Negative campaigning dominates 3rd District race

By Heather Maher
The Daily Iowan

With just one week to go before the election, a general sense of relief prevails these days as the 1988 campaign season finally heads into the history books — and with it, the unrelenting and tiresome negative campaigning that has typified the Bush-Dukakis rivalry.

Voters in Iowa's 3rd District have had a double dose of political mudslinging this year, as they watched the battle for the district's congressional seat turn out to be a small-scale version of the presidential campaign.

The challenger, Republican Don Redfern, has led the way by waging a campaign based on attacks and accusations of Democratic incumbent Dave Nagle, who took some time to respond but finally gathered steam and has more than held his own in the final weeks of campaigning.

Redfern has accused Nagle of lying about his congressional voting record, of being "Iowa's weak link in the war against drugs," of encouraging bad ethics in government and of taking too much credit for federal money brought into the district.

For his part, Nagle has said Redfern contradicts himself on educational aid, changes his positions to suit whichever group of voters are being addressed, supports cuts in Social Security and wants a budget freeze that would keep military spending at its present level.

ELECTION '88

U.S. House

Redfern's tactics have been based largely on the premise that the incumbent in the race is the bad guy and the challenger is the underdog who has come to restore order and save the day.

He tells voters he sees a national contempt for government officials, and Congress — which re-elected 98 percent of its incumbents in 1986 — is the main reason for this lack of trust.

Redfern also says the Democratic Congress cannot say no to budget requests.

Although Nagle is not a penny pincher, he has voted for deep cuts in the defense budget. Education is high on his list of areas that need more funding, and he isn't reluctant to vote for measures that will send more money to educational institutions for research, to students' bank accounts or to educator's paychecks.

But education is an easy issue to support if you're a congressman from the 3rd District — which has the highest concentration of educators and students in the state. Nagle deserves a hand for his efforts on behalf of education and his recent endorsement from the Iowa State Educators Association, but 3rd District voters should expect as much from their congressman.

Redfern and the education issue aren't such cozy bedfellows. He has told UI students he favors increased funds for Pell Grants and Guaranteed Student Loans, but he frequently "forgets" to tell them he also endorses the Stenholm budget-cutting amendments, which would cut $181 million from Pell Grant funding.

Redfern also clarifies his call for increased educational funding with the condition that the funds must come from other government programs whose funding is cut. If considerable cuts are not made to other federally funded programs, Redfern is essentially saying he opposes more aid to education.

The issue of campaign-fund contributions has come up repeatedly in the campaign — usually from the Redfern camp in the form of attacks against Nagle's acceptance of donations from Political Action Committees.

In this area, both men have egg on their faces.

Redfern has been a unrelenting Nagle critic for taking 65 percent of his total campaign money from PACs — most of which are headquartered outside the 3rd District and have little to do with Iowa.

He accuses Nagle of catering to Convicted murderer Mark Peterson is escorted from the Johnson County Courthouse by a Johnson County deputy after being sentenced to life in prison Monday afternoon. Peterson pleaded guilty Sept. 6 to the March 24 stabbing death of his former boss, Iowa City resident Marshall Stewart.

Court renders decision Peterson receives mandatory life sentence for local murder

By Belinda Bloor

A Coralville man who pleaded guilty to first-degree murder last month for the stabbing death of his former boss, was sentenced to life in prison Monday in Johnson County District Court.

Mark R. Peterson pleaded guilty Sept. 6 to the first-degree murder of Marshall Stewart, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Stewart, 61, was stabbed to death in the bedroom of his residence at 1314 Whiting Avenue Court on March 24. Peterson turned himself in to police and confessed to having stabbed Stewart, according to court records. Police records state Peterson broke into the house through a window, armed with a knife having a blade over six inches long.

Sixth Judicial District Court Judge Thomas L. Koehler handed down the mandatory life sentence to Peterson. He said there is no possibility for parole for the offense of first-degree murder. Only the governor could commute the sentence to a term of years, according to Koehler's statements in the sentencing proceedings.

Koehler asked Peterson if he understood he had no possibility for parole. "Yes, Your Honor. I understand," Peterson said.

Koehler asked Peterson if he understood he had no possibility for parole.

"Yes, Your Honor. I understand," Peterson said.

Peterson's guilty plea had been entered against the advice of his attorney, William Yetter, according to Koehler's statements.

Koehler asked Yetter if he had explained the terms of the charge — such as "premeditated" and "with malice aforethought" — to his client and if he thought Peterson made his guilty plea after careful consideration of the consequences. Yetter replied affirmatively to all of the questions.

Peterson must pay $2,650.40 to the Crime Victim Reparation Program, $634.18 in court costs and an amount to be subsequently approved by the court for his court-appointed attorney. Restitution to the family of the victim will be determined by the court.

A restitution plan of payment with regard to these amounts will be prepared and submitted to the court within 90 days by the director of the correctional institution where Peterson is sent, according to court records.

Peterson will remain in the custody of the Johnson County Sheriff's Department pending his transfer to the Iowa Medical and Classification Center at Oakdale, Iowa.

Hostage tape marks 4th year of captivity

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — American hostage Terry Anderson, in a videotape released Monday by his kidnappers, read a statement that accused the Reagan administration of blocking his release and urged the next president to do more.

Copies of the two-minute, 35-second tape were delivered to two Western news agencies in Beirut four days after Anderson, 41, marked his fourth birthday in captivity.

Statements from the pro-Iranian Islamic Jihad, which holds Anderson, accompanied the tapes.

"On the occasion of Terry Anderson's birthday and in response to your letters, and according to his desire to send you a recorded message, we hereby enclose with this statement the recorded message on videotape," the kidnappers said.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, began the message by identifying himself and saying the date was Oct. 30.

"Once again, I'm being given a chance to speak to my family, to my friends and to the American people," he said.

Anderson said his spirits were boosted by the birthday greetings he received, "but as my fourth birthday in captivity passes and as the end of my fourth year (in captivity) approaches, I find it difficult to keep my hopes and my courage high."

"I've been very close to being released several times over the past two years. But each time it seems that the U.S. government uses its influence to stop any agreement from being made. And I don't understand this."

In Los Angeles, Reagan told reporters his administration had done everything possible to win the hostages' freedom. "I don't think that was Terry speaking," he said. "I think he had a script that was given to him."

