Local lenders praise Dukakis' student loan program

By Andy Brownstein
The Daily Iowan

A college loan program recently unveiled by Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis would solve several of the most serious problems with the current financial aid system, according to local loan experts.

The Student Tuition and Repayment System, or STARS, would allow students to get loans from banks at competitive rates, with repayment beginning when they start working full time. The system would allow students to pay back their loans by withholding a small fixed percentage of their wages over a lifetime.

STARS would be voluntary, would not replace existing federal college loan programs and would depend on private, not federal, money.

Dukakis' proposal is designed to appeal to middle-class voters, who he claims have been badly wounded under the Reagan administration.

Rather than a certain dollar amount, like other college loans, the payment would be a fixed percentage of the student's income. The program would also have a "buy-out" clause that would allow especially high earners to end payments early.

Because of the fixed percentage feature, "those who are more fortunate will pay more; those who are less fortunate will pay less," said Lawrence Summers, economic adviser to Dukakis.

Dick Sommerwell, president of Iowa State Bank, is enthusiastic about the new proposal.

"It's a good idea that's bound to work," he said. "It helps the credit rating of the student, and it's a way for banks to finally deal with the collection process."

"Dukakis' program seems to be in everyone's best interest," Sommerwell said.

Robert Buchele, the student loan representative at Iowa State Bank, explained how STARS would help students who have problems repaying loans under the current system.

"A lot of students coming out of college today aren't getting the jobs they expected," Buchele said. "It used to be that a college degree could earn the average student $20,000 a year. Now they often can't even find a job when they leave college."

Most people who have financial problems when they leave school will not pay their student loans in order to deal with more basic living necessities, Buchele said.

Under the existing programs, when loans go into repayment, students have to make payments each month. If the payment is late, it goes on their credit rating.

Dukakis' proposal deals specifically with the collection and repayment issue, Buchele said.

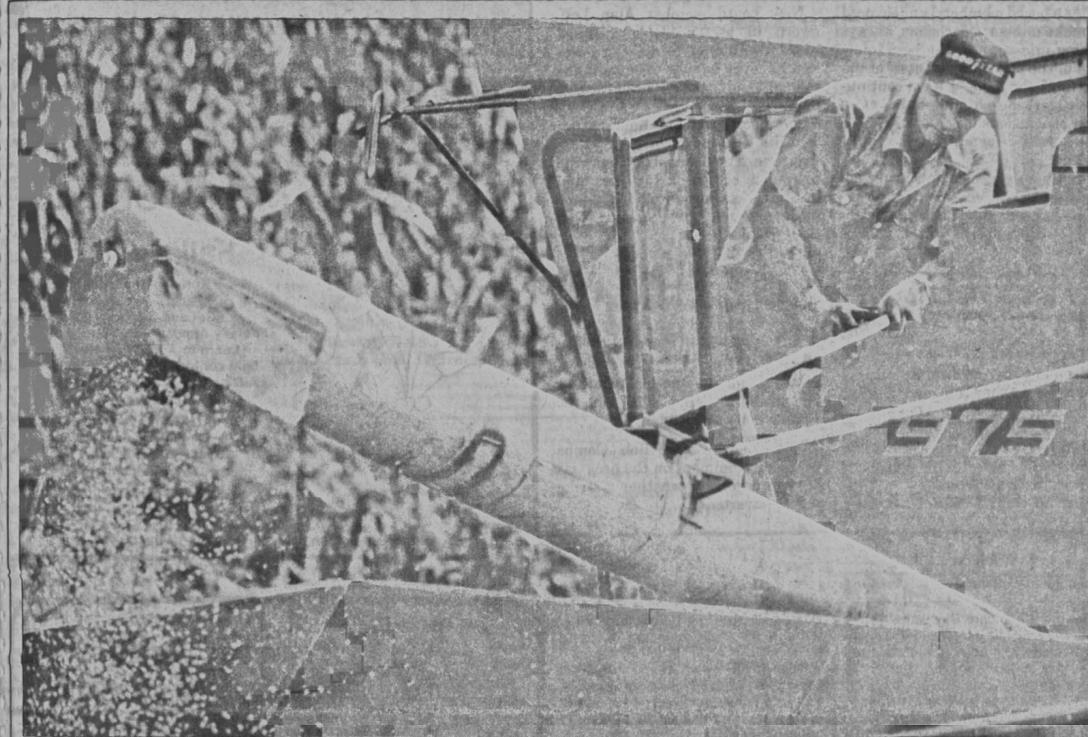

"Basically, if the money is coming out of the students' paychecks monthly before they get their check, there's really no way for them to screw up their credit rating, because the payment is being made each month and they have no control over it," he said.

Mark Warner, director of the UI Financial Aid Office, said there is a definite need for a program benefiting the middle class.

"In the last eight years since we've had the current administration in office, the person who has been hurt the most has been the middle-income family," he said. "So any program being proposed to aid them I totally support."

Half harvest

Iowa City farmer Robert Ruppert watches the last bit of corn empty out of his combine Tuesday afternoon while harvesting his crop west of the Iowa City Municipal Airport. According to Ruppert, his harvest this year will yield approximately half the normal amount. Ruppert added this summer's drought was the worst he has experienced in 42 years of farming.

Music program updates, works on 'rebuilding'

By Heidi Mathews
The Daily Iowan

Football and basketball players aren't the only people faced with years of "rebuilding." UI School of Music administrators, faculty members and students are joining the numbers as they take part in a rebuilding process of their own.

Due to a lack of funding and problems stemming from the reallocation process within the department, the school of music has suffered in the past, with enrollment and program cohesion decreasing. Now, according to the UI Director of the School of Music Marilyn Somville, the program is experiencing an upswing.

"We've established new executive and curriculum committees within the school," Somville said. "This has helped us examine our departments more closely and open up communication."

Somville said the school recently maintained its accreditation for the undergraduate and graduate programs from the National Association of Schools of Music Commission on Undergraduate and Graduate Studies. The school's accreditation has been renewed for a period of 10 years.

The committee that conducted this study found the majority of the institution's weaknesses to be centered around physical aspects of the program. Poor ventilation and acoustics in the practice rooms and an understaffed library system which lends itself to the stagnation of cataloging and collection development are cited as problems that need to be resolved.

These are the problems music students face every day — and complain about.

"The library is open until 7 p.m. or so, but most people have classes and rehearsals all day," said Kristen Taavola, a UI junior flute performance and comparative literature major. "Since we have to listen to tapes and records in the library, this poses major problems."

Caroline Jacobson, a UI English major who is presently taking viola lessons, finds herself spending quite a bit of time at the music library, but said she is unsatisfied with the modern music collection.

Rape story a concoction, New York grand jury states

NEW YORK (AP)—A grand jury concluded that a black teen-ager concocted a story of rape and abduction by a gang of white men that led to months of racial tension and cover-up allegations, The New York Times reported Wednesday.

The special state grand jury decided not to indict anyone after finding overwhelming evidence that 16-year-old Tawana Brawley of Wappinger Falls lied and helped create the conditions in which she was found dazed, wrapped in a garbage bag and smeared with excrement, the Times reported.

The black teen-ager claimed she had been kidnapped by a gang of white men on Nov. 24 and subjected to four days of sexual abuse.

But the grand jury, in Poughkeepsie, concluded after more than 100 witnesses and a variety of evidence that she had chosen not to return home and hid for four days in an apartment from which her family had recently been evicted, the Times said.

The grand jury speculated she may have feared punishment from her mother's boyfriend for her late nights out, and that drugs and her relationships with shady characters may have played a role, the Times said.

Brawley's story attracted national attention, especially when she refused to testify on the advice of family lawyers and advisers, who then repeatedly accused the state of a cover-up and leveled charges against public officials and the news media.

The grand jury subpoenaed Brawley but eventually abandoned hope of ever hearing her story firsthand and rescinded its vote to subpoena her, the Poughkeepsie Journal reported Tuesday.

Prominent people who spoke sympathetically of her plight included heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson and actor Bill Cosby, who put up a $25,000 reward.

One of Brawley's advisers, the Rev. Al Sharpton, said Tuesday that he would not be surprised if the grand jury concluded, as reported, that Brawley fabricated her claims.

"We said from the beginning the grand jury would not come back with anything," he said.

Sharpton said the Times article was "nothing but a whole series of reckless speculations by someone who cannot back it up with one iota of fact."

The black activist repeated charges that the criminal justice system does not treat minorities fairly.

He said Brawley, her mother Glenda, who claimed sanctuary in churches after she was sentenced to 30 days in jail for defying a subpoena to testify on the case, and their attorneys would appear at a news conference in New York within 24 hours to respond to the report.

In addition to Sharpton, Brawley and her family have been represented by attorneys Alton Maddox and C. Vernon Mason.

The grand jury was not expected to comment on the Brawley advisers' tactics, but Attorney General Robert Abrams, who was appointed special prosecutor in the case, has said he will file a separate complaint against the lawyers when the grand jury report is released.

Abrams issued a statement in response to the Times report saying he would not "confirm or deny the accuracy of any aspect of the story."

U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani, in Manhattan, said he was not surprised by the grand jury's determination as reported by the Times.

"It's certainly worth a serious inquiry" into whether lawyers involved in the case violated ethical rules of their profession, Giuliani said.

The grand jury completed its report Friday, but it still must be reviewed by state Supreme Court Justice Angelo Ingrassia, the Times said. It is expected to be released within weeks.

Frat house mom sees 30 years of changes

By Jay Casini
The Daily Iowan

Since the UI chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity was founded 30 years ago, hundreds of members have come and gone. But there has only been one "Mom B."

Iva Mae Bendt's 30-year relationship with Lambda Chi Alpha began in 1958, when she came to Iowa City after the sudden death of her husband.

"I realized I was alone," Bendt said. "I had experience as a teacher and a counselor, and I'd always been a civic-minded person, so I went to the university placement service to see what I could do."

Bendt said she was told about a new fraternity starting on campus that needed a house mom. Soon after, she met with members of the new fraternity and Iva Mae Bendt became "Mom B."

Over the years, Bendt has been named "Outstanding Housemother of the Year" three times by Lambda Chi Alpha's national organization.

Office of Campus Programs and Student Activities Coordinator Mary Peterson said she marvels at the stamina and dedication of "Mom B."

"She has been a real asset to the greek system here," Peterson said. "When I think of the solid foundation Lambda Chi is on, I think of Mom B. She is a great part of that foundation."

Fee irks Field House swimmers

By Hilary Livengood
The Daily Iowan

Regular swimmers at the UI Field House pool are angry about the recently implemented 50-cent user's fee.

More than 100 people have signed petitions in the women's locker room at The Field House asking for an alternative to paying 50 cents for each use of the pool. The petitions state that "monthly passes should be sold to swimmers for the sake of practicality."

But there will be no changes this semester in the policy for collecting fees at the pool, according to Ray Beemer, UI associate director of recreational services.

"We haven't ever charged before so we're in a period of transition right now," Beemer said. "We will probably decide on any changes in our policy after the first semester.

"A turnstile has been proposed, but we think we'll have maintenance problems with its installation," he said. "We also haven't eliminated the possibility of a pass card or punch card."

For UI junior Elizabeth Hughes, who uses the pool's facilities three or four times a week, spending the money to swim isn't the issue, rather it's bringing the change to the pool that's an inconvenience.

"A lot of times you just forget to bring the change with you because you're used to the old way," Hughes said. "I wish they'd do something else, even a punch pass. That would be a lot better than hauling around the change."

However, the implementation of the 50-cent fee has cut down on the pool's usage.

"People who used the facilities almost every day are mad," said Angela McCaffery, who has lifeguarded at the pool for the past five years. "It's also cut out a lot of the less serious swimmers who came in for the 10-minute swim to cool down after basketball or something like that."

Hughes said her visits to the pool have become more sporadic as a result of the fee.

"I find myself looking for other forms of recreation now," she said. "I've bought a punch card at the Recreation Center, which I would never have done if they hadn't started charging here."

"It's also a lot easier to get a lane See Swimming, Page 3A

Health Department offers radon test kits

In response to a growing concern about household radon levels, the Johnson County Health Department will soon have 100 radon test kits available for purchase, as well as a general information brochure describing facts about radon. The radon tests will be available on a first come, first serve basis at a cost of $12 each.

Radon is a colorless, odorless and natural radioactive gas which enters buildings through such things as cracks, crawlspaces and sump holes. Once inside, the gas decays into solid radioactive matter, settling on dust and smoke particles which are inhaled into the lungs. When the decay products decompose, they can cause destruction of the lung tissue and, in some cases, lung cancer.

Health Department Director L. Graham Dameron said the department recommends that all Johnson County residents test their homes for radon, but stressed that radon test results in Johnson County have been at reasonable levels. "We would like to stress that people not overreact to recent news stories about the dangers of radon," Dameron said. "Instead, we encourage county residents to proceed with testing during the upcoming winter months when houses are more tightly sealed and radon readings are more accurate."

County residents interested in learning more about radon and radon test kits should contact the Health Department at 356-6040.

UI art student wins national competition

Jocelyn Chateauvert, a UI graduate student in the School of Art and Art History, has won first prize in the crafts division of "Artquest '88," a national juried arts competition.

Chateauvert's winning work, entitled "Niobium Score," is a necklace made of sterling silver and anodized niobium, approximately nine inches in diameter. "Niobium Score" was one of 12 first-prize winners in the competition, chosen from thousands of entries nationwide.

Art critic Melinda Wortz wrote in the "Artquest '88" catalogue: "Chateauvert's lithe and luminous necklace was admired for its simple elegance of form and reverence for materials. Both of these qualities recall the Bauhaus dictum, 'less is more.'"

Three UI biotechnology projects receive grants

Three biotechnology research projects at the UI have been awarded grants totaling over $1 million from the Iowa Department of Economic Development.

The grants, supported by proceeds from the state lottery, were awarded Thursday in Des Moines by the DED board under the Educational, Agricultural, Research and Development Account program. The funding for these projects include:

- $530,469 for equipment used in sophisticated analysis of cell motion and dynamics by David Soll, professor of biology in the UI College of Liberal Arts.
- $325,000 to equip and operate a biomedical engineering research laboratory to study the use of enzymes in solvents by Gregory Carmichael, professor and chair of chemical and materials engineering, and Jonathan Dordick, assistant professor of chemical and materials engineering, both of the UI College of Engineering.
- $230,000 to expand the UI Tissue Culture and Hybridoma Facility headed by Richard Lynch, professor and head of pathology in the College of Medicine.

The EARDA grant program requires matching fund support in amounts equal to or greater than the EARDA award.

City High remodeling targeted, board selects 1988-89 officers

By Sara Langenberg
The Daily Iowan

City High School may need more money than was originally allocated for a proposed remodeling project, according to Iowa City School Board member Fran Malloy.

The extent of the remodeling scheduled for City High School, 1900 Morningside Drive, has not yet been determined.

According to the school's student representative, Doug Green, City High representatives have met with architects to discuss the areas of the school which need work. But officials will not select those areas until later meetings have been conducted, and a final decision may not be made until late October.

Green said some of the areas they looked at were the school's cafeteria and its journalism and science areas.

