

Quayle leaves lingering doubts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Dan Quayle's answers to debate questions about what he would do if suddenly elevated to the presidency hardly dispelled doubts about his fitness for the No. 2 job, several political analysts said Thursday.

They disagreed on whether Quayle's debate performance might have damaged the Republican Party ticket headed by George Bush, but they said the Indiana senator clearly missed an opportunity to lay the fitness question to rest.

Some of the experts — including political consultants and political science professors — said they felt the 41-year-old Quayle had been over-coached by his campaign handlers, and was therefore too programmed to cope with nettlesome and unexpected questions.

"If you've ever had a close friend have to give a toast or speech, and just couldn't do it, that's how I felt when I watched" Quayle struggle with hypothetical questions Wednesday night about taking over the presidency because of an emergency, said Republican Party consultant Tom Edmonds.

During the debate, Quayle repeatedly cited his 12 years' service in Congress as his principal qualification for the vice presidency.

When asked what he would do in the event of a presidential death, he said he would pray for himself and the country and then call a meeting of Cabinet members and top presidential advisers. He said little more, though pressed by questioners.

"As a Republican, I sat there trying to pull words out of his mouth," Edmonds said. "Frankly, I think there are a lot of family dogs that could have answered the question better."

"I think he was so afraid of striking out that he never swung the bat," he said.

The Dukakis campaign, meanwhile, released two television ads that sought to underscore questions about Quayle's qualifications. One ad noted that Bush had chosen Quayle to replace him should tragedy occur and said, "Hopefully we will never know how great a lapse of judgment that really was." The other implied Bush aides were ready to dump Quayle for Sen. Bob Dole after his debate performance.

Quayle, for his part, was putting the best possible face on his performance Thursday, telling students at Missouri State College that it was his debate foe, Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, who "had a chance to address whether he would continue the extreme liberal policies of Gov. Michael Dukakis if he took over the presidency" and failed to answer that question three times.

"He waffled, shuffled, ducked and dived," Quayle said.

Tom Korologos, a Republican political consultant who has taken on a host of projects for the Reagan administration over the years, said he thought Quayle had "done fine and he's put this behind him."

"I think the qualification issue is gone, and I am amazed that the polling figures don't show better for Dan on this," he said.

CBS poll says voters doubt Quayle's ability

NEW YORK (AP) — Half the voters who watched the vice-presidential debate came away still doubting Republican Sen. Dan Quayle's qualifications to serve as president, if that became necessary, a national poll found Thursday.

The CBS News poll of 412 debate watchers also found they overwhelmingly believed the Democratic nominee, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, won the debate. An ABC News poll released after the debate Wednesday reached the same finding.

Quayle was rated as qualified to be president by 47 percent in the CBS post-debate poll, up from 37 percent who rated him qualified before the debate. But Bentsen did better, rated as qualified by 78 percent, up from 64 percent.

Though Quayle's rating improved, "I'd be worried if I was Dan Quayle, because he still hasn't broken the 50-percent mark and this was probably his only chance to do so," said Keating Holland, a CBS poll analyst.

CBS found that the number of debate viewers who said they would worry about Quayle as president was little changed — 52 percent before the debate, 48 percent after it. Just 17 percent said after the debate they would

Main library opens doors to VIPs only

By Hilery Livengood
The Daily Iowan

The UI Main Library will be open at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, but only those with invitations will be allowed to enter.

This will be the first Saturday of the semester that the library will be opened before 12 p.m. In past semesters, the Main Library has opened at 8 a.m. on Saturdays, but operating hours decreased by 10 percent this fall due to the hiring freeze.

This Saturday UI President Hunter Rawlings and library staff members will host a "modest brunch involving community members and friends of the library," said Mary New, assistant to the director of University Relations. The brunch will be held in the north lobby of the library.

New said an event of this nature had never been held in the library before, but this year's emphasis by UI administrators on academic programs prompted them to hold the event at the library.

Some UI students said they oppose the library hosting state dignitaries when the facility will not be open to students and faculty for studying and research.

UI football weekends fill hotels

By Noelle Nystrom
The Daily Iowan

Even if the Hawks win, fans in town to cheer the team on to victory against Wisconsin this weekend may be at a loss when it comes to booking a hotel room.

Steve Tarara, general manager of the Holiday Inn, 210 S. Dubuque St., said all football-weekend reservations are made months in advance.

"We begin taking reservations for football weekends on February 1st," Tarara said. "By the end of that day we normally don't have any rooms left."

Some Iowa City motels offer a waiting list for people who cannot get a room.

"The same day we open for reservations, we also start a waiting list on a first-come, first-served basis," Tarara said. "When we start getting cancellations, usually in August, we start calling people on the list."

Council considers choosing officers for school district

By Sara Langenberg
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City schools may bring a police officer into the district to improve community relations if the Iowa City Council passes a proposal approving the installment.

The possible appointment of a school liaison, or community relations officer, comes as the result of a new drug intervention policy in the Iowa City School System, adopted by the school board in June.

The policy states that "the goal of the district shall be to establish drug and alcohol free schools in order to maintain a safe and effective learning environment for all students."

The community relations officer will be involved with this policy of drug intervention, according to Iowa City Manager Stephen Atkins, but the officer will not be performing a supervisory function in the schools.

"I don't want the students to feel as if we're establishing a police state," school board member Fran Malloy said. "I don't want them to be fearful (of the officer); it's not calling in police to enforce school rules."

Coralville detective Steve Bird is a school liaison officer at Northwest Junior High School and Central Elementary School in Coralville.

Some of Bird's duties include drug prevention, but Bird said an important element of his position as school liaison is to represent the police in a different light.

"It's nice because the students look at the police in a different aspect, for once," Bird said.

Bryce Hansen, principal of Northwest Junior High School, said students' reactions to Bird are positive.

"I think, personally, that Iowa City having a liaison officer is very exciting — it's an excellent idea."

Don Fisher, principal of Central High School in Davenport, said there have been school liaison officers at Central for several years.

Fisher said the liaison officers in Davenport only serve drug intervention services to a small degree, by speaking to driver's education classes and participating in Students Against Drunk Driving.

children with police and to assist in organization of neighborhood-watch programs, which Iowa City does not currently have.

"We've got a tentative go-ahead from the (Iowa) City Council," said councilor Dale Courtney. But before the council gives its final approval, the officer's duties must be more clearly outlined.

Atkins, Malloy and Courtney suggested a variety of likely duties the officer would have.

"We want the (officer) to teach the students the legal implications of drug usage and drug dealing," Courtney said. "I don't think the situation is serious enough that we need someone patrolling the hallways."

"(The officer) is for drug prevention, not enforcement. Patrolling halls and searching lockers is not the intention at all," he said.

Malloy said the school board's primary aim is education but added that substance abuse interferes with education.

Through the substance abuse policy, she said the district takes a firm stance against drug abuse.

"We wanted to make it extremely clear-cut that drugs and alcohol will not be tolerated by the Iowa

Pinochet admits defeat as jubilant Chileans revel

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A stern Gen. Augusto Pinochet told the nation Thursday he will remain as president until his term runs out in 1990, as police fired water cannons and tear gas into crowds celebrating his defeat in a referendum on extending his rule to 1997.

"Every man and woman of this country can be absolutely sure we will carry out completely the itinerary foreseen in the constitution," Pinochet said in a speech broadcast nationwide on radio and television.

It was his first public declaration since a resounding loss in Wednesday's referendum. "I recognize and accept the majority verdict expressed yesterday by the citizenry," he declared.

The authoritarian leader appeared in a white military dress uniform. Unsmiling and head slightly bowed toward a set of microphones, he spoke in a strong, steady voice.

Pinochet also warned opposition leaders not to misinterpret the vote as a mandate for them or a rejection of an 8-year-old constitution that called for the referendum. The referendum also provides for Pinochet if defeated — as he was — to remain in office until March 1990, when the winner of an open election planned for late 1989 will assume power.

"No one can feel they have the mandate of the people to twist what the people decided," he said. The constitution, crafted by his administration, was passed in a loosely organized 1980 referendum that opposition leaders said was rife with vote fraud.

Thousands of jubilant foes of Pinochet chanted "He has fallen!" and marched in confetti-strewn streets to celebrate their ballot-box victory over the military ruler.

"An authoritarian system has been overthrown," said Ricardo Lagos, a leader of a 16-party coalition that campaigned for Pinochet's defeat in a yes-or-no plebiscite.

With 99.6 percent of votes counted, "no" votes against Pinochet's continued rule totaled 3,945,865, or 54.7 percent, while "yes" votes totaled 3,106,099, or 43 percent, the Interior Ministry reported.

Augusto Pinochet

Voided ballots totaled 164,427. The turnout was more than 7.2 million of the 7.4 million registered voters.

While tens of thousands of Chileans demonstrated peacefully at a nearby park and plaza, hundreds of youths near the government palace hurled bottles and sticks at police and dragged wood planks and other debris onto downtown streets.

Riot police used water cannons, setting off mad scrambles engulfing passers-by on nearby streets. Tear gas fumes made many people cover their faces with handkerchiefs and office workers close windows 10 stories above ground.

More than 20 people were arrested and two policemen were injured, authorities said. Reports also said dozens of people were hurt, struck by police nightsticks or by tear gas canisters.

A crowd of many thousands, mostly young men, packed all eight lanes of Santiago's main boulevard for blocks in a stand-off with riot police.

With nightfall, hundreds of demonstrators lit torches made from rolled-up newspapers. The tightly packed crowd pressed against a cordon of police officers who each held out fiberglass

Chilean students cheer defeat of dictatorship

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

Chilean students at the UI are excited following Wednesday's plebiscite which will bring a free election in 1989 after 15 years of dictatorship.

About 21 Chileans are studying at the UI. Many have brought their families to the United States with them in order to pursue five- and six-year academic commitments.

Claudio Pizarro, a UI psychology graduate student, said he is excited about the prospects of a renewed democratic government in his native Chile.

"Now I think the parties have to function normally, and it will be interesting to see who will be the candidates in the next election," he said.

Pizarro said Chileans will elect a new Congress, judiciary and executive body.

"I hope the army, navy, air force and police are going to let the process go on," he said. "It's a compromise, but I think they are going to respect this plebiscite, or there will be social war."

He added Chileans favor democracy, and it is unlikely there will be civil war.

"Chile has a tradition in voting," he said. "You can find people with a good education everywhere. They may be poor, but they read the newspaper and like to be involved in general."

Pizarro, who's been in the United States for 17 months, said he thinks political behavior will be more open in Chile and will allow coalitions to form to support candidates.

"With this government, people didn't have the opportunity to organize," he said.

He said he worked for an organization for neglected and street children and plans to return to similar

Homecoming parade sets out on new route

The Daily Iowan

The UI Homecoming parade begins tonight at 6:15 p.m. The route starts at the corner of Washington and Linn streets, then moves west to Clinton Street, then north to Jefferson Street, east on Jefferson to Dubuque Street, then south on Dubuque to Iowa Avenue, then east on Iowa in the north lane.

This year Jefferson Street will be closed to all but local traffic and will be used as a parking area for the band buses. The reviewing stand and grandstand will be located in the 200 block of Iowa Avenue.

The staging area bounded by Jefferson Street, Dodge Street, College Street and Gilbert Street will be closed to vehicular traffic at 4:30 p.m.

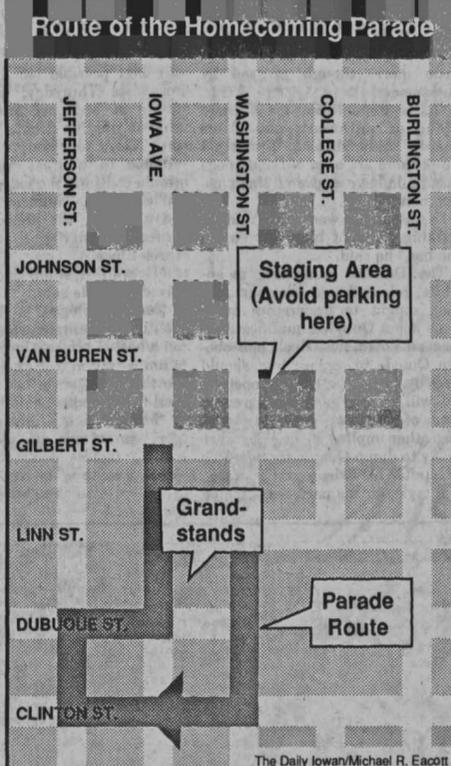

The city will begin towing parked vehicles which are not parked at parking meters from the staging area at 3 p.m. Towing from the parade route and the meters in the staging area will begin at 5 p.m.

The parade route will be closed to all traffic except public transportation at 5:30 p.m.

Handicapped parking will be permitted in the south lane of the 200 block of Iowa Avenue with access to that area at Linn Street and Iowa Avenue off Linn.

Car owners are advised to move vehicles as soon as possible before 5:30 p.m. After that time they may not be able to leave that area until after the parade ends.

Since parking will be limited in the downtown area the Iowa City Police Department advises spectators to park in the ramps, take public transportation or walk to the downtown area.

Stolen tapes returned to student

The Daily Iowan

Thursday's campus mail put a year's worth of work back into Robin Fleischer's hands.

Fleischer, a UI doctoral student in psychology, had a video recorder and four videotapes stolen earlier this week from a third-floor office in the UI Spence Laboratories of Psychology. The tapes represented about one year's worth of work involving the improvement of stuple's memories and performance through mood-altering video productions.

"It's amazing — I really had no hope of getting the tapes back," Fleischer said. "Now I'm having mixed feelings. Part of me is saying that these people are fantastic for bringing back the tapes, but part is saying that these are still the same jerks who stole the VCR."

Fleischer said the video recorder she borrowed from a professor is a necessary tool within the department.

"It's still a $450 VCR that we lost, and which the university's insurance probably won't replace," she said. "A lot of people in the department use VCRs in their research, so people are still being hurt by the theft."

Fleischer said she now hopes to receive her doctorate early next fall.

A man was injured in a two-car accident Wednesday on Highway 6 at 3 p.m., according to police reports.

A Brighton, Iowa, man fell asleep at the wheel and struck a car stopped at a red light, according to the report. Approximately $1,500 damage occurred.

Lawrence L. Lynch, 43, 746 Juniper Drive, had a small amount of glass removed from his eye at Mercy Hospital, according to the report.

Accident: An Iowa City man was transported to UI Hospitals and Clinics by Johnson County Ambulance following an accident Wednesday at Burlington and Gilbert streets, according to the report.

Robert L. Gilbert, 41, 110 S. Leeblick, Burlington, Iowa, was charged with failure to yield right of way on a left turn, according to the report.

Damage was estimated at more than $500, according to the report.

Report: Two males were arrested and charged with public intoxication early Wednesday at Deli Mart, 525 Highway 1 West, according to police reports.

An 18-year-old male from Clinton, Iowa, and Paul A. Mangler, 21, 408 Lincoln Ave., Delmar, Iowa, were charged, according to the report.

The males were allegedly in the Deli Mart parking lot for 30 minutes, according to the report.

Accident: A two-car accident occurred Wednesday at 618 First Ave., according to police reports.

A Williamsburg, Iowa, woman was charged with second-degree arson and second-degree theft Thursday for her alleged involvement in setting a barn on fire and in the theft of two vehicles, all of which occurred in Oxford, Iowa, according to Johnson County District Court records. Katherine Ann Mullnix, 29, was charged with arson and two counts of second-degree theft for her alleged involvement in the theft of two 1979 Ford Pintos.

Mullnix allegedly gave a statement to an officer from the Johnson County Sheriff's office regarding her involvement. Statements were also received from an alleged conspirator and a witness indicating Mullnix's alleged participation, according to court records.

The defendant was placed in the custody of the Sixth Judicial District Department of Corrections. A preliminary hearing is set for Oct. 20, according to court records.

Shortage of pumpkins may hamper Halloween festivities

By Lisa Swegle
The Daily Iowan

Trick-or-treaters may have to travel store to store for pumpkins this year, instead of door to door for candy.

Barbara McAvoy, part owner of Golden Acres Farms, Tipton, said, "A lot of places have lost their pumpkins and there aren't going to be as many. The quality is really down in size and shape and color compared to what it usually is."

Iowa pumpkin farmers have endured a season varying from drought to rain and now frost.

"The basic problem was the heat, the constant 100-degree pressure," McAvoy said. "The pumpkins couldn't handle it."

A second crop of pumpkins pollinated after rains at the end of the summer, but Iowa pumpkin farmers had to contend with an early frost this week.

"It wouldn't have frosted so early, we would have had a better crop," McAvoy said.

Ted Carpenter, Coral Fruit Market manager, said, "The cold weather kind of compounds things too, because if the pumpkins are growing on the vines, then they've been killed in the last two nights because of the frost."

Marc Bock, owner of Bock's Berry Farm, Lone Tree, Iowa, said many farmers didn't plant pumpkins this year because the drought situation was already apparent by pumpkin planting time in June.

"We've been contacted by a lot of people who haven't been able to get their usual supply of pumpkins," Bock said. "I really anticipate because of the shortage that we will sell them all."

Bock's Berry Farm was able to plant pumpkins this year because the farm is equipped with irrigated fields, Bock said.

Farmers only need to irrigate, or cover their fields with an inch of water, when it doesn't rain. Bock said he had to irrigate his fields two to three times a week this summer.

"The people who have irrigation have been able to weather it pretty well," Bock said.

The pumpkin crop also ripened a month early because of the extreme heat this summer, according to Bock.

Carpenter said the Coral Fruit Market is fortunate to be able to buy pumpkins from a supplier with irrigation.

