Students to 'card' Rawlings

By Hilery Livengood
The Daily Iowan

If some UI students' plans work out, UI President Hunter Rawlings III may receive some 2,000 postcards from UI students, faculty and staff during a serenade at his house this fall.

These postcards are "the new plan of attack" for stopping the construction of a parking lot on Union Field, said Chris Swanson, director of student legal services.

Swanson and other UI students are presently soliciting signatures for the postcards and for a petition opposing the temporary parking lot's construction near the Union.

These will be delivered to Rawlings during a rally planned for the fall. "We'll march the postcards up to Rawlings, and (local musician) Rob Schulz will sing a Joni Mitchell song which goes 'They paved paradise, and they put up a parking lot,'" Swanson said.

The proposed construction of a temporary lot on half of the Union Field has upset many students — already over 1,500 have signed a petition protesting the lot's construction, Swanson said.

"There's a wide cross-section from fraternity boys to punks who support our efforts," he said. "Even people in the Union who would park there have been signing our petition. Nobody wants this parking lot."

However, the UI administration has largely ignored the petition.

"The petition had absolutely no impact on the administration," he said. Swanson and UI Student Senate President Melinda Hess presented the petition to UI officials during a July meeting.

So Swanson and Hess developed a new strategy for protest — postcards addressed to Rawlings which state: "I oppose the use of Union Field for a parking facility, in either temporary or permanent form. Please stop the Union Field parking lot. I am willing to find alternative means of reaching the Iowa Memorial Union. I want Union Field to always remain a field and never become a parking lot."

There is also space provided for students, staff and faculty to sign the postcard and include their university identification number.

If Rawlings also ignores the students' concerns, there may be no other outlet for the protestors' opinions.

"Pressure from below isn't working, so now we're starting from the top," Swanson said. "If this guy doesn't help us, we're dead."

Distribution of the postcards began Wednesday, and at 3 p.m., over 100 had already been signed, Swanson said. He expects 2,000 to sign the cards by the rally.

Paving the field, even temporarily, would disrupt the activities of various student groups on campus.

"The lacrosse team is really pretty upset about this lot's construction," said Pete Kingwill, a captain of the UI lacrosse team. "Now we'll have to practice at lower Finkbine, and I'm sure the crowd who watch us will diminish."

"They say it's going to be temporary, but things like that have a way of staying around," Kingwill said.

The parking lot's construction has evoked even stronger feelings from some protestors, though.

"If it comes right down to it, I will lay my body down in front of a bulldozer, and I don't think they'll squish me," said Wendy Swanson, a former UI student who is petitioning for signatures.

Screenwriters to end long TV, movie strike

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Striking screenwriters reached tentative agreement with motion picture and television producers Wednesday, effectively ending a 150-day walkout that paralyzed Hollywood and left the fall TV schedule in shambles.

"It was time to bring it to a conclusion, and the deal was there," Brian Walton, chief guild negotiator, said at a joint news conference.

"We are very pleased to have reached a tentative agreement," said Nicholas Counter, chief negotiator for the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers. Asked who won, Counter said: "No one wins a strike."

Walton said the agreement reflected "some serious bargaining."

Members of the Writers Guild of America were expected to ratify the contract at a membership meeting later this week, and scriptwriters may return to work as early as Monday.

The settlement announcement ends what had become one of the longest and more painful strikes in modern Hollywood history, surpassed only by the WGA's 1960 walkout, which lasted 23 weeks. The current walkout began March 7, 21 1/2 weeks ago.

Federal mediator Floyd Wood said no details of the contract would be released until the WGA's board of directors on the West Coast and East Coast are informed of the agreement during an evening telephone conference call.

The joint boards will then vote via telephone and results will be revealed later during a news conference at guild headquarters in West

"It was a fair deal — negotiated, not dictated — and it was OK," said a member of the negotiating committee who asked not to be identified.

News of the settlement came after two days of intense efforts by a variety of intermediaries to bring an end to the walkout.

Final contract details were ironed out at an 12-hour meeting between Walton and Counter that ended early Wednesday.

The pair, who had repeatedly sniped at each other throughout the walkout, shook hands after the announcement.

As recently as last weekend, it looked as though the two sides were at an impasse, with a producers spokesman saying talks were "hopelessly deadlocked."

Relative: Pilot's close ties to U.S. justify payments

WASHINGTON (AP) — The pilot of the Iranian airliner shot down by a U.S. Navy missile over the Persian Gulf last month had close ties to this country and left behind a 5-year-old American-born daughter, his sister-in-law told Congress on Wednesday in urging compensation for his death.

"I don't know how the family can explain to her that it was an American missile that killed her father," said Nahid Sadeghi, who has lived with her husband in Norman, Okla., since 1973.

Appealing for U.S. compensation for the families of the 290 people killed on July 3 when Iran Air Flight 655 was shot down over the gulf, Mrs. Sadeghi told the House Armed Services Committee she rejects Iran's claim that the aircraft was destroyed deliberately.

She said she also has no belief in rumors the Iran Air A-300 Airbus was flying a suicide mission against the USS Vincennes.

"Let me assure you: This story is just as crazy as Ayatollah Khomeini's claim that Ronald Reagan shot the Airbus intentionally," she said.

She said her brother-in-law, Capt. Mosen Rezaian, had been a pilot for 17 years, had been trained by the Boeing Co. in the United States and had lived in Texas for two years in the 1970s.

"He loved and respected the United States and American culture," she said.

"My brother-in-law was in love with flying, with his wife and with his children," she said. "He loved life. And, as a professional pilot he understood his responsibility for the lives of his passengers. He was a good and honest human being."

She said Capt. Rezaian and her sister Aryanaz had two daughters and a son.

The oldest daughter holds U.S. citizenship because she was born while her mother was visiting in Norman, Mrs. Sadeghi said.

The three children and their mother are now living in West Germany, she said, sent there by Rezaian "because of the war and worsening conditions in Iran."

"I strongly urge you to pay compensation to the families of the victims," she said. "They are human beings — widows and orphans — not terrorists who kill and maim."

Another witness, Harold G. Maier, a law professor at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn., said that while the United States has no obligation under international law to pay compensation, it does have a moral obligation.

But Ralph Dupont, an attorney representing the families of two Americans killed by terrorists during the hijacking of a Kuwaiti aircraft in 1984, urged that no compensation be made to the families of those killed on Flight 655 until American victims of terrorism receive compensation.

Reagan's humor misses mark, Dukakis called 'an invalid'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ronald Reagan took a swipe at Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis today, calling him "an invalid." He said later, "I was trying to be funny, and it didn't work."

Dukakis, in Boston, reacted in low-key fashion, saying of Reagan, "No apology was really needed. We all occasionally misspeak, and I don't think the president needed to apologize."

"I'm a very healthy guy," he said. Republican Vice President George Bush, meanwhile, touring a defense plant in Annapolis, Md., said when asked about Reagan's remark, "Before I make any comment on what anyone else said, I want to talk to the president about it. . . . I'm not going to be drawn into this mini-controversy."

While Dukakis held his fire, his running mate, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, said Reagan's remarks were "outrageous and laughable at the same time."

Reagan was responding to a question from a reporter representing Executive Intelligence Review, a publication associated with political extremist Lyndon LaRouche. The questioner said Dukakis had declined to disclose his medical records, particularly whether he ever has undergone psychiatric treatment.

A Dukakis spokesman, responding to such questions last week, said Dukakis had never been treated for any mental condition. Neither Dukakis nor Bush has released full medical records during the 1988 campaign, though Bush said today he would release his records as he did in 1980.

Dukakis, asked today if he had ever suffered from depression, said, "No." Asked if he had ever consulted a psychiatrist, he said, "No."

Asked if would release his records, he said, "I'll be happy to provide the people of this country with a full report on my physical and mental condition from my physician of 17 years."

He previously released a report from that doctor, Gerald Plotkin, saying he was in good shape and had suffered no major medical problems during the period. Before 1971 his only physician was his father.

Reagan, smiling, told reporters when asked about Dukakis' records: "I'm not going to pick on an invalid."

He wouldn't elaborate on what he meant. However, a few minutes later at a separate appearance, Reagan brought up the subject again, telling reporters he thought his choice of words had been unfortunate.

"A short time ago, I attempted a joke. I was kidding," Reagan said. Asked if he based his comments on any information he had, he added, "I was just trying to be funny, and it didn't work."

He did say he believes the American people are entitled to know about a candidate's medical history.

Talk of treatment of Dukakis first circulated at the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta two weeks ago after handbills were slipped under reporters' hotel room doors.

President Reagan gestures at press conference in which he called Democratic Presidential Candidate Michael Dukakis an "invalid."

National gang members blamed for Iowa violence

By Traci Auble
The Daily Iowan

Although gang violence doesn't run rampant in Iowa, extensions of national gangs do exist in the bigger Iowa cities such as Des Moines and Davenport.

Detective Jno Rogerson of the Des Moines Police Department said there is not much of a problem with local gangs in Des Moines, but there are about 20 known national gang members in the city.