When asked about the statement on the tape that the U.S. government interfered when the hostages were about to be released, Reagan said, "That is absolutely not true, but let me point something out. Terry Anderson in that terrible confinement at the hands of those barbarians — any information he has had to have come from there; there is no contact with the outside world."

"We have been doing everything we can for the release of the hostages, and the very simple answer is, for those people, to let them go," the president said.

Anderson said, "I gather there's been very little discussion about this problem in the U.S. presidential campaign, and that's disappointing, as is President Reagan's complete failure to find a solution during his eight years in office.

"But whichever candidate wins this election, remember an unyielding refusal to deal with this matter is not going to make it go away. It is not going to free us."

He urged the next president to use his influence "in a positive way, not a negative one," to end his plight.

Of the two candidates, Anderson singled out Vice President George Bush.

"I'm not asking President Reagan to deal with terrorists, although both he and Mr. Bush did so in the Iran-Contra affair and the TWA hijack," the message said.

Bush has not been named previously as a negotiator in the 1985 jet hijacking, in which Shiite Moslems demanding freedom for Shiite prisoners held 39 Americans for 17 days and killed a U.S. Navy diver.

The vice president has minimized his role in the sale of arms to Iran. The deal became known as the Iran-Contra affair when it was revealed that money for the arms was funneled to Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the comments about Bush were "totally incorrect, wrong."

Anderson appeared from the waist up. He was dressed in a gray track

Anderson charges Reagan, Bush with terrorist dealings

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Ronald Reagan on Monday rejected as "absolutely not true" charges that he and Vice President George Bush made deals with terrorists and deliberately thwarted the release of hostages held in Lebanon.

Responding to allegations read by American hostage Terry Anderson in a new videotape released by his pro-Iranian captors in Lebanon, Reagan said "I don't think that was Terry speaking. I think he had a script that was given to him."

Reagan was asked about the tape at a ceremony where he signed legislation that offers U.S. artists and writers copyright protections under an international treaty.

Earlier, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater had denounced the kidnappers, accusing them of "a cynical attempt" to use the hostages to influence the U.S. presidential election.

Contrary to many instances in the past, the president spoke at length with reporters about the latest hostage tape. Reagan appeared eager to discuss the matter and stepped up to the microphone to answer reporters' questions.

Queried whether the U.S. government had interfered when the hostages were about to be released, Reagan said, "That is absolutely not true, but let me point something out. Terry Anderson — in that terrible confinement at the hands of those barbarians — any information he has, has to have come from there; there is no contact with the outside world."

Reagan insisted that his administration has been "doing everything we can for the release of the hostages, and the very simple answer is, for those people, to let them go."

"There has never been any interference, nor have we ever been negotiating any more than we would with any other kind of a kidnapper on a ransom type of basis," he said.

When asked whether he thought the kidnappers were trying to influence the outcome of the U.S. presidential election, he said,

"You'd have to ask them; I can't fathom their minds."

Reagan then went on to dispute the charge on the tape that Bush was involved in negotiations in the sale of arms to Iran and in resolving the 1985 Middle East hijacking of a TWA jet. Navy diver Robert Stethem was killed by the hijackers during that ordeal.

"Nor was I, because we were never doing anything of that kind," Reagan replied.

Asked again if Bush had played a role in negotiations for the release of the TWA hostages, Reagan launched into a spirited defense of his vice president, saying "George has been a part of everything we've accomplished. I've always felt that a vice president should be an executive vice president, as in a corporation, and not somebody sitting over on the sidelines waiting for me to have a relapse."

Reagan went on: "He's been a part of that, but in a constructive way, and that's why he's my choice in this coming election."

New UI emergency loan policy needs clarification, students say

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

Policy revisions effective Feb. 1 mean students with unpaid U-bills will no longer receive full cash awards from emergency student loans.

A change announced Monday in the UI Office of Student Financial Aid procedure applies all emergency student loans toward unpaid U-bills and credits any remaining funds to the student's university account.

Financial aid officials said the changes represent a way to streamline the short-term loan dispersal procedure, but student government leaders believe there is a need for formal guidelines addressing students with emergency cash needs.

Students may receive one emergency student loan per semester for a maximum $250 award. Currently, financial aid personnel distribute and review applications before giving eligible students vouchers redeemable for cash at the UI Business Office, Jessup from DI staff reports

UCLA psychology professor to visit UI

Ida Beam Distinguished Visiting Professor Shelley E. Taylor, of the department of psychology at the University of California at Los Angeles, will be featured at a lecture and colloquium on the UI campus this week.

Taylor will speak on "Illusions, Coping and Mental Health" at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Van Allen Hall, Lecture Room 2.

Taylor will also be featured at a colloquium at 4 p.m. Thursday in Spence Laboratories of Psychology, Room 101. The topic of the colloquium is "Social Comparison Processes under Threat."

The UI Department of Psychology will sponsor Taylor's visit.

District 54 candidates to meet in debate

The candidates battling for the District 54 seat in the Iowa House of Representatives, Republican Steve Russell and Democratic incumbent Bob Dvorsky, will meet tomorrow in a debate. Dvorsky agreed to Russell's invitation to a debate, with the stipulation that it be held somewhere in Coralville.

The debate, which is sponsored by the UI Student Senate, will take place 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Council Chamber of the Coralville City Hall. The public is invited to attend.

Sorority sisterhood topic of discussion

"Sorority women: A rich tradition of sisterhood" is the topic of a brown-bag lunch and discussion, which will be held from 12:10 p.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesday at the Women's Resource and Action Center, 130 N. Madison St.

The discussion will be facilitated by Angela Zoellner, president of the UI Panhellenic Council, and Mary Peterson of the Office of Campus Programs.

For more information, call 335-1486.

Bereavement support available to teens

In an effort to provide a bereavement support group for local teenagers, the Iowa City Hospice will coordinate a series of support meetings during the months of November and December.

Teen-agers aged 15 to 18 who have experienced the loss of someone significant in their lives — such as a family member or friend — are invited to attend any of the four meetings. The meetings and topics scheduled are:

- Nov. 2: Sharing Stories
- Nov. 9: Grief and Grieving
- Nov. 30: Memories and Feelings
- Dec. 7: Suicide

Each session will meet from 8 to 9:15 p.m. at the Hospice House, 613 E. Bloomington St. To register or obtain further information, call Office Coordinator Ginger Nowak at 351-5665.

Hospice has also scheduled bereavement support sessions for children in the age groups of 6 to 10 years and 11 to 14 years.