"My guess is that we'll sell more because a lot of places don't have access to them at all," Carpenter said. People have called Carpenter, searching for pumpkins, from as far away as St. Louis.

Carpenter said people in St. Louis are shipping pumpkins from Colorado.

Max Hagen of Cedar Rapids, past president of the Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association, said, "From what I understand from different groups around the state, it's very spotty. Some places are having an excellent crop and some are not."

Customers may have to pay 3-5 cents more per pound for their pumpkins this year, Hagen said. He doesn't think customers will notice the difference in price.

"Most pumpkins are bought around this part of the world for decorative purposes," Hagen said. Pumpkins are on store shelves earlier this year, but Hagen cautioned people not to carve their jack-o'-lanterns too early.

"People should be careful not to carve them until close to Halloween because they deteriorate very fast after they're cut," Hagen said.

Pumpkins stored in a cool place can last 30 days, but carved pumpkins usually spoil after two or three days, Hagen said.

Demolition planned for bridge

By Jean Thilmany
The Daily Iowan

The Elmira bridge is not of historic value and will be demolished, County engineer Glen Meisner told the Johnson County Board of Supervisors Thursday.

"I checked with the (Department of Transportation) about the bridge, and they have no interest in it as a historical structure," Meisner said.

The board's plan to demolish the bridge was contested Tuesday by Tom Walsh who lives on Rapid Creek Road, the road the bridge is on.

The board planned to demolish the burned structure as soon as possible, according to Supervisor Betty Ockenfels. She said the bridge caused liability concerns among the board members.

But Walsh said the bridge may be of historic importance. He said if it were found to be historically significant, the board should consider preserving it.

The Iowa Department of Transportation and Iowa State Historical Office are taking inventory of all state bridges to pinpoint those of historical significance, Walsh said.

"As long as they're doing this, we may as well see if the bridge is of historic value," Walsh said. "If it is, the board can decide where to go from there."

Meisner sent pictures of the structure to the IDOT and received a reply Wednesday stating the bridge is not of historical significance.

"The bridge is burned up, and I feel we should close it," Meisner told the board Thursday.

In light of the IDOT's findings, the board voted to demolish the structure.

In other business, the board decided to meet with Iowa City councilors Dec. 1. They will decide the agenda of that meeting at a later date.

Supervisors also officially proclaimed Oct. 2, 1988, through Oct. 8, 1988, as Mental Illness Awareness Week.

In proclaiming mental health week, "the Johnson County Board of Supervisors joins the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill in urging the Federal Government to increase appropriations of the National Institute for Mental Health for research on serious mental illness," according to a release issued by the board.

Leadership conference receives mixed reviews

Stephen Horan
The Daily Iowan

Last weekend's eighth annual Leadership Development Weekend in Dubuque, Iowa, received mixed reviews from UI students about its overall structure.

UI freshman Alex Tsao, an international student from Taiwan, said the UI Office of Campus Programs and Student Activities directors could have assigned students to different hotels based on whether the student was an international student or a member of the greek system.

"When you bring the leaders of American and international student organizations together, why not use the opportunity for making new friends?" said Tsao. "I thought this activity was about exchanging ideas, but it began with students being assigned into groups."

The decision to use separate facilities was based on buses carrying students being late to the event and the immediate problem of loading, according to Office of Campus Programs and Student Activities coordinator Mary Peterson, who directed the weekend event.

Next year, Peterson said participants will be housed together by "families." A family consists of a group of students brought together based on their birth dates, Peterson said.

Previously, the significance of the family was limited to activities involving Friday's campfire skits and Saturday's meals.

Some of this year's participants said they have reservations on the issue of expanding the family's role as it pertains to integration of the international and American students.

"I think it is fine for international students and Americans to participate in activities, but it might be uncomfortable for international students to settle down with the American students beyond that," said Indonesian student Christina Sung.

UI freshman Joel Nielsen said, "I would not mind being integrated with the international students, but with people having different interests, there might be some problems."

Tsao said he was also concerned with how the workshops relating to leadership skills were scheduled on Saturday. In the morning session, the 59 students were encouraged to attend the workshops of their choice. However, at 1:30 p.m. special workshops for the greek students were provided that ran for three hours.

"I think it would be more useful for everyone who is in an organization to talk about the problems they have and share the techniques they know of to solve problems," Tsao said. "But the labeling of a session as being greek or whatever doesn't encourage students with different experiences and ideas to get together to share them."

Peterson said that the greek student leaders had "hot" issues relating to the role of academics and alcohol in the greek system that the other groups would not find so relevant.

James Mbyirikura, a UI teaching assistant who served as a director for the international students, said the students could have chosen any workshop or "track" that they desired.

"But let's be realistic, international students have concerns that differ from the greeks, and few international students would be interested in attending a greek workshop," he said.

The funding for the Development Weekend is provided through joint appropriations from the Panhellenic Association Council, Student Senate, the Office of Campus Programs and Collegiate Associations Council.

Hotels

The Days Inn Ironmen, I-80 at Exit 242, usually begins taking reservations April 1 and is full by the middle of May, according to Deb Jorgensen, front office manager.

"We put people on a waiting list and start calling them when we begin getting cancellations," Jorgensen said. "There are usually about 25 names on the waiting list per night."

But some other hotels don't have waiting lists.

"We don't use the waiting lists because they are usually more trouble than they're worth," said

Garry Gleason, reservation clerk for the Kings Inn Motel, 815 1st Ave. in Coralville. "We just find people on the street who need a room."

Most motel employees agree that Homecoming weekend is one of the busiest of the season.

"Homecoming is always most popular," said Tarara, who is in his third football season at the Holiday Inn.

Parents Weekend for UI students is another popular weekend for Iowa City motels. This year rooms are at a premium because it was scheduled for the same weekend as the Iowa vs. Northwestern football game.

"Normally we have enough rooms, and everything works out just fine for Parents Weekend," said Gleason. "But this year, for some reason, they scheduled it on the same weekend as a football game, and a lot of people will be out of luck."

Those who can't get a room in Iowa City may want to consider looking to Cedar Rapids for a place to stay.

"We like to keep in close contact with the other motels in the area so we know if there are vacancies," said Gleason.

Analysis

Still, several political experts said in interviews it was apparent that Quayle had not resolved the crucial question, despite rare reviews he got from President Ronald Reagan, Bush and other GOP partisans.

"I think he came out of it about the way he went into it," conservative direct mail fund-raiser Richard Viguerie said when asked to assess Quayle's performance. "I think it was about a wash."

Viguerie said that while Quayle did all right on 70 percent of his debate statements, the senator muffed the critical question about qualification and fitness for the vice presidency.

"I'm sympathetic to the guy because he was too coached... and told, 'Whatever you do, don't do this and don't do that,'" Viguerie said.

In an interview on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," Democratic consultant Bob Beckel, who was Walter Mondale's presidential campaign manager in 1984, said that "Dan Quayle went into the debate being an anchor for George Bush, and he came out being a bigger anchor."

Patrick Buchanan, a conservative columnist who served for a time as White House communications director for Reagan, said, "This whole debate was about Dan Quayle and I think, under pressure, he did quite well. And I don't think anybody... is going to say, 'Well, gee, this fellow's not even qualified to be vice president of the United States.'"

James Sundquist, a senior political studies fellow at the liberal-oriented Brookings Institution here, said he thought that Quayle "came through as a pretty empty vessel," particularly when the Indiana senator was pressed to explain how he would take over as president.

worry about Bentsen as president, down from 22 percent before the debate.

CBS conducted the survey by calling back 744 likely voters it had interviewed before the debate; the results were among the 412 of them who said they had watched all or part of it. The poll had a five-point margin of error.

Asked who won the debate, 50 percent in the survey chose Bentsen and 27 percent said Quayle. The result was almost precisely the same as the 51-27 percent split in the ABC poll.

A CBS-New York Times poll released Tuesday put the presidential race at 48 percent for the Republicans to 46 percent for the Democrats. Holland said the post-debate re-survey found "no particular change" in that gauge.

City School System," Malloy said. Courtney said, "The school board did want some potential teeth in their policy — to enforce it if they tried to. (The community relations officer's presence) will show that they intend to enforce it."

The first-year cost of instituting the community relations or public safety officer will be about $50,000, Courtney said. That cost includes salary, benefits, an automobile and necessary special training classes.

After the first year, Courtney estimated the officer's salary at about $30,000 a year, which includes salary, benefits and additional on-going educational programs.

According to Brenda Cruikshank, co-chair of the school board's substance abuse committee, all parents of secondary school children are invited to the board's Oct. 24 meeting to discuss the policy's implementation.

VP debates fail to sway UI voters

By Andy Brownstein
The Daily Iowan

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen achieved a landslide victory over Sen. Dan Quayle in Wednesday's vice-presidential debate, local experts say.

"There are lots of Democrats right now who are wishing that Lloyd Bentsen was on top of the ticket, and there are a lot of Republicans wishing that Dan Quayle was on the ticket at all," said Arthur H. Miller, UI director of the Iowa Social Science Institute.

Miller said that Bentsen was polished, experienced and forceful. "He was willing to state his opinions and be an independent thinker. He looked very presidential," Miller said.

He felt that Quayle had much room for improvement and looked over-programmed and too cool in delivery. "He didn't come across as a real person," Miller said.

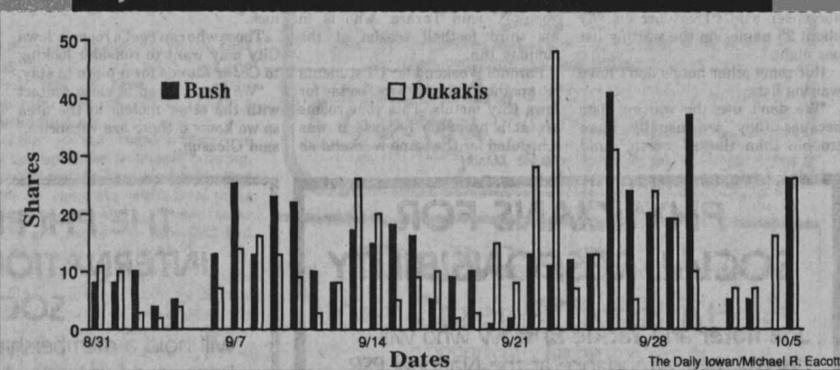

Quayle's inability to effectively deal with questions about his competence were extremely damaging, Miller said, adding that it was amazing a person in Quayle's position could not think on his feet.

"By not being able to answer what he'd do if he became president, Quayle keeps the question of his qualifications on the menu," said Miller.

Miller commented that questions about Bentsen's ideological differences with Dukakis actually worked to the vice-presidential candidates advantage.

"Bentsen also showed that he was not a yes man. He can speak with a passion and fire that Dukakis' bureaucratic approach usually lacks," Miller said.

Daily Number of Shares Traded in Bush and Dukakis Stock

Despite overwhelming support for Bentsen, the UI Presidential Stock Market showed a slight increase in Bush shares. After the debate, there was an even amount of trading, with both candidates getting 26 shares each. However, by 2:30 p.m. on Thursday, Bush's lead over Dukakis was at 1.4 percent.

This Bush lead continued, even though a survey of market traders showed that 83 percent of them thought that Bentsen won the debate.

George Neumann, UI director of the Presidential Stock Market, tried to explain this strange phenomenon.

"Someone once commented that the vice presidency is just about as important as warm spit," Neumann said. "I guess people don't think that the position is that important, or they just aren't that surprised with the candidates."

"It's a sad commentary on what the debates have become," said Neumann, adding that "when Quayle made a mistake, I half expected them to cut to a commercial."

Miller said that the concentration on image and character in the election race takes away from discussion of the major issues. "The parties have learned how to manipulate the media in order to sift out uncertainty in their campaigns," Miller said.

The current system has caused the country to become cynical about the political process, said Miller. "It has become obvious to the American people that we don't have the best leaders running for office," he said.

Miller expects more of the same from Bush and Dukakis in their next debate. He suggested that Dukakis should try to be clear as to what he represents and stop running away from his natural constituency. He also anticipates that Bush will try to continue showing that he is a real person — independent and capable of strong leadership.

"Both candidates will have to address the issues," Miller said. "The American people will lose their enthusiasm about voting if they don't see Bush or Dukakis take a stand."

Former English chairman Maxwell dies at 95

The Daily Iowan

The Old Capitol flag flew at half-mast Thursday in honor of the death of former professor and chairman of the UI English Department Baldwin Maxwell.

Maxwell, 95, died Saturday at his home, 111 E. Church St.

A native of Charlotte, N.C., Maxwell joined the UI faculty in 1926 and retired to emeritus status in 1961. His specialty was Shakespearean drama.

Upon his retirement, Maxwell was presented with a special 360-page volume of The Philological Quarterly written by 28 English and American colleagues. Maxwell was editor of the journal, which was published at the UI, from 1928-1955.

Maxwell was invited to write and lecture at the Shakespeare Institute at Stratford-upon-Avon twice, once in 1951 and once in 1952-53. He held three fellowships at the University of Chicago.

Maxwell's publications include

Studies in Beaumont, Fletcher and Massinger (1939) and Studies in the Shakespeare Apocrypha (1956).

Maxwell received both his associate bachelor's and master's degrees in 1915 at the University of North Carolina; his doctorate in 1921 at the University of Chicago; and an honorary Lit.D. degree in 1959 at North Carolina.

Branstad creates task force on Iowa families

DES MOINES (AP) — Gov. Terry Branstad appointed a task force Thursday to study the changing nature of the Iowa family and determine how the government should respond when families are threatened.

"We can't take our families for granted," Branstad said. "Iowa is a place for families to grow and prosper and we must build upon this reality."

Branstad wouldn't be specific but said legislative programs to protect the family would be one of his top priorities when the General Assembly convenes in January. To help form those suggestions, Branstad said he has appointed Chuck Palmer, acting director of the Department of Human Services, to head a task force.

Branstad said that when Iowa natives move back to the state after a significant absence, they consistently declare their reason for moving is because Iowa is a good place to raise a family.

"But we can't rest on our laurels," he said. Branstad said Iowa has three great strengths — families, good education and a strong work ethic — but that all of them need constant attention.

"We want to brag about our strengths, but we don't want that to ring hollow," he said.

"It's like with a football team. You can't win on reputation. You have to go out there and prove every week that you're the better team," he said.

It's sobering to realize that the traditional two-parent family is now the exception, he said, noting that only 27 percent of families in America have two parents in the home.

The number of single parents in Iowa has gone up from 13 percent in 1970 to 26 percent in 1984. At the same time, more than half of all families have more than one person employed.

While he said Iowa's children have great opportunities, many of them face risks that could scar them for life unless the government takes action. He listed the threats as drug and other substance abuse, emotional stress, teen-age pregnancies or abuse within the home.

This is performed as Sirlin's slide projections, which take everything from a three-dimensional city skyline to more abstract shapes suggesting things beyond mortal comprehension. Glass' consistently inspired score (one of the best he's done in years) provides a similarly evocative aural atmosphere, eating away at the listener on a subliminal level.

Most remarkable is the script. Never content to just tell the story, Hwang (of M. Butterfly fame) takes on provocative ideas such as the line between enlightenment and madness, cosmic loneliness and spiritual communion.

Best of all, 1000 Airplanes never resorts to fashionably abstruse surrealism. Not only do all the theatrical elements fit like a jigsaw puzzle, but the ideas are expressed urgently, clearly and poetically.

Peterson discusses fraternities, sororities

During the past eight years, UI Office of Campus Programs and Student Activities coordinator Mary Peterson has supervised the UI's 3,300-plus member greek system.

Peterson's duties include advising each of the system's 30 fraternities and 20 sororities, overseeing the system's Interfraternity/Panhellenic Council and Black Greek Council, and conducting workshops ranging from leadership training to alcohol awareness. In addition to her responsibilities with the UI greek system, Peterson has served on a number of national greek conferences and associations, and is currently executive director of the Mid-American Panhellenic Council Association.

Peterson was interviewed for The Daily Iowan by Freelance Editor Jay Casini.

Mary Peterson

I think there is probably still a conflict between greeks and non-greeks, but I think there is a mutual respect here that is different from other campuses, and I pride myself and our system on that. If you want to be greek, fine. If not, it's okay. You aren't a nobody if you aren't greek and I think a majority of our members feel that way. — Mary Peterson fraternal world nationally at a lot of seminars and conferences, we are still concerned about it and still make it a priority in our programming. We are also seeing stricter policies from the national offices, because we are still amazed and cannot understand why this is still happening. There is even talk right now among some of the national fraternities about wiping out pledgeship all together.

At Iowa, I don't have any fear at this point of a death. I don't think we are dealing with that sort of stupidity. I still think we have some mental games going on. What do you determine as hazing? That is part of the problem. What is the bottom line of what is and what is not, versus what you expect out of someone to show their responsibility and their willingness to be a member?

DI: How have you dealt with hazing problems in UI chapters in the past?

PETERSON: I've always told the chapters, "You know the rules and regulations, and you are going to make the decision whether you are going to follow them or not. But if you don't, and something goes astray, it is best to get it worked out with me. Because if you don't and it is real severe I'm going to have to nail your backsides to the wall."

DI: The UI has a significant segment of students who criticize the greek system as an elitist structure that is inherently sexist and racist. Do you believe the UI has a system that instills mostly negative values?

PETERSON: No, I don't think so. I think if you randomly sampled groups of students that live in a certain apartment building or a certain residence hall, you'd still find the same percentage of people with negative values.

I'm sure it looks sexist because it is two separate organizations, one male and one female.

DI: Is it racist? The system still has traditionally black chapters and traditionally white chapters.

PETERSON: I think now, as a society, we are dealing with that integration as well as we are in the little bit, there is no doubt about it. But I've said this before when I've been interviewed, greeks do not have the market on partying. If somebody wants to drink bad enough, they are going to do it no matter where they live.

