," he said. "It flows south from there. If you contaminate that area, you can contaminate the whole water supply and food supply."

At a meeting Saturday, Davis outlined evidence that Michigan plans to put the repository near where the Michigan, Indiana and Ohio borders meet, probably in Camden Township of Hillsdale County.

Correction

Nancy A. Mortensen was incorrectly identified in the SPI Ballot Election Ballot mailed last week in campus mail as Nancy Anderson. Doug Allaire was correctly identified in the mailing. The Daily Iowan regrets the confusion.

Opening the courts

Many family court systems, those that typically deal with child abuse and sexual molestation cases, are closed to the general public and reporters alike. This policy of designating the courtroom as off-limits to the press has traditionally been an attempt to protect children from the trauma associated with trial publicity. But in reality, this policy of exclusion indirectly hurts the very children whose well-being these laws seek to protect. By disallowing reporters into the courtrooms of these cases, abused and sexually molested children who are mishandled by the Foster Care System and social services systems are further endangered.

Obviously, more money is needed for the training of court-appointed advocates, to hire social workers and give them competitive salaries, to administer appropriate evaluations of potential foster care parents and a host of other needs. But what does this have to do with allowing reporters in the courtroom during trials which are of this nature? Everything.

The reason, among others, that adequate funds are not available to these programs is that the public is only marginally aware of the miserable failings of these programs. How is it that parents lose custody of their children because of abusive tendencies yet they regain custody within the year and subsequently murder their children? Why do foster care parents sometimes turn out to be the worst influence a particular child is ever exposed to?

The reasons stem from the inadequacy of the system in general. And nowhere are these failings more graphically and concretely depicted as in the courtroom. Reporters must be allowed into the courtroom to be in a position to make objective and insightful analyses of current problems — their origin, development and frightful culmination.

Logo controversy

Bureaucrats are not famously good risk-takers, but Iowa's own Department of Economic Development achieved new heights of cowardly paralysis when it asked 400 businesses to stop using the Iowa logo.

The logo, introduced in 1979 to foster consumer loyalty to Iowa-made products and attract new businesses, is shaped like the state and reads, "A Quality Product From Iowa."

The hitch, as it turns out, is the word "quality" — which turns the logo into a product endorsement and opens the door to potential lawsuits against the state by dissatisfied customers.

How serious is the threat of a lawsuit against the state? Not very. In the nine years since the word "quality" was added to the logo, no suit has been filed, not even threatened. Until January when the DED decided to nix the program, the subject had never even come up.

That's a pretty good track record — not just for Iowa-made products, but for a program that promotes the state as a good place to do business.

On Friday, Gov. Branstad stepped in and announced that the state would find a way to continue its logo program. Doubtless that will require changing the language to something more neutral — "Iowa products are OK, we guess," or as a DED spokesman suggested, "Try Iowa."

Pretty tepid, self-defeating stuff. It's hard to imagine a single consumer or business that would be moved by it.

Bottom line, if Iowa really is a place where quality products are made, then the DED shouldn't be afraid to say so.

If it isn't, then the DED is a big waste of money.

Forsaking the future

The facts are mounting, but very few people seem concerned. Record high temperatures, record low precipitation, increasing pollution, shrinking forests.

Steadily, contemporary circumstances are beginning to lend credence to the futuristic theory that the earth's average temperature is on the rise. The greenhouse effect, the phenomenon in which pollution accumulates in the atmosphere thereby trapping the earth's heat and raising global temperatures, was once dismissed as a science fiction fantasy. But now prominent researchers are among those calling for immediate action to forestall the dangerous consequences of the warming trend.

According to the greenhouse theory, man-made pollution — particularly carbon dioxide and fluorocarbons — builds up in the atmosphere, destroying the protective ozone layer, causing acid rain and preventing the natural cooling processes from taking place. Deforestation, which is occurring at an alarming 27 million acres per year, exacerbates the situation because trees absorb carbon dioxide. The result is that global temperatures may rise by 3 to 9 degrees Fahrenheit by early in the 21st century.

While a few degrees may not seem like much, one must recall that during the last ice age, the earth's average temperature was only about five degrees colder than it is now. A warming of five degrees could transform the Midwest into a permanent dustbowl. When other effects, like rising oceans and receding lakes, are factored in, the total environmental, economic and social damage is almost incalculable.

Still, the U.S. government is slow to respond. It hesitates to take steps to stop acid rain and outlaw fluorocarbons. Perhaps nothing more can be expected from the Reagan administration, especially since it only has six months left to serve, but the next president and administration must take action. To ignore this problem any longer is to forsake the future.

Tax increase is no disgrace

There are worse things in life than a tax increase. Keep that in mind over the next few months during the presidential campaign. Vice President George Bush has already pledged he will not raise taxes. Democratic nominee Mike Dukakis has said he would raise taxes only as a last resort.

Both remember what happened to Walter Mondale in 1984 when he said he would raise taxes to pay off the federal budget deficit.

Both candidates seem to be saying about the U.S. what the Los Angeles Times said in a June editorial about the effects of Proposition 13 on California. (Proposition 13 was an initiative passed by California voters in 1978 to reduce property taxes and limit future tax increases.) "Some people say that California enjoys a rich future by keeping taxes low and government out of the way of business."

But, as the Times also mentioned, "the evidence to the contrary is mounting daily. . . The cumulative effects can be seen in California's conversion from a special place of opportunity for all into a land of haves and have-nots. There are colonies of those who have it made. Then there are those who are being priced out of the housing market, if not out of the California dream altogether.

There has been tax relief but at a cost never envisioned in 1978. While California has dropped to 24th among the states in state and local taxes as a proportion of personal income, government has been starved from all directions. Ten years ago the first reductions hit such local programs as libraries and parks. Now they have cut into the muscle of public services statewide: education, highways, mass transit, emergency health care and even fire and police services.

"A united California used to plan and build for the future and for excellence. Today a fractured California fails to cope even with the growth that it has."

You might say, "that's California—that's there, we're here, big deal." Well, before these big federal budget deficits, a "united" America used to plan and build for the future and for excellence. Today, like California, we fail to cope with the problems we've got.

Why do you think students loans are harder to get? Why do you think federal grants are much more restricted now than previously? Why do you think interest rates on loans for such things as cars and houses have stayed high, even though inflation has gone down? Why are Japanese investors putting their money into real estate in Hawaii and California, aggravating the already high housing costs of those areas?

The reason these things are happening is simple. As the Times pointed out, "keeping taxes low does not alter the needs of society. It merely transfers the cost from one group to another." In short, the high federal budget deficit and our reluctance to deal with it through either higher taxes or budget cuts forces the burden on those least able to cope, because they don't have the power to stop it.

The few budget cuts that are made inevitably emasculate programs that low-income people depend on — education, student loans and grants, food stamps and Medicaid, among others.

Secondly, the budget deficit forces up interest rates. It does this for the simple reason that the money you pay for the deficit has to come from somewhere. Those higher interest rates are great if you have money and can make investments like the Japanese investor.

But if you want to buy a car or house, or start a business, and you need a loan to do it, you pay a higher interest rate on that loan. That rate may be one you simply cannot afford.

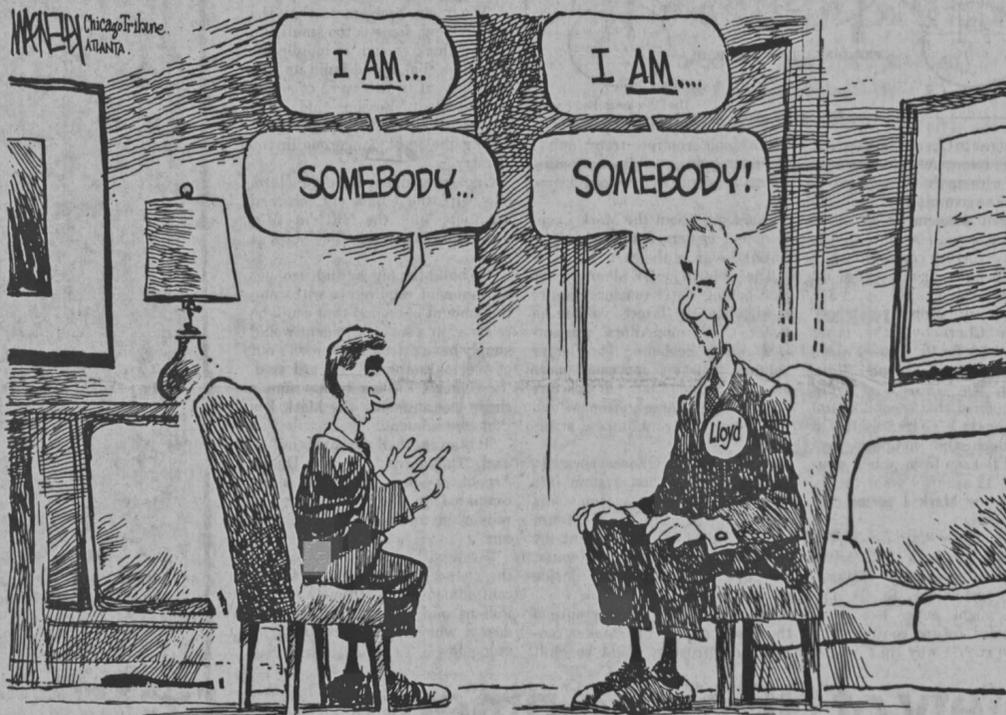

In short, because of our reluctance as voters to deal frankly with the budget deficit, and because of our reluctance to increase taxes, the federal government, like California's, is not making the investments this society need to grow and prosper.