County medical society to meet Wednesday

The November meeting of the Johnson County Medical Society will be held Wednesday at the Highlander Inn and Supper Club, Highway 1 and I-80.

The meeting's program will begin with dinner at 6 p.m. and will be followed by a speech by the Rex Montgomery, Ph.D., D.S.C. and associate dean for academic affairs of the UI College of Medicine. He will speak on "Health Care Professions in the Soviet Union."

For more information regarding this or any aspect of the Johnson County Medical Society, call Executive Secretary Maxine Thornton at 338-7862.

Local veterans group fights healthcare cuts

By Matt Devine
The Daily Iowan

A local veteran's group is sponsoring a petition drive to combat a recent Veterans Administration mandate that slashed healthcare benefits to eastern Iowa war veterans.

The Washington-based Veterans Administration accumulated an estimated $1 billion deficit and recently ordered healthcare cutbacks among its 172 nationwide hospitals in an effort to recoup the shortfall.

The move disqualifies at least 2,600 area veterans for benefits.

Officials attribute the VA deficit to congressional dollar allocations that have not kept up with rising cost of health care.

In the first of a series of three annual cutbacks, the VA siphoned $400,000 from the Iowa City Veterans Administration Medical Center's discretionary healthcare budget, dollars reserved to fund residual treatment for veterans uninjured in combat. The order mandated cuts in hospital's discretionary workload, calling for a 1.5-percent reduction in inpatient care and an 8.3-percent drop-off in outpatient services.

"If we don't meet those percentages, we get penalized again by repeated cuts. So there's a real incentive," said Annie Tuttle, staff assistant for community relations at the Iowa City VA Hospital,

"If we don't meet those percentages, we get penalized again by repeated cuts." — Annie Tuttle, staff assistant for community relations at the Iowa City VA Hospital

Highway 6 West.

Immune from the cuts are veterans who fall below income levels fixed at $18,000 for outpatients and $26,000 for inpatients in the discretionary category. Non-discretionary treatment — provided for veterans with war-connected disabilities — was also unaffected by the measure.

Local veterans groups are mobilizing protest efforts aimed at area congressmen, petitioning them to pry loose federal dollars to nullify the VA deficit, rather than abandon veterans who have relied on VA health care for years.

"I don't think it's right," said Ken Kinyon, a 66-year-old veteran of World War II and a member of the Iowa City Veterans of Foreign Wars. "We went and served our country when our country needed us, now they're leaving us out in the cold," he said.

The VFW is sponsoring a statewide petition against the cuts, Kinyon said.

Hospital data reveal that 61 percent of veterans above the $26,000 income cap do not have health insurance, Tuttle said. And with the average age of veterans reported at 62 years old, those counting on VA treatment will be forced to apply for health insurance, a worrisome option for high-risk patients with poor health records.

"It's very hard on us to have to turn out a patient we've serviced for years and tell them we can't service them anymore," Tuttle said.

The Iowa City VA Hospital will not turn away ineligible patients who need emergency treatment for a life-threatening affliction, Tuttle said. Inpatients will be evaluated and stabilized prior to release.

"We're not going to jeopardize a patient's health because of their category," Tuttle said. "We need to make sure we're making the right medical determination."

Hospital officials estimate 100 inpatients and 2,500 outpatients will be cut from the hospital rolls before the end of the fiscal year. Twenty-six outpatients have already been discharged, and more will be turned out this week.

Radio and camera equipment worth more than $1,550 was reported stolen Monday from the Iowa City Press-Citizen, 319 E. Washington St., according to police reports.

Items reported missing include two radio scanners, two hand-held radios, an automatic camera and a micro-cassette recorder, according to the report.

The theft occurred between 11 a.m. Saturday and 1 p.m. Sunday, according to the report.

Report: A Coralville man was taken to the Johnson County Sheriff's office Monday on a $5,000 warrant, according to police reports.

Curtis Heath, 29, 710 20th Ave., Apt. 8, Coralville, was taken to the sheriff's office on warrant for parole violation, according to the report.

Courts

The Daily Iowan

An Iowa City woman was charged with child endangerment Saturday for allegedly failing to provide the necessary supervision for her 7-year-old son, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Kathleen Kay Gaeta, 26, of Towncrest Mobile Home Court, allegedly left her son home alone. The child told police he woke up and found no one home, according to court records.

An Iowa City resident reported the lost child to police early Saturday and said he was running on Muscatine Avenue and crying, according to court records.

The police found the boy with a city resident, who had given the child his coat to wear, since the child was wearing only a T-shirt in 27-degree weather, according to court records.

The boy told police he was checking local businesses for his mother. Police later called in the mother's boyfriend, who told police the mother had been home when he left for work at about midnight, according to court records.

Gaeta later allegedly went to the police department and had alcohol on her breath, according to court records.

The child was turned over to the Iowa Department of Human Services, according to court records.

Gaeta was placed in the custody of the 6th Judicial District Department of Corrections. A preliminary hearing is set for Nov. 17, according to court records.

Report: A man was charged Sunday at 1:05 a.m. with keeping a disorderly house, according to police reports.

Daniel J. Olsem, 22, address unavailable, was charged following a loud party at 731 E. Burlington St., according to police reports.

Report: Vandalism to political signs at 30 S. Governor St. was reported Monday, according to police reports.

A large, hand-made Dukakis political sign valued at $15 was kicked to pieces, according to the report.

Nagle signs were also destroyed, according to the report.

Report: An Iowa City woman reported that she was struck and hit by a bicyclist Sunday at Scott Boulevard north of Muscatine Avenue, according to police reports.

The biker refused to leave his name, according to the report.

Report: An Iowa City woman reported Sunday that a man knocked on her apartment door several times, according to police reports.

A neighbor said large, black man knocked at the woman's door and covered the peep hole at the same time, according to the report.

The woman said she has also had several past problems with someone leaving her notes and making crank telephone calls, according to the report.

A Coralville man was charged with assault causing injury Monday for allegedly injuring a woman who lives with him at their residence on Seventh Street, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Joseph Dean Sitzes, 35, of 301 Seventh St., allegedly threw the woman's purse at her during an argument. The victim allegedly left and went to a friend's house where she reported the incident to police, according to court records.

The woman sustained a cut above her forehead. Sitzes allegedly admitted to police that he had hit her with the purse, according to court records.

Bail is set at $1,500. A preliminary hearing is set for Nov. 9, according to court records.