DI: How about at the UI? A lot of people attribute the growing number of students each year in the UI's formal rush to underage drinkers looking for easier access to alcohol.

PETERSON: I guess I give our students a lot more credit than that. I give the average student coming to the UI more credit, that they aren't just coming here to party. Plus, the numbers at Iowa have not jumped that significantly. If it was a big alcohol issue, we would have had a huge jump. We're still only 20 percent of the undergraduate members here.

DI: One of criticisms still lingering from the sixties and seventies is that the greek system creates an atmosphere that institutionalizes substance abuse. Do you think the greek system contributes to drug and alcohol abuse?

PETERSON: I don't think it contributes to substance abuse, but I think because greeks are more publicly accessible and you can survey them more easily, it looks more concentrated. It doesn't contribute any more than any other environment on a campus. If you are going to be an abuser of alcohol, that mindset has been established long before you came to college for the majority of students. I think, if anything, they are more exposed to programs and workshops for dealing with the problem.

DI: Many people within the greek system point to a trend away from the practice of fraternity hazing, yet there is still a great deal of attention given to hazing deaths on campuses across the country.

PETERSON: I still think hazing is a problem lingering nationally, and that is why, being involved in the

Art History Library cuts spur protest to regents

By Stephen Humble
The Daily Iowan

The UI Art History Society is submitting letters of disapproval to the state Board of Regents and several UI deans protesting the decreased hours of the UI Art History Library.

In accordance with a new UI policy necessitated by a hiring freeze and other budget constraints, the Art History Library has reduced its operating hours. The library is currently open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and from 7 to 9 p.m. On Sundays, the library is open from 1 until 4 p.m. The new library hours represent a 21-percent decrease from last year.

"The library was open 80 hours a week last year and this year it is only open 63," said Lon Kaufmann, a member of the Art History Society. "I know the UI is under a hiring freeze that affects all of the libraries, but we just feel that the cut in hours (is too much)."

The new UI policy has also forced the UI Main Library and the 11 departmental libraries to decrease their operating hours by 10 percent.

However, UI librarian Sheila Creth said the Art History Library had increased hours last year on a trial basis. Creth said the extended hours were monitored and were found not to be effective.

"This year the decision was made to set them (the library hours) back," Creth said. "It may seem like a larger cut was taken from the Art History Library, but actually the cut was 10 percent, not including last year's trial hours."

UI art librarian Harlen Sifford said use of the library during last year's hours was measured by the circulation of books checked out and on reserve.

"The library keeps accurate statistics on everything we do in the library," Sifford said.

However, Kaufmann said the library's method of measuring use during the trial period was invalid.

"They only measured the number of books being checked out of the library and the reserve room; they did not measure the amount of people going in and out of the library," Kaufmann said. "The library was used all the time, but now we only have a few hours to use it on the weekend."

Kaufmann said the UI should get its priorities straight.

"Isn't it ironic that new athletic buildings are being built and the libraries are having to reduce their hours?" Kaufmann said. "Is this an educational community or a health spa?"

Creth said the UI has proposed an additional $900,000 in funding from the regents for UI libraries for the 1989-90 and 1990-91 academic years.

Kaufmann said the Art History Society isn't the only group sending letters or writing petitions.

"There are petitions all over campus," Kaufmann said. "It is obvious this is a problem. We are not pointing any fingers, we just want something to be done."

ating hours for the brunch will send a message to the students from the UI administration, said UI Student Senate President Melinda Hess.

"I think that potentially the administration could be giving the message that social events for this elite group of people invited by the President's Office are more important than studying space and accessibility to library services for students," Hess said.

"I would like to know the reasoning behind this," she said.

Other students think funds from the President's Office that will pay for the brunch should instead be used to strengthen the library's budget.

"Those funds that are financing the luncheon should be transferred to help keep the library open," said Liberal Arts Student Association President Dan Shanes. "It's not important that the library isn't paying for the brunch."

"Fact: The library is going to be open. Fact: Someone's paying for it," Shanes said. "I think the students need to use the library more than the president."

"Of course I think the whole thing's ironic," Shanes said. "And the kicker is that it will be held in the north end."

The north entrance to the library was closed at the beginning of the semester as one of the money-saving efforts by the library.

But the brunch might also provide the library with an opportunity to voice its need for additional funding, according to UI Librarian Sheila Creth.

"This brunch will be very important because for the first time there is an opportunity for the library to have members of the (state) Board of Regents and state legislators come to the library and see our situation there," Creth said.

"I appreciate the concern of the students, but I think that in this situation saying no to the request would have been a mistake," Creth said. "And we would have lost a good opportunity to get people to stop and think about the library's situation."

"If we wouldn't have opened the library up, we might have alienated many of the people whose support and interest we need," she said.

shields. Eventually, the crowd broke through the cordon and was immediately dispersed by riot police. Several people were trampled as the crowd fled and were seen lying on the ground or doubled over in pain. No one appeared badly hurt, however. At 8:50 p.m. (7:50 p.m. EDT), a blackout hit downtown Santiago, but power returned to the city in 15 minutes. The cause of the blackout was not known immediately. Authorities allowed union leader Sergio Troncoso to address the demonstrators and to urge them to remain calm. "We have to be careful of the women and children who are here," Troncoso said. The demonstrators yelled insults at police, calling them "murderers." Wednesday's rejection of the army commander, who seized power in a bloody 1973 coup, cleared the way for elections to return Chile to democracy. The opposition urged elections be held before December 1989, a plan that has been rejected by the still-powerful military. Chile's last presidential election was in 1970, when the president overthrown by Pinochet, Salvador Allende, a Marxist, was elected.

Observers expect at least two opposition candidates will run in the presidential elections: Lagos, Socialist leader of the center-left Party for Democracy alliance; and Patricio Aylwin, president of the centrist Christian Democratic Party. Under the constitution, Pinochet will rule until the new elections. If the military leaves power, it will further signal an end to the military governments that have dominated South America. Elected civilian rule has replaced the military in Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, Peru and Uruguay in the past decade.

work in Chile. "I think there's a lot of things to be done in Chile and I will be able to give back something to my society in some psychological aspect," Pizarro said. Another Chilean doctoral student, Sylvia Valdes-Leon, said the results of the plebiscite represent an emotional victory. "The most important thing is that the people will have the opportunity to decide who will be the leader of the country," she said. "I wasn't worried because I saw it was impossible for (Gen. Augusto) Pinochet to win," she said. "He has done many stupid and bad things in Chile — in my heart I hoped it was different, I wanted to cry because of the many people who have suffered."

Valdes-Leon, an instructor at the University of Chile at Santiago from 1983 to 1987, said she witnessed university students being abused by the police. "I know that the life for students is often very hard," she said. "My feeling is sad, happy — many things, but I hope that in the future things will change." Jose Flores, a sixth-year doctoral candidate in mathematics, said the vote was a statement against the government. "I think that what the Chilean people felt is that they should vote against the dictatorship of Pinochet," he said. Flores said more attention needs to be given to the lower income in Chile. "Even though they have had some success, there has been no good distribution of economy. They have to think of the lower-class people and have more social work," he said. Flores and Valdes-Leon both plan to return to their country. Chile has been controlled by General Augusto Pinochet, a 72-year-old army commander who seized power in 1973. Transitional articles in Chile's Constitution allowed voters to decide if the regime would be in power for eight more years or if elections would be held in 1989. About 54 percent of the 7.2 million Chileans who voted in the plebiscite were against extending Pinochet's term, while 43 percent voted to extend his term to 1997. Chile has 7.4 million registered voters.

Algerian protesters defy emergency decree

ALGIERS, Algeria — Protesters defied an emergency declaration Thursday and rioted for a third day against high prices and unemployment, setting fire to government buildings in several parts of the city.

Soldiers were in charge of public order for the first time since French rule ended 26 years ago.

Automatic-weapons fire sounded repeatedly Thursday afternoon in the center of Algiers, but whether it was warning fire or aimed at protesters was not clear.

Unconfirmed reports said injured people were taken to hospitals but hospital personnel would not answer questions. Many arrests were reported, but authorities gave no figures. Damage has been estimated informally at several hundred million dollars, but no official figures are available.

Lebanese threaten American hostages

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Kidnapers holding two Americans threatened the hostages' safety Thursday in venting their anger over proposals to send U.N. troops to police Lebanon's stalled presidential elections.

The warning came in a typewritten statement in Arabic from the Revolutionary Justice Organization. The statement was delivered to the Beirut independent newspaper An-Nahar along with a Polaroid picture of U.S. hostage Joseph James Cicippio.

"We shall use all the cards to thwart these conspiracies, including the card of the safety of the hostages, which we shall make the backbone of our confrontation," the statement said.

Salvadorian guerrillas attack defense post

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Several hundred leftist guerrillas tossed grenades at a southern civil defense post Thursday, and a rocket grenade struck this capital's National Assembly building, damaging a stone wall.

Also Thursday, a leftist political coalition announced its presidential and vice-presidential candidates for next year's election.

One soldier was killed and three were wounded in the pre-dawn attack on Zaragoza, 10 miles south of San Salvador, said an army sergeant at the civil defense post.

A rocket-propelled grenade also struck the wall of a stairway leading to the main assembly chamber, National Policeman Jose Rodriguez said. Spectators were going up the stairs to view the morning session when the projectile struck, but no one was hurt, Rodriguez said.

No group claimed responsibility for the attack.

NY grand jury terms Brawley case a fraud

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. — Tawana Brawley's tale of rape by a gang of whites was a lie fanned into a source of racial tension through the "hucksterism and opportunism" of her advisers, New York's attorney general said Thursday.

The grand jury said it found no evidence of sexual assault and said Brawley herself was responsible for the degraded condition in which she was found after a four-day disappearance last November.

The investigation received no cooperation from Brawley or her family, who with their advisers — the Rev. Al Sharpton and attorneys C. Vernon Mason and Alton Maddox — had accused authorities of a racially motivated cover-up.

Senate approves college tax break

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Thursday seized one of the most popular issues of the presidential campaign and on a 94-0 vote approved a tax exemption for interest on U.S. savings bonds that are used to finance a college education.

Senators then waded into a battle that combined two other big issues — taxes and drugs. They were debating an amendment by Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., that would raise taxes on cigarettes, liquor, wine and beer to help pay for a $2.6 billion bipartisan drug bill that the Senate planned to consider before adjourning for the year next week.

The lawmakers made quick work of another hot question, killing on a 56-39 vote an effort by Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., that would have repealed tax exemptions of abortion clinics.

The action came as the Senate worked on a bill whose main purpose is to correct errors and misunderstandings in the 1986 tax overhaul.

The measure also includes some tax breaks worth about $2.7 billion over three years and the tax increases to pay for them. A larger bill, with a $7.5 billion price tag, has been approved by the House, and there is no assurance a compromise can be agreed on by both chambers before adjournment.

The Senate bill has benefits for farmers and other off-road users of diesel fuel, first-time home buyers, corporate research efforts and workers who receive educational or legal assistance from employers. The measure includes a "bill of rights" for taxpayers involved in disputes with the Internal Revenue Service.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, offered the savings-bond amendment. He introduced it last year and President Ronald Reagan included it in his budget earlier this year.

Kennedy described his savings-bond proposal, which is not in the House bill, as "a simple, sensible way to help families save for college. It will give children security in their future, without creating a new bureaucracy or spending program."

Under the provision, the interest on any savings bond used to pay for costs of a college or vocational education would be tax-exempt. All savings bonds already are tax-deferred until redeemed; in addition, they are exempt from state and local taxes.

The provision would come into play at the time any bond bought in the future was turned over to a college or vocational school. The owner would simply not report that interest as taxable income.

Grow up, Danforth

"Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy," Senator Lloyd Bentsen taunted Senator J. Danforth Quayle in Wednesday night's debate.

"That was really uncalled for," Quayle snapped back in a tiff. With this exchange, Bentsen exposed Quayle for the sniveling, whining, spoiled brat that he is. And Quayle displayed to the nation his political immaturity and unfitness to lead.

Facing down the media after being chosen as the Republican vice presidential candidate, Quayle claimed on August 31 that: "I've been in politics a long time. Fair play. Fair enough. I can stand the heat and I'll stay in the kitchen." Danforth, it seemed, was ready to take on the obligations of the vice presidency as well as the scrutiny.

Granted, Danforth has had a rather rough time — especially in this campaign where loyalty oaths, patriotism, military service, and other non-issues dominate. In this campaign, the heat is especially high in the kitchen.

But Quayle's lame response to Bentsen's attack — especially after asserting throughout the debate that, like JFK, he had the political experience and maturity, in spite of his youth, to govern the United States — was an obvious example of Quayle's inability to withstand the heat.

And if Danforth can't stand the heat of a debate, especially when even the Democrats conceded that all he had to do to look "presidential" was not to get flustered, how can we expect him to remain calm under the pressure of the presidency? Danforth most certainly is not JFK. Imagine Danforth standing toe-to-toe with an angry Nikita Khrushchev.

George Bush could have and should have made a better choice. Instead of pandering to the women's vote, the yuppie vote, and the Reagan Democrats, he should have chosen a sidekick who is more mature. It's too late for George to kick Danforth out of the kitchen without giving up the entire White House. But because he chose Quayle, he may not have the White House to give up.

Poison disguised

The federal government is moving to raise the allowable limit for the content of aflatoxin in grain from 20 parts per billion to 300. Aflatoxin is a powerful carcinogen produced by a mold which grows on corn. Corn containing 300 parts per billion would become usable under the revised rule to feed to livestock, excluding dairy cattle.

But, the corn would be made into "livestock feed," presumably at feed mills. Can we really feel secure that none of the feed would be given to dairy cows?

The allowable concentration of aflatoxin in milk is 0.5 parts per billion. (It's that bad.) And if it is excreted by cows in the milk, can we feel sure that it will not be in the meat from beef cattle?

"Oh Beautiful, for spacious skies, for amber waves of grain..." With so many hungry people in the world, gasohol and plastics ordinarily seem, in many peoples' eyes, to be unsuitable uses for corn; but in this situation, those alternatives look the best.

"America, America, God shed his grace on thee..." If 300 parts per billion of aflatoxin are included — through accident or by design — in the grain shipped abroad for food in other countries, our grain will join the United States' Death Export/Trade list. Already on the list are weapons, herbicides, pesticides, tobacco products, toxic industrial wastes, and pharmaceuticals of questionable safety. Let's not add poison disguised as food. (Could God have enough grace to cover what we've done already?) Think gasohol.

U.S. foreign policy based on lies

Michael Dukakis has said this election is not one of ideology, but I believe he is wrong about one thing. The choice for voters in the fall is whether to continue in the direction of the present administration's open assault on truth and morals or to change our course back to the ideals of liberty and justice. During the past eight years, the Reagan-Bush administration has purposely deceived Congress, the press and the American public — especially in the area of foreign policy.

Case in point: Nicaragua. The Reagan-Bush team has told the American public that support for the Contras is justified because of the human rights violations piled up by the Sandinista government. Reagan and Bush claim that the purpose of the Contras is to pressure the Sandinistas to halt human abuses. Reagan has said: "The United States will continue to view human rights as the moral center of our foreign policy."

The core of Reagan's attacks on the Sandinistas has been based on the relocation of the Miskito Indians. From 1982 to 1983, the Sandinista government forced the Miskitos and other native groups to relocate and in the process more than 100 people are thought to have been killed. This has been the most serious accusation levied at the Sandinistas concerning human rights.

If this is true, it's abhorrent, but even our own nation cannot claim a clean slate in this regard. Students with keen memories can probably recall from high school American history classes events such as the Trail of Tears, where hundreds of North American natives were forced to endure a long trek, during which many died. Or the San Creek massacre, when 133 Cheyenne Indians (105 of which were women and children) were killed while gathering around the American flag. More recently, more than 100,000 Japanese-Americans were forced to live in detention centers during World War II.

Of course, most now agree that these policies were wrong but at the time, they were thought to be necessary. Some still argue that these policies were necessary and inevitable. This is the same argument made by the Sandinistas. Also, in the case of violations, the Sandinistas have tried and punished those soldiers that committed the violations. This is hardly true for the United States in the cases above.

Reagan's high moral standards continue to crumble when faced with more facts. Reagan used the treatment of the Miskito Indians as one reason to apply economic sanctions against the Nicaraguan government. But he has opposed economic sanctions against the government of South Africa, where millions have been, and continue to be, forcibly relocated.

The Reagan-Bush administration has continued to pour aid into the coffers of right-wing dictators in El Salvador and Guatemala, but when the human rights records of these two countries are compared with that of Nicaragua, the violations they have committed far and away outdistance those of the Sandinistas.

From 1981 to 1985, while Reagan and Bush railed at the Sandinistas, the government of El Salvador and right-wing death squads allegedly murdered more than 40,000 people. One hundred and forty people a month were being killed and all Reagan and Bush talked about were the 70 Miskito Indians. U.S. taxpayers' money helped pay for this murder in El Salvador.

Clearly, Reagan and Bush do not concern themselves with human rights. Their claim that their foreign policy is based on human rights is just a ploy to dupe you, the American public, into believing that the process of freedom and liberation is going on because of their efforts, when in reality, just the opposite is true.

Even now, Congress has been gulled into granting "humanitarian" aid to the Contras. Never mind that this is not really humanitarian aid (humanitarian aid is defined in the Geneva Conventions and Protocol as political, only to be given on the basis of human need, and not to be given to civilians and non-combatants on both sides of a conflict), it isn't in keeping with Reagan's stated aims of centering foreign policy on human rights. In fact, the Contras have been accused by many as being more abusive than the Sandinistas. Americas Watch Committee, a human rights organization, stated in a 1985 report that "... the most violent abuses of human rights in Nicaragua today are being committed by the Contras, and that the Reagan administration's policy of support for the Contras is therefore inimical to human rights."