In other business, the board unanimously elected Connie Champion as its new president and Orville Townsend as vice president.

Champion replaces retiring member Lynne Cannon, who served three consecutive terms on the board. Cannon lost in her bid for re-election Sept. 13.

In an emotional address—her last to the community as president of the board—Cannon summarized her three terms on the board.

Connie Champion

"As a board member, I endeavored to make unbiased decisions, always taking into account the best interests of the students and staff of the district," she said. "I have continuously worked to formulate independent conclusions based on the most complete information I could obtain."

"It was my goal to bring people together in decision making, not to divide, in our efforts to provide a better education for the young people in this community."

For about 35 minutes the board discussed organization tactics for presenting voters with an idea of how funds garnered from an enrichment tax will be administered.

"We should provide (the voters with) a more specific indication of how money (supplied by the proposed tax) is going to be used," board member Jay Christensen-Szalanski said.

Christensen-Szalanski stressed that the board should not seek the enrichment tax unless there is a very strong probability voters will accept it.

The board will discuss options for use of the funds at its next meeting, Oct. 4, before deciding whether to advocate the tax. But a majority of the board members acknowledged the school system needs additional funding.

New board member Alan Leff, sworn in at Tuesday's meeting, said, "the money is not the question as much as how to educate the voting populus on the need (for the money)."

The board met one hour earlier than its regularly scheduled meeting time Tuesday to demonstrate upgraded computer facilities and business courses provided by a modernization grant from Iowa State Bank.

Union, Deere talks continue

ROCK ISLAND, Ill. (AP) — Representatives of farm equipment manufacturer Deere & Co. and United Auto Workers met Tuesday in an effort to head off a strike set for Friday.

UAW negotiator Jim Hecker said in a telephone interview he is "optimistic" about the outcome of the talks, now in their sixth week.

But he said the union would strike if the two sides do not reach an agreement by midnight Friday, when the current contract expires.

"We have taken a strike vote, which is normal," Hecker said. "I would assume if there's not an agreement when the contract expires, we'd walk out."

But he said he was "optimistic that we're going to be able to reach an agreement by Friday."

"We're at the proper point we should be at this stage in the negotiations," he said.

Deere spokesman Bob Combs would not comment on the progress of negotiations or whether a strike may be averted.

Police

A Coralville woman was charged with assault with the intent to cause injury and carrying a weapon Sunday, for allegedly fighting with another woman and concealing a kitchen knife in her vehicle, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Wanda Lee Newson, 45, of 508 Fifth St., allegedly initiated a physical confrontation with the victim and threatened her. The knife Newson allegedly concealed then displayed during the altercation had a blade over eight inches long, according to court records.

Newson was released from custody on her own recognizance. She was instructed not to have any contact with the victim. A preliminary hearing is set for Oct. 14, according to court records.

Report: An Iowa City pedestrian reported harassment from a motorist Tuesday at 8:00 a.m. at Melrose and Grand avenues, according to police reports.

The pedestrian said the motorist aimed his car at him, attempting to scare him and also honked and yelled at him, according to the report.

The driver was a white male in his thirties or forties, wearing a suit and tie, and was driving a brown Chevy Citation, according to the report.

Report: A man walked through a house at 118 E. Bloomington St. early Monday, according to police reports.

The man entered the front door, walked through the house and exited through the back door, according to the report.

Report: An Iowa City man reported seeing a strange man in old St. Patrick's School, located on the corner of Linn and Court streets, according to police reports.

The Iowa City man reported seeing a flickering light on the second floor, which may be a candle, according to the report. A broken basement window may provide access to the building, according to the report.

The strange man was described as a white male, 5 feet 9 inches, with curly black hair and bare feet, according to the report. The complainant said he had seen the man before.

Report: An Iowa City man was charged with public intoxication Tuesday, according to police reports.

Robert G. Myers, 29, 331 N. Gilbert St., was picked up on the corner of N. Market Square Park, Church Street, according to the report.

A book chronicling the history of the UI Lambda Chi chapter and her experiences with the fraternity.

"The book is about a lot of things," she said. "It is about the university, about the greek system, about the university and about me."

Thirty years ago, housemothers were mandatory for UI fraternities and sororities. Now, Bendt said many fraternities ignore advice from their national organizations and refuse to hire housemothers or directors.

"A lot of chapters now say they can't afford to have a housemom," she said. "I say they can't afford not to."

According to Bendt, the absence of housemothers is not the only thing that has changed about the UI greek system since 1958.

"Everything is entirely different," Bendt said. "The system is a lot more informal now."

"Sometimes now there is a lack of respect," Bendt said. "The girls as well as the boys kind of scoff at the things that were popular in the 'good old days.' Now there's alcohol, there's dope, there's sex."

Bendt said when she took the job, liquor was not permitted in the chapter house and hazing was common in many fraternities on campus.

"Hazing never had any advantage as far as I was concerned, even when I was in college," Bendt said. "Now, I think people are paying attention to it and have found out that it is wrong. I think it has been curtailed well at this university."

One thing that hasn't changed is Bendt's faith in the greek system.

"It is a definite plus to join a greek house, but what someone does with it is up to them," she said. "I've always said through all of the changes, I don't despair of this generation."

Bendt said her faith in the system and the men of Lambda Chi was reinforced by the fire that engulfed the Lambda Chi chapter house on the eve of last year's formal rush.

Although their house was almost completely destroyed by the blaze, the members decided to go on with rush week.

The support Lambda Chi members received from the UI greek system helped ease losses from the fire, Bendt said.

"It was a terrible thing, but it shows how people pull together in a crisis," she said. "Whenever there is a crisis the greek system is ready to help, and that is an honorable thing."

Being housemother to a fraternity full of college-age men can be demanding at times, but Bendt said she is not ready to give up the job yet.

"I don't tell my age, because age is just a state of mind," Bendt said. "I don't feel very old yet. I've grown accustomed to the lifestyle."

"Under the circumstances, I perform pretty well," she said. "As long as I'm mentally alert and physically capable, I'm going to stay with it as best I can. That's the most anybody can do."

"The GSL has been a big target of the Reagan administration for cut-backs," said Warner.

Vice President George Bush has a different approach to the student loan problem, urging the creation of tax-free savings bonds as an incentive for families to save for college. Income for such bonds would be free from federal taxation if used toward college tuition.

"Bush's program has serious flaws," Sommerwell said. "Dukakis' proposal solves the problem in the current system, which is collection. Bush doesn't deal with the problem."

Warner questioned who would really benefit from Bush's program. "Those who need loans the most probably couldn't afford the bonds to begin with," he said.

But Dukakis' STARS is not without its problems, Warner said.

"There is no indication right now of what incentive a bank would have to make such loans," he said.

Under current loan programs, the government pays the interest on the loan while students are in college. The Dukakis proposal has not made that provision, Warner said.

"If Dukakis took government interest assistance out of the loan program, it wouldn't be a good move," said Buchele. "In order for banks to support his program, Dukakis would have to include government assistance."

But the UI's fee is still relatively small compared to those at other universities, according to Sarah Stocks, an employee at the UI Recreation Services office.

"At most universities you have to pay a user's fee in addition to paying each time you use the pool," Stocks said. "Before we charged, people were astonished that they could swim for free."

Fees were initiated at the pool as a result of reduced Student Senate funding and stagnant UI funding, Beemer said.

"We went to the fee system to make money," he said. "Student Senate has cut us way back and we haven't gotten any additional money from the university for the past few years."

"We're averaging between $30 and $50 a session right now," Beemer said. "We'd be pretty happy if we could just pay for the expenses of the lifeguards."

Music

university and the collection there was full," she said. "The bulk of the music here is classical or baroque."

Another gripe which is commonplace among the music student body is the need for more music stands.

Michael Williams, a UI flute performance and journalism major, said he has spent up to 15 minutes on any given day searching for a music stand so he can practice.

"Now I just carry my own," he said.

Williams is also concerned with the condition of the practice rooms.

"The insulation is patchy in places, revealing the wall and causing echoes," he said. "It's hard to practice when you can hear other people playing their instruments."

These are all complaints that Somville hears and empathizes with, but she stresses there is nothing in her power or the department's power that can change the budget.

"Obviously these are things the students are affected by first and foremost," she said. "As to the practice rooms, attempts are being made to keep them repaired."

According to Somville, in comparson to other music schools, the UI fares quite well in many departments.

"Our budget hasn't affected our teaching assistant and scholarship programs, and our faculty is dedicated," she said.

In order to increase this year's enrollment, which is the highest it has been in years, and maintain its level of motivation and creativity in the years to come, Somville has joined with other faculty members in a concerted effort to create a stable faculty.

William Preucil, UI viola professor, explained that due to budget constraints, the music department is given a yearly allotment of how many faculty members can be hired. He said hiring decisions can often times be difficult.

"Using a musical metaphor, I'd like to say we have to exist within the framework of an orchestra," Preucil said.

"All the programs are interdependent. For example, if the choral and opera departments are deprived of a substantial faculty, students will fail to enroll in the programs and they won't be able to function," he said. "If a program fails, it will undermine the entire department."

Filling faculty vacancies has been a priority with Somville, who hires professors on a yearly basis to take over certain positions until the department is able to hire faculty on a long-term basis.

"Of course it would be wonderful if we could hire more faculty members for longer periods of time," she said. "But the quality of teaching is still high."

Somville refers directly to Mark Weiger, an oboe professor who is presently teaching under a one-year contract, filling the position that was left vacant when long-time oboe professor James Lakin passed away last spring.

"He's doing just a brilliant job recruiting," Somville said.

Realizing the ability to recruit talented music students must stem from the department's inner strengths, Somville emphasizes the importance of the serious reviews the UI School of Music has undergone.

"We're definitely in a rebuilding period," she said. "And now we are able to prioritize our needs and build for the future."

County may move patients

By Jean Thilmany
The Daily Iowan

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors will consider moving mental health patients to a new facility in light of an escalating overcrowding and understaffing problem at the Mount Pleasant Mental Health Institute.

During its Tuesday meeting, the board discussed the possibility of constructing a private Iowa City mental health facility for Johnson County residents.

Involuntarily committed mental health patients in Johnson County are sent to the Mount Pleasant state institution, according to Sheila Dark, director of the Midwestern Mental Health Center's community support services.

The three other state institutes are in Independence, Cherokee and Clarinda.

A Des Moines Register article that appeared Sept. 26 called the Mount Pleasant institution, "the worst in Iowa," adding it was "dreadfully understaffed and morale among workers has hit rock bottom."

Supervisor Chairman Don Sehr said the board was aware of the institution's problems before the article appeared.

"It might look like we're jumping into this in response to what other people are doing, but we've been looking at the problem for several months," he said.

"(Concerns about the quality of care at the Mount Pleasant Mental Health Institute) constitute the general impression that the institute is no longer able to offer an acceptable level of care," Morrie Adams, chair of the board of social welfare, stated in a Sept. 19 letter to the board of supervisors.

The letter listed several reasons for concern including: understaffing, problems hiring and retaining psychologists, poor building maintenance, unsuccessful community placement, overcrowding, low staff morale and an unclear relationship between the mental health center and the Mount Pleasant prison facility.

"The institution will never get better," Adams told the board. "The other state facilities are functioning better than ours."

Adams said the unclear administrative relationship between the mental health institution and the Mount Pleasant prison facility may be one reason the institution was recently labeled the worst in Iowa.

"I certainly don't think mental patients should be next to a prison," he said.

According to the Des Moines Register article, the Mount Pleasant facility has 165 mental health beds and 580 prison inmates who live in

"The institution will never get better. The other state facilities are functioning better than ours." — Marrie Adams, Board of Social Welfare chair adjacent buildings surrounded by fences.

Adams recommended that Johnson County stop using the Mount Pleasant facility, but hesitated to name other available options.

"We're not supportive of the way people are being treated there," he said. "We're concerned with our accessibility, with whether or not we really know what's going on."

Johnson County mental health patients cannot be taken to another state institution because, "The system is stretched to the limit," according to Vern Kelley, executive director of Midwestern Mental Health Center. "There is no bed available in the state," Kelley said.

Supervisor Betty Ockenfels suggested adding psychiatric services to Iowa City's Mercy Hospital.

"We need to be dealing with this issue locally," she said. "Mercy already has a building, so we save a big cost right there. Plus, they're looking to branch out to new services."

Adding a psychiatric wing to Mercy Hospital is a question that has come up before, according to Dark. She said the idea must be approved by the hospital's board.

Only insured people would be able to use a private facility, Dark added. Uninsured patients would still have to stay in the Mount Pleasant state mental health institution.

A Mercy Hospital psychiatric ward is a feasible idea, according to Adams.

"It's not like we're trying to reinvent the wheel," he said. "We have existing models to study. We have to figure out where we're at financially."

Currently, the board pays the state for a patient's stay in the Mount Pleasant Mental Health Institute. In turn, the state funds the institution, Dark said.

The board of supervisors will further study the idea. Meanwhile, the board will write a letter to the Mount Pleasant institution expressing concern about the quality of mental health care patients receive there.

Questions raised over SEATS funding

By Jean Thilmany
The Daily Iowan

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors may begin billing Iowa City for the cost of transporting city residents who live at Chatham Oaks and use county transportation services.

The Johnson County Special Elderly and Handicapped Transport System currently makes daily stops at Chatham Oaks — which provides services for the mentally retarded, elderly and mentally ill — located on Rural Route 1, to pick up and drop off residents. Larry Olson, SEATS director, proposed dropping the midday runs while maintaining the 7:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. trips. Olson said SEATS riders have increased 25 percent over the past year, but still continues to employ one dispatcher.

"We've had one dispatcher whether we've had 130 or 230 riders," Olson said. "I'm trying to cut back some services because I'm trying to ease the pressure on the dispatcher."

Supervisor Dick Myers said the board is legally obligated to provide transportation to and from Chatham Oaks and will continue to fund the trips, no matter which facility transports the residents.

If SEATS does not continue service, he added, the board will give the transportation funds directly to Chatham Oaks. Chatham Oaks must then use those funds to transport residents to Iowa City.

Mary Donovan, Chatham Oaks administrator, said the facility would be hard pressed to provide the transportation itself.

She said Chatham Oaks owns two vans, one of which is used throughout the day for recreational purposes. The other one frequently needs repair.

"I wouldn't want to rely on the old van and I don't want to cut any recreational activities," she said.

Donovan said a city bus run to Chatham Oaks would help transport residents, but would not solve all the problems.

"It would help the more independent residents who don't need as much supervision as they get on the SEATS van," she said.

Myers said the board could bill Iowa City for the cost of transporting the Iowa City residents who live at Chatham Oaks.

"We need extra money no matter how you look at it — whether we have to hire a driver or a dispatcher," he said. "I propose we let SEATS stay in the transportation business and bill the city for the residents of Iowa City we pick up. It's one way of generating revenue."

The board tabled the proposal and will vote on it at a later date.

Drought, early harvest could lead to more soil erosion

DES MOINES (AP) — The Drought of 1988, which withered crops and is reducing fall harvests, now is leading to warnings of heightened risks of soil erosion before next spring's plantings.

