Gilbert slams Yucatan, kills 14

CANCUN, Mexico (AP) — Hurricane Gilbert, one of the most destructive storms ever, slammed into the Yucatan Peninsula Wednesday, shattering windows, drenching the land and cutting off the Caribbean resorts of Cancun and Cozumel.

Thousands of people fled from the storm, which has left at least 14 people dead. The Jamaican Embassy in Washington said the storm left 500,000 people homeless in that island nation.

The hurricane's 160 mph winds ripped over Cozumel island earlier Wednesday. Ham radio operators in the area said Gilbert knocked down a radio and television communications tower, uprooted trees and blew the roofs off buildings.

The winds leveled slum areas in Cancun on the Mexican mainland, where many people live in cardboard shacks, the operators said. In Quintana Roo state, huge waves lashed at Caribbean resort beaches, and trees were downed by the punishing winds, Mexican officials said.

"The sound of the wind outside is horrible," said receptionist Pablo Torres at the Hotel Carrillos in Cancun in a telephone interview as the storm approached. "You couldn't leave even if you wanted to."

There were no immediate reports of casualties.

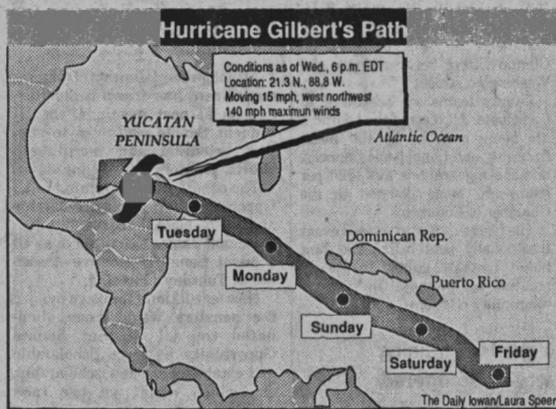

The National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., said a hurricane watch was in effect along the Texas coast from Brownsville to Port Arthur and along the coast of northeast Mexico from Tampico north.

"Residents in these areas should be ready for quick action should warnings be required" on Thursday, the center said in a statement. At 6 p.m. EDT Gilbert was centered near latitude 21.3 north, longitude 88.8 west and approaching the north coast of Yucatan, about 60 miles east-northeast of the provincial capital, Merida, the statement said. The storm was about 600 miles southeast of Brownsville.

Gilbert's winds had decreased to 140 mph as it moved over land, but the center said wind speed was expected to rise once the storm moved back over the warm Gulf of Mexico waters. It said the hurricane was moving west-northwest at 15 mph.

Regents' tour of UI promotes advances

By Hilery Livengood
The Daily Iowan

The UI administration has targeted improving undergraduate education — especially in the colleges of business administration, engineering and liberal arts — as their primary focus for the future. Results of this change in emphasis are already evident. UI administrators will today present projected capital requests that include funds specifically aimed at this task to the state Board of Regents.

The UI will request $15.5 million for fiscal year 1990 and $89.8 million for fiscal year 1991.

These proposals are part of a "comprehensive program to upgrade (the UI's) undergraduate education programs," according to regents' documents. "The capital budget requests flow directly from the emphasis on undergraduate teaching."

"The university's two top priorities are for meeting undergraduate classroom and laboratory needs and basic infrastructure needs," according to the documents.

The board's Wednesday morning tour of four UI buildings illustrated the need for funding to improve conditions in the undergraduate colleges, according to Carla Cooper, UI assistant to the president. Regents toured the Engineering Building and MacLean, Schaeffer and Phillips halls.

"The tour's intent was to show a very real need for improved facilities for undergraduate education," Cooper said.

Addressing the board members, UI President Hunter Rawlings said, "There is a serious problem at the university in terms of meeting the needs of students. In the past we haven't had the resources to keep up with the educational demands

Observer's travels raise Burma's veil

By Ken Starck
Special to The Daily Iowan

(Editor's note: Ken Starck, a professor of journalism at the UI, went to China on a Fulbright Scholarship in 1986-1987. During his stay he traveled to Burma. These are his impressions of the country, which is now embroiled in conflict.)

See related stories, page 7.

Snared in a tense and often violent political upheaval since March, Burma has been a closed nation for more than two decades. To gain foreign exchange, the southeast Asian nation has let in few tourists. Journalists are not allowed.

As a result of its isolation, Burma is virtually unknown to the outside world. In 1985 a mere 33,000 people visited Burma, but that represented a considerable increase over the preceding six years. The present turmoil has all but eliminated visitors.

It is our shame that we don't know more about Burma. To get our attention usually requires a natural or human-made disaster. In Burma the latter has been in the making for years.

Burma has a natural beauty and history that rivals the wonders of any nation. It has a glorious past, in the 11th through 13th centuries boasting a civilization second to none. Not many years ago it was the world's leading rice exporter. Its people are warm, friendly and gentle.

But beneath the surface, as recent events have shown, Burma has been a land where undercurrents of political and economic strife have been seething. The street riots and governmental chaos would appear to be natural developments in a society where repression of individual rights becomes the norm and the arrogance of authority breeds unlimited power

Militant marches decry Burma's 'fascist' rule

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of people filled the streets Wednesday shouting slogans to condemn what they called the "fascist" government and to demand new leaders.

The banner-waving demonstrators jammed Rangoon's main streets in a peaceful but angry rejection of the Burma Socialist Program Party and its 26 years of authoritarian rule.

"Step down fascist BSSP government!" and "Give us an interim government!" shouted students, Buddhist monks, striking government employees and people from many other segments of society.

More militant, threatening slogans were heard for the first time. "You run or we will kill you!" the marchers shouted, stabbing fists into the air. "If they don't fall, make them fall!" they chanted.

Crowd estimates ranged from 100,000 to 1 million.

The demonstrators shouted their rejection of the government's plan to hold elections and declared they would never trust the election supervisory commission the government appointed on Sunday.

But an Asian diplomat in Rangoon, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he saw "no indication at present that the government will accept the demand for an interim government."

After weeks of street protests, President Maung Maung's government announced over the weekend it was ending one-party rule and would hold as early as late October the first multiparty elections since 1960.

But the protests have persisted, and opposition leaders told the five-member election commission Tuesday that any polling organized by the current government would be rejected by the opposition and the people.

Regents merge London study program

By John Bartenhagen
The Daily Iowan

The state Board of Regents Wednesday approved a study-abroad consortium between the state universities of Iowa and Arizona.

The regents' universities in the two states decided to combine existing London Study Abroad Programs in the interest of efficiency. The participating schools are the UI, Iowa State University, the University of Northern Iowa, the University of Arizona, Arizona State University and the University of Northern Arizona.

"We're finding that sometimes we don't have enough students to participate in the program," said Robert Barak, Iowa regents deputy executive secretary. "This compromise will be a benefit to both states."

The agreement provides that each university remains responsible for its own internal processes, but will cooperate with the others in setting an acceptable curriculum, assigning faculty and managing the assigning of credit and assessment of fees. The agreement, which was signed in April by the executive secretary for the Arizona Board of Regents is for three years, running from Aug. 1, 1988 to July 31, 1991.

"The (original) program has provided a good opportunity for students at the regents' universities to obtain an educational experience in London," a regents document states. "However, the number of students wishing to participate from Iowa in any given year can be fairly small."

UNI Vice President and Provost James Martin said the cooperative effort should ensure a higher-quality program.

"We feel this arrangement is more economically efficient and agreeable, particularly in terms of providing the administrative and custodial needs that the students have," Martin said.

The regents also discussed and finally postponed a decision on the hiring of outside consultants to suggest opportunities for increasing cooperation between the three regent university libraries.

A regents' report states that "because of the large investment in books and materials at the regent libraries and the continuing requests by the university libraries for additional funding because of increasing costs and needs, it is perhaps time to bring in some outside consultants to look at the libraries and attempt to identify additional ways in which the universities can cooperate."

Republicans, democrats gear up for homestretch

By Heather Maher
The Daily Iowan

With Nov. 8 less than two months away, the race for the White House is entering the homestretch and the campaigns are heating up all over — and Johnson County is no exception.

Campaign officials at both the Bush-Quayle and Dukakis-Bensten headquarters say they are optimistic about their candidates' chances for victory in Johnson County. But the Dukakis-Bensten ticket seems likely to be the favored choice, according to democrats as well as some republican campaign leaders.

"Registration data for Johnson County indicates that Dukakis will win the popular vote," said Johnson County Republican Executive Director Jeff Abbas.

"The question for us is how close can we make that margin of loss for Bush. With a full-time staff member here, and the strong support of the Young Republicans on campus, we feel we will make it a record low margin that will be offset by wins in the rest of the state," said Abbas.

Dukakis campaign official Mike Tramantina also said Dukakis will have an easy victory in Johnson County, based on his stand on issues that are important to local voters.

"I don't think there's any question by any stretch of the imagination that one of George Bush's worst counties in Iowa is Johnson County," he said. "We have found that among democrats, there's virtually no defection to Bush, and among people registered as a member of neither party, we have a strong base of support."

Tramantina said the reason Johnson County and the Iowa City area have enjoyed a healthy economy and continue to grow in population while the rest of the state declines is the high level of government expenditure here, which Dukakis advocates.

"There is a lot of government payroll from the UI, public housing, public spending on the downtown area, bus systems and public recreation areas that this area has enjoyed," he said.

"Bush believes in exactly the opposite — that public expenditures should be kept at a minimum and it's better to rely on the largeness of the private sector to provide improvements," he added.

Bush-Quayle Public Relations Director Christy Cobb declined to talk specifically about Bush's progress in Johnson County, but did say that, based on activity in the state headquarters and county offices, she thinks the republican ticket is popular with Iowa voters.

"Iowans are enthusiastic about George Bush and are now realizing that George Bush is the best person to represent their position," she said. "Iowans have a tradition of voting for republicans, and we feel we will maintain that position."

Johnson County Republican Chairman Bryan Miller is also confident of Bush's appeal to local voters. He said the vice president's experience in foreign policy and record on the

Twenty teams to take bedrace challenge

The Clinton Street Bedraces are scheduled for 6 p.m. Friday. The races — sponsored by the Interfraternity Council, the Panhellenic Councils and the University Relations Committee of the Chamber of Commerce — will be held on Clinton Street between Iowa and Washington streets.

Twenty teams are scheduled to participate. All costs of the bedraces are being paid for by the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils, and the registrations fees ($20 per team) are being donated to the Chamber of Commerce.

The bedraces are an annual event traditionally held before the first home football game and were created to promote university-community relations.

Volunteer training workshop offered

Iowa City Hospice has scheduled its 12th volunteer training for Thursday evenings, Sept. 22 through Dec. 1.

Hospice trains volunteers in caring for the terminally ill and their families by providing practical care and human support to add to the comfort and quality of life. Volunteer opportunities include patient/family care and office, newsletter and fund-raising help.

There is a $6 training manual fee for the course. To register, call the Hospice office at 351-5665. Any questions can be addressed to office coordinator Ginger Nowak.

Med students raise funds for grade schools

Thanks to the fund-raising efforts of UI College of Medicine students, Iowa grade school science classes will receive educational coloring books about organ transplants.

A golf tournament organized by third-year students last spring raised more than $600 for the UI Organ Donor Awareness Program. Last year, the students raised money to print educational coloring books for young patients undergoing transplant operations. This year's funds will be used to help offset the costs of a statewide educational program the UI is setting up in the elementary schools.

The tournament was sponsored by several Iowa City businesses and some pharmaceutical companies. Plans for the third annual fundraiser are already underway.

