Americans favor arts, not artists, report says

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — A growing number of Americans are buying books, visiting museums and joining cultural groups, but enrollment in college humanities courses has fallen drastically in the past 20 years, a government report said Sunday.

The report by Lynne Cheney, chairperson of the National Endowment for the Humanities, describes a "remarkable blossoming" of public interest in history, literature and the other humanities, and says television actually is boosting purchases of books.

Americans who spent twice as much on sports events as on cultural endeavors 20 years ago are now spending more on culture — $3.4 billion compared with $3.1 billion for sports in 1986, the report said.

The endowment, an independent federal agency, said the bad news is found at colleges and universities, where preparation for a moneymaking vocation has overtaken interest in getting a well-rounded liberal arts education.

While the number of bachelor's degrees awarded increased 88 percent in the past two decades, degrees in the humanities dropped 33 percent, it said. Foreign language majors were down 29 percent, English majors 33 percent, philosophy majors 35 percent and history majors 43 percent, it continued.

Cheney said too many colleges are neglecting the achievements of Western culture while requiring ethnic courses, treating literature masterpieces as political documents, stressing publishing rather than teaching and dealing in topics so specialized that they have little meaning outside the academic world.

The 73-page report ordered by Congress on the state of American culture said the country's museums, libraries, educational TV stations, state humanities councils and private historical societies provide so much education that they have become "a kind of parallel school," reaching millions of people outside college campuses.

"The remarkable blossoming of the humanities in the public sphere is one of the least noted, though most important, cultural developments of the last few decades," wrote Cheney.

The $140-million endowment she has headed since May 1986 provides grants to scholars, colleges, museums, libraries and other institutions to promote the humanities.

Citing a variety of sources, the report gives several examples of increased public interest in the humanities, including a doubling of the number of historical organizations in 20 years to nearly 10,000, brisk sales of cultural books and a 660-percent increase in visitors to the National Gallery of Art in Washington since 1957.

In assessing the academic approach to the humanities, the report says, "Viewing humanities texts as though they were primarily political documents is the most noticeable trend in academic study of the humanities today. Truth and beauty and excellence are regarded as irrelevant; questions of intellectual aesthetic quality, dismissed."

The report says Western tradition is rich and creative, but many colleges are abandoning courses that teach it.

Expo events, plowers draw huge crowds

By Matt Devine
The Daily Iowan

Seventy-three-year old Tonganoxie, Kan., farmer Bill Norman divided his attention between a visitor, a chocolate malt and the World Ploughing Contest stubble competition Friday in Amana, Iowa, at the 1988 World Ag Expo.

The World Ploughing Contest was one of many attractions which drew 105,000 to the 1988 World Ag Expo Friday. Including Saturday's figures, the four-day crowd totaled 355,000, exceeding original projections of 200,000.

Norman's malt turned to chocolate soup in the midday heat while he leaned closer to his visitor and pointed to a Swedish plowman anguishing over a crooked furrow.

"He wants to be smack dab on the mark, as careful as he can," said Norman, "That has to be plumb straight."

Norman scratched his whiskers and nodded approvingly at the ruler-straight groove. Sixty-two years of farming beans, corn and milo have given him a genuine appreciation for the art.

He spied a flaw in a nearby Canadian furrow, and pointed a finger at it.

"See. He's got a little kink there, but he'll come back and get it straight."

"They know what they're doing to get maximum depth, maximum width and maximum coverage," he said, "They know because they're familiar with their implement."

The implement was precisely the problem; a group of spectators theorized, as the American plowman struggled to control a 1946-model John Deere.

"They're having a little problem," said Rolla, Mo., farmer Carl Heth, frowning at a meandering American furrow. "We all stand here and tell him what he might be doing, but we couldn't do any better if we were out there."

Positioned next to a flapping Union Jack, a curious spectator called to a white-jacketed steward bent over a row of British furrows. After a second call, the man was persuaded from his inspection. "Name's Harry Skelton, Warwickshire, England," he said while he pumped the spectator's hand.

"The soil's a bit dry, but I think our laddies are doing pretty good," he said, adding Great Britain crops soaked up the rain which never fell in the United States this summer.

"We had 23 wet days in July while you were baking out here. We've suffered with low yields, but not as bad as you with your drought." Smoke from bratwurst grills lingered over the 1,000-acre field along with the Goodyear Blimp while, closer to the ground, spectators strolled among rows of red and white striped tents inspecting auger wagons stacked five high. Others admired America's oldest John Deere tractor or gaped at the world's largest Holstein steer, Oscar, who tipped the scales at 4,000 pounds, and is still growing.

The Medical Aid Station reported no serious injuries, but treated 28 Expo-goers Friday for headaches, splinters, dirt in the eye and hay fever, according to U.S. Army Staff Sgt. Medic John Mikelson.

Bentsen blasts Reagan farm policies

By Matt Devine
The Daily Iowan

Democratic vice-presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen battled hecklers Friday as he pitched the Dukakis-Bentsen farm program and blasted Reagan administration farm policy before a crowd of 2,000 gathered at the 1988 World Ag Expo main stage in Amana, Iowa.

Prior to the senator's arrival, campaign workers struggled to obscure Republican banners which dotted the sea of blue and red Dukakis-Bentsen placards while a team of Bush supporters lifted a chant, asking, "Where's Bentsen from?" and responding, "Taxes!" Dukakis backers retaliated with a "Where was George?" chorus which drowned the Republican jeers.

"We're trying to cover it as much as we can," said Democratic Student Coordinator for Eastern Iowa Ted Carr.

A group of 30 UI Students for Bush attended the rally, according to Pat O'Connell, a UI student and member of the organization.

Flanked by Iowa political heavyweights, the Texas senator stepped to the podium at 10:20 a.m. in front of an estimated crowd of 2,000 seated on makeshift benches consisting of boards laid across hay bales. The visit marked the senator's first campaign stop in Iowa.

Sticking to farm issues during his half-hour address, Bentsen warmed to the heavily rural crowd by pointing to his farming background and cast himself as the son of poor immigrant parents from Denmark.

"If my family'd had castles, we'd never have left," he said.

Bentsen ignited supporters when he attacked the Reagan administration for ignoring the farm belt.

"(The Reagan administration) gutted programs benefiting rural America. Spending for rural development has dropped 58 percent while George Bush has been vice president, and the Office of Rural Development Policy was abolished. After eight years of neglect by this administration, half of our rural counties have unemployment rates over 9 percent," he said.

Bentsen credited Reagan administration subsidies designed to revitalize the ailing agriculture industry with further crippling the farm business.

"After devastating the farm industry, this administration tried to repair the damage with subsidies," he said, citing the 1983 Payment In Kind program. "PIK helped farmers, but it devastated agribusiness and it wrecked Main Street of rural America," he said.

Ignoring occasional outbursts from hecklers, Bentsen spelled out the Democrats' farm program to the Expo crowd and called for new markets for farm products and increased foreign trade and exports.

"In a Dukakis-Bentsen administration you will see an agricultural policy that emphasizes three points: price, credit and new uses. And that policy will be backed up by a trade policy that opens new markets to our exports," he said, adding, "Our farm policy will feature supply management and reasonable price supports that make it possible for family farmers to make a decent living from the land."

Rawlings, faculty want to limit tuition increases

By John Bartenhagen
The Daily Iowan
and Associated Press

UI faculty leaders said Sunday they are in basic agreement with UI President Hunter Rawlings' support for limited increases in tuition for the 1989-90 academic year.

Saturday night, at a meeting of the Iowa Newspaper Association in Des Moines, Rawlings said he would support a tuition increase, but one that is lower than in recent years.

Rawlings added he did not have a specific figure in mind for increases for next year.

"I haven't spoken with any regents at all about that. It's too early to say. I'm sure it will be less than we have seen in the past," Rawlings said.

"The university's budgetary position is so uncertain that I can't see any way but to increase tuition," UI Faculty Council President Peter Shane said. "But on the other hand, I think there is an awareness, not just among students but among the faculty and staff, about the increased burden the students are being asked to shoulder."

"Tuition has been rising at a pretty strong rate the past few years and that has a very demoralizing impact when we don't know what the effect will be on student accessibility," Shane said.

Shane said that while increasing faculty salaries has been one of the major justifications for recent tuition hikes, the issue hasn't caused any evident rift between students and faculty.

"It's easy to look at this as a group-versus-group issue, but I don't think it's the perspective of either the students or faculty here," he said. "Besides, with the university's current economic situation, if salaries didn't need the additional funding this year, something else would."

Bruce Gronbeck, former UI faculty council president, agreed that there is no short-term alternative to increasing tuition, but added the burden carried by students and faculty must be lightened at some point.

Gronbeck noted that for the 1987-88 academic year, UI students paid $67 million in tuition while UI faculty brought in $115 million in research funds.

"So between the two of us, those numbers represent quite a chunk of money," he said. "Right now, tuition is dangerously close to carrying one-third of the budget, which is way too much."

Gronbeck said he is not optimistic that the Iowa Legislature will increase allocations to regents' institutions to ease the reliance on tuition-generated income.

"I hope the state is in a position to do more this year, but the indications so far aren't very good," he said. "The state's going to do what it can when it can."

Shane said due to the state's current economic plight, he does not foresee a halt in tuition increases in the near future.

"Unless inflation comes to a halt, there will always be some kind of increase," he said. "I think President Rawlings is trying very hard to create greater understanding for the need of greater state support for our universities. But how the state will react is hard to predict."

The state Board of Regents, which oversees the UI, Iowa State University and University of Northern Iowa, will discuss the tuition question at its meeting this week in Iowa City. A vote on the issue is scheduled for the board's November meeting.

Last year, the regents approved 1988-89 tuition increases of 12 percent for in-state students and 20 percent for out-of-state students. The increase marked the seventh straight year that tuition has been raised at the three regents' universities.

Rawlings said he expects "bus loads of student interest" in the regents' debate. A lunch-hour rally sponsored by student leaders from the three state universities is scheduled for Wednesday.

Emergency response plan seeks citizen input

The Johnson County Local Emergency Planning Committee is writing a contingency plan for emergency response to hazardous materials incidents in the county. The plan is written to comply with the Superfund Amendment and the Reauthorization Act of 1986 Title III Community Right to Know.

The LEPC — which is made up of representatives from emergency response agencies, private industry and citizen organizations — is seeking citizen input on the plan. A draft copy is available at the Iowa City Public Library Information Desk and at the Civil Defense Office of the county sheriff's office, 511 S. Capitol St. The plan is available for public reading during normal business hours.

Any citizen input can be mailed to the LEPC-Johnson County Civil Defense, Box 169, Iowa City, IA 52244, or brought in person to the next LEPC meeting on Sept. 21, at 7 p.m.

For more information contact Dave Sealey at 335-5473.

School district receives $20,000 math grant

The Iowa City Community School District has been awarded a planning grant worth $20,000 from the Exxon Education Foundation.

The grant, which will be funded for the current school year with a possibility for renewal, will provide a half-time math specialist for grades kindergarten through third. The project goal is to work with math teacher in these grades in implementing the district's math program, and to work with staff and students in the use of manipulatives, a method of instruction based on teaching children to manipulate physical objects in order to learn mathematical concepts.

Mississippi riverboat, museum trip scheduled

The Iowa City Recreation Division has scheduled a trip that includes a ride down the Mississippi River in the Spirit of Dubuque Riverboat and a visit to the National River Hall of Fame and the William M. Black Museum. These museums, which can be attended before the half-hour boat ride, feature 300 years of river history, including exhibitions on the travels of Lewis and Clark, Robert Fulton and Mark Twain.

The trip will take place Oct. 9, and costs $24 for adults and $18 for children. Registration is currently underway at the Iowa City Recreation Division, 220 S. Gilbert St. Deadline for registration is Sept. 16.

Women's Center starting support groups

The UI Women's Resource and Action Center is in the process of forming several support groups.

Among these are: single mothers, women painters and drawers, women over 40, divorced and separated women, women's spirituality, newly gay women, undergraduate women in relationships with men, women with chronic illness or disability, black women new to Iowa City, writing without teachers, formerly battered women, women with eating disorders, women involved in thesis or dissertation work, Jewish women, female friends of suicide victims, Asian women, lesbians over 40 and incest victims.

For information on any of these groups, contact Jeanne Meyer at 335-1486.

Also being offered by the center is a six-session Basic Assertiveness Training for Women, which begins Sept. 14 at 7 p.m.

The center is also looking for volunteers who are interested in working two hours per week. To learn more about the volunteer work or register for the basic assertiveness training, call the number listed above.

City council votes to hold special election

By Heather Maher
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Council unanimously decided Friday night to hold a special election to fill the seat of George Strait, who resigned Sept. 6.

The councilors took minutes to reach their decision, which was based on the fact that Strait's seat has nearly three and one-half years left.

In an announcement that came as a surprise to the rest of the council, Iowa City Mayor John McDonald announced that a little-known Iowa law stipulates that any appointed member of a political group is only appointed until the next election.

In effect, the law means John Balmer, who was appointed to the council last week to serve out the remaining 16-month term of former councilor Kate Dickson, must put his name up for election if he wishes to continue to serve on the council.

Dickson resigned on Aug. 23 to marry New Jersey businessman John F. Hamel.

Balmer announced he would vie for Dickson's seat, saying, "I definitely will be a candidate in the election. I will seek the seat for the remaining term of Kate's seat."

During the meeting, several councilors said Strait's successor should be a representative chosen by the city electorate.

The election for both council seats will not be held in conjunction with the presidential election on Nov. 8, councilors decided, because of scheduling limitations and the risk that local issues would be obscured by the national election.