It is obvious that Reagan and Bush have "misstated" their foundation for their foreign policy, which has been immoral and unconcerned with human rights. As voters, we decide the direction this country takes in foreign policy as well as other areas of government. We can put an end to the tragic policies of Reagan and Bush by voting for candidates who truly believe that human rights should play an important role in U.S. foreign policy. Every vote makes a difference. It's up to you.

Burn later

To the Editor:

Apathetic? Who me? Callista Gould hasn't seen me revved up with enthusiasm over the classics line for my proposed Sacrelegious Film Festival: "The Miracle" of Robert Rossellini, "The King of Hearts," "The Ruling Class" (with Peter O'Toole), and "The Life of Brian." Also, "Jesus Christ, Superstar" and Godard's "Hail Mary." Further nominations welcomed; send them to this space.

She might as well deliver the rest of her solicitous malediction on me (The Daily Iowan, Sept. 28): Laugh now, burn later.

There is an old witticism (I wish I could claim authorship) that goes, "Oh, Heaven is alright for climate, but it's Hell for company."

My future seem clear-cut, and I'm quite content. If Ms. Gould is right, I will spend eternity with the likes of H.L. Mencken, Mark Twain, Voltaire and that perpetually fresh tweaker of everyone and everything, Aristophanes. If I'm correct, it is the obliterated nothingness of nonexistence.

Seriously now: Something of the gravest import is in danger of being buried underneath the invective and animadversion of the day. Ms. Gould's personal religious beliefs (whatever they are) are protected by the First Amendment, and in ordinary circumstances would not be of public interest. The same is true of my practice of irreligion and my sickly (if I knew how to be funnier, I would be) satires on sacred cows and true believers. Kazantzakis' artistic vision, Scorsese's film translation, the right of theaters to show "irreverent" movies — all are protected.

"The Miracle" was more than a cause celebre of its time (1948), it was a landmark case in the New York courts. Cardinal Spellman's moral outrage was pitted against the U.S. Constitution. "The Miracle" won and freedom of speech in the cinema was thereby established.

Even now, two generations later, the issue is joined when some Christian sects attempt to impose their views of reality on the rest of us, Christian and non-Christian alike, and try to stifle non-conforming, offensive-to-them works.

Wouldn't they love to regulate the creative imagination as successfully as they still influence secular public policy?

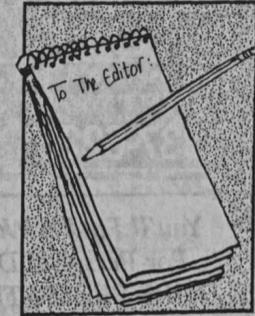

Ms. Gould and her brethren may have achieved a commercial victory with regard to "The Last Temptation," but in the long struggle from superstition to enlightenment it is a mere latest skirmish. In the reach of history the free human spirit soars.

Full course meal

To the Editor:

Kevin Goulding's review, "Project message lacks bite," did not digest completely. Goulding should define what he means by "bite."

The play focused on the lives and experiences of those who live in the Cabrini-Green Housing Project in Chicago. Its message was delivered through the dancing, acting and singing. The play suggests to the audience that residents in Cabrini-Green, especially the adults who have lived there for generations, feel their community is forgotten. With the use of 70 high-rise television monitors, Cabrini residents were able to give their testimonies of how their community is not receiving attention and/or political support. Because Goulding read up on "West Side Story," he also did not bite or nibble on the main points of "Project!"

The play was not intended to cause the audience to walk out of the theater in awe or with a feeling of sorrow for those who live in "economically underprivileged" conditions. The purpose was to make the audience aware of the problems that exist in Cabrini-Green.

Goulding's article also seems that it is a bit under-fed, lacking specific background information about Free Street Theater and Cabrini-Green. Goulding seemed to find it "difficult to take a story seriously when two gangs bent on violent destruction, suddenly pull up in choreographed unison and start to sing and dance down the street." It is Free Street Theater's goal to expose some of the problems that exist in Cabrini-Green. Hopefully, the residents, political system and the public will come together "in unison" to tackle these problems with solutions and bring Cabrini-Green to one community — not a segregated gang-war zone.

This is a goal and the play's purpose was a full course meal. Goulding simply could not swallow it.

If he truly means what then we better watch out. Outbacks on school lunch, Pell grants, and more money pumped into research defense department.

Education is the foundation which America was built on. The entire meaning of Americanism for all men. But in our freedom is attained through education. Freedom? It's all relative. Here, in America, I am not free, for my educational opportunities have been limited because of the amount of money I have. And there are millions just like me. Mr. Bush hasn't offered any solutions. Oh sure, he brought up some sort of savings bond that would earn about 20 dollars a year for young families who have hopes for their children's future. Twenty dollars? Does anybody care?

Seeking library knowledge

Tom Knight

I couldn't believe it, I went to Main Library Saturday, and the damn thing was closed! Closed, with a neatly lettered sign explaining that, because of a lack of funds, the hours of the library were being severely cut. Now, I admit to being a card-carrying book lover, but it seems to me that the heart of a great university is its library. Shut down the heart of anything, and what do you get?

In the off-chance that somebody was pulling my leg, I called for confirmation from my favorite bureaucrat, Milton Wimple, in the Department of Soothing Answers to Nearly Every Question.

"Yep, that puppy is closed alright. Shut her right down; no money," Milton said.

"But Milton, why in the world would they shut down the library, of all places?"

"I'm glad you asked that question," said Milton. "But as long as I have you on the phone, how 'bout them Hawks? Doesn't it just make you burst with pride knowing we have the greatest team and the greatest sports facilities in the Midwest?"

"Yeah, yeah, them Hawks is great. But how can they close down the library? What kind of crazy thing is that?"

"Wow, am I glad that you asked that question. We are really proud that we are well on the way to solving the parking problem."

"Parking problem? What in the hell are you talking about? I don't care about parking."

"Well, you would if you didn't drive a dirty old Ford. Do you know how many nice BMWs and Porsches there are left on the streets unprotected? Why just last week a frat decal was ruthlessly scraped from the window of a new Volvo, and, I don't mind telling you that the owner of the car was mighty pissed about it... so was his son."

"OK, Milton, I'm glad that the parking problem is being solved. But the library, Milton, the library."

"Oh, is that all you can talk about? Come on, so the hours are a little inconvenient, big deal? Think about the laser center. When those three leading scientists get here, you'll forget about the damn library."

"Well, Milton, this may be the Department of Soothing Answers, but I'm not the least bit soothed about the cutbacks in the library."

"Frankly, I didn't expect you to be. Our surveys show that we can soothe 96.7 percent of our callers, and that the rest of them are liberals and other recreants. Library, schmibrary. You want enlightenment, go rent a VCR. You probably care more about the library than you do the Russians."

"The Russians? What do the Russians have to do with the cutbacks in the library?"

"Have you heard the Russians threaten Iowa City in the last eight years?"

"No."

"Why do you think they have been afraid of us? Where do you think the defense money came from? Out of thin air? Hell no, this is the Eighties. It comes down to a question of Russians or libraries. It's that simple."

"Sorry, Milton, I still don't see how you can run a great university with a library that's open about half the time."

"I didn't think you would. Well, thank you for calling and thank you for using AT&T."

College costs have reached the breaking point.

Eight years of Republican policies have led to unprecedented military spending increases, a record national debt, and painful trade deficits.

No new weapons systems have been spared. Billions of dollars for a B-1 bomber that cannot penetrate Soviet defenses; the resumption of chemical weapons production; Star Wars; weapons for the Ayatollah and secret funds for Panamanian dictators: these form the legacy of eight years of Republican policy priorities.

In the meantime, needs at home have been neglected. Especially our educational needs.

For eight consecutive years, the price of an education has increased faster than inflation.

In response, the Republican Administration has repeatedly offered budget proposals to reduce federal aid to local school districts.

In the past eight years, as the Republican Administration unsuccessfully fought to abolish the Department of Education, the number of illiterate adults has grown to nearly 30 million.

A national teaching shortage looms ahead. Just as we discover that children in other nations—our economic competitors—outscore our children in educational achievements.

As college costs have surged, the Republican Administration has responded by cutting those programs designed to help middle class families finance the costs of their children's educations.

These costs add to the tax burdens which, in the Republican years, have been shifted unfairly to the middle class.

The ideal of affordable public education for all appears to be slipping beyond the grasp of many families.

Should we sacrifice this crucial part of the American dream in the years ahead?

Democrats say no.

In the election this November, they are offering you a choice.

Here are the facts. You decide.

[1]

Education costs and the Middle Class Squeeze.

For most students, the cost of college has reached the breaking point.

Tuition increases have risen faster than inflation for the eighth straight year.

In response, the Republican Administration has pushed proposals to reduce student financial aid. It has launched a full-court press against such needed programs as Pell Grants, work-study, and loan programs—all of them essential to middle class families.

And with no end in sight to the upward spiral of tuition increases, the Democratic Party has proposed a bold new program to ensure that no qualified student will be denied the opportunity to attend college because of financial need.

The program, called "STARS"—Student Tuition and Repayment System—would supplement, not replace, existing financial aid programs.

During the past eight years of Republican government, military costs have increased over 40 percent while federal aid to education has decreased by 29 percent.

The program would be available to any student, regardless of family income...even those middle class students whose parents' income is "too high" to qualify them for other aid programs.

How the Democratic STARS plan works.

Under the Democratic STARS plan, students would obtain bank loans, guaranteed by the federal government. Repayment would be made through a system of automatic payroll deductions, based on a fixed percentage of a recipient's income, with payments spread out over one's entire working lifetime.

Recipients would not begin repayment until they find work, and if they become unemployed, they would stop paying into the system until they find work again.

Defaulting on loans would be infrequent; because repayment would be tied to income, there would be little incentive to default. And it would be possible to repay the entire loan in one lump sum, rather than make payments over a long period of time.

Under the STARS plan, students would no longer be limited by the price tag of particular colleges when making the important choice of where to attend. Students, assured of financial backing, would not be forced to take on large employment responsibilities during college—as many now must do—and thereby take five or six years to complete a four-year education.

The program will make it easier for students to choose careers with lower starting salaries—jobs in teaching, nursing, public sector jobs, and entrepreneurial enterprises.

The New York Times, in a recent editorial, evaluated STARS and concluded, "Government can make college affordable, and can do it without demanding sacrifice from non-beneficiaries...this idea is too good to pass up."

[3]

Teacher Shortage: a National Problem.

In the next ten years, one half of the teachers in America will reach retirement age.

The Republican Administration has done nothing to address this problem in the last eight years. The Republicans offer no viable new proposals to cope with the problem in the years to come.

The Democrats have proposed a program to provide scholarships and loan forgiveness for young people willing to make a commitment to teaching after they obtain their degrees.

Education is the key to Iowa's economic future.

A Democratic Administration will establish a National Teaching Excellence Fund, an educational venture capital fund dedicated to good teaching, with a first-year investment of a quarter of a billion dollars.

The Excellence Fund will be used to help all teachers improve their professional skills.

The Fund will finance centers for teaching and learning where veteran teachers could go to do research, share ideas, and take sabbaticals.

Another part of the Fund will revive the national teacher corps—a Peace Corps for teaching, here in America.

The Democrats call for training and enrichment programs for career teachers, expanded availability of preschool education programs, and a national campaign against adult illiteracy.

The Democrats have responded to a national teaching crisis with innovative and substantive proposals.

[4]

STAR Schools, Not Star Wars.

Today's kindergartners will attend college in the year 2001 at an estimated tuition cost of $60,000 to $80,000.

This November, when we vote, we will face a crucial choice that will shape the future of our children.

The choice we make will determine whether the American dream will be within the grasp of many middle class families.

Our choice will affect our future ability to compete economically with the educated citizens of other nations.

This November, vote for the Party that believes STAR schools are the key to our nation's future, not Star Wars.

Vote Democratic.

No way to end a game

A loss is a hard thing for any sports team to handle. In ways, a tie can be harder.

Iowa Coach Hayden Fry's Hawkeyes were not victims of injuries, lackadaisical play, or Spartan fans with Ouiji boards this past Saturday at Michigan State.

Neither the Hawkeyes nor the Spartans were given a chance to win. Unfortunately, college football has no provision for picking a winner when the game ends tied.

As coaches like to tell their players in pregame speeches, the score is 0-0 at the beginning of the game. The game is supposedly played to determine the better team.

A tie just puts a team back where it started. That doesn't make a lot of sense.

There could be several reasons why the NCAA has not instituted a rule which allows for a tie-breaking overtime period to be played.

Perhaps the referees are too tired to officiate another five to fifteen minutes of football. Most of them do look a little on the pudgy side.

Or maybe Keith Jackson can only scream "fumble" for 60 minutes, not 65. Or his voice starts to hurt from talking that way.

Perhaps the concession stands are afraid of running out of petrified popcorn.

Lame reasons for a lame rule. Nobody likes ties, least of all the players.

Iowa linebacker Brad Quast thinks an overtime system is in order.

"I wish there was a way to play it off," Quast said. "Why not have a sudden-death period and see who really wins the game?"

"The way all the rules have been changing, in another five years, that might be one of the rules that change."

Quast's younger brother Kevin, also a linebacker for Iowa, agrees.

"It's ridiculous," he said. "We worked hard all week in practice, hold Michigan State to only 10 points, and the game ended — no one won. It's frustrating."

Iowa quarterback Chuck Hartlieb said he would support an NFL-like playoff system.

"It's terrible to walk off the field after playing your heart out and not have anything to show for it," Hartlieb said. "I'd definitely be for an overtime, like the NFL situation. I'm surprised there hasn't been more talk of it."

Coaches don't like ties either.

"In my career, I think I've been in four ties," Michigan State Coach George Perles said. "There isn't anybody happy."

It is a waste of time to stage an athletic event without a winner and loser. The whole point of playing a game is that a team either leaves with the happiness of the victory or the empty feeling of a loss.

Maybe Iowa should play Wisconsin Saturday without a clock, referees or a score.

"Gee, looks, guys. That was fun. Same time next year?"

For all the effort the players and coaches put in, a tie is certainly anti-climatic. It's not fair to the fans, either, especially when high ticket prices are considered. Who wants to pay for a ticket, parking, beer, program, Hawkeye paraphernalia and so on, and see the team tie?

However, this no-tiebreaker situation shouldn't be surprising when the nature of college football and the NCAA is considered.

What other sport decides its champion by tallying the votes of a bunch of writers, whose year-end pick is almost never the preseason favorite?

Infielder Todd Benzinger of the Boston Red Sox presses a hot water bottle to his face as he sits in the dugout during Game 2 of the AL playoffs. Temperatures dipped into the 40's at Boston's Fenway Park during the game, which Oakland won 4-3 after scoring the winning run in the ninth.

Oakland defeats Boston to take 2-0 series lead

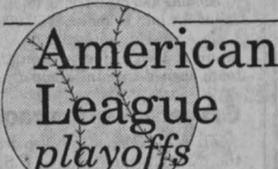

BOSTON (AP) — Rookie Walt Weiss, the ninth-place hitter in a lineup of sluggers, singled home the tie-breaking run in the ninth inning Thursday night and the Oakland Athletics beat the Boston Red Sox 4-3 for a commanding 2-0 lead in the American League playoffs.

The Athletics headed home, where they swept all six games from Boston this season and have won 14 of the last 15. Game 3 is Saturday night with Oakland's Bob Welch facing Mike Boddicker.

Jose Canseco, who led the majors with 42 home runs and 124 RBI, homered for the second straight game and Mark McGwire hit an RBI single in the seventh for a 3-2 lead before Rich Gedman's home run in the bottom half of the inning tied it.

But while Oakland's Bash Brothers brought the Athletics back against Roger Clemens, it was the bottom part of the order that won it. Ron Hassey singled with one out against Red Sox relief ace Lee Smith and took third on Tony Phillips' two-out single. That brought up Weiss, a .389 hitter against Boston this year, and he escaped an 0-2 hole against the fast-balling Smith and lined a single just in front of diving center fielder Ellis Burks.

Dennis Eckersley, who led the majors with 45 saves, got his second save of the series. Gene Nelson went one inning for the victory while Smith, who got out of a first-and-third jam in the eighth by retiring Canseco and Dave Parker on fly balls, took the loss.

Boston was 53-28 at Fenway Park this season while the Athletics were 54-27 at the Oakland Coliseum.

Oakland won nine times in 12 games against Boston in the regular season.

Clemens and Davis made the two highest-scoring teams in the AL look feeble through five innings, each allowing only one hit.

The Red Sox broke through for two unearned runs in the sixth, aided by Dave Henderson's error, but Canseco and Mark McGwire helped Oakland rally for a 3-2 lead in the seventh.

Henderson, the former Boston playoff hero who singled home the winning run in Game 1 on Wednesday, led off the sixth with a single.

Canseco, who homered in Game 1, then sent an 0-2 fastball high into the left-field screen to tie it 2-2. It

Badgers will have nothing to lose vs. Hawks

By Brent Woods
 The Daily Iowan

Wisconsin is likely to come to Iowa City Saturday with one thing in mind.

Saving face. After being on the receiving end of a 62-14 beating by Michigan last week in their own stadium, the Badgers won't have to search for a reason to be motivated when they face Iowa at 1:05 p.m. at Kinnick Stadium.

And according to Iowa quarterback Chuck Hartlieb, Wisconsin sees the annual contest against Iowa as its biggest game of the year.