Local organizations in need of volunteers

The United Way has announced that several area organizations are looking for volunteers. Among these are:

- Lutheran Social Services, looking for persons 55 or older to participate in a 10-week training course to become a Senior Peer Counselor. Contact Kathy Wallace at 351-4880.
  - Museum of Natural History, looking for guides and sales desk people. Contact the program coordinator at 335-0482.
  - Crisis Center Food Bank Emergency Assistance Program. Call Holly at 351-0128.
  - Senior Center, in need of volunteers to teach an elementary computer class to seniors. Call Lori Benz at 356-5220.
  - International Women's Club. Contact Mila Grady at 354-8162 or Sarah Corson at 354-6055.
  - Sixth Judicial District Department of Correctional Services, looking for caseworkers for alternative sentencing program. Call Boni Strait at 351-5500.
  - Elderly Services. Call Therese at 356-5218.
  - Public Library, looking for volunteers to fill several positions. Contact Carol Spaziani at 356-5200 for information.
- For more information about volunteer opportunities in the area contact Julie Johnston at the United Way's Volunteer Action Center, 338-7823.

UI senators dispute scholarship's target

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

Although the definition of minority recruitment has drawn heated discussion at past meetings, the UI Student Senate continues to support retention and recruitment efforts, senators said Wednesday.

The senate voted to retain the UI Opportunity at Iowa Scholarship and also elected Black Student President James Lee to serve as UI Student Senate Executive Associate at Tuesday's meeting.

New legislation submitted by six of the senators would have eliminated the UI Student Senate Opportunity at Iowa Scholarship and established a new scholarship, one which would not use race, creed, sex or national origin as criteria.

After one and one half hours of debate and a five-minute recess, Student Senator Damon Terrill agreed to strike all of the new legislation with the exception of the sixth line.

Interpreted as a "friendly amendment," the new version was brought to a vote, according to senate records.

UI Student Senate President Melinda Hess then brought the bill to vote as amended. Hearing no clear majority, a hand vote produced 12 favorable and 10 negative votes, according to senate record.

Further, Robert's Rules of Order requires a two-thirds majority to rescind passed legislation.

That meant 16 senators had to support the amendment for the UI Student Senate Opportunity at Iowa Scholarship to be stricken from the senate constitution.

UI Student Secretary Mike Skinner, said though it is sometimes confusing, proper parliamentary procedure was followed when the senate voted to retain the UI Opportunity at Iowa Scholarship.

Terrill could not be reached Wednesday, but Senator Prasanta Reddy said there was no confusion concerning the revised bill's intent — to repeal the scholarship.

Hess and Senator Tom Kakert said they personally felt part of the confusion was politically motivated.

"Unfortunately there's a lot of people who see SAS (Students for An Active Senate) and ASAP (Allied Student Advocacy Party) as an issue in every issue and try to play party politics with every issue," Kakert.

Kakert said he was the only ASAP senator to sponsor the UI Student Senate Opportunity at Iowa scholarship revision.

The revision contained six "Be it enacted" clauses — the sixth reading "Be it (finally) enacted, that upon passage of this legislation, (UI Student Senate Opportunity at Iowa Scholarship) shall be repealed."

Terrill said the scholarship should be distributed to those who have the most need — as determined by money and not skin color.

He said the senate should "make a statement (to the community and student body) that the UI senate gives funds to those who need them, (that selection is) not based on the color of their skin."

Terrill said the senate should abide by its own bylaws which do not recognize age, race, creed or origin as a tantamount guiding principle in the treatment of persons.

Senator Mike Shaffer said he did not take part in the debate because the intent of the original bill was to increase minority enrollment and accessibility.

"Logistically, I don't think that it (the vote) was a misunderstanding," he said. "The misunderstanding came when (Terrill) stated that the first bill passed by the senate was discriminatory."

Shaffer said the revision bill would have been acceptable if there was equal opportunity in society.

"Their bill would be acceptable if we were on any kind of even playing field," he said. "And anyone who says there is, is fooling themselves."

Opening a scholarship to all needy UI students would not be in keeping with UI Opportunity at Iowa guidelines, Shaffer said.

"If you open it to everyone, there's a possibility of not changing the ratio, the numbers will stay the same," he said.

UI Student Senate Opportunity at Iowa Scholarship awards the 10 most needy Black, Asian American, Native American and Latino students a $250 scholarship annually.

Senator Tom Kakert said he sponsored the new bill because a scholarship should be created which benefits all students who have remaining financial need.

Kakert and Reddy are working on legislation to provide more students scholarships, he said.

Iowans rally behind Gilbert victims

DES MOINES (AP) — An Iowa group on Wednesday launched a drive to raise money for its "sister state" of Yucatan being ravaged by Hurricane Gilbert.

"We have a 23-year sister state relationship with Yucatan," said Dick Vohs, a spokesman for Gov. Terry Branstad. "It's been a good relationship. A lot of friendships have been built up over the years."

The storm, by some measures the most powerful in recorded history, drove into the Yucatan Peninsula on Wednesday, battering it with heavy winds and rains.

Iowa officials have established sister state relationships with provinces in several countries, but the first was with Yucatan. Those relationships generally feature cultural and educational exchanges.

Vohs said a panel which oversees the sister state program met in Cedar Rapids on Wednesday and decided to begin raising money to provide emergency assistance to the peninsula, even as the storm was still raging.

"This is obviously something we have just put together," Vohs said. He said the group will solicit tax-deductible contributions, which will be used to purchase food, clothing and other short-term supplies.

"Right now we don't know the extent of the damage, but we anticipate a tremendous need for help especially in the ... villages where people might be completely wiped out — their homes, their farm fields," Vohs said.

In addition, Vohs said, earlier storms have caused extensive damage to fields and sparked big soil erosion and other problems that require longer-term aid.

Iowa City and UI Water Plant officials say they face no problem in providing an adequate water supply, although the amount of water released from the Coralville Reservoir is as low as legally allowed because of this year's drought.

Corps of Engineers for Coralville Lake Ranger Jerry DeMarce said water has been released from the reservoir than pumped into it.

"This is as low as we're authorized to go," DeMarce said.

Currently, water released on the Iowa River has a flow rate of 150 cubic centimeters per second. The average flow rate is 1,600 cubic centimeters per second, according to DeMarce.

According to Kenneth Lloyd, UI water utilities manager, the decreased flow has not affected UI water supply.

"The flow is not having too much impact," Lloyd said. "We have an adequate water supply to meet the needs we have at this plant."

"We've been rather fortunate," he added. "Even though we've had a drought, the impact is nonexistent."

Lloyd speculated this was because water levels at the Burlington Street dam, the dam closest to the plant, have remained nearly stable throughout the summer.

Ed Moreno, Iowa City Water Treatment Plant assistant superintendent, said his plant has not faced any problems due to the decreased flow.

"The flow is important because if it gets too low it's difficult to pull in water," he said. "With the drought and the slow and lowered flows there are, however, other biological effects."

Lloyd said there is more algae in the lowered water near the Coralville Reservoir but added the algae does not pose a health threat.

"It's not a health problem. We are using treatment techniques to help reduce taste and odor problems," Lloyd said.

According to Moreno, the increased amount of algae is normal during the summer months.

"It's kicked up a little bit higher than it usually is, but not unusually high," he said.

He said many wells north of Iowa City dried up during the drought-filled summer.

"It's partly drought-related, but many of the wells weren't drilled deep enough in the first place," said Jeff Joslyn, Latta and Sons Inc. project manager. Latta and Sons is a Riverside, Iowa, company that drills wells in southeast Iowa. "It was mostly due to peak producers demanding a large amount of water in a short period of time."

According to Joslyn, the dry wells are not a long term problem.

"If we just back off on the pumping demand there is plenty of water for everyone," he said. "If more people conserve more water there is enough for everybody."

But some area citizens who get their water from wells are feeling the effect of the drought on their water supplies.

"We've had farm wells drying up, as well as livestock and city wells," Joslyn said.

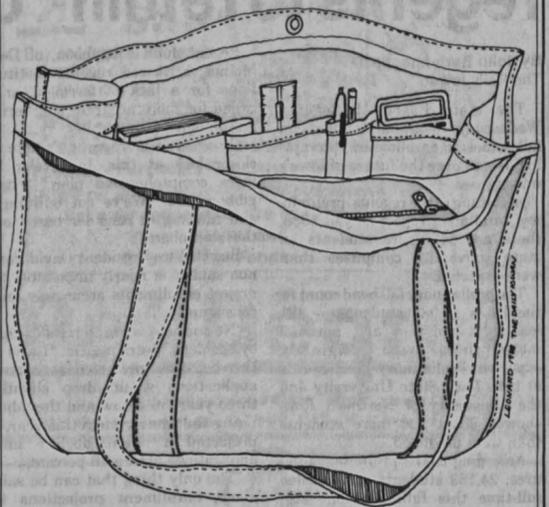

Joslyn said his company has been so busy they've had a hard time keeping up with demands to drill new wells or to dig deeper existing wells.

"I'd say business has picked up around 50 percent," he said.

According to Joslyn, wells which rely on annual precipitation to maintain water levels are most affected by low water flows due to the drought.

"Because of the low water levels, aquifers (wells drilled into a rock or sand formation) are not getting their annual recharge," Joslyn said.

Former DI editor created 'red phone'

By Matt Devine
The Daily Iowan

When the United States and Soviet Union stood toe-to-toe on the brink of nuclear war during the heat of the Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962, a pesky former Daily Iowan editor piped up with a simple suggestion: phone first.

"Must a world be lost for want of a telephone call?" said Jess Gorkin.

Gorkin, who edited The Daily Iowan in 1936, conceived the hot line in 1959 during a phone conversation with a friend. His brain child evolved into the first bilateral nuclear arms agreement, establishing a direct line of communication between Moscow and Washington, D.C.

Fabled as a red telephone on the president's desk, the hot line is actually a more practical link-up of satellite-directed computers, printers and facsimile machines located in the Pentagon, with an extension leading to the White House.

The hot line quietly celebrated its 25th anniversary Aug. 31, meriting a brief release from the White House and grateful sighs it has never been used for what it was designed for.

Gorkin, then editor of Parade magazine, mined public support for his idea through published appeals to President Dwight Eisenhower and Premier Nikita Khrushchev to establish an emergency communication link between the two superpowers.

"Why aren't the president and premier able to pick up the phone to stave off disaster?" wrote Gorkin.

After broaching the suggestion to high-ranking government officials, Gorkin was convinced of the hot line's feasibility. And in 1960 he cajoled presidential candidates Richard Nixon and John F. Kennedy to respond publicly to his idea in Parade.

Still, hammering a goodwill idea into the form of a concrete bilateral nuclear agreement against the stark backdrop of Cold War hostilities would be troublesome.

But Gorkin was irrepresible. "One of the fellows in the office said to me, 'Who the hell do you think you are that you can make these people move?' And I said, 'Look, it isn't a question of who I am. We've got a good idea by the tail and I'm not going to let go.'"

In the fall of 1960 Khrushchev visited the United States and the resourceful Gorkin popped up in a receiving line for the premier.

"I grabbed (Khrushchev's) hand and started pumping it," Gorkin said. "And asked him the question. He immediately replied, 'I am in favor of a direct telephone line between the Kremlin and the White House to prevent accidental war. It is an excellent idea!'"

Pollster's wife dies

Ophelia Miller Gallup, wife of the founder of The Gallup Poll, died Monday, Sept. 5, at her home in Skillman.

Gallup was married to the late George H. Gallup on Dec. 27, 1925, in Washington, Iowa. At the time of their marriage, George H. Gallup was a professor of journalism at the UI. In 1935 he founded The Gallup Poll, which today has affiliated organizations in 48 nations.