Kate Dickson

"I think the spotlight is going to be focusing more toward national issues and the local issues will get lost in the shuffle," said McDonald.

Councilor Susan Horowitz disagreed, saying, "I feel that the public is going to question why we don't tack this onto the general election. I think you'll get the most people voting for city leaders during a national election."

But Balmer agreed with McDonald, saying a local election held during a national election runs the risk of falling prey to partisan viewpoints.

Scheduling requirements in the Iowa Code state that no special election can be held two weeks before or after a national election. These limitations, in addition to deadlines on filing candidate papers, roll back the earliest possible primary date to Nov. 29, with the earliest general election being held on Dec. 29.

The council currently has six members, and if a vote before another member is elected should receive a 3-3 vote, it will fail.

Councilor Randy Larson said he opposes an election held over the interim, when a large number of UI students and faculty are out of town. He said an important city election such as this should permit a large cross section of people to vote, and without students and UI staff, the election could become "an old downtown business vote."

He did, however, say that he would rather it be held during the interim if the alternative would mean the seat remains vacant for several months.

City Clerk Marian Karr will construct a potential election schedule for the council to discuss at its Sept. 19 informal meeting.

Dubuque osteopath admits using home, yacht for sale of cocaine

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP) — The federal government has seized the $122,000 home and a 19-foot boat of a Dubuque osteopath, alleging they were used in drug deals, according to records filed in U.S. District Court.

The home of Dr. John Hartmann was seized on a court order issued Thursday in a lawsuit filed by the U.S. attorney that seeks to turn the property over to the government.

Hartmann, 34, was sentenced in January to a year and a day in prison and fined $15,000 after pleading guilty to a charge of possessing cocaine with intent to distribute the narcotic. His license to practice medicine has been suspending.

The government alleged the house was used in drug distribution and the boat was used to facilitate the sale and possession of cocaine.

Hartmann is being held at a federal prison in Rochester, Minn., and soon is scheduled to be transferred to a halfway house in Dubuque.

A Coralville woman was charged with forgery Friday for allegedly signing someone else's name to charge slips to obtain products at the Union, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Wendy Sue Swanson, 19, of 409 Second Ave. Place, allegedly used a UI identification card which belonged to someone else from Aug. 3 to 18, with the number of charges totaling 42 and the value of items totaling more than $250, according to court records.

Swanson was identified by a cashier at the Union Pantry as the person who had allegedly been using the identification card, which had been reported stolen, according to court records.

Bail is set at $2,500. A preliminary hearing is set for Sept. 19, according to court records.

Last week, UI College Council President Fischer received someone claiming to be student H. Rawlings. "Of course, at first we were kind of puzzled," said Fischer. "We met for lunch at The Airliner and he said he was a student at the University of Iowa. Fischer said with a little more information, we would have been able to identify him. Although some opinion surfaced at the meeting, Rawlings' name was not accessible to student improvement over students, Fischer said.

Elected CAC vice president in April, Fischer became Aug. 20 when Maui resigned the post to go to work in Washington, D.C.

Representatives from undergraduate college and Student Senate made up the CAC, which is responsible for funding for more than 100 academic activities, political science, foreign language and history groups, Fischer said.

UI black greek rush stresses history, pride

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

About 100 members of the UI Black Greek Caucus gathered to hold their formal rush Saturday night at the Union Main Ballroom.

The formal event marked the first time all of the eight traditionally black fraternities and sororities set up displays and individual orientations in conference rooms throughout the Union. Interested students used the evening as an opportunity to become acquainted with each group before separate rush parties are held this fall.

History, scholarship, leadership and unity were themes expressed in each group orientation.

Carrying on traditions of excellence established by blacks, especially Black Greeks — including Martin Luther King Jr. and Lena Horn — and earning well-deserved respect are goals the chapters strive for, according to Black Greek Caucus President Michael Wilson.

"The unity must continue on to the campus community and every day, for we must remember that together we will stand, but divided — especially on a campus the size of this one — we will fall," he said.

"We are black by nature, and I don't know about you, but I am proud by choice," he said.

UI Intrafraternity Council and Panhellenic Council executives participated as rush counselors and many attended the chapter presentations.

Intrafraternity Council Rush Director Charlie Rutherford said the executives attended to gain a better understanding of the traditionally black organizations.

Rutherford, who observed several of the fraternity and sorority presentations, said he was impressed with the groups' formality and organization.

Chapter membership, history and educational values were stressed, similar to discussions at fall formal Rush day party events, Rutherford said.

But at the same time, the traditionally black greek fraternity members seemed to have a stronger bond than traditionally white greek fraternity members.

"They are educated to the point where they have a stronger bond," Rutherford said.

He said the traditionally black greek system is known for strong chapter organizations which provide members with a strong support network which crosses campus lines nationwide.

"If you're an Alpha, you're a brother — there's a real bond," Rutherford said.

Many Black Greek Caucus members stressed brotherhood and sisterhood in group discussions designed to explain the values and goals of each unit to prospective pledges or interested individuals.

Alpha Phi Alpha member Tyrone Walls said retaining individuality is an important part of predominantly black fraternities.

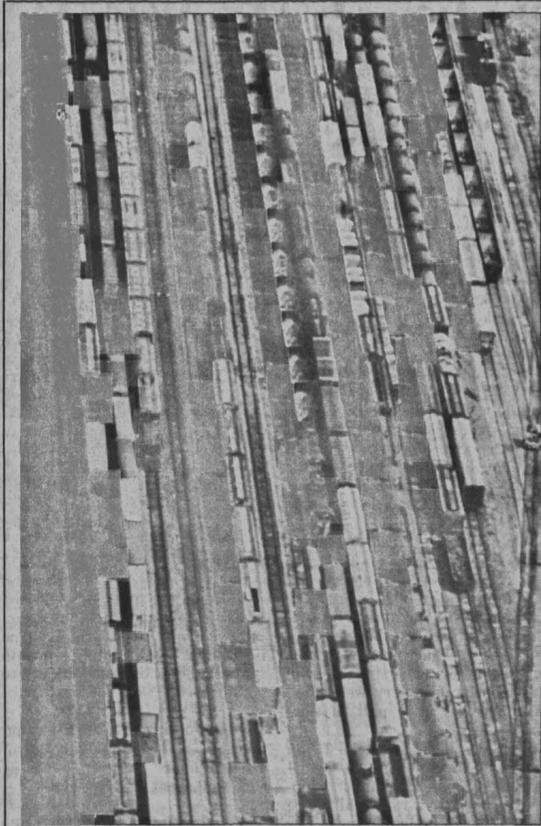

"We, as brothers, are still individuals and when we strive, we strive as individuals and it is only by striving that we have Alpha Phi Alpha as a fraternity," Walls said.

Panhellenic Council Public Relations Director Kim Ordway said graduate students in the traditionally black greek system do not have to assume alumni status.

Alpha Phi Alpha, Omega Psi Phi, Kappa Alpha Psi and Phi Beta Sigma are the UI men's chapters; Alpha Kappa Alpha, Sigma Gamma Rho, Delta Sigma Theta and Zeta Phi Beta are the UI female chapters.

Interested students may attend group activities throughout the semester before deciding to pledge second semester. A minimum college grade point average is required before a student may pledge to a traditionally black greek fraternity or sorority.

An average of 15 members belong to each UI Black Greek Caucus organization with the smallest having two members, UI senior Rrachel Douglas said.

Cochran draws anger from teachers' union

CLEAR LAKE, Iowa (AP) — The leader of Iowa's major teachers' union says Secretary of Agriculture Dale Cochran is off base when he calls for shifting the emphasis of state spending from education to farming.

Ken Tilt, president of the Iowa Education Association, says agricultural problems are largely created and solved on the national level.

Cochran, noting the push toward major state spending programs to raise teacher salaries and upgrade education, recently said it now should be agriculture's turn. He has recommended that state lawmakers use increased tax revenues for agricultural marketing, promotion and research instead of additional spending on education.

"He's a politician, and he wants to look good," Tilt said Friday of Cochran, a Democrat. "His remarks were contrary to what every Iowan believes about education."

Rather than steering new state revenues away from education, Tilt wants a $60 million package to increase teacher salaries. He also asks for $30 million to establish optional preschools and allow schools to implement state standards requiring broad education programs in 1989.

"If we spent the entire Iowa treasury on ag problems, we wouldn't have enough to deal with those problems," Tilt, who is on leave as a Latin French instructor at West Moines Valley High School.

Tilt also criticized Cochran's comments that spending on education is sometimes wasted because Iowa students leave the state after graduation for jobs elsewhere.

"It's the obligation of this state and our school system to develop every one of our kids to their maximum potential," Tilt said. "The issue is not whether or not they stay in Iowa. The issue is whether or not we give them the capabilities to determine their futures."

Produce vendors predict low prices

By Sara Langenberg
The Daily Iowan

Local produce vendors are reluctant to predict higher produce prices looming in Iowa City's future, despite the drought that ravaged Midwestern crops this summer.

This reluctance seems to concur with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's prediction earlier this year that produce prices would not rise over 1 percent in 1988.

According to Tom Haman, assistant produce manager at Eagle Discount Supermarket, 600 N. Dodge St., the drought's effect on local produce cost or quality has not been overwhelming.

"So far, (the effects of the drought) are not as drastic as I had expected," he said. "I think it's too early to make predictions (about how high produce prices may rise)."

Haman said that over the last three weeks, Eagles purchased locally grown tomatoes which he considered to be in good condition. "We bought them at an exceptional price — the same price as the ones we've been getting out of California."

"The muscatine melons we got were no trouble at all, because (the melon growers) irrigate. The price was up just a little bit," Haman said.

"We haven't seen much effect (of the drought) so far," Haman said. "The Illinois corn we've been getting so far is not as cheap as in years past, (the corn is) as good, but the price is not as good," he said. Most local vendors regularly import produce from states other than Iowa.

"The majority of our stuff comes from California, and from what I've heard California hasn't had much of a problem in terms of water supply," he said.

Bill Alberhasky, manager of John's Grocery Inc., 401 Market St., said his store, too, imports most of its produce.

"California and Florida are the main producing states," he said. "A lot depends on how their weather is out there."

But according to Alberhasky, "the local (produce) hasn't been very good this year."

"(The price of produce) will go up sometime in the future I'm sure," he said.

Haman said the price of the lettuce that they buy from California has not fluctuated much.

"We get bulletins from our warehouses on how crops are doing," Haman said. "They were worried about Michigan apples because they need cool evenings to turn color."

Prices of blueberries have been higher this year than most, according to Haman.

"Blueberries have really surprised us. The cheapest that they've been this year has been $1.59 a pint. That is 60 cents higher than they usually go on sale for."

But retail prices are high right now, as they are at this point every season, Haman said. He predicted that within a month those prices will return to normal.

Soil experts encourage careful use of fertilizers

AMANA, Iowa (AP) — Experts are advising farmers that there are economical as well as environmental reasons to cut back on chemicals.

"If we're going to have good farming practices and good healthy agriculture in the Corn Belt, there's going to be a certain cost of doing business," said Gyles Randall, a University of Minnesota soil scientist who spoke about controlling the use of nitrogen in fertilizers. "We're just not in that business of putting on more (nitrogen) than we need anymore, because what the plant doesn't use is left in the soil."

Randall and other specialists on agricultural chemicals participated in a discussion Friday at the World

Ag Expo. Public concern, specifically about ground water pollution, has increased interest in cleaning up the environment, the specialists said. But farmers are not to blame for all of the environmental problems, Randall said.

Nitrogen also comes from sewage sludge, soil organic matter and even rainfall, he said. "We all have a role, whether we're urban or whether we're rural," he said.

Still, farmers and farm chemical manufacturers must do their part and determine how chemicals can still help them earn profits without harming the environment, Randall told the forum hosted by the Iowa State University Extension Service.

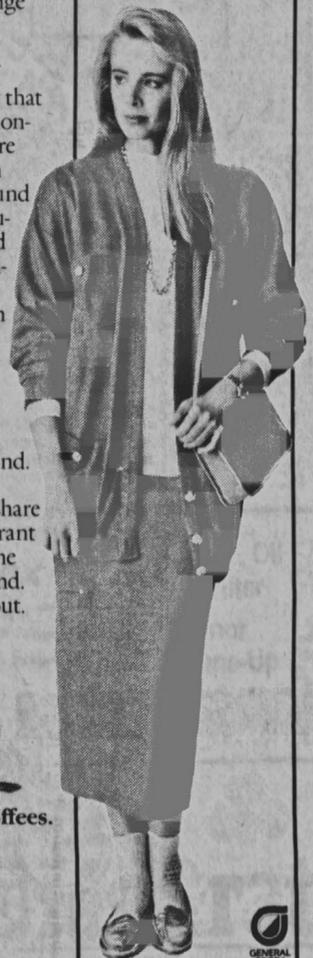

A101 Freshman Orientation

Nothing could have prepared me for the first few moments with my roommate. "Anique"—nothing more, just "Anique"—was her name. Change the "A" to a "U" and you've got a description.

When they asked what type of roommate I wanted, I didn't know that I needed to be more specific than non-smoker. I could swear I saw a picture of Anique on a postcard I got from London. Within five minutes, I found out that she was an Art History student, into the Psychedelic Furs, and totally, totally against the domestication of animals.

I was just about ready to put in for a room transfer when she reached into her leather backpack, pulled out a can of Suisse Mocha and offered me a cup. Okay, I decided I'd keep an open mind.

As we sipped our cups, I found out that Anique and I share the same fondness for Cary Grant movies, the same disdain for wine coolers, and the same ex-boyfriend. That gave us plenty to talk about.