We're short-changing education, transportation, civilian scientific research and environmental clean up. We're also making it much tougher for those who don't have much, to improve their standard of living.

And the large deficit is making it much tougher for the rest of us to buy cars and homes, to improve our own standard of living.

There are worse things in life than a tax increase.

Disconnecting telemarketers

Chicago man has a way to fight back

Maybe you're changing a diaper, doing the laundry, cooking a meal or putting in your contacts. Whatever. The phone rings and you hastily put aside what you're doing to answer it. The call might be important. Then the voice says: "Hi, how are you? I'm from the Yacketyack Corporation and we'd like to know if you are interested in . . ."

Another sales pitch. Or maybe you're working in the office, as I was a couple of weeks ago, when a young man from a brokerage house called. I politely told him I wasn't interested in letting a stranger invest my money. A few minutes later, he called back. He wanted to know if I had thought about it and changed my mind.

Is there no defense against these pests? Because we have telephones, must we accept being interrupted and hassled by people trying to sell us what we don't want or need? Must we be at the mercy of this enormous growth industry — telemarketing — which is making billions of nuisance phone calls a year, pitching magazines, furnace cleaning, aluminum siding and penny stocks?

The answer, I've recently discovered, is no, we don't have to take it. There is a way we can fight back against junk phone calls.

After I wrote about the persistent broker, a friend of mine told me about a paralegal he knows who has developed an effective defense strategy.

He makes the callers pay him for the use of his time, which he considers his personal property. He's even taken a few of them to court and has collected.

His name is Robert Bulmash, 42, and this is how he does it: "When they call me, I give them my speech. I say: 'I am Robert Bulmash. My address is . . . Any subsequent calls from your business will be accepted on a for-hire basis for the use of my personal property and time for your commercial purposes. You may call me for any other purposes other than telephone solicitation. You can call and say it's the wrong number or your car broke down or that you're having trouble with your neighbor. Anything but a sales pitch.'"

"They usually say, 'Yeah, right.'"

"If they call again, and they often do, I write to the company and say they owe me money because I made it clear that I didn't want to be called again. If they fail to respond, I go to the next supervisor up the line. If he doesn't agree that he owes me money, I take them to small claims court."

So far, he has taken five companies to court. And about eight others sent him checks to avoid being taken to court.

This isn't big money. Altogether, he's collected about $150 from 10 or 12 companies. But he recently nailed another one, and it has promised to send him $100 soon.

Mike Royko

In one case, against Plan-O-Soft Water Conditioning, he was making his presentation when the judge said: "Yeah, I was called twice during yesterday's ball game." Then he awarded Bulmash, who lives in the Chicago area, 97 cents and $38 in court costs.

"When I write and they realize I'm serious, they usually try to avoid going to court and settle. I got the United Consumers Club for $50 that way."

Most people don't have Bulmash's legal savvy or his tenacity. So he's starting a business in which he will represent people who don't want junk phone calls.

"I've already incorporated with the state. It's called Private Citizens, Inc."

"What I'll do is this: For a small fee, possibly $15, I will put a person on a list of names. Then I'll send this list to over 400 telemarketers. I'll notify these telemarketers that these people do not wish to be called at home. I'll let them know that if they ignore the wishes of the people on the list, they will have to pay or be taken to court."

"Once they realize that we mean business, and they'll have to pay for calling someone who doesn't want to be called, they'll think twice about doing it."

Bulmash says he's doing this as much for principle as profit. "The right of privacy is what I'm concerned about. The right to be left alone. Supreme Court Justice (Louis) Brandeis once said that the right to be left alone is the most comprehensive of rights and the one most valued by civilized man. Nowhere is that right more important than at home. Commercialization isn't going to chase me out of my house."

Well, I'm signing up for Mr. Bulmash's service. And if you're interested, drop me a note or card at The Tribune, 435 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60611, and I'll pass it along to him.

Then when the phone rings, and the voice says, "Hi, I'm from the Yacketyack Corp., and we're interested in knowing whether you're interested in . . ." you can say:

"You have just hired my phone, my ear and my time, Yacketyack Corp. You will receive an itemized bill from me. I expect prompt payment by the first of the month. Thank you very much, sucker."

Four tired Quad-City Times Bix 7 participants cool off from their seven-mile run with refreshments at the Oasis in downtown Davenport Saturday morning. Kathy Levetzow, Nafiseh Vossoughi, Cresta Vossoughi and Eric Lungren were among the record 12,425 who participated in the Bix.

Student leaders impressed with UI President Rawlings

By Paula Roesler
The Daily Iowan

New UI President Hunter Rawlings III seems to have a higher regard for student concerns than past administrators, according to "impressed" student leaders. But Rawlings has his work cut out for him. "The thing I'm most looking forward to in Hunter Rawlings becoming president is his concern for students," UI Collegiate Associations Council Vice President Gordon Fischer said. "I think that he is going to listen far more than past administrators. "I don't expect him to agree with us on everything A to Z, but at least if students are given the chance to give input things will improve," he added. UI Student Senate President Melinda Hess said the Senate hopes Rawlings will support general funding for UI daycare centers, oppose tuition increases and meet more frequently with student groups. "He's obviously making it clear to students that we are one of his priorities, and I'm impressed with that," Hess said. Rawlings convened with the Senate in June and agreed to meet with the group monthly rather than semesterly, she said. Hess added she would like to see Rawlings give the Senate a regular place on the agenda to voice student concerns at state Board of Regents meetings. "If there's a student outcry about something, he should take it seriously," she added. UI Graduate Student Senate President Bill Lipton said GSS this year will continue to lobby for re-implementation of the exemption status on graduate student stipends. Lipton said he would like to see Rawlings support this opposition to the new tax laws. "We'd like to see him approve it," Lipton said. GSS would also like to hold monthly meetings with Rawlings, Lipton added. United Students of Iowa UI Campus Director Kristi Holcomb said Rawlings should ensure accessibility to higher education and foster positive communication with the state legislature. "It's important the university as a state-funded organization be accountable to the state and keep a good open line of communication between the administration and the state legislators," Holcomb said. "I think it's up to President Rawlings to do this. "When (the student government is) speaking with state legislators, it's important that they see the university as something that's contributing to the state," she said. Holcomb said USI hopes to recruit between 20 and 30 members this fall. The organization deals with voter education and lobbies for higher education issues, she said, adding the group is intended to be a legislative branch of Senate and CAC.

Denison rider dies of heart attack

FAIRFIELD, Iowa (AP)—A Denison man participating in the Des Moines Register's weeklong bicycle ride across Iowa died early Saturday of a heart attack. Jefferson County Medical Examiner T.J. Sutton said the victim, Allan Gene Polikowski, 45, was found in a swing at about 5:30 a.m. at the home of Roy Eubanks in Fairfield. Polikowski's body was taken to Ottumwa for an autopsy. He was staying at the Eubanks home when he died. Polikowski was one of at least 7,500 people on the ride, known as the Register's Annual Great Bike Ride Across Iowa who made the 74-mile trip Friday from Oskaloosa to Fairfield. Riders have been plagued by high heat and humidity on this week's ride.

Alumni

The IBAA began as a get-together of alumni during a picnic 25 years ago, according to McKinley "Deacon" Davis, a founder of the association. Since then, 400 of the 1,500 black UI graduates have joined the group. Approximately 200 of that "family" attended the weekend reunion. "This family has come a long way since our one-plate dinner in our backyard 25 years ago," Deacon Davis said. "We have a feel for one another — that's a hard ingredient to beat — and that's one thing that has helped us stay together." The award ceremony's theme "Excellence of the past, promise of the future" was an appropriate one, he said, which signifies the organization's commitment to helping black students at the UI today. "During the past 25 years, we've worked hard to make it easier for those who have come and will come after us — in good times and in bad times they have been able to count on us," he said.