"I expect them to play their hearts out," Hartlieb said. "Especially with the senior group they have. This is their big game of the season."

One of those seniors Hartlieb will see across the line is his brother Andy, a linebacker for the Badgers.

Football

Andy confirmed that the game is a big one from the Badgers' standpoint.

"When you give up nine touchdowns in a game, it's not something you can just shrug off," Andy said, referring to the Michigan loss. "We just have to try to rebound and start executing better. This is a big game for us."

Wisconsin will be without its leading rusher, running back Marvin Artley. On Thursday, Artley was declared ineligible for Saturday's game.

Prior to Thursday's review hearing, Artley said he thought the problem stemmed from reports that he had missed two Italian language classes this fall. The senior has rushed for 215 yards in three games this season for a 4.1 yard average.

The Badgers will present the Iowa defense with a unique look, for the Big Ten, that is. Wisconsin runs what Iowa Coach Hayden Fry calls "the only true option in the Big Ten."

Freshman quarterback Lionel Crawford may be the one directing that option attack. Crawford accounted for 140 of the Badgers' 208 total yards (97 passing, 43 rushing) and scored one touchdown.

"I think we'll find (Crawford) gained a lot of experience (against Michigan)," Wisconsin Coach Don Morton said. "He can be a real spark plug for this team."

Fry said Crawford and another Wisconsin quarterback, Tony Lowery, will pose similar problems for Iowa.

"Lowery would probably throw more passes than Crawford," Fry said. "But I can't tell the difference. They're very, very similar operating the option attack. They're very fast and they're elusive."

"Michigan obviously has a great, great defense."

Fry said Wisconsin proved it can play a decent game when it only fell 23-3 to No. 1-ranked Miami.

"Wisconsin played extremely well against them (Miami)," Fry said. "All the pro teams are inconsistent; some of the college teams are inconsistent."

For Iowa, Rob Baxley, a freshman from Oswego, Ill., is listed No. 1 at right tackle on Iowa's beat-up offensive line, and the return of tight end Marv Cook and center Bill Anderson is questionable.

Redshirt freshman placekicker Jeff Skillett is still listed No. 1 ahead of junior George Murphy. Skillett is four of 10 in field goal attempts

Hawkeyes will face Indiana, Ohio State on weekend trip

By Anne Upton
 The Daily Iowan

After a record-breaking performance last weekend, the Iowa volleyball team will hit the road and face Indiana and Ohio State this weekend.

The 3-1 Hawkeyes, second in the conference behind nationally-ranked Illinois, will play Friday night at Indiana and Saturday night at Ohio State.

During last Saturday's match against Northwestern, Iowa broke eight records. Co-captain Kari Hamel, who set an Iowa record for kills, and a school and conference record for attack attempts, was voted the Big Ten player of the week.

According to Indiana Coach Tom Shoji, Indiana is primed for a win following their unexpected defeat at Michigan State.

"Up until last week I was pleased with where we were in the season," Shoji said. "When we were beat by Michigan State, as a coach, I did not expect it to happen. It was a tough time, but we can recover from the loss."

The mental aspect of the loss might affect the team's performance, Shoji said.

"We've been a little down," he said. "We know that we have to play really well this weekend. Again, we are in for a tough match,

Volleyball

I don't expect we'll take it in three games. Hopefully we will play four to five good games, but Iowa does have the advantage, being at home."

Stewart said she was unsure how Indiana's loss to the Spartans had affected the team, but she said she knew it would be a competitive match.

"I'm sure they will start strong," Stewart said. "They have a good offense. Jill Beggs is ranked fourth in the Big Ten for hitting efficiency and third in kills. Julie Goedde is also a strong player. There will be some close matches."

Goedde lead the Hoosiers in blocks last season and was ninth in the Big Ten with 11 solo blocks and 53 block assists.

Beggs broke the school's record for kills with 23 against Michigan State. Indiana will be without junior Lisa John because she is recovering from knee surgery.

The Hawkeyes are also suffering from an injury. According to Iowa Coach Sandy Stewart, outside hitter Jenny Rees is having shin splint problems, but will play in the weekend's action.

No. 6 Iowa to face Spartans, Buckeyes

By Bryce Miller
 The Daily Iowan

The sixth-ranked Iowa Hawkeyes will head for East Lansing, Mich., this weekend for contests with the Michigan State Spartans on Saturday and the Ohio State Buckeyes on Sunday.

Iowa, 7-4, will show a few noticeable differences on the road trip, both in the coaching ranks and the principal players on the field.

Field Hockey

Beth Beglin returned home Wednesday from Seoul, Korea, where she captained the U.S. Olympic field hockey team. She takes over for assistant coach Janet Ryan, who became interim head coach upon Beglin's departure for Korea over a month ago.

Although Beglin has had only one practice to evaluate her team's progress since her hiatus, she is happy with the statistics her team has assembled.

"It's hard to make a comparison as to where this team is since I

Steroid sales records won't be released

NEW YORK (AP) — Sales records between Ben Johnson's doctor and the maker of the anabolic steroid found in the runner's system at the Olympic Games in Seoul will not be released to the public, medical authorities said Thursday.

Spokesmen for Sterling Drug Ltd., the only manufacturer and distributor of stanozolol in North America, have confirmed that Dr. George Mario Jamie Astaphan purchased the steroid from the company.

A spokesman at the company's headquarters in New York said Thursday that all sales information had been given to the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, which is investigating Astaphan.

Pistons sign Thomas to eight-year deal

WINDSOR, Ontario (AP) — The Detroit Pistons made guard Isiah Thomas the highest-paid player in club history Thursday, agreeing to a contract that will pay the 6-foot-1 guard a reported $16 million over the next eight years.

Thomas had been trying for months to restructure a contract that called for him to make $750,000 this season.

He said Thursday the new agreement was reached after an all-night bargaining session that ended only hours before the team opened training camp at the University of Windsor.

Grayer inks contract with Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Top draft choice Jeff Grayer, a member of the bronze medal-winning U.S. Olympic basketball team, joined two veterans in reaching contract agreements with the Milwaukee Bucks on the eve of pre-season training camp.

Grayer signed a three-year contract Thursday, while veteran free-agent center Randy Breuer signed a four-year contract and guard Ricky Pierce, a holdout much of last season, agreed to a three-year contract extension expected to pay him more than $3 million.

was Canseco's third career homer among seven hits in 24 at-bats against Clemens.

The Athletics kept coming as Parker followed with a single. A nice stop by shortstop Jody Reed on Carney Lansford's grounder resulted in a forceout, but a balk and wild pitch put a runner on third.

McGwire, who fanned in his first two at-bats and was 0-for-10 with six strikeouts against Clemens, worked out of an 0-2 hole and lined a single to left for the lead.

Davis struck out Reed to start the seventh and Athletics manager Tony La Russa brought in left-hander Greg Cadaret to face the lefty Gedman. The strategy backfired when Gedman pulled a drive into the right-field seats at the 302-foot mark. It was his first home run against a left-hander since July 25, 1987.

Davis got the first two outs in the sixth on two pitches, before a fan ran onto the field with the count 2-2 on Dwight Evans. When play resumed a couple of minutes later, Davis threw two balls to walk Evans and then walked Mike Greenwell.

Jim Rice followed with a hard, sinking liner to center. Henderson charged and got his glove on the ball at his knees, but dropped it and Evans scored. Burks, robbed by Henderson on a deep drive earlier, singled home Greenwell for a 2-0 lead.

Clemens heated up from the start on a night when frost warnings were posted in Boston and the Bruins opened the hockey season. Clemens retired the first nine batters, including four in a row on strikeouts.

haven't seen them for awhile," she said. "I'm pleased with the results on paper, but this weekend should give me a better picture."

The Hawkeyes will also see the return of seventh-year assistant Michele Madison, who was a manager with the Olympic team.

Defensive standout Erin Walsh was forced out of action on Wednesday with a muscle strain. The junior from Monterey, Calif., anchors the Hawkeye defense along with senior Diane Loosbrock.

"This is something that has accumulated over time," Walsh said. "I was tender during the North Carolina weekend. I think it's from how hard we worked for that weekend. Hopefully, I will be back for the Northwestern game."

The rematch with the Wildcats comes on Oct. 14 at Evanston, Ill. Iowa was upended 1-0 by Northwestern last Saturday in a game that matched the fifth- and sixth-rated teams in the country.

Despite the loss, the Hawkeyes remained No. 6 in this week's poll.

Once again, Iowa must make the transition from artificial turf to grass. With only three days to prepare for the change, Begin understands the importance of making the limited time count.

"That's a real key thing for us," she said. "We've played on grass earlier in the year, but for a turf team like us, there are a lot of differences."

Loosbrock said her job defensively must undergo a revamping to prepare for this weekend.

"On grass you get a lot of funny bounces," she said. "You can't wait on the ball like you can on turf. You try to get the interception, and it usually ends up with who can sprint to the ball the fastest."

"You definitely have to concentrate on grass. It's going to be tough."

the hardest team in the conference to beat. It's too bad they won't be here this weekend." Martin Aguirre, Dave Novak and Bryan Stokstad will play No. 4, 5 and 6 singles, respectively.

Some shuffling in the lineup has occurred because of back injuries to Jay Maltby and Paul Buckingham.

"We'll miss Maltby in singles — he had a great tournament out in Texas," Houghton said. "Buckingham will be missed in doubles, but we have good depth and I have a lot of confidence in the players who will fill in."

Aguirre and Ramel, who reached the finals of the Texarkana Invitational earlier in the fall, remain intact at No. 1 doubles. Kiewiet and Nordmark will play No. 2 and Novak and Stokstad make up the No. 3 doubles team.

Besides the Big Ten teams and Notre Dame, three top Mid-American Conference teams, Ball State, Miami (Ohio) and Western Michigan will be at the tournament.

"It's a very good field," Houghton said. "It will tell us a lot about how we stack up against top midwestern teams."

"We didn't do well as a team last year," Aguirre said. "We're motivated to prove to those guys we're about to make a comeback."

Iowa will face Big Ten foes at Ball State

By Julie Deardorff
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa men's tennis team will get its first glimpse of Big Ten competition Friday and Saturday at the Ball State Tennis Invitational Tournament in Indiana.

Wisconsin, Purdue and Illinois will join the Hawkeyes in the unseeded, flighted tournament. The players are grouped according to their singles positions, and Iowa Coach Steve Houghton is using the opportunity to experiment with the lineup.

"It's almost like nine separate tournaments — six singles and three doubles," Houghton said.

Men's Tennis

"We're using the fall to see how players handle different positions. The lineup as of now is tentative."

Senior Mike Kiewiet will hold the top spot for Iowa at No. 1 singles. Claes Ramel will play No. 2 and Lars Nordmark moved up a spot to No. 3.

"We should win this tournament, in fact we should win Big Tens," Nordmark said. "Michigan will be

Runners host Iowa Open today at Finkbine

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

In its second home meet of the season, the Iowa women's cross country team will host the Iowa Open today at 4 p.m. at Finkbine Golf Course.

Twelfth-ranked Minnesota, Ohio State, Western Illinois, Iowa State and Northern Iowa are slated to compete against the Hawkeyes.

Iowa could be a tough team to beat after their second-place finish last weekend behind 5th-ranked Indiana. The finish earned the Hawkeyes an 18th-place ranking this week.

Another strong point for Iowa in this meet is the return of Kim Schneckloth and Kris Watters.

Schneckloth finished 13th individually.

usually in the NCAA District IV championships last year and has not participated in a meet yet this season. Watters returns from sitting out of the 1987 season with an injury.

Minnesota, according to Iowa Coach Jerry Hassard, will also be tough.

Only 16 seconds lapsed between the Gophers' top five finishers in their meet last weekend, Minnesota Coach Gary Wilson said. In 1987 they finished third at the Big Ten Conference meet, just behind Iowa, and have returned all their letterwinners, including 1987 Big Ten individual champion Eileen Donaghy.

Tudor guarantees he'll pitch in third game of NL series

NEW YORK (AP) — John Tudor says that while he can't guarantee victories, he is sure he will be on the mound for the Los Angeles Dodgers in Game 3 of the National League playoffs.

Tudor was scheduled to pitch Game 2 at Dodger Stadium but suffered spasms in his right hip last Friday in his final start of the season.

Los Angeles rookie Tim Lincecum took Tudor's place and beat the New York Mets 6-3 Wednesday night to even the best-of-seven series at one game apiece.

The playoffs resume Friday night at Shea Stadium when Tudor opposes Ron Darling. The Mets are scheduled to pitch Sid Fernandez in Game 4 on Saturday and the Dodgers are expected to go with Orel Hershiser.

"I can't guarantee wins or losses, but I can guarantee I will be on the mound," Tudor said.

Tudor, 10-8, is an off-speed specialist who is particularly tough on left-handed batters.

National League playoffs

Dodgers general manager Fred Claire was looking down the road and figured he would need some left-handed pitching against the Mets.

"If the Mets couldn't beat left-handers, every club in the world would be trying to find lefties," Tudor said. "They're a very good club. Both their two big guys, Hernandez and Strawberry, are left-handed, but they handle the bat well against left-handed pitching. If I have confidence in my game, I can get anyone out, just like they can hit anybody when they have confidence in their game."

Tudor, 34, was traded to St. Louis by Pittsburgh in 1985 and went 21-8 while helping the Cardinals win the NL flag.

He has a 2-2 record in the playoffs and a 3-2 mark in the World Series.

"I have playoff and World Series experience, but as far as I'm concerned you can take all that and throw it out the window," Tudor said. "It's not going to do you any good."

Tudor missed about three months in 1987 with a broken leg. Mets catcher Barry Lyons was chasing a foul pop and fell on Tudor in the dugout at Busch Stadium.

He was placed on the disabled list prior to the start of the 1988 season with shoulder and knee injuries and had a sore elbow at the end of 1987.

"I have the body of about an 80-year old," Tudor said. "But I'll be OK."

Darling said he has tremendous respect for Tudor, who is 8-6 lifetime against the Mets.

"He's pitched very well against us in the past," Darling said Thursday. "In '85, I pitched one game against him where we didn't score any runs and they didn't either, but he was just amazing that day. I think we got three hits off him — or four hits — and all four of them were broken-bat hits. It was amazing."

Injured Iowa runners will return

By Neil Lewis
The Daily Iowan

Off to a slow start, slowed by nagging injuries, and at the midway point in its season, the Iowa men's cross country team hopes to get an extra kick from runners returning from injuries at the Iowa Invitational today.

Though Wisconsin, one of the top teams in the Big Ten and perhaps the country, has pulled out of the 8:30 p.m. meet at Finkbine Golf Course, strong squads from Illinois, Iowa State and Northern Iowa will run, as well as St. Ambrose.

The Hawkeyes will be running at nearly full strength with senior Sean Corrigan competing for the first time this season. Junior Rod Chambers, the Hawkeyes' top distance runner this year, will be back after sitting out the Sept. 24 home meet because of a continuing back injury.

Corrigan, Iowa's leading runner last season, said the invitational should give him a good indication of what to expect the rest of the year.

"I'm not in the same shape I was in January, when I got injured," he said. "This should be a real tough meet."

Though he hasn't been running distances like the 8,000-meter course at Finkbine, Corrigan said speed workouts in practice have given him a good idea of what to expect.

Adding to the challenge is the fact that Corrigan has beaten many of the runners expected to finish highly today.

Corrigan, according to Coach

Larry Weiczorek, beat Dan Hostager of Northern Iowa in an Iowa home dual meet last year. This season, Hostager won the individual title at Iowa's Sept. 24 home meet.

But for this meet, Weiczorek is asking Corrigan to proceed cautiously.

"This week we're asking Corrigan to run with the pack," Weiczorek said. "I think it would be best if he could give us a good team effort."

Though Iowa may not be a realistic contender for today's team title, the meet will give the Hawkeyes a chance to measure their improvement compared with Northern Iowa, which won the team title in the meet here two weeks ago.

"That'll be a good measuring stick for us," Weiczorek said, "and we'll really be able to measure ourselves because we ran on the same course."

"We've had a couple good weeks of practice, and I feel optimistic about the meet."

Hawks head to Nebraska invite

By Michael Trilk
The Daily Iowan

Micki Schillig wants to know how good her Iowa women's tennis team really is, and this weekend she just might find out.

Iowa is fresh off dual meet wins over intrastate rivals Iowa State and Drake, but neither of those teams is a national powerhouse. Schillig will get a chance to grade her young team against more firm competition this weekend at the Nebraska Invitational.

"It should be a tough, tough weekend," Schillig said. "It will be good to see how they react to some tougher competition. We're excited after the two dual meets to see how we compare with some of the top teams that will be there."

Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota and Colorado are a few of the teams which highlight the tournament field.

Last year Iowa did well at the Nebraska event. Even so, Schillig said she doesn't just "want" her players to play well, she "expects" them to.

Women's Tennis

"I want to see them being gritty, gutsy tennis players," Schillig said. "If they do that, I don't care if they win, lose or draw. Just so long as they give 110 percent all the time. If they do give 110 percent, then I'm sure they'll do fine."

The Nebraska event will be Iowa's second tournament this season. Iowa hosted the all-Iowa tournament to open the fall season and then won dual meets against teams that competed in the all-Iowa meet. This will be the first look which Iowa has had at out-of-state competition.

"I don't think that not seeing any of these teams play yet this year will hurt us," Schillig said. "The tournament is not in dual format, and some people play better when they are playing for themselves than when they are playing for the team.

"In the tournament format you can go out and play your game instead of thinking about who you are playing."

Individually, Schillig expects all of her players will be up for the meet, but one player in particular has been anticipating this meet.