Martelle man drowns at Coralville Reservoir

The Daily Iowan

A Martelle, Iowa, man was pronounced dead Sunday at UI Hospitals after he apparently drowned while swimming in the Coralville Reservoir, according to the Johnson County Sheriff's Department.

Richard Heinz Blankenhagen, 22, did not survive rescuers' attempts to resuscitate him at about 4:22 p.m. Sunday afternoon.

Fire officials from Coralville and North Liberty, a Johnson County ambulance crew and an air-care helicopter from UI Hospitals arrived at the scene answering a call from federal rangers at the Reservoir.

CPR was administered at the site when rescuers located Blankenhagen's body and he was immediately flown by helicopter to UI Hospitals, but was pronounced dead there, according to Capt. Robert Carpenter of the sheriff's department.

bags, ethanol, and road de-icers as potential markets for corn.

At one point during his address, Bentsen deviated from his prepared text to answer the crowd's "Where was George?" refrain and said, "I tell you he sure wasn't on the farm."

Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, claimed rival GOP vice-presidential candidate Dan Quayle shunned an Iowa campaign stop this week to avoid questions about farm issues.

"I understand why Dan Quayle wouldn't want to visit with the farmers in Iowa. He's afraid you might ask him about the agricultural policy, and if you did he might have to answer ... for the mistakes, mismanagement and indifference of the Reagan-Bush administration."

Bentsen credited the Democratic Congress for pushing through pro-farm legislation despite administration opposition.

"The administration sent up farm bills that were dead on arrival. Congressional leaders got together and hammered out farm policies that made sense for America."

The senator's remarks received mixed reviews from spectators, but clearly struck a nerve within the farming community.

"I'm one that Reagan broke," Paducah, Ky., farmer McGrew said, adding that market prices during Reagan's year term drove him out of business.

"The price of stuff went to nothing. What else is the same price it was in 1948?" McGrew said, adding that he thinks Bentsen hit on the reason for farming woes in his address.

"We've got to get the dollar in balance with the other world currencies and get our world market open for trade," he said.

"Prices were so low because (Reagan) depressed them," said Frank Furt, Ind., farmer Virginia McGrew said.

"There wasn't enough profit to make a living. If we wouldn't have had off-farm work, we wouldn't have made it," she said.

Dr. Colliver, a Washington, Iowa farmer, doubted Bentsen would follow through on his proposals elected in November.

"I think he's just like the rest (the politicians). Not any of them once they get in office are going to do any more than they ever have," said Colliver, who added despite his objections he will vote for the Dukakis-Bentsen ticket.

Doctors screen for skin cancer at Expo

By Kathleen Brill
The Daily Iowan

Interested in more than how to prevent crop yield loss, farmers at the World Ag Expo also showed concern about damage to their sun-weathered skin.

Approximately 2,000 visitors stopped by one corner of the UI exhibits tent to have the skin on their arms and faces checked for skin cancer at the largest national skin screening to date.

"(Dermatologists) see a lot of farmers with sun damaged skin and with skin tumors. That's why this is a good target area," UI Hospitals dermatology resident Chris Hedberg said.

The screening program was a joint project between the UI Hospitals Dermatology Department and a national campaign of the American Academy of Dermatology. The Academy is sponsoring 400 programs of various sizes, and plans to screen 150,000 people by the end of this year, according to Melanoma-Skin Cancer Screening Program Chairman Dr. Lawrence Norton.

"The main thrust of this is that melanoma is the most rapidly increasing cancer other than lung cancer in women. Thank goodness in the last two years the death rates plateaued," Norton said.

Due to the nature of the large-scale public screening it was not as thorough as a skin screening in most doctors' offices.

"Ideally, we'd like to get patients undressed and examine them, so we could be missing skin cancer in areas covered by clothing," UI Dermatology Department Head John Strauss said.

Skin cancer was spotted regularly by doctors at the Expo. "I've seen it four times in the last half hour," Strauss said.

Strauss said protecting skin with sunscreen with a Sun Protection Factor of at least 15 is a key to maintaining healthy skin. "The damage you get is cumulative and what you're doing to your skin today is going to be reflected 20 years down the line," Strauss said.

"When I see this sea of humanity between the Iowa River and Mayflower (Residence Hall) — they are just courting danger," Strauss said.

Of the three types of skin cancer, melanomas are the only ones considered fatal unless diagnosed at an early stage. Basal cell and squamous cell cancers are easier to cure.

Melanomas are characterized by a dark lesion or mole which may turn blue or red, and is usually found on the upper back, chest or lower legs. Moles that are asymmetric, varied in color, scalloped around the border or larger than six millimeters in diameter are danger signs to watch.

The Academy has been screening for skin cancer in various parts of the country for the past four years. A national program to educate schoolchildren about the hazards of sun exposure is now being developed and was tested in several schools.

Protecting children from the sun is essential to prevent skin cancer in adulthood. "If you get one really bad sunburn in childhood the chances of melanoma are doubled," Norton said.

Norton believes the campaign should be successful in changing attitudes about sun exposure, just as the anti-smoking campaigns have changed the attitudes of many schoolchildren.

"I'm quite sure it will," Norton said. "They're very perceptive about it. They listen."

Expo visitors test health knowledge

Iowans, farmers and schoolchildren tested and improved their knowledge of health issues in the UI exhibits tent at the 1988 World Ag Expo.

Signs challenged those entering the tent to test their health IQ on issues ranging from water quality to acquired immune deficiency syndrome. Those who took the quizzes on computers printed out their results and explanations to the answers.

"So I basically graduate from that," Linda Heath of Alburnett, Iowa, said after correctly answering nine of the 10 questions on AIDS.

"A lot of the people seem to know most of the answers," UI Hygienic Lab Chief of Organic Analysis George Brewer said. Many people missed a few questions, and lab personnel was on-hand to answer more in-depth questions.

Another booth featured masks and safety devices for protection from chemical and machinery farming hazards. One farmer who took a pair of free ear plugs said he had used them before to protect his hearing.

"There's a lot that needs to be covered, and we've taken a fairly broad view of agricultural problems," said Jim Merchant, UI director of the Institute of Agricultural Medicine and Occupational Health.

The UI Cancer Information Center's booth answered questions of children and adults. Stickers and puzzles, explaining who doctors are and the different types of cancer, were offered to children who spied pieces of candy next to the stickers.

"It really helps. It's good to inform kids about cancer, and that it is preventable and curable," UI Cancer Center Administrator Jan Schaff said.

While their initial questions were, "How many pieces of candy can we have?" some also asked questions about causes of cancer.

City, delivering between 1,000 — 1,500 Expo-goers per day on its five round trips.

Quimby, Iowa, brothers Dustin, 3, and Nathan, 5, Graham enjoyed their first train rides on the 1937-model Canadian Flyer passenger train, but found the scenery more fascinating in the rest rooms than from the window of their coach.

"They liked the bathrooms best," said Sue Graham, "because when you flush the toilet, it goes right out on the railroad tracks. They got a big kick out of it, holding the pedal down, looking down and seeing the ground go by."

Burma: Elections promised

RANGOON, Burma (AP)—Parliament on Sunday yielded to weeks of massive nationwide protests and approved holding the first multi-party elections since 1960.

The legislature appointed a group of elders to supervise the polling and set a target date for about three months from Saturday, when President Maung Maung announced the ruling Burma Socialist Program Party would relinquish its 26-year monopoly on power.

Despite government concessions, opposition leaders continued to press for an interim government to cope with Burma's growing chaos, and demonstrations continued in the capital.

Maung Maung issued a stern warning to demonstrators, who have taken to the streets by the millions since spring in their fight for democracy.

"People are now fed up with this lawlessness and are expecting the government to take effective action," Maung Maung said. "I therefore warn those responsible for the lawlessness to cease such activities."

In some areas of Burma, he said, students and Buddhist monks were setting up rival local governments, creating "a grave and dangerous situation for those responsible."

"It is essential to remove them immediately," he said.

He called on demonstrators to get back to work and on civil servants to reactivate the stalled machinery of government. In addition, he attacked the recent formation of a rival government by former Prime Minister U Nu.

Maung Maung called Sunday's decision "a milestone in Burmese history."

"It will be evident in 20 years' time whether the decision was correct or not," he told the 489-member Parliament.

While authorizing elections in about three months, Parliament also held out the possibility that they could be postponed or held as early as November.

A Burmese woman carries her child through a barbed wire barricade erected to keep Burmese citizens from slipping into neighboring Thailand in order to purchase consumer goods.

Parliament empowered the Council of State, the highest government organ, to change the Constitution to permit a multiparty system, enlarge the elections commission if necessary and formulate election rules.

Named to the Elections Supervision Commission were three retired civil servants, a retired army brigadier general and a former member of Parliament. The men, all over 70 years of age, are generally regarded as neutral, although not especially prominent. At least four are not members of the ruling party.

The Parliament session was held under tight security, and delegates slept in the building Saturday night. The area was cordoned off with barbed wire fences and road blocks manned by troops.

The multiparty elections would be the first in Burma since Feb. 6, 1960, when U Nu's Clean Anti-Fascist People's Freedom League won a massive victory over an army-backed party. U Nu was overthrown by the military on March 2, 1962. The coup, led by Gen. Ne Win, ushered in rigid one-party rule.

Senate action angers Iraqis

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP)—Tens of thousands of Iraqis paraded past the U.S. Embassy on Sunday to denounce a U.S. Senate call for sanctions in response to Iraq's alleged use of poison gas against Kurdish rebels.

"U.S.A., Shame, Shame," the protesters chanted in English as they marched past the embassy. Members of the ruling Arab Baath Socialist Party exhorted them through loudspeakers.

"We will never forget U.S. evil," read one banner. "No to intervention in our affairs," read another in both Arabic and English.

"Down with the U.S. Knesset," said another banner, referring to close U.S. ties with Israel, whose parliament is called the Knesset.

About 20,000 marchers filed past the embassy for two hours.

The crowd was orderly, even cheerful, and there was no apparent threat to the embassy. One ranking U.S. diplomat stood on the sidewalk a few feet from the march and watched it move by.

The U.S. Senate voted Friday to demand economic sanctions against Iraq after Secretary of State George Shultz declared that Iraq used chemical weapons, outlawed under a 1925 Geneva treaty, against its northern Kurdish population.

The measure, still before the House, would have to be signed by President Ronald Reagan before taking effect. It was designed to make it difficult for Iraq to obtain international credit to pay off its estimated $60 billion war debt.

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein said in a statement Sunday that the U.S. Senate "aims to divert the attention of the international media from the uprising in the occupied territories."

Saddam said the fighting with the Kurdish "insurgents" lasted at most two days and no serious battles were involved. He reiterated the charge that the tens of thousands of Kurds who fled across the Iraqi border to Turkey and Iran were forced by Kurdish rebels, who were seeking publicity for their cause.

Kurdish rebels said that as many as 60,000 Iraqi troops attacked their positions in the northern mountains after the Aug. 20 cease-fire with Iran in the eight-year Gulf war. The rebels of the Kurdish Democratic Party said 2,000 Kurdish civilians were killed and 5,000 wounded, many in chemical weapon attacks.

Well before the latest Iraqi assault on the Kurds, a number of United Nations investigations concluded that Iraq — and to a lesser extent, Iran — had engaged in chemical warfare since 1984.

"Let the American Knesset and its masters understand that Iraq is not a country that can be subject to threats. Iraq, which seeks sincere and honorable relations with all, is ready to spit on all insincere approaches," said an editorial in Al-Thawra, urging Iraqis to take to the streets.

Palestinians take revenge on collaborators

JERUSALEM — Palestinian activists Sunday stabbed and seriously wounded an Arab physician, and the army said attackers threw acid in the faces of two other Arab doctors who allegedly collaborated with Israeli authorities.

Israeli officials voiced concern about a spate of attacks in which four suspected collaborators were killed in the past week. The army vowed to step up protection for Arabs cooperating with Israel.

"We are monitoring the situation very carefully, because in this phase, Palestinian violence has increasingly turned against Palestinians," said Col. Raanan Gissin, the deputy army spokesman.

In response to the latest attacks, six members of the Israeli-appointed municipal council in the West Bank village of Yatta resigned, saying they feared for their lives. The seventh council member, Mayor Ismail Abu Hemeid, remained in his post.

Polish intelligentsia endorses Solidarity

GDANSK, Poland — A group of intellectuals and artists met Sunday with Lech Walesa to endorse his participation in upcoming talks with the government and called for immediate legalization of Solidarity.

Walesa, the leader of the banned independent union movement, convened the Council on Poland, a group of about 60 advisers, in preparation for talks between representatives of the union and the government.

"The most important condition for the beginning of a true dialogue between the civil opposition and the authorities (is) the legalization of Solidarity and the immediate implementation of pluralism," said a resolution adopted by the group.

A wave of Solidarity-led strikes at Polish enterprises that began in mid-August posed the most serious threat to the government since Solidarity was suppressed in 1981.

Walesa called an end to the strikes after the government on Aug. 31 promised to discuss the country's future with workers' representatives, who demanded higher pay as well as free and legal trade unions.

Fans hurt pressing to see Michael Jackson

LIVERPOOL, England — A huge mass of fans pressed to the stage during a Michael Jackson concert Sunday, and more than 1,550 people were reported injured in the crush, authorities said.

Most injuries were minor, but officials said 40 people required hospital treatment.

Mounted police and vanloads of uniformed officers in riot gear were called to the Aintree horse racing track, where 125,000 attended the final concert of the singer's European tour, police said.

Police said about 22 people were arrested for disorderly conduct. First aid workers said they treated an estimated 3,400 fans during the concert for a variety of injuries.

John Crook, St. John's Ambulance Brigade assistant commissioner, said 1,550 of the casualties were treated after being crushed at the front of the crowd near the stage because of the pressure of people behind them. He said several of the casualties were people who fainted in the crush.