Dog days of summer provide break for editors, politicians

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Iowans just completed the sort of week that drives editors crazy, but one suspects most people found it a pleasant sort of diversion. In short, very little happened. "I think the state's asleep or on vacation," said Dick Vohs, a spokesman for Gov. Terry Branstad. "It's kind of the dog days of summer." In politics, Democrats were recuperating from their convention, and were apparently so overdosed on campaign rhetoric that they couldn't summon any more. Lt. Gov. JoAnn Zimmerman chased down a reporter on the Statehouse lawn, but her mission was to lay plans for an annual softball game pitting the press against the Democrats. Republicans were readying themselves for their gathering in New Orleans, desperately hoping that certain nominee George Bush would keep his vice presidential pick a secret so there will be at least some news that week. In state government, Branstad decided to go along on this year's bicycle ride across the state and his most serious public utterance was a confession that he ran out of breath and had to walk his bicycle halfway up a hill near Boone. More than a third of the Legislature opted to spend the week in Reno, Nev., at a convention where, presumably, discussions were held on topics other than gambling. Even had lawmakers been in the state, this year's calendar shows that there are weeks before the abbreviated schedule of interim committees begin to meet. They won't begin to worry seriously about the campaign trail until after Labor Day, and the two political parties are in the laying-the-groundwork phase for the fall election. With state government essentially on the road, there was ample free time. "I think I've had four phone calls all day," said one legislative staffer. The biggest excitement to hit the Statehouse came when 10,000 bicyclists camped there in mid-week, prompting scores of phone calls from staffers worried about where they'd park in the morning. Typically, many opted not to come until 10 a.m., after the cyclists had departed the following day. Vohs made a couple of trips to catch up with his bicycling boss and said he tried to get a sounding of the political tides, but instead heard a lot of vacation stories. In all, a sort of lazy Midwestern lethargy gripped the state, summing childhood memories of simpler days spent strolling along a river, soaking up the sun and contemplating nothing more urgent than that day's mischief. "This is Iowa at its best," Branstad said as he arrived at the Statehouse complex. He wasn't only referring to a bike ride.

Mother faces possible kidnapping charges

DES MOINES (AP) — A Des Moines woman accused of holding her 7-year-old son against his will and aiding her boyfriend in beating the child should not be charged with kidnapping, the woman's lawyer contends. Peter Berger asked Friday that first-degree kidnapping charges be dropped against Donna Simmons, 32, who is accused of aiding her boyfriend, Larry Seimer, 32, in torturing her son, Tracey Simmons. The lawyer contended in court documents that a parent can't be charged with kidnapping her own child, especially when the child never was taken from the home. Simmons and Seimer initially were charged with felony child endangerment, which carries a maximum 10-year prison term upon conviction. The kidnapping charge, filed against both Seimer and Simmons, carries a mandatory life sentence without parole. Seimer is accused of holding Tracey against his will in the basement of the Des Moines home the couple shared. Officials have said the boy was handcuffed to a bed, beaten and tortured when scalding water was poured over his genitals to teach him about lying. Berger said that filing kidnapping charges against a parent is a dangerous precedent, but Polk County Attorney James Smith said it was appropriate in this case. "That's one of the issues we anticipated would be raised in this particular case," said Smith.

Greenpeace plans visit to Dubuque

DUBUQUE (AP) — The environmental activist group Greenpeace has received permission to dock its research boat, the Beluga, at Dubuque's Hawthorne Street boat ramp Sept. 2 and 3 as the group conducts its Mississippi River anti-toxic pollution campaign. Greenpeace's visit to Dubuque will be coordinated by the Dubuque chapter of the Mississippi River Revival, a group which focuses on river environmental issues. The city granted permission for the docking of the Mississippi River Revival in a July 21 letter. Scientists from Greenpeace are scheduled to leave Minneapolis the last week of August and continue down the river with Iowa stops at Dubuque and the Quad Cities. Greenpeace officials say they are searching for toxic pollution violators who may be the target of the international group's "direct non-violent action." The organization has said action against violators could range from pushing for stronger state regulations to blocking underwater discharge pipes. The Mississippi River Revival in Dubuque will also include a river cleanup Aug. 13 and a "folks fest" Aug. 27 at Riverview Park with music, food, exhibits and children's activities.

Earthquakes shake Japan's Pacific coast

TOKYO — A series of undersea earthquakes Sunday shook the Pacific coastline of the Izu Peninsula, the Central Meteorological Agency said.

Officials reported no damage or injuries from the quakes, which measured up to 5.4 on the Richter scale.

A total of 73 quakes shook Izu since Tuesday, with at least 64 recorded on Sunday morning, according to the agency.

The strongest one, which occurred Sunday at 8:40 a.m. near the Izu coastal town of Ajiro, was felt in Tokyo 60 miles to the southwest.

Flood waters blamed for diseases in India

NEW DELHI, India — Eleven more people died Sunday from diseases blamed on flooding in New Delhi, health authorities said. The deaths brought to 212 the number of residents killed by cholera and gastroenteritis in the Indian capital since the beginning of July, when heavy monsoon rains hit New Delhi.

Officials blamed the diseases on flood waters that have washed through sewage and uncollected garbage and infiltrated drinking water.

Hospitals admitted at least 231 people suffering from the diseases Sunday, including 38 people with cholera, raising to 624 the number of reported cholera cases in this city of 8 million, health officials said.

More than 16,000 patients have sought treatment for the two diseases in July, according to official figures.

The areas hardest-hit by the epidemic are slums, where garbage has not been collected for months because of a dispute over which municipal agencies are responsible.

Soviets report increase in violent crimes

MOSCOW — The number of murders and assaults in the Soviet capital increased this year, and an investigation of police corruption resulted in the firing of about 1,200 people, a police official said.

However, the number of all violent crimes in the city has decreased, according to Lt. Gen. P.S. Bogdanov, chief of Moscow's Administration of Internal Affairs, which controls police affairs.

He said the city's juvenile crime rate has also increased.

Bogdanov's remarks at a recent news conference were published Sunday by Komsomolskaya Pravda, the national youth daily.

Bogdanov said, however, that the number of all crimes registered in Moscow declined by 9.6 percent compared to 1987. Violent crime — excluding murder and assault — dropped by 4.2 percent, he said.

Kansas man puts the bite on armed intruder

OLATHE, Kan. — One of two men accused of trying to rob a couple in their apartment had his ear bitten off in a struggle that followed the foiled robbery, police said.

Two men on Saturday knocked on the door of the apartment shared by Columbus Neal and Nikki Hernandez, forced their way in and demanded money, said Lt. Frank Galbrecht of the Olathe Police Department.

One intruder was armed with a knife and the other with a shotgun, Galbrecht said.

While the would-be robbers were inside, Neal's brother, Kendall Neal, and another friend arrived at the apartment to visit. When the two guests heard a commotion inside the apartment, they burst in and attacked the intruders, Galbrecht said.

Columbus Neal joined the struggle and bit off the right ear of one of the intruders before the men fled, Galbrecht said.

The 34-year-old man was arrested when he went to an Olathe hospital to seek treatment. Galbrecht said a police officer took the severed ear to the hospital, where it was sewn back on. A 25-year-old suspect also was arrested near the apartment complex about the same time.

First sunset in months for Alaskan town

BARROW, Alaska — The sun will briefly dip below the horizon Tuesday on Alaska's North Slope, ending almost three months of round-the-clock daylight and signaling the approach of the long winter darkness.

The sun will set at 2:19 a.m. on Aug. 2 and rise again at 2:49 a.m., the first sunset since May 10, noted the National Weather Service station in Barrow, a coastal town well above the Arctic Circle.

"I'm disappointed that the sun is setting so soon," said Margaret Gray, a Barrow resident. "It didn't seem very long that it was up in the sky all the time."

Summer in Barrow and the seven villages in the North Slope Borough typically is a time of non-stop outdoor activity. It is not unusual to see children on playgrounds at midnight.

Iran reports gains in Gulf war

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said its forces recaptured three towns on the western war front Sunday and repelled two Iraqi attacks. Iraq declared it would "maintain our finger on the trigger" until peace was assured in the Persian Gulf.

An Iranian envoy said his country would do its best to cease attacks on shipping in the gulf, and he said he expected U.S. flags to be removed soon from Kuwaiti tankers operating in the gulf.