Gallup was a graduate of the UI class of 1920. She taught French at both the UI and Iowa State University.

In 1926, she assisted her husband in the founding of Quill and Scroll, an International Honorary Society for high-school journalists which has grown to 12,000 chapters in 40 countries.

Cacti thrive in Iowan 'desert'

CLEAR LAKE, Iowa (AP) — Most gardeners in Iowa watched their crops shrivel and die this summer, baked by the sun and parched by lack of rain. But not Andres DeLaCruz.

DeLaCruz says the more than 500 cactus plants in his garden plot have needed water only twice in five months, enjoying the dry, hot conditions while neighbors' tomatoes and cucumbers dried up.

The gardener attributes his success with the cactus plants to his feeling that each has a different personality.

"Some need to grow near flowers and others prefer hot peppers, depending upon their personalities," said DeLaCruz. "I just want them to be happy."

After a 1985 visit to his former home in Texas, DeLaCruz returned to Clear Lake with a cactus to start his own garden. After three year's cultivation — and 475 cacti — DeLaCruz's garden is filled with his three favorite varieties: Elephant Ear cactus, Garden Variety cactus and Maquell, best known for its flavoring in the liquor Tequila.

DeLaCruz said cactus has been a delicacy in Mexico for hundreds of years and is used in many Mexican dishes. Its flavor is similar to green beans, he said.

Violating principles

President Ronald Reagan has again succeeded in bullying the Senate into retreating on an important legislative move so that he can more effectively lobby for increased military spending. By threatening to veto a $140.4-billion welfare bill so he can hold the bill "hostage" for later military concessions, Reagan is showing, once again, his callous disinterest in the lower classes' standard of living.

With his intimidation by means of a presidential veto, Reagan has killed a measure which would have allowed the federal government to pay for those women's abortions whose pregnancies resulted from rape or incestuous intercourse. Currently, Medicaid will only help foot the cost of abortions whose purpose is to save the life of the mother. This is not enough.

Apparently, this is the only scenario in which President Reagan feels the federal government has any obligation to its citizens who seek an abortion. But while those women who do need an abortion in order to prevent their own death are certainly entitled to one, so, too, are many other women in various predicaments.

A flagrant example, one obviously ignored by Reagan's tough stance, is that of a woman who is raped by a stranger or her father or even her brother, and is then refused by the government the right to a safe and legal abortion. If this person is of lower socio-economic standing (as are many in this situation) where will they turn? The options are not pretty.

Those who have been raped by family members and/or those who have been sexually assaulted by strangers will not have the option to a safe and legal abortion in the near future thanks to the president. In essence, Reagan has made possible the situation in which a woman will be violated twice — once by her assailant and once by her government.

Stem the tide

This week the world has seen Pope John Paul II reaching out to the people of southern Africa, pleading for peace, expounding a message of hope. Earlier this year, the pontiff carried a similar message to South America where he held "poor peoples' Masses" and called on repressive governments to respect human rights. By these and other acts, this pope has earned a reputation of a man committed to the world's underprivileged people.

Yet the sight of John Paul addressing the burgeoning crowds in various Third World settings is a truly striking paradox. He is a man capable of influencing millions. He is also an outspoken advocate of the poor. However, he ignores the most pressing problem confronting those in the developing world — the population explosion. By flatly refusing to consider the desperate need for birth control, the pope bypasses the essential issue.

Today, the world's stability is seriously threatened by unrestrained population growth. The planet's population now exceeds five billion, and 89 million people are being added each year. This means the total worldwide population will double by the 21st century. Furthermore, 90 percent of this growth is taking place in areas where it can be least tolerated — in underdeveloped nations. The U.S. Public Concern Foundation sums up the situation: "The effects ... are hunger, poverty, resource depletion, urban deterioration and economic stagnation."

There are steps that can be taken to control this growth. Some of them are family planning education (including birth control) and incentives to limit family size. These steps must be undertaken with determination and with the support of government, business and religious leaders. Surely, John Paul and other leaders see that speaking out for the poor is admirable, but helping the poor improve their condition is their true mission.

Wiener department

The adventure is gone. No more guessing about what you're really eating when you bite into that hot dog or slice of bologna. Now you can feel confident that your worst fears have been confirmed — you're eating bits and shards of every nasty thing that meat producers can think of to add to them.

The idea of meat processors leaving ground bones and other meat remnants in hot dogs and bologna is gross, but the U.S. Department of Agriculture's recent proposal to allow it is even worse.

In the first place, calling bone fragments and other carcass remnants "mechanically separated meat" implies that this stuff is similar to something we like to eat, like meat. Presumably, the "meat" is "mechanically separated" because humans cannot separate meat as close to the bone as a machine can.

In fact, part of what is removed from the carcass in this process is probably meat, however it is obvious that big business is trying to make a profit from this procedure by peeling those few extra ounces of bone and nose cartilage from each carcass. Even more disgusting is the fact that this "mechanically separated meat" can constitute up to 10 percent of the product.

If the Department of Agriculture is going to allow meat producers to put in these previously unusable parts to boost profits, they should at least require them to list what these parts are. The USDA should redirect its efforts toward ensuring that high-quality products are available for human consumption, instead of aiding these meat producers in their self-serving abuse of their patrons.

The effects of Republican rule

What happened to trickle-down economics? The nation's economy has been on the rebound for almost six years now. But according to new census figures, its benefits seemed to have dried up before trickling down to those who need help the most.

Employment is up and inflation is down, but the economic tide has risen without lifting all boats. The "underclass" and the "working poor" and their pain have continued to such a dismaying degree that the question no longer should be whether the poor need government help, but what form they should take.

The new job growth benefited married couples more than single parents and whites more than blacks or Hispanics, which should not surprise anyone greatly. Married couples are less likely to be entangled with child-care considerations and whites are more likely to live where the new jobs are located and to become, in the words of the University of Chicago's William Julius Wilson, employed "marriageable men."

As a result, the number of whites living in poverty decreased slightly in 1987. But despite some of the tremendous economic gains made by some blacks, the U.S. Census Bureau reported that the number of blacks living below the government's poverty level (now defined as $11,600 for a family of four) increased from 9 million to 9.7 million, and the overall black poverty rate increased from 31.1 percent to 33.1 percent. Similarly, Hispanics in poverty increased by 350,000 to 5.5 million, although their overall poverty rate stayed the same at about 28.2 percent. The median income for black married couples was $27,180 in 1987; it was $35,300 for whites and $24,680 for Hispanics. But among households headed by a woman with no husband present, the median incomes were $9,700 for blacks, $17,200 for whites and $9,810 for Hispanics.

Job growth is not enough to relieve this disparity. Unemployment dropped in 1987 to 6.2 percent from seven percent without making much of a dent in the poverty rate. More people are working, but many of the new jobs apparently don't pay enough in wages or benefits to keep a family out of poverty.

The big question: How do we break the chains of economic dependence that encourage the poor not to work even in times of economic boom?

Clarence Page

Harvard professor David T. Ellwood suggests in his new book, "Poverty in the American Family," that we have the means to solve our fingertips.

Unlike the drastic structural changes suggested by other important poverty policy books, like Charles Murray's "Losing Ground," which favors the dismantling of government welfare systems, or Wilson's "The Truly Disadvantaged," which advocates expanded social services targeted toward the new underclass, Ellwood's middle-of-the-road approach calls for a new set of social policies that cross ideological lines by responding to the causes of poverty in the framework of our shared social values.

Among his suggestions Ellwood advises us to "make work pay so that working families are not poor," by expanding an existing, if underused, reform: the earned income tax credit, which gives low-income earners a tax break for each dollar they are paid.

Currently, it is paid back as a tax refund limited to a level that roughly offsets what a worker pays into Social Security. But Ellwood points out that there is no reason it could not be expanded so its benefits would be spread out and returned with each paycheck. For low-wage earners, it would seem like a pay raise, an incentive to work, not to loaf, which is the exact opposite of welfare and without the administrative and targeting problems.

Ellwood would transform our welfare system into a purely transitional system to help people to get the financial, educational and social support they need to get back on their feet in times of economic hardship. Those who exhaust their transitional support would be provided with minimum-wage jobs.

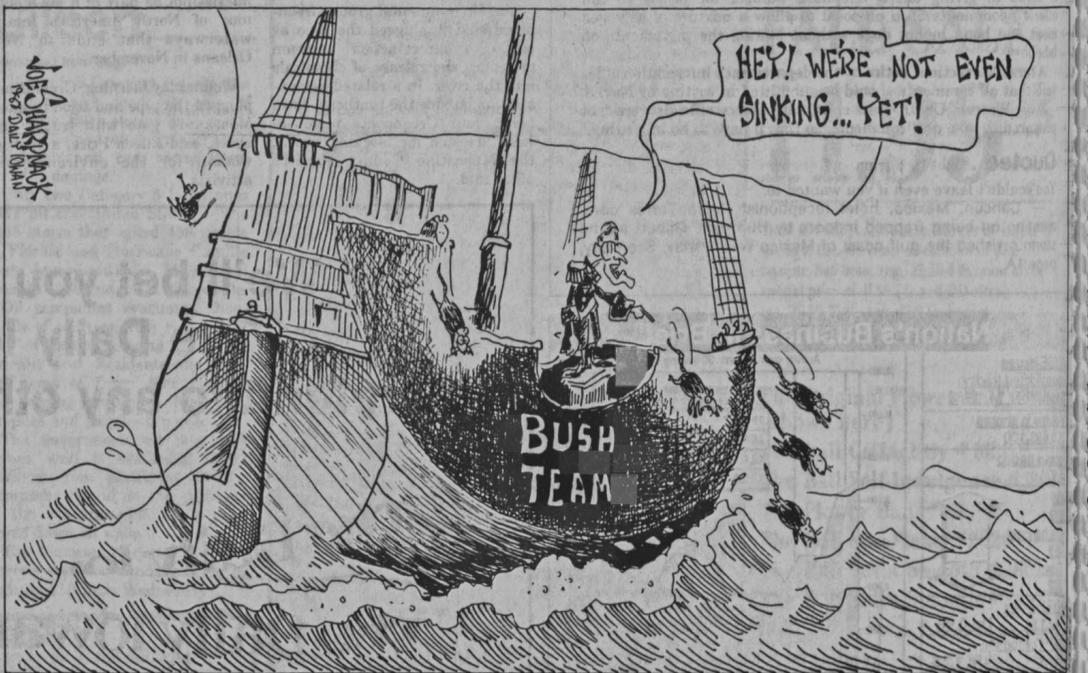

To help single parents, absent parents (usually fathers) would be identified and taxed for child support, and the government would ensure that each month the child received some minimal level of support if the collections from the absent parent fell short.

And everyone would have some form of medical protection, even if it was offered by the government as a last resort with premiums collected through taxes and varied according to income levels.

Of course, other steps also can ease the burdens that drag families down into the quicksand of lifelong poverty. The federal Jobs Corps has proved its value over the last two decades and should be expanded. So should early childhood education and educationally enriched day-care programs to help save the next generation of young brains.

Sure, these programs cost money. But in the long run, they make us more productive. Instead of waiting for economic benefits to trickle down, we can send benefits bubbling up — and that benefits all of us.

Area people are too damn nice

Mike Lankford

I think the argument can be made that Iowa City is too friendly. Folks moving into town are always impressed with how nice people are here, but that's only at first. Give them a few weeks of unrelenting friendliness and see what they think. The human body can only endure so much kindness before it naturally rebels and seeks a more natural environment.