Crook said one of the 40 fans requiring hospital treatment suffered a suspected fractured spine.

Cuban exiles united with family in Florida

MIAMI — Nearly 700 Cubans arrived Sunday after months or years of exile in Panama and Costa Rica, laughing and crying with joy as they were reunited with family members living in Florida.

Three planes — two from Costa Rica and one from Panama — brought in 687 exiles in an operation organized by the Miami-based Cuban American National Foundation, the first private group in the United States to sponsor refugees under a recently approved federal program.

Under a special agreement with the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, all of the arriving refugees were whisked through customs, immigration and public health checks at a special staging area at Miami International Airport.

Nation's prison population at record level

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The federal and state prison population grew by 4 percent in the first six months of 1988 to a record 604,824 inmates, with female prisoners increasing at a far higher rate than males, the federal Bureau of Justice Statistics said Sunday.

The Justice Department agency said the six-month increase of 23,240 prisoners would require adding 900 new prison beds every week.

Lawrence Greenfeld, bureau director of correctional statistics, attributed the increase partly to stricter parole supervision, with a higher number of parole violators being returned to prison, and a wider use of mandatory minimum sentences for repeated drug offenses and other serious crimes.

The increase in female prisoners reflects a trend toward more frequent drug convictions among women than men, Greenfeld said.

He said the six-month increase in all federal and state prisoners fit the pattern of similar growth in the past two or three years, resulting from revised sentencing guidelines by the states.

Snow, cold dampen Yellowstone fires

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Snow dusted parts of Yellowstone National Park on Sunday, giving firefighters a break in their battle against forest fires, and people evacuated from park headquarters and several towns returned home.

Federal officials said they would double the number of soldiers sent to battle the fires that have charred more than one-third of the 2.2 million-acre park.

After months of drought and heat, temperatures were expected to reach only the mid-50s Sunday with humidity as high as 90 percent. Some sections of the park were dampened by light showers Saturday.

"The colder temperatures are going to raise the humidity and with the higher humidity, the wood will absorb some of that moisture. It'll be less likely to burn, although the fire shouldn't have much trouble," said Joe Halliday, chief naturalist for the west district of Yellowstone.

Winds were expected to stay in a more manageable range of 15 to 30 mph, well below the gusts above 50 mph that had driven the flames the previous two days.

Fires have charred 883,000 acres of Yellowstone since June in what firefighters call the worst fire season in the West in 30 years.

Light snow and low temperatures also helped firefighters in Idaho, where wind gusts to 60 mph, and Montana, where evacuated residents of some ranches and small communities were allowed to return home.

Rain and lower temperatures dampened fires in Colorado, but 45 mph wind gusts whipped a Boulder County fire to 1,830 acres and led six families to evacuate. Heavy rains later Sunday stalled the fire and residents were allowed to return home. Fires in the Routt National Forest were left unattended because the weather was too cold and wet for firefighters.

And in northwest Oregon, the state Department of Forestry shut down millions of acres of state-protected forests in an unprecedented effort to curb the number of fires caused by human carelessness.

"Given the number of human-caused fires we're seeing every day, this is the most viable option we have right now," said forestry department spokesman Doug Decker.

Altogether, 13.3 million acres, or 83 percent of the state's forests, have been closed, Decker said.

A fire also burned in northern California, where a mountain blaze whipped by hot winds burned 2,000 acres of brush and timber near the town of Grass Valley.

And in Washington, a rapidly expanding fire started by an illegal campfire was reported in Olympic National Park high country Sunday.

Repayment to Vincennes victims' families unlikely

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — Families of the 290 people killed in the U.S. downing of Iran Air Flight 655 are unlikely to receive compensation during the remaining months of the Reagan administration, officials say.

President Ronald Reagan pledged to offer compensation soon after the U.S.S. Vincennes shot down the plane over the Persian Gulf, but the plan still faces two steep hurdles — the bureaucratic and legal obstacles caused by a lack of communications between the United States and Iran, and its continued unpopularity on Capitol Hill.

"I think we're a long way from payments actually being made, if they ever actually are," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

"It's a hard sell up here on Capitol Hill. There's not a lot of support up here for Iran," he said. "And in addition, you have a lot of questions — who do you actually pay, how do you get them the money, how do you make sure it goes to the families and not to the government of Iran?"

The case involves the destruction of Iran Air Flight 655, shot down July 3 by the Navy cruiser Vincennes in the Strait of Hormuz shortly after taking off from Bandar Abbas.

U.S. officials expressed regret and President Reagan decided July 11 to offer compensation to families of the victims, but the plan quickly ran into opposition in Congress. Legislators were reflecting on a decade of public unhappiness with Iran and its leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, dating back to Iran's taking of American hostages.

A Navy investigation, headed by Rear Adm. William Fogarty, found last month the shoot-down was due to a series of stress-caused human mistakes made by a crew in combat for the first time.

But the Fogarty report also laid some blame on Iran, criticizing that country for permitting a commercial airliner to fly over a Navy warship that had been engaged in a firefight with Iranian gunboats.

While the Navy was investigating, the State Department began trying to answer the myriad of questions raised by President Reagan's announcement.

For example, the question of who gets the money is unanswered. The United States and Iran have no diplomatic relations and Iran has not yet even furnished a manifest with the names of the passengers.

Another question is how much to pay.

One congressional official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the amounts range from $50,000 to $250,000 per victim.

The bucks start here

The North Central Association reaccredited the UI for 10 more years last week, but not without some qualifications.

The association's report, while admitting overall the UI continues to be "a fine university," said the school has quite a few problems to deal with, especially in the area of undergraduate education.

The report suggested that undergraduate classes at the UI are too large, various departments are woefully understaffed and students are being forced to take classes with little relevance to their majors because of overcrowding.

While not discussing specifically how to deal with what it terms a "crisis" situation in undergraduate education, the underlying suggestion in the report is obvious — the UI needs more funding.

Unfortunately, the state has shown a remarkable unwillingness to invest in the UI in the past couple of years, relying instead on tuition to increase funding.

The problem may get worse before it gets better. Recently, Iowa Agricultural Secretary Dale Cochran was quoted as saying that Iowa needs to spend more money on agriculture, and less money on education.

That's the wrong attitude. Education is the cornerstone on which any economic growth that occurs in Iowa will have to be based. If Iowa does not want to see the UI and its other institutions decline into second-rate schools, it's going to have to make a real commitment to increasing funding for education at the state level, instead of making students bear the brunt of future funding increases.

Dumping responsibility

Predictably, environmental groups Wednesday made known their displeasure with the Iowa Department of Natural Resources' lenient treatment of IBP Inc. concerning recent pollution violations at an Iowa-based plant. IBP was charged with illegal dumping near its Columbus Junction plant when it was discovered that oil, grease and toluene solvents were being dumped, untreated, onto ground north of the Iowa River.

The $600 fine that the Columbus Junction meatpacker received for illegally dumping animal by-products was inadequate, lacks any deterrent value and will ultimately promote more such illegalities. In addition to the fine, IBP has been ordered to remove the contaminated soil and reroute similar pollution to their sewage treatment plant.

The decision by the Iowa Department of Natural Resources unnecessarily lacks any punitive punch, deterrent value and courage on the part of the environmental agency. Simply put, the Department of Natural Resources is an organization paid for by taxpayers to keep the environment and corporations like IBP clean. But when such a measly message is sent to a huge corporation concerning the illegality of their methods of by-product disposal, the department is indirectly encouraging such activity.

To a plant which employs more than 1,200 workers and has the capability of slaughtering 1,300 hogs in one day, $600 represents even less than the proverbial slap on the wrist. If, as was the case, the department finds such a plant guilty of environmental abuses, they should fine that company an amount likely to deter future illegalities. Yet this is not what happened, and if IBP, as in the past, continues to defy such laws, it should come as no surprise — especially to those dumping their responsibility.

Shuttles or rockets?

Last week the U.S. Air Force put a secret payload into orbit using a Titan 2 rocket, the first of a series of new boosters developed by the military to decrease reliance on the troubled space shuttle to launch payloads. The plan is to develop a fleet of powerful, expendable rockets to alleviate the backlog of satellite launchings created by the grounding of the shuttle and to act as reserve launch capability against any future shuttle problems. This change in policy by the military should be welcomed for two reasons.

First, the new rockets will do much to decrease the military's dependence on and influence over NASA. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration was originally intended to be a civilian agency, but the recent military reliance on the shuttle resulted in it being used for "Star Wars" research and to launch classified payloads. When one considers the military's power and influence in this country, the civilian and scientific sectors could not help but feel a squeeze when they saw valuable shuttle missions devoted to military missions. Even with the new launch capability, four of the first nine planned shuttle missions will be reserved entirely for military purposes.

Secondly, NASA should take a tip from its military counterparts and realize that the shuttle is too unreliable and dangerous to serve as this nation's primary means of getting into space. The problems plaguing the shuttle which make it unsuitable for military needs make it no less unsuitable for civilian needs. NASA should begin developing a fleet of expendable rockets of its own.

It is time for NASA to admit that the shuttle program has fallen far short of its intended goals. Men and women should be in space only when their presence is essential to an experiment or project. NASA should let expendable rockets do the business of launching satellites, instead of relying on an undependable and life-threatening vehicle.

Tuition hike is counterproductive

Tuition increase: These words strike fear into the very heart of every student, everywhere in the country.

Last year, tuition costs rose for out-of-state students by 12 percent; in-state students were subjected to a 9 percent increase. The previous year, non-resident students were tormented by a tuition rise of 20 percent, while resident tuition increased by another 12 percent. In the past five years, non-resident tuition has more than doubled.

Equally disturbing is the recent shift in the percentage of support for the UI from the state legislature. For the academic year 1980-81, the legislature appropriated just over 76 percent of the university's budget. This year, state support has fallen below 65 percent.

Because of decreased financial support from the state, there is a corresponding increase in tuition, a viable means of compensating for shrinking, state-appropriated funds. For fiscal year 1980-81, tuition income comprised approximately 17 percent of the UI's budget. This year, that level has exploded to 29 percent.

This trend, which has existed with few exceptions in the last decade, is pricing many potential and current students out of a chance to receive a college education. In fact, in terms of real dollars adjusted to the Higher Education Price Index, tuition revenues per student have increased more than 41 percent, while state appropriations have plunged by more than 23 percent. Coupled with this, there has also been a decline in financial assistance at the national level. According to the College Entrance Examination Board, students have suffered through a 6 percent drop in financial aid in real dollars since the beginning of the decade.

The problem is clear: The ever-escalating cost of a higher education is forcing people out of the chance to go to college. Over the past generation, higher education became a prerequisite for professional employment and upward socio-economic mobility. Education is the ticket to the train upon which we can travel to better ourselves and our society. Yet, higher educational costs translate directly into more people who will never even see its tracks.

But what is the solution? Often, discussions about raising tuition and other costs center on the very relevant concern of over-pricing post-secondary education. The usual response to this is the promise to increase financial aid to an appropriate level. However, the term "appropriate" is usually defined as raising aid levels to match the increase in tuition levels. But this method is inherently flawed with certain assumptions, especially since most students never experience a significant increase in the ability to pay.

Regarding education, students fall into four general categories. The first consists of those who are unable to pay for an education. Whenever fees increase, this group will have a matching increase in financial need. Additionally, there are plenty of examples of students who have a partial need. If tuition increases, then these students will also have a directly related, although fortunately less severe, increase in need. Similarly, there is a group of students who are just getting by; their ability to pay is at or slightly above the cost of their education. Any increase in fees will result in these students joining the ranks of those already dependent on financial aid. Finally, there are a few students who have sufficient financial resources to cover the cost of tuition, regardless of an increase.

While both the federal and state governments backtrack on their commitment to higher education, and as long as private resources, such as institutional corporate donations, do not increase substantially, the picture for post-secondary education looks grim. The resources not available for any increase in financial aid, the rationalization of increasing financial assistance while raising tuition and other costs will simply longer hold up to scrutiny.

If Iowa is to continue to pride itself on its excellent academic reputation and on the abilities of its youth, it must invest in its universities. The UI's students and potential students are suffering because of the shift in the burden of educational costs away from the state and to their pockets. Many are losing their chance for a better education, and thus a better future. Swift action must be taken: the state must renew its commitment to higher education.

While the old truism is correct that the best financial aid is lower tuition, it is obvious that tuition will not actually decrease. However, when it comes time to recommend and determine next year's tuition, please remember those students who will no longer be able to afford to attend, and those who never even had the chance.

Daniel Shanes is president of the Liberal Arts Student Association.

Power and influence aren't enough

Recently, pundits have spilled ink by the bucketful examining Dan Quayle's past. Columnist Mike Royko threw a barrage of crisp punches at him. Others rushed to his defense. Philip Roth wrote a delightful fable in The New York Times. Fun was poked; umbrage taken. The world did not stop spinning.

Still, something's bothering me about the issue. I have a lingering sense that all the ground hasn't been thoroughly covered. If I go back to the scene of the crime one more time, I tell myself, I may find the clue that will lead us to the breakthrough. So here I am, and there you are. I'm poking through the rubble, turning interesting pieces over in my hands. You're stuffing that spoon full of Shredded Wheat into your mouth thinking, "She's never been in this boring before. Maybe she's hung over. I wonder if she drinks."

It occurs to me that influence is the slant I've been looking for. One of the remarkable things about the Quayle episode is an attitude toward influence which has been revealed by it. The attitude is that influence is fine. The attitude goes even further; influence is fine to have, and fine to use.