A University Heights man was charged with assault causing injury Sunday for allegedly striking his wife at a local bowling alley, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Eugene Franz Alvis, 26, of 310 Grandview Court Apts., allegedly struck his wife in the back at Colonial Bowling Lanes, Highway 218 S., according to court records.

Alvis was released from custody on his own recognizance. He was ordered not to have any contact with the victim. A preliminary hearing is set for Nov. 17, according to court records.

Local drug serves U.

By Annette Segreto
Special to The Daily Iowan

The internationally renowned Iowa Drug Information Service located at the UI, serves the health needs of doctors and pharmacists in all 50 states and in 42 countries worldwide.

Since it began in 1965, the IDIS has created a data base of information that currently includes more than 246,000 articles on disease and drug therapy. This information service is available to paying subscribers on the microfiche Drug Literature Microfilm File and on-line computer service.

Kumar Mehta, the IDIS market manager, said the purpose of the information retrieval system is to keep practitioners informed of current drug and disease literature.

"It's one of the most prestigious drug information systems in the world," Mehta said. "It's very effective because it's an entirely self-contained library."

Mehta said another advantage of the IDIS is that the information is continually updated.

"Our system is among the most current retrieval systems available, with only a three-month lag time in indexing articles," he said.

Colder winters

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP) — Benefiting from unusually mild winters, Iowans spent nearly $1.1 billion less for energy in 1987 than the previous year, according to the state Department of Natural Resources.

But officials warned that colder weather predicted for the coming winter, which could increase future heating bills.

The DNR figured Iowa's energy bill at $4,098,869,000 last year compared with $5,170,837,000 in 1986. Those costs entail not only heating and air conditioning, but also charges for petroleum and other fuels used by industry and for transportation.

Phil Svano, the DNR's energy bureau chief, said price reductions in petroleum and natural gas, as well as conservation and efficiency improvements were factors in the $1.1 billion drop, in addition to mild winter weather.

Svano said saving energy has been important in reviving Iowa's economy.

7 UI students apply for Rhodes

By Stephen Humble
The Daily Iowan

Seven UI students have taken the first step in the regional competition for four Rhodes Scholarships.

The seven UI applicants, Christopher Brochu, John Eilers, Beth Godwin, Renee Pedersen, Menah Pratt, Mary Snyder and Richard Wayman, met the Oct. 3 deadline for scholarship applications and were interviewed by a five-member review board consisting of UI faculty members.

Following the interview process, the review board sent letters of support to the state committee in Des Moines. On Dec. 7, the committee will select two Iowa winners to move on to the regional competition in Minneapolis on Dec. 10.

At the regional competition, four Rhodes Scholars are chosen from a field of 12 candidates from six different states.

The Rhodes Scholarship was initiated in 1903 in the last will and testament of Cecil J. Rhodes, a British diamond entrepreneur. Rhodes, who died in 1902, dreamed of bettering mankind through the diffusion of leaders motivated to serving their contemporaries. Rhodes also hoped to broaden their exposure to cultures different from their own.

The Rhodes Scholarship Program pioneered the path of international education and now brings outstanding students from 18 countries and five continents to the University of Oxford in England.

Rhodes Scholars are appointed for two years of study at the University of Oxford, with the possibility of renewal for a third year. All educational costs are paid on the scholars' behalf by the Rhodes Trustees. Each scholar also receives a maintenance allowance adequate to meet necessary expenses for term time and vacations.

Associate Director of the UI Honors Program Sandra Barkan said she was happy with the number of women and minority students that have applied this year.

Barkan said students at the UI are sometimes too modest and that many students who are qualified for the scholarship never apply.

"It's not too early for freshmen and sophomores to start thinking about applying," Barkan said.

Jeffery McKinney was the UI's last Rhodes Scholar in 1985. McKinney is now attending the UI Medical School.

McKinney said it can be difficult seeing people from his graduating class at the UI already finished with medical school and treating patients but added that the Oxford experience was worth the time commitment.

The IDIS staff reviews 160 biomedical journals every month

"It's one of the most prestigious drug information systems in the world." — Kumar Mehta, IDIS marketing manager for articles dealing with drug therapy in humans. These are indexed by staff pharmacists according to drug, disease, title and author. A series of numbers, known as descriptors, are used to index specific information within an article.

The IDIS gives physicians and pharmacists the opportunity to cross-reference information about specific patient needs for more precise medical care, Mehta said.

"If a physician wants to know about a new drug therapy for a diabetes patient, but that patient also has high blood pressure, the doctor can go to his pharmacist who can access IDIS information on articles or studies of such a case," Mehta said. "This way, the practitioner can determine if a diabetes drug is compatible with the patient's high blood pressure medication."

IDIS began as an outgrowth of the UI College of Pharmacy with a grant from the U.S. Public Health Service. When grant funding ceased, hospitals that used the experimental system were willing to subscribe to the service.

IDIS is now completely subsidized by fees from subscribers. Fees for the Drug Literature Microfilm File are about $1,200 annually. The on-line computer information service is currently available to healthcare professionals and institutions through vendors in Japan and Switzerland and will soon be available through vendors in the United States.

According to Mehta, the international market of the system is growing faster than the domestic market. He said growth has been especially fast in Third World countries.

Mehta said the objective of IDIS is to provide improved health care throughout the world by providing current information on drug therapy.

"It's a good, fast-growing business, and it serves a growing need in health care," he said.

Colder winter may increase bills

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP)—Benefiting from unusually mild winters, Iowans spent nearly $1.1 billion less for energy in 1987 than the previous year, according to the state Department of Natural Resources.

But officials warned that colder weather predicted for the coming winter, which could increase future heating bills.

The DNR figured Iowa's energy bill at $4,098,869,000 last year, compared with $5,170,837,000 in 1986. Those costs entail not only heating and air conditioning, but also charges for petroleum and other fuels used by industry and for transportation.

Phil Svano, the DNR's energy bureau chief, said price reductions in petroleum and natural gas as well as conservation and efficiency improvements were factors in the $1.1 billion drop, in addition to mild winter weather.

Svano said saving energy has been important in reviving Iowa's economy.

"A strong correlation has occurred between the economic peaks and valleys of Iowa's economy and the energy shocks of the past 15 years," he said, noting that recessions followed energy shocks of 1973-74 and 1978-80.

"We estimated that farmers alone are saving $150 million annually on energy costs since the beginning of price declines in 1986."