"As far as gangs in Des Moines without a national tie, we don't have much of a problem," Rogerson said. "There is very little structure to them, and only one is wearing any sort of colors."

Gang members often wear colors and have signs that signify which gang they represent. Rogerson added there are only about six or eight of these small gangs and all are either black or Hispanic.

Rogerson said the real problems arise when national gangs come into town. For example, he said he knows members of several national gangs who are located in Des Moines — the Bloods and Crips from Los Angeles and the El Rukns and Disciples which are nationwide.

"We're getting an influx of organized gangs," Rogerson said. "The El Rukns are very, very dangerous. To be an El Rukn you have to be a felon."

Rogerson said it was proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that a homicide case last year was the result of the El Rukns. The Bloods, he said, like to invade a city's drug trafficking.

"The Bloods like to come into a city and take over the drug traffic by undercutting the local dealers and selling better quality merchandise," he said, adding that cocaine and crack are the most abundant drugs in the city.

In order to prevent gangs from becoming widespread in Iowa,

Rogerson explained that these paid informants may even be ex-convicts or local people who hang out on the streets.

But there doesn't seem to be much need for worry about heavy gang activity in Iowa because with less than 20 national gang members in Des Moines they haven't established territory yet, Rogerson said.

"I think it's coming — but it hasn't happened yet," he said.

As for gang prevention, Rogerson said there isn't much the police can do.

"There isn't a whole lot we can do to prevent gangs," he said. "We keep an active surveillance on hangouts. We look for strangers on the streets and keep an eye on the streets." See Gangs, Page 3

Helms appointed to associate dean at UI

Charles M. Helms has been appointed associate dean for student affairs and curriculum in the UI College of Medicine, Dean John W. Eckstein announced Tuesday.

Helms succeeds Carol Aschenbrenner, who had held the position since 1984. She was recently named senior associate dean of the college.

A member of the UI internal medicine faculty since 1976, Helms has for the past two years served as associate dean with responsibilities in such areas as health policy, health care delivery systems and relationships with health care agencies. He earned doctorate and master's degrees at the University of Rochester School of Medicine.

Helms was one of six educators awarded Robert Wood Johnson Health Policy Fellowships three years ago to observe and participate in the federal health policy-making process.

UI medical professors receive various grants

Whether prophylactic knee braces for football players reduce ligament strain is one of several new UI College of Medicine studies funded recently by external sources.

Thomas D. Brown and Richard A. Brand, both professors of orthopaedic surgery and biomedical engineering, will use a $118,000, two-year grant from the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases to focus on the influence of different design features on brace performance.

Jeffrey C. Murray, associate professor of pediatrics, received a $219,000 grant from the National Institute of Dental Research to seek the genetic cause of certain types of cleft lip and palate disorder. By identifying the disturbance of the single gene that causes the disorder, he hopes to improve diagnosis and treatment of the disorder.

Lynn C. Richman, professor of pediatrics, and Hughlett L. Morris, professor of otolaryngology, will use a $175,000, three-year grant from the National Institute of Dental Research to study how the speech and facial appearance of children with cleft lip and palate affects how they are perceived by others. The study also looks into the effect of the disorder on self-esteem.

The role of the thymus gland in the work of the drug Cyclosporine, which is used to keep the body from rejecting organ transplants, will be explored by Zuhair K. Ballas, associate professor of internal medicine.

Ballas received a $149,000 grant from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. Although in recent years the drug has greatly improved the success rate of organ transplantation by its selective immunosuppression, the exact mechanism is not understood.

A $120,000 grant from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases will fund an interdisciplinary research training program in infectious diseases. The program, administered by Robert A. Clark, professor of internal medicine, will offer young physicians training in a variety of basic science areas including the cellular and molecular biology of infectious agents, cellular and molecular biology of host defenses and the epidemiology of infectious diseases.

Douglas Laube, professor of obstetrics and gynecology, has received a $20,000 grant from the Association of Professors in Gynecology and Obstetrics to improve the exam medical students take to evaluate their knowledge of obstetrics. He seeks to structure an oral exam that assesses both the students' knowledge and presentation of the subject.

Student moves create problems for Iowa City

By Stephen Horan
The Daily Iowan

Early August means many UI students will be moving most of their earthly possessions — and leaving the rest at the curb.

For area garbage collectors, this year's moving season, coupled with a wave of 100-degree temperatures, has meant a week of headaches and frustration.

"Imagine a student putting his garbage out on the Saturday before a Wednesday pickup," said Iowa City Assistant Superintendent for Sanitation Floyd Pelkey. "You can't go after the student who's long gone, and it is not the fault of the owner of the property."

This situation is not unique said the Iowa City Superintendent of Sanitation Bud Stockman. Each year as some students finish their spring and fall semesters, they leave behind an excessive amount of discarded furniture and miscellaneous materials.

Adding to the confusion are those people who dump garbage on another's property. Stockman said that unless the person's name can be found among the garbage, little can be done to locate the offender. "I'd like to point out that the majority of the Iowa City residents follow the city ordinance on garbage disposal," said Stockman.

The Iowa City ordinance on garbage disposal states that garbage should be put out the night before a pickup.

Despite the heat, the ordinance obligates garbage collectors to begin collecting no sooner than 7 a.m.

"It would make no sense to begin collecting garbage earlier in the morning when residents are following a set schedule," said Pelkey. "If the garbage was not out, the collectors would have to return later in the afternoon."

This ordinance doesn't take in account the heat factor. Garbage collectors in Iowa City and Coralville do not receive extra pay for working in the hot weather.

Commercial firms dealing outside of the residential areas can start earlier. The commercial firms specialize in the non-residential areas not frequented by the city system, such as the apartment complexes, area business, restaurants and dwellings with more than four living units. Gene Davidson, a garbage driver for Hawkeye Waste Systems Inc, 302 11 St. E. Coralville, said some commercial workers begin work at 3:30 a.m. rather than 5 a.m. to avoid the heat.

Despite precautions against the heat, Davidson said the heat was so intense one day that some employees almost passed out.

"A couple of people have raised hell (over the earlier hours) but consider that we work in 104-degree heat with some persons working in the cab truck at 120 degrees," said Davidson.

Davidson believes the hardest task facing garbage collectors in the hot weather is driving the trucks that pick up the garbage.

Some garbage collectors are running their routes backward to beat the heat. The idea is to hit the unshaded areas earlier in the morning, while saving the shaded areas for the later hours.

Most methods of beating the heat are more conventional. The Iowa City garbage collectors carry ice water in the trucks and are careful to pace their activities, according to Pelkey.

State program will expand shelters for Iowa's homeless

DES MOINES (AP) — State officials are quietly assembling the pieces of a $500,000 program to combat what is being called the "largely invisible" problem of thousands of homeless Iowans.

The Iowa Housing Finance Authority was briefed Wednesday on a $100,000, lottery-funded slice of that effort, while key legislators are pushing to expand it beyond merely building shelters.

"In some areas of Iowa, it's invisible," said Rep. Ralph Rosenberg, D-Ames. "In other areas, such as Des Moines, it's very visible. When you look at the group shelters, they are full."

Officials estimate that as many as 1,000 homeless people live in Des Moines, sleeping in cars, under bridges and simply on the streets. "It is a serious problem," Rosenberg said. "There are people sleeping in cars. It's not just the 55-year-old man who drinks wine out of a paper bag. Half of them are kids."

This year, the Legislature approved $100,000 in lottery proceeds aimed at expanding shelters for the homeless, and lawmakers told state officials to spend another $400,000 in discretionary federal funds on similar programs.

That was accomplished with little fanfare, in part for tactical reasons and partially because higher-profile fights like tax reform occupied center stage in the Legislature.

The lottery funding was initially approved in 1987, but Republican Gov. Terry Branstad vetoed it in a showdown over welfare spending with Democrats who run the Legislature.

Advocates took a quieter approach this year, and the funding won approval.

The initial steps are aimed at bolstering shelters, even though Rosenberg conceded "it's something of a band-aid approach."

"We'll help people get off the street," he said. "It does a certain amount of good in a short-term, crisis situation." Iowa has about a dozen shelters for the homeless, and the initial program could provide more money to half of them, he said.

Janet Pressey, an Iowa Housing Finance Authority spokeswoman, said officials hope to award the initial grants later this year.

Though there are far fewer homeless people in Iowa than many larger states, Rosenberg said the percentage of people without homes is relatively high in comparison.

"Partly, we're at a crossroads of two major interstates, but we're also struggling with our economy," he said.

For a longer term attack on the problem, Rosenberg said lawmakers will spend another $500,000 on programs to provide permanent housing for low-income Iowans.

"There is a gap in the availability of low-income affordable housing," he said. "Not all homeless people are unemployed. Some homeless people work but still can't afford housing."

In addition, state officials are broadening their assault, beginning to examine other aspects of the homelessness problem.

For example, Rosenberg said, Department of Education officials will begin assessing the number of children without homes and gauging the impact of lost education because of constant moving in search of work.