Corn and soybean harvests are proceeding at a record pace in Iowa as farmers try to prevent further damage to crops that survived the drought, and conservationists said Tuesday they are concerned that will accelerate the schedule of fall tilling and other field work.

"There's a definite correlation between plowing or tilling in the fall and moisture loss," said James Gulliford, director of the Soil Conservation Division of the Iowa Department of Agriculture. "The best way to conserve that moisture is not to till."

Stripping away the residue of the last crop and turning the dirt over always carries with it the risk that wind and water erosion will carry off exposed topsoil.

"But this year's drought left the soil drier than usual. That means if the land is plowed it will be especially vulnerable to wind erosion," said Jim Ayen, state resource conservationist for the Soil Conservation Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, in an advisory urging farmers not to plow this fall.

"Anywhere there's been drought the risk of erosion is greater," said Scott Argabright, a conservation agronomist at the Soil Conservation Service's Midwest National Technological Center in Lincoln, Neb.

He said that in addition to unusually dry conditions, drought damage to crops reduced the residue left in the soil after the harvest, cutting the natural protection available to soil that is left unplowed.

Dry soil also is vulnerable to greater than usual water erosion.

"Each little raindrop is like a little bomb," says James Pingry, an agronomist at the U.S. Soil Conservation Service. Raindrops break bare soil into tiny particles and water then carries the particles away, he said.

Gulliford said fall field work is often prompted by a belief that some soil types can be better prepared for the spring by removing crop residue and turning the soil over, a practice he does not believe is supported by research.

Other farmers use as much time as available before bad weather sets in to prepare fields out of fears that a wet spring will delay preparations for planting.

"We don't feel there's proven economic evidence that fall plowing pays off," Gulliford says.

While Iowa farmland was saturated with moisture when last spring's planting season began, a report Monday said only 2 percent of the subsoil and 46 percent of the topsoil in the state had adequate moisture. A year ago, 81 percent of the subsoil and 90 percent of the topsoil in Iowa had adequate moisture and an additional 10 percent of the subsoil and 8 percent of the topsoil had surplus moisture.

How dry is it in the Midwest?

In Minnesota, the heaviest weekly rain of the year fell last week and was quickly soaked into the ground. Unlike downpours in normal times, there was very little standing water in fields.

In North Dakota, topsoil moisture is only 17 percent adequate and subsoil moisture is just 2 percent adequate. In Missouri, topsoil is 60 percent short of moisture, the supply of livestock water is 21 percent critically short and only 36 percent adequate.

Stewart Melvin, an agricultural engineer with Iowa State University, has said fall tillage also could interfere with how much moisture gets back into the soil.

"The drought has already done the deep tillage work. The cracks in glacial till soils will let a good rain infiltrate deep into the soil and recharge moisture levels. You want to leave those cracks open," Melvin said.

Glacial till soils, deposits formed by the passage of glaciers, are found throughout north central Iowa.

What's got conservationists concerned this fall is that the rapid harvesting will leave lots of extra time available for field work.

Normally by this time of year, just 9 percent of Iowa's corn and 7 percent of the state's soybeans have been harvested.

But this year's corn crop already was 36 percent harvested at the start of the week, with almost half the crop harvested in the northwest part of the state. The soybean crop was 30 percent harvested, with 46 percent of the work completed in central Iowa.

With the harvest out of the way, an industrious farmer might begin field work for next spring, said Pingry.

"We definitely would encourage them not to do this," he said.

Avenson keys in on legislative races

DES MOINES (AP) — House Speaker Don Avenson on Tuesday warned Democratic activists to "just say no" to early stirrings for the 1990 race for governor, saying it's a dangerous diversion from this year's congressional and legislative elections.

While Democrats control both chambers of the Legislature by comfortable margins, Avenson said that control hinges on winning a relative handful of elections which will be decided by a few hundred votes each.

Any distraction from that effort, he said, could cost Democrats in what's become their major power base in state government.

"It's not smart to overlook the fact that we win and lose this place by 2,000 or 3,000 or 4,000 votes," he said in an interview.

"I'm not out campaigning for governor; I'm not out feeling it out," he said. "I have one goal in mind right now, and that's re-electing a majority party in the General Assembly. One thing at a time. Then I can turn my attention to something else."

Avenson is a frequently mentioned Democratic candidate for governor and in the past has said he wanted to spend a summer and fall testing the waters before deciding sometime after this year's election.

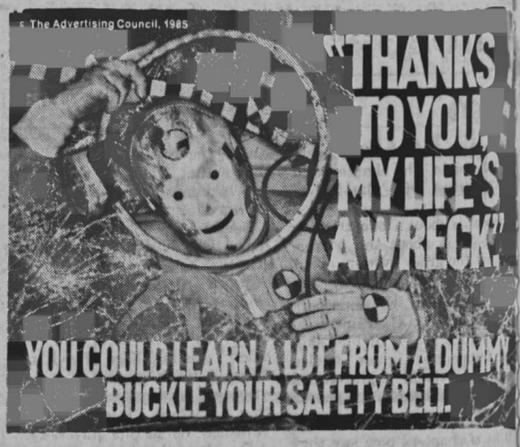

But he said Tuesday that any distraction from legislative re-election efforts could be disastrous.

"We ought not be thinking about 1990," said Avenson, adding some advice for party activists. "If somebody asks you for support in 1990, just say no. We've got other things to do right now."

In making his point, Avenson used a football analogy, focusing on the troubles which have hit the UI this season.

"I'm pretty sure that a couple of times this fall, Iowa has looked beyond the opponents they faced," he said. "I don't want to make that mistake."

Democrats control the House by a 58-42 margin and the Senate 29-21.

State tax records sought to find drug profiteers

DES MOINES (AP)—The head of the Senate Judiciary Committee is drafting legislation to give drug investigators broad new powers to obtain confidential tax information about suspects.

Civil liberties groups are wary of the effort, citing privacy rights, and Sen. Don Doyle, D-Sioux City, said he has not decided if he will push for approval.

"It will be controversial," Doyle said.

Doyle said the proposal is aimed at aiding investigations in cases where police have a suspect who is living well but has no apparent income and authorities suspect drug profiteering.

"It's for the 'no visible means of support' type people who have two cars in the driveway and the house is paid for, but they never go to work," said Doyle.

The measure would allow authorities access to state tax records in an effort to determine if the possessions are "fruits of the crime" and can be linked to drug dealing.

Tax returns are among the most confidential documents government collects, and their release is strictly prohibited by law.

Earl Willits, a spokesperson for Attorney General Tom Miller, said police can obtain those records during criminal investigations, but the standards they must meet are strict, and they aren't available through routine means such as subpoenas.

Cyssa Farley of the Iowa Civil Liberties Union said her group would not take an official position until the proposed legislation has been drafted, but she was wary.

Firms may expand, ISU survey states

AMES (AP) — Two out of three Iowa manufacturers say they plan an expansion during the next three years, according to a survey that an Iowa State University researcher says reflects an improved attitude toward the state.

The survey compiled by ISU's Center for Industrial Research and Service also indicated that Iowa's transportation and worker training programs, once sore points with industry, are no longer considered major irritants.

David Swanson, director of the industrial arm of the university's extension service, said Tuesday that 66 percent of the Iowa manufacturers responding to the latest survey said they plan to expand their manufacturing capabilities in the next three years. Such expansions could include adding facilities, equipment or employees.

Of those planning expansions, 74 percent said they would only add to Iowa operations, 13 percent said expansions would take place in and out of the state, 12 percent said they were expanding only outside Iowa and 1 percent did not elaborate, Swanson said.

The center mailed a seven-page questionnaire to 4,096 manufacturing operations in Iowa in December 1987 and received 905 completed surveys early this year. It was the fifth in a series of surveys conducted approximately every two years.

Currently, about 30 percent of the business inquiries to the center concern new product development, new markets or research and development, up from just 5 percent in 1979, he said.

The survey said approximately 62 percent of the Iowa manufacturers responding spend some of their "Manufacturers are happier with the state than they have been. We're trying to do things to help them." — David Swanson, ISU Extension Service industrial director sales dollars on product development and 46 percent spend sales dollars for research. But almost half of those engaged in research just spend 1 percent of sales for that effort, the survey said.

The survey listed taxes as the No. 1 problem area executives said they expected in the next two years, the same as a 1979 survey.

Disappointment with Iowa's transportation network and its worker training programs, high on problem lists from 1979, were rarely mentioned in the new survey. Instead, businesses identified major problem areas, other than taxes, as obtaining product liability insurance and coping with government regulation.

But Swanson said manufacturers rated the Iowa business climate slightly better than it was five years ago.

Thirty percent said the business climate was better, while 22.6 percent said it was worse.

"Manufacturers are happier with the state than they have been," Swanson said. "We're trying to do things to help them."

Reagan bids allies farewell

UNITED NATIONS (AP)—President Ronald Reagan said farewell Tuesday to West European and Asian allies with an appeal that they shoulder more of their joint defense burden.

His message, summed up at a news conference by Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne Ridgway, was: "More can be done."

But even while praising the president for his commitment to the North Atlantic alliance, the allies insisted that, for the most part, they were carrying a fair share.

The allies stressed their contributions to economic development in the Third World, Ridgway said.

The 75-minute session, on the periphery of the U.N. General Assembly meeting, was marked by "a very positive note of confidence" and the notion of "staying strong" and in common usage," Ridgway said.

Reagan met with the leaders of 15 U.S. allies in NATO and of Australia, South Korea and Japan as he wound up a two-day visit to the United Nations, his seventh and last visit to the world body.

He also held separate sessions with Foreign Ministers Mohammed Yaqub Khan of Pakistan and Narasimha Rao of India.

Secretary of State George Shultz, meanwhile, called on the Soviet-backed government in Afghanistan to halt its air raids in Pakistan. He said they violated the Geneva agreements concluded last April for the withdrawal of the Soviet army from Afghanistan.

Using Soviet jet fighters, the Afghans have penetrated farther than ever before in trying to interrupt U.S. aid that is channeled to guerrillas through Pakistan.

Shultz also rejected a Soviet proposal for a four-way meeting of the United States, the Soviet Union, Afghanistan and Pakistan.

"We don't recognize the regime that constitutes itself in Kabul right now as the legitimate government of Afghanistan," Shultz said.

But Shultz said the United States accepted a proposal by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze for a meeting on Afghanistan on Friday by the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council.

Reagan's appeal to the allies to increase their defense spending is one that American presidents have made persistently for years.

In reply, the allied leaders stressed their economic contributions to developing countries. Japan, and possibly others, are outdistancing the United States in this respect.

She said that Reagan, who leaves office in less than four months, told the allied leaders that "prosperity and security are inextricably linked."

13 indicted in Contra affairs

MIAMI (AP)—Two long-awaited indictments accusing a private network of illegally supplying mercenaries and arms to the Contras steered clear of thorny questions about the group's links to the Reagan administration or drug trafficking.

The indictments also left other questions unanswered.

Thirteen men are accused of having violated the U.S. Neutrality Act by mounting an illegal campaign to help the Contras overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

The defendants include the brother of a top Contra leader, the head of the group called Civilian Materiel Assistance and at least two men reputed to have drug ties.

The latest development in the case is the government's response, filed Sept. 16, to defense contentions that the Neutrality Act does not apply because the United States was effectively at war with Nicaragua.

But the U.S. attorney's office avoided confronting that issue directly in its response, saying the matter should be decided in trial, not during a special hearing requested by the defendants.

Other unresolved issues include possible Reagan administration oversight of the illegal activities, the question of drug ties to the operation, the absence of key figures among those indicted and the sluggish pace of the investigation, which covered events in 1984 and 1985.

"The biggest question is who were the people not indicted," says Jack Blum, special counsel to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which is preparing a report on a parallel investigation.

"They are prosecuting the weakest players who, by and large, were not the movers," Blum said. For example, he notes, testimony from his committee traced connections between CMA, former National Security Council aide Oliver North and military intelligence, but the indictment stopped with CMA head Tom Posey.

Two of the men who were indicted, ex-mercenary Jack Terrell and Joe Adams, were the most candid witnesses before prosecutors and congressional committees, he notes. They and other defendants claim they were working with the knowledge and cooperation of the government.

Interim U.S. Attorney Dexter Lehtinen has indicated that issues involving North and other higher-ups in the Reagan administration are in the hands of the Independent Counsel's office in Washington.

Lehtinen's assistant, Richard Gregorie, said that when some names came up in their investigation, the special prosecutor told the Miami office that the subjects had immunity.

A key figure missing from the indictment is John Hull, a U.S. citizen whose Costa Rican ranch was identified by congressional witnesses as a base for military operations against neighboring Nicaragua — as well as a way station for cocaine traffickers.

B-1B bomber proposal submitted

WASHINGTON (AP)—A defense contractor has told the Air Force the defensive systems on the problem-plagued B-1B atomic bomber can be fixed for another $520 million and the service is deciding whether to approve the plan, spokesmen for the contractor and the Air Force said Tuesday.

"We have submitted a proposal for that price and we can complete the equipment to bring it to full specifications," said Charles Barron, a representative of Eaton Corp.

The $520 million would be in addition to the $3.5 billion already paid by the Air Force to Eaton to improve the B-1B's electronic systems.

Air Force Maj. Gen. Michael Hall said the service had received Eaton's proposal "in the last month. We're studying it, and we're also studying alternatives."

"We're going to put together a plan by the end of the year," Hall said.

The comments came at a seminar sponsored by Boston University to discuss the B-1B, which has been the center of skirmishing between the Air Force and critics who complain about the new plane's capabilities.

The B-1 program was canceled by President Jimmy Carter in 1977, but resurrected in 1981 by President Ronald Reagan, who said 100 of the swing-wing jets would be purchased, along with the new "stealth" B-2 bombers.

Reagan promised that 100 B-1Bs would cost no more than $20.5 billion in 1982 dollars, or $28 billion in current dollars.

All 100 B-1Bs have been delivered to the Air Force, but congressional critics charge that the service is now having to upgrade the electronic countermeasures to keep the plane from being shot down if it attacks the Soviet Union.

Pentagon officials have steadfastly defended the plane and did so again Tuesday.

Slavic students boycott schools in protest

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — About 10,000 Slavic students boycotted high schools Tuesday in Kosovo, sources said, and an estimated 80,000 people rallied in Serbia to protest alleged persecution of Slavs in the southern province.

The students joined a school boycott that began in Kosovo's provincial capital of Pristina last Thursday to protest purported harassment by ethnic Albanian classmates, said the sources in Pristina, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At the rally in the Serbian city of Cacak, 75 miles southwest of Belgrade, demonstrators demanded that leaders responsible for the trouble in Kosovo be held accountable, the official Tanjug news agency reported.

"The people have said what they had to say, now it is up to the Central Committee of the League of Communists (Communist Party) to take action," Bole Lukic, a local Communist leader, told cheering protesters.

Gorbachev asks U.S. to stop arming rebels

MOSCOW — Mikhail Gorbachev asked the United States and Pakistan on Tuesday to "come to their senses" and stop arming guerrillas fighting the Afghan government.