It is an attitude which I sense predominantly among Republicans, but that could simply be due to the fact that this is their scandal. If Olympia Dukakis had gotten Mike into the Actors' Equity with a phone call, we Democrats would insist that such a call was perfectly legitimate. We would claim that Mike Dukakis is every bit as fine an actor as those forced to scramble from audition to audition suffering humiliation in search of the all-important job.

Those of us on both sides of the influence issue have danced a clever jig around it. I suspect we all suffer cognitive dissonance over the moral dilemmas of influence. Kim Painter, for instance, is writing this column because she thinks influence is not right to use, even if one possesses it. She also picked up the phone one morning to call a friend who could get her $1,000 loan approved. So who's she to talk about influence?

Perhaps the crux lies in the unsavory combination of influence and money. I, after all, needed money and had no influence. I simply called an acquaintance in possession of influence who let me use it to get some money. I was an underdog from the word go. This allowed me to maintain my innocent self-image.

Quayle is no underdog. He's neither brilliant nor particularly humble and endearing. He is a haughty rich kid who's been told he resembles Robert Redford too many times for his own good. We now know he influenced his way into law school and got average to below average grades.

Quayle was kissed by the twin misfortunes of money and influence. He used them to reach his goals, then betrayed them by committing the unpardonable sin of being an underachiever. Those of us with neither money nor influence, we who do not resemble Robert Redford, could clobber him for that. Seen in this light, our logic appears pocked with the blemish of unfairness.

Almost. But one of the continually irritating things about American public life is how we simplify its issues almost beyond meaning. We drain the blood from complex issues for the sake of keeping party and ideological lines drawn in bold ink.

This appetite for simplicity, like most appetites, is self-serving. It keeps articles short. It encourages authors to use monosyllabic words and thus prevents us from having to consult dictionaries. Chiefly, though, it allows us to sashay around issues rather than grapple with them in the dirt. With a blithe phrase, I can sidestep a conservative point of view to which I should be listening carefully. Why, oversimplification is the handiest item to come down the pike since paper toweling. The hard part is to convince people that it's dangerously detrimental to the vigor of American public debate.

The subtleties of influence and its use in relation to Dan Quayle's life are of the sort we like to avoid in our public fora. America has a morbid fear of playing Scruples, but with Quayle the result is instructive. My examination of the fine points of the issue yielded the following conclusions.

If Jonas Salk had been a rich fellow seeking to avoid life-threatening military service at the expense of poorer, less intelligent kids to do research which would most likely yield no results, I wouldn't complain. Jonas, phone home. In other words, if someone with extraordinary promise happens to have wealth and influence, I am not distressed at the unfairness of the universe if they use it to their advantage.

But Dan Quayle is not a promising politician. He is an average public servant. I don't have George Bush's confidence that he would be a capable president. I realize that what's happening here is that I have made an ethical decision. I am not willing to suspend my moral judgment on the influence issue for an average Joe who happens to have influence through dumb luck. It's a contradiction many will be uncomfortable with, but we must make room for complexity in our moral framework. In this universe, middling people have to play by strict rules.

Analysis

AMANA, Iowa (AP) — Political activists of both parties this year once again are learning the dangers of trying to settle an election before voters step in and have their say.

First it was the Democrats, who began the summer in a rosy glow as their presidential candidate showed more than a 2-1 lead in the polls. Iowa House Speaker Don Avenson talked about a "Democratic tide" throughout the Midwest on the coattails of presidential nominee Michael Dukakis.

Lawrence Pope, a Drake University law professor who runs legislative campaigns for the Republicans, publicly worried that if GOP nominee George Bush couldn't garner at least 45 percent of the vote, the ripple effect could harm state house and even county candidates.

That was a couple of months ago, but this is now.

"Republicans are euphoric," Pope said last week.

Suddenly, it was the Democrats' turn to worry that an uninspiring candidate at the top of the ticket could dampen voter interest, depress turnout and hurt the party up and down the ballot.

"We've got nobody out there to turn out the vote," said Ned Chiodo, a lobbyist and former state representative from Des Moines.

The worry was yet another poll, this one showing Dukakis ahead by only 47-42 percent amid increased restiveness that his slide in the polls would continue.

It's time for cooler heads to prevail, and some elective veterans were doing their best to make that point when they gathered to hear Democratic vice-presidential nominee Lloyd Bentsen when he stopped Friday in eastern Iowa.

"It's going to be a hard fight clear down to the wire," Bentsen told reporters. "I've said that from the beginning."

Neal Smith, who has viewed Iowa politics from the comfortable loft of 15 terms in Congress, offered a simpler assessment.

"Having a Democrat lead in Iowa is an unusual event," Smith said, dismissing the size of that margin.

In fact, Iowa has from the beginning of this year been a pivotal state, likely to turn one way or the other by the thinnest of margins. It has a tradition of backing Republican presidential candidates, but that history has been threatened throughout this decade by economic travail and a revitalized Democratic Party.

That Democratic Party, however, has proven itself far better at legislative and other low-turnout organizations where a well-oiled machine can make the difference.

Republicans have generally continued to hold sway in high-profile statewide elections, primarily because of their substantial edge in money.

Those fundamental factors, and not a momentary warm and fuzzy feeling about a candidate, will dictate who carries the state in November.

That ignores the fundamental political reality that in politics 24 hours can be an eternity.

Iowans have shown themselves repeatedly to be more than willing to defy what's known as the conventional wisdom, and this year they are showing every sign of sitting back, observing what's going on and reserving their judgment until the last minute.

Those suggesting this year's election is essentially settled are missing the point that it really won't begin for another month or so.

Iowa official appointed to help head Dukakis forces

DES MOINES (AP) — Iowa Secretary of State Elaine Baxter has been named one of 12 national heads of the campaign of Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis.

Baxter, who was the first statewide elected official to endorse Dukakis in the early primary season, had been named to the Democratic National Committee by the Dukakis forces at the end of this summer's Democratic National Convention.

Baxter joined national political figures like Sens. John Glenn of Ohio, Sam Nunn of Georgia, Bill Bradley of New Jersey, Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York and former Rep. Barbara Jordan of Texas. As heads of the Dukakis campaign, the positions are largely honorary, with the campaign being run by Dukakis' political operatives.

In a statement announcing the appointments in Boston, Dukakis said Baxter "has been an important part of the campaign from the beginning."

"We can't assume that winning will be easy," she said. "Republicans are always able to accumulate a massive war chest. But we aren't going to concede even one state to George Bush."

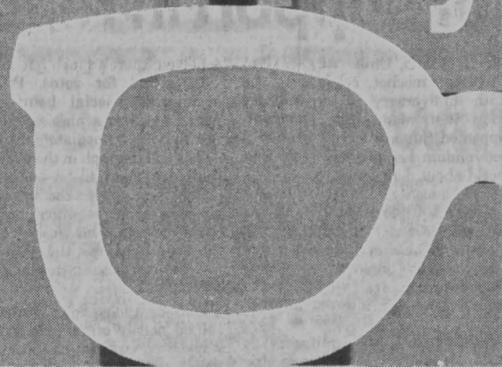

Debate format set

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — Negotiators for George Bush and Michael Dukakis have agreed on the length and format of the presidential debates between the two candidates, a spokesman for the Dukakis campaign said Sunday.

The debates, scheduled for Sept. 25 in Winston-Salem, N.C., and Oct. 13 or 14 in Los Angeles, each will last 90 minutes and feature one moderator and a panel of three questioners, said Lorraine Voles, a spokeswoman for the Democratic nominee.

The two sides failed to resolve the question of whether the candidates will sit or stand during the debates.

Chilean president appeals for support in referendum

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Gen. Augusto Pinochet, celebrating the 15th anniversary of the military coup that made him president, appealed Sunday for support in a referendum he said will teach the world about democracy.

But Pinochet indicated the estimated 300 foreign observers expected to watch the Oct. 5 presidential plebiscite might get a cool reception. "We forcefully repudiate those foreigners who try to intervene in our internal affairs," he said.

Pinochet, in military uniform with the presidential sash across his chest, spoke in his yearly state-of-the-nation address on the anniversary of the violent 1973 coup.

"I am ready to give the last breath of life to my country," the 72-year-old army commander said. In the referendum he seeks voter approval to rule until 1997.

Pinochet boasted of unprecedented social and economic achievements by his administration, but added: "Despite the spectacular advances achieved, there's much left to do." In a bid for votes, Pinochet announced special bonuses for public employees and retirees. No details were immediately available.

"We will triumph in the upcoming challenge," he told an audience of 3,000 dignitaries in the auditorium of a government office building. They included his fellow armed forces commanders, the 16-member Cabinet and other government and military officials.

Outside, thousands of supporters rallied noisily on the street. They waved red, white and blue Chile flags and banners promoting a "yes" vote in the referendum. Many chanted slogans, including "Viva Pinochet" and "No to the Marxist mob."

Shortly before the president arrived, police bomb experts were summoned to deactivate a device from a car that authorities said contained 155 pounds of explosives. The car was parked across from the main entrance to the building. An anonymous caller told a foreign news agency by telephone the car contained explosives. He did not identify himself as belonging to any particular group.

About 5,000 people, mostly young leftists, gathered Sunday at Allende's tomb in the coastal resort of Vina del Mar for an anti-government demonstration that ended when police used tear gas, water cannon and nightsticks to disperse the protesters. Several people were arrested.

The clash with police began when the pro-Allende group marched out of the cemetery and attempted to break through a line of riot police that blocked the road five blocks away. The local government in Vina del Mar, 75 miles northwest of Santiago, had authorized only a brief march.

In the Oct. 5 vote, Chileans will decide on a proposal by the country's military commanders that Pinochet assume a new eight-year term in March. If a majority rejects the proposal, open elections will be held in one year and Pinochet will

3 worshipers killed at Haitian church

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Men armed with guns and machetes burst into the church of a militant Roman Catholic priest Sunday and killed at least three parishioners, wounded 60 and burned down the building, witnesses and news reports said.

Police stood near the church but none came to the rescue, witnesses said. After the attack, gangs of men roamed the streets and stoned the offices of two groups opposed to the military regime of Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy.

The Rev. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, an outspoken opponent of the military government and a popular opposition leader, had just begun a 9 a.m. (9 a.m. EDT) Mass when a group of men began throwing rocks at the church, panicking hundreds inside who rushed for the doors, said a foreign journalist attending the service.

"Suddenly the doors at the back of the church burst open and 20 to 30 men with machetes, huge sticks and guns came in. They were dressed in civilian clothes," said the journalist, who contacted The Associated Press in New York by telephone.

"They started shooting people, beating them, and stabbing and slashing them," the reporter said. "They stabbed a woman who was pregnant. They stabbed another man who ran outside the church. He died. Some people were shot."

Estimates of the numbers of parishioners in the church ranged from 600 to 1,500.

Radio Haiti-Inter reported 60 people suffering from gunshot wounds and machete slashes were being treated at the public general hospital.

Dr. Roger Valme, assistant director of the hospital where bodies are normally taken, refused comment on the casualties.

One witness said, "I saw a pregnant woman with a bullet hole in her belly."

State combats nursing crunch

By Cathy Johnston
The Daily Iowan

Among billboards promoting recruitment, expansion and cut-backs on the Des Moines area, there stands one that doesn't fit the picture. It's a plea for the nursing profession.

This and other billboards across Iowa are part of a statewide effort to recruit and retain nurses in response to the current nationwide nursing shortage.

According to a report by the Iowa Board of Nursing, "A Nationwide Plan for Nursing," Iowa's hospitals have a nursing vacancy rate of 8.5 percent. And the report predicts that number will rise.

Even percent of registered nurses are working in the year 2000 Iowa will have about 8,000 nurses, according to the report.

Perhaps more alarming is the number of students enrolling in the 117 programs in the last year.

"The number of students enrolling in the nation and the state," U.S. Secretary of Education William J. Bennett said, "is declining at an alarming rate."

Deborah Krasner, executive director of the Iowa Board of Nursing, said that the state's nursing shortage is a result of a number of factors, including a decline in the number of students enrolling in nursing programs and a decline in the number of nurses working in the field.

In 1986, nursing was the 11th most popular choice of high school

Iowa bombs Kansas State for 1st win

Wildcats tally stats but fall short on score

By Brent Woods
 The Daily Iowan

MANHATTAN, Kan. — On paper, Kansas State wasn't supposed to have a chance against the 17th-ranked Iowa Hawkeyes. The Wildcats won the statistical battle but lost the scoring war Saturday at KSU Stadium as the Hawkeyes rolled to a 45-10 victory in front of a crowd of 21,000.