An Iowa City man was charged with assault causing injury Wednesday after he allegedly struck his wife, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Mark S. Rorex, 28, allegedly struck his wife during an argument. Officers observed redness and swelling under her left eye and below her neck. This was allegedly caused by Rorex placing his arm around her neck and striking her face, according to court records. A preliminary hearing is set for Aug. 22.

A Johnson County family filed a lawsuit Wednesday against a woman who allegedly hit their son with her car on June 9, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Chad E. Smolek, 3213 Raven Ct., was a pedestrian when Linda K. Younkin, 1905 B. St., struck Smolek with her vehicle on First Avenue north of Mayfield. The suit claims Younkin's speed of 25 miles per hour was excessive for the circumstances and she is the cause of the accident, according to court records.

The Smoleks' are requesting compensation for damages which are for interest and costs as allowed by law. Included in the injuries are those suffered to Smolek's person, pain and suffering, emotional distress and loss of enjoyment of life, according to court records.

An Iowa City bank reported Wednesday that a financial instrument had been forged in the area, according to police reports.

The report stated the instrument was allegedly forged by a woman, according to officials at Hawkeye State Bank, 229 S. Dubuque St., who told police the instrument was for $1,500, according to the report.

The victim in the incident was a customer of Hawkeye State Bank, according to the report. There were no arrests made, but the matter was turned over to an Iowa City Police Department detective for investigation, according to the report.

Report: A man was charged with driving while his license was suspended Wednesday, according to police reports.

Randall Eric Smith, 20, address not available, was arrested after his vehicle was stopped by police at Kirkwood Avenue and Van Buren Street, according to the report.

Report: A man was arrested and charged with operating a vehicle while intoxicated late Tuesday after allegedly striking a parked car on South Lucas Street, according to police reports.

Craig Pleggenkuhle, 22, 504 S. Capitol St., was arrested after allegedly backing into a car that was legally parked, according to the report.

Report: A Coralville man reported Wednesday that his car was vandalized while parked on Oakland Street, according to police reports.

The driver's side window of the car was smashed sometime between 11 p.m. Tuesday and 10:30 a.m. Wednesday, according to the report.

Theft: A bicycle was reported stolen from the rear of an Iowa City residence sometime Tuesday night, according to police reports.

The men's blue Schwinn Sprint was valued at about $130, according to the report.

Founders of writing program will end association with UI

By Sara Langenberg
The Daily Iowan

After more than one-half century, Paul and Hualing Nieh Engle, co-founders of the UI International Writing Program will end their association with the UI.

"Naturally, I have very mixed feelings about leaving," Paul Engle said. "I'm a rare person in university life in this country because I've been in the same place 50 years. Usually (academics) jump around a little bit, like toads. I first came here in 1931. (That I've stayed this long) means one of two things, either the university found it impossible to get rid of me, or I liked it here."

Paul, a world-acclaimed writer and poet, said he has turned down positions at Harvard, LSU and various other places.

"I could have been the president of a college — God forbid — or a dean — God forbid-forbid," he said. Instead, he returned to the UI and has stayed here ever since.

"I liked Iowa because I could do what I wanted to do," he said. Paul's initial debut at Iowa was in 1932, when he expanded a small writing class into a writing program for younger writers, called the Writer's Workshop.

At that time, it consisted of very few "untalented and never published" writers. He is proud of the fact that just a few years later, the workshop enlisted about 150 publishing writers.

"I'm very happy to say that many more of my students won the Yale Series of Younger Poets award than Yale students did," he said.

Paul served as the director of the UI Writer's Workshop for 25 years. Then, in 1967, he and his wife, Hualing Nieh, co-founded the International Writing Program, a program designed to unite aspiring writers from countries all over the world in one place, Iowa City.

Last year, the program celebrated its twentieth year with a reunion of about 30 of its participants in Iowa City.

Hualing Nieh took over Paul's position as the director of the International Writing Program in 1977 upon his retirement.

Hualing Nieh is now also taking early retirement. "I'm happy I've been here," she said, "but I'm also happy I'm leaving."

"I've got plenty to do. I've got several writing projects to do," she said.

The Engles will be leaving in October to tour Europe. After a stop in New York, the Engles will go on to Paris, then drive with a Romanian writer and his wife to Belgrade, Yugoslavia, where Hualing Nieh will deliver a lecture on "Exile in Literature" at a World Writers Conference. They have been invited to the Soviet Union and Hungary. They will also visit Czechoslovakia and Holland.

"One third of my life has been devoted to the international program, by leaving I am touched by sadness. Looking back, I think I did a good job," Hualing Nieh said.

"I feel the UI is good for writers," she said. "I have done some unusual things with the program because the university is liberal-minded and open-minded."

The Engles were nominated in 1976 for the Nobel Peace Prize. In 1978, Engle was named an honorary Poet Laureate of the state of Iowa by resolution of the Iowa House of Representatives.

Together, the Engles have raised more than $2 million for the program. Between 700 and 800 writers of poetry, fiction, plays and translations have participated in the program.

Fredrick Woodard, UI associate dean of faculties, will be the program's acting director for one year.

Minority program is gaining support

By Cathy Jackson
The Daily Iowan

With pronounced support from UI President Hunter Rawlings III and increasing commitment among UI students, alumni and administration, Opportunity at Iowa, a program to recruit both minority students and faculty to the UI, should flourish this year.

"We've put a very high priority on efforts to recruit minorities," Rawlings said. "One of the most hopeful signs is what (current) students are doing on their own. Black alumni have already been helping. I've asked them to keep up their efforts."

But Rawlings said it will take plenty of work to reach the state Board of Regents' goal of an 8.5 percent minority enrollment at the three state universities by 1991.

"I'm quite optimistic, but it's going to take a lot of work by all of us," he said.

Although money will always be a concern — the state Legislature did not approve funding for the program this year — enthusiasm for Opportunity at Iowa will continue under Rawlings, according to Opportunity at Iowa Co-director Rusty Barcelo.

"I'm pleased with the support he's offering," she said. "I think the momentum is going to continue with his leadership."

Barcelo said she is in the process of developing grant proposals for the program, an effort that should complement a $300,000 contribution given to the program by the UI Athletic Department in June.

Rawlings said he will research the program's fund-raising needs.

"One thing we are doing is consulting with people in the next few weeks to see if we have enough resources devoted to this effort," Rawlings said.

Opportunity at Iowa Director and Vice President for Student Services Philip Hubbard said he still hopes the state legislature will realize the need for funding.

"We hope they won't feel that our ability to move forward in spite of (the lack of state funding means) we can do without help," Hubbard said. "We're really grasping at straws now."

But despite a shortage of money, those working on the program, which began in October 1987, are already taking on new projects.

Barcelo said she is examining programs that will identify prospective students earlier, when they are just beginning junior high school.

"The earlier you begin talking to young students, the more they become aware of what their opportunities are," she said.

Besides starting students on a college-bound path by encouraging them to take classes that will prepare them for higher education, Barcelo said the outreach may discourage minority students from dropping out of school.

"They develop their skills, develop their self-esteem, and they begin to see that they can do it," she said.

Gangs

dope houses and crack houses."

Gang members often use apartments or houses for dealing crack and cocaine. Rogerson said it's unfortunate that the state hasn't allowed the use of wiretaps like those used in Miami to bust drug dealers. So for now they must rely on their informants for drug busts.

Investigator David Sullivan of the Rock Island police department also said national gangs exist in the Quad Cities. The three most prominent are the Latin Kings, Disciples and Vice Lords.

"We can judge what kind of gangs exist by the graffiti," Sullivan said, adding that the police also look for other gang identifiers like tattoos and hats.

Although the Quad Cities will never have a drug problem like the major cities, Sullivan said heroin, cocaine and marijuana are the most abundant drugs in the cities.

He added that he is not aware of the existence of crack in his area yet.

Sullivan said the way his department tries to combat the gangs is by providing an alternative for the kids.

"We offer different activities at the Martin Luther King Center where kids come in and play pool, ping pong and organized sports," he said.

Sullivan said he also talks to parents at local schools to make them aware of the gang activities and what signs to look for in their children.

Strike

Despite the strike settlement, the fall television season cannot proceed as planned. Its start will be delayed, perhaps until November. The financial costs to the networks could range into tens of millions of dollars.

The WGA has 9,000 members, most living and working in Southern California. The alliance has 217 member companies, responsible for 85 percent of network prime time television and 90 percent of feature film production and distribution.

The contract proposal reflects improvements in the foreign residual structure and gains in the area of creative rights, the main issues dogging negotiations, said the union negotiator.

The strike was seen by writers as a test of will, a measure of organized labor's strength in an era of declining union membership. Of all entertainment unions, the writers union has most frequently used the strike; this was its third walkout of the 1980s.

Ode to a hot dog

Recently, a group of angry, horrified spectators surrounded a small, helpless dog as he frantically fought for survival in this 100-degree heat. He was trapped in a Suburban. In his desperate struggle to get out of the torrid vehicle, the pint-sized pup got his tiny head caught in the crack of the window, nearly strangling himself.