He said Pakistan was trying to install leaders in Afghanistan to its own liking, no matter what the Afghan people want. He alleged, in remarks carried by the official Tass news agency, that the United States has been increasing deliveries of weapons to the guerrillas, including Stinger missiles.

"Do they (Pakistan and the United States) not contradict the spirit of the Geneva accords and the interests of a peace settlement?" the Soviet leader asked. "This is a very serious thing, and we have a right to expect Pakistan and the U.S. to come to their senses and give up adventurist actions."

Polish parliament names new prime minister

WARSAW, Poland — Parliament on Tuesday named Mieczyslaw Rakowski as prime minister, and the party propaganda chief and foe of the Solidarity labor movement asked for two weeks to build a broader-based government.

The choice of Rakowski came less than a month before talks between the government and Solidarity on reviving Poland's economy and considering whether the outlawed labor federation should be legalized.

Israeli warplanes attack Shiite bases

NABATIYEH, Lebanon — Israeli warplanes attacked pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem guerrilla bases in south Lebanon on Tuesday, police reported, in Israel's 15th air attack on Lebanon this year.

Police said they were unable to compile a casualty report from the 10-minute raid by two jet fighters on bases of Hezbollah, or Party of God, in pine woods near the Christian town of Jezzine.

Hezbollah gunners opened up with anti-aircraft guns as the jets staged their dive-bombing sorties at 11:30 a.m. on targets about 30 miles south of Beirut. There were no hits, police said.

Flight attendant: Hamadi didn't kill sailor

FRANKFURT, West Germany — A flight attendant testifying at the murder and air piracy trial of Mohammed Ali Hamadi said Tuesday that Hamadi's accomplice killed a U.S. Navy diver aboard a hijacked TWA airliner.

The attendant, Hazel Hesp, said hijacker Hassan Ezzeddine killed diver Robert Stethem after the TWA jet was commandeered June 14, 1985.

The testimony contradicted that of John Testrake, the plane's pilot, who told the court he believed Hamadi was the hijacker who killed Stethem.

Hesp also testified that Ezzeddine claimed a friend of his had carried out the bombing mission that killed 241 U.S. servicemen in Beirut in 1983.

Study: AIDS infects one victim a minute

LONDON — The AIDS virus appears to be spreading at the rate of one victim a minute worldwide, with 150,000 new AIDS cases likely this year, according to a report published Tuesday by an independent study group.

The Panos Institute report, "AIDS and the Third World," also said an increasing number of countries are imposing AIDS-related restrictions on the entry of foreigners or citizens returning from abroad.

"Worldwide, it seems likely that a new person becomes infected with the HIV (AIDS) virus every minute," said the 200-page report.

"During 1988, 150,000 new cases of full-blown AIDS are expected — as many as are thought to have occurred in all the years of the epidemic so far."

Market Business in Brief

Japan unveils Latin American debt proposal

BERLIN (AP) — Japan took another step Tuesday in its effort to become a leader in world economic policies by unveiling a proposal for easing the Latin American debt problem.

But U.S. Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady gave a cool reception to the plan, which is seen by some as a rival to the Reagan administration's own "Baker Plan."

The Japanese proposal, presented at the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, calls for some Latin debt to be converted into bonds and payment terms on the rest of the loans to be lengthened "under appropriate conditions."

To back up the billions of dollars in loans, the debtor countries could set up special reserve accounts to be held in trust by the IMF, Bank of Japan Governor Satoshi Sumita said in outlining the proposal.

Sumita said the countries also would have to agree to make IMF-backed changes in their policies to foster economic growth.

Over the past several months, Japan has increased its help for Third World countries trying to deal with their foreign debts.

Debtor countries "continue to bear a staggering debt load and the situation remains serious," Sumita said.

Poor weather may cloud shuttle liftoff

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A new NASA launch directorate met Tuesday to clear the shuttle Discovery for its Thursday liftoff, hearing an "excellent review" of the $1.5 billion spacecraft's readiness — but holding off giving a go-ahead for the final countdown.

"In general, the whole picture is very good for going flying the day after tomorrow," said former astronaut Robert Crippen, who heads the launch oversight panel created to overcome management problems that contributed to the 1986 Challenger disaster.

Crippen said the group was focusing on two items and needed to be certain neither would imperil NASA's first manned mission in 32 months.

Launch is scheduled for 9:59 a.m. EDT on Thursday, with the final countdown to begin early Wednesday evening. "The weather is probably the biggest question mark," said Crippen.

Cloud-covered skies and Atlantic winds loomed, as always, as a possible threat. Air Force spokesman Mike Beeman forecast "a 20 percent probability of bad weather at launch time," but added, "That's pretty low." Historically, launches have been delayed 40 percent of the time because of weather.

Discovery's five astronauts went over their flight plan and relaxed with their wives as the ship sat surrounded by work platforms on launch pad 39B. Heat shields, removed for engine check-out, were back in place and engineers checked guidance and navigation systems. Inside the cargo bay: the Tracking and Data Relay Satellite to be placed in orbit just six hours after launch. A similar satellite was destroyed in the Challenger catastrophe.

One of the hardware items still in question was an O-ring in the satellite propulsion system. The other involved a small jet thruster aboard the orbiter itself — a component that could be bypassed if need be.

The $100 million data-relay satellite had already been approved for flight when NASA discovered a problem with similar hardware being prepared for flight next February.

Crippen said an examination of the inertial upper stage rocket that boosts the satellite to its final orbit indicated damage in the O-ring that seals the pressure needed to gain thrust for orbit.

Fanning flames

Almost a year ago, in the town of Wappinger Falls in upstate New York, a horrible crime was apparently perpetrated against a young black girl named Tawana Brawley.

Brawley was found Nov. 28 in a garbage dumpster in the town smeared with feces, dazed and with racial slurs written on her body. She alleged she was gang raped by five white men, one of them a police officer.

The case attracted nationwide attention, and divided New York along racial lines. Bill Cosby and Mike Tyson both offered a reward for information about the incident, and prominent New York and national officials, black and white, denounced the crime.

But the attempt to find out the details of the crime against Brawley was stalled when she refused to testify before a grand jury about what had happened to her, on the advice of her three "advisers" — lawyers C. Vernon Mason and Alton Maddox and the Rev. Al Sharpton, a community activist.

The three alleged that the New York court system was racist, and remained unsatisfied even after Gov. Mario Cuomo asked New York Attorney General Robert Abrams to take charge of the case. In fact, Sharpton compared Abrams to Hitler and Mason and Maddox accused him of covering up to protect several prominent white officials, including a Wappinger Falls district attorney. Now it looks as if there actually was a cover up in the Brawley case. But it wasn't by Abrams or any other white official. A grand jury, assembling evidence over a seven month period, has decided that Brawley fabricated her story, possibly because she feared she would be beaten at home.

The grand jury is expected within weeks to issue a final report saying it has found no evidence of any abduction, racial or sexual attack or any other crime against Brawley, according to the The New York Times.

The behavior of Mason, Maddox and Sharpton was bad enough when it looked like there might be something to Brawley's story. The fact that it is apparently false, and the fact that at least one of Sharpton's former advisers claims the three knew it was false, suggests something even worse — that the three were using the case solely to inflame racial passions in New York, without regard to whether there was any truth to the accusations.

There is no doubt that racism is still a major problem in this country, or that the criminal justice system does still show some degree of bias against minorities. But the actions of the three Brawley advisers will, ironically, only hurt those who are legitimately trying to fight racism. The cover up apparently perpetrated by Sharpton, Mason and Maddox has succeeded in escalating racial tension as much as any act by bigoted whites would have.

President's men

From the opening bell of the first great presidential debate of 1988, George Bush stuffed his silver foot firmly in his mouth. He was aided, however, by his advisers — those speech writers, media consultants and chiefs of staff on whom he leans.

In his opening argument on the "number one" domestic issue — drugs — he used the flawed and circular logic for which he is gaining fame, and made his stance on the issue as clear as purple haze.

After he opened with the conclusion that "we've seen a deterioration in values," George proceeded to justify his assertion by claiming: "For a while as a nation, we condoned those things we should have condemned," implying that in the past we, as a nation, were lax on drugs. In the past we spent too much time pursuing the hedonistic pleasures illegal drugs offer, while the government did little to stem either the demand for or supply of drugs. We are now, however, engaged in one of the most intensive anti-drug purges since prohibition.

George continued: "For a while, there was talk of legalizing, or decriminalizing, marijuana and other drugs." One of the efforts of the Reagan administration's war on drugs has been to talk not only of eradicating drugs from the face of the earth, but also of killing convicted drug dealers. Americans are loudly echoing these sentiments. Certainly, this exhibits not a deterioration in values but an exponential regeneration of values.

George's logic — or more precisely the logic of his advisers — was twisted. America is experiencing a resurgence in values, and not a degeneration as George Bush claims. It is unfortunate that the next president of the United States — especially one basing his campaign upon the "successes" of his predecessor — should arrive at a conclusion contrary to his argument by depending on the illogic of a subordinate.

Following an administration that not only thrived on illogic but also was overly dependent on subordinate advisers, George Bush should rely less on advisers and more on the experience, values and judgement of which he is so proud.

If he is to be a great president and not simply another frontispiece for a house of misguided, overzealous advisers, George should spend less time saying what he is told and more time saying what he means. For if the mistakes of the Reagan era are to be vindicated, the next president will have to govern by the words of Harry Truman and remember that the buck stops on his desk and not down the hall.

John Lennon is attacked again

Paul McCartney has called for a boycott of Albert Goldman's book "The Lives of John Lennon."

As usual, Paul is a little late. Across the nation, thousands of the faithful have taken it upon themselves to protest in various ways the Goldman book and its shocking portrait of John Lennon as a madman, junkie, philanderer, bisexual, wifebeater, murderer and all-around sleazebell.

And, as Goldman's book climbs to the very top of the best-seller lists there is every reason to believe these protests will continue.

Fans in several major cities have been picketing bookstores demanding that the books be removed from the shelves or, at the very least, be moved from non-fiction to fiction.

In Ponce, Fla., a couple dressed to resemble John and Yoko staged a "bed-in" at a Sealy Posturepedic factory outlet to protest the book and dramatize the need for more love and tolerance in the world, except as regards Albert Goldman.

In True Value, Ariz., a coalition of senior citizens' groups banded together and held a bake sale to raise money so they can buy copies of the book and then burn them.

At a Gaskin, Neb., shopping mall, teen-age volunteers collected more than 3,000 signatures on a petition demanding that Albert Goldman's membership in the human race be revoked.

In Blue Serge, Maine, the local radio station has adopted an "all-John" format and is encouraging listeners to send the money they would have spent on the book directly to Yoko Ono to help defray the cost of shoring up John's image.

And in Kalamazoo, Mich., there were reports that Elvis had been spotted leading the chanting at the public tarring and feathering of an Albert Goldman effigy.

Such have been the spontaneous reactions of ordinary people to Goldman's book, a work that presents a very different John Lennon than the one the world loved and adored: the smart Beatle, the perceptive social critic, the gentle househusband, the genius, the visionary, the most incredible talent in the entire fabulous, star-studded history of rock 'n' roll.

People everywhere are asking: "How could Goldman have done it?"

A woman carrying a sign reading "Not my John!" outside an Upshot, N.J., bookstore summed up the feelings of many Americans when she said, "I think he made it all up."

In the current issue of Whipsaw, rock and roll historian Evan Snade questions Goldman's claim that he based his book on more than 1,200 interviews with people who knew John, as well as interviews with the former Beatle himself. "Even if he did do those things," Snade writes, "I have always maintained you cannot let mere facts get in the way of the truth."

Lance Mallow, professor of pop studies at the State University of Upwind, California, feels that by emphasizing the unpleasant aspects of John's life, Goldman

"blew" a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to write a book that would have uplifted and inspired millions.

"Goldman misunderstands the role of the modern biographer," Mallow said, "which is not to blow down his subject but to show why he was so wonderful."

Syndicated radio psychologist Dr. Sandra Stump told her nationwide audience that Goldman's book is just an extreme manifestation of a "wave of negativity" currently sweeping the nation and even worse so far as to speculate that Goldman must be a Democrat.

And in Snapshot, R.I., Isabel Straw started a movement to elevate John to sainthood. Goldman said she did not read the Straw book nor did she plan to do so. "I don't have to read it to know it's not worth reading," she said. "I have always maintained that if you are planning to worship someone it makes sense not to know too much about him."

Write now!

To the Editor:

Fellow Students, once again in November, the Board of Regents will be meeting to decide on a tuition increase for Iowa's three universities. That meeting will take place on the campus of the University of Northern Iowa and we need your support now, more than ever before, to help discourage this decision. If you don't think this will affect you, take a look at this fact: Tuition has increased by 132 percent in the last 10 years.

You, as students, have an impact by simply writing a letter to the Board of Regents and expressing your opinion. It would also help if you would ask your parents to send a letter too. The more letters the Regents get, the better idea they get that the tuition increase is not only irrational, but unfair. Many of us attending Iowa's universities are from Iowa and we deserve the best education we can get and Iowa is the place to get it. Some may lose that opportunity next year, like many over the past 10 years have, if tuition is increased.

When the Board meets at UNI in November, Iowa and ISU will both be sending busloads of students to the meeting. We welcome you to UNI and hope to see as many of you as possible. Check The Daily Iowan for the date and the time of the meeting. Remember, taking five minutes to write a letter can make a difference. The address to write to is: Iowa Board of Regents Office — Lucas State Office — Des Moines, Iowa 50319.

Brainrot, perhaps

To the Editor:

To paraphrase a line in a recent editorial "Greenpeace," (The Daily Iowan, Sept. 19), something is rotten in the town of Iowa City, in the DI's inner-workings, some kind of brainrot, I would suggest.

As a long-time supporter of Greenpeace, I found the tone and the truth of the editorial really out of whack. According to Mr. Donoghue, "at first it was all very mannered and genteel." Excuse me, but what the multi-national, corporate, chemical, military-industrial complex is doing to Mother Earth and all of us is far from mannered and genteel — it is a total abomination.

The same system that brought the world Love Canal, Bhopal, Three Mile Island, napalm and the nuclear atrocity is really afraid of all radicals, especially of direct action radicals because they usually end up exposing the truth. From thwarting the whalers' efforts on the open seas to acting as witnesses and interferers at the nuclear test sites of the Pacific, and even through action in a local Mississippi river town, Greenpeace is hard at work.

Time and time again in their 17-year history, Greenpeace members have put their lives and their futures on the line with non-violent, direct action that reminds government and interests that the world is not theirs to destroy.

Mr. Donoghue finishes up his blast by saying Greenpeace ended up "looking like a bunch of mercenary, foul-tempered brats with too much time on their hands." Hey, these people are far from mercenary — they are dedicated individuals risking their lives for what is right. They're taking a stand for all of us, and like the peasants in India, literally hugging trees to stop deforestation.

We're talking about the volunteers of America, the Rainbow Warriors. We're talking about the survival of Mother Earth. But the DI is editorializing about "mature and open" Monsanto and the "mercenary brats" from Greenpeace. Come on, DI, get your act together before we all figure out where the mercenary brats are.