Football

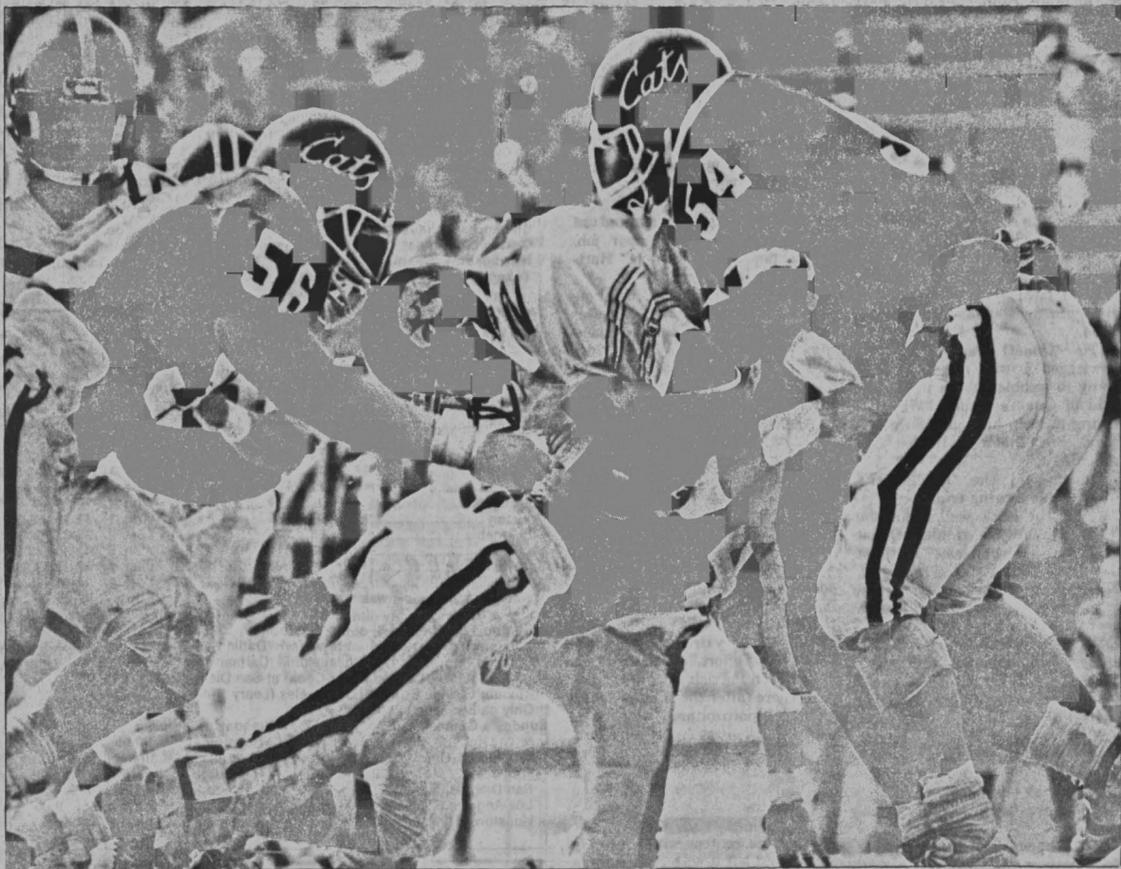

Kansas State recorded 24 first downs to Iowa's 16, 149 rushing yards to Iowa's 113 and 293 passing yards to Iowa's 262. But the Wildcats also claimed a category that cost them the game — five interceptions and 224 yards of Iowa interception returns.

Two of the interceptions were returned for touchdowns.

"It's a big 'W', I'm happy about that," Iowa Coach Hayden Fry said. "I'm happy about all the big plays our offense and defense made and the enthusiasm and the intensity that they played with."

"The big plays on defense were very gratifying. We needed that bad."

Iowa linebacker Brad Quast turned in the biggest defensive highlight of the day midway through the third quarter when he picked off Carl Straw's pass on the

Iowa's Tony Stewart attempts to run through the Kansas State line but is stopped by Wildcat defenders Rob Goode (56), Jeff Allison (4) and Alan Smith (54) during the Hawkeyes' victory Saturday afternoon in Manhattan, Kan. Stewart had 84 yards in the game.

On The Line improves in week 2

The second-week On The Line results are in, and thankfully we all fared much better than in the OTL opener.

The Big Ten had another rough weekend, but we were smart enough not to pick too many conference teams.

Let's get right to the results.

The winner of a frothy keg of lager from Fitzpatrick's is Scott Farmer. Scott went 9-1, missing as we all did on the Michigan State-Rutgers game.

A number of others also went 9-1, but it was Scott's accurate pick on the Lafayette-Kutztown showdown that won him the brew. Lafayette won 54-7, and Scott checked in with a 34-7 pick which was enough to win by a few points.

Farmer was reportedly relatively unimpressed with his victory, but we hope he enjoys the prize.

Our readers as a group also recorded a 9-1 mark, which just goes to prove that The Daily Iowan caters to sophisticated sports minds.

We did OK this week as well. Assistant Sports Editor Matt Zlatnik and staff writer Mike Trilk recorded 9-1 marks, Sports Editor Brent Woods led 8-2 because the state of Michigan let him down and Assistant Sports Editor Neil Lewis came in with 7-3.

If you will recall, Trilk requested after his 4-6 showing in the first week that the "Magic" be dropped from his name until he went 9-1 or better.

He achieved that goal right away this week, but Trilk is a proud man. He has decided not to reclaim the name until he proves to himself, and the sporting public, that he's worthy.

If Trilk has another good showing this week, he just may take back the name. Such sincere humility is seldom seen these days. Rumor has it Trilk won't be satisfied until he goes 10-0 and comes within 10 points on the tiebreaker.

The DI tally after the second week stands as follows: Woods leads with a 14-6 record, Zlatnik and Trilk are 13-7 and Lewis is 12-8.

We had a much improved response this week and hope it continues to improve. To be a part of this mania that is OTL, all you have to do is fill out the ballot below, circle the teams you think will win including the tiebreaker and guess a score on the tiebreaker.

Then list your name and phone number, clip the ballot and drop it off before noon Thursday at the DI Business Office, 111 Communications Center. And please, no more than three ballots per person.

If you forget to play today, the ballot will appear in the Scoreboard section on page 2B every day this week.

We would like to have people flocking to play OTL just for the sporting fun of it, but we realize we need a stronger motivating factor.

So this week, the folks at Misque, that legendary billiards parlor and pub, have consented to give a keg to the winner, if, of course, that person is at least 21. Good luck.

Chicago's defense stops Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — If Eric Dickerson can't get 100 yards against Chicago's stifling defense, maybe no one can.

Dickerson had 95 yards and one touchdown for Indianapolis on Sunday, but his fourth-quarter fumble preserved the Bears' 17-13 victory and stretched to 26 games a Chicago streak of not allowing 100 yards to an opposing runner.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Joe Montana, starting the game on the sidelines but finishing it at the controls of San Francisco's hurry-up offense, threw a 78-yard scoring pass to Jerry Rice with 42 seconds to play Sunday as the 49ers beat the New York Giants 20-17.

Bills 9, Dolphins 6

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Scott Norwood gave Buffalo its second win of the year with the last of the game's five field goals — a 28-yarder — with 3:12 left in the game after an ineligible man downfield penalty nullified a 7-yard Jim Kelly to Chris Burkett touchdown pass.

Saints 29, Falcons 21

ATLANTA — Dalton Hilliard ran for 97 yards and scored the clinching touchdown on a 4-yard run with 8:52 remaining. Hilliard, who twice lost fumbles earlier in the game, capped a 70-yard drive with

Hawkeyes struggle in tourney

By Michael Trilk
 The Daily Iowan

In an event the Hawkeyes have historically dominated, the women's tennis team could manage only one champion at the All-Iowa Tournament at Klotz Tennis Courts over the weekend.

Iowa's Tracey Peyton bested Drake's Tisa Vail in straight sets, 6-2, 6-3, to capture the first flight singles championship. No other Hawkeyes made it to the championship round.

"Everybody was a lot better," Peyton said. "Last year Iowa owned this tournament. We had people in every final. I had a harder time with my matches than I ever had before."

In the second flight singles championship Darcy Muat of Drake beat Iowa State's Jennifer Nelson, 6-1, 4-6, 6-4. Iowa State's doubles team of Kris Stotler and Suna Bayrakal beat Tiffany Turner and Gisele Baudouin of Drake, 6-3, 6-4, for the doubles title.

Although Peyton was the only Hawkeye to make it to the championship round, she feels the team played well for the first meet of the year.

"We played pretty well for this being our first match," Peyton said. "We haven't even worked on our doubles in practice yet so we couldn't expect to be as good as we were at the end of last year."

Peyton had to beat teammate Liz Canzoneri, Iowa's top player a year ago, in the semifinals to gain a shot at the first flight championship. Canzoneri posted a 29-14 mark overall last year and Peyton said it

Wilander defeats Lendl in five sets

NEW YORK (AP) — Mats Wilander ended Ivan Lendl's three-year reign as U.S. Open champion and took over his No. 1 ranking with a dramatic five-set victory Sunday in the longest final in Open history.

The 24-year-old Swede, who won the 1988 Australian and French Opens, became the first man since Jimmy Connors in 1974 to win three Grand Slam events in one year by beating Lendl 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, 5-7, 6-4. The match lasted 4 hours and 54 minutes.

In women's play, Steffi Graf beat Gabriela Sabatini Saturday to win the tournament and claim the women's Grand Slam.

Wilander also halted Lendl's bid for a record fourth straight Open title and prevented him from breaking Connors' mark for the longest stretch at the top of the computer rankings.

Wilander, the first Swede to win the U.S. Open, will replace Lendl as the No. 1 player when the new rankings are released Monday. Lendl needed to remain at the top until Oct. 3 to break Connors' record of 159 straight weeks at No. 1.

Last year, Lendl and Wilander played 4:47 in another Open final that featured long and grueling baseline rallies.

Wilander had lost six straight matches to Lendl, five of their eight Grand Slam meetings, and 13 of their 19 matches overall.

But Sunday he forgot the past and concentrated on the present against Lendl, who lives just down the road from him in Greenwich, Conn.

Upshaw denies misuse of funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gene Upshaw, the executive director of the NFL Players Association, said Sunday night that published reports that the union is being investigated for possible wrongdoing are "ridiculous."

The Boston Globe quoted unidentified Washington sources claiming Upshaw illegally misused union funds and tried to conceal his actions.

U.S. Olympic athletes compete in warm-up

CHIBA, Japan (AP) — Pole vaulter Kory Tarpenning and distance runner Francie Larriue-Smith led a group of seven Americans, most of whom competed well, in a pre-Olympic track and field meet Sunday.

Several other members of the U.S. Olympic team were on hand for the warm-up meet at Chiba Stadium, but because of rainy and windy conditions they decided not to compete.

Iowa 6-yard line and lumbered 94 yards for the score.

Quast shed a tackler about 35 yards from the end zone and then struggled in untouched. The play tied an Iowa school record set by Bobby Stearns against Montana in 1954.

"He (Quast) was running so bowlegged I was afraid he was going to wobble off the field," Fry said of Quast's return. "We were trying to keep him on the field of play. But that's a linebacker's dream."

Quast said the "linebacker's dream" was a tiring trip.

"I hit the brick wall about the 70-yard mark, I think," Quast said. "I saw the end zone, and I got so carried away I almost ran out of bounds. Coach Fry was on the sidelines trying to keep me in there. It was a long way."

Defensive back Brian Wise got the other big interception and ran it back 81 yards for a touchdown in the fourth quarter. Greg Brown, Mark Stoops and Turk Hook also had interceptions.

Fry said that Iowa's five interceptions weren't a chance happening; they were by design.

"We were baiting the quarterback," Fry said, "trying to give him the appearance that a certain pass pattern was open. Then we'd break for the spot where he would throw the ball."

"We should of had two or three more. We were going to give up all those short ones and then bait them."

The Hawkeyes struggled on offense in the first half and led only 17-10 at intermission.

Tony Stewart went around the right side for a 34-yard jaunt on Iowa's third play of the game, putting Iowa at the Wildcats' 4. Stewart eventually took it in to put Iowa ahead by a touchdown.

Jeff Skillett connected on a 22-yard field goal with 5:19 remaining in the first to give the Hawkeyes a 10-0 lead.

But on their first possession of the second quarter, the Wildcats got back in with 61-yard scoring drive that made the score 10-7.

Iowa answered in the second quarter, however, when Travis Watkins repented for a costly fumble with a 32-yard touchdown reception from Chuck Hartlieb to make the score 17-7.

"Travis ran a great route, and the guys up front did a super job. Travis made a nice catch," Hartlieb said.

But Watkins was still thinking about the fumble he made after catching a Hartlieb pass and running 54 yards to the Wildcats' 20.

"I think I spent too much time looking to see what was behind me," Watkins said. "I'm not sure if someone hit it, or if it just fell out. It was a mistake on my part."

"I wasn't happy with how I played."

Kansas State's Mark Porter drew the Wildcats three points closer with a 38-yard kick midway through the second.

But Iowa's size and strength advantage took hold in the second half, and the Hawkeyes romped as the Wildcats wilted.

"We were very tired but we gave a hell of an effort," Kansas State Coach Stan Parrish said. "We were right there (after the first half), we had our opportunities."

"All in all, it was a good effort. We're going to win a game here soon."

Iowa Notes

- Iowa tight end Marv Cook entered the contest with an ankle sprain and left it with a high ankle sprain.

Cook was on crutches after the game, but whether or not he will play against Colorado Saturday depends on who is doing the talking.

"If I have anything to say about it, yes I will," Cook said. "I don't know what an injury feels like. As far as I'm concerned, I'll be ready Saturday."

Fry isn't so sure.

"Now he (Cook) has a high-ankle sprain, and that means probably quite a bit longer before he can come back. It looks like he will (be out against Colorado)."

Senior Tom Ward or John Palmer will replace Cook if he can't play.

Fry said though his team looked shaky in the first half, the second half was a positive learning experience for many young players who saw action because of injuries and the 90-degree heat.

"We did get an awful lot of young players experience," he said, "and that's good."

CLEVELAND — Quarterback Ken O'Brien passed for 256 yards Sunday to lead the New York Jets beat the injury-ravaged Cleveland Browns 23-3.

Cleveland, already missing starter Bernie Kosar, lost backup quarterback Gary Danielson to a broken ankle late in the third quarter.

Broncos 34, Chargers 3

DENVER — Tony Dorsett ran for 113 yards and a touchdown on 23 carries as the Denver Broncos routed San Diego 34-3.

It was Dorsett's 47th career 100-yard game, and it boosted him ahead of Franco Harris into third place on the NFL's all-time rushing list with 12,181 yards. He now is 131 yards away from No. 2 Jim Brown.