He was at the mercy of his owner, who was lazily patronizing a local department store. Appropriately, his owner was met with some well-deserved "cat-calls" upon her untimely return to the Suburban-turned-microwave.

Perhaps this pet owner was suffering from a momentary lack of common sense, for it is unthinkable that one would subject an animal to undue harm on purpose. Nevertheless, such behavior is inexcusable.

In the throngs of the current heat wave, this particular horror story is assuredly not the only one of its kind. In the past week alone, the Iowa City Animal Clinic responded to two cases where dogs died in parked cars. Dogs and cats do not sweat like people. Leaving them in a parked car for even a short period of time, even with the windows cracked, can be deadly. A parked car can rapidly reach 130 degrees. If an animal is confined to a 108 degree area, brain damage can occur and result in their needless death.

Danger signals to watch for include excessive panting, lethargy, weakness and a pale tongue. The best treatment if your pet is suffering from the heat is to cool them down rapidly, with cool water.

Be a responsible pet owner. Make sure animals that are kept outside have shade and water. Don't leave pets in a parked car while you shop. And for crying out loud, don't take them on five-mile jogging outings, even if you are stupid enough to attempt it in this weather.

Litany of sleaze

The time has come to bid good riddance to Edwin Meese III. In his overly long and dubious tenure as attorney general, Ed brought something back to American politics that hadn't surfaced for nearly fifteen years — true, unabashed corruption.

Back in 1985, when President Reagan dangled the keys to the Justice Department before Ed, an ethics investigation was launched to find out if Ed was fit to serve. He wasn't, but that didn't stop the agency's director from over-ruling the investigators' objections. Ed was "vindicated" and sworn in.

By April, 1987, Ed had honed bungling, cajoling and advantageous inertia into an art form. He intervened on behalf of his good friend E. Robert Wallach and his pet projects. Ed owed Wallach, especially after Wallach had helped Ed's wife land a cushy $40,000-a-year job with the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Ed's intervention resulted in yet another investigation of his ethics. This new investigation reached the same conclusion as had been reached three years earlier. Ed again violated the rules of ethical conduct, but no sanctioning resulted. Ed was again "vindicated."

But in the end, Ed has only himself to blame for not being smart enough to handle being attorney general and a sleaze at the same time.

If on his way out of town, Ed quotes Nixon and growls "you won't have Ed Meese to kick around anymore, this is my last press conference" — watch out, he may return as president.

Resistance to Shultz

The Foreign Ministers of Guatemala and Costa Rica deserve commendation for their refusal to support a statement sponsored by Secretary of State George Shultz denouncing the Sandinistas as solely responsible for unrest and instability in Central America. Honduras and El Salvador, originally in favor of the Shultz statement, were persuaded to join Costa Rica and Guatemala in issuing a more mildly worded version that expressed support for democratic principles.

The problems of any region of the world are much too complex to be blamed on only one party or group, and Central America is no exception. Further, trying to ally the United States and four Central American nations against Nicaragua would only heighten tensions by setting up an "us vs. them" confrontation. Officials from Guatemala and Costa Rica acknowledged this fact, saying that a representative from Nicaragua should have been present when the other four Central American nations met to discuss the problems of the region.

Costa Rica and Guatemala clearly see the importance of open communication and exchange in Central America. Julio Santos, a spokesman for the Guatemalan president, underlined this concept when he stated, "Guatemala will not agree to any document that isolates or condemns Nicaragua. Dialogue is the only way to resolve regional problems." This is in marked contrast to Shultz, who would shut Nicaragua out and support renewed aid to a group which would undermine and destabilize the government of Nicaragua through armed conflict, namely the Contras. Shultz does not see the moral contradiction of supporting arms to the Contras and then condemning Nicaragua for accepting Soviet military aid.

Certainly the Sandinista government is far from a democracy. The recent political crackdowns in Nicaragua illustrate this clearly. But if the United States wants Nicaragua to make positive changes, dialogue and communication, not isolation and pressure tactics, are the means to that end.

Iowa has worst of both seasons

dried spit around his mouth.

I've begun to wonder — is there no end in sight? Is this the permanent and solid condition of Iowa summer? Does the heat just move in like a grazing herd of cows and stay here until there is nothing left? Is it true that August is even worse?

Drought and heat of this dimension is beyond my saying. But is it really the worst? My paltry few years observing the weather are nothing compared to the venerable old farmers we see on TV who sit there all gnarled up and stumpy like an ancient tree, leveling one distant eye on us while slowly opening their mouths to say, "This . . . is . . . the . . . worst . . ."

The one single lone amusement I can take from living in the middle of the worst drought of this century is in listening to those who are new to the area talk about the incredible heat. I overheard a discussion between two students from Saudi Arabia — surely people who would know about heat — talking about how stunningly hot Iowa seems to be, especially since they had been warned to look out for the winters. One of them said, "I believe the information was wrong. Saudi Arabia, during the worst of the Hot Season, even in the middle of the desert, is not this hot. Jabul, would you believe that there could be a place hotter than Riyadh?" Then he went on, "So I would have to believe that such cold winters as I imagined are impossible. The swing in temperatures would be too extreme. Let us ask someone."

He turned to me. "Sir?"

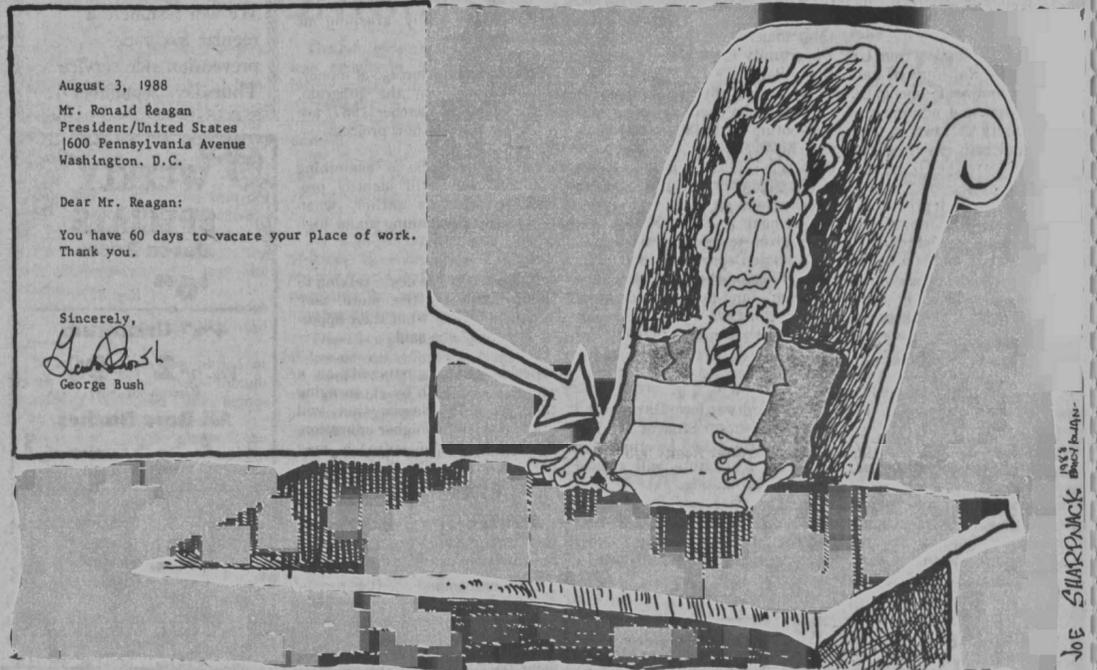

"Yes," I said and proceeded to tell him about Iowa winters. I told him basically that there was no comparison between the heat of summer and the cold of winter. That both extremes in temperature thrive and endure at this latitude. That Iowa is a stand-alone giant in the world of temperature records. That to even begin to compare the discomfort of summer to the drop dead cold of winter, would be like trying to compare a Fourth of July festival with a nuclear explosion. I summed up by saying, "If you think summer is tough, winter is considered the big boy here."

And yet I don't think we feel the worst of this heat. We've all got offices to go to or libraries or restaurants. The group I figure is getting the hottest end of the heat wave are the birds. As far as comfort goes, a bird is already born at a disadvantage having feathers. Nothing could be more uncomfortable than stalks sticking out of your skin. If your feathers were ruffled, it would hurt. Plucking is out of the question.

The only tolerable place for a feather to lay is down and relaxed in the usual place. But that traps heat. So the only two ways a bird can cool off is either to fluff him or herself up or go swimming. And droughts are notorious for their bad swimming. I remind myself of this when the heat seems to become unbearable.

Dukakis demonstrates tax savvy

John Dornfeld

The United States is slowly beginning to resemble a Third World country economically. That is why Vice President George Bush hasn't benefitted much recently from the alleged "good news" about the economy.

In Third World countries the middle class is small, the wealthy control much and the vast majority is poor.

While unemployment and inflation are down in the United States — and that's good — the wealthy have benefitted the most from this recovery. Poor and middle class people in this country have, at best, seen their incomes stay flat while expenses for education, health care and housing have continued to rise.