Take my own situation, for example. Walking out the front door has become a source of bother for me because I have a neighbor across the street who sits on his porch and ambushes me with "Hello!" and "Nice weather! Don't you think?" So now I feel that he's laying for me all the time; keeping one eye peeled on my door because he's an outgoing, hearty sort who wants me on his front porch. Seems to me there ought to be some kind of job program for the retired elderly. Give them something to do.

I'll give you another example. The license plates on my car aren't entirely Iowa plates. I moved away from Iowa for a year and registered my car in Tennessee. Tennessee requires only the back license plate. No front plate. Only I couldn't get the front plate off because the bolts had rusted and would take a cutting torch to break loose. So I did the only reasonable thing and bent the front plate up so that it could not be read. That leaves me with a front plate that is bent up and unreadable and a back plate that is a lawful Tennessee license plate. No one bothered my front plate the whole time I was in Tennessee. As soon as I moved back to Iowa City I had to devote half my time to bending back my front plate because every good hearted soul in town who sees it bends it down. Iowans just can't leave something alone if they think they can help.

I can give multiple examples of the insistent and unrelenting friendliness of this place. Try waiting at the curb for traffic to clear so you can walk across the street. In most places traffic goes by until there is no more of it or there is a break and then you walk across. Not in Iowa City. In Iowa City people stop and make you walk in front of them. This takes about three times as long as the usual way. You're standing on the curb waiting for a car to go by, and what do they do? They slow down and then stop and you're wondering why in the world they are slowing down while you're waiting for them to go by. Then to cap it off, they smile at you like they're doing you a favor. If they'd just kept going, you and them both would be better off.

And if you're driving in the car behind someone who is hell bent on being friendly, you're constantly wondering why they're stopping for every slow person in town to walk in front of them.

In Iowa City you can't even sit on a park bench and have a natural gloomy thought by yourself without someone sooner or later wanting to know what's the matter. Like you really want to talk to this stranger about your personal problems.

Heaven help you if your car breaks down around here. I created a virtual traffic jam once when I ran out of gas and pulled off the road. Anywhere else I would have just dealt with the problem and been done with it. But not in Iowa City. No, I spent the first 15 minutes informing every passing car that I was just fine and had only run out of gas and was going to walk over to that station 100 yards away and get some more. It's like people are constitutionally unable to leave you alone if they think they can do their Christian duty in some way.

Iowa City is the kind of place that if you threw a paper cup out the window of your car, any person who saw it would stop and pick it up and then drive five miles to catch you and say, "You lost this." And then expect you to thank them for their trouble. I mean, enough is enough. Haven't they ever heard of litter?

If you're new in town I'll warn you ahead of time, don't ask for directions. Getting directions around here means you'll end up with someone walking with you or riding in your front seat to show you exactly where the place is. And then they won't leave you until you have found a parking place and plugged the meter and thanked them three or four times for their trouble.

It's enough to make a person look back fondly on their reform school days.

and corruption. Symbolic of what has happened in Burma is the way U Thant, arguably the nation's most famous citizen, is remembered. The body of the former Secretary-General of the United Nations (1962-71), lies in an unkempt grave shunned by his countrymen, ignored by the rest of the world. U Thant's political foe, General Ne Win, did not want competition from U Thant, even in death, and sought to place the body in a paper-like grave. Students protested. He broke out. Authorities finally agreed to a suitable resting place, but officially U Thant has been considered persona non grata. A little more than a year ago I had the chance to visit Burma. I went for Rangoon: Flight No. 222, departing at 6:05 p.m., via Burma Airways. The time difference between Rangoon and Bangkok is 30 minutes, Burma being a half-hour behind. But in real time the clock should be turned back at least 25 years. For Burma, time seems to have stood still. The country with a population of 37 million has been in isolation since the military took control in 1962. Yet, oddly, because of this time warp, visitors to Burma experience an unusual treat. They find a country largely unaffected by modernity, a place where people seem to be happy-go-lucky and where inefficiency leavens bureaucracy. The nation, a socialist republic

Burma, it turns out, is really not for tourists, but for travelers... First, you didn't know if you were going to be able to get into the country. Once you were there, it didn't seem possible to get around. And when your visa expired — the government permits only seven-day visits — you didn't know if you were going to be able to get out.

as a tourist, identifying myself as an educator (then teaching in China). The visit still evokes images of vast natural beauty, an unspoiled land. Kipling's famous lines leaped to mind: "On the road to Mandalay, Where the flyin' fishes play, 'An, the dawn comes up like thunder outer China 'cross the bay!" We never got to Mandalay. And we didn't see any flying fish. But we — my wife and an American computer expert whom we met in Rangoon — found Burma to be as fascinating and challenging a place as anyone would want to visit. First, you didn't know if you were going to be able to get into the country. Once you were there, it didn't seem possible to get around. And when your visa expired — the government permits only seven-day visits — you didn't know if you were going to be able to get out.

Burma, it turns out, is really not for tourists, but for travelers. Early it was apparent to us that Burma was a nation that was not working very well. Comic relief made the bureaucracy bearable. We entered from Bangkok. A travel agent there told us we should first book a flight to Burma. Then apply for a visa at the Burmese Embassy. But you cannot get a ticket to Burma without a visa. And you cannot get a visa without a ticket. "Let me give you a note," smiled the savvy Thai travel agent. "It says you are being booked on a flight to Burma. Sometimes that works."

On a Friday morning we called on the Burmese Embassy, a beehive of activity. A clerk collected our note and passports and 60 batt per visa (about $2.40 U.S.) and said to come back Monday afternoon. Monday afternoon arrived, suddenly we had visas but no air tickets. Tuesday, the travel agent told us to be ready to leave the next day nearly the size of Texas, gained independence in 1948 after more than a century of British colonialism and widespread devastation from World War II. It is listed among the 10 poorest nations in the world today. Besides its own internal strife, the nation is plagued by insurgents along its borders (which include India, China, Laos, Thailand and Bangladesh).

The economy is a shambles. The only part of the economy thriving is the black market. The official rate for $1 U.S. is 5.7 kyat (pronounced "chat"). On the streets or in taxis you get up to 35 kyats per $1 U.S.

When you enter Burma, in fact, guidebooks and visitors tell you to take along two items: a bottle of Johnny Walker and a carton of Western cigarettes ("555s" are most popular). You can sell these products almost before you leave the plane at a price that will just about finance your seven-day stay. Visitors do get forms to record all financial transactions, but the bureaucratic cracks are wide and many.

With a population of 2.5 million, Rangoon is a city of disrepair bordering on despair. Downtown is a museum of fading Victorian and Edwardian buildings. Roads are a washboard of ruts. Broken sidewalks and curbs signal neglect. Most of the cars and trucks and buses seem to be part of a movie set depicting scenes set in the 1950s and 1960s.

Amidst all this are a few dazzling pagodas, notably Shwedagon, whose glistening golden dome atop a hill dominates the city and underscores the importance of religion in the lives of the Burmese. More than 90 percent are Buddhist.

We stayed at the Strand. Once the fanciest hotel in Asia, the Strand epitomizes the Empire (That's "The" as in "The British Empire.")

In Burma, nearly everyone, male and female, smokes cheroots. Here a young Burmese girl is shown making the cigars by hand.

Ken Wanderman

The Strand reeks and creaks with a grandeur long gone. Waiters are elegant in white jackets and gloves. A dozen whirring fans in a high-ceilinged room trimmed in pale pink and green provide the perfect setting for a proper British meal, replete with Yorkshire pudding. Never mind the mouse darting across the luggage room. Or the dead rat picked up with a stick one morning and removed from the front of the hotel.

In Rangoon some quaint public customs prevail. They make you think about the cultural toll modernization exacts. Along the city's streets ropes hang from lampposts. A person bends over, presses a glowing end of the rope against a cheroot clamped between the teeth and, presto — a light. Also around town are urns with a cup. Thirsty? Cut the dust with a shot of water. Westerners advisedly stick to beer or bottled water when they can get it.

From Rangoon usual sidetrips include Mandalay, 430 miles north, and Pagan (Pah-GUN), some 370 miles northwest. With the time constraint, we opted to visit one of the places. Kipling pointed to Mandalay. Our sources told us Pagan was the place to go. That's where we went. There were no regrets, even though we couldn't get into the only real hotel in town — the Thiripyitsaya — and had to settle for a guest house where our single room cost $4 U.S. a night. No extra charge for the mosquito netting. Pagan is straight out of a fairy tale. In comparison, Disneyland looks pale.

A once-great civilization virtually unknown among Westerners sprang up here between the 11th and 13th centuries. In 1287 the Mongol hoards of Kublai Khan sacked the then-royal capital. The city never recovered. Most Burmese speak some English. Both men and women wear wrap-around sarongs. People are disarmingly honest. In Pagan I went to the Tourist Burma office to buy some post cards I had glanced at earlier. The display was not to be seen. "The man in charge of the post cards is gone," I was told. "He locked the drawer. He took the key with him." It was 10 a.m. on a Monday. I looked at my watch and asked, "What time will he be back?" "Wednesday," shrugged the clerk. The irony of Burma is that while it exists in a subsistence and barter economy, the nation has some of the most promising natural resources in southeast Asia. They include oil, natural gas, coal, iron, copper, lead, zinc, silver, tin, antimony, tungsten and precious stones — all waiting to be fully assessed and tapped. Meanwhile, led by students, people are shouting to replace pent-up frustrations and are not being recognized. As political factions grapple for control, the hope has to be that finally the Burmese people's pleas — as "the dawn comes up like thunder outer China 'cross the bay!" — will be heard.

Chronology of events in Burma

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Here is a chronology of events leading to Sunday's decision by Burma's Parliament to approve multiparty elections:

- March — Hundreds of students and others riot in Rangoon campuses and streets, and reliable sources say as many as 100 are killed by security units.
- June — Hundreds stage demonstrations and battle riot police in Rangoon and other cities. The government closes virtually all institutions of higher learning in the country. The government says nine people are killed, but Western diplomats say the figure is higher.
- July 23 — Ne Win, who ruled the isolated Southeast Asian country since a 1962 coup, resigns as chairman of the ruling Burma Socialist Program Party. He cites the anti-government riots and announces a referendum on one-party rule.
- July 26 — Sein Lwin, who reportedly led forces that suppressed anti-government riots in March, is named chairman of the party.
- July 27 — Sein Lwin is named president.
- July 30 — Authorities detain several people including the most prominent government critic, Gen. Aung Gyi. Also detained is Sein Win, correspondent for The Associated Press.
- Aug. 3 — Burma declares martial law in the capital, Rangoon, after thousands of students protest alleged repression by Sein Lwin.
- Aug. 8 — Eight people are killed as tens of thousands march in Rangoon and 14 other cities.
- Aug. 10 — The radio says 66 people are killed, 160 wounded and 1,500 arrested in Rangoon street battles during the last two days. The U.S. Embassy is closed.
- Aug. 11 — The radio reports another 15 killed in anti-government riots in Rangoon, bringing the official death toll to about 95. Other sources say hundreds have died in rioting. The military commander, Sau Maung, delivers a radio address warning of anarchy. A guerrilla leader calls for a nationwide revolt.
- Aug. 12 — Sein Lwin resigns as president and party chairman.
- Aug. 19 — Maung Maung is named Burma's first civilian leader in 26 years, but student leaders demanding an end to one-party rule call for a nationwide strike.
- Aug. 24 — Maung Maung lifts martial law and curfews in Rangoon and other cities and announces a Sept. 12 congress of the ruling party to consider a referendum on multiparty elections.

On reiterated demands for the immediate formation of an interim government to conduct the election.

The opposition leaders said elections could not be held under the government's plan because security has deteriorated and people do not trust the government-appointed commission.

They said only under an interim government will normal economic activities resume and widespread strikes that have paralyzed the country end.