Iraqi-backed Iranian rebels dismissed as "absurd" a claim made Friday by Hashemi Rafsanjani, the speaker of Iran's Parliament and commander of the armed forces, that the rebels killed 30 patients at a hospital in the town of Eslamabad in western Iran.

The rebels said some residents of Eslamabad had joined their forces and Iran bombed and shelled the town in reprisal.

Tehran radio said Iranian forces "liberated" the towns of Qasr-e Shirin, Sar-e Pol-e Zahab and Sumar and repulsed what it described as a "feeble enemy offensive" farther north, killing or wounding hundreds of Iraqis.

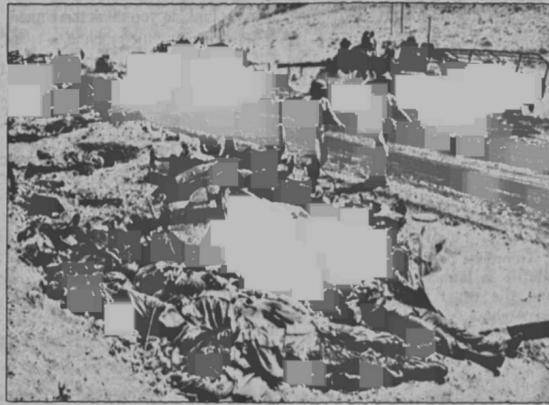

On Saturday, Iraq announced its forces had withdrawn from the three towns in a planned withdrawal after achieving their objectives of disrupting Iranian supply lines and capturing prisoners.

The towns are not far from the border and have changed hands several times over the past 10 days, according to both Iranian and Iraqi accounts.

An Iraqi night offensive against the Iranian border town of Mehran farther south was repulsed with heavy losses, Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

The agency said Iranian forces assisted by local tribesmen forced the Iraqis to retreat, liberating 15 square miles of Iranian territory.

The official Iraqi News Agency reported a woman was killed and eight other people wounded in

In this photo, released by the Iranian Revolutionary News Agency Saturday, Iranian soldiers tour an area strewn with dead Iraqi soldiers and Iraqi vehicles near the western Iranian town of Gharb Friday.

Iranian shelling of the northern border township of Qal'at Dizah. Iran denied shelling the town.

In Baghdad, the Iraqi capital, the army newspaper Al-Qadisiyah said that until "genuine peace" was assured, "we will maintain our finger on the trigger."

The newspaper repeated Iraq's contention that Iran's acceptance of a U.N. cease-fire resolution seemed designed to let the country catch its breath after a series of losses on the battlefield.

"We are not so foolish as to be bluffed by this game and let the dead body (Iran) rise again and relaunch aggression against our country," the newspaper said.

Similar articles appeared in two other government-run newspapers, Al-Jumhuriyah and Al-Thawra. The editorials appeared aimed at dampening public expectations for peace soon.

Iran and Iraq have been locked in dispute at the United Nations over Iraq's demand for face-to-face talks before a truce. Iran has rejected direct talks until a cease-fire is achieved. Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister Ali Mohammad Besharati, asked whether his country would continue to attack neutral ships in the Persian Gulf, said: "We will try to do our best not to violate anything . . . so that Resolution 598 will come into reality."

Until last week, Iranian vessels had been attacking neutral shipping in the southern Persian Gulf in retaliation for Iraqi attacks on oil tankers plying Iranian ports.

Besharati made his comments Saturday in Abu Dhabi, in the United Arab Emirates. He is currently touring Persian Gulf nations in a bid to underscore what he says is Iran's desire to cooperate with peace moves.

Asked about U.S. hostages in Lebanon, Besharati said "so far, no Western country has negotiated the hostage issue with us. If they did so, we promise to use all our influence to release them."

Hussein attempts to distance Jordan from Palestinian issue

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — King Hussein on Sunday called for an independent Palestinian state in the Israeli-occupied territories and appeared to rule out the idea of Jordan representing Palestinians in any peace talks.

"Jordan is not Palestine," the king said in a speech. "The independent Palestinian state will be established on occupied Palestinian land after its liberation, God willing."

It was not the first time Hussein had called for an independent Palestinian state, but it was the first time he categorically divorced himself from Palestinians in the occupied lands and told them to take affairs into their own hands.

Hussein said Jordan's links to them "hamper the Palestinian struggle to gain international support for the Palestinian cause, as the national cause of a people struggling against foreign occupation."

Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Sunday that Jordan would remain a key partner in the peace process, despite Hussein's vow to relinquish any control over the Israeli-occupied West Bank.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Peres' main political rival, suggested that Hussein's move was beneficial for Israel because it removed the West Bank as a potential issue of contention between Israel and Jordan.

Israel seized the West Bank from Jordan and the Gaza Strip from Egypt in the 1967 Middle East War.

Hussein's move could leave the Palestine Liberation Organization, which claims to be the sole representative of Palestinians, Israel's only negotiating partner in talks to resolve the issue. Israel refuses to talk to the PLO, calling it a terrorist organization.

The speech followed moves by Hussein to give greater responsibility for Palestinian affairs to the PLO.

On Saturday, he dissolved the lower house of Parliament. Half the house's members were from the West Bank. On Thursday, he canceled a $1.3 billion development project plan for the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

King Hussein described the measures as aimed at "enhancing the Palestinian national orientation and highlighting the Palestinian identity."

Commenting on the meaning of establishing an independent Palestinian state, Hussein said that "in addition to the PLO's ambition to embody the Palestinian identity on Palestinian national soil, (there should be) a separation of the West Bank from the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan."

"There the Palestinian identity will be embodied, and there the

Iran claims airbus tapes examined

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said aviation experts listened Sunday to cockpit-to-ground conversation taped minutes before a U.S. warship shot down an Iranian jetliner in the Persian Gulf, killing 290 people.

The International Civil Aviation Organization experts, who are in Iran to investigate the U.S. missile attack of the Iran Air jet, also visited a civil aviation control center.

Iranian officials presented "necessary documents" to the team, which is investigating at the request of Iran, said the official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Cyprus.

The agency said the five-man team listened to conversation taped minutes before the crash between the pilot of the Airbus and the control centers in the southern Iranian town of Bandar Abbas, Tehran and the United Arab Emirates city of Dubai.

The U.S. guided missile cruiser Vincennes shot down the plane July 3. American military officials said the plane was approaching in an "attack pattern" and transmitting military-style transponder signals.

Iran denied both claims. The two sides also have given conflicting accounts of the plane's altitude at the time it was downed by American surface-to-air missiles from the Vincennes.

The Montreal-based aviation organization assists international civil aviation by establishing technical standards for safety and efficiency of air navigation.

On Thursday, a team of U.S. military experts left the gulf after winding up a 3½-week investigation.

King Hussein

Palestinian struggle shall come to fruition as confirmed by the glorious uprising of the Palestinian people under occupation," he said.

The 8-month-old uprising in the Israeli-occupied territories has given greater international prominence to the Palestinian cause and increased calls for an independent state.

Shultz willing to meet with Iranian minister

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz said Sunday he would be willing to meet with Iran's foreign minister if a meeting were requested.

Shultz, in an interview on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," indicated direct U.S.-Iranian talks could include discussions about an end to the Iran-Iraq war, terrorism and hostage-taking but not the return of Iranian assets, which is being handled by an international court.

Shultz said U.S. officials are trying to find an "authoritative channel" for direct talks with Iran but he has not sought a meeting with Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati during the Iranian official's visit to the United Nations for peace talks.

"We don't have to go running around after people," Shultz said. But he added, "It's important to Iran to have a relationship with the United States and that will emerge in due time."

Asked whether he would meet with Velayati if such a meeting were requested, Shultz replied, "Sure," adding, "I don't know that it's necessarily the right way to start, to have the foreign ministers meet, but at any rate we have stated our policy."

He indicated the United States continues to make contacts with Iran through third countries and said U.S. officials have repeatedly expressed a willingness to hold direct talks on "what it takes for them to become part of the civilized community."

He said if Iran will stop the war, stop being involved in terrorism and stop promoting the taking of hostages, then "there is a prospect of more normal relations with us."

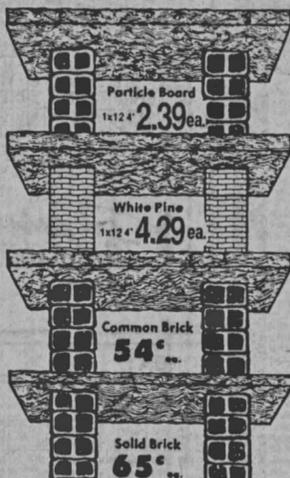

Shultz said the issue of releasing nine Americans held by pro-Iranian groups in Lebanon would have to be separate from financial and other considerations.