Pertinent facts for my argument can be seen in a July 25th editorial in U.S. News and World Report, a fairly conservative weekly. The numbers come from the Congressional Budget Office.

In 1987 dollars, average after-tax family income has gone from $24,184 per year in 1977 to $26,494 in 1988, a 9.6 percent increase. So far, so good.

The problems are seen in the distribution. Families in the bottom tenth have lost, on average, $371 in income from 1977 to 1987. That's a 10 percent decrease for the poorest families in this country. The richest tenth have seen their incomes rise by $19,324, a 27.4 percent increase. To skew that further, families in the top one percent have seen their incomes increase from $174,498 per year to $303,900, an average increase of 74.2 percent.

Middle income families have seen their incomes either stay flat or increase by very small amounts. The middle tenth saw their incomes, on average, increase from $18,043 to $18,076, a $33 increase. Maybe an extra night eating out for the family, but not much more.

Even the seventh bracket saw their incomes go up only three percent, from $26,240 a year to $27,038, an increase of $798. And remember, these are people who are in the "comfortable" middle class — not rich, not poor.

As U.S. News said, "... what is equally intriguing is that these income disparities have not produced more resentment of the elite and more hostile and widespread populism."

They went on to say: "In most middle-income families, the gains in family income have been almost entirely from the entry of wives in the workplace, rather than from real wage increases." This is a phenomenon reminiscent of Third World countries. In those countries, higher family incomes come from more people in the household working, not incomes of those working getting larger.

"Many (middle class families) cannot afford a college education for their children without financial assistance," the magazine added. "Most younger families cannot afford to buy homes."

Although U.S. News did not endorse a presidential candidate in the editorial, in an unrelated article in the same issue they mentioned that income inequity in Massachusetts during Mike Dukakis' tenure as governor has gone down: "Between 1979 and 1984, the estimated share of personal income received by families in the lowest 20 percent rose in Massachusetts; nationally it declined."

They mentioned that under Dukakis, "Massachusetts now provides grants so that no community spends less than 85 percent of the statewide average on a per-pupil basis for education. Welfare payments are up 54 percent since 1983; local nutrition programs for women, infants and children make up for Reagan's cuts in these areas. And, of course, Massachusetts is now the first state to mandate universal health insurance."

So an interesting choice presents itself in this presidential election. We can either vote for someone who will continue the present policies that helped create inequity, or we can vote for someone who has already proved he can reduce inequity and keep the American dream open for more people to pursue and achieve.

John Dornfeld's column appears periodically on the Viewpoints page.

Evolutionary throwbacks

To the Editor:

True, the Campus Review's display of a T-shirt bearing a pictorial representation of anal sex in progress, as well as their call to ban such practices to "Stop Aids," is tasteless and disgusting. However, we cannot suppress the right of other American citizens — regardless of their stunted progress on the evolutionary scale — to freedom of speech, as guaranteed by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. Indeed, such a differing viewpoint, especially one so graphically poignant, gives people a powerful illustration of the dispicable nature of prejudice and ignorance that permeates the writing of the Campus Review and provides the basis upon which one may make the decision not to support such inane beliefs.

Doctors have established that AIDS, just as many other sexual diseases, can be transmitted through heterosexual intercourse as well as anal intercourse. All people, gay and straight alike, must take responsibility for their individual actions and learn to control their behavior by not engaging in promiscuous, indiscriminate sex. The writers for the Campus Review cannot escape facing this reality by conveniently blaming the disease on whichever minority they choose to dislike. Such discrimination didn't solve Hitler's problems, and it won't solve theirs. I do regret that the Union has not yet allotted space for the display of T-shirts declaring "Stop Campus Review," but perhaps no one has yet figured out how to visually illustrate cousins marrying.

Angola, Cuba reject S. African proposals

GENEVA — South African proposals for ending the Angolan war were rejected Wednesday by Angola and Cuba, but the negotiators and a U.S. mediator agreed to continue talks aimed at reaching a peaceful settlement.

Two U.S. officials suggested that South Africa broke confidentiality rules set for the secret talks by providing details to the media.

The negotiations, now in their fifth round and scheduled to end Thursday, have come closer to reaching agreement than any in the past.

The proposals, disclosed by Foreign Minister Pik Botha in Pretoria, called for a cease-fire in Angola's 13-year-old war to begin Wednesday, set timetables for foreign troop withdrawals, and called for free elections in South-West Africa, commonly known as Namibia, on June 1, 1989.

Cuba dismissed the timetable proposals as "preposterous and unrealistic" and said they constituted an "outdated attempt to revive the linkage between the independence of Namibia and the Cuban presence in Angola."

The Angolan delegation, in a less vociferous statement, said the proposals did "not reflect the spirit of prior agreements" and vowed the Marxist government "will not negotiate away Angola's sovereignty and independence."

Soviets release West German pilot early

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union on Wednesday freed a repentant Mathias Rust from prison, sending him home to West Germany the young pilot who buzzed the Kremlin spires in Red Square and embarrassed the Soviet Defense Ministry.

Rust was taken from Lefortovo Prison, where he has been serving his four-year sentence, and put him aboard a Lufthansa Airbus A-300 jet that left Moscow's Sheremetyevo Airport for Frankfurt, said a spokesman for the West German Embassy.

"I realize that I have committed serious criminal offenses and the fact that the Presidium of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet freed me from punishment before I served my term is an act of humanism," the official Tass news agency quoted Rust as saying.

The West German media hailed his release, although a TV station reported that Rust, 20, could face more charges back home for the daring stunt that caused a shake-up in the Soviet military.

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — The World Court announced Wednesday the United States has failed to meet a deadline set by the court to determine war reparations to Nicaragua.

The United States has been boycotting the World Court since 1984, when the court overruled a U.S. claim that it was not authorized to hear a Nicaraguan complaint that the Reagan administration was supporting the anti-Sandinista rebels.

The United States ignored the July 29 deadline to present its position in the reparations case, a World Court spokesman said Wednesday. He spoke on condition of anonymity in line with court practice.

There was no immediate comment from Washington.

Beach cleaner hits jackpot on Long Island

ATLANTIC BEACH, N.Y. — Long Islanders thought they'd seen everything wash up on their shores in recent weeks — until a beach cleaner collected $300 in faded bills from a beach Wednesday morning.

"I couldn't believe my eyes," said Singleton Moorer, who collected the cash while cleaning the beachfront at the Silver Point Club. "I just kept picking it up, and the tide kept washing it back out. I was so excited."

Moorer reported collecting a $100 bill and an assortment of $20s, $10s, $5s and singles trapped in clumps of seaweed along the tide line — quite a switch from the syringes, blood vials and garbage which have closed beaches this summer.

Moorer, 38, said he and two colleagues found the money around 5:30 a.m. Most of it was faded to white and light green by the salt water and sunlight, he said.

Moorer took the cash and bought a big breakfast for himself and his colleagues. The eight-year veteran of the beach-cleaning crew said last year he found about $50.

"This is a great job," Moorer said, adding the money is more than a week's pay for him.

Stocks double Tuesday's gain, up 3 points

NEW YORK — Stock prices edged upward for the third straight session, continuing sluggish midsummer trading.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 2.85 to 2,134.07, after the two previous trading days in which it eked out a net gain of 2.49 points.

Volume on the floor of the big board came to 203.59 million shares, against 166.66 million in the previous session.

Carlucci, Gromyko talk at Soviet headquarters

SEVASTOPOL, U.S.S.R. (AP) — The Soviet Union opened this strategic Black Sea port to Frank Carlucci after the U.S. defense secretary held what he described as constructive talks Wednesday with President Andrei Gromyko.

Carlucci was the first U.S. official to visit Sevastopol, headquarters of the Soviet Black Sea Fleet, since President Franklin Roosevelt did so in 1945 during his Yalta summit with Josef Stalin and Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Britain.

Carlucci took a boat from Yalta to Sevastopol on the Crimean Peninsula after meeting with Gromyko in Massandra, a small town four miles from Yalta.

He told reporters his session with the 79-year-old president, who served nearly three decades as foreign minister, was "very constructive."

"Obviously we did not agree on all things but we found areas of agreement," he said. Carlucci did not give details of the talks but said they touched on arms control.

Tass, the official news agency, said Gromyko identified elimination of nuclear arms as the current "problem of problems" and lamented slow progress in U.S.-Soviet talks on long-range weapons now under way in Geneva.

Peace will benefit from anything President Ronald Reagan can do to "breathe fresh energy" into the talks during the last months of his administration, he said, and called for greater understanding and trust between the superpowers.

"Let us arrange things in such a way so that your arm is never lifted against us, and ours against you," Tass quoted him as saying.

Frank Carlucci, right

Carlucci and his delegation were in the third day of an official visit to the Soviet Union during which close inspection has been allowed of some previously secret Kremlin hardware and military bases.

IRA continues attacks on British army

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — IRA gunmen ambushed and killed a part-time soldier as he drove to work Wednesday, claiming their fourth victim in three days of attacks on British military targets.