The election commission, headed by Ba Htay, a financial commissioner under a pre-1962 civilian government, appeared convinced by these arguments, Aung Gyi said.

Student leaders met the opposition figures later Tuesday and urged them to form an interim government. The opposition leaders said this was not possible without cooperation from the current government.

A Western diplomat in Rangoon said Wednesday's demonstrators, accompanied by marching bands, included about 100 uniformed policemen, pilots and flight attendants whose pro-democracy strikes have grounded all commercial flights.

He said several thousand demonstrators made loud, strident speeches in front of the U.S. Embassy, a favorite rallying place.

About 75 people, including two Buddhist monks, continued a 48-hour hunger strike outside City Hall to demand a transition government. The group, which began the fast Tuesday morning, chose the site because security forces fatally shot several anti-government demonstrators there Aug. 8.

Smaller groups of protesters were on hunger strikes elsewhere in the city, reviving a tactic nationalists used decades ago in the struggle against British colonial rule.

Demonstrations and pro-democracy strikes continued in major towns including Mandalay, Taunggyi, Moulmein and Bassein, but details were not immediately available.

PLO 'peace' spurned

JERUSALEM (AP)—Israeli leaders on Wednesday spurned the latest overture by Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasir Arafat, who used the Hebrew greeting "Shana Tova" to wish Israelis a happy new year on the Jewish holiday.

Yasir Arafat

In the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, troops shot and wounded 17 Palestinians, hospital officials said. The army confirmed seven casualties among demonstrators.

Masked assailants in the West Bank city of Nablus stabbed to death an Arab suspected of collaborating with Israel.

Arafat, chairman of the PLO, used the Hebrew greeting — the equivalent of Happy New Year — at a news conference in Strasbourg, France, on Wednesday, a day after he addressed Socialist members of the European Parliament.

In his speech, Arafat said the PLO was working toward the establishment of a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and accepted all U.N. resolutions, including 242 and 338 which recognize Israel's right to exist.

Reaction by top Israelis was icy. "It is a new year's blessing calling for the destruction of the state of Israel," said Moshe Arens, head of the right-wing Likud bloc's campaign for the Nov. 1 general elections.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin of the left-of-center Labor Party told supporters at a campaign rally in Jerusalem that "the PLO is not a partner for talks."

"Seven weeks have gone by since King Hussein" of Jordan announced he was cutting his links with the West Bank and handing over responsibility to the PLO, said Rabin. "The PLO is incapable of taking up the challenge, even in words."

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, Labor's leader, criticized European Parliament legislators for receiving Arafat.

"All of sudden, they started one more time to fall in love with the PLO," Peres told Israel radio from London, where he met on Wednesday with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Palestinian leaders appeared split over Arafat's statements.

Hathem Abu Ghazale, a prominent PLO supporter in the West Bank, said, "Arafat's visit is a Palestinian breakthrough in the countries where the Zionist movement was born and later developed."

PLO hard-liners and Moslem fundamentalist groups oppose a unilateral declaration of a Palestinian government-in-exile because it would imply recognition of Israel.

Israeli peace activist Abie Nathan, who defied Israeli law to meet Arafat in Tunis this week, told Israel Television from Strasbourg the PLO was ready to negotiate peace with Israel.

"I believe that today ... we are closer to peace than ever before," Nathan said.

Olympic torch runners fire bombed

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Radical students hurled fire bombs Wednesday at runners carrying the Olympic torch, and police said 16 troopers fighting to disperse the protesters were injured.

Students at Kyungwon University on the southern outskirts of Seoul threw about 50 fire bombs at the Olympic torch procession. Some of the bombs exploded about 30 feet from the runner carrying the Olympic torch, witnesses said.

None of the runners or other escorts of the Olympic flame were hit and the procession continued past the school, which is in a semirural area, said the witnesses, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Radical students staged peaceful anti-Olympic protests Wednesday at several colleges in Seoul. Protesters burned effigies of figures draped with the U.S. flag or anti-American slogans and shouted,

"Yankee go home!"

"Get out American imperialists," said a slogan on an effigy at Korea University.

About 200 students took part in the "Stop the Olympic Torch Rally" at Kyungwon University and faculty tried unsuccessfully to stop the protest.

"Oppose dictatorial Olympics!" students yelled. The students are demanding the Olympics be shared with communist North Korea to promote reunification of the Korean peninsula. They also contend the Games are promoting authoritarian rule.

Riot police moved in to block the main gate of the university to stop the students from marching into the street. But the students crowded near a school wall and hurled fire bombs at the torch procession, witnesses said.

Shooting kills 4 in S. Africa

MASERU, Lesotho (AP) — South African police Wednesday night attacked hijackers holding a busload of pilgrims going to see Pope John Paul II and said three hijackers and a young woman hostage were killed in the shoot-out.

Eleven passengers were wounded and a fourth hijacker was arrested, South African police headquarters said.

Lesotho government officials said 71 hostages were in the bus.

The military government of Lesotho, a black kingdom that lies inside South Africa's borders, requested South African help in handling the hijacking.

There was no immediate government statement on the shoot-out.

Police said the shoot-out took place when the hijackers tried to drive the bus through the closed gates of the British High Commission, or embassy, in Maseru.

Reporters were barred from the area at the time of the shoot-out, but later they saw the bus, its windows shot out, lying wrecked in the high commission courtyard just inside the gate.

South African police said officers returned fire after the hijackers began shooting.

Police said the hostage casualties were "apparently caused by the wild firing of the hijackers." They said no policemen were injured.

The shooting broke out about 20 minutes after the pope arrived in Maseru, eight hours behind schedule. The hijackers earlier demanded to meet with the pope and Lesotho's king, Moshoeshoe II, a government official said.

Hawkeyes beat Flames for seventh win

By Anne Upson
The Daily Iowan

Volleyball

The Iowa volleyball team swiftly landed its seventh win of the season against Illinois-Chicago in Carver-Hawkeye Arena Wednesday night 15-12, 15-12, 15-6.

The victory over the Flames marks the second time this season the Hawkeyes have won in three straight games. However, Iowa Coach Sandy Stewart said parts of Iowa's game could use improvement.

"Our offense was just not clicking," Stewart said. "It is a combination of the hitters and setters not communicating. Janet (Moylan) did not take charge with the quick attack. We did a better job in the third game with our quick attack. It had a smoother flow."

Illinois-Chicago Coach Don August said he thought the Hawkeyes just played better than his team.

"They played pretty good coming out in the middle with their offense," August said. "I thought Janet set a lot of good sets tonight. I thought we played flat. I'm not sure why, but we played very flat."

"It prevented it from being a lot closer match than it could have been. We lost the intensity we could have had."

Iowa co-captain Kari Hamel said the Hawkeyes are anxious to begin the Big Ten season.

"We need Big Ten competition," Hamel said. "It's hard to come in and play real intense. They played well for what they have. They played really well."

Hamel said she was pleased that Iowa won in straight games but said she wished they could have been better quality contests.

"We will play better," Hamel said. "Although it was three games, we need a quick three, not a drawn-out three. And that is what it was."

Stewart said she has been working on the offense in practice, but it needs more attention.

"We are working on it," Stewart said. "We are drilling on it over and over again. The tempo and rhythm are not here with the offense. We have got to get it there. We were a little flat, but I think that it's our offense. It's really struggling."

Stewart said fatigue played a role in the match.

"They (Illinois-Chicago) are as scrappy as usual," Stewart said. "They are probably down because they have had a lot of road trips. They beat Iowa State and they beat Drake."

Matthew Zlatnik NFL has symbolic drug policy

Two players were suspended Tuesday by the National Football League for failing their illegal substance tests. They'll be out 30 days. This brings to 19 the number of players who have been banned for flunking preseason drug tests.

Leaders of America have decided that drug use is bad for people and should not be tolerated. To stay with the times, the NFL has a drug policy. A weak policy, because it doesn't give players a chance. The NFL is just paying lip service to the drug problem.

Some of these players have been suspended before. Los Angeles Rams running back Charles White, banned about two weeks ago, was booted for drug use a couple of years ago. New England Patriots running back Tony Collins was suspended earlier this summer for a year because he violated the league's policy for a third time.

In the best-known relapse, New York Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor was suspended for drug use before the Giants' Super Bowl season and again about two weeks ago.

These relapses shouldn't be a surprise. An addict is an addict and a 30-day suspension will not make it otherwise.

The point of the NFL's policy is to give players time to complete a rehabilitation program. A suspended player is not reinstated until he shows rehabilitation has done some good.

The point of a rehabilitation program is to show the addict that he is killing himself. The idea is to lay the facts out for the addict and let him make the decision about changing his life. Treatment is not a matter of pumping the addict full of medicine or hypnotizing him or telling him not to indulge in his favorite party aid.

The addict must decide to give up drinking and drugs, and treatment is to help him make the decision work.

Treatment is a full-time thing. An addict is either using or recovering, but never a "former addict." If the patterns of his life don't change, if he spends his time with the same people, stays in the same environment and does the same things for fun, treatment will have no effect — eventually the addict will relapse. Without fundamental changes in lifestyle, treatment is a waste of time and money.

The NFL cannot expect a 30-day suspension for treatment to be effective. When the player returns, he still has a high-pressure job with little security. He still has piles of cash and a lot of free time. He still spends a lot of time with the same people, simply because one spends a lot of time with fellow workers.

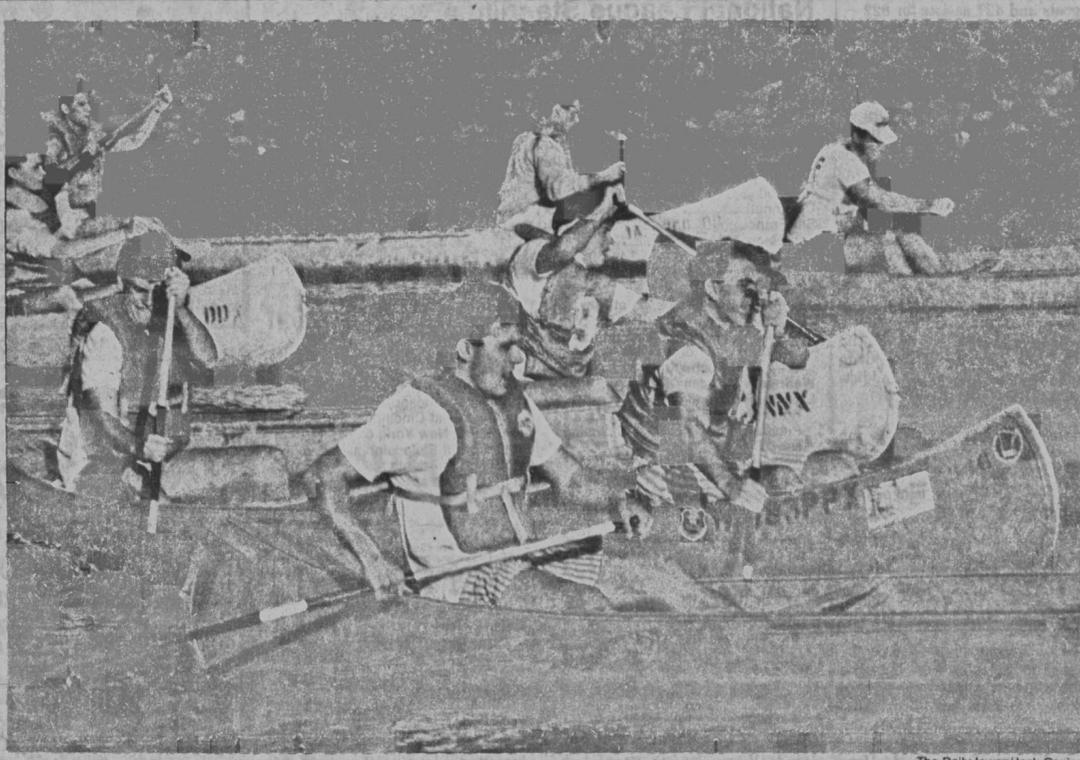

I've known two people who have gone through substance abuse treatment. One relapsed after 10 months. His life didn't change. For a while it did — he spent more time with his family and tried to act differently. But he didn't change his friends, who were users, and eventually gave in.