"Liz Canzoneri is really looking forward to this tournament," Schillig said. "She won her flight last year and picked up some good wins in the process. This meet got her ranked nationally last year and you can tell she's starting to lift her game for this weekend."

If there has been a sour note so far this year it has been the Iowa doubles play. Although it hasn't been bad, Schillig wants improvement before the Big Ten season next spring. Schillig promised to mix things up for her doubles teams this weekend.

"We've switched some things around to get a different look," Schillig said. "I'm not pleased with what we have been doing with our doubles."

On The Line

Since it's Friday, it's time for On The Line.

Once again, fearless Daily Iowan readers will try to win a frosty keg of beer by picking football games.

The slate this week promises to be difficult. The Big Ten has been topsy-turvy all season, and last week's action was no exception. Which Ohio State team will show up this week? Will Michigan State stay winless? Is Northwestern truly really bad? Those with the answers have a good chance to win the prize.

The Big Ten isn't the only source of prognosticating anxiety, though. What about Iowa State? Can they defeat Northern Iowa two years in a row? And Louisiana State — can they bounce back from two consecutive defeats? Will Air Force sink the Navy? And where's Carleton, anyway?

The person with all the answers, provided of course that person is 21 or older, can take home the cold, 16-gallon keg from the kind folks at Vito's, 118 E. College. You better win soon, because soon you may need to get a permit to have a keg party. A permit?

You don't need a permit to go to Vito's, though, so go have a good time there.

Our crack DI staff pickers will continue their battle. Sports Editor Brent Woods, 35-15, is leading and could build a healthy lead with a good week. Sports staffer Mike "Magic" Trilk, 34-16, is breathing down Woods' neck, not literally of course, and could possibly take over the top spot.

Lewis and Matt Zlatnik, both 32-18, could either make up a lot of ground or fall far, far behind.

The DI readers have proved they're not a shoddy bunch of pickers, going 35-15. Of the DI crew, only Woods has shown the savvy to stay even with the wily readers. But remember, we only get to pick once, while most of our readers take advantage of the three-ballot limit.

Our guest picker this week is the mystery person, because we don't know what he looks like. We've heard his voice and read his writing, though. He's Steve Robinson, Sports Illustrated's senior editor in charge of college football, wrestling and boxing.

Steve didn't have much to say, besides the mandatory wisecracks about how bad the Big Ten is.

He also wanted to be sure that we weren't doing any serious gambling against a point spread, or anything unethical like that.

We told him we just pick the games straight and give brew to the winner, and he seemed genuinely touched by OTL's Midwestern simplicity and its penchant for clean, good-natured fun.

In fact, he seemed to get a little misty.

Well, maybe not. It's hard to tell over the phone.

We figure if we beat Robinson, a guy who really is supposed to know his college football, we'll be moving right up the old prognosticating ladder.

We tried to get one of the MTV people, but the phone started making strange noises and we thought it might explode. So we gave up on MTV. We're past those Bon Jovi days anyway.

And we tried to call Earle Bruce at Northern Iowa to get him to pick, but apparently he's too busy trying figure out how to beat the Cyclones.

Finding a guest picker isn't always easy, but it's easy for you to play On The Line. The ballot appears in the Scoreboard section Tuesday through Thursday, and will be run with the results story in Monday's paper. Circle the teams you think will win, including the tiebreaker, and put down a score for the tiebreaker. Don't forget to write down your name and phone number, then take your ballot to the DI Business Office, 111 Communications Center, and put it in the brightly colored ballot box.

Remember, deadline is noon Thursday.

Miles Davis bebops at UI

By Kevin Goulding
The Daily Iowan

Jazz legend Miles Davis will celebrate Homecoming at the UI with a concert at 8 tonight in Hancher Auditorium.

Davis has been at the forefront of jazz for more than 40 years, excelling as both a trumpeter and an innovative band leader. Emerging from that creative cauldron of bebop as a protégé of Charlie Parker, Davis became the most influential jazzman of the 1950s, pioneering the "cool" jazz sound and topping the jazz charts with albums orchestrated by arranger Gil Evans.

Miles Davis

In the mid '50s, Davis led an ensemble featuring saxophonist John Coltrane that set the standard for hard bop performance. By the end of the decade, Davis had released "Kind of Blue," which, in realizing the potential of improvising on scales or "modes," has been described as the most influential album in jazz history.

Throughout the 1960s, Davis led pathfinding groups featuring young stars including Herbie Hancock.

Davis' "Bitches Brew" album in 1969, characterized by long, free improvisations based on rock rhythms and amplified instruments, launched the jazz/rock fusion movement of the '70s. Musicians from the "Bitches Brew" sessions founded the leading fusion bands — the Mahavishnu Orchestra, Return to Forever, Headhunters and Weather Report.

After leading the fusion revolution, Davis retreated into retirement in the mid-'70s, but he re-emerged in the late 1980s with a new string of acclaimed albums, including the Grammy-winning "We Want Miles" in 1982.

Flutist James Galway bring his music to UI

The Daily Iowan

James Galway, renowned flutist whose records and genial face are among the most well-known in the musical world, will perform in Hancher Auditorium at 3 p.m. on Sunday.

Galway will perform to the piano accompaniment of Phillip Moll, and his program will feature sonatas by Carl Reinecke and Bohuslav Martinu; Philippe Gaubert's "Sonata No. 2 in C major;" Gabriel-Urbain Faure's "Fantasie;" Saint-Saens' Adagio and Variation from "Ascanio;" Ravel's "Habanera;" Benjamin Godard's Waltz from "Suite de Trois Morceaux" and Debussy's "Syrinx" and "Le Petit Berger."

Galway has been hailed as the supreme interpreter of the flute repertoire, and his playing features both brilliant technique and a lively sense of humor. Performing pieces ranging from Mozart concertos to Henry Mancini melodies to native songs of Ireland, Galway has become a favorite of all kinds of music lovers around the world.

His recordings have made him a top-selling artist. His classical recordings include works by Vivaldi, Schubert and contemporary composers. His album of the Mozart concerto was awarded the Grand Prix du Disque. And his popular records, including duets with jazz singer Cleo Laine and a best-selling version of John Denver's "Annie's Song," have won him the Record of the Year Awards from Cash Box and Billboard magazines.

Pianist Phillip Moll, considered one of today's leading collaborative pianists, has been Galway's permanent accompanist from the first year of Galway's solo career. Moll, who has also worked with such celebrated artists as Kyung Wha Chung and Jessye Norman, received his first instruction in piano and violin from his father, a violinist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. He also studied with Alexander Tcherepnin.

Remaining tickets for James Galway are $23 and $21 (20 percent less for students) and are available from Hancher Box Office. Tickets may also be purchased at a substantial discount as part of Hancher's 1988-89 Concert Series, featuring violinist Isaac Stern, pianist Mitsuko Uchida and the Cambridge Buskers.

STUDENT COMMISSION ON PROGRAMMING & ENTERTAINMENT

As we begin our concert season, we would like to remind you of our seating policy. Any violation of this policy will result in permanent ejection from the facility.

Our request is simple. "GOOD BEHAVIOR AND REMAIN AT YOUR SEAT." Since our first concert in Carver Hawkeye Sports Arena in 1982 and in Hancher Auditorium since 1980, the Student Commission on Programming & Entertainment (SCOPE) has had three goals:

1. Produce fine quality entertainment on a consistent basis in what are two of the premiere concert facilities in the midwest.
2. Assist in the enrichment and the diversity of The University of Iowa, and
3. Maintain an operation that is fiscally sound.

In the last five years, SCOPE has produced twenty concerts in Carver Hawkeye Sports Arena and twenty-four in the Hancher Auditorium, with the bulk of these presented in the last twelve months.

The behavior exhibited at the U-2 concert by a small segment estimated to be 300 out of 15,856 of those concert-goers was totally unacceptable and will not be tolerated in the future. Persons exhibiting that type of behavior will be ejected. In our continued efforts in this extremely important aspect of our programming, we need your assistance. Understand that a reserved seat is just that—a reserved location that you have purchased to view a concert—remain there. Persons without a main floor ticket are not entitled to be on the main floor.

One of the beautiful things about Carver Hawkeye Sports Arena is that there isn't any obstruction from the top row to the first row on the floor. That's also one of the major security problems. There are 29 aisles leading to the floor with no walls, no rails, no balconies, or upper mezzanines to break or make it physically difficult to rush the stage.

An usher or T-shirt security is there primarily to assist you and direct you, not be a law enforcement officer or a barrier. Yes, we employ students, including women, of which we are proud that we can offer the chance to earn money, and in our employment practices, we will not discriminate. Furthermore, an usher should not have to be intimidating to be respected, or aggressive to be adhered to. Our ushers are given training, and a special training session was held the Sunday before the U-2 concert.

We put in place the largest security and safety force for that particular concert than ever before. But our efforts were not as successful for those on the floor as we would have liked. Not because we didn't try or prepare, but because a small segment of the audience was determined from the outset to fight, kick and bite their way to the front (it is reported that a woman bit seven individuals on her way from the back to front of the main floor, ceasing only after she made it to the front). These individuals did not respect the safety of you or themselves in the process.

This element jeopardized your safety and enjoyment, their safety, and future concerts. We need your assistance in making sure concerts are as an enjoyable and enriching experience as they can be and have been at Carver Hawkeye Sports Arena and Hancher Auditorium. Please remain at your reserved seats. It is our intent to strive for and achieve total safety at all concerts and to this aim we are going to institute some new control measures, but your voluntary compliance with simple but import request, REMAIN AT YOUR RESERVED SEAT, is paramount to our success. The future of concerts at The University of Iowa is in your hands. We promise you we will do our part and continue to try to bring the premiere talent that you deserve. Please, just do your part.

Thank you in advance for your cooperation.

We have worked hard to present some of the premiere talent in contemporary music today, along with some of yesterday's greats, with 200,000 Iowans gracing our performances. It has always been our objective to make each concert an enjoyable, educational, and safe event. Our productions have been as small as a mike and a stool for a comedian to a two-day setup for two of the largest touring shows in rock and roll history—Stevie Wonder and U-2. We have handled all aspects of our programs with pride, efficiency, and professionalism. Nothing else would be acceptable.

The staffs of the Office of Campus Programs & Student Activities, SCOPE, Carver Hawkeye Sports Arena, Hancher Auditorium, University Security, and ROTC that assist us in our productions consist of professionals that handle events as big and complex as Hawkeye football and basketball to Riverfest. We have never taken anything for granted in doing these productions, including one's safety. A life is a precious gift, and something very sacred. Going to a concert should not and will not be an endangerment.

'Empire of the Sun' portrays J.G. Ballard's book well

By Locke Peterseim
The Daily Iowan

For years people have been wondering when someone would get around to making a film of British science fiction surrealist J. G. Ballard's work — writing soaked to its mutated gills in deliciously disturbing imagery that begged to be committed to celluloid.

And so, many Ballard fans were surprised that when a film finally was made of a Ballard book it wasn't about either of the cult favorites "Crash" or "High Rise," but rather 1984's relatively conventional "Empire of the Sun" — the author's visionary account of a young boy's coming of age in a Japanese internment camp near Shanghai, based for the most part on Ballard's own youth. And some fans were for the most part mortified when they heard Steven Spielberg would be directing. It seemed a marriage made in a particularly twisted corner of adaptation hell.

However, "Empire of the Sun" isn't a total embarrassment to Ballard's fans. With screenwriter/playwright Tom Stoppard ("Brazil") and cinematographer Allen Daviau, Spielberg has in fact done an admirable job of capturing the power and glory of Ballard's novel. But at the same time, "Empire of the Sun" is a Spielberg film, complete with the usual Spielbergian visual punch and dramatic overkill that has earned him the deep hatred of anyone who goes to see "films" instead of "movies" — hazy, back-lit doorways, a camera that rarely sits still, a throng-of-thousands shot every 20 minutes and all of it drenched in that oh-so-Spielbergian amber lighting.

The film works best when it loses itself in Jim's dreams of flight — his obsession with flying forms the emotional crux of "Empire of the Sun," and it's in these surrealistic scenes that we're able to peer into the heart of Ballard's vision. The film features several such epiphanies, all of them buoyed up by John Williams' usual overly majestic soundtrack and unusually beautiful choral backings.

Spielberg is never going to be strung up for his unintelligible subtlety — you can always tell exactly what he has in mind. There is nary a silent moment in the film, as he fills every second with explosions, screams of fear and joy or Williams' music. It almost seems as though Spielberg is afraid to let his images and actors stand on their own. He shouldn't be — there are images in "Empire of the Sun" that are as beautiful as anything on the screens today.

The film has its faults — at its worst Spielberg's style is heavy-handed and contrived. But at its best "Empire of the Sun" roars with cinematic power, more than making up for what it may lack in critical depth.

Peculiar British wit lends bawdy charm to 'Personal Services'

By Ryan Donovan
Special to The Daily Iowan

Fans of the British hit "Wish You Were Here" should not miss this sequel (of sorts) by the same author. Director Terry Jones' clever farce "Personal Services" is playing at the Bijou this Saturday and Sunday.

Continuing in the adventures of Christine, the quintessential British madam, she leases apartments while monitoring the tricks of her ladies. After tiring of beating up one too many tenants for past due rent, she goes into the brothel business. She finds success with the help of her cohort Shirley and their "administrator" Dolly.

As the world-be-damned Christine, Julie Walters carries this film. Obnoxious, hilarious and effective as Madam Christine, she laughs and stomps her way through with an energy and flair rarely seen. Paradoxically, she longs for marriage to a wealthy, upper-class husband. Walters shows her versatility with an uncharacteristic emotional moment when she berates her father. Because of Walters' deft portrayal, the viewer realizes Christine's vulnerability.

Director Jones creates an interesting setting for these bizarre characters. The pace is generally fast, and much of the humor successfully relies on clever visuals. One of the film's classic comic moments occurs at Christine's sister's wedding. Christine, grasping for toilet paper in the next bathroom stall, discovers to her surprise that her friend Dolly is actually a man. While they're laughing, pants down, who should walk in but the prim mother-in-law. She gets more than a wedding punch-induced delusion, smiles briefly and leaves.

All elements combined, "Personal Services" is a highly enjoyable film. Considering its bawdy content, it's not for those with a prim disposition. But for riotous performances, bizarre characters and just a general good time, "Personal Services" should be on the must-see list.

Thanks for opening up our third Pregame of the year. This is our homecoming edition, and we think you will find interesting stories inside.

This tab focuses more on players who don't share the limelight and the glory at Iowa — young players who are trying to make their mark on the team.

Punter Mark Adams, a junior college transfer, talks about his attempts to adjust to major college football on Page 4.

Highly touted freshman linebacker John Derby, a Wisconsin native, discusses his redshirt season last year and his goals for the future on Page 6, and veteran defensive end Mike Burke tells why he's trying to make his senior season shine on Page 8.

Pages 10-11 offer complete rosters, schedules and a graphic illustration of the teams' main formations.

Freshman quarterback Matt Rodgers talks about his situation with the Hawkeyes on Page 12. Rodgers has been holding field goal attempts lately, but he's also been learning Iowa's offense.

John Harty, who played defensive tackle at Iowa from 1977-80 and was a second-team all-American, discusses his pro career with the 49ers and his current career on Page 14.

Chuck and Andy Hartlieb will meet on the field Saturday, probably for the final time. They talk about the game on Page 16.

Hawkeyes will defeat Wisconsin 27-10

We have put out two editions of Pregame, and we've managed to go one for two in our predictions.

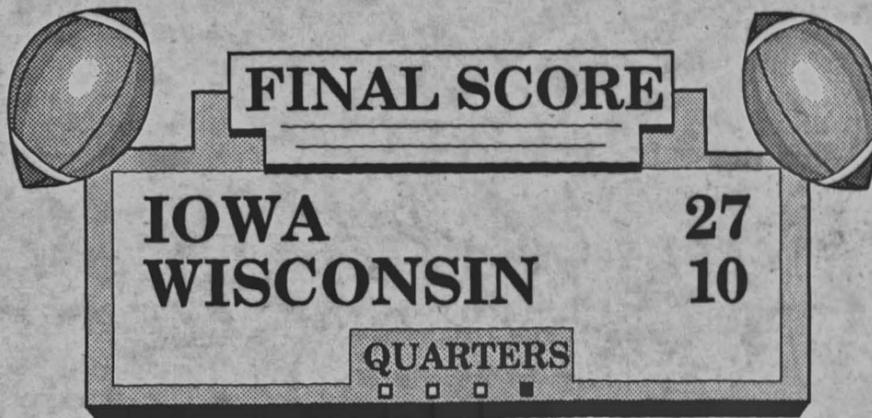

We thought the Hawkeyes would defeat Colorado by four points; they lost by four; and we picked Iowa to beat Iowa State by 25 and the Hawkeyes only won by three.

We may not get this week's score exactly correct, but we think the winner should be relatively easy to choose.

Every school likes to try to schedule a beatable opponent for its homecoming game, and the 2-2-1 Hawkeyes look capable of beating the 0-4 Badgers.

Wisconsin had a hard time of it in its non-conference slate, losing games to Northern Illinois and Western Michigan before falling to No. 1-ranked Miami. Wisconsin did put a pretty good fight in the Orange Bowl against the Hurricanes, however, losing 23-3.

That game showed the Badgers have the ability to play a superior team tough, but last week in their Big Ten opener against Michigan they were clobbered 62-14.

Ouch.

Iowa will beat Wisconsin, but it won't be by that kind of margin. Our guess is 27-10.

The Hawkeyes have only scored 20 points in their last two games, but the offense should be able to open up against Wisconsin. It wouldn't be surprising if quarterback Chuck Hartlieb broke out of his slump and had a 300-yard passing day, in which case Iowa might score more points. He's certainly due.