Thirty-three people have been wounded.

Ken Maginnes, a ranking Protestant lawmaker, urged Britain to arrest about 40 people suspected of being Irish Republican Army ringleaders and hold them without trial. British authorities abandoned that policy, called internment, in 1975.

Guerrillas fired on Pvt. Raymond McNicholl of the Ulster Defense Regiment, the locally recruited British army unit, as he slowed his car to cross a narrow bridge outside Cookstown, 40 miles west of Belfast.

McNicholl, 31, was on his way to work at an engineering plant. Police said he was hit several times in the head and chest and died later at South Tyrone Hospital.

Spokesmen for the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the police force of the Protestant-dominated British province, said the guerrillas drove to the ambush in a car stolen from a family of five held captive overnight.

Reagan vetoes defense appropriations bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ronald Reagan vetoed a $299.5 billion Pentagon budget bill Wednesday, charging congressional Democrats with partisan politics and saying the bill would cripple his Star Wars program and signal "weakness and accommodation" in U.S. defense policy.

Although the bill has become entangled in election-year politics and leading Republicans had urged the president to veto it, Reagan disavowed any political motives.

"These are issues of national security and they must remain above partisan politics," he said.

The bill essentially would have authorized the spending levels Reagan sought, but sought to rearrange spending priorities. Administration officials complained that the legislation contained language that would have tied the president's hands on future arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union.

"They say this bill would take the 'stars' out of Star Wars," said Reagan. "With my veto today, I am putting back the 'I' initiative, in SDI."

Closing notice in paycheck may be norm

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some companies are considering the possibility of including 60-day layoff notices in every worker's paycheck every week, two weeks or a month as a way of complying with a new federal law requiring them, business lobbyists say.

The new plant closing and layoff notification law, which President Ronald Reagan said he will allow to be take effect today despite personal objections, generally requires companies to give workers 60 days' notice before taking workers caught up in large layoffs or plant closings off their payrolls.

Business groups and Reagan had vigorously opposed the law, saying it would reduce private enterprise's flexibility to respond to changes in the world marketplace.

During the more than two years of congressional debate on the bill, both proponents and opponents of the legislation had acknowledged that companies could circumvent the intent of the law by putting layoff notices in every paycheck.

"That has been suggested by some companies since they don't know 60 days down the road where they might be," Renee Raymond, a lobbyist for the National Association of Manufacturers, said Wednesday. "It's just an idea that some companies have mentioned as a way of not being found in violation. I don't think anybody is looking at it seriously yet."

The AFL-CIO and other proponents of the layoff and plant closing notices acknowledge that the bill was sufficiently weakened in more than a half-dozen revisions to provide such loopholes.

"We would have preferred to have legislation that was considerably tougher," said Jay Power, the labor federation's chief lobbyist on the issue. "There are enough loopholes for unscrupulous businessmen to try to do a lot of things."

Big Steve King holds top of pop-horror heap

By Locke Peterseim
The Daily Iowan

When we last left our hero, Stephen King, he was in dire straits — pressed up against the bestseller wall by an upstart Brit punk named Clive Barker who had Big Steve King shaking in his size-twelves. But the horror-writing gunslinger from across the pond is still wet behind his ears, and even in his commercial and creative decline, our hero still has a few tricks up his sleeve of scares.

Stephen King.

It's always taken guts to admit in a literary-orientated college town that you actually like the pure pop pulp of Stephen King. But in recent years even those brave few who dared stand up and bear witness to their guilty pleasures have blushed a little at King's latest tomes.

King blew into the supermarket scene in the late '70s with a storytelling ability that not only served up delicious thrill and chills, but also a goodly amount of fun, if slightly clumsy and overly saccharine, Americana nostalgia. But around the time of publishing "Christine" someone made the mistake of calling King a "writer," and the poor fool believed them. Professors started dissecting Big Steve's work to see what made that horrible "tick," and other writers started publishing studies explaining why King sold so many books and they didn't. The result was that King felt he had something to prove — a name to live up to — and suddenly he couldn't say anything in under 800 pages.

But just when it seemed King's new books would never be good for anything other than propping up broken couches, our hero bounced back. "Misery," just out this summer in paperback (not even the hardest-core King fans would actually shell out $19.95 for hardcovers), is enjoyably tight and tense — and at just over 300 pages, relatively sleek.

This is Big Steve's declaration of self — a novel about a commercially successful novelist who, due to bit of misfortune winds up the crippled "guest" of his "biggest right, King actually wrote a novel that can't be summed up in two sentences. Not that it takes major brain-straining to find the symbolic and thematic connections, but our hero's lumbering stab at reflexivity is competent and fun.

"Misery" manages to simultaneously present a thrilling story and an interesting guided tour through the mind of a writer. To many the term may only apply loosely to King, but you can't deny that anyone who has been as wildly successful in the book business as Stephen King deserves a listen-to when they try to explain why and how they churn out the goods. Of course King gets as sickeningly over-emotional and melodramatic about trade secrets as he does about everything else — as a rule Big Steve's writing has all the style and subtlety of an all-mud truck pull.

And speaking of sickening, it would seem that King may even be — shudder! — mellowing a bit. In fact he gets nearly two-thirds through the novel before spilling even one drop of the red stuff. (Of course, when he does get around to the actual blood-letting he doesn't hold back.) Rather than trying to keep up with the new kids on the horror block, as well as his own reputation, Big Steve trys suspense for a change. Instead of slashing away from page one, King slowly turns the screws, creating in "Misery" the kind of page-turning tension his competitors can only hope to mimic.

King's not a great writer. He may not even be a good one. But he is one hell of a storyteller, who knows how to play the crowd — giving them just what they want with an occasional nifty twist thrown in to keep the hook buried deep. It would be hard to say how the future will treat our hero — despite constant whining about his literary label, he hasn't really ever shown that he has the ability to escape the weight of the crown. But "Misery" proves that when King buckles down and tries he can still turn out some pretty impressive goods within those commercial-genre bounds.

fan," a large psychotic nurse who proves that a wood-axe is just as effective as an editor's pen. The plot goes on to get, well, complicated as it plays out every aspect of a writer's darkest nightmares — the blocks, the pressures of popularity, the pain of creation, the love of writing, slavery to fans and sales and broken typewriters.

All this adds up to a surprisingly fair amount of complexity — that's Membranes visit Iowa City, bringing their brand of rock

By Brian Jones
The Daily Iowan

The Membranes are a "self-proclaimed fag retard haircut band on wheels." More importantly, though, the Membranes are a self-proclaimed fag retard haircut band on wheels that will be appearing at Gabe's tomorrow night.

A band of obvious taste, dignity and decorum, the Membranes are touring in support of their recent Homestead Records release, "Kiss Ass Godhead," produced by ex-Big Black "person" Steve Albini.

Describing the Membranes' music is roughly akin to relating the details of a nuclear accident. There's this big, loud sound, maybe a flash of light, and then this oozing muck all over your shoes.

The Membranes are from England's Blackpool, so their music retains a particularly British slant. It's jittery, and there's usually some semblance of rhythm, but it's real confrontational noise — like the Membranes say in the new album's "Let's Take the Death Trip," "Fish 'n' chips and acid trips."

Led by John Robb (who also does duty in The Three Johns), the Membranes, an occasional trio and sometimes quartet, have recorded for about a thousand labels since their 1977 inception. Robb is the kingpin behind the UK's Vinyl Drip label, which has released records by Pussy Galore, V V Vee and Pigbros, as well as the Membranes.

In 1985 influential BBC disc jockey John Peel labeled the Membranes the spiritual fathers of the then-festering English "shambling band" movement. The bands tagged as "shambling" were seen as largely instrumentally incompetent, drink-ravaged noisemongers with no commercial potential and (some might say) little discernible talent. Although the term was greeted with a backlash in 1986, the Membranes have seemingly been unable to shake the tag. A shame, really, since (even though you'd have to be pretty stupid to confuse them with Led Zeppelin) the Membranes' music has increasingly come into tighter focus. It's a better description would be applied to them by the West German Constrictor label, "Preachers of the Bible of Noise."

This will be the Membranes' second Iowa City appearance. The first show was grossly under-attended (about 30 people), no doubt due to the fact that Sonic Youth had played the night before.

Don't make the same mistake twice. By all accounts, the Membranes are a tremendous (not shambling) live band. The perfect show for that annoying friend who can't stop talking about REM.

Appearing with the Membranes will be Toxic Shock recording artists the Hickoids, an Austin, Texas, "hard-corn" band.

Kimball admits to drinking before crash

BRANDON, Fla. (AP) — Olympic diver Bruce Kimball told police he had been drinking before his sports car crashed into a group of teen-agers, but officials said Wednesday they have not concluded the accident that killed two and injured six was alcohol-related.

While the Hillsborough County sheriff's department continued its investigation of the accident, speculation about the cause centered around an arrest affidavit in which Kimball, 25, admitted to drinking four beers earlier Monday evening.