The other addict I knew changed his life. He left school and began working full time. He changed his friends, and that may be a key factor in his recovery.

Remember, the NFL is a business. If L.T. is on the edge and on the field, all is well, economically speaking. If he's off in rehab, the league suffers because its players aren't in action. To survive in the entertainment industry you must have an entertaining product.

The NFL succeeds because it features the best football players. If some of them have substance abuse problems, a quick solution is best for the league, because it keeps the entertainment value (and thus the income) of the NFL from falling too far. Lawrence Taylor, Charles White, Tony Col-

Michigan, Miami will meet in weekend Top 20 clash

(AP) — Do you know what happened on Sept. 8, 1984?

Even George Bush knows — now — that date had nothing to do with Pearl Harbor.

Clue: Top-ranked Miami visits No. 15 Michigan on Saturday and Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler provides the following hint — "The thing that will hopefully help us is we're playing on our turf."

Answer: On Sept. 8, 1984, Miami suffered its only road loss — 22-14 to Michigan — under Coach Jimmy Johnson. Not counting bowls, Johnson and the Hurricanes have since won 19 straight on the road. Miami also has winning streaks of 13 in a row overall and 33 straight regular-season games.

"I'm not so sure that they're not better than last year's national championship team," says Schembechler, whose only 0-2 start in his 26-year coaching career was at Miami of Ohio in 1965. Michigan hasn't been 0-2 since 1959.

Miami is a 7-point favorite. The pick is . . . Miami 24-14.

Last week's record was 34-19 — 642; for the season, 68-27 — 718. Against the point spread, last week's mark was only 11-19 — 367; for the year, 22-25 — 468.

Kentucky program's problems increase

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — With a new basketball season beginning in a month, the University of Kentucky hasn't seen an end to the last one.

There haven't been the sounds of bouncing balls, referee's whistles or cheerleaders' chants, but the stakes are just as high as any of the games played by the school's five national championship teams.

Ten days after Danny Manning led the Kansas Jayhawks to the NCAA title April 4, the Los Angeles Daily News reported in a copyright article that a Kentucky assistant coach allegedly sent $1,000 in cash to a prized recruit's father.

Since then, the beleaguered basketball program has faced:

— A letter of inquiry from the NCAA regarding the money and the prospects of 10 additional allegations of wrongdoing.

— The departure of talented guard Rex Chapman to the NBA, giving up his final two seasons with the Wildcats.

— Recruits Shawn Kemp and Sean Woods failing to meet Proposition 48 minimums, thereby sitting out a season in which the program must replace six lettermen.

— Allegations that Eric Manuel, the leading scorer and rebounder back from last year's team, cheated on an American College Test to gain eligibility to play last season.

— Questions regarding the recruiting of Columbus, Ohio, standout Lawrence Funderburke.

And before the current problems surfaced, the school was slapped with a reprimand by the NCAA on March 3 for not fully cooperating on a previous investigation.

Indeed, it's been a long, hot summer for Kentucky basketball.

"The rumors and speculations which have surrounded our program have had many, many adverse effects," Kentucky Coach Eddie Sutton said in a statement last week.

When the NCAA notified the school of its inquiry July 22, it said "approximately 10 additional allegations" would be submitted in about 30 days. The school has braced itself, but there hasn't been a word.

"We will defend the basketball program against any unfounded allegation," UK President David Roselle said after receiving notification from the NCAA, "but we will take full responsibility for

U.S. athletes pass drug tests at Olympic trials

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Drug tests of athletes at the U.S. Olympic track and field trials in July indicated one case involving use of a sinus medication, one case from use of a cold remedy and six cases probably from a herbal vitamin. The Athletics Congress reported Wednesday.

The athletes were not identified, and investigations indicated no action should be taken against them, TAC said.

The announcement by TAC, national governing body for track and field in the United States, followed a Sept. 9 letter from Dr.

Robert Voy, director of sports medicine and science for the U.S. Olympic Committee, to Ollan Casell, executive director of TAC. Voy said six cases involved positive testing for pseudoephedrine, ephedrine and phenylpropranolamine, a combination that "suggests that these substances come from some crude drug, probably a herbal preparation or substance" used in a multiple vitamin.

"In each and every one of these cases . . . the substance found was consistent with use of the vitamin and mineral supplement, that it was used in an appropriate amount and that the amount found in the urine was not excessive . . . To the best of our knowledge, these amounts are not considered performance enhancing. For that reason, the (USOC) board ruled in favor of the athletes' appeal," Voy said in the letter.

Cases involving pseudoephedrine found in the sinus medication Sine-Aid and phenylpropranolamine found in Alka-Seltzer Plus taken for cold symptoms also were heard and upheld by the USOC board.

Where a test indicates positive results, a second sample — taken at the same time as the original test — is examined for confirmation.

"Available in our country are literally hundreds of these vitamin-mineral and herbal supplements, as well as many more over-the-counter preparations containing ephedrine and derivatives that are used for colds and sinus problems," Voy said in his letter.

"Were we not to have a method to deal with these situations, we would have hundreds of positive tests, all on the basis of inadvertent or innocent use. It is unfortunate that we have to test for these substances at all since they are so readily used and available . . . It's also unfortunate that the athletes have to be put through the appeal system."

Lynn will play if Tigers do

NEW YORK (AP) — Outfielder Fred Lynn, who officially became a Detroit Tiger minutes after last month's trading deadline, can participate in postseason play if the Tigers win the American League East crown, baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth said Wednesday.

Lynn was acquired by the Tigers in a trade with the Baltimore Orioles on Aug. 31, the league's trading deadline.

The 14-year major league veteran learned of the deal in Anaheim, Calif., where the Orioles were playing the California Angels. After first rejecting the trade, Lynn, 36, changed his mind after more negotiations with the Tigers on contract terms.

He missed a commercial flight to Chicago, where the Tigers were facing the White Sox. So Lynn boarded a Lear jet chartered by the Tigers in hopes of reaching Chicago by midnight CDT, the postseason eligibility deadline.

During the flight, it became apparent he would not reach Chicago before the deadline. But he could have qualified for postseason play if the pilot made radio contact with the O'Hare International Airport tower by midnight.

Rangers' center Larouche retires

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Rangers center Pierre Larouche, the only player in National Hockey League history to score 50 or more goals for two different teams, retired Wednesday after 14 NHL seasons because of an injured back.

Rangers General Manager Phil Esposito said the 32-year-old Larouche would remain in the organization as a special assistant.

During his 812-game career with Pittsburgh, Montreal, Hartford and New York, Larouche scored 395 goals and 427 assists for 822 points.

Dent reaches agreement with NFL

CHICAGO (AP) — Defensive end Richard Dent, fighting a 30-day NFL suspension for refusing to take a drug test, had reached an agreement with the league that will allow his suspension to be lifted, according to broadcast reports Wednesday night.

lins and the other suspended players are business assets, and any businessman knows it's poor management to have assets just sitting on the shelf. Or in the hospital.

The league should give its addicts more time to sort out their lives. A month off with no pay will not do it. Give them six months. And give them a living allowance, as long as they make progress. If they relapse, try again, or try something else.

From a business standpoint, this is not the best plan. But the NFL policy is a token effort. If the league was serious about drug abuse, it would give its addict-players a fair chance to recover.

any wrongdoing judged to have occurred."

Speculation has gone in different directions on the delay in allegations. One view is that the NCAA is uncovering more rules infractions as it digs deeper in the probe. The other view is that the NCAA hasn't been able to find enough evidence to substantiate further charges.

Dwane Casey is the UK assistant alleged to have sent money by Emery Air Freight Corp. on March 30 to Claud Mills, father of recruit Chris Mills. Emery employees said a package containing a videocassette opened in transit, revealing the money.

Casey denied sending money and the Millses denied receiving any.

Casey filed a $6.9 million lawsuit against Emery, contending the company mishandled the package. He also alleged that his character was defamed and that he suffered "severe and grievous mental and emotional suffering."

An attorney representing Emery said the carrier would defend its position vigorously in court.

Mills, a 6-foot-7 forward, is enrolled at the university and is expected to be an integral part of the new team.

Manuel did not meet NCAA academic standards on earlier attempts at another college entrance exam, the SAT, at Macon, Ga., his hometown, but passed the ACT in Lexington in June 1987.

Sean Sutton, son of the UK coach, also took the test with Manuel. He had previously taken it, but said he took it again to improve his scores.

Proctors of the ACT told NCAA investigators they didn't detect any cheating during the testing.

Manuel, in a statement released through his attorney last week, said: "I did nothing improper before, during or after the ACT test. I have cooperated fully with the NCAA investigation and will not have further comment until after the investigation is completed."

Sean Sutton also denied any cheating.

The NCAA has questioned people about the relationship between Funderburke, rated one of the nation's top high school players, and Bill Chupil, a talent scout and UK graduate.

NCAA rules forbid face-to-face contact with a potential recruit until after his junior year, and the contact must be by a member of the school's staff.

There also have been reports about what the school did in recruiting other players, including Sean Higgins, a teammate of Mills who is now at Michigan; providing travel expenses, and payments for lodging.

The university has been cooperating with the NCAA, hiring attorney James Park Jr. as an independent investigator to head the school's participation in the probe.

UK Athletic Director Cliff Hagan ended a four-month silence Aug. 17 when he defended the athletic program and promised full cooperation and compliance with the NCAA.

"When we finish with the NCAA Infractions Committee, and we will, we will not hesitate to take corrective action," he said. "In the meantime, we should all be working together in the interest of all involved."

The stakes are high for a program that has won 1,453 games, more than any school in the nation.

"To many Kentuckians, Kentucky basketball is a way of life and a source of intense pride," Eddie Sutton said in his statement. "We will fight to keep it on top for the sake of our fans, students and players — past, present and future."

TORONTO (AP) — George Bell singled home the go-ahead run in the eighth inning Wednesday night and sent the Toronto Blue Jays over slumping Detroit 3-2, pushing the Tigers farther back in the American League East.

Detroit lost for the 19th time in 23 games and fell 5½ games behind first place Boston. The Tigers led the division by four games before their slide.

With the score tied at 1, Manny Lee started the Toronto eighth with a leadoff walk from Walt Terrell, 7-14. Tony Fernandez singled and Rance Mulliniks walked to load the bases.

Guillermo Hernandez relieved Terrell and struck out Fred McGriff, but Bell met Mike Henneman with an RBI single.

Duane Ward, 9-2, the third Toronto pitcher picked up the victory. He gave up Fred Lynn's 22nd home run leading off the ninth.

Yankees 7, Indians 5
CLEVELAND — Dave Winfield hit a three-run home run to tie Roger Maris for seventh place on New York's career homer list and the Yankees beat the Cleveland Indians 7-5 to stay close in the American League East.

The Yankees won for the sixth time in seven games and remained 4½ games behind division-leading Boston. New York begins a four-game series in Boston on Thursday night.

Rich Dotson, 10-9, ended a five-game losing streak with his first victory since Aug. 7. The Yankees staked him to an early 6-1 lead and he gave up four runs on four hits in 5½ innings. Dale Mohoric pitched 3½ scoreless innings for his sixth save.