While the unit price of energy may have come down or stabilized, more energy may have to be consumed this winter to stay warm. State Climatologist Harry Hillaker said the November through January outlook is for colder-than-normal temperatures.

Hillaker said experts are pointing to the absence of El Nino, a Pacific equatorial wind that not only influences Pacific rim weather, but also has a moderating effect on Midwest winters. He said the remnants of El Nino disappeared last spring.

How much colder? Slightly below normal, responded Hillaker. Normal, he said, means about 17 days when the temperature drops to zero or below in a location such as Cedar Rapids and 29 days of zero or below for Decorah.

However, there is an average of only one day a year in Iowa that the high temperature fails to rise above zero.

Hillaker also is forecasting slightly above normal precipitation for Iowa this winter. Normal snowfall for Iowa City and Cedar Rapids is 34.5 inches; for Decorah it's 37.4 inches.

Svano said efficiency and energy conservation are more important for economies in states such as Iowa, which imports 98 percent of its energy from other states.

"Energy efficiency and conservation directly reduce the outflow of money spent for energy," he said, meaning more dollars can be circulated in Iowa's economy.

The Iowa Legislature is requiring the DNR to develop an energy management plan by 1990. The plan is to reflect the health and economic welfare of the state as well as reliability and environmental concerns.

Shirking safety

It's getting more and more difficult to remember the last time the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency actually did something to protect the environment. Instead, as it has done consistently throughout the eight years of the Reagan administration, the EPA continues to implement policies which threaten nature and endanger human lives.

Most recently, the EPA announced that it will allow some carcinogenic pesticides to be used on food products. Rather than observing the current ban on the use of cancer-causing agents, the EPA now will evaluate each carcinogenic pesticide on a risk-benefit basis. Those pesticides it deems "safe" will be cleared for use, even if they are known to cause cancer.

Perhaps the seriousness of this decision — which is being called the "negligible risk approach" to regulation — is lost on those who still cling to the belief that the U.S. government would never knowingly permit any significant harm to come to its citizens. For others, tempered by a string of environmental disasters from illegal dioxin dumping in Love Canal to the deliberate release of thousands of tons of radioactive waste in Frenald, Ohio, the government's definition of negligible risk is little comfort.

According to the EPA, the decision to allow carcinogenic pesticide use will establish "greater consistency" in regulation. The move toward consistency, in place of the present patchwork of statutes, is reasonable, but apparently the notion of strengthening all the nation's environmental laws rather than gutting them did not occur to the agency.

The effect of the EPA's hands-off approach to this and other problems may not be realized for some time to come, but it is clear that abuse of the environment and the use of deadly poisons will one day directly impact the quality of human life. Seen in this long-term view, the EPA's abdication of its watchdog responsibilities is infuriating and frightening.

Skewed statistics

Americans were shocked several weeks ago when reports of gross safety and health violations at the Savannah nuclear plant in South Carolina were brought to light detailing illegalities that went on for nearly two decades.

What's truly shocking is not how little we know about the safety and hazards of nuclear power plants and weapons factories, but rather, how much. We know virtually nothing about the real dangers many plants pose — witness Savannah, which was allowed to operate for two decades, decades in which frighteningly blatant violations occurred, persisted and were ignored.

One of the main reasons such violations and safety problems continue can be summed up in one word — government. What's generally bad for the nuclear plants found to be in violation of established guidelines and inspection policies is also inherently bad for the federal government.

This is why it's hardly surprising that for years the Department of Energy has denied private and independent research firms the right to examine workers' health records, death records and records indicating what type of job the deceased performed in his or her nuclear workplaces.

Instead of objective independent studies, data gathering and recommendations, the task of evaluating nuclear problems and violations is left strictly in the hands of government researchers. Until independent firms are allowed access to workers' health records under the Freedom of Information Act, the reports the general public receives will continue to be unnaturally glowing.

Whom to blame

A recent Newsweek poll found that 64 percent of those polled believed that this year's presidential campaign is more negative than campaigns of the past. By a greater than two to one margin, the respondents said that better candidates should have been selected. Who is responsible for this perception of a very negative campaign?

Last May, campaign aids for Vice President Bush assembled 30 Democrats who had voted for Reagan in 1984. These voters were treated to an evening of information concerning the Massachusetts prison furlough program, Gov. Dukakis' veto of legislation requiring the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools, the mess in Boston Harbor and other tidbits meant to produce a negative image of Dukakis. The experiment worked. All 30 voters initially had been Dukakis supporters — but only 15 Dukakis supporters were left by the end of the evening.

If Bush's negative campaigning had hurt his standing in the polls, certainly the mud-slinging would have stopped. Instead, Bush learned that negative campaigning was working very well for him. So well, in fact, that Dukakis has recently begun a series of anti-Bush ads. The voters, not the candidates, made the judgment that negative campaigning is effective.

The American public's dissatisfaction with the candidates and their campaigns cannot be blamed on Dukakis, Bush or their aides. We selected the two nominees through our primaries and caucuses — if they are mushy on the important issues, that is probably what is necessary to be nominated. If a candidate running a mud-slinging campaign rises in the polls, then that is ultimately our fault, also.

Issue-avoiding, dirty-fighting candidates will continue to exist as long as such tactics work for them. We only get what we ask for — and deserve.

Suggestions for inspiring voters

Chris Lamb

If they had known that, they probably would've given the country back to the British.

Every four years political pundits give their reasons why the presidential election doesn't draw a larger turnout. To quote Mark Twain, who almost once said, "Everybody talks about low voter turnout but nobody does anything about it."

Until now. If we give voters more of a reason to vote, more will vote, right? Here are a few ideas of what I have in mind:

• Between the time someone announces their candidacy and Election Day, you can just about make coal. There will henceforth be no media coverage of a presidential campaign before a specified time, which will come about 15 minutes before the Iowa caucuses.

• As it now stands, there is too much weight put on the early Iowa caucuses and the New Hampshire primary. It doesn't take long before both parties decide on their candidate so the caucuses and primaries late in the campaign are about as functional as a catcher's mitt to the Venus De Milo. This could be rectified by having all the primaries in one week. We already have National Grits Week, National Toe Jam Week, and National Punch An Amway Salesman Week, why not a National Primary Week?