Rams 17, Lions 10

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Greg Bell, taking over for the suspended Charles White, rushed for 139 yards and scored a touchdown Sunday as the Los Angeles Rams beat the Detroit Lions 17-10.

Bell, a fifth-year pro who came to the Rams in the Eric Dickerson deal a year ago, carried 27 times and scored on a 1-yard dive.

Oilers 38, Raiders 35

HOUSTON — Running back Allen Pinkett, starting for injured Mike Rozier, scored his third touchdown of the game on a 6-yard run with 31 seconds to play as the Houston Oilers rallied for a 38-35 NFL victory over the Los Angeles Raiders Sunday.

Seahawks 31, Chiefs 10

SEATTLE — Seattle is 2-0 and its defense is playing like gangbusters, but please don't try to read anything into that, coach Chuck Knox said after the Seahawks beat the Kansas City Chiefs 31-10 in the NFL on Sunday.

"Two games is not a season," Knox said. "We have a great attitude and we're playing well, but we have a long way to go."

Bengals 28, Eagles 24

PHILADELPHIA — Defense was just a word in the dictionary as the Cincinnati's Boomer Esiason and Philadelphia's scrambling Randall Cunningham engaged in a classic NFL passing shootout on Sunday.

Esiason fired the final volley, connecting on a 3-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Tim McGee with 5:02 left, to give the Bengals a 28-24 victory over the Eagles.

was odd having a friendly face on the other side of the net.

"I don't like playing against my teammates," Peyton said. "I knew that I wanted to win but it is weird when you look up and your teammate is on the other side of the net."

Head Coach Micki Schilling said last week she was just hoping that her team would use the event as a learning experience and wouldn't put much emphasis on winning.

Peyton adopted the same attitude but once she reached the finals she knew what she wanted.

"I didn't know what to expect at the beginning," Peyton said, "but after Saturday I knew that I could win. I was kind of nervous but I'm happy I won. I played better than I expected."

Iowa's next match is Sept. 27 at Iowa State. The Hawkeyes' next home meet is Oct. 1-2, when they host the Iowa Flight Invitational.

Big Ten still looks shaky in week 2

(AP) — Just when it looked like the Big Ten might go 0-for-the-season against non-conference football foes, Iowa and Ohio State saved the conference from the embarrassment.

The conference was 0-4 during its first weekend of gridiron action, and in Saturday's first two games Purdue lost to 20th-ranked Washington 20-6 and No. 15 Michigan State topped by Rutgers 17-13.

But then 17th-rated Iowa chimed in with a 45-10 win over Kansas State and Ohio State beat Syracuse 26-9.

Two more league losses followed, however — Notre Dame's 19-17 victory over visiting Michigan and Illinois' 21-16 loss at Arizona State.

Ninth-ranked Michigan fell victim to Notre Dame's 135-pound Hawaiian placekicker, Reggie Ho, who made all three of his field goal attempts.

"All I had to do was kick the ball just like I do in practice," said Ho. Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler said he didn't think the Wolverines did very well on defense, giving up 266 yards. No. 13-ranked Notre Dame allowed 213 yards.

Big Ten Football

At Manhattan, Kan., 240-pound Brad Quast's 94-yard return sealed the Hawkeyes' victory.

Chuck Hartlieb passed for 253 yards and one touchdown as the Hawkeyes squared their season record at 1-1.

At East Lansing, Mich., Michigan State's only touchdown came on a 1-yard dive by quarterback Bobby McAllister. John Langeloh kicked field goals of 37 and 32 yards for the Spartans, the defending Big Ten and Rose Bowl champions.

"I feel very humble," Michigan State coach George Perles said. "We lost to a very good football team."

"I thought we would get the daylight scared out of us and then win the game. I don't know of any good that comes from losing."

At West Lafayette, Ind., Purdue managed only 107 yards rushing and 172 passing. They suffered from a lost fumble and three interceptions. Boilermaker quarterback Shawn McCarthy completed 18 of 40 passes.

The loss to Washington deprived Purdue's Fred Akers of his 100th victory as a college coach. He is 99-52-3 for 14 seasons.

"The passing game ended up killing us in the second half, not catching the ball," Akers said.

At Columbus, Ohio, John Cooper's first game as coach at Ohio State went just as he had planned.

With the largest opening-game crowd in Ohio State history — 89,768 — on hand to watch the new man at work, Cooper's Buck-eyes brought an end to the nation's longest unbeaten streak. Syracuse had gone 14 games without a loss.

"We played the kind of football I like," Cooper said. "We didn't turn it over. We had good field position. We only had one penalty and we were solid in the kicking game."

Illinois' loss to Arizona State was the second defeat in as many outings for the Fighting Illini under new coach John Mackovic.

Illinois brought the score to 21-14 on Keith Jones' 24-yard touchdown pass to flanker Steven Williams with 4:24 remaining in the third quarter.

"We had a huge improvement over last week's game (a 44-7 loss to Washington State at home)," Mackovic said. "We made some mistakes, but we worked hard and stayed in the game. We are getting closer to where we want to be, but we were not good enough to win tonight."

No. 5 UCLA burns No. 2 Nebraska 41-28

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Troy Aikman threw three touchdown passes, two of them to Charles Arbuckle, as fifth-ranked UCLA scored 28 points in the opening 14 minutes and went on to beat second-ranked Nebraska 41-28 Saturday night.

The victory was the 100th for Terry Donahue since he became UCLA's head football coach in 1976 and avenged three losses by the Bruins to the Cornhuskers in the last five years.

Nebraska had scored 42 points in each of those games — but the Cornhuskers fell far short of that total Saturday night before a Rose Bowl crowd of 84,086 and a national television audience.

UCLA's 41 points were the most ever scored against a Tom Osborne-coached team and the most against Nebraska in 20 years.

The previous high against an Osborne team was 38 by Oklahoma in 1977. Osborne became the Cornhuskers' head coach in 1973.

The Bruins are 2-0 while the Cornhuskers fell to 2-1.

Aikman, who completed 13 of 22 passes for 205 yards with one interception, teamed up with Arbuckle on a 57-yard play after just 2:21 of play to get UCLA started. Arbuckle had five receptions for 100 yards, all in the first half.

Shawn Wills, a freshman playing in his second college game, scored on a 50-yard run to make it 14-0 with 6:38 left in the first quarter.

Aikman threw a 3-yard touchdown pass to Arbuckle just 3:17 later to make it 21-0, and Darryl Henley completed the first quarter outburst by returning a punt 75 yards for a touchdown.

Runners win in opener

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

In perfect running weather, the women's cross country team won its season opener Saturday at Finkbine Golf Course.

Iowa's top returnee, Renee Doyle, led the race from start to finish, leaving Drake's Karla Burds trailing just behind her.

"Renee took control right away, from the gun," said Mark Trimble, an Iowa volunteer assistant.

Doyle, a senior from Sioux City, Iowa, was satisfied with her performance.

"It was a good race," she said. "But I wish someone had been right up beside me. When they're behind you, you don't know what they're thinking. They have the advantage and something to shoot for. If they're next to you, you know when they get tired."

Burds, a freshman from Epworth, Iowa, who participated in the Kinney High School Nationals last year, led Drake to a second place finish.

Women's Cross Country

Mankato State was third, topped by Alison Ungar's 11th place.

The Hawkeyes took six of the top ten places, including Doyle's first, third by Jeanne Kruckeberg, and fifth by Tricia Kiraly.

Coach Jerry Hassard was pleased with the results, considering how much volume his runners have been doing at practice in the last few weeks.

"We expected times to be slow, based on the re-design (of the course) and going into the meet tired," he said.

Hassard was particularly happy with Iowa's Jennifer Moore, who finished 10th, and he was also very impressed with all the Hawkeye runners at the end of the race.

"They worked hard," Hassard said. "If they can win on a day like this (being tired), they have to be a good team."

This was the first race on the recently changed course, which includes an uphill finish. The course was rerouted in preparation for the Big Ten championships, which will be at Finkbine on Oct. 29.

"It's not an easy course," Hassard said. "There are several challenges, and it's very suitable for Big Ten."

Doyle said she enjoyed the first race on the newly re-routed course.

"I'm a strength runner," she said. "I like the challenging uphill parts because if it's an important race, I can push that much more."

Hawks defeat West Chester

The Iowa field hockey team took a one-goal lead into intermission and added two more in the second half to defeat West Chester University 5-2 yesterday in West Chester, Penn.

Three Iowa players scored in the first 15 minutes of play. Junior Melissa Sanders connected on an Erin Walsh pass for the Hawkeyes' first score and freshman Kris Fillat added her own unassisted marker for Iowa's second goal.

Field Hockey

Junior Erica Richards closed out the first half scoring when she put in a pass from senior co-captain Michelle Murgatroyd. West Chester stayed in the game with two goals of its own in the first period.

The Hawkeyes came out strong in the second half with two additional goals coming in the first 12 minutes. Sanders scored for the second time when she put in a pass from Fillat and Richards salvaged a broken penalty corner for Iowa's fifth goal. In all, Iowa recorded 23 shots on goal to West Chester's 12.

Iowa is now 3-1 and is coming off a 3-0 loss to Delaware this past Saturday.

Hawkeyes take 3rd in Augustana meet

By Neil Lewis
The Daily Iowan

Though a third-place finish was a disappointing team performance for the Iowa men's cross country team in Saturday's Augustana quadrangular in Rock Island, Ill., it didn't completely overshadow several strong individual efforts.

Distancers Rod Chambers and L.J. Albrecht finished fourth and fifth respectively on the four-mile course, but they lacked a strong supporting cast. Drake won the meet, totaling 33 points and Augustana, led by medalist Dave Terronez, finished second with 49. Iowa tallied 54 with Grinnell far behind, scoring 98.

Coach Larry Wiczorek attributed much of Iowa's poor performance to below-average performances from key runners.

"I thought Tim Slingsby, Jason Maxson and Bruce Nie particularly are capable of much better efforts than they showed Saturday," he said. "They are all capable of being up there with L.J. and David Brown."

"Not to take anything away from the other teams, but it wasn't a case of them running so well. Three or four of our guys just didn't perform."

Chambers, Iowa's top distance runner, was one of the individual bright spots in Saturday's meet and is already ahead of his early season performances last fall.

The most surprising finish in this weekend's meet was turned in by sophomore L.J. Albrecht. A walk-on from Bettendorf, Ia.,

Men's Cross Country

Albrecht failed to qualify for the state meet in high school but has become one of the Hawks' leading and most improved runners.

During the 1987 season Wiczorek offered Albrecht, then a freshman, a challenge to improve by his sophomore season to the level of the best incoming freshmen.

"I told him to just think of last year as a catch-up year," Wiczorek said. "His 20:16 this weekend was only two seconds behind Rod (Chambers) and he beat last year's state cross country champion, Dave Ladehoff of Drake."

"That's no minor achievement and it really is a lesson for the other guys on the team."

Albrecht said he doesn't have a strong kick and has to jump out early and try to stay with the contenders. "I was really happy with the way I ran," he said. "I just tried to stay with Rod Chambers the whole way."

Junior David Brown was the only other top ten finisher for the Hawkeyes, coming in seventh. Junior transfer Tim Slingsby turned in a 15th place showing and senior Bruce Nie placed 20th. Iowa's next meet is Saturday at Minnesota.

Iowa stays in hunt for invitational title

By Mike Polisky
The Daily Iowan

After the first day's play, 36 holes are completed and the Hawkeyes are within reach of the Minnesota Invitational title.

The Hawkeyes are in third with a five-player combined score of 645, twelve shots behind co-leaders Minnesota and Indiana.

Coach Diane Thomason feels the 12-shot gap can be easily erased.

"Our goal right now is to close the gap," Thomason said. "Tomorrow (Monday) we play at Hazelien, one of the top 100 golf courses in the country. At Hazelien, it is very possible to see a big swing in scores. Hopefully, we can shoot six strokes better and Minnesota and Indiana will lose six—it's not impossible."

Thomason was pleased by the Hawkeyes' first-round play.

"I think we had some good individual rounds," said Thomason. "I also thought we played fairly consistently—but we could play better."

The team leaders are followed by Wisconsin at 661, Michigan at 674,

Women's Golf

Iowa State at 682, Air Force with 722, Stetson at 742 and Wichita State.

Iowa was led by Stacey Arnold and Kelley Brooke, who both shot 158. Jeannine Gibson added a 165, and Shirley Trier and Amy Butzer both holed out at 166.

Arnold felt the Hawkeyes are within striking distance.

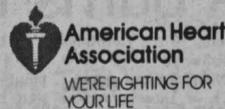

"I think we have a good chance of coming back," Arnold said. "We didn't play that well today, and hopefully the bad rounds are out of our system. With some rest and some good golf, there is no doubt we can fight our way back—we have the ability."

Kate Hughes of Minnesota was the individual leader. She shot par (146) for the round, combining a 75 with a 2-under 71.

The final eighteen holes will be played Monday morning at the Hazelien Golf Course in Minneapolis.

Yankees sweep Detroit with 18-inning triumph

NEW YORK (AP) — Claudell Washington's two-run homer in the bottom of the 18th inning enabled New York to win 5-4 and complete a four-game sweep of Detroit.

The game lasted 6 hours and 1 minute, the longest game by time in the American League this season. The 18 innings were also an American League-high.

Rickey Henderson led off the 18th with a walk against Guillermo Hernandez, 5-5, the Tigers' third pitcher. Washington then connected on an 0-1 pitch for his ninth homer of the season and second game-winning shot in the series.