Another bright idea

To the Editor:

Closing the north entrance to the Main Library seems to us a rather meager effort at economizing: Why not close the south entrance as well? That would surely save even more money.

Laugh now

To the Editor:

Could you please take one more letter on the worn-out "Last Temptation of Christ" controversy? David Goodwin's letter (The Daily Iowan, Sept. 21) should not go untouched.

Why is it that one who attacks Jewish people is a bigot, one who attacks black people is a racist and one who attacks gay people is homophobic, while one who attacks Christians and the divinity of Christ is exercising "freedom of speech and expression"?

Mr. Goodwin, I am not going to be banging my Bible at you on the Pentacrest, nor am I going to meet you at the Bijou in 6 months with a picket sign in my hand. Irreligious, apathetic people like you are a dime a dozen and all I can say is laugh now.

Will's too right

To the Editor:

Poor Don DeLillo. Columnist George Will (Mr. Baseball, Apple pie and Ronald Reagan) has branded his latest novel "Libra," "an act of bad citizenship" because DeLillo depicts a dark side of America. Perhaps realizing the oddness and silliness of calling a novel an act of bad citizenship, Will also tries to prove DeLillo to be an unethical novelist.

DeLillo, he accuses, uses the raw materials of history (the Kennedy assassination) but doesn't stick to what's probable, doesn't write history. By these standards, there have been a good many unethical writers, with Shakespeare at the top of the list. Do Shakespeare's "history" plays stay within the historically probable? It's time that someone broke it to us, that accounts by historians (and themselves fictions, not novels perhaps, but not Truth).

Mr. Will doesn't like DeLillo's vision of America (after all, it's leftist). But clearly Will's vision of America, in which everyone wears red, white and blue, is as much a fiction as DeLillo's — and a more frightening one.

Tenure

I was quite disappointed in recent articles in The Daily Iowan, on the tenure process and women; special treatment of a complex important issue is always problematic. It is curious that second article relied largely statistics for Liberal Arts rather than university-wide statistics. Liberal Arts is one of two colleges with enough women to even compute annual tenures for women. (Medicine is other such college.) Also, implicit in the text that result of the tenure process gender-neutral is not supported by the figures for Liberal Arts. Sixty-two percent of men went up for tenure were promoted, compared to 50 percent women. The tenure rate women in the Business College the last four years combined zero, on a base of two. In a strict, tenure rate statistics do not tell the whole story. A number of junior faculty leave decline to apply for tenure because they know or are that they do not have a chance. While there probably is no intentional discrimination against women occurring in tenure process (a statement which several of my univ. colleagues might disagree), does not necessarily imply the result is gender-neutral. Indeed, there are at least facts which, if unchanged, continue to generate a severe under-representation of women in the tenured ranks.

The first fact is that the standards for promotion and tenure have increased dramatically the UI and many other institutions in the last five to ten years. While these higher standards may be equally applicable to men and women, their impact is not gender-neutral. One reason for this differential impact is academic women have been entering non-traditional fields (e.g. business) and the "sciences" in reasonable numbers only in the last five to 10 years.

Tenure process favors men

Cheryl Maranto

I was quite disappointed in recent articles in The Daily Iowan, on the tenure process and women; superficial treatment of a complex and important issue is always problematic. It is curious that the second article relied largely on statistics for Liberal Arts alone, rather than university-wide statistics. Liberal Arts is one of only two colleges with enough women to even compute annual tenure rates for women. (Medicine is the other such college.) Also, the implication in the text that the result of the tenure process is gender-neutral is not supported by the figures for Liberal Arts. Sixty-two percent of men who went up for tenure were promoted, compared to 50 percent of women. The tenure rate for women in the Business College in the last four years combined is zero, on a base of two. In addition, tenure rate statistics will not tell the whole story. A number of junior faculty leave or decline to apply for tenure because they know or are told that they do not have a chance.

While there probably is no overt or intentional discrimination against women occurring in the tenure process (a statement with which several of my university colleagues might disagree), this does not necessarily imply that the result is gender-neutral. Indeed, there are at least two facts which, if unchanged, will continue to generate a severe under-representation of women in the tenured ranks.

The first fact is that the standards for promotion and tenure have increased dramatically at the UI and many other institutions in the last five to seven years. While these higher standards may be equally applied to men and women, their impact is not gender-neutral. One reason for this differential impact is that academic women have been entering non-traditional fields (e.g. business and the "hard sciences") in reasonable numbers only in the last five to 10 years.

According to the National Science Foundation, 50-68 percent of all women who earned PhDs in science and engineering since 1960 received their degrees after 1979. For men, the comparable figure is about 28 percent. Rising tenure standards make it increasingly difficult for everyone to earn tenure. Past under-representation of women and minorities is thus perpetuated by rising tenure standards.

The second fact is that, women, on average, publish fewer articles than men. However, the scholarly quality of women's published works (measured by number of citations) is at least equal to men's. A recently completed study, done by myself and a colleague, using a national sample of men and women in psychology reached such a conclusion, as has every study of publishing productivity of which I am aware. We were unable to determine the extent to which this difference might be due to greater household and childcare responsibilities of women.

Potential explanations for the sex differential in the number of publications include greater service burdens, higher teaching loads, greater household and childcare responsibilities, broader research programs not amenable to an assembly-line approach, less access to, and support and advice from the "old boy" network, less willingness to neglect all non-professional aspects of one's life, and discrimination in the editorial review process. (There is evidence of discrimination against women in non-blind review journals.)

Jonathan Cole and Burton Singer at Columbia University have developed a "theory of limited differences" to explain both the sex productivity differential and the very large variances in productivity among all academics. (The most prolific 10-15 percent of academics produce about half of all articles.) Their model suggests that huge individual differences in productivity can be explained by the cumulative effects of a series of small, seemingly inconsequential events. If they are correct, any search for obvious causes of the sex productivity differential is unlikely to be successful. Whatever the causes of the differential, it is not due to less commitment by academic women to their careers. Women are far more likely than men to feel compelled to defer child-bearing until after tenure, judging by the relative numbers of junior men and women faculty with young children. Given that women tend to be older than men when they receive their PhDs, they risk not having children at all, for the sake of their careers. (The one-year tenure clock extension for women and men in Liberal Arts who are "co-equal care-givers" is a laudable first step. It is not yet a policy in all colleges, to my knowledge.)

In any event, the clear implication of the persistent difference in the number of articles published by men and women is that maintaining the current tenure standard of requiring a very large number of publications as a threshold to be met before considering the quality of the research, the quality of teaching, and the level of service, will slow and possibly reverse any progress in increasing the representation of women in the tenured ranks.

Dean Moll is sadly mistaken if he believes recruiting more women will be sufficient by itself to increase the representation of women among tenured faculty. It is also unclear whether the UI will be able to substantially increase the number of women faculty hired, judging by the recent past. A quote from the current North Central accreditation report is particularly relevant. "One statistic stands out: The number of women on the faculty has been consistent for the past five years. This lack of progress in the recruitment of women has occurred during a period when there has been a steady increase in the pool of excellent candidates for positions in an increasing variety of disciplines."

The faculty and administrators at the University of Iowa and other research institutions should seriously reconsider the basic question of what the appropriate standard for tenure should be. While teaching and research are not fundamentally incompatible, an exclusive emphasis on large numbers of research publications necessarily entails a sacrifice of teaching quality. Assistant professors here are given the message in many subtle and not so subtle ways that they should minimize the time and energy devoted to teaching.

People who manage to scale the tenure hurdle are then suddenly told that now teaching counts, although monetary and professional rewards remain almost exclusively research-oriented. The current tenure standard systematically weeds out many (though not all) well-balanced professors who do quality research, but also care about students, the institution and their families. Once senior faculty tenured under the old standard leave or retire, fewer and fewer balanced individuals will remain. I believe that the University of Iowa will be a poorer place when that occurs.

Hunting provides fine opportunity, challenge

Yes, Mr. Donoghue, archery season for whitetail deer opens October 1 in Iowa. This is not a rebuttal to your editorial, but merely a very few of my thoughts about hunting that I hope will give a few anti-hunters some idea of why I hunt. Please read this with an open mind, as I did yours.

First, some facts about Iowa's archery season: The Iowa Conservation Commission keeps records on the number of deer harvested each year. They also spend the entire year estimating Iowa's deer population through various animal survey methods. Over the last five years, the number of deer archery licenses issued in Iowa rose from 19,945 in 1983 to a high of 28,910 in 1987. The number of deer harvested each year by bow and arrow increased from 5,244 in 1983 to 9,722 in 1987, with a peak of 9,895 in 1986. During this same period of five years, the deer population in Iowa has risen an estimated 10 to 12 percent per year. The commission's goal is to decrease the population by increasing hunting pressure — a form of natural selection much more humane than starvation, and much more economical than moving the animals or feeding them, as you have proposed.

This is the time of year when hunters finish their last-minute preparations in anticipation of the approaching hunting season. Bowhunters continue practicing so if a shot presents itself, they can place their arrow accurately. They study the movement patterns of deer, explore the deer trails to predict which areas will be most active, and attempt to locate feeding and bedding grounds.

The hunt is a very small part of a hunting season, and the kill is a very small part of the hunt. My father, through his example, has been teaching me respect for firearms and wildlife since I was old enough to point a stick at a sparrow. I shot my first rabbit with my own shotgun when I was only seven years old. I shot my first deer when I was 14. When I was 16, I began bowhunting deer to lengthen my hunting season. A non-hunter cannot understand the events leading to a kill or the feelings of the hunter during that moment. I can only say that when all the planning and hunting culminates in a successful harvest, I approach the animal with sadness, respect, and pride.

When the harvest is over, lifelong memories are not of the kill, but of the sights, sounds, smells, and feelings experienced during the pursuit: the bright-colored cardinal's song; the loud rustling of leaves that starts your heart pounding, only to reveal itself as a nut-gathering squirrel; a good dog on point, surrounded by the whir and whistling of a covey of quail flushing beneath her nose; the brilliant sunsets that bring that last half-hour of complete silence to the timber.

Randy Gipple

Even though in my ten years of bowhunting I have only harvested four animals, I have never left the timber disappointed. I return home fulfilled, humbled, and looking forward to my next day. It is because of the animal that I spend so much time in the timber. It is because of my pursuit of the whitetail, or the pheasant, or the antelope, or the turkey that I experience the gift of the outdoors and can return to the indoors with a sane mind and a clear purpose.

The great majority of hunters are not the "slobs" that you describe, but are people like myself. Good hunters are not killers. They are outdoorsmen, conservationists, environmentalists, and confident, successful people. So, to borrow from Mr. Donoghue's uneducated editorial, the season's greeting is: Ban "brain-damaged slob" arts/entertainment editors.

Touch The Earth Outdoor Program

The Touch the Earth program is designed to give anyone with interest and inclination towards a particular activity the chance to participate. Experience in the activity is not necessary. Most trips are of short duration, consisting of a single day or weekend. Several highlight trips of longer duration are always offered.

Fall Semester 1988

Trip Name	Date	Cost	Sec. #
Kayaking, Wolf River	9/9-11/88	$85	001
Rock Climbing, Devils Lake	9/9-11/88	$50	002
Rock Climbing, Devils Lake	9/30-10/2/88	$50	003
Bicycle Trip, Elroy/Sparta	10/1-2/88	$45	004
Bicyc Trip, Cedar Valley	10/9/88	$12	No Credit
Bicyc Trip, Heritage Trail	10/21-22/88	$35	005
Backpacking, Kettle Moraine State Forest	10/21-23/88	$40	006
Spelunking, Mines of Spain	10/29/88	$20	No Credit

Cost

The cost listed for each trip includes travel, equipment, and food unless otherwise stated. The group generally decides departure and arrival times at the pretrip meeting. Meals purchased while traveling are not covered by the trip expense.

Registration

Registration dates listed with each flyer reflect the earliest possible time a spot can be reserved. It is best to register as early as possible, since most trips are limited in the number of people that will be accepted. Full payment is expected at the time of registration unless otherwise stated.

Credit

Leisure Studies credit may be obtained for Touch the Earth Outdoor Programs (104:148). Registration for this class credit must be made on or before the last day to add classes each semester. Special permission must be obtained from Wayne Felt to be eligible for credit. Because of the nature of the courses, it is recommended that they be taken on a pass/nonpass basis. The trips and seminars for the 1988-89 academic year are listed below along with the dates and cost of each trip. More information can be obtained in E216 Field House between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. on by calling 335-9293.

Bush unveils tax-break plan

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Republican George Bush, criticized for advocating tax breaks for the wealthy, proposed a plan Tuesday that would offer tax-deferred interest to low and middle-income Americans on long-term savings deposits.

Bush said such "individual savings accounts" would help the nation "gain better control over our long-term economic future" by increasing savings.

"Americans have increasingly gotten away from the sensible frugality that says, 'put some away for a rainy day,'" Bush said.

He unveiled the proposal before the Ohio Republican State Convention on his second visit to Columbus in 11 days. The state, offering a prize of 23 electoral votes, is a key battleground in the election fight.

"I need to carry Ohio to win the presidency of the United States of America," Bush declared earlier in the day at a rally before thousands of cheering students at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio.

He also planned to campaign in Owensboro, Ky., before heading to Illinois, where he will take part in a bus tour on Wednesday.

As described by Bush, the savings plan would allow interest to accumulate tax deferred for funds put on deposit for at least five years. A maximum of $1,000 a year could be deposited.

When withdrawn, the interest would be taxed at the saver's tax rate then in effect.

Michael Boskin, a Stanford University economist who advises Bush's campaign, offered this example: If a person put $1,000 into such an account and if it paid about 8 percent annual interest, that would yield about $80 in interest income.

For those in the 15 percent tax bracket, that would defer some $12 in taxes the first year, slightly more in later years. It would cost the Treasury about $70 million in 1989 if that were the first year in effect, growing to $550 million by 1993, Bush's campaign estimated.

The full interest deduction would be available only to taxpayers with adjusted gross incomes of less than $50,000 a year. Taxpayers with adjusted incomes of $60,000 or more would not be eligible for the program.

Bush's campaign staff estimated that more than 8 million Americans would take advantage of the plan.

"They will be helping themselves become better able to afford a home, pay for college or start a business, and they will be helping America — by increasing investment and economic growth," Bush said.

Bush has been repeatedly attacked by Dukakis for advocating a cut in the capital gains tax from its current level of 28 percent down to 15 percent.

In Sunday's debate, Dukakis said Bush was proposing "a tax cut for the wealthiest 1 percent of the people in this country — an average of about $30,000 that we're going to give to people making $200,000 a year."

Dukakis defends social stand

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Democrat Michael Dukakis, appealing to "mainstream Americans," assailed George Bush on Tuesday as an enemy of Social Security and Medicare who might cut both programs.

The Democratic presidential nominee traveled to the city that has become a symbol of middle America to combat his Republican rival's suggestion that he is outside the nation's mainstream.

"If you want to see the difference between George Bush and me on the things that concern mainstream America, look at where we stand on Social Security and Medicare," Dukakis told a rally outside Peoria's city hall.