He noted that the issue of releasing Iranian assets held by the United States is being handled by a claims tribunal court in The Hague and "there is no reason to disrupt it." Iranian officials have suggested they might work for release of the hostages if the assets are returned, but Reagan administration officials have said they will make no such deal.

Shultz described the U.S. effort to sell arms to Iran in exchange for the hostages as "an aberration" and said the United States has a constant policy.

Shuttle scientists plan AIDS study

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Astronauts on the first post-Challenger shuttle flight may grow crystals of a protein taken from the AIDS virus in an experiment researchers hope will lead to drugs to fight the fatal disease.

The protein, reverse transcriptase, is an enzyme the AIDS virus uses to replicate its genetic material in order to reproduce and spread through the body, said Charles Bugg, a University of Alabama-Birmingham researcher.

"AIDS would never infect human cells without using this enzyme," said Bugg, coordinator for NASA, of protein experiments that are to be conducted aboard Discovery. The shuttle is scheduled to fly later this year.

come in Research Triangle Park, N.C., developed the experiment. NASA is making sure it meets safety guidelines.

"We want to make sure there is no danger of infection to the crew with just this protein," Bugg said.

Jim Ball, a NASA spokesman in Washington, said the review would take several weeks.

Krenitsky predicted that if the shuttle is launched in September and the experiment works well, researchers could have a model of the protein's structure by the end of the year. But he cautioned it could take 10 years to make a new AIDS drug.

Countdown resumes

Researchers want to grow the crystals of reverse transcriptase to decipher its structure. Crystals grown in space are not distorted by gravity while they form.

Scientists hope to learn how the AIDS virus takes over the genetic machinery inside a cell and use that knowledge to develop a drug to conquer AIDS.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A two-part countdown resumed Sunday for the test-firing of space shuttle Discovery's engines after engineers repaired a hydrogen leak and a balky oxygen pump.

The problems that cropped up Friday had caused the fourth postponement in 10 days for the test, which is considered critical to certifying Discovery for the first

The leak and pump were repaired Saturday, and the test-firing is now scheduled to take place Thursday.

Officials believe the delays, combined with an unresolved leak in Discovery's steering engine system,

The leak and pump problems developed Friday soon after technicians began pouring more than half a million gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen propellant into the spaceship's external fuel tank on Launch Pad 39B.

Wheelchair users protest movie depicting killings by quadriplegic

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A dozen wheelchair users demonstrated outside a Hollywood theater screening a new horror film, "Monkey Shines," which the activists claim portrays the disabled as bitter, evil murderers.

"We're tired of the wheelchair school of horror in Hollywood," said Bill Bolte, founder of ADAPT-Cal, a disabled rights group that organized the protest Saturday.

"It was filled with inaccuracies and out-and-out lies about handicapped people," said Bolte, 57, a quadruplegic who was afflicted with polio as a child and has been in a wheelchair for the last 12 years.

"Monkey Shines," an Orion Pictures production which opened Friday, is about a quadriplegic who uses a monkey trained to help severely disabled people to murder his ex-girlfriend, his doctor, his mother, his best friend and his nurse.

"The central insult is to another picture showing crippled people as 'bitter, angry cripples and murderers,'" Bolte said.

South African papers condemn government ban on 'Cry Freedom'

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Newspapers on Sunday condemned the government's ban on "Cry Freedom" and said the anti-apartheid film could help South Africans confront and address their deep racial divisions.

The movie tells the story of black South African activist Steve Biko, who died in police detention in 1977, and white journalist Donald Woods, who befriended him.

The film was approved by government censors Friday morning and immediately began playing in 30 theaters nationwide. However, police seized the film seven hours later, saying it was contributing to the "revolutionary climate" in South Africa.

"South Africans have been reminded anew that the government wants to decide for them what they should see, think, feel," the independent Sunday Star said in an editorial.

During the film's brief run, three bombs exploded at theaters where the movie was shown and there were several bomb threats.

But is it art? This question is frequently heard around works of fibre art. We all have a chance to ask this question at our very own UI Museum of Art until August 14th. "Katsiaticas, Purington, Schedl" is a show of fibre art by three artists there.

The work of fibre artists is controversial because of the unorthodox methods they employ in the making of their art. Instead of placing their work on a flat surface, like a painter or photographer would do, they involve every element of the piece. They often make their own paper and materials, combine them with found objects and/or paint them. The resulting piece is usually three dimensional and is a record of the process by which it was made as well as an artwork in itself.

would be "ginko." Purington's works are earmarked by excellent craftsmanship, and a disciplined oriental balance of shape, material and color.

"I am focusing on images from my daily life which reflect strength, continuity, wholeness and fertility. This focus is an attempt to bring balance to a life in the late 20th century where change travels on a laser beam and the sting of the cold war is not yet forgotten," she said.

Diane Katsiaticas, associate professor at the University of Minnesota, has the most radical work of the three. She is nationally known for her innovative work with paper but has never been accepted by other artists working with paper because of her departures from accepted practice. "I am concerned with our drift away from basic life patterns — our increasing isolation from nature and each other," she said.

UI professor Naomi Kark Schedl was born in South Africa, and her raffia fibre "Casket/Cradles" offer a powerful commentary on the future of children raised under apartheid rule. Her delicate and primitive style combined with her use of material which gives exquisite textures to her works makes them a delicacy for the eye — especially her colorful "Earth and Sky Blanket."

She said, "I value the cradles and blankets for their suggestion of humanity. At the same time they suggest an existential precariousness, one which is both personal and universal."

Visiting assistant professor Nancy Purington's works are more concerned with image-making technique and design quality unlike the earthy technique of Schedl. This probably stems from Purington's experience from working in a textile design studio in New York City. Her works have a distinctly Japanese flavor. Ideograms and stylized dragonflies are placed throughout her work. The most prevalent image is the ginko leaf. If her works could make a sound, it Katsiaticas's works are massive (often architectural) and have a striking strength of presence. She works with color and its characteristics of abstraction and representation. Using these and strongly figurative references, she creates hybrids from abstract formalist and conceptual concerns. She has incorporated specific references to archaeological fragments from her Greek heritage. Her "Porch" resembles an entrance to a Greek temple, but it is made of white twigs and branches and red beams.

Katsiaticas's work exudes a primitive strength and is filled with surprising formal invention. The obviousness of the materials in her work such as branches, string, stones and earth shatter the expectations of the viewer concerning the roster of fine art. She forces the viewer to redefine the borders (if there are any) between painting and sculpture.

But is it art? A thundering YES will be discovered at the Museum of Art. Be there, and make it before August 14th.

In a photo cutline for the story headlined "UI Opera premieres work: Donizetti's 'Elixir of Love' (DI, July 29), it was incorrectly reported that the tenor pictured with the pig was Jeffrey Hook. The man pictured is actually Richard Heard. The DI regrets the error.

Curp, Benoit-Samuels win Bix 7 race

DAVENPORT (AP) — Mark Curp, who finished second in each of the past two years, won the Quad-City Times Bix 7 run Saturday as a record 12,425 runners and walkers competed over the seven-mile course.

It was his second victory since 1985. Curp, of Lee's Summit, Mo., finished in 33 minutes, 22 seconds, ahead of Bill Reifsnnyder of Williamsport, Pa., who finished in 34:04.

Defending champion Joseph Nzau of Laramie, Wyo. was third with a time of 34:21 while Paul Gompers of Fairview Heights, Ill., finished fourth at 34:24.

Joan Benoit-Samuels of Freeport, Maine, won the women's division — her fourth Bix title — in 37:59. Benoit-Samuels also won the race in 1983, 1985 and 1986.

Brenda Webb of Austin, Texas was second in 38:45 while Cyndie Welte of Lorain, Ohio was third in 39:49.

Agassi takes Volvo tennis tourney

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. (AP) — Second-seeded Andre Agassi won his fifth Nabisco Grand Prix singles title of the year Sunday, defeating Paul Annacone 6-2, 6-4 at the Volvo International tennis tournament.

The 18-year-old sensation used a powerful forehand passing shot and a backhand lob to capture his first title at the tournament where he first rocketed to attention two years ago.

He earned $114,000, his second biggest paycheck. Annacone took home $57,000.

Buckeyes add to Ohio Stadium seating

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Crowds at Ohio State's home football games this season are likely to average more than 90,000 for the first time because Ohio Stadium's seating capacity has been increased.

An increase of 732 seats in the south bleachers will allow for new attendance records and may mark the first time in the stadium's 66-year history that home attendance has averaged 90,000 for one season. The record average of 89,757 for six home games was set in 1985.