• Nobody likes negative campaigning but everybody does it. Why not discourage it by penalizing candidates for unsportsmanlike conduct like you would football and hockey players? Who would decide the severity of the punishment? It would have to be someone whose reputation is above reproach, someone whose word is revered by Democrats and Republicans. There can be just one person for this job: Judge Joseph Wapner of "The People's Court." And as usual, the judge's decision would be final.

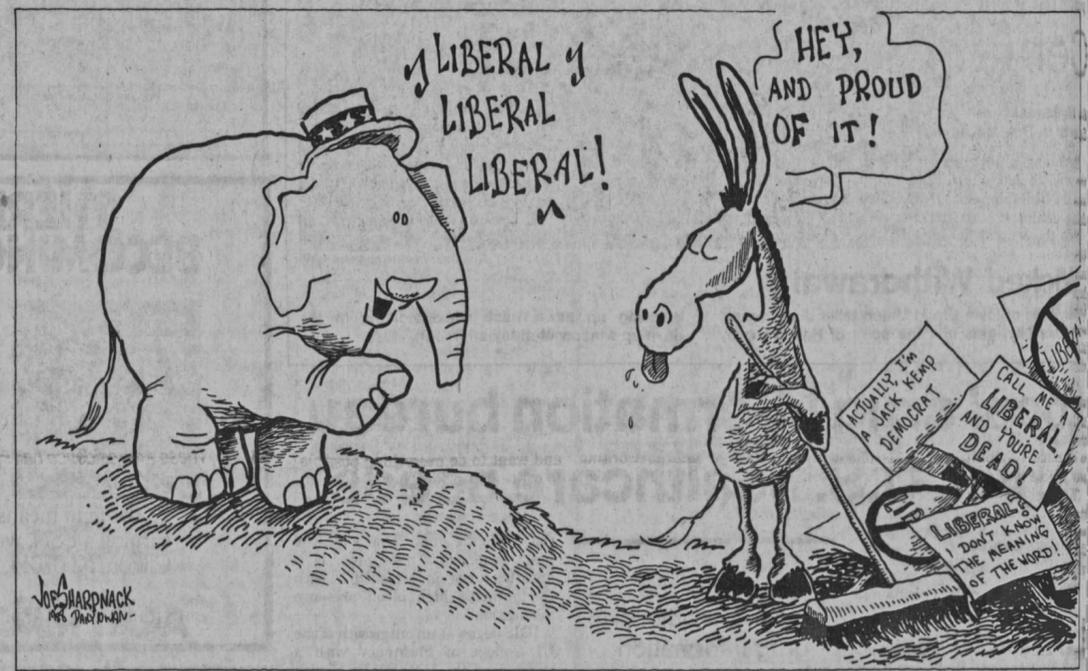

• It's hard to get too excited about any of the candidates because we can't really identify with them. They're not even the kind of people we want to identify with. To run for president, you have to be rich, bland and look like you're dressed by your mother. If we lowered the cap on campaign spending to say $7, we could open up the campaign process to the people who really should be running the country: bartenders, aerobics instructors and columnists.

• Bar the Electoral College. How can you respect the decision of any college that doesn't even have a football team, a fight song or a marching band (or at least a pep band)? In the future we will elect presidents directly: If a candidate wins 25 percent of a state's vote, he will get 25 percent of the state's electoral vote, and so on. And the Electoral College will be disbanded until it gets a football team, a fight song and a marching band (or at least a pep band).

• And finally, it would help voters turnout if we got something besides George Bush and Michael Dukakis for our efforts: maybe a coupon worth $2 off on a large pizza or a free car wash. Vote more times and collect more coupons.

Reagan legacy is income disparity

Greg Zieren

As the last insults to the intelligence of the American voter fade into oblivion after November 8, the reckoning will continue on the issues not addressed during the course of the campaign. Time has run out on genuine debate, as opposed to the media-staged events and test-marketed answers of 1988. According to whichever columnist you read, the lack of real discussion is most regrettable on the subjects of the budget deficit, the persistent trade imbalance, ethics in government, and the problems of the homeless.

Certainly one of the lasting legacies of the Reagan Era has barely been mentioned, and then only obliquely. Michael Dukakis has condemned tax policies which favor the rich but is constrained by Mondale's 1984 experience from saying much more. The issue that Dukakis doesn't seem to grasp, nor George Bush care to acknowledge, amounts to this administration's dirtiest secret. Ronald Reagan has presided over the greatest redistribution of income from the poor and middle classes to the rich since the Republican administrations of the 1920s.

The economic policies of this administration, especially the 1981 tax cuts both for individuals and corporations, and the cuts in federal expenditures for social programs, gave the trend its greatest boost. The inequitable results of across-the-board tax cuts did not go unnoticed at the time. Donald Kaul pithily noted that the Reagan tax and spending cuts amounted to giving money to the rich to make them work harder and taking money away from the poor to make them work harder. The goal of the 1981 program was to restore the American economy to health by supply-side remedies after the economic revenges of the 1970s: inflation, rising oil prices, double-digit interest rates and slow growth in real earnings.

What mattered in the summer of 1981 was the string of legislative victories the new President scored in economic policy, a record unmatched in the 20th century since the days of FDR in the 1930s or LBJ's Great Society heyday of 1964-65. The legislation was made up of three major bills designed by supply-side architects to reduce government's share of the gross national product. The Gram-Latta spending cuts lopped $30 billion off federal spending by eliminating or reducing appropriations for programs like food stamps, housing and mass transit subsidies, the school lunch program, urban development grants and the like. While critics claimed that Gram-Latta amounted to dismantling the welfare state, the Reagan Administration insisted that the "safety net" was intact for the deserving poor. The net impact on the federal budget, in any event, was minimal because the Gram-Latta cutbacks were soon overshadowed by rapid increases in appropriations for the Pentagon.

The second bill, the Accelerated Cost Recovery System, speeded up the rate at which corporations could depreciate assets and thus pay less in federal corporate taxation. ACRS also created a system of tax credits which could be traded or sold to stimulate investment and productivity gains. Much of ACRS was scrapped in the 1986 tax reform act when opponents showed that the system of tax credits for major corporations failed to deliver what its advocates in 1981 promised: namely, rapid increases in corporate investment in capital goods and resulting productivity gains. On average, corporations that had made the least use of the tax credit system scored the greatest gains in productivity and employment. ACRS reduced corporate taxation to its lowest level since the 1920s, a policy also reversed by the 1986 reforms.