He said Bush had called the Medicare health plan "socialized medicine" while running for the Senate years ago, and that in 1980, while a presidential candidate, Bush called Social Security "basically a welfare program."

"When it comes to Social Security and George Bush, don't read his lips, read his record," Dukakis said in a remark that turned around Bush's "read my lips" declaration he would not raise taxes.

"He was wrong then and he's wrong now," the Democrat said.

Seeking to encourage the notion that he had tightened the presidential race with a strong debate performance two days earlier, Dukakis escalated his assault on Bush's views on Social Security and Medicare.

Standing with his sleeves rolled up before a large midday crowd, Dukakis also used the occasion to repeat his opposition to the 1980 grain embargo on the Soviets, which he said Bush had "implied that I would support" during their debate.

"I'm not for a grain embargo and he knows it," he said.

He asserted that the Reagan administration, which he called "Mr. Bush's administration," stopped U.S. firms from working on the Siberian gas pipeline, a move he said cost more than 30,000 U.S.

jobs and hurt the Peoria-based Caterpillar machinery company.

The Massachusetts governor repeatedly referred to his debate performance, asking the crowd "How many of you thought I won?" and drawing a thunderous cheer.

He said Bush "said our family farms must be doing just fine" in the debate.

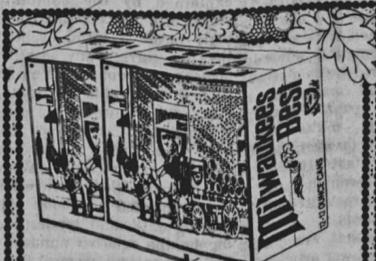

"He must be kidding," Dukakis said, saying there were 200,000 family farms and half a million farm-related manufacturing jobs lost in eight years.

Dukakis said both Social Security and Medicare were likely targets for Bush to cut to finance additional defense spending and to offset a cut in the tax on capital gains, a tax break Dukakis contended would primarily benefit the wealthy.

He recalled Bush's tie-breaking Senate vote to cut cost-of-living increases for Social Security, and repeated his suggestion that Bush might tap the Social Security trust fund.

Phillips comes back all the way

SEOUL, South Korea — On the way to Jose, Andre Phillips found the road to Olympic gold.

Eight months ago, Phillips couldn't even beat high school runners in a workout — and was thinking of quitting track. Three days ago he beat the most outstanding hurdler in the sport's history in the big race of his life, and retirement the furthest thing from his mind.

Now, he's talking about breaking the world record next week in Tokyo.

After missing four months of the 1987 season with a stress fracture, Phillips left Los Angeles, returned to San Jose, California, to train with his high school coach, Stan Dowell.

He ran against Dowell's Indiana High athletes, "and were killing me," said Phillips who was ranked No. 1 in the country in 1985 and 1986. "Not all of them but their two top guys were killing me."

"I thought of quitting. 1987 was the first year I was ranked," he said. "One day, I walked off the track, and came back for four or five days. When he did, he had a different attitude."

"I decided I really wanted to win. I said this year could be worse than 1987. My attitude more positive."

It grew even more so working with Bob Kersee. The coach and Phillips blended together.

"Stan basically works you out, he gives you more conditioning, he gives you more strength," Phillips said. Dowell, the former coach of Evans, who held the world record for 20 years before Butch Reynolds broke it this season.

"Bobby (Kersee) works on the mental aspects, strategy and motivation. He's a great motivator."

Fine tuned mentally for the Olympics, Phillips was slightly with a slight groin during the second-round heat.

But he knew he would have at his best to beat Edwin Moses, the two-time Olympic gold medalist and world record-holder, who was trying to establish himself as the first runner to become the first runner to win three gold medals in the same event. And he tried to do it about the injury.

Then, Moses' mother Phillips with unexpected management.

"She waved to me and said 'luck,'" Phillips said. "It was classy."

Phillips also glanced at Moses' face, and it wasn't (an emotion) that old confidence.

"I said I could win," Phillips said. "I got out well. I knew I was for the first three hurdles when I got to the fourth, I didn't expect to see him until the seventh hurdle. The crowd, and I sensed he was making a move."

"But I didn't see him, and 'Where is he?'"

Moses never caught up. When Phillips crossed the line first in 47.19 seconds, breaking Moses' Olympic record, he had a chance for history.

The moment ended Phillips' year chase of the magnificent, magnanimous Moses.

"If I hadn't beaten him, I would have kept chasing him," Phillips said. "No other hurdler, Moses, has a better record than me."

Now that he has caught Moses in the Olympics, he wants to break the world record again Oct. 8 at Tokyo, and set his world record of 47.02.

Soviets dash hopes for U.S. gold medal

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The U.S. basketball team lost the second game in its glorious Olympic history Tuesday night, bowing to the Soviets 82-76 in a grudge match that has brewed for 16 years.

Steve Lewis led a 1-2-3 U.S. sweep of the 400 meters, just one-hundredth of a second off the 20-year-old Olympic record, and three more U.S. boxers advanced to the semifinals, assured of at least a bronze medal.

Ben Johnson, whose guilt-edged gold in the 100 meters was stripped from him Tuesday for taking steroids, arrived home in Toronto Tuesday night, dodging hundreds of onlookers and TV cameras at the airport.

A reporter at the airport shouted to his mother, "Did he take steroids?"

Gloria Johnson glared and replied emphatically, "No!"

But, instead of glory, there was disgrace as Johnson returned to his adopted Canada.

"This will change the history of the Olympics," American hurdler Edwin Moses said. "This will change a lot of people's lives."

The U.S. went into its semifinal game against the Soviets trying to avenge the only loss on its 85-1 Olympic record, but now the best the Americans can do is a bronze medal while the Soviets go for gold.

In 1972 at Munich, America met the Soviet Union for the gold medal, and, after the final three seconds were played twice because of referee error and a scoreboard malfunction, the Soviets won 51-50.

So angered was the U.S. team that it refused to accept the silver medal.

"Every day Russian people and Russian journalists and TV talk about historic three seconds in Munich," said Alexander Gornelsky, who is coaching his sixth Olympics for the Soviets. "This is a good story, and I like it to be same here."

Lewis won the 400-meter gold in 43.87 seconds, and favored teammate Butch Reynolds, who holds the world record of 43.29, was second in 43.93. Another American, Danny Everett, took the bronze in 44.09. Lewis' time was just .01 seconds off the Olympic mark by Lee Evans of the United States in Mexico City in 1968.

Three more U.S. boxers, meanwhile advanced into the semifinals, where they are assured of at least a bronze medal. The United States has eight of its 12 boxers still in action, including six in the semifinals.

Those advancing Tuesday morning were Kennedy McKinney of Killean, Texas, and Kenneth Gould of Rockford, Ill., and Ray Mercer of Jacksonville, Fla.

McKinney scored a 5-0 victory over Stephen Mwema of Kenya in the 119-pound division, and Gould was a unanimous winner over Joni Nyman of Finland at 147 pounds. Mercer knocked down Italian Luigi Gaudiano and stopped him in the first round of their 201-pound fight.

"I clearly outboxed the guy for three rounds," McKinney said. "I don't want a bronze. I want a gold."

In the 12th day of Games, the medals count looked like this: Soviet Union 81 total, 35 gold; East Germany 72 medals, 29 gold; United States 54 total, 18 gold, and Canada 3 total, no gold.

Debra Flintoff-King of Australia edged Tatiana Ledovskaya of the Soviet Union by one one-hundredth of a second in the women's 400-meter hurdles, and Ellen Fielder of East Germany took the

Fry is wary of trip to Michigan State

By Brent Woods
 The Daily Iowan

Iowa Coach Hayden Fry said at his weekly press conference Tuesday his team has a "slim and none" chance to beat Michigan State in its Big Ten opener Saturday in East Lansing, Mich.

"The thing that's good is we have always played well in East Lansing," Fry said. The Hawkeyes under Fry have never lost at Michigan State.

"I anticipate a good ballgame, but as far as winning, I don't know," he said. "If our defense can improve, I wouldn't expect a very high-scoring game."

The Iowa running game blossomed against Iowa State this past Saturday, as Tony Stewart rambled for 194 yards. Though the Cyclones defensive sets are similar to Michigan State's, Fry said the Hawkeyes may not be able to grind it out on the ground Saturday.

"It doesn't take a genius to figure out we may have to do something else," Fry said.

Last year, the Spartans held Iowa to minus 16 yards rushing in defeating the Hawkeyes 19-14.

Michigan State is winless in three tries this year, but Fry said the Spartans' comeback from a 1-2 start last year may inspire the Hawkeyes, who are currently 2-2.

"They're (Iowa) aware of what Michigan State did last year," Fry said. "The number one thing is the Big Ten championship."

Injuries continue to plague Fry's team. Fry said seven Hawkeyes were hurt to some degree against

Board urges change to natural surface

By Neil Lewis
 The Daily Iowan

The Board in Control of Athletics agreed Monday that the UI Athletic Department should pursue replacement of the Kinnick Stadium artificial surface with a grass field before the 1989 football season, partially in reaction to concerns over artificial turf-related injuries.

The possible change in surfaces is not a new issue for the Facilities Planning and Construction Committee or the Iowa coaching staff. However, the urgency of the decision is forced because the present turf would need to be replaced in 1989, regardless of whether the change to grass is approved by the Board of Regents.

Larry Bruner, UI associate director of men's intercollegiate athletics, estimated replacement with grass would cost $650,000-$900,000, whereas artificial turf would range $450,000-$600,000. The costs could vary with the expense of tearing up the current field.

"There's no question that injury plays a factor," Elliott said. "On the artificial surface right now we're getting lots of ankle turnovers, and knees."

"The two things I think will take place on grass is the impact of two people hitting won't be as great because they won't be running quite as fast."

Elliott added that recovery from certain injuries is easier on grass

Iowa dumps Cyclones in 'dreary' matchup

By Michael Trilk
 The Daily Iowan

Last Saturday's football clash between Iowa and Iowa State wasn't the most exciting game in recent memory.

Neither was Tuesday's meeting between the two schools' women's tennis teams.

But Iowa ran its record to 2-0 by beating the Cyclones 6-2 in a match Iowa Coach Mick Schillig said was nothing spectacular.

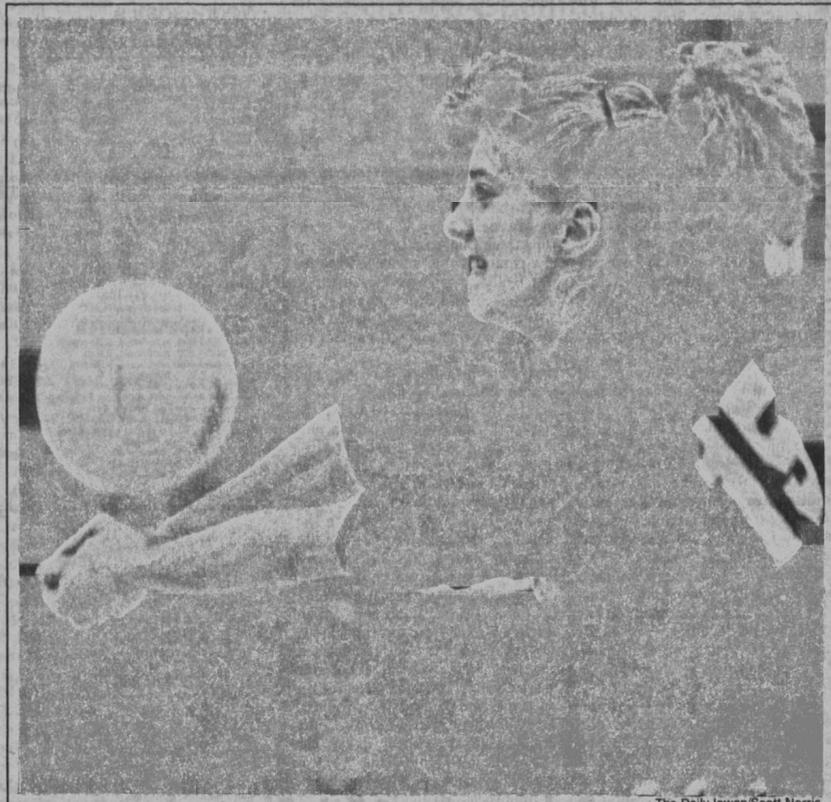

"It was kind of a dreary day," Schillig said. "We did what we had to do, but we weren't as flashy as we were last week against Drake. It was like we were playing with our heads in the clouds wondering if we would get to finish the match, instead of just playing."

The match was shortened because of rain.

Schillig shook up her lineup Tuesday, moving Madeleine Willard

Iowa sophomore middle hitter Barb Willis bumps a State earlier this season in Carver-Hawkeye shot during the Hawkeyes' victory over Weber Arena. Willis leads the Hawkeyes with 57 blocks.

Willis steps in, provides punch for Hawkeye attack

By Anne Upson
 The Daily Iowan

For some teams, the loss of players to graduation can leave holes too large to fill.

Middle hitter Ellen Mullarkey, Iowa's 1987 Most Valuable Player and second-team all-Big Ten, may be such a player. Mullarkey ended her career last season second on Iowa's all-time kills, blocks, digs and service aces list.

However, Hawkeye sophomore Barb Willis is willing to try to fill the space.

"I felt the loss, because Ellen was a very good middle hitter and I'm a middle hitter," Willis said. "I felt that I needed to fill her shoes, to come into that position and (make it) like there wasn't a loss."

"I know that last spring I pushed myself and tried to be Ellen. This summer I thought about it a lot, about what I have to do for the team and what I have to do to make the team work. I just feel that if I work hard and do what the coaches tell me to do, then everything will come out."

Willis has demonstrated that she can take Mullarkey's place.

As a freshman, Willis finished with the second-best attack percentage (.221) on the team and set a season single-match best for blocks with nine against Ohio State.

This season Willis was the most valuable player at the Carousel Motors All-Iowa Volleyball Championship in Iowa City, and she was also named to the Saluki Invitational all-tournament team. Willis has the team's second-highest kill total with 113, the highest attack percentage at 32.9 percent and is the top blocker with 57 through nine matches.

Iowa Coach Sandy Stewart is pleased with how Willis has responded to the challenge of replacing Mullarkey.

"Last spring she knew she had to take more leadership responsibilities on the court," Stewart said, "and she has done that."

(Willis) has been a surprise to most people in the conference, because she wasn't dominating last year. She is definitely 100-percent improved from last year. The great thing is that she isn't even near her potential — she has lots of room for improvement."

Willis, of Camanche, Iowa, began playing volleyball in eighth grade.

"Mainly I went out for it because my friends were active in it," she said. "I always loved the sport my whole life."

Willis also played basketball in high school and was an all-state selection in 1985. Willis said she liked basketball more than volleyball through her junior year in high school.

"Basketball was the sport that really got me started," Willis said. "It was my favorite sport until my senior year, when volleyball became more important. It got my confidence up for other sports. I had a lot of fun with my coaches."

Silver Bullets sign Larkin

The Cedar Rapids Silver Bullets of the Continental Basketball Association signed their first-round draft choice Byron Larkin to a one-year contract this past weekend.