Ballesteros wins Enterprise Open

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN (AP) — Steady Seve Ballesteros seized an early lead when his rivals failed to get going and made it a runaway, record-breaking five-stroke victory Sunday in the $450,000 Scandinavian Enterprise Open golf tournament.

"I played very relaxed today and my concentration was very good," said Ballesteros, the gallery favorite among the record 29,650 fans who packed the course.

"It was a good tuneup for the (U.S.) PGA Championship. Now I need to go home to rest a little bit and practice for a week before I go to America."

The PGA Championship, the last major event of the season, is scheduled Aug. 11-14 at Oak Tree in Tulsa, Okla.

1982 Little League champs to split up

KIRKLAND, Wash. (AP) — This is the last summer for the 1982 Little League World Series baseball champions to be together.

"When you were 12, you just went out there and had fun," said Cody Webster, star of Kirkland's Little League title team. "Now, it's more like a job."

"The higher you go, the more serious it gets. Sometimes I think it gets a little too serious. It's just a game."

Six years later, nine of the 14 Kirkland Little Leaguers still are playing baseball.

Kirkland's 1988 American Legion team had its final regular-season game Sunday. The district playoffs begin next week, with the American Legion World Series scheduled in Middletown, Conn., Aug. 24-28.

"If they could win that, it would probably be the greatest feat that had ever happened in athletics anywhere, any time, any place," said Rich Wharf, Kirkland's Legion coach. "I think I'd quit the game. I'd say there ain't nothing else."

McGirt stops Davis' pro title bid

NEW YORK (AP) — Buddy McGirt knocked out Howard Davis in the first round, retaining his International Boxing Federation junior welterweight title Sunday and almost certainly ending Davis' quest to turn Olympic gold into a world professional title.

McGirt, in his first title defense since winning the belt last February, set Davis up with a left hand, then finished him with a right 2 minutes, 45 seconds into the fight.

Schrader charges to Winston Cup triumph

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Ken Schrader charged from fourth to first on the final lap Sunday to earn his first Winston Cup victory and become the 18th different winner in 20 Talladega 500 NASCAR stock car races.

Schrader, whose best career finish was second the previous weekend at Long Pond, Pa., started the final trip around the 2.66-mile Alabama International Motor Speedway oval trailing leader Dale Earnhardt, Geoff Bodine and Sterling Marlin.

Schrader, 33, from Fenton, Mo., crossed the finish line about one car-length ahead of second-place Geoff Bodine, a teammate on the Hendrick Motorsports team.

Viking fans prefer Wilson as quarterback

ST. PAUL (AP) — Minnesota Coach Jerry Burns hasn't decided who should start at quarterback this season, but Vikings fans apparently have.

More than 89 percent of those surveyed by the St. Paul Pioneer Press Dispatch said Wade Wilson should be the starter.

Wilson, who has been a backup to Tommy Kramer the past eight years, received 1,870 votes to Kramer's 135, while third-stringer Rich Gannon was the top choice of 50 fans.

"Either the fans love me or I have a lot of relatives that I didn't know about," Wilson said.

Boston's Boddicker rolls to victory

BOSTON — Mike Boddicker left a club streaking in one direction and joined one streaking in the other.

Boddicker, traded from Baltimore to Boston Friday, allowed eight hits over 7 1/2 innings to win his first game with Red Sox as Boston stretched its Fenway Park winning streak to 20 games Sunday with a 5-0 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

"It was great. I'm glad to be part of this family," Boddicker said. "It really is amazing here. I just hope the fans don't expect me to strike out as many batters as Roger (Clemens)."

Boston swept its fifth consecutive home series and improved to 17-1 since Joe Morgan was named manager after the All-Star break. Milwaukee, which has lost nine of its last 10, did not get a runner past second.

Boddicker, 7-12, acquired for minor leaguers Brady Anderson and Curt Schilling, threw 113 pitches, struck out six and walked one.

Tigers 5, Rangers 1

DETROIT — Jack Morris won for the first time in five starts since June 27 and Dwayne Murphy had two hits and scored the winning run on his first day with the Tigers as Detroit won for the sixth time in seven games.

Morris, 8-11, allowed seven hits, struck out eight and walked two in his sixth complete game.

Yankees 6, Blue Jays 3

TORONTO — Rickey Henderson led off with a single to reach base in the first inning for the 13th consecutive game and had two other hits.

Major League Baseball

Rick Rhoden, 7-6, beat Toronto for the first time in five career starts, allowing five hits in six innings. Dave Righetti got the final five outs for his 16th save.

Jimmy Key, 6-2, gave up nine hits in 4 1/2 innings in his first loss in five starts since arthroscopic elbow surgery.

Twins 12, Indians 4

CLEVELAND — Tim Lardner hit a two-run homer in the fifth and drove in the first run of a nine-run sixth, the Twins' biggest inning of the year.

Cleveland made two errors that accounted for five of the Twins' runs in the sixth, when Minnesota sent 13 batters to the plate against four Indians' pitchers.

Royals 4, Orioles 1

BALTIMORE — Charlie Leibrandt pitched a four-hitter and struck out a career-high 11 and Bo Jackson hit a three-run homer as the Royals improved to 9-0 this season against the Orioles.

Leibrandt, 6-11, pitched a perfect game for 5 1/2 innings before Bill Ripken lined a single to left that landed just in front of a sliding Jackson. Leibrandt pitched his third complete game and surpassed the strikeout high of 10 he set against Seattle last Sept. 22.

Angels 7, White Sox 5

CHICAGO — Wally Joyner's two-run homer in the seventh inning snapped a 5-5 tie and the Angels stretched their winning streak to five games.

Chicago had not been swept in a four-game series at Comiskey Park since June 1980 against Detroit.

Athletics 6, Mariners 2

SEATTLE — Jose Canseco homered twice, becoming the first player to hit 30 this season, and Dave Henderson also homered as the A's beat Seattle.

Canseco hit four home runs in the three-game series, 10 in July and is one short of his 1987 total of 31. It was his second two-homer game this season and the eighth of his career.

Phillies 6, Cubs 3

CHICAGO — Mike Maddux allowed six hits in seven-plus innings and drove in a run Sunday while defeating his brother Greg as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Chicago Cubs 6-3.

"He's the best pitcher in the league," said Mike Maddux, 3-1. "That pumps me up and he's also my brother, so that adds some spice to it."

Greg Maddux, 15-5, has beaten every team in the National League except Philadelphia.

Expos 2, Cardinals 0

MONTREAL — Dennis Martinez pitched a three-hitter for his fifth victory without a loss in the fifth of July as Montreal defeated St. Louis 2-0.

Martinez, 12-7, struck out three, walked one and did not allow a hit after Terry Pendleton's infield single with one out in the fourth.

Mets 2, Pirates 1

NEW YORK — Darryl Strawberry hit a two-run homer and Ron Darling pitched a six-hitter as New York lengthened its lead in the National League East.

The Mets won their fifth straight overall and moved five games ahead of Pittsburgh.

Giants 4, Braves 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Kevin Mitchell hit a tie-breaking homer in the seventh inning for his third game-winning RBI in four games and Brett Butler added a run-scoring double as San Francisco defeated Atlanta in the first game of a doubleheader.

Dodgers 6, Astros 1

LOS ANGELES — Orel Hershiser pitched a five-hitter to become the National League's second 15-game winner and John Shelby had a two-run single as Los Angeles snapped Houston's four-game winning streak.

Hershiser, 15-5, has beaten Houston three times without a loss this season, but lost his bid for a shutout when Buddy Bell hit an RBI single with two outs in the ninth.

Padres 8, Reds 5

SAN DIEGO — Dennis Rasmusen won for the seventh time in eight decisions for San Diego and Keith Moreland, Carmelo Martinez and Roberto Alomar each drove in two runs.

Okamoto wins LPGA tourney by one shot

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Ayako Okamoto shot a 4-under-par 67 Sunday to register a one-stroke victory over Connie Chillemi and Beth Daniel in the $225,000 Greater Washington Open.

Okamoto's victory wasn't assured until Daniel bogeyed No. 18 after hitting her tee shot into the woods and Chillemi missed her bid for a birdie by leaving her putt on 18 six inches short.

Okamoto, the LPGA Player of the Year in each of the past two years, finished with a 7-under-par 206 in the 54-hole tournament at the Bethesda Country Club. She started the day three strokes behind Chillemi, the second-round leader, but had four birdies and parred the final seven holes to earn the $33,750 top prize.

It was Okamoto's third victory on the tour this season.

Susan Sanders finished at 208 and Judy Dickinson and Debbie Massey each carded 209.