Iowa's ground game did not perform as well against Michigan State as against Iowa State, but the quality of the opposition probably had something to do with that. Look for the Hawkeyes to try to do most of the work on the ground, although Wisconsin uses a defense similar to Michigan State's, which may force the Hawkeyes will take to the air more frequently.

Wisconsin is second-to-last in the Big Ten in pass defense, rushing defense, scoring defense and total defense, so the question will probably be whether or not the Hawkeyes stop themselves. Iowa is first in the conference in passing offense and fourth in total offense.

Michigan State could only muster 10 points in the tie game with the Hawkeyes last Saturday in East Lansing, Mich., so we're betting that the Badgers won't get many more than that.

Wisconsin averages 12 points per game, despite a per-game tally of 305 yards. Iowa's defense is only seventh in the Big Ten but has shown great improvement the last two weeks against admittedly weak offensive teams. Still, we don't expect the Badgers to put much together offensively.

Adams tries to take his best shot

By Mike Polisky
The Daily Iowan

When Marv Cook injured his right ankle early this season, Coach Hayden Fry and his Hawkeyes lost a punter as well as an all-Big Ten tight end.

That's when senior Mark Adams came on the scene.

Adams has been the backup punter for the past two seasons. Cook's unexpected injury catapulted Adams into the top spot — a spot which more often than not goes unappreciated by teammates and fans.

A good punter remains unnoticed. If Adams kicks for a good average, punts consistently out-of-bounds inside the 20-yard line and kicks quickly to avoid being blocked, no one notices.

Mark Adams is being noticed, unfortunately.

Everyone is rooting for Adams to succeed. His high school coach, Fry, his wife Lee Anne and his teammates all know his capabilities and respect his hard-working style.

Everyone, that is, except the Hawkeye fans.

"Sure, it is hard hearing the boos," Adams said. "It's also difficult for me because I know I can perform much better. It is just a matter of time — I need to get experience and learn to relax. I hope people realize that the effort is there."

Adams attended Eastern Utah Junior College for two years before transferring to Iowa.

"I knew as soon as I came to Iowa that it was the school for me," Adams said. "Plus, the fact that Iowa did not have a punter returning was appealing."

During his stay at EUJC, Adams led the nation his freshman year with a 45.6 yards-per-punt average. As a sophomore, Adams was named to the All-American Juco second team.

Very impressive statistics, considering Adams never touched a ball to his foot until his senior year at Clearfield High School.

"I was really never interested in football," Adams said. "My high school coach, Brent Hancock twisted my arm. I'm very glad he did."

Hancock is quite pleased himself. "Mark was a basketball player, a good athlete," Hancock said.

"I realized that someone with that kind of athletic ability could excel at football. We played him at defensive back, but we soon realized his potential as a punter. He has an extremely strong leg. We knew that if he worked hard, he could play Division I. He is the best we ever had."

Adams has punted 24 times this year for a 36.5 yards-per-punt average — nearly ten fewer yards per punt than when he played at EUJC. However, neither Adams nor Fry are losing sleep.

"I think the average will come up," Adams said. "My problem is that I'm not as relaxed as I should be. I put a lot of pressure on myself not to allow my kicks to be blocked. Hopefully, the average and everything else will work out by itself."

Fry, too, is not disappointed.

"He (Adams) is doing the best he is capable of doing," Fry said.

"Mark is going to be our punter for the remainder of the season. He is working really hard to excel at his job. The difference in his averages from Juco to here is very simple. In Juco, the safeties don't always field the ball — they sometimes let it roll. In Division I, the punts are fielded."

"His average might not be super," Fry said. "But in the last two weeks, he has kicked the ball out of bounds three times inside the opponents' twenty."

Two weeks ago, Adams received the award for most valuable special-teams player for his performance against Iowa State.

Adams played his finest game of the season this past Saturday at Michigan State, punting seven times for a 39-yard average. But more impressive was Adams' ability to kick quickly enough to avoid being blocked by heavy pressure from the Spartans.

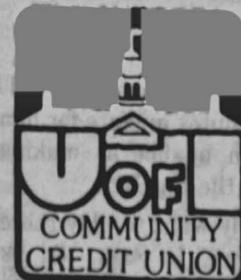

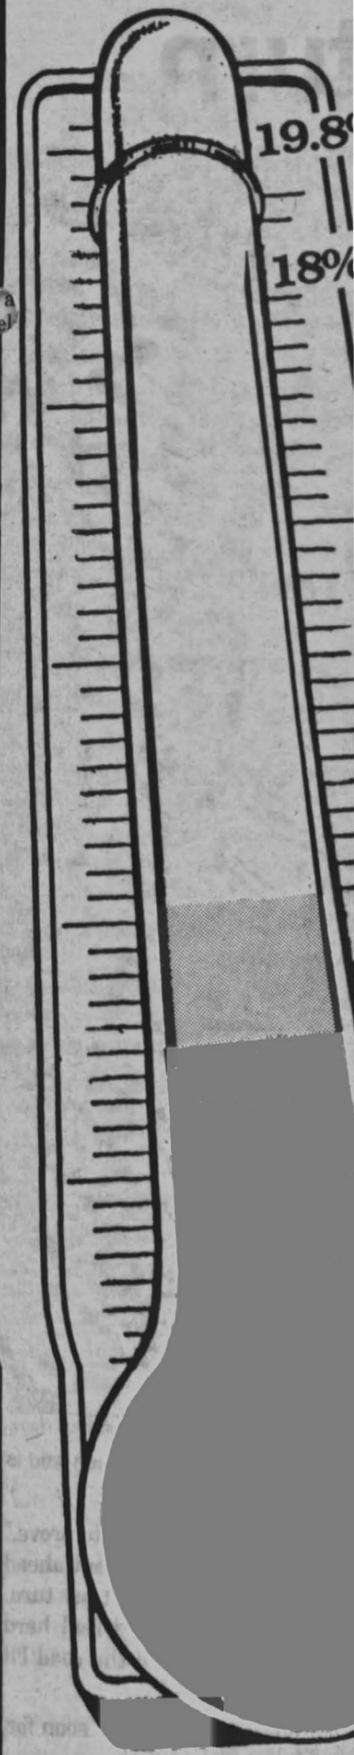

"I realize the statistics are not where they should be," Adams said. "But if my average is lower than it should be and we win, I'm happy. I just want to help the team."

Mark Adams swings through a punt during the Iowa-Michigan State game at East Lansing, Mich. The senior punter became the Hawkeyes' starter following Marv Cook's injury in the Kansas State game.

Prep star Derby waits his turn

By Bryce Miller
The Daily Iowan

After sitting out his freshman season as a redshirt, John Derby was ready to get to the basics this season — playing football.

"I understand what the coaches did," Derby said. "They know what's best for me and the team."

Redshirting freshmen is a practice that may not seem unique in a major Division I program like Iowa's, but it definitely was a dose of cold water for Derby.

A high school all-American from Oconomowoc, Wis., Derby had the attention of all the college recruiters and was touted as one of the top college linebacking prospects in the country.

He was a Street & Smith's and Parade first team all-American and Gatorade Wisconsin Player of the Year. In his senior season, Derby had 113 tackles, three interceptions and four caused fumbles.

But the star sat his first year at Iowa.

"Sure this is new to me," he said. "It's the first time that I've had to sit."

Bill Brashier, Iowa linebacking coach, felt the redshirt year was a chance for the 6-foot-2, 229-pound player to grow.

"He used the year to learn the system," Brashier said. "Like all our players, he had the option to redshirt or not. I think he made a sound decision."

"John is doing a real good job. He's coming along. I expect good things from him and I feel he has a bright future at Iowa."

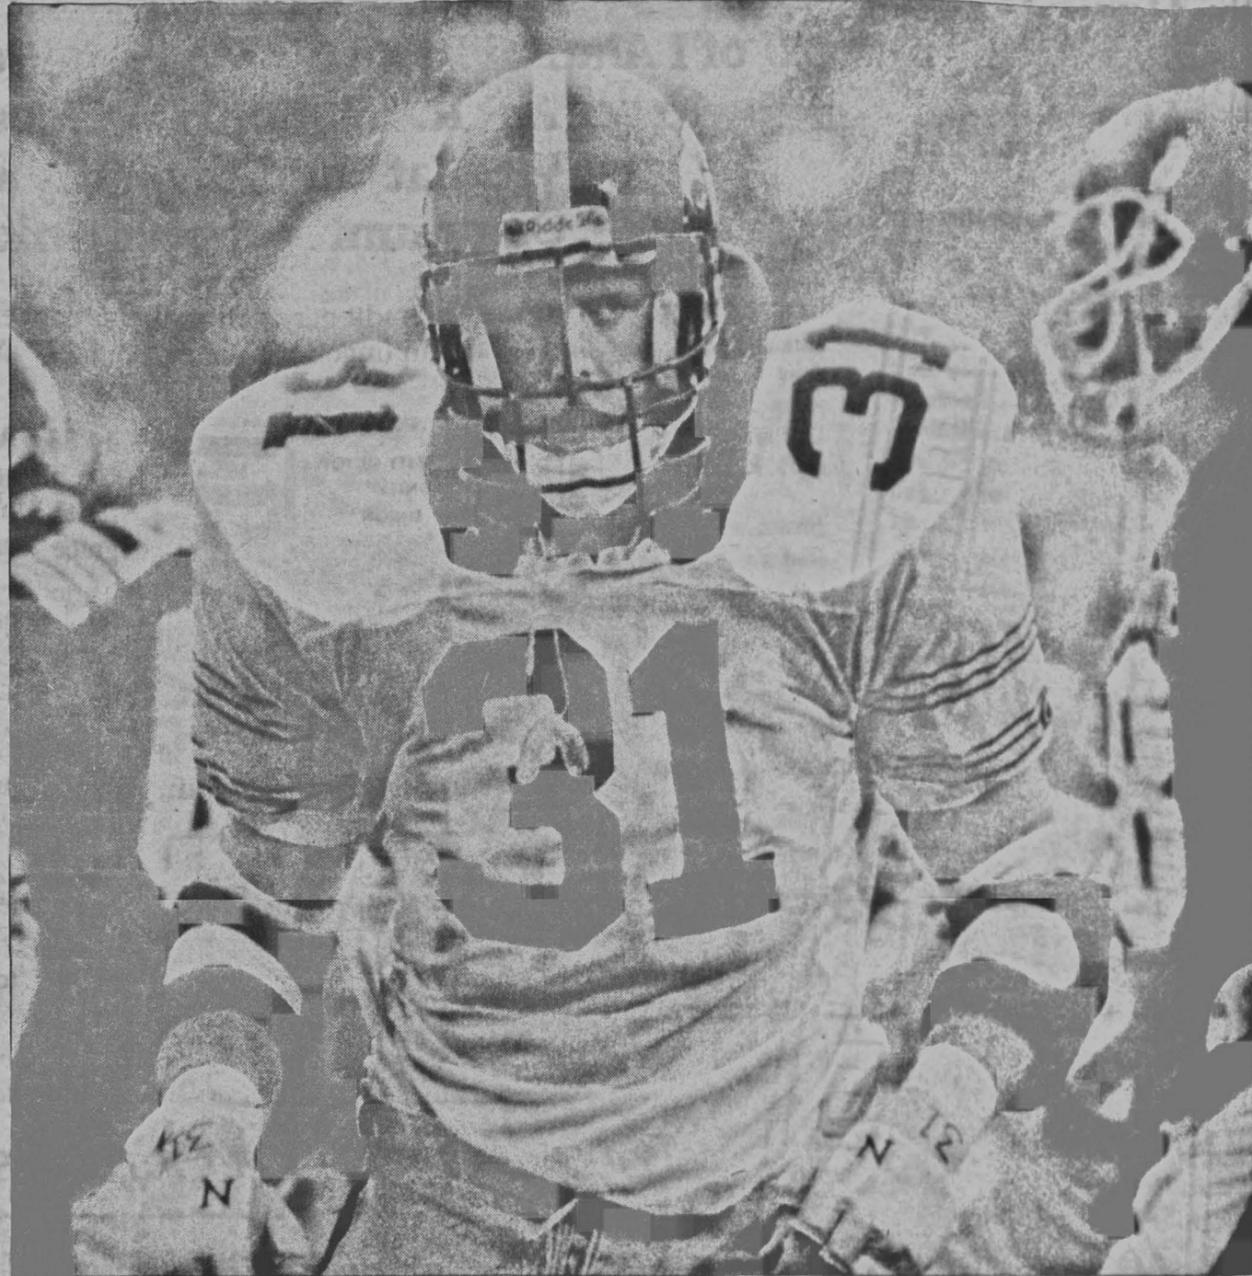

This season Coach Hayden Fry has attempted to fit Derby into the scheme.

"John has had some injuries early," Fry said. "But we expect to see him in action in the weeks ahead."

During preseason drills, Derby suffered a broken hand, which hampered his attempts to break into the lineup. With the hand nearly healed, he suffered a thigh bruise in practice before the Kansas State game and was again slowed.

Derby didn't see his first action this season until the Iowa State game in Iowa City. He had a tackle on special teams and played a couple of downs at linebacker in the 10-3 triumph.

Last week against Michigan State, Derby played sparingly following a late-game injury to senior Jim Reilly.

In recent years, the Hawkeyes have established a tradition for a talented linebacking corps. All-American Larry Station, J.J. Puk and teammates Brad Quast and Reilly have produced a tradition that Derby would like to continue.

"I know there is a lot expected from the linebackers here," he said. "Quast and Reilly have taught me a lot since I've been here. I'm ready to play . . . I want to contribute."

One of Derby's other top college choices was Michigan State. He opted for Iowa based on the hospitality and the defensive makeup of the Hawkeyes.

"I looked at all the Big Ten schools," he said. "I took a trip to Michigan State, but I was treated 100 percent better here. I liked Iowa's type of defense."

The Spartans typically play a one-linebacker set in comparison to the two-linebacker formation the Hawkeyes usually use. Derby only saw limited time during the 10-10 tie with the Spartans.

Derby said he thinks the defense is beginning to solidify after a slow start in Iowa's opener against Hawaii.

"I feel that we're starting to gel," he said. "I think it's starting to show. Everyone on defense is trying to work hard so we can get better."

Derby still feels he has a lot of weight on his shoulders. With all the attention he received as a high school player, he has yet show he belongs in the collegiate ranks.

"I felt I had something to prove," he said. "With all the talent ahead of me, I just have to wait my turn. Right now I'm working real hard and I know that down the road I'll get my chance."

That chance could come soon for Derby.

With recurring injuries to Reilly, the man living off his high school days might move into the rotation and try his hand at Big Ten football.

Derby hopes that 1988 will have some minutes in store for him and give him a shot at making his mark in the Big Ten.

"I really want to play these Big Ten teams," he said. "I'd like to make them look and realize that they missed a player in John Derby."

Healthy Burke delivers in 5th year

'Other' Iowa end improves each week

By Neil Lewis
The Daily Iowan

For the past two seasons, just staying healthy was the top priority for Mike Burke.

Though still nursing some sore spots, the senior defensive end has managed to dodge injury this season, find his way back into the starting lineup and steadily improve each game.

In the shadow of Joe Mott's outstanding early season performance, Burke's play at end may have gone unnoticed by many, until the Michigan State game.

After Iowa's strong defensive performance at Michigan State, Coach Hayden Fry pointed to Burke's improved play.

"The defensive ends were super again," he said. "Burke had the best game of his career and Mott was terrific again."

Burke tallied seven tackles and two quarterback sacks against the Spartans. At 225 pounds, he isn't quite the roadblock that Joe Mott is, but he possesses the all-around athletic ability it takes to play the position.

"I think the three ends complement each other," he said, "because each has a strength that the other doesn't have. I think I'm a little more of a finesse player than Joe and Tyrone Berrie."

Mott currently leads the Big Ten in tackles-for-loss and quarterback sacks.

"What I really need to work on is just attacking. You have to attack the backs, but don't get cut down without sealing off."

Defensive ends need a combination of speed and size to be able to fight off blockers, pursue backs and turn plays upfield. Nose guard Dave Haight said one reason Burke is filling the position so well this year is because this is his final college season.

"He's having a great year so far," Haight said. "It's his fifth year here."

"He's a great technique player, and he's great at hunting the corner. He's tall and not real heavy but that's not really a problem."

Burke's career at Iowa has been spotted with injuries. A pulled groin muscle that has never come back completely kept him out of the lineup at times last season. It continues to be a week-to-week concern for Burke.

"The groin injury affected me the first couple weeks of practice this year," he said. "It was off and on all last year."

"I just kind of have to baby it. I have to spend five or six days a week just taking care of it."

Burke was redshirted during the 1984 season, and saw limited time as a backup at defensive end in 1985.

Slowed by injuries during the 1986 and 1987 seasons, he managed the most tackles among defensive ends last season, 59, and tied for second on the squad in tackles-for-loss.

One of his distinguishing marks, other than his play at right end, is his jersey number. Though numbers less than 20 are traditionally reserved for offensive and defensive backs, Burke sports the number "5" on his uniform.

"I wear it because I played quarterback in high school," he said, "and was recruited as a quarterback."

"When I came here I was a quarterback my freshman season. I kind of liked the number so I stuck with it."

Burke was second-team all-state and first-team all-conference as a quarterback for his Davenport Central high school team and led it to the state high school football championship in 1983.

While at Davenport Central, he also wrestled and was an all-conference outfielder.

So far this season, Burke is tied for fifth in the Big Ten in tackles-for-loss with five for minus 27 yards. And with three quarterback sacks for minus 20 yards, he is also tied for second in the conference in sacks.