Larkin, 13th on the NCAA career scoring list with 2,696 points at Xavier, was the fourth choice overall in the draft. Former Iowa State Cyclone Laster Rhodes was the first player taken. He was chosen by Topeka.

"Obviously we're very excited about signing him this early," Silver Bullets Coach Gary Youmans said. "He's a big-time scorer. He also comes here with a good attitude. That's something that's great for a coach. It's just one of those intangibles that's great for a ballclub."

Cubs agree to trade Davis to Braves

MONTREAL (AP) — The Chicago Cubs have agreed to trade catcher Jody Davis to the Atlanta Braves but the deal has been held up by Atlanta's insistence on a lockout clause in his new contract.

Davis and his agent, Jack Sands, have agreed on a two-year contract that takes him through 1990, the season that the collective-bargaining agreement between the union and the owners expires. The Braves want to include a clause that would prohibit Davis from being paid in the event of a lockout.

because of the size of her hometown. She's happy with her decision to come to Iowa, though.

"When I first looked at college," Willis said, "I wanted to go to a small college, to play all of the sports of volleyball, basketball and softball. Then my parents told me to look at a large school just in case. I first looked at UNI. Then Iowa started to recruit me. And I really liked it.

"I'm really glad that I came (here) because I don't think I could be happier anywhere else. I really like the facilities and the staff. I like the environment and the surroundings. I just like the people a lot. All of people seem really nice."

Iowa State. "That's why I become defensive when I hear the crowd boo," Fry said. "Because they don't know the injury situation. They don't know that a guy may be hurt but he's playing his heart out.

"What I can't figure out is why we get these injuries, and I heard Iowa State only had one guy with a sprained ankle and he'll probably play next week."

Saturday's game will mark the return of Michigan State standout offensive lineman Tony Mandarich. Fry said he considers Mandarich one of the nation's best offensive linemen.

Mandarich assignment, and Fry said Johnson will be fighting an uphill battle physically.

"He's (Johnson) about 55 pounds lighter and five inches shorter," Fry said.

Iowa linebacker Brad Quast, who was named Associated Press and United Press International Midwest and Big Ten defensive player of the week for making 12 solo tackles and eight assists against Iowa State, will also probably tie up with Mandarich often.

"I'll have a lot of responsibility for him," Quast said. "I'll be lining up on his side. Whenever they run outside, he'll be looking for me. I want to play better than last year."

than on the harder artificial turf. Improvements in natural turf, especially in the drainage and irrigation areas, were one reason that the committee and coaching staff has leaned toward a grass replacement.

Prescription Athletic Turf, Elliott said, is one possibility being considered. The product is a natural surface developed by Purdue University and is the surface used by Mile High Stadium in Denver and Purdue's stadium.

The initial cost of moving to grass is greater than simply installing a new artificial carpet, and there is additional maintenance. However, the long-term advantage, Bruner said, is the grass surface will not need to be replaced.

Changing to grass directly affects the Iowa field hockey team, which uses the stadium for its practices and games. Christine Grant, UI director of women's intercollegiate athletics, said the team prefers to play on artificial turf.

Elliott said because of the wear on the grass stadium surface from the football team, the field hockey squad would not be able to use the stadium. One of the options open to the field hockey program would be to resurface the field adjacent to the baseball field and the recreation building. The board also approved a motion by Wayne Rawley, Facilities Planning and Construction Committee chairman, to find a way to improve the safety of the narrow sideline area at Kinnick Stadium.

Elliott said the small space is a problem during football games and practice because players cannot slow down before hitting the grandstand wall.

The board also agreed to let the Iowa field hockey team join a new conference. When Purdue withdrew from the present conference of Big Ten teams, the conference was left with only five teams, one fewer than is needed to have a Big Ten championship.

Grant motioned and the board voted to allow Northern Illinois to be added to the present conference of Ohio State, Michigan State, Michigan, Northwestern and Iowa.

Andrew Hankins, of Detroit, Mich., was selected by the Academic Achievement Advisory Committee as their representative to the Big Ten advisory committee. The committee is a group that advises the Big Ten joint committee and is especially directed at the problems of minorities.

Hankins is a former Iowa basketball player.

into Iowa's top singles spot and dropping the Hawkeyes' usual No. 1 player, Liz Canzoneri, into the No. 3 spot.

Iowa's strategy backfired, though, as Willard fell to the Cyclones' Lori Hash in straight sets, 6-4, 6-4. The shakeup didn't seem to bother anyone else, as the rest of the Hawkeye singles lineup came away with wins.

At No. 2, Tracey Peyton beat Suna Bayrakal, 7-5, 6-7, 6-4; No. 3 Canzoneri beat Kim Dempsey 6-4, 6-1; No. 4 Tracey Donnelly dumped Kris Stotler, 6-2, 6-2; No. 5 Patti DeSimone took three sets to beat Jennifer Lansing, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3 and Susan Evans won by injury default.

"We tried to match players," Schilling said. "Madeleine had beaten Hash three times before and Liz has had no problem with Dempsey in the past, so I thought we could beat them again. Hash is a great player, though. She is either really on or really off and today she was really on."

In doubles, Iowa's team of Willard and Evans was beaten by Iowa State's Bayrakal and Stotler, 7-5, 6-2 while the Hawkeyes' duo of Canzoneri and DeSimone won by injury default. Peyton and Donnelly's match against Iowa State's Hash and Dempsey was postponed in the third set with the Hawkeyes leading 6-3, 4-6, 2-1.

Despite the Hawkeyes' performance, Schilling did have praise for Tracey Donnelly. Tuesday's win moved the freshman's singles record to 2-0.

"She played really well today," Schilling said. "I'm not surprised that she is 2-0. I expected her to do well and I will expect her to get better as the level of competition increases. I knew that we were getting a good one when we got her."

Donnelly knew she wanted to get started on the right foot but even she is surprised with her singles play.

"When I was in high school I was noted as a doubles player," Donnelly said. "I was ranked 11th in the country in doubles and something like 90th in singles. I had hoped that I would start out with a good record and I'm pleased with the way I'm playing. Hopefully I can keep it going."

Iowa was scheduled to compete in the Iowa Flight Championships this weekend, but that meet has been canceled and the Hawkeyes won't get back on the courts for over a week when they travel to Lincoln, Neb. for a dual meet with the Cornhuskers.

Steroids cause sports, money woes

Steroids remain a concern at international contests

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The anabolic steroid, breakfast musclemen, has emerged from the shadows of the weightlifting gym. It can now be a distance runner's quest for strength, a hockey star's power play, a relay team's fifth man.

And the discovery that Canadian sprinter Johnson, world superstar, relied on this illicit elixir in his gold-medal victory in the 100-meter dash ensures that the drug dilemma will remain on the Olympics' center stage for years to come.

The scandal of performance-enhancing drugs first tainted the Olympics at Munich in 1972. The problem, authorities agree, has grown since.

Prince Alexandre de Merode, head of the Olympic medical commission, estimates that six percent of the world's top athletes use steroids or other banned drugs.

But other observers, down there in the locker rooms, out on the playing fields, would put the figure higher.

"Everybody uses drugs," says one African sprinter, Horace Dowdwin of Sierra Leone. "These guys will do anything to win a gold medal," said Canadian fencer Stephen Angers.

The International Olympic Committee, in its continuing struggle to rein in drug use, will present an Olympic Charter on Doping to world sports ministers meeting in Moscow in November. It calls for more help by individual governments in cracking down on athletes' abuse of drugs.

The IOC and other sports organizations ban more than 3,700 substances, but anabolic steroids are at the top of the most-wanted list.

These organic chemicals can increase the muscle mass in athletes as they train. They also have serious side effects, including personality changes, kidney malfunction and prostate inflammation.

Weightlifters for years have popped steroid pills or taken injections to give them a boost toward the record books.

But when Johnson's urinalysis "tested positive" and his gold medal was stripped from him Monday, the first such disqualification of a medal-winning Olympic sprinter, it made clear to the world what many in sports knew: Steroids are becoming the drug of choice in many arenas.

Johnson's was not the first drug disqualification at these 1988 Summer Games.

Four weightlifters, including gold-winning Bulgarians Angel Angelov Guenchev and Mitko Grablev, and two competitors in the modern pentathlon, one Spaniard and one Australian, have been thrown out of the Seoul Games for the use of various banned substances.

The Bulgarians were suspended for use of furosemide, a diuretic that can be used to mask the presence of steroids and other illicit drugs by diluting urine samples.

Even before the Games, the Seoul Olympics were touched by the drug problem.

American swimming star Angel Myers, a medal hopeful in five events, was dropped from the U.S. team when a urinalysis detected signs of steroid use.

De Merode, medical commission chief, says authorities must scramble to keep up with the ingenuity and technology of those involved in the sports drug business. He now fears advances beyond steroids.

"Tomorrow," he said, "there will be another drug problem, more complicated and probably involving some genetic manipulation."

Johnson loses contracts in wake of drug discovery

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Advertisers who paid the "world's fastest human" to convey their message are canceling the commercials, tearing down the posters and demanding their money back.

Ben Johnson still is the fastest man on record, with a 9.83-second clocking for 100 meters in Rome last year. But the positive test for steroids that cost him an Olympic gold medal and an even faster world record also may have cost him $1 million or more in endorsements and other fees.

After Johnson ran 9.79 in beating Carl Lewis in their long-awaited Olympic showdown Friday, his manager, Larry Heidebrecht, said, "The total endorsement power that he has following the world record and gold medal would certainly put him into seven figures... How many millions, I wouldn't want to speculate."

Nor would Heidebrecht say what Johnson earned in 1987. But he said, "I think that he could possibly double the amount that he earned last year."

Not after the Canadian sprinter's disqualification was announced Monday.

Kyodo Oil Co. of Japan had been showing Johnson's powerful stride in gasoline commercials. But Kyodo said it has taken ads off the air, and would take pictures of Johnson down from 6,500 gas stations around the country.

Kyodo also is asking for a refund equal to three months worth of the contract due to expire in December. Kyodo wouldn't say how much the contract is worth.

A Finnish dairy association said it is withdrawing a milk commercial featuring Johnson. And the Italian sportswear company Diadora decided to cancel its five-year, $2.4 million contract with the runner.

A clause in the Diadora contract, which was to have run through the 1992 Games, allows the company to terminate it for causes such as his disqualification, a spokesman said.

Diadora, whose contract with Johnson was known to include an undisclosed bonus in case of an Olympic victory, emphasized that the company's image was linked to the "physical and moral growth of youths through sport."

The decision to break the contract was taken with "deep regret and great disappointment," the company said.

The fee for Johnson's contract with Valio, the Finnish Cooperative Dairy Association, was much smaller. The group's television commercial showed Johnson, wearing a T-shirt promoting milk, autographing an admiring Finnish boy's cap.

"It will not be seen on Finnish TV again," said Martti Kirjavainen, head of Valio marketing.

While declining to give the exact figure, Kirjavainen said Johnson's fee was less than $225,000.

"Ben dropped his fee for the commercial when we told him that the population of Finland (4.9 million) was less than half that of the city of New York," Kirjavainen said. "He himself is a milk drinker so he was sympathetic to our cause."

Organizers of a superstar track meet Oct. 8 in Tokyo said Johnson no longer is invited. They had been offering Johnson and Lewis up to $500,000 each for a rematch there.

Japan's Kyodo News Service reported that Mazda Motor Corp. also is severing its connections with Johnson.

Johnson also was endorsing a Canadian courier service and an outboard motor company.

Games offer strange happenings

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Edwin is humbled, Chrissie tumbled, Mary stumbled, even an announcer bumbled.

Ah, the Olympics.

Who would have thought that boxer Anthony Hembrick missing his bus would initiate an 11-day chain of events that would past Greg Louganis hitting his head on a diving board, around Edwin Moses' loss, all the way to Ben Johnson being stripped of his gold medal.

"This is business as usual at a multi-sport international event," said Mike Moran, a spokesman for the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Business—as usual or otherwise—picked up when track and field began Friday.

Mary Decker Slaney got her feet tangled and stumbled slightly in her preliminary heat of the women's 3000 meters. The same thing that happened to her in Los Angeles with Zola Budd of South Africa—when she fell after getting her feet tangled with Budd—couldn't happen to her again, could it?

Not only did it happen in the prelim, it happened again in the final as Slaney stumbled badly—only this time she didn't fall—and faded to 10th, losing by 20 seconds.

"I thought about falling in LA and I thought finishing here would be better than falling here," she said.

Then, not only did Edwin Moses lose, he finished third behind American Andre Phillips and El Hadji Amadou Dia Ba of Senegal.

SUMMER OLYMPICS '88

Johnson finished first and lost. The Canadian appeared to have ended Carl Lewis' bid for another four-gold sweep of 1984 when he blew away his American rival. Johnson's unbelievable time of 9.79 proved to be just that.

Three days later, he was stripped of his gold medal, barred from international competition for two years, and sent packing for home after a post-race drug test declared him a user of anabolic steroids.

Lewis got the gold after all. Now the question is how will international track and field fans renew their interest in Lewis' unprecedented second attempt to win four gold medals?

The fact that pole vaulters from the United States, Poland and the Soviet Union banded together and quit vaulting in a procedural dispute pales in comparison.

"For a meet that's four days old with five days to go, you begin to wonder, 'What's going to happen next?'" said Hal Bateman, press officer for the U.S. track and field team who has worked at international meets for more than 20 years.

The boxing team might wonder if there was anything left to happen. The first week offered missed buses, officials punching a referee and a boxer beating his opponent twice.

It began with Hembrick's failing to make his fight with South Korean Ha Jong-ho on Day 2. The incident became a case of the misread schedule—The 11th bout or the fifth? Ring A or B?—and a missed bus.

Three days later South Korean coaches and officials stormed the ring, punching referee Keith Walker, when a decision went against bantamweight Byun Jong-il after he was twice penalized by Walker for butting.

The fighter protested himself, sitting in the ring for 67 minutes, leaving only after the lights had been turned out. Byun and five South Koreans were suspended and the head of the Korean Olympic Committee resigned.

U.S. boxer Todd Foster knocked out Chun jun-chul of South Korea the first time when the South Korean mistakenly thought the second round had ended. What he heard was a bell from a second ring instead of the horn used in his ring.

Foster landed a punch, Chun went reeling to the floor. Boxing officials ordered the two to fight again, and later that night, with only 45 minutes' warning, Foster knocked Chun out again 2:05 into the second round.

Louganis, the greatest diver in history, couldn't win the men's 3-meter springboard event last Monday without banging his head on the diving board on the ninth of 11 preliminary dives.

Louganis recovered and, a day and five stitches later, won the first half of his second gold-medal sweep of the men's diving events.

This from the Korean police blotter: American swimmers Troy Dalbey and Doug Gjertsen, each double gold medalists, were apprehended Friday night by Seoul police for stealing an $830 marble mask.

And what about Chris Evert? She came to the Olympics with 18 Grand Slam singles titles and a career of steady play only to commit 62 unforced errors as she lost to 22-year-old Italian Raffaella Reggi, 2-6, 6-4, 6-1.

Add to that NBC television announcers Charlie Jones and Frank Shorter, who pulled a major blunder by misidentifying the winner of the men's 800-meter Olympic final.