Okamoto was in the clubhouse when Daniel and Chillemi approached the 17th green at 7-under. Chillemi blew a four-foot putt for par to fall a shot behind, and Daniel tapped in her putt for par.

Daniel's chance for a playoff faded with her very next shot, as she drove soared between two trees. She put her next shot onto the fairway, and her approach went into the rough.

Chillemi, bidding for her first victory in 12 years on the tour, had one final chance on the 18th green. But her birdie putt came up short and she had to console herself with her best-ever finish in an LPGA event.

Chillemi had taken a two-stroke lead with an eagle on the par-5, 445-yard third hole. She put her approach within 20 feet of the pin, then boldly rapped in the putt to go to eight under.

But she lost those two strokes when she put her tee shot into the woods on No. 12 for a double bogey.

Rodriguez wins his third Digital PGA title in a row

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — Chi Chi Rodriguez survived a double bogey on the next-to-last hole Sunday to win the $300,000 Digital Senior PGA golf title and set a senior tour record by taking the event for the third straight year.

Rodriguez, who had led by three or four strokes through most of the final round at Nashawtic Country Club, finished with rounds of 68-65-69 for a 202 total, one stroke ahead of Bob Charles. He won $45,000.

The left-handed Charles had two chances to tie or win the tournament on the final two holes. He missed a 15-foot birdie putt on the 17th and a 10-foot birdie try on the 18th.

Charles finished second with a final-round 67 for 203 and collected $26,000, making him the leading money-maker on the tour this year, ahead of Orville Moody, who did not play this week.

"He opened the door on 17," Charles said of Rodriguez's tee shot that landed in a water hazard. "I was surprised that he hit such a bad shot. I could have tied it up on 17 and again on 18."

Rodriguez, who has earned $112,500 on his three successful visits to Nashawtic, said, "The hungry tiger got his prey." Laughing, he dedicated his victory "to the press, you guys who have been with me in good times and bad times."

Do tea, football mix in Britain?

England and football. It's one of those precarious mixtures, kind of like curling in The Congo or sand skiing in Scandinavia.

English weather isn't the problem — damp, cold and rainy is the climate of choice for a good, muddy old-fashioned gridiron contest.

Rather, it's the British folk who at first glance seem incompatible with our game of hard knocks and cheap shots.

Nevertheless, a good crowd showed up Sunday at Wembley Stadium in London to cheer on mostly unknown players in a mostly unknown game. The Miami Dolphins beat the San Francisco 49ers 27-21, and though very few of the 70,505 onlookers could probably tell you how it happened, it looked like they had fun.

There are American football leagues cropping up all over Europe. The game really seems to be catching on.

Maybe the increased popularity of American football is because the stoic, respectable Brits are sick of soccer hooliganism and want to take on a more civilized pastime.

To be considered a fortunate soccer fan, one must get a ticket to the match and return to his or her loved ones.

Everyone would probably agree that football is quite a bit rougher than soccer, on the field, that is.

Soccer in Europe is a game of finesse and endurance. It's just that it takes those two traits, plus one heck of an instinct for survival, for soccer fans to get out of the stands alive.

To be considered a fortunate soccer fan, one must get a ticket to the match and return to his or her loved ones.

Football is a brutal and sometimes crippling sport. So, it seems strange that the British would find it entertaining and worthy given their sometimes snobbish attitudes toward sporting endeavors.

A half-time break for tea and scones is a required part of any self-respecting cricket match, and all sports fans are aware of the traditional and sometimes offensively pompous happenings every year at Wimbledon and the British Open.

Rugby is a rough game, but one runs a greater risk of catching a communicable disease in the scrum than receiving a serious injury.

So why would they latch on to football? It's not a gentleman's sport.

Maybe they appreciate football's honorable traits. Occasionally, a decidedly vicious 240-pound linebacker reaches his hand down to assist an offensive player to his feet — after that linebacker has almost decapitated him with a forearm under the chin.

It's touching when that happens.

And after a game, the opposing teams often trade primal handshakes resembling right hooks or slap each other with forceful, yet respectful, blows to the head.

A powerful head slap after a game is football sign language for "Good game. But I'll kill you next time."

Knife and gun-wielding thugs at soccer matches apparently would just as soon kill anybody, anytime. As long as the victim is rooting for the other team, of course.

That's why football will probably be the next big sport in Britain. English sports fans have decided that it's a hell of a lot better to watch gratuitous violence than it is to be a part of it.

They're stuffy, but they're not stupid.

Fitzpatrick's, Southgate heading into finals

By Neil Lewis
The Daily Iowan

The Prime Time Basketball League narrowed its playoff field to two teams Sunday night when Fitzpatrick's eased past First National Bank 127-107, and Southgate Development held off Eby's Athletic Company 122-114.

In the championship game slated for Wednesday at 7:30 p.m., Fitzpatrick's, the regular-season champion with a 12-4 record going into the playoffs, will try for a season sweep of Southgate.

Fitzpatrick's matched Michael Ingram against First National Bank's Ed Horton in the steamy Iowa City High School gym, and Ingram came out on top with 48 points and 11 rebounds.

Ingram scored most of his game-high points on quick spin moves from the blocks, and when double-teamed in the second half the Iowa redshirt junior had the court vision to dish the ball back out.

Ingram said Horton is a tough inside player and matched up strong. "Ed's been working on his shot a lot and he's really improving."

First National Bank trailed 59-58 at intermission, but the quicker Fitzpatrick's squad stretched the margin in the second half. When Wade Lookingbill bottomed out a 15 footer with 10:15 remaining, Fitzpatrick's led 92-76 and controlled the remainder.

Northern Iowa senior Nick Nurse, who runs the point guard spot for Fitzpatrick's, scored most of his 17 points from near or beyond the three-point stripe. "I'm really trying to drive to the hoop more," he said. "At UNI I've always scored most of my points on jump shots."

Southgate earned its chance for revenge on Fitzpatrick's by squeaking out a win after leading by as much as 15 in the second half. Following a deluge of Southgate turnovers, Eby's crept back and trailed 117-113 with 1:17 remaining but would get no closer.

Maurice Newby, a junior at Northern Iowa, bombed 34 points for Southgate, with most coming from three-point range. "I think we're just starting to play like a team," he said.

Newby said getting even would definitely be on the minds of his teammates. "They got us twice, but we'll be ready for them this time."

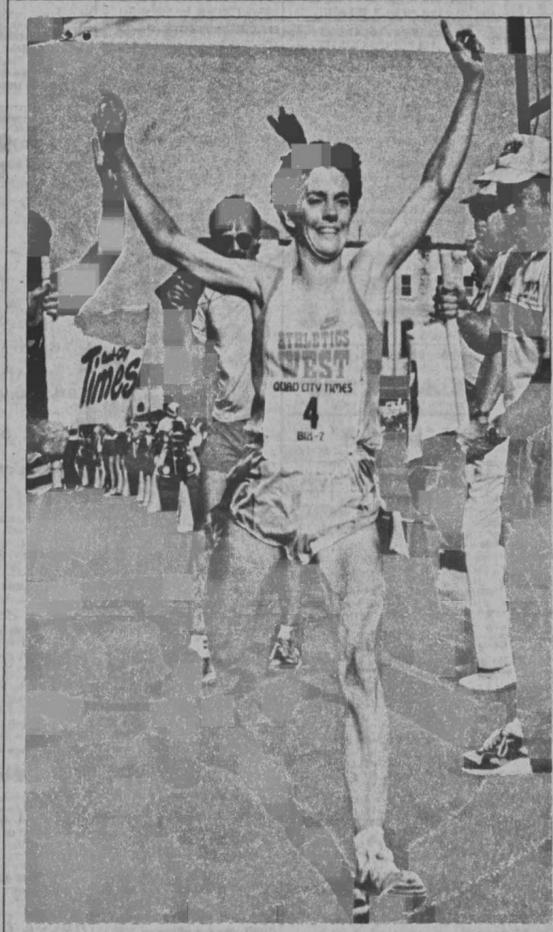

Matching up against his teammate Nurse, Newby said, is always a challenge. "We always try to push each other and make each other play harder," he said.

Former Hawkeye forward Bill Jones, who led Southgate with 38 points, recently returned from the New York Knicks' "cutthroat" camp where he avoided the first cut.

Rushed offense and sloppy ball handling, he said, allowed the Eby's comeback. "We got a little ragged and lost our concentration," he said.

Jones said the stiffest competition for a spot with the Knicks would come from Phil Stinney, a 6-foot-6 forward from Virginia Commonwealth.

"They (the Knicks) invited me back for the veteran's camp," Jones said, "and that starts in mid-September."