Shortly before 11 p.m. that night, police said, Kimball lost control of his 1984 Mazda RX-7 as he drove down a dead-end road and ran through a crowd of 30 to 40 teen-agers gathered at a meeting place called "The Spot."

Becker knocked off at U.S. Hardcourt

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A four-week layoff, a post-Wimbledon letdown and a new surface spelled trouble for top seed Boris Becker at the U.S. Hardcourt championships.

Becker's groundstrokes were unsteady and he lacked concentration in Tuesday night's 6-3, 6-7 (7-4), 6-2 victory over Todd Nelson. It was the West German's first tournament match since losing in the Wimbledon finals July 4 and his first on a hard surface in six months.

"The ball is bouncing much higher than on anything else," Becker said of the newly laid Deco Turf II at the Indianapolis Sports Center. "It's not so easy playing six months on clay and on grass and then you come to a hardcourt tournament. It's hard to get a rhythm."

Red Sox' skipper earns new contract

BOSTON (AP) — Joe Morgan, who replaced John McNamara as manager of the Boston Red Sox on July 14, was rewarded Wednesday with a new contract through the 1989 season.

"Joe has rekindled the enthusiasm and optimism of the players and fans," said Red Sox president and principal owner Jean R. Yawkey in a statement. "We believe he deserves the opportunity to manage the Red Sox in 1989."

The Red Sox won their first 12 games under Morgan and were 18-1 going into Wednesday night's game with the Texas Rangers. They were nine games behind front-running Detroit at the All-Star break but started Wednesday night's game only one game back.

Karolyi criticizes Olympic procedures

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — International gymnastics guru Bela Karolyi says America's gymnastics community is self-destructing on the eve of the 1988 Summer Olympics.

Karolyi, who coaches some of America's top women gymnasts, said the controversy and in-house fighting that have plagued the United States Gymnastics Federation in recent months will take their toll when the Americans arrive in Seoul next month.

"We are looking like dirty idiots," Karolyi told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from his home in Houston. "Personally I just can't understand it. I have never seen such miserable procedures."

Karolyi, who coached Mary Lou Retton to the all-around gold medal in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles, has another strong group of Olympic contenders with 15-year-old national champion Phoebe Mills, 14-year-old Chelle Stack and 16-year-old Kristie Phillips, who is trying to regain the form that two years ago prompted comparisons with Retton.

Bradley tourney using new scoring system

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — A new scoring system will inspire more daring and aggressive play in the $400,000 Pat Bradley International tournament, golfers preparing for the LPGA event said Wednesday.

They said they will be concentrating on scoring points rather than worrying so much about strokes.

"I think it's going to be exciting," said Pat Bradley, for whom the tournament is named. "The players have already seen 22 events this year with the 72-hole format. With this system, as the saying goes, 'no guts — no glory.'"

Previously known as the Henredon Classic, the four-day tournament starting today at the par-72, 6,260-yard Willow Creek Golf Club, will be using the Stableford scoring system. The tournament will be the first on the women's tour to use the system.

The system rewards aggressive play by awarding points for scores below par and subtracting points for scores over par. A par is counted as zero, while a double eagle is worth eight points, an eagle five and a birdie three. A bogey costs golfers one point while a double bogey costs three points, the most a player can lose.

The starting field is made up of 144 golfers, and will be cut in half each day. A final field of 18 will play for the top prize of $62,500.

Edberg, Graf will be among Olympic tennis competitors

LONDON (AP) — Wimbledon singles champions Stefan Edberg of Sweden and Steffi Graf of West Germany are among the big-name tennis stars who will compete in the Olympics, the International Tennis Federation said Wednesday.

The final entry list for the sport's return as a medal event for the first time in 64 years contains 26 of the world's top-ranked 40 players in men's and women's tennis.

Edberg and Graf won in Los Angeles four years ago when tennis was a demonstration sport.

Edberg, the world's second-ranked men's player, will have countryman Mats Wilander and West Germany's Boris Becker as his main rivals in Seoul, South Korea. Others taking part include Henri Leconte of France and Americans Brad Gilbert and Tim Mayotte.

Graf, the world's top-ranked woman, heads a powerful lineup that includes Chris Evert and Pam Shriver of the United States, Argentina's Gabriela Sabatini and Natalia Zvereva of the Soviet Union.

The ITF said 11 of the top 20 male players and 15 of the leading 20 women in the world computer rankings will be competing for gold, silver and bronze medals in singles and doubles.

Olympic tennis competition runs from Sept. 20 through Oct. 1.

The most notable absentees will include the world's No. 1 male player Ivan Lendl, American John McEnroe and Australia's Pat Cash, who originally was entered but withdrew for personal reasons.

Martina Navratilova was the most obvious among the missing in the women's draw, but ITF officials said they were pleased with the entry list.

"For over 10 years, the International Tennis Federation has been in the forefront in the struggle to return tennis to the Olympics," President Philippe Chatrier said in a statement. "Now all the qualifying events are over, we have an outstanding field of players from around the world who will be in Korea. It is going to be an historical event for all concerned."

Players taking part in the Olympics earned a berth by direct acceptances, wild cards and qualifying. No more than three players were allowed from any one country, and preference was given to nations who have performed well in Davis Cup and Federation Cup competitions over the past 18 months.

The seeds, 16 in the men's event and 12 in the women's, will be selected in Seoul shortly before the draw on Sept. 18.

Although the deadline for each nation to make its final nominations was July 31, changes can still be made, but only by the ITF through its "lucky loser" qualifying system.

Tennis was part of the Olympics from 1896 until 1924, but its only two appearances in the last 64 years were as demonstration events in 1968 and 1984.

Computer rankings will not be affected by the outcome of the Seoul tournament, to be played on an outdoor cushioned acrylic surface. Strict restrictions are being imposed on prize money, sponsorship and endorsements.

Olympic housing officials work to keep peace among athletes

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Officials are taking no chances about the Olympic spirit being enough to keep peace among athletes in Seoul next month.

Iranian and Iraqi athletes will be housed as far apart as possible in the Olympic village, as will athletes from other countries not on friendly terms.

Officials responsible for the arrangements said Wednesday that while each of the village's 82 buildings will have its own separate security, no special protection is planned for the possible problem delegations.

The entire village will be under tight guard, but athletes will be free to mingle in its "international zone," which houses the dining hall, shopping areas and recreational facilities.

Kim Bok-hee, deputy director general of the village, said national team locations within the residential area were assigned according to the nations' continents, language, religion and cultural similarities. Within the buildings, team leaders assign the rooms, he said.

"We also took political aspects into consideration, but they did not play a big role because basically the Olympics is not a political event," Kim said.

He added, however, that teams such as Iran's and Iraq's were being kept far apart in the 123-acre village, which is expected to house about 13,000 athletes and officials from 161 nations.

Lee In-on, executive chef for the athletes' cafeteria-style dining hall, said, "We have taken special consideration for Moslems, kosher food and vegetarians, although so far we have received no special requests from vegetarians."

Florida coach testifies before grand jury in drug investigation

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida basketball Coach Norm Sloan voluntarily testified Wednesday before a federal grand jury reportedly investigating cocaine sales in the Gainesville area which may have involved Gator players.

Sloan, accompanied by attorney Huntley Johnson of Gainesville, spent about 1 1/2 hours before the grand jury, which will determine whether the government has enough evidence to take the case to trial.

The U.S. Attorney's Office in Tallahassee and the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration have been conducting a drug-related investigation in connection with drug use and sales in Gainesville.

"On behalf of Coach Sloan, we appreciate the opportunity to come up and talk to the grand jury," Johnson said. "We hope we've been helpful, and we think we've been helpful, and out of deference to the investigation, we have nothing further to say at this time."

"Everything went fine, just fine," he said, adding that Sloan testified of his own volition. "He has not been subpoenaed," Johnson said.

Before going into the federal courthouse in downtown Tallahassee, Sloan politely refrained from answering any questions from reporters. Witnesses are prohibited by law from discussing their testimony to a grand jury.

However, Sloan, who led North Carolina State to a national championship in 1974, Yun Nak-yung, director of food services, said the cooks at the village, from two major Seoul hotels, would include some foreign chefs. The Korean cooks go to France or the United States twice a year for training.

"We are sure we can provide food above international standards," he said.

Lee said dining room supplies would include 53 tons of beef, seven tons of lamb, 12 tons of pork, one ton of turkey, 63 tons of chickens, 36 tons of fish and more than 1 million eggs.

The village will not provide alcohol, he said, although athletes can bring in their own. For VIPs, the village will have a cocktail lounge where athletes are not admitted, he said.

The charge per athlete is $42 a day for room and meals. Available free to them will be a disco, billiards room, swimming pool and sauna.

They said a religious center in the village will offer Catholic, Protestant, Greek Orthodox, Buddhist, Moslem and Jewish services.

Athletes will live one or two to a room in units of five, seven or nine people. The five-athlete units will have one bathroom and the bigger units two bathrooms.

There has been a heavy investment in landscaping, including two artificial brooks, and low hills in the village will have jogging paths and recreational areas for the athletes, officials said.