Claudell Washington and Don Mattingly hit consecutive one-out singles in the first inning and Winfield homered to center off Rich Yet, 8-6. It was Winfield's 25th of the year and his 203rd as a Yankee, tying him with Maris. Winfield has 357 homers in his career with the Yankees and San Diego.

Brewers 4, White Sox 2
CHICAGO — Rob Deer and Robin Yount each drove in two runs as the Milwaukee Brewers kept their slim American League East hopes alive with a 4-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Milwaukee won for the 11th time in 14 games and remained 5½ games behind division-leading Boston. The Brewers have just 15 games left and have lost seven more than the Red Sox.

The Brewers scored twice in the first inning. Paul Molitor opened the game with a single but was forced by Jim Gantner, who went to second on shortstop Ozzie Guillen's throwing error trying for a double play.

Gantner stole third and scored on a sacrifice fly by Yount. Deer followed with his 22nd homer into the upper deck in left field off Bill Long, 7-11.

Bill Wegman, 12-11, had a shutout going with two outs in the sixth when he was knocked out on successive home runs by Dan Pasqua, his 17th, and Mike Diaz, his second. Paul Mirabella pitched 3½ innings of one-hit relief for his second save.

Astros 7, Reds 1
HOUSTON — Nolan Ryan pitched a four-hitter, struck out a season-high 13 and stretched his streak without a walk to 20 consecutive innings, leading the Houston Astros past the Cincinnati Reds 7-1 Wednesday night.

"I threw the fastball about 75 percent of the time," Ryan said. "They're a free-swinging club, and they were chasing them. This is the most consistent I've been all year. I've had command of my pitches. I feel good."

Ryan, 12-11, won his third straight and pitched his fourth complete game. He has allowed just four earned runs and 22 hits in his last five starts, covering 39 innings.

He leads the National League with 221 strikeouts and has fanned 10 or more batters seven times this season and 181 times in his career. He has pitched consecutive complete games for the first time since 1983.

Ryan outpitched Danny Jackson, 21-6, who gave up all seven runs in 5½ innings. Rafael Ramirez drove in four runs with a double and a homer.

Mets 3, Cubs 1
NEW YORK — Sid Fernandez and Roger McDowell combined on a four-hitter and New York won for the sixth time in seven games, lowering its magic number to nine in the National League East.

Fernandez, 9-10, pitched seven innings before being taken out because of soreness in his left knee. He gave up three hits, struck out eight and walked three. McDowell pitched two innings for his 16th save, allowing an unearned run in the ninth on Gary Varsho' RBI single.

Calvin Schiraldi, 8-12, lost his fourth consecutive game since beating Atlanta Aug. 25.

New York scored all three runs in the second. Kevin McReynolds walked, Howard Johnson tripled, Wally Backman doubled and Mookie Wilson tripled.

Pirates 4, Expos 1
MONTREAL — Bobby Bonilla hit a three-run homer in the 12th inning, his first home run since Aug. 14.

Jose Lind hit a two-out double off Tim Burke, 3-4, and Andy Van Slyke was intentionally walked before Bonilla hit his 21st homer.

Brian Fisher, 8-10, allowed one hit in two innings.

Kelly denies drug use rumors

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Buffalo Bills quarterback Jim Kelly and team officials angrily denied rumors Wednesday that Kelly had failed an National Football League drug test and would soon be suspended by the league.

"I've never been on drugs. I don't take drugs," said Kelly. "To even have someone say anything like that, it hurts me. If all rumors are ever true that's been said... about me... they'd have me in the post office like Jesse James."

Rumors regarding Kelly have been circulating in the Buffalo area for weeks, but they first surfaced publicly on Tuesday, after Kelly said he was sick with the flu during the Bills' 9-6 victory over the Miami Dolphins Sunday.

According to WPHD-FM program director Ken Carson, disc jockey Trevor Joe Lennon was doing a sports report when he began talking about the Bills' victory.

"He made the following comment; that he'd received a couple of phone calls and had heard that Jim Kelly was suffering from more than the effects of the flu Sunday morning," said Carson.

Carson said the station checked with the Bills, who told them the story was inaccurate. The disc jockeys subsequently went on the air saying that the Bills said the story was totally untrue.

But at least one television station reported the rumors and reported that they were totally unfounded.

And Larry Felser, sports editor for The Buffalo News, ran a column in Wednesday's editions noting that rumors about Kelly failing a drug test were "coming from all directions" but that "Kelly is clean. He never flunked a drug test."

On Wednesday afternoon, Kelly, Coach Marv Levy and General Manager Bill Polian called a press conference at Rich Stadium with Polian denouncing a "campaign of vicious innuendo and rumors circulating with respect to Jim that are both unfounded and unwarranted."

Levy said the league's drug testing policies mandate confidentiality, but that he "would violate one aspect" of that policy.

"I'm going to do it once, and once only. Don't ever ask me to do it again," said Levy. "Every single time Jim Kelly has been tested, he has tested totally clean for drugs."

Problems outside the ring may cost Tyson ad deals

NEW YORK (AP)—Boxing champ Mike Tyson's image has taken some lumps outside the ring in the past few weeks, and some advertising consultants say it may cost him lucrative commercial work.

"Nobody wants to lose the customers they already have, and all the negative stuff with him is a way to lose customers," said Lloyd Kolmer, who heads a firm that advises advertisers on signing celebrities for commercials.

Since dispatching Michael Spinks in a 91-second bout for the heavyweight championship in June, Tyson has gone through a rancorous court battle with his manager, engaged in a street fight with a former opponent and survived a car crash that one newspaper reported — and Tyson denied — was an attempted suicide.

Those incidents offer a contrast to the cheery and confident guy who appeared in three Diet Pepsi commercials this past summer, in which the soda maker touted Tyson and Diet Pepsi as "undisputed champs." In one of the ads, the champ took a soft drink from the refrigerator while his wife, actress Robin Givens, playfully snapped a towel at him.

The ads were so popular that Pepsi-Cola Co. ran them for two months instead of the one month originally planned, Pepsi spokesman Tod MacKenzie said Tuesday.

MacKenzie said the Tyson ads were last run in late August. The company now is using ads featuring America's Cup yachtsman Dennis Conner.

He said recent publicity about Tyson had no bearing on the decision to quit using the Tyson Diet Pepsi ads. "They had run their course," MacKenzie said.

He said there never had been any talk of a longer-term relationship with Tyson, who reportedly was paid $1.25 million for his work.

But Kolmer, who was not involved in negotiating Tyson's appearance in the ads, speculated that Pepsi had an option to continue to use Tyson in its ads but chose not to do so.

"In effect, he has been fired. They can phrase it any way they want to," he said.

Bill Cayton, Tyson's manager, said the reports about Tyson had hurt the boxer's image, but insisted that Tyson had been a "victim of circumstance" who would be able over time to improve his image.

Cayton said that meanwhile, he had "put on hold" his talks with a battery maker and an electronics company about having Tyson appear in commercials for them. He refused to identify the companies.

"I'm not pushing at this time," Cayton said. "It's not the best negotiating atmosphere. I want this unfair wave to subside before I proceed."

Cayton said Tyson is "the best fighter in the world today" and said he was confident Tyson "will go on to bigger and better things in every area."

Tyson signed one-year contracts within the past few months to appear in ads in Japan for Suntory beer and Toyota vehicles, Cayton said.

In addition, Nintendo of America Inc., a Redmont, Wash.-based video games maker, signed Tyson 13 months ago to a two-year contract to appear in ads for "Mike Tyson's Punch-Out," which has proven one of its best-selling products.

Skater Babilonia overdoses

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former Olympic ice skater Tai Babilonia, despondent about recent performances, was hospitalized Wednesday after overdosing on pills, authorities said.

Her family denied it was a suicide attempt.

Paramedics took Babilonia to Cedars-Sinai Medical Center at 7:30 a.m., where she was treated and released at 11:15 a.m. in good condition, hospital spokeswoman Paula Correia said.

"I talked to her and she seemed fine," said Correia, adding Babilonia left the hospital with her mother and skating partner Randy Gardner.

The type of pills taken and other details weren't disclosed.

"I am not at liberty to discuss the treatment," Correia said. "The agreement I have with the family is that I can't talk about it."

The 28-year-old skating star had earlier called her manager, Nancy Rosenberg, saying she was unhappy about her recent skating performances and had taken a large number of pills, said police spokesman Bill Frio.

Babilonia's mother, Cleo, was then notified and she telephoned paramedics, who picked the skater up at the family home on South Ridgely Drive.

Despite the conversation with her manager, Frio said investigators "are carrying it as an accidental overdose" rather than an attempted suicide.

Detective Bruce Janis said police received a phone call from the skater's father, retired Los Angeles police detective Constancio Babilonia, who said his daughter took the pills accidentally and that it wasn't a suicide attempt.

In 1979, Babilonia and Gardner won the world pairs skating title in Vienna, shattering the 14-year Soviet domination of the pairs competition. They were the first Americans in 29 years to capture the world title.

Cities bid for 1994 Winter Games

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — From kings to prime ministers, speed-skating champions to State Department big-wigs with greeting from the president, the four cities bidding to host the 1994 Winter Olympics played their last shots.

Now comes the vote. As the International Olympic Committee closed its 94th session Thursday, it dealt with one last task — choosing the '94 site from among Anchorage, Alaska; Oster-sund, Sweden; Sofia, Bulgaria; and Lillehammer, Norway.

A choice is expected to be announced today by the IOC.

The four cities made their final presentations Wednesday, using speeches, films and slide shows to try to convince the IOC that their bid was best. Anchorage, Lillehammer and Sofia all were losers two years ago when Albertville, France was awarded the Winter Games for 1992.

Ostersund is a first-time bidder, but this was the 12th time a Swedish city has tried to win the Winter Games. All 11 previous bids failed.

The IOC's choices could be divided into three categories: money, politics and tradition.

Anchorage had the money. As the lone bidder from North America, it was the only one that could boast the chance of big income from U.S. TV rights.

Actress reflects on 'Broadway Bound'

By Kevin Goulding
The Daily Iowan

Working on television is a breeze compared to the stage. The cast of "Broadway Bound," which comes to Hancher Auditorium Friday night, hasn't had a day off in two weeks. The show, which opened Wednesday night in St. Paul, Minn., will run for seven shows in four days.

Brian Drillinger (left), Barbara Tarbuck (center) and (Kurt Deutsch) star in Neil Simon's "Broadway Bound" at Hancher Auditorium 8 p.m. Friday.

"Our director told us Neil Simon wrote this as a valentine for his mother," Tarbuck said. "I feel that."

Rehearsals every day, coupled with the pressures of being on the road, can take its toll on the meek.

For veteran actress Barbara Tarbuck, who hasn't been on the road in 20 years, opening night was a relief. In an interview from her hotel room in St. Paul, the actress, who plays Kate Jerome, the mother, talked about her reason for leaving her family behind for six months. "I couldn't pass up the role. I haven't had the chance to carry a show in a long time. Even when I did a season on "Falcon Crest," it's still only one or two days a week, with isolated moments of concentration. You need to exercise your muscles."

"Broadway Bound," which with "Brighton Beach Memoirs" and "Biloxi Blues" reflects on Simon's youth, was proclaimed "the best American play of the 1980s" by Time magazine. The touring production is directed by Gene Saks, who also directed the play on Broadway, where it won two Tony Awards, including "Best Actress."

"Brighton Beach" showed Simon's hero, Eugene Morris Jerome, in the pangs of early adolescence. "Biloxi Blues" took Eugene to boot camp and focused on the trials of army life. "Broadway Bound" finds Eugene back at home in Brooklyn, where he is a fledgling comedy writer teamed with his brother, Stanley.