Bix winners

Verplank earns first pro victory

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (AP) — Scott Verplank, breaking the stranglehold that hampered his game for three years, shot a final-round 66 Sunday to win the $700,000 Buick Open by two strokes over Doug Tewell.

Verplank, 24, finished at 20-under-par 268 to earn $126,000 for his first professional victory. It marked the fifth week in a row that a tournament was won by a previously winless pro.

The string started with Jim Beneppe in the Western Open and continued when Tom Sieckmann won the Busch Classic, Blain McCallister won the Hardee's Classic and Mark Brooks captured last week's Greater Hartford Open. Although it was Verplank's first pro victory, it was his second on the PGA Tour. He won the 1985 Western Open as an amateur.

Fred Couples had a final-round 65 to finish at 17-under 271 and Tim Norris had a 66 for 272.

Verplank started the final round tied for the lead with Steve Elkington and Howard Twitty.

Verplank birdied the second, fifth and eighth holes, a pair of par-4s and a par-3, to turn at 17 under.

Verplank had two birdies and two clutch saves for par on the back nine. He was on the 490-yard, par-5 13th in two and lagged his 70-foot eagle try to within two feet.

He made a 15-foot putt for birdie on the 322-yard, par-4 14th to go 20 under.

Verplank saved par with a 12-foot putt at No. 12, a short par-4, and blasted out of a bunker to within two feet of the cup to save par at the par-3 17th.

Verplank, a former NCAA and U.S. Amateur champion, joined the Tour after winning the Western Open. Things haven't come easily for him since then.

The Western Open victory earned him a two-year exemption, but he had to return to qualifying school last fall after finishing 173rd on the money list and losing his playing privileges.

Verplank hadn't finished higher than a tie for 15th this season and entered the Buick Open ranked 107th on the money list with $76,502.

Thinking part of his problem might be undue personal pressure, Verplank sought the advice of sports psychologist Bob Rotella, who suggested he just try to have fun.

Elkington, a 25-year-old Australian who competed with Verplank many times in college — Verplank played at Oklahoma State, Elkington at Houston — shot himself out of contention with a 6-over 42 on the front nine.

Miami topples San Francisco for American Bowl '88 victory

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — Reserve quarterback Dave Archer sped into the end zone with 1:28 remaining for the touchdown that gave the Miami Dolphins a 27-21 victory over the San Francisco 49ers in an NFL preseason game at London's Wembley Stadium Sunday night.

Archer, the former Iowa State and Atlanta Falcons quarterback, took advantage of a personal foul against the 49ers and ran a bootleg around to the left to cap the Dolphins' second rally of the second half.

It was the second preseason game of the year as Cincinnati defeated the Los Angeles Rams 14-7 before a soldout crowd Saturday after the Pro Football Hall of Fame inductions in Canton, Ohio.

Miami, which earlier gave up a 10-point lead, struck back from a 14-13 halftime deficit to move in front again. But late in the third quarter, the Dolphins fell behind 21-20 and San Francisco held on to its slender advantage until Archer's game-winning score.

A capacity crowd of 70,505 turned England's national soccer shrine into a football carnival as they cheered on both teams in the third NFL-sponsored "American Bowl" to be held here.

Although the action on the field was full of penalties and incomplete passes, it was no different from other preseason games.

Star quarterbacks Dan Marino of the Dolphins and Joe Montana of the 49ers each played the first quarter before being replaced.

Marino had the better of the early plays as the San Francisco defense started edgily. The first time Marino touched the ball, he found running back Troy Stradford with a 14-yard pass. Then Marino saw an 11-yard pass to Mark Clayton in the end zone slip out of the normally reliable wide receiver's hands.

As the skies darkened and rain began to lash down on the Wembley field, Miami's early pressure finally earned it a touchdown. Running back Lorenzo Hampton dived over from the 3 with 9:58 of the quarter gone.

As San Francisco, which had only 3:46 of possession in the first quarter, continued to lose yardage, Reveiz kicked a 45-yard field goal to extend the Dolphins' lead to 10-0.

Montana, whose wide receivers had given him little help, left the field for Steve Young and Marino gave way to Ron Jaworski in the second period.

Stargell inducted into Hall of Fame

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Willie Stargell, the epitome of a team player, had the stage to himself Sunday as he became the 200th player enshrined in baseball's Hall of Fame.

Surrounded by family, friends and fans, Stargell's golden plaque was unveiled on the steps of the National Baseball Library.

This was a day, however, for reading emotions instead of baseball history.

For Stargell and his family, it was all smiles and a few tears in the celebration of a gentleman who hit monster home runs.

Also taking part in the ceremonies were Commissioner Peter Ueberroth and several members of the Hall of Fame, including Ted Williams, Stan Musial, Ernie Banks and Willie McCovey.

Prior to Stargell's induction, sportscaster Lindsey Nelson and sports columnist Jim Murray of the Los Angeles Times were given awards for their contributions to baseball.

"You are looking at one very proud individual," Stargell said. "I don't think anyone can accurately describe what a feeling I'm having today."

"I did not get to Cooperstown without a network of family, coaches, teammates and teachers you name it. I accept this for all the people at the stadiums. The batboys, the groundcrew, announcers and the media."

In 21 years with Pittsburgh, Stargell hit 475 home runs, had 1,540 runs batted in, hit 282 and helped the Pirates win the World Series title in 1971 and 1979. In the '79 Series, Stargell hit .400 with three homers and was the MVP.

Last January, Stargell became the 17th player to be elected in the first year of eligibility. He was named on 352 of the 427 ballots returned to the Baseball Writers' Association. In order to be elected, a player must be named on 75 percent of the ballots, which this year was 321.

Jim Bunning, who won 100 games in each league and pitched a perfect game, fell four votes short with 317.

For the first time since 1956, the Veterans Committee failed to elect any of its candidates, passing up such names as Phil Rizzuto, Leo Durocher and Gil Hodges last March.

Next January, Johnny Bench and Carl Yastrzemski seem certain to follow Stargell into the Hall.

This year, nine members of the BBWAA returned signed blank ballots. Several of the blank ballots none of the candidates — including Stargell — had numbers worthy of the Hall of Fame.

As a player, the powerful 6-foot-6 Stargell had a big bat and a big heart.

He is the only player to hit a ball out of Dodger Stadium, and he did it twice. Stargell cleared the right field roof at the old, cavernous Forbes Field seven times and hit four balls into the upper deck at right field at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium.

Stargell, who is the Pirates' all-time leader in extra-base hits with 953, had 2,232 hits, twice led the National League in homers, was the co-MVP in 1979 and a member of the All-Star team seven times.

Asbestos fibers concern

By Heidi Mathews
The Daily Iowan

Asbestos fibers found in stances used in and buildings will cause health problems in people exposed to fibers over long periods, UI health officials said.

While there are no problems which have resulted from the fibers, eventually be a need to remove asbestos entirely, William Twaler, director of Health Protection Office.

"There's inevitably a problem," Twaler said. "If you're spraying with a taining asbestos."

The Health Protection Office conducted a series of samples of substances containing asbestos over the past few years, the most recent 1985 when a sample behind Hancher was found to contain 10 to 25 percent asbestos.

A sample taken from an area two years later analyzed the content of fiber found in the air. Twaler said that there was a showing that there was a level of the fiber in every cubic centimeter of air. The acceptable level at that time was fiber per cubic centimeter.

Twaler said the act of fiber in the air is more than the content of asbestos. Particulate matter is a concern because of its size and level of danger.

"If whatever contains asbestos starts peeling and flaking the air, then there's a problem," Twaler said. "When you inhale the fiber there's a threat — individuals affected if they are in a general area of the air not breathing the fiber."

But Dave Muller, an expert at the UI Music Department, is concerned about his own asbestos about his own beams found in the building.

"I do quite a bit of work into direct contact with asbestos," Muller said. "I don't think anyone would wonder what the air is going to do about it."

Twaler said though, people who are coming into contact with asbestos into the material and float freely that there is a problem with the work situation.

"The people who work that manufacture asbestos are the ones who are most at risk for their health," Twaler said. "It's because of the very high level of fiber."

Richard Gibson, UI Planning and Administration, said the university has sufficient precautions in place, conducting surveys and testing that the fiber content is well below the danger level.

According to Gibson, fibers and students have any, complaints regarding the Music Building Hancher area.

"We do intend, however, the entire asbestos situation in the future when the funding is available," Gibson said. "It's of our list of things to do."

Twaler said that in order to take its asbestos content into both significant fund search to find qualified people to do the job.

"It can be a real problem for individuals who get rid of asbestos on all," Twaler said.