Finally, and most important, the centerpiece of the economic legislation was the Kemp-Roth tax cut. Kemp-Roth reduced taxes for individuals in three phased-in cuts of 5 percent the first year and 10 percent the succeeding two years. The problem with across-the-board cuts is grounded in simple arithmetic; the percentages affect rich and poor equally but the benefits, of course, accrue to the highest earners. In fact, the Gram-Latta cuts in social spending accentuated the differential. A family of four just above the poverty level in 1981 earning $10,000 per year lost 1 percent of its income after the tax cut; a family of four earning $350,000 a year gained 9 percent on its income.

The most revealing examination of Reagan White House economic policy in the heady days of 1981 comes from the pen of David Stockman, then head of the Office of Management and the Budget and a key player in pushing both Kemp-Roth and Gramm-Latta through Congress. A now repentant Stockman admitted in his 1986 book, The Triumph of Politics, that the economic projections showed out-of-control deficits for the foreseeable future if Reagan pursued corporate and individual tax cuts while simultaneously sponsoring the largest peacetime increases in military spending in U.S. history. In other words, no crystal ball was necessary to predict cumulative deficits for the Reagan years nearing the $1.5 billion mark; all the President's pious intoning for balanced budget amendments and denunciation of free-spending Democrats in Congress is and was little more than cant and hypocrisy.

As if the deficits weren't bad enough in themselves, the interest paid by the federal government on its debts winds up disproportionately in the hands of higher income earners as well. Even conservative columnist George Will recently admitted that income from interest, dividends and rent is growing five times as fast as income from wages and salaries: just like the 1920s again. From the standpoint of the rich, the game of the Reagan Era is played heads I win, tails you lose. They gain income both from the tax cuts and from the interest paid to finance the federal deficits which the tax cuts and military build-up created.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, the bottom 20 percent of all American families saw their share of the earnings pie decline from 5.3 percent in 1979 to 4.8 percent in 1986. The next lowest 20 percent, or quintile, witnessed a similar decline in the same years: from 11.6 percent to 10.8 percent. This means that the bottom 40 percent, all those families of four earning $24,000 a year or less, earned just 15.4 percent of total family income. In contrast, the top 20 percent (over $50,000) saw their share increase from 41.6 in 1979 to 43.7 percent in 1986. The share of the top 5 percent now exceeds that of the bottom 40 percent and is only slightly lower in 1986 than they were in 1979.

The economic record of the Reagan Era gives Republicans something to cheer about, depending on how you look at the figures. Total family income is up, productivity has scored modest gains lately, the GNP keeps growing despite economists' recurrent fears of an imminent recession. This "rising tide," however, does not lift all boats equally, to use a metaphor popular in 1981. The real secret of the Reagan Era is Robin Hood in reverse — he has taken from the poor to give to the rich.

Two local Duds 'N Suds operations continue to do a booming business despite the fact that their parent organization has filed for bankruptcy.

On April 7, 1988, Duds 'N Suds national chain of Laundromats with major offices in Ames, filed protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy law.

The move will not affect the local franchises, the local owners said.

"We're doing even better this year than we have in the past few years," said Ed Sayre, owner of Iowa City Duds 'N Suds, 5 Stur Drive.

Philip G. Akin, the entrepreneur who started his laundry business in 1983, wanted to spread a revolutionary concept in Laundromats, Sayre said. Akin marketed a Laundromat that would be clean, comfortable and always have attendant on duty.

"His idea was obviously real good because everyone is now trying to copy it," Sayre said. "I wanted to be as big a franchisee as McDonald's are. People need to go to a laundromat twice a day, but unfortunately they don't need to do laundry that often."

Returning injured birds of prey to the wild is just one of the many jobs the UI Raptor Center has been doing for almost 30 years.

Now the center's lease with the U.S. Corps of Engineers is about to run out, and center officials are hopeful the lease for 480 acres of Lake Macbride will be renewed according to Warren Slebos, associate director of UI Recreation Services.

The Raptor Center is currently working with the UI on a proposal to the Corps of Engineers to extend the lease for 25 more years in order to continue rehabilitating birds of prey, Slebos said.

"We receive many birds of prey that have been injured," Slebos said. "It is our job to rehabilitate these birds and return them to the wild."

Ryan added there has been more than $100,000 in defaults of emergency loans over the last few years. The interest-free loans are to be paid at the end of the semester in which they were borrowed.

Ryan said students may wait three to five days to receive cash under the new system, which may deter some students who do not need the money from applying.

It was the third videotaped message from Anderson released by the Islamic Jihad, which kidnapped Anderson on March 1, 1985. He is the longest-held of the 14 foreign hostages. Nine are Americans.

The previous two messages were released Oct. 3, 1986, and Dec. 2, 1987.

In addition to Anderson, Islamic Jihad holds Thomas Sutherland, 56, of Fort Collins, Colo. He was acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut when he was kidnapped June 1, 1985.

Islamic Jihad has freed three American hostages in the last three years — the Rev. Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian minister; Martin Lawrence Jenco, a Roman Catholic priest; and David Jacobsen, former director of the American University Hospital in Beirut. Jacobsen's release on Nov. 2, 1988, was linked to the U.S. arms sale to Iran.

"Our problem could have been solved long ago without such complications as arms deals," Anderson said in his message.

Two local Duds 'N Suds operations continue to do a booming business despite the fact that their parent organization has filed for bankruptcy.

On April 7, 1988, Duds 'N Suds, a national chain of Laundromats, with major offices in Ames, filed for protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy law.

The move will not affect the two local franchises, the local owners said.

"We're doing even better this year than we have in the past four years," said Ed Sayre, owner of the Iowa City Duds 'N Suds, 5 Sturgis Drive.

Philip G. Akin, the entrepreneur who started his laundry business in 1983, wanted to spread a revolutionary concept in Laundromats, Sayre said. Akin marketed a Laundromat that would be clean and comfortable and always have an attendant on duty.

"His idea was obviously really good because everyone is now trying to copy it," Sayre said. "He wanted to be as big a franchise as McDonald's are. People need to eat twice a day, but unfortunately they don't need to do laundry that often."

Sayre was the seventh person to purchase a franchise. He acquired the franchise five years ago while Duds 'N Suds was still young.

At that time, Akins was mostly granting franchises to people he knew, Sayre said. He said his franchise only rents the name and logo from Duds 'N Suds.

"We were only the seventh franchise so the corporation pretty much lets us do as we want," Sayre said.