"I blew the race. I blew the call," said Jones, who has been a network announcer for 29 years. "You prepare your whole life for the Olympics and then you make a mistake like that."

The announcers said the winner was Nixon Kiprotich of Kenya, when it really was his countryman, Paul Ereng. They confused the runners, both wearing red shorts and white jerseys.

Ah, the Olympics.

In judo, Lynn Roethke of Nassau, N.Y., lost a decision to Diane Bell of Britain and settled for the silver medal in judo's 61-kilo (134.2-pound) division.

Florence Griffith Joyner, already a gold medalist at 100 meters, ran the faster qualifying heat of the morning—the 200 meters in 22.51.

One of the favorites in the decathlon, Jurgen Hingsen of West Germany, was disqualified from the 100 meters portion for three false starts, effectively eliminating him from contention. Hingsen's appeal was turned down.

Also on Tuesday, runner Johnny Gray became the third U.S. athlete detained by police after he was charged with unruly behavior for kicking a cab. Gray told police the cab almost hit him and two unidentified companions. Police said that after arguing with the driver, Gray kicked the cab.

Gray, who finished fifth in the 800 meters, was released into the custody of U.S. Embassy officials. A local official, who declined to be identified, said the case appeared minor and further action was unlikely.

Two U.S. gold medal-winning swimmers and a friend were questioned by police for six hours Tuesday and released. They were arrested over the weekend for removing the marble mask of a lion from a downtown hotel last Saturday.

Caught cheating with one of the most dangerous of all anabolic steroids, stanozolol, Johnson was kicked off the Canadian team for life, and his gold medal in the world's fastest 100-meter dash was given to arch rival Carl Lewis.

So shocked were Olympic officials and athletes that when Greg Louganis made history of a more heroic sort—an unprecedented four diving medals in two Olympics—it was only a sidelight to a grim day in Seoul.

"Our national hero is not a hero anymore," Johnson's Canadian teammate, fencer Stephen Angers, said.

And with that, the greatest sprinter in history handed his medal to a Canadian Olympic official, packed his bags and slipped out of the country Tuesday morning, not unnoticed but no longer idolized, not an Olympic champion, just a cheater.

Lewis, who will be presented with the gold on Saturday, appeared at a church service for Olympic athletes Tuesday night and spoke briefly, repeating a story he first told when he lost to Johnson, a dream his mother had about his late father.

"My mother had a dream the other night about my father, who said everything would be all right," Lewis said. "And today, it was."

Earlier in the day he said: "I feel sorry for Ben and for the Canadian people. Ben is a great competitor and I hope he is able to straighten out his life and return to competition."

Alexander de Merode, chairman of the International Olympic Committee's medical commission, called Johnson's Olympic ban a sad day.

Toronto defeats Boston behind Whitt's six RBIs

BOSTON (AP) — Ernie Whitt drove in six runs with a pair of homers and a single as the Toronto Blue Jays continued to frustrate the Boston Red Sox' drive to clinch the American League East with a 15-9 victory Tuesday night.

It was the Blue Jays' sixth consecutive victory in Fenway Park and 10th in 12 meetings with Boston this year. The Red Sox, trying for their second AL East title in three years, still have a magic number of three for eliminating the New York Yankees, who beat Baltimore earlier.

The Red Sox have five games remaining, New York six. Detroit lost 1-0 to Cleveland, reducing its magic number to two.

Toronto rocked starter Mike Smithson, 9-6, and Dennis Lamp for nine runs in the first two innings.

Whitt capped a four-run first with a three-run homer, his 15th, and then completed a five-run second with a two-run shot into the Toronto bullpen in right.

The 36-year old catcher had an RBI single off Jeff Sellers in the fourth before grounding out after a two-run single by Rance Mulliniks in the fifth.

Nelson Liriano went 4-for-5 to lead a 17-hit attack. Whitt and Mulliniks each had three hits. Kelly Gruber hit his 16th homer and had four runs scored. Boston's Wade Boggs was 4-for-5, raising his major-league leading average to .368.

Mike Flanagan, 13-13, allowed eight hits in 6½ innings for his second victory over Boston within a week. David Wells and Duane Ward finished up.

Yankees 5, Orioles 1
BALTIMORE — Don Mattingly homered twice and Ron Guidry pitched seven strong innings as the New York Yankees kept their hopes alive in the American League East race with a 5-1 victory over the Baltimore Orioles Tuesday night.

The Yankees began the night 4½ games behind first-place Boston. New York, which has six games remaining, moved into a tie for second with Detroit, beaten earlier by Cleveland.

Mattingly connected in the first and third innings and has 17 homers for the season. It was Mattingly's 11th career multi-homer game.

Guidry, 2-3, scattered six hits, walked one and struck out four in his longest outing of the year. The 38-year-old left-hander has been trying to bounce back from off-season shoulder surgery. Dale Mohoric closed.

The Yankees jumped on Curt Schilling, 0-2, for two quick runs in the first when Rickey Henderson opened with a single and Mattingly homered.

Twins 5, Athletics 0
MINNEAPOLIS — Allan Anderson pitched a three-hitter for his first major-league shutout and the Minnesota Twins set the American League single season attendance record in a 5-0 victory over the Oakland Athletics Tuesday night.

With a crowd of 48,300, the Twins pushed their attendance to 2,820,049. California had the old record with 2,807,360 in 1982. The Twins already have enough advance tickets sold for their five remaining games to go over the 3,000,000 mark.

Anderson, 16-9, struck out one and walked two in winning for the 10th time in his last 12 decisions. The left-hander lowered his earned run average to 2.45, second only to Milwaukee's Teddy Higuera (2.41).

Bob Welch, 16-9, gave up seven hits and five walks in 3½ innings.

Pirates 3, Cardinals 2
PITTSBURGH — Bobby Bonilla hit a two-run single and Andy Van Slyke threw out the tying run at home plate in the ninth inning as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the St. Louis Cardinals 3-2 Tuesday night and clinched second place in the National League East.

The Pirates, 84-72, had not finished as high as second since 1983. Pittsburgh finished fourth last year after three last-place seasons.

John Smiley, 13-10, gave up seven hits, struck out four and walked one in seven innings. Jim Gott pitched the ninth for his 34th save. With Jose Oquendo on third and one out, Luis Alcega flied out to center and Van Slyke threw Oquendo out at the plate.

Ken Hill, 0-1, making his second major-league appearance and first start, gave up five hits and all three runs in five innings.

Cubs 5, Expos 3
MONTREAL — Calvin Schiraldi scattered eight hits in 8½ innings to end a five-game losing streak and Mark Grace drove in two runs.

Schiraldi, 9-13, struck out four and walked two before Rich Gossage finished for his 13th save, allowing a run-scoring groundout to Tim Wallach.

Brian Holman, 3-8, gave up nine hits and all five runs in five innings, losing for the fifth time in seven decisions.

Just 6,131 attended the game, the smallest crowd in Olympic Stadium this season.

Phillies 5, Mets 4
PHILADELPHIA — Tommy Barrett hit a run-scoring single to snap a ninth-inning tie.

With one out, Chris James singled and took second on Greg Gross' groundout. Barrett, pinch-hitting for Steve Jeltz, singled on a 1-1 pitch off Roger McDowell, 5-5, driving in the winning run.

Steve Bedrosian, 6-6, got the final out in the top of the ninth after relieving Don Carman, who gave up seven hits in 8½ innings.

Astros 3, Braves 2
ATLANTA — Alex Trevino hit a run-scoring single in the 10th inning, sending Atlanta to its seventh consecutive loss.

Rafael Ramirez, a former Brave, led off with a single against Joe Boever, 0-1. Kevin Bass sacrificed and Trevino, another former Brave, singled to left.

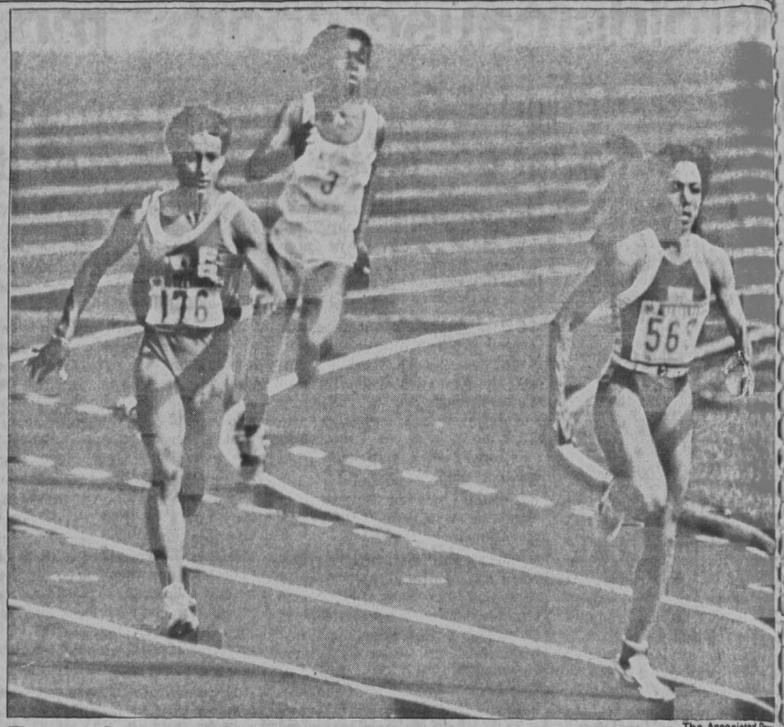

Danny Darwin, 8-13, pitched 1½ innings of hitless relief.

Indians 4, Tigers 0
CLEVELAND — Tom Candiotti pitched a four-hitter to win his sixth straight decision and the Cleveland Indians pushed the Detroit Tigers closer to elimination in the American League East race with a 4-0 victory Tuesday night.

The Tigers started the night 3½ games behind first-place Boston and still have a mathematical chance of catching the Red Sox. Detroit has four games remaining.

Candiotti, 13-8, struck out four and walked two for his 11th complete game of the year, but first since July 27, a two-month period that included two weeks on the disabled list because of a stiff right shoulder. His six-game winning streak is a career high.

Frank Tanana, 14-11, allowed nine hits in 7½ innings.

1988-89 STUDENT BASKETBALL TICKET POLICY

- A student may order one of the following: one full season ticket for the price of $80.00; one 14 game ticket which excludes the holiday games* for $70.00; or a 7 game split season ticket for $35.00. If the number of orders exceeds the student allotment, split season tickets will be given to those with the lowest priority at the discretion of the ticket office.
- Students will receive a priority based on the number of consecutive years they have purchased or applied for basketball tickets at The University of Iowa with no loss in priority for off-campus student exchange programs or a bona fide illness. An individual who misses two or more consecutive seasons for reasons other than the above will lose all priority.
- A University student may order season tickets for a group no larger than eight. If not all group members are present when the order is placed, the members not present must provide to the student placing the order, either their personal checks with current address and ID numbers thereon or cash and their ID numbers. One student may not write a personal check in payment for another student's ticket.
- The lowest priority within a group will determine the location of the entire block of tickets for that group. That is, all students within a group will carry the lowest priority of any member of that group.
- Student season basketball tickets will be on sale commencing September 26 through September 29 from 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m.; September 30 from 9:00 a.m.-6:00 p.m.; October 1 from 8:00 a.m.-12:00 noon; and October 3 through October 5 from 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m. These tickets will then become available for pick up beginning November 7, 1988.
- Each student must pick up their own ticket. The student must present their own student ID, current registration sticker and picture ID at the time of pick up. Registered students must be in "good standing" with the University business office regarding delinquent bills.
- A student ticket, to be valid, must be accompanied by a University of Iowa ID card with current registration sticker and picture ID. To use the basketball ticket during the 1988 games a student must be registered for the second semester. A student ticket may be used by the original purchaser or by any other University of Iowa student, but the original purchaser will be held liable for any violations of the student policy. If a non-student is found using a student's ticket, that student forfeits all future student ticket privileges. The penalty for a violation of the University policy involving ID and ticket will be the loss of the use of the ticket for two games.
- Amana Hawkeye Classic tickets will be available to students at $22.00 per seat for the tournament. This is a special event and is, therefore, not on the season ticket.
- Everyone, regardless of age, is required to have a valid ticket for admittance to all University of Iowa basketball games. This includes infants in arms.
- DUPLICATE TICKETS CANNOT BE ISSUED FOR LOST OR STOLEN STUDENT TICKETS.

Radon levels exceed EPA limit

By John Bartenhagen
The Daily Iowan

Tested levels for the causing gas radon are Johnson County homes screening guideline set Environmental Protection but according to health of threat is greater in other the state.

The one-week average for 53 homes tested in County is 5.6 picocuries per liter compared to a state average of 7.6 picocuries, according to L. Graham Cameron, director of the Johnson County Department. The EPA guideline is 4 picocuries per liter.

Cameron said several homes have given readings in excess of 4 picocuries, but stressed that homeowners need not panic.

"While we're recommending everyone test their homes, stress that people should not panic," Cameron said. "A reading of 4 picocuries or less is something to be concerned about, but it's relatively easy to correct. If it's a high reading or something in that range, you'd probably need some type of modification."

"Correcting the problem is something very simple. It's just a matter of closing a vent in your basement or sealing the walls in the basement. In any case, you don't need to tear the house down from scratch," he said.

The EPA estimates that about three U.S. homes have radon levels above the screening guideline. A recent study by the Iowa State University Extension Program, found that 300 homes tested in the Des Moines area had radon levels above the EPA guideline.

Recent studies in Minnesota, Illinois and Kansas revealed excessive radon levels in 20 to 40 percent of all homes tested.

Radon — a tasteless, invisible gas — is the leading cause of lung cancer in the United States. The EPA estimates that 135,000 Americans will die from lung cancer this year, 20,000 of those deaths are attributed to radon.

And according to Johnson County health department, high radon levels greatly increase the health risk to smokers.

"Radon is a carcinogen that causes cancer, it has been found to do this not only in laboratory animals but in real people who work in uranium mines," Eure said. "Probably know more about radon than any other carcinogen."

"If you live with a radon level of 4 picocuries per liter, you have a 50 percent chance of getting lung cancer," he said. "Most of the other carcinogens are in the 1 in 100,000 to 1 million range, so that's a much higher risk than most other substances."

Radon is a natural byproduct of uranium found in a uniform layer in the earth's crust. The concentration of radon in soil and water varies in a given region. The EPA and methods used in radon testing and construction, Eure said.

"It's not that there's more radon in Iowa, it's that this nice weather makes for good agriculture, but it also makes it easier for radon gas to seep up through the ground. But so much depends on the construction of the home because the house has level radon levels. It doesn't mean the door is closed."

Present figures indicate that home owners will have to take corrective steps, but Eure said that most of the studies far are based on the short-term testing. The health department has embarked on a study to test 1,550 Iowa homes for long- and short-term radon levels.

"This larger study shows much more powerful screening picture of how serious the problem is," he said.

The EPA recommends that homeowners use the carbon monoxide detectors in their basements to detect the need for further testing with the carbon dioxide detectors.