MILWAUKEE — Milwaukee had runners on first and second with no outs in the fifth Sunday when Mike Campbell surprised his own teammates by throwing a pitch to Darryl Hamilton after Mariner third baseman Jim Presley had called for a pickoff play at second.

Hamilton bunted down the third base line. Catcher Scott Bradley fielded the ball and threw to first where no one was covering.

Jim Gantner scored from second and Paul Molitor advanced from first to third on the hit and Bradley's throwing error. Robin Yount then doubled home Molitor and Hamilton. Two outs later, Joey Meyer singled off reliever Bill Swift to score Yount and give Milwaukee a 5-1 lead.

Steady laughs from Leno

By Locke Petersein
The Daily Iowan

It could be said that Jay Leno is the Bruce Springsteen of standup comedy — hard-working, mass-appeal, "regular Joe" image (while doing quite well, thank-you very much) displaying not really pure genius, but rather competent dependability. Much of Leno's popularity stems from his ability to get the same number of chuckles from a hip college-town crowd as he would at a Shriners' convention. From the first joke on it was clear this wasn't Jay Leno "menacingly large 'Tonight Show' superstar" entertaining us, but rather Jay Leno "our buddy, our pal," the common man's comic.

Leno is living physical proof that comedy is not pretty. An Iowa Hawks cap perched on his dark-haired dome as he lumbered onto Hancher Auditorium's stage, Leno created the illusion — in black Harley T-shirt, jacket and pants — of Dudley Do-Right's face on the body of Frankenstein's creature.

Leno's two-hour show opened with a rapid-fire survey of current (and not so current) events — chuckle-raising jokes that, for the most part, involved reading a headline then tacking on a pun-chline. Then the Moose-Jawed One turned the spotlight of comic scrutiny on his own family life with gentle on-target swipes at his — and everyone's — childhood and parents. And finally the house lights were brought up so that the comic could verbally go out among his followers and badger them about their careers, their majors and their dates.

Throughout, Jay Leno stayed on a very even keel — his material mostly came in short, easily digestible bites. His jokes rarely required more than a few seconds' setup as he rooted through our techno-commercial world gone mad, plucked out a particularly inane point and then, with a bewildered arch of those Cro-Magnon brows, offered up a straightforward common sense, working guy's rebuttal to the complex insanity of American life. The all-American Leno was simultaneously the cynical '80s Guy on the Street and the naive '50s Boy Next Door — he made jokes about male sexual problems, but just couldn't bring himself to say "premature ejaculation." Occasionally, the blue-collar approach seemed to describe more than just Leno's worldview. When the show dragged (which was just often enough to be noticeable, but not distracting), you felt like you were watching assembly-line comedy, with Leno seeming to shift into the same mental autodrive that most line inspectors employ to get through daily eight-hour shifts. Likewise, some Leno fans may have been annoyed to hear him repeating jokes we've all heard before on talk shows and read in magazine articles. But in the concert format those old Leno chestnuts took on a nostalgic luster similar to the performance of classic rock songs — we know 'em, we love 'em, we want to hear 'em again and again.

Leno may not possess the spontaneous ad-lib genius of a Robin Williams or the sophisticated polish of a Steve Martin, but those guys are artisans of wit — Leno is more than happy just being a standup comic. He goes out and gets the job done without a lot of frills or risks — just solid, steady laughs.

Green wins Milwaukee Open

FRANKLIN, Wis. (AP) — Ken Green won his second consecutive PGA Tour event, sweeping to a six-stroke victory Sunday in the $700,000 Greater Milwaukee Open.

Green, who set a course record with an 11-under-par 61 Saturday at the 7,030-yard Tuckaway Country Club, shot a 68 Sunday for a 72-hole score of 20-under 268 that won him the $126,000 first prize.

Green, 30, a seven-year Tour veteran from Danbury, Conn., earned $135,000 a week earlier by winning the Canadian Open. He became the first player to win consecutive events since Sandy Lyle won the Greater Greensboro Open and Masters tournament in April.

Mark Calcavecchia and Dan Pohl both shot 66 Sunday to finish at 14-under 274, along with Donnie Hammond and journeyman Jim Gallagher, Jr.

Hammond shot a 68, as did Gallagher, who is trying to regain his PGA Tour card. Gallagher overcame a double-bogey on No. 15 for his 68.

Calcavecchia said he felt good about his own finish but knew from checking the leader board that there would be virtually no chance of catching Green, who led by four shots at the turn.

"I figured somebody would have to shoot 30 on the back nine to catch him and that's just not going to happen," Calcavecchia said.

Dave Barr, co-leader after each of the first two rounds and two strokes behind Green starting the final round, slipped out of contention with a bogey on No. 14 and a double bogey on No. 17. He shot a 75 and finished at 277.

Barr fell four strokes behind at the turn, managing just one birdie through his first nine holes. He sank a birdie putt of about 12 feet on the 390-yard No. 4 before Green missed about a 10-footer and settled for a par.

Green then made a birdie putt from about six feet on the 170-yard No. 5. He missed a putt for an eagle and settled for a birdie on the 524-yard, par-5 sixth hole and also birdied the 197-yard No. 8.

Green's 72-hole total fell two strokes short of the GMO record of 22-under 266 set by Bill Kratzert in 1980.

Cup racers to battle in court

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The unorthodox America's Cup challenge Michael Fay sprang on the San Diego Yacht Club uncorked the technological genie that led to his crushing defeat on the water, the U.S. defense design coordinator says.

At the same time, last week's court-ordered two-nation regatta pitting New Zealand's 133-foot monohull against the San Diego Yacht Club's space-age catamaran may eventually lead to the extinction of the venerable 12-meter yacht class in Cup competition, Stars & Stripes design coordinator John Marshall said.

Dennis Conner skipped the solid wing-sail cat to consecutive victories over New Zealand to sweep the best-of-three series. In both instances, the Kiwi boat was beaten by lopsided margins: 18 minutes, 15 seconds in Wednesday's first race over a 40-mile windward-leeward course, and 20:10 in Friday's decisive event over a 39-mile triangular course.

Fay, who first sued SDYC to get his surprise challenge validated and again to try to oust the cat, is returning to court to try to disqualify the dual-hulled vessel as an illegal defender. The legal protest will be heard in the New York State Supreme Court, which has jurisdiction over the Deed of Gift, a document outlining the basic parameters of the Cup competition.

Both sides are confident they ultimately will prevail.

Fay and his attorney, Andrew Johns, believe the first-time Cup because a catamaran was illegal because the defender failed to "match" the challenging yacht and, consequently, produced a race sailed on unequal terms.

The Americans claimed the right, with mutual consent absent between challenger and defender, to design and build any sail-powered boat fitting the loose design restrictions in the deed. The deed, they said, makes no mention relating to the number of hulls a contending boat may have.

Under those conditions, Marshall said, the Stars & Stripes design team was freed from the restrictive design rules that prevailed with the 12-meter, the boat that had been used in Cup competition since 1958.

Winston gives mixed show

By Kevin Goulding
The Daily Iowan

Bearded, balding and bespectacled (I could add barefoot, but he wore socks), solo pianist George Winston performed Thursday night to a receptive full house at the Paramount Theatre in Cedar Rapids. Accompanying Winston was the air conditioner, which pounded out a rapid, steady beat throughout the second half.

Despite displaying the pianist's diverse range, from his well-known melodic seasonal pieces to jazzy swing and rhythm and blues styles, the show suffered a letdown after an alternately fanciful and electrifying first half.

Dressed in a flannel shirt and jeans and sans shoes, the subdued Winston cut a curious figure. Studious and intent while playing, he remained stiff and rigid, except for his hands, which jumped and danced, sometimes moving so fast they looked like several pairs playing simultaneously.

Also incongruous to the reserved demeanor was his ability to "tell" stories and paint vivid pictures of imaginative worlds with his music. In the first half, virtually every piece was preceded by a short narrative tale. The first composition was from the soundtrack to the children's story "The Velveteen Rabbit." Winston introduced it as the section where "the rabbit is lost in the forest and eventually finds his way out." The second piece, "Colors," one of his autumnal seasonal pieces, was introduced as the story of "an enchanted forest, where the leaves fall off the trees, only to grow legs and run away." And finally, his third piece, from Vince Guaraldi's "Charlie Brown's Christmas," for which he explained, "this is when Charlie Brown is trying to get the kids to rehearse and he asks Schroeder to play something relaxing and Schroeder plays the rock 'n' roll number."

For each narrative, the wizardly Winston followed through with an appropriate and masterful musical tale. "Colors," similar to the first half finale "Fall Woods," created exquisite moods of pastoral contemplation — melancholic, yet bright and hopeful.

One of the highlights of the evening was the impressive stride style "Cat 'n' Mouse," inspired by pianists Fats Waller and Teddy Wilson. As Winston noted, "the left hand, the cat, plays the bass and the chords, and the right hand is the mouse, and it improvises." Pounding out a relentless beat with his "cat," Winston's "mouse" scurried frantically about the keyboard, faster than the eye could see.

After a too-long half-hour intermission, the show failed to come near the level of energy and entertainment in the first half. One exception was a piece inspired by James Booker, "Summer." Winston described the New Orleans native Booker as "the first person to take rhythm and blues and soul and create a solo piano style." The piece was an interesting mix of blues, honky-tonk and George Gershwin.

'Woza Albert!' rouses crowd

By Kevin Goulding
The Daily Iowan

Ironically, a play originating in South Africa, a bastion of censorship and denial, dealing with the second coming of Christ, was performed in Iowa City this week, while "The Last Temptation of Christ," made in the good ol' U.S. of A. won't be making its first coming.

"Woza Albert!" was first performed eight years ago in the black townships of South Africa and was presented this weekend at UI Theatre. Sponsored by the UI Theatre Department, the play portrays the reaction to the second coming of Christ of the struggling citizenry of South Africa. With great dexterity and animation, 35 characters are enacted by two actors, Geoffrey Owens and Michael Kachingwe.

Owens, who appears as the son-in-law on "The Cosby Show," and UI acting graduate student Kachingwe, who was born in Zimbabwe, are to be commended for an inspired performance that brought the audience to its feet. Thanks to crisp, clear direction by UI graduate Tisch Jones, the series of vignettes moved along at a brisk pace. Jones, who is currently the assistant to the director at Yale Repertory Theater, believes that Owens and Kachingwe are the first actors, other than the originators Percy Mtwa and Mbongeni Ngema, to perform this play.

Conceived as "theatre of poverty," with minimal sets, props and costuming, the play makes maximum use of the most powerful theatrical convention of all, the imagination.

In one scene, Owens, flipping from reporter to policeman to Fidel Castro, uses a stick alternately as microphone, billyclub and Havana cigar. A red clown nose is used to portray whites; a sheet draped over the head creates an old woman.

In anticipation of the arrival of Morena (a South African word meaning Lord), various characters consider what they will ask for via miracles. An old woman scouring the garbage will ask for food, another a lollipop; an overworked brickyard worker "a million bricks, falling like manna from heaven." It becomes painfully apparent that after years of oppression the people are unable to generate the imagination to even remember liberation.

Perceived as a "cheap, communist musician" and "terrorist" by the ruling whites, Christ is at first exploited as a media attraction, soon imprisoned and eventually bombed.

In a rousing finale, Christ visits a graveyard ("Where are your L's?" he asks a gravedigger) and proceeds to raise a succession of martyred South African leaders. In a twist worked up by Jones, the names of American civil rights leaders are also called out.

Following a standing ovation and two encores on Saturday night, the actors led the energized audience in a hand-clapping sing-along.

Soviet circus celebrities visit America

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Backstage at the Worcester Centrum, a few hundred yards from the hastily constructed ring where in a few hours the Moscow Circus was to begin its first American tour in a decade, Slava Zolkin leaned near a cage and kissed one of his 12 dancing brown bears between the eyes.

Immediately, the other bears emitted jealous growls of protest until Zolkin came by and stroked each one.

Zolkin's dedication to his bears is typical of the members of the Moscow Circus, considered on a par with the finest theater, opera and ballet in the Soviet Union.

"It's not your typical American circus; it's an art form," said Steven E. Leber, the U.S. producer of the Moscow Circus. "These people have dedicated their entire lives to it."

The Moscow Circus last performed in the United States in 1978 and just began a 15-city tour that will wind up at the Cow Palace in San Francisco Jan. 1.

Included in the circus are the bears, Sumatran tigers, clowns, jugglers, aerialists, trapeze artists and horsemen.

"A lot of the tricks have a method to it," said horse trainer Tamerlan Nugzarov, speaking through an interpreter a few hours before the show. "There is this myth and legend to everything we do."

The horse act is dangerous, but Nugzarov said there have been few injuries. "They have not been major," he said. "After all, the hardest injuries are those to the soul."

Equally daunting to watch is Nikolai Pavlenko as he steps into the cage with his 17 wild Sumatran tigers and coaxes them into performing without ever using a whip.

"My attitude about my work is dictated by my attitude toward them," he said. "Animals should be allowed to show their character. They should not be oppressed nor made to think like we think."

UI administrators are split on the merits of an accreditation program, criticizing the UI's ratio and lack of planning.

The report, prepared by the North Central Association of Colleges and Universities, identified 13 areas of concern, including faculty salaries, disabled persons, prevention and post-graduate teaching loads.

"Still, (we wish) to Iowa is a fine university experiencing some time of transition," states. "The difficulties should not be our very position of the present status and its potential improvement."

The report also identified a lack of strength at the library and computer faculty-administration and student services. Accredited the period, which lasted 1997-98 academic year.

"I think it's tough," says President Gordon. "What we're seeing is neglect from the Assembly."

"Without more faculty, there's no more sections, no magic," Fischer said. In a letter to the community, UI President Rawlings said the question stronger it was ten years ago.