The entire place, which is 10 miles from downtown Seoul, becomes an apartment complex after the Games.

The village sits between low hills and rice paddies on one side and the Olympic Park on the other. The park is the site of the main swimming pool and stadiums for gymnastics, tennis, fencing, weightlifting and cycling.

seemed impassive after his testimony. University of Florida President Marshall Criser called for an internal investigation last week after receiving information from federal authorities about possible drug use by former and current athletes and other students.

Three former players, Vernon Maxwell, Patrick Aaron and Kenny McClary, were subpoenaed and testified before the grand jury last month.

Johnson said Sloan requested the opportunity to appear after a 90-minute meeting Monday with DEA agents.

The attorney said Sloan's appearance demonstrated an "ongoing attempt by the University of Florida basketball program, specifically by Coach Sloan himself, to cooperate 100 percent with this investigation."

The exact nature of the investigation is not known, but Miami DEA spokesperson Jack Hook said Monday the federal agency is not interested in possible NCAA violations or in "street-level drug dealers."

"We are going after everybody and anybody we can get in conducting an investigation," Hook said. "(But) DEA does not go after the arrest and trial in federal court of street-level drug dealers. That is the job of state and local agencies."

Hook also said that any information found regarding other possible violations — of state or local laws or of NCAA violations — would be turned over to the "appropriate agency."

Staying off the bandwagon

It would be easy to start my argument about what a "fan" is by quoting the dictionary. Webster always seems to be pretty bright. The definitions are concise and pointed. However, no one appears to use the dictionary anymore. Chastized by friends recently about my more than exuberant excitement for the Boston Red Sox, I dare say that a rebuttal is in order. The problem all started when John McNamara was fired as manager of the Red Sox, a move I had been publicly advocating for more than two years as if anyone had noticed. When that day arrived and Joe Morgan took over, I spread my jubilation to everyone within shouting distance. But as usual, they thought I was simply getting excited for no reason. Now some 20 days later and the Red Sox transformed from a team needing a miracle to a pennant contender, I've displayed my affection for Boston only to be chided by people calling me a "fair-weather fan."

Stop. Far too many cohorts also call themselves fans but insist on specially-designed adjectives to describe their team loyalties. First, there are the "die-hard fans" who describe themselves as hopelessly devoted regardless of a team's standing whether it be last place, third place and the rare occasion when their team hits the jackpot in first place. Then there are "real fans" who have loved the same team for years even if great players are traded away, managers are continuously dismissed or the team is brought under a new regime, sometimes for the worst. And the "fair-weather fans" are those who only like a team when it is a vying for a division title or on an amazing hot streak. So what are the rules for those of us who really are "fans" of baseball teams and are not within the three main categories? I myself, for example, was a Big Red Machine fan in the mid-1970s because I appreciated the play of soon-to-be Hall of Famer Johnny Bench, even going so far as to play his position while on the field and try to adopt his batting stance. But Bench retired and many of the other players from that era like Pete Rose, Tony Perez and Joe Morgan left for big bucks elsewhere. My favorite team ceased

Fitzpatrick's wins Prime Time crown

Southgate forces OT but falls

By Brent D. Woods
The Daily Iowan

Two cut eyes, gallons of sweat and five extra minutes after it began, Fitzpatrick's claimed the Prime Time League Basketball title over Southgate Development Wednesday night at Iowa City High School.

The two teams fittingly saved the best of their three season matchups for last as Fitzpatrick's completed the season sweep with the 117-110 overtime win.

Ex-Hawkeye Bill Jones canned a three-pointer at the buzzer in regulation for Southgate to send the game into the extra five-minute period tied at 103.

Then came the bleeding. On the overtime tip-off, Michael Morgan's elbow crashed into Michael Ingram's eye, sending Ingram to the floor and then to the locker room with a nasty cut.

Ingram, who ended up leading Fitzpatrick's with 30 points and 14 rebounds, was not allowed to return to the game.

"I blame it on the ref," Morgan said. "He threw it extremely high, and we were both trying to get it on the way down. But it was an accident. We were both just going for the ball."

With Ingram out, Fitzpatrick's turned to Greg McDermott to provide the inside punch.

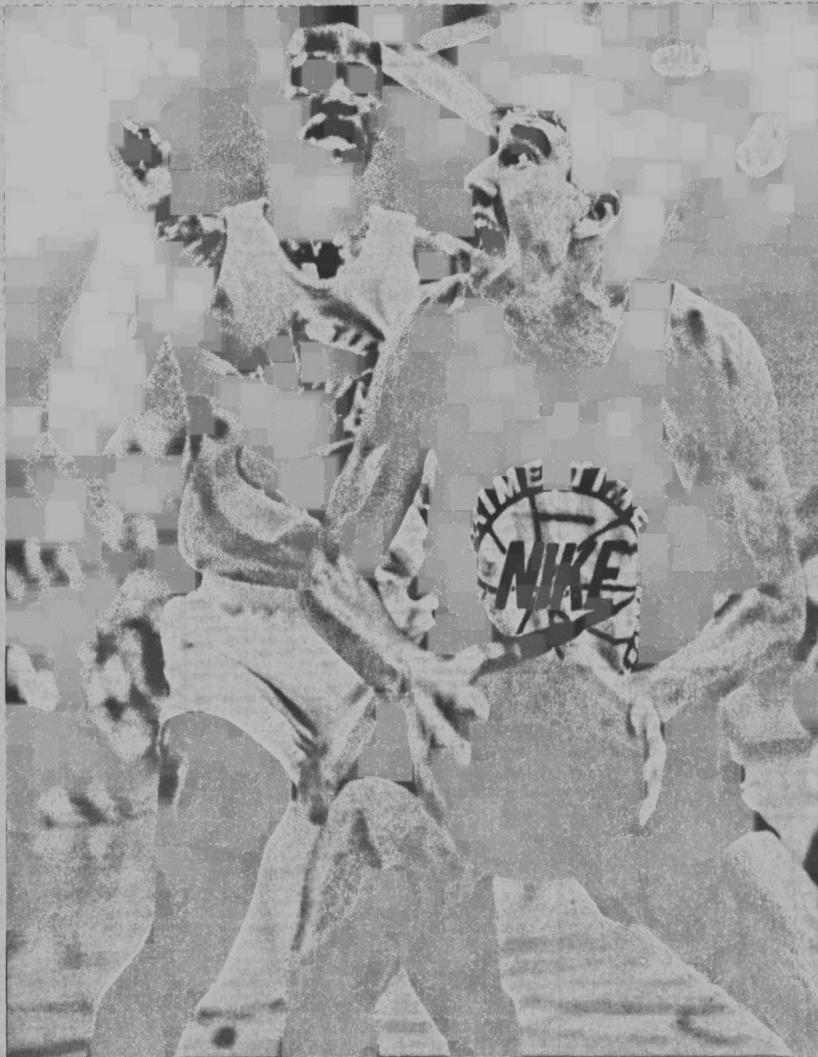

McDermott got the second tip, and Fitzpatrick's was off and rolling. McDermott promptly buried a half-hook to put his team ahead 105-103, and on the very next play, another Fitzpatrick's player went down.

This time it was incoming Hawkeye Wade Lookingbill, who tried to draw a charge on Jones but caught another accidental elbow over his eye.

Lookingbill headed for the cutman in the locker room and play resumed.

Despite the loss of the two starters, Fitzpatrick's never trailed in the overtime on the strength of solid free throw shooting by McDermott and incoming Iowa freshman Troy Skinner.

"I took myself out with about 12 minutes left because I was playing bad and I thought we needed a lift," McDermott said. "Then I got my second wind, and when Michael (Ingram) got hurt, I knew I had to get inside and take over."

Skinner tallied 28 points on 8-for-12 three-point shooting for Fitzpatrick's, and McDermott added 25 points.

Morgan, who scored 18 points for Southgate, said his team had a hard time matching up inside without Greg Stokes and Roy Marble, who were both absent.

"With Ingram and McDermott, we had to go hard to the boards," Morgan said, "especially without Greg and Roy."

It was Skinner who sparked Fitzpatrick's in the first half, hitting four of five three-pointers which helped his team lead 49-42 at intermission.

Early in the second half, Jones, who scored a game-high 41 points for Southgate, took over the contest. Southgate took a 58-54 lead on a Jones three-pointer at the 16:25 mark.

Nick Nurse hit a three-pointer for Fitzpatrick's to tie the game at 60 with 14:25 left, and the teams stayed within four points of each other until Jones hit the game-tying three-pointer at the regulation buzzer.

Maurice Newby added 31 points for Southgate in a losing effort.

Boston ties record for home wins

BOSTON (AP) — Rookie Jody Reed singled home the tie-breaking run with two outs in the eighth inning as the Boston Red Sox edged the Texas Rangers 5-4 Wednesday night for their 22nd consecutive home victory, tying the American League record set by the 1931 Philadelphia Athletics.

The victory also broke Boston's own team record for the longest winning streak at home, set in 1949. Only two other major league clubs have longer home winning streaks in this century. The 1916