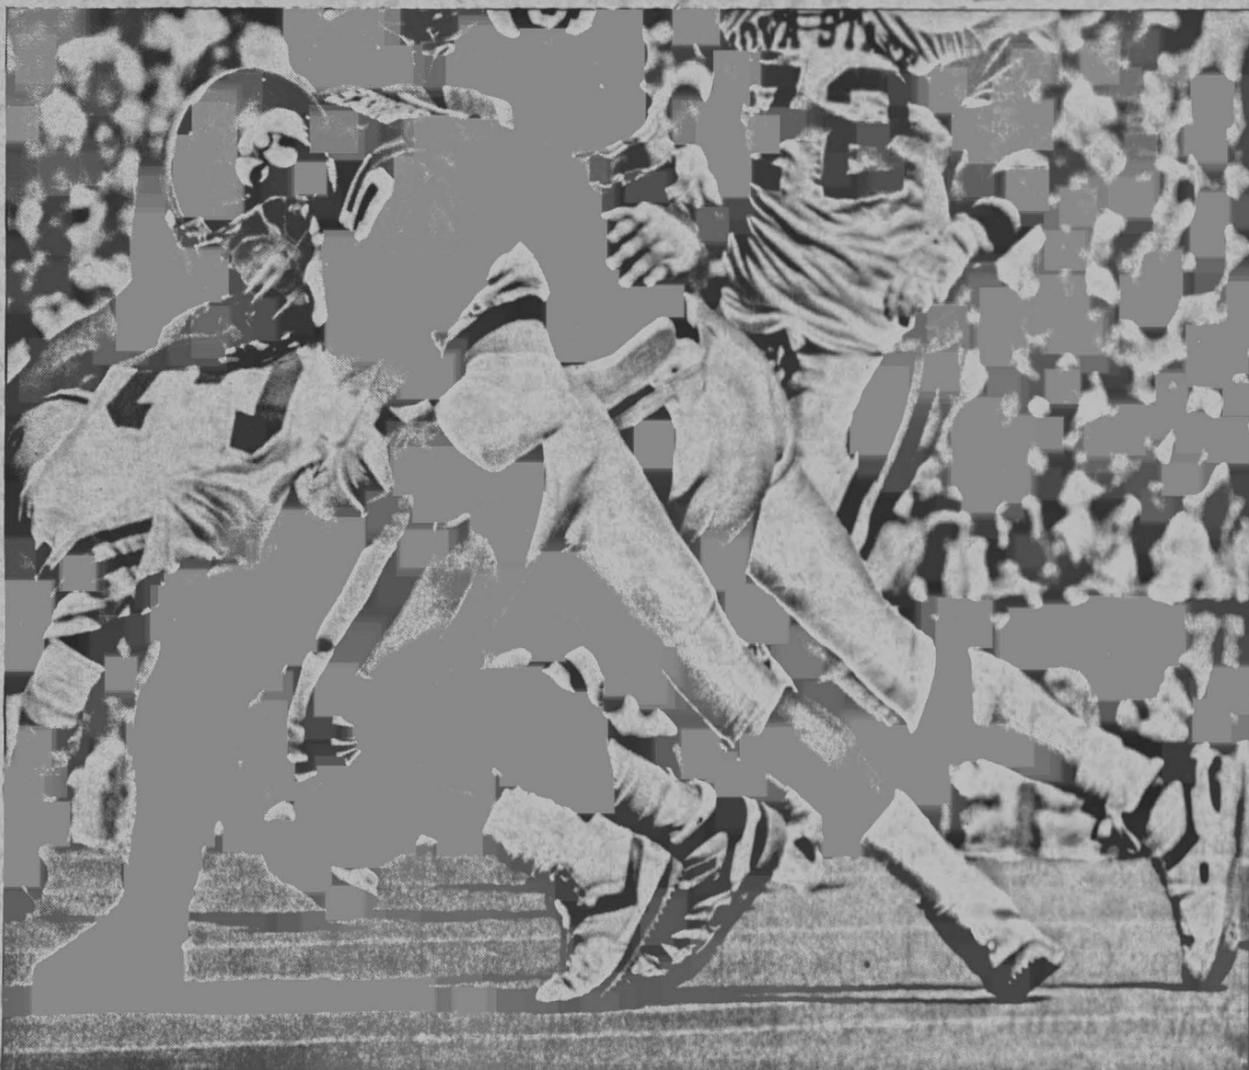

After the Iowa State win at home, the 23-year-old business major said the intensity of Iowa's defense had started to show.

"We basically try to put the past behind us," he said, "but not forget the mistakes we've made. By looking at the films you could see we were really throwing our bodies around a little bit more."

"I hope we can continue to carry it on to the Big Ten."

So far, it has carried over to the first of the eight conference games.

"We started out a little slow and tentative," Burke said, "but each game we're improving."

Iowa senior defensive end Mike Burke tackles Joe Henderson in the Hawkeyes' 10-3 victory over Iowa State two weeks ago at Kinnick Stadium. Burke, a Davenport native, is tied for second in sacks in the Big Ten with three.

Freshman QB learns the system

Highly touted Rodgers is in a holding pattern

By Matthew Zlatnik
The Daily Iowan

It's often the kicker who gets the credit or the blame for a made or missed field goal.

The kicking isn't a one-man job, though. The snap must be good and the holder must correctly place the ball on the tee.

Holding is a difficult job, requiring quick hands, and for that reason usually falls to a quarterback.

Iowa's holder is quarterback Matt Rodgers. A redshirt freshman

"Defensive reads, defensive coverages, you have to be in there and get the reps to learn how to do it. And if you don't have that chance, it's hard to learn. I'm getting it. Not as good as I should, but I'm getting it." --Matt Rodgers from Walpole, Mass., Rodgers spent the last year absorbing the Hawkeye offense. Getting his share of repetitions in practice has helped him learn the pro-style Iowa attack.

"I'm getting a hold of it," Rodgers said. "Last year was basically a learning year and I think you learn it more when you're actually out there doing it."

"In practice I'm getting more reps. You can watch film all day and still not get the same out of it as going out on the practice field and getting two reps."

Rodgers threw for 4,574 yards and 58 touchdowns in high school and as a senior led his team to an undefeated season. He was named a Parade, Bally and Super Prep all-American, Massachusetts Player of the Year by USA Today and the Gatorade New England Player of the Year.

With those credentials, he could have played college football anywhere, and besides Iowa he visited Michigan State, Pittsburgh and Boston College.

"I fell in love with the place when I got here," said Rodgers, a communications major. "The only reason I really took the visit was because my father went here. That was my first interest in the place."

Rodgers' father, Jimmy, is coach of the Boston Celtics and was Certain plays have a better chance of success against certain defensive alignments, and it's the quarterback's responsibility to make sure the offense will run the best play. But determining what the defense plans to do is the hardest part of learning Iowa's offense, Rodgers said. And not playing much makes it more difficult.

defenses quickly and know what plays to run against a defense. Film study and meetings with offensive coordinator Bill Snyder and older Iowa quarterback Chuck Hartlieb and Tom Poholski have helped Rodgers improve.

"We put a lot of time into it," Rodgers said. "We meet more than any other position. We're always in the film room with Coach Snyder. We're always meeting before practice, meeting after practice."

"Snyder's an offensive genius, he knows so much about it. And Freshman Matt Rodgers holds for a field goal attempt during Iowa's game against Michigan State. Rodgers is third-string at the quarterback spot for the Hawkeyes and is learning how to read defenses and Iowa's complicated offense.

Iowa's basketball MVP in 1964 and 1965.

"He said, why don't you just go out there," Rodgers said. "So I came out here, and it turned out to be great. The people were so nice."

"Plus, they throw the ball."

Iowa has a tradition of excellent passing offense, leading the nation in passing efficiency over the past five years. The success of the system requires the quarterback to examine the defensive formation and choose the correct play for the offense to run.

Not as good as I should, but I'm getting it."

Once the quarterback figures out what the defense is planning, he must decide what the offense should do.

"(When I see) what coverage it is," Rodgers said, "then I have to think about which play to run against that, or if the play we're in is all right. There might be something you're not supposed to run against that defense. You can see it right away. I don't know how to explain it."

Good quarterbacks can read

Chuck and Tom are close to the level he's at."

The quarterback must know what all his players are doing on each play, Rodgers said. The quarterback has great responsibility, because it's his job to get the points scored.

"You have to be like a coach on the field," Rodgers said.

He hasn't yet seen any action in games at quarterback, but Iowa Coach Hayden Fry is pleased with his progress.

"He does well in practice," Fry said. "He never gets to play in the games, though."

Ex-Hawk's career takes new turn

After two Super Bowls, Hardy returns to Iowa

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

It's not every day that you see someone with two Super Bowl rings.

"They are great ice-breakers," John Hardy, former Hawkeye and owner of the rings, said. "In the business community, they are a real asset."

Hardy played Hawkeye football from 1977 to 1980. He was a four-year starter and was all-Big Ten and all-American his senior year.

After his college career, he was drafted in the second round by the San Francisco 49ers and played defensive end for six years. He played in the 1982 Super Bowl against Cincinnati, but missed the 1985 game against Miami because of an injury.

Iowa didn't play in any bowl games while Hardy was a Hawkeye, which he regrets.

"It was frustrating while I was here," Hardy said. "I was an emotional player. I never left the field without leaving everything out there."

Hardy's coach remembers him fondly.

"He was one of the most dominating players since Coach (Hayden) Fry took over," defensive line coach Dan McCarney said. "He had unbelievable intensity every day in practice, as well as in games."

Now Hardy says he has a lot of "fond memories" of Iowa City.

"The fans here were great," said Hardy, a native of Sioux City, Iowa. "The fans have never been as supportive as they were here."

According to him, the football program and facilities here are as good as, if not better than, those of most pro organizations.

He missed the 1985 Super Bowl with first of a series of injuries which eventually forced him to retire from football.

The first injury was what he called a "genetic flaw" in his foot, but after several operations and a year-and-a-half of rehabilitation, he was back in his starting position.

"I was the only player who ever came back from that kind of injury," Hardy said.

Then he hurt his elbow, which had to be reconstructed and rehabilitated. But Hardy regained his starting position once again.

In 1986, his other foot required surgery for the same "genetic flaw" the other foot had.

Hardy tried to rehabilitate his foot before training camp in the spring of 1987, but he found it difficult to walk at night after practices.

So it was time to do something else.

"I wanted to have mobility," Hardy said. "I had had five operations in the last three years. I knew it was time to retire."

Hardy said when he first retired, people would ask him if he was going to sell insurance or coach football.

"Those jobs are both very respectable," Hardy said. "But I've been involved in football since fifth grade. It was time to have new challenges."

Hardy returned to the Midwest to attend Morningside College in Sioux City and finish his degree in business/marketing/management. He began working as public relations manager for Long Lines, Ltd., a Sergeant Bluff, Iowa, telecommunications firm, in January 1988 and graduated from Morningside with honors in August.

"I think the Midwest is the best place to live," Hardy said. "The quality of life and the quality of the people are good. The people are what makes it, wherever you are."

His work as public relations manager includes media relations and marketing, taking care of the company's quarterly newsletter and public speaking.

Hardy said he likes to speak to young people because they respond well to him.

"They are more prone to listen to me than to a teacher, parent or coach," Hardy said, "because a lot of kids emulate what I've done. I don't think athletes are aware of how much young people emulate them. I hope they are responsible enough to address these kids intelligently."

According to Hardy, a lot of people

John Hardy played defensive line for the Hawkeyes from 1977-80. He was a second-team all-American selection in 1980 and played six years with the NFL's San Francisco 49ers. Hardy is now a businessman in Sergeant Bluff, Iowa.

lose their priorities when they get in athletics and focus entirely on the sport. He stressed the importance of education over athletics.

"You'll keep a school education for the rest of your life," Hardy said. "In the long run, education is what will feed your family."

Besides his Super Bowl rings, Hardy's football career provided an education he could take into the business world.

"The NFL takes desire, motivation and dedication," Hardy said. "The 49ers were very committed to me throughout the process of my injuries and provided me with whatever I needed. I see a comparison now with Long Lines. They treat their employees as a team with common goals and objectives, and they'll provide whatever it takes for the members to be successful."

As for the future, Hardy, 29, would like to continue his education and possibly get his masters' in business administration.

"I've always been very committed," Hardy said. "I wanted to be as good as I possibly could."

He also remembers something Fry told him during his playing days: "The keys to success are, one, know what you want to do; two, know how to do it; and three, do it."

"As I reflect on that, it makes sense," Hardy said. "The longer I'm around, the more I find that that basic outline has a lot of insight."

Hartliebs ready for final matchup

By Brent Woods
The Daily Iowan

In last year's Iowa-Wisconsin game, quarterback Chuck Hartlieb scampered around the left side on a bootleg and headed toward the end zone.

A few yards out, he triumphantly held the ball up in the air. What he didn't know was that his younger brother Andy, a linebacker for the Badgers, was in fast pursuit.

Andy took a diving swipe at the ball, barely missing a chance to cause his brother a very embarrassing moment.

"That's the kind of opportunity you dream of," Andy said. "When you don't make the play, it gets to you. I've been hearing about that play for a year now, and I think Chuck knows that wasn't the right thing to do."

Chuck agrees.

"He almost got me," Chuck said. "I acted kind of stupid on that play. That's not my character, and

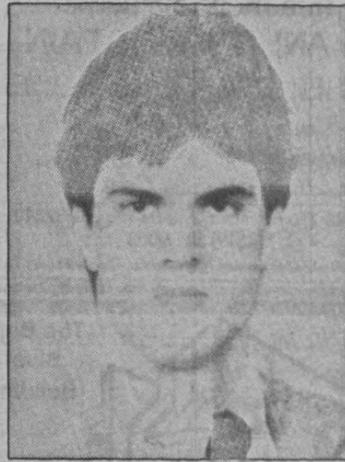

Chuck Hartlieb

I was really disappointed that I did that.

"I didn't feel anyone there. I had no idea anyone was that close, and then for it to be him . . . I think it would have made his career to get that one."

Attention is now being focused on this year's game, and plenty of Hartliebs will be at Kinnick Stadium Saturday to watch what will likely be the final gridiron matchup between the brothers.

Andy said, for Wisconsin, the contest against Iowa is perhaps the biggest game of the year.

"Before the season started, if you ask Wisconsin who we dislike the most, it would be Iowa," Andy said. "They just make our blood boil. I don't know if it's the ugly uniforms or the outrageous comments they make — it's always been a very physical game."

But according to Chuck, the rivalry isn't nearly as strong from the Iowa point of view. That may be because Iowa has defeated the Badgers eight times and tied once since Hayden Fry took over at Iowa.

"This is their big game of the Big Ten season," Chuck said. "Andy mentioned that. They really shoot for this one. I don't know why, because it's not that much of a rivalry from our side, but they really don't care much for the Hawkeyes and never have."

And Wisconsin certainly has something to prove after being pummeled 62-14 by Michigan last week at home. The Badgers have also lost to Western Michigan and Northern Illinois this year.

"It's been the most embarrassing year of football in my life," Andy said. "You can't expect something like this to happen, and it's hard to deal with. At this point, it's hard to know where to turn."

Fans adjust to anti-alcohol rules

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

People seem to be adjusting to the recent ban on botas and other anti-alcohol measures taken over the last three years at Kinnick Stadium.

According to security guard Byron Thomas of the Per-Mar Agency of Davenport, which works Iowa football games, guards haven't had many problems with people refusing to hand over alcohol at the door. Admission is denied to those with alcohol.

"Most everyone is agreeable," Thomas said, "but there is still some smuggling."

Thomas also said that a lot of people come up to the gate with a cup in their hands, saying "It's only water. Want to see?"

The biggest problem that exists now comes from people smuggling in alcohol.

"There's no use cutting (alcohol) out," UI student Shannon Sinnott said. "It's like the drinking age — they do it because it's illegal."

Over the last three years rules against alcohol in Kinnick Stadium have been strengthened as public awareness of the dangers of drinking has increased. Coolers, cans and bottles have been banned, and this year botas were added to the prohibited list.

People seen drinking during the game will be asked to leave and physically escorted out if necessary.

Reactions to an alcohol-free stadium vary.

"It's really a good idea because there are so many younger people," said UI student Jim Blessing. "We need to set a good example."

An older fan from Cedar Rapids agreed that the policy would hold down drinking.

"If they would allow it to be brought in, it would get out of hand," he said.

Three young Hawkeye fans like the policy for a somewhat different reason.

Iowa City youths Felix Herron, 12, Perkins Herron, 11, and Jesse Lane, 10, collect cans from around the stadium during each home game. They make around $30 a game by returning the cans for five cents each.

The boys said they like the policy because it requires people to leave their cans outside the stadium.

According to them, most of the cans are found between cars, in garbage cans and at the gates, and the majority are beer cans.

Not everyone likes the alcohol ban, though.

"The policy is out of line," said UI graduate Rich Aleksiejczyk, who comes to Hawkeye games from his home in Chicago. "Kids work all week long, studying. On weekends, parents say 'Have fun,' but they can't if they're not allowed to bring alcohol into the game. If they don't allow you to bring it in, they should sell it."

Aleksiejczyk said that because there are no professional teams in Iowa, college football is the sport, and beer should be sold at those games like it is at professional games.

"I don't want my kids sitting next to someone who is drunk," Pam Broeker, UI graduate and mother of two, said. "But maybe if they sold beer here, it would cut down on people bringing in the harder stuff."

"If they sold it here, it would be good for the school," said UI student Troy Combs. "We're paying $1.25 for a small Coke now. I'd pay $2.00 for a beer just so I wouldn't have to smuggle my bota in under my shirt."

According to NCAA rules, the decision whether or not to sell alcohol at games is up to individual schools.