It is the late 1940s, and Eugene and Stanley have their first terrifying assignment as budding radio writers. While they work feverishly in their upstairs room, downstairs the Jerome family faces the greatest crisis of their lives.

"It's such a rich play," commented Tarbuck. "What makes it a joy is the way Simon structured it, so much humor without being gags. At one point in the play, I re-enact the night I danced with George Raft and the years just peel away for Kate. On opening night I could feel the audience unfolding with me. I didn't expect that."

Simon, often denied respect for his formulaic light touch, received acclaim from critics for this hard-hitting drama.

"Having done Kate in 'Brighton Beach,' I loved the family and was deeply involved. And that played deep this one. In that one the boys are teens and all over the place. This one is 10 years later and everyone is leaving. Our director told us Neil Simon wrote this as a valentine for his mother. I feel that. It's an 'every mother' piece."

"The play has many repercussions for me. It deals with age and loneliness and being on tour, by myself, it's tough. The role goes down to the depths and then brings you back up and out. I expected to be drained, but I come out of this show very happy."

UI poet Marvin Bell reads from his work

By Kevin Goulding
The Daily Iowan

A series of presentations by local writers and storytellers, titled "Readings," will feature poet Marvin Bell tonight at 7 p.m. at the UI Hospitals. The series is sponsored by Project Art and takes place in the Colleton Pavilion, fifth floor. The presentation is free and open to the public.

As a teacher in the UI Writers' Workshop, Bell has helped aspiring poets hone their writing skills since 1965. He has been named the Flannery O'Connor Professor of Letters. Bell is the author of eight books of poetry, a collection of essays and (with William Stafford) a volume of poems written in correspondence. His honors include the Lamont Award of the Academy of American Poets for his first major collection, fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts and the Guggenheim Foundation and Senior Fulbright Appointments to Yugoslavia and Australia.

When asked about what poems he would read, Bell responded, "I make up readings as I go. It's much like having a conversation, and I like to get an audience to respond. I don't shy from people making suggestions or asking questions. I haven't read there before so I'm curious about the audience.

"Whenever I give readings, I like to be of use. As far as reading at the hospital, oftentimes the life of the mind means more to people who have lost some of the life of their bodies, although I'm only guessing. Those of us who aren't in the audience are indebted to those who are."

Project Art extends the UI Hospitals' commitment to provide a comforting and restful environment to the patients and visitors. Its goals are to offer the arts as a source of cultural enrichment, to promote the visual and performing talents of regional artists and to encourage individual expression and creativity.

When asked how many poetry readings he has given in his life, Bell laughed and responded, "It's like Senator Everett Dirksen once said about the budget, a billion here and a billion there and pretty soon it runs into real money!"

BASKETBALL TRYOUTS

All eligible student-athletes intending on trying out for the gray team are required to sign up in the basketball office on the 2nd floor of Carver Hawkeye Arena (Room 240) by Tuesday, September 20.

The gray, or walk-on team, has been a tradition that originated during Coach Davis' days at Lafayette and has been continued at Boston College, Stanford and now Iowa. It is probably the only situation of its kind in major college basketball today and will provide a unique opportunity for those who participate.

Bruce Willis as John McClane in John McTiernan's "Die Hard."

'Die Hard' doesn't — it's alive!

By Locke Peterseim
The Daily Iowan

Brace yourself — no one wants to admit in public that they liked a Bruce Willis movie, but the hard fact is that "Die Hard" — punctually arriving in Iowa City after opening around the country in July — is the most surprising, if not one of the best, films of the summer.

That's right, the same Bruce Willis who for the past four years has been begging for a letter-opener in the throat from Cybill Shepherd. The same obnoxious, little spud who can't sing worth spit no matter how many Golden Wine Coolers he knocks back. The same portrait of stale television acting who proved that you don't need talent or a strong hairline to be a star. The same media-ape who weekly hogs the front of the Enquirer with his barroom brawls and marital high jinks. It may be hard to believe, but this personification of all we of higher education and discriminating taste deplore is starring in a darn fine flick.

Actually, to be fair to The Willis Haters of America, Bruce may be the star, but his character is only one part of "Die Hard" — the action-genre triumph. Unlike the Stallone and Schwarzenegger beef-and-bullet epics, "Die Hard" is not a star vehicle that must be carried on the overdeveloped back of some grossly overpaid steroid-head. Instead, it's a strong, tightly-woven adventure film with as much brains as brawn.

John McClane (Willis) is a tough New York cop (as opposed to all those wimpy New York cops we see in the movies) who finds himself trapped in a Los Angeles high-rise with some nasty — but well-dressed — international terrorist-thieves. There are hostages — including McClane's estranged wife (Bonnie Bedelia), inept police bureaucrats, psychotic FBI agents, sleazeball TV reporters, slimebag company execs and Alexander Gudonov looking real blond and real mean. What follows amounts to a high-powered game of hide-and-seek with guns in a labyrinth of glass corridors and elevator shafts.

Action-adventure, tough-guy shoot-'em-up clichés abound in "Die Hard," but the filmmakers are more than aware of them, as well as of the film's genre status. "Die Hard" makes no attempt to hide or twist the predictable plot and character mechanics — instead it takes them and polishes them to perfection with a nifty sense of irony rare in most muscle-and-muzzle flicks. Director John McTiernan takes all this unconventional narrative quality and wraps it in a slick visual package of chrome and glass, trimmed in steel blue — while keeping his cameras moving and his audience on the edge of its spleens.

As for Willis, his usual wisecracks and cocktail-lounge swaggering are effectively crushed out of the way by the physical extremes of his character's situation. In fact, Willis comes out of "Die Hard" like a raw slab of beef — he's not that distasteful once he's bashed around, cut up and flame-broiled.

"Die Hard" is airtight script rolls all this up into the biggest King Hell Bastard Rock and Roll Action Film since 1986's "Aliens." Punches like gunshots, gunshots like explosions, explosions like A-bombs — this movie is a sound and vision blowout from start to finish. Hard, fast, lean and effective, "Die Hard" never wastes a moment or misses a trick as it pushes the action to the limits of excess while never displaying an ounce of narrative fat. Minor details introduced in the film's first 20 minutes metamorphose into major plot points in the final 20. As the head terrorist notes, it is "exactness — attention to every conceivable detail" that guarantees success, and succeed "Die Hard" does.

With Ludwig Van's Ninth Symphony constantly lurking underneath, "Die Hard" flows and pounds like a well-orchestrated piece of music. All the sections work together to build to a majestic crescendo. If there is one scene representative of the movie's "Ode To Joy" approach to action-excitement, it's near the end when "Die Hard" puts the hero, the villains, the hostages and two helicopter gunships on the roof of the building. And blows it all up. Perfect.

Iowa-based film 'Miles From Home' opens

By Pier A. Monique Nazareth
Special to The Daily Iowan

Is Iowa going Hollywood? Could be. Tonight marks the state premiere of "Miles From Home," a feature film shot in Iowa in the fall of last year. The sold-out Iowa premiere is at 6:45 p.m. in the Collins Road 5 Theatre in Marion, Ia., with proceeds from the screening being donated to Camp Courageous. Originally titled "The Farm of the Year," the film depicts the farm crisis, focusing on the story of two brothers — Richard Gere ("American Gigolo") and "An Officer and a Gentleman") and Kevin Anderson ("Orphans") — who face foreclosure of their family farm, a situation close to home for many Iowans.

"Miles From Home" was selected as one of the three films to represent the United States in the prestigious Cannes Film Festival in France last May. But mixed reviews from the festival incited the film's director, Gary Sinise, and editor Jane Jaffe, to continue editing the film. The film has already been previewed to select audiences in Chicago, Los Angeles and New York. And tonight it's Iowa's turn.

Lindy Strodel, the communication specialist with the Iowa Department of Economic Development, says that fans hoping for stars Gere or Anderson to put in an appearance at tonight's premiere will be disappointed, as both actors are on location for other film shoots and Sinise is preparing to direct a play in Chicago.

The idea of filming in Iowa came from a scene in Chris Gerolmo's original screenplay that shows, in a black and white flashback, Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev's visit to an Iowa farm in 1959. Instrumental in bringing "Miles From Home" to Iowa was the Iowa Film Office and its manager, Wendol Jarvis, who's been recruiting film companies to the state for the last five years.

In addition to the monetary benefits, the companies filming in the state provide an opportunity for students in media and the performing arts — giving them the chance to obtain professional experience without having to travel to coastal film centers.

Adriana Zuanic, a UI graduate student in broadcasting and film, worked as the apprentice editor on "Miles From Home."

"It's valuable that companies are coming to Iowa to produce their films," said Zuanic. "We (students) obtain practical experience on the craft of filmmaking as well as gaining insights on the politics of the industry."

Christopher Hogwood leads all-Mozart show

By Steve T. Donoghue
The Daily Iowan

In a world where stand-up comedians and emaciated rock stars command the adoration of the masses, fame can be a dubious distinction.

Nevertheless, Christopher Hogwood is a famous man.

Hogwood will make his debut as music director of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra tonight in Hancher Auditorium, and the event is the latest in a long line of achievements and awards accumulated by one of the most energetic and dynamic figures in the world of classical music.

In 1973 Hogwood founded the Academy of Ancient Music, with its central tenet the same idea whose championing has been the backbone of Hogwood's fame: the use of accurate and authentic instruments for baroque and classical music. And in the intervening years, the awards and accolades haven't stopped. In addition to being a prominent harpsichordist, Hogwood is a much coveted guest conductor, having appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, the Cleveland Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the London Philharmonic. Hogwood has spread his ample creative talents over three simultaneous directorships, with the Academy of Ancient Music, Boston's Handel and Haydn Society and now the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra, where the opportunities intrigue him.

"Certainly in my new capacity (as music director), this will be my first performance," he said. "I'm enjoying some of the programming, which has marks of great initiative."

In 1985, Hogwood was awarded the Walter Willson Cobette Medal by the Worshipful Company of Musicians for his distinguished career in chamber music, but chamber music is far from his only interest. Respected as a scholar and commentator, Hogwood has also authored a successful biography of Handel and became in 1986 the music director of the Handel and Haydn Society in Boston.

He has conducted operas both in the United States and abroad, including Mozart's "Don Giovanni" with the St. Louis Opera, Handel's "Agrippina" at Las Fenice in Venice and "Il Sogno di Scipione" in Vicenza, Italy, and in 1985 he presided over a new production of Handel's "Messiah" with the Deutsche Opera.

Christopher Hogwood will make his debut as music director of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra in an all-Mozart concert tonight at 8 in Hancher Auditorium.

In recording as well Hogwood has been a standard-bearer in the cause of accurate and high-quality recordings, including a series of the Beethoven symphonies which is nearly complete. The St. Paul Chamber Orchestra will begin recording under Hogwood in January with a program of Stravinsky's works.

These recordings complement Hogwood's own efforts to demystify and deformalize the public's perception of classical music. His style of conducting also reflects this effort; Hogwood will often introduce the pieces he's conducting, speaking directly to the audience, relating some of the interesting facts accompanying the works.

"It helps to break the ice," said Hogwood. "I don't think classical music should be so formal."

With the St. Paul Orchestra, Hogwood will for the first time be the music director of a modern-instrument orchestra. The prospect is a familiar one, however, since Hogwood's guest-conducting record is so extensive. Likewise his exposure to American audiences has not been lacking, although he commented on some differences between audiences in the two countries.

"What's nice in this country is that you don't have the kind of overkill that we have in London — there's a real feeling of family; people come because they're subscribers, which is, I think, a much better principle. There's a stronger feeling that the audience and the stage know each other."