He said the bankruptcy won't affect his laundromat because each franchise is privately owned.

He added during the bankruptcy hearing on Nov. 3, he expects the franchise to come out of Chapter 11 bankruptcy. InvestAmerica Venture Group, a current Duds 'N Suds investor located in Cedar Rapids, will take over the franchise's management, and Akins and his father will then work for InvestAmerica Venture.

"I talked to Akins about 10 days ago, and that is the picture he gave me," Sayre said. "I expect InvestAmerica would be happy to have the Duds 'N Suds name to stay the same."

Kris Westphal, owner of the Coralville Duds 'N Suds, 2025 2 St., Coralville, said her store serves about 60 to 70 people a day and she doesn't expect the number to change in the future.

"Each store is privately owned," Westphal said. "The problem with the franchise is that it grew too big too fast. (Akins) got too involved with high-society people."

According to an Oct. 23 Des Moines Register article, "Duds 'N Suds began unraveling after the arrival of its first deep-pocketed investor, A.E. 'Gene' Rouse, the millionaire co-inventor of the Water Pik, an oral hygiene appliance."

"Investors, lawyers and franchises said Rouse took charge of Duds 'N Suds, began raising millions of dollars in equity through private stock placements with his wealthy friends and set the company on a course of supercharged growth it was ill equipped to handle," according to the Register article.

Both Sayre and Westphal agree when Rouse began working with the corporation it was the beginning of the end.

"The corporation just grew too big too fast after he invested," Westphal said. "He brought a billionaire mentality to a business that should have stayed smaller for awhile."

Sayre said in addition to feeling pressure from Rouse, Akin's lawyers and other investors also pressured him into expanding too fast.

"If they would have stayed small for a year or two I think they would have done a lot better," Sayre said. "This (bankruptcy) isn't any big, unique story. It happens a lot with businesses that expand too fast."

Nagle-Redfern

these special interest groups and letting them buy his vote in Congress, and Nagle has not defended himself well on this issue.

The Tobacco Institute Political Action Committee and cigarette giant Philip Morris Co. both donated funds to Nagle's campaign. He was one of only four congressmen to vote last spring against a ban on smoking on short airline flights. The measure passed overwhelmingly.

It's also hard to explain Nagle's vote for the Textile Apparel Bill, which created trade barriers for textiles and could potentially invite retaliation against Iowa farm products. Nagle was the only Iowa congressman to vote for this legislation.

One week after Nagle's vote, he was the recipient of a $500 donation from the American Textile Industry Council.

But although Redfern found Nagle's weakest spot on which to campaign, there's a saying about people in glass houses he should bone up on. Redfern wasn't too careful with how he played his own cards in the matter.

"I will accept up to, but no more than, 50 percent of my campaign funds from PACs," Redfern has stated. This limitation is an effort to keep the majority of his donations from private individuals. But if you're going to start setting numerical limits, a question for Redfern might be: if 51 percent constitutes a majority and means selling out to special interest groups, why is 1 percent less an acceptable amount?

Ethics in government is always a commendable issue on which to campaign, and Redfern knows this. His corrupted incumbent versus honest-Abe challenger characterization of the race has been nicely complemented by Nagle's lack of conviction for upholding ethics in government.

Dave Nagle

Nagle voted twice against investigations of fellow congress persons suspected of violating ethics standards and is a good friend of embattled Speaker of the House Jim Wright, who is currently being investigated on a myriad of ethics violations.

Appearances sometimes threaten to obscure the issues in campaigns, and Nagle has had some close calls in this area. Certainly he didn't help his case with UI students when he told some of them to "go to hell" if they didn't like his views. And his response of "Hey, I'm a smoker" when asked about the tobacco industry PAC money didn't hold much water.

But if Nagle has let down his guard at times, he has still stood solidly on his views throughout the campaign — while just the opposite can be said about Redfern. He has kept up a good appearance, but his stand on the issues has taken a back seat to his criticism of Nagle.

In two years, Nagle has built a reputation in Congress as someone who brings money into the 3rd District — federal funding was up 16 percent in 1987 — and as a strong advocate of educational funding.

Nagle has also been endorsed by several state organizations, spanning a range of interests from education to agriculture to the environment.

Redfern knows Nagle's record, his strengths as well as his weaknesses. He chose to wage a campaign based on Nagle's sore spots rather than standing on his own credentials and views he has to offer the people of the 3rd District.

Quite possibly, the result of Redfern's campaign tactics is just becoming apparent at this late date. Going into the election, political observers are still giving Nagle the edge — a prediction on which the race began and is now ending.

Center cares for birds of prey

Returning injured birds of prey to the wild is just one of the many jobs the UI Raptor Center has been doing for almost 30 years.

Now the center's lease with the U.S. Corps of Engineers is about to run out, and center officials are hopeful the lease for 480 acres by Lake Macbride will be renewed, according to Warren Slebos, associate director of UI Recreation Services.

The Raptor Center is currently working with the UI on a proposal to the Corps of Engineers to extend the lease for 25 more years in order to continue rehabilitating birds of prey, Slebos said.

"We receive many birds of prey that have been injured," Slebos said. "It is our job to rehabilitate these birds and return them to the wild."

"Fall and spring are the busiest times of the year because of the many birds migrating," he said. "Most injured birds of prey are found on the side of the road and have been injured by cars or power lines."

The center keeps birds that are maimed as permanent residents, using them for environmental-education programs.

"We normally see between 50 and 60 school groups a year along with many scout groups," Slebos said.

The center also sponsors science day camps, leadership training courses and many other team-solving programs.

Burke Thayer, the center's naturalist, heads most of these courses with the help of interns working through student teaching programs from the UI and other area colleges and universities.

"We keep many birds on display to serve as educational tools," Slebos said. "In order to continue these programs, it is essential we receive an extension on the lease in order to do more long-range planning."

Hayrack rides, sleigh rides, cross country skiing and some camping at the center can also be arranged through UI recreation services.

"In the future we hope to have an overnight center for meetings and retreats," Slebos said. "We also would like to create residence quarters on the premises which will provide better protection of the area."

Slebos said he doesn't want the center to turn into a state park but to continue its educational programs and care for injured birds of prey.

"We're happy with our location and want to do everything possible to continue working here," he said. "With an extended lease it will be possible to continue and expand our many programs."

The center is located by Lake Macbride off County Road F-28, just north of North Liberty.

Loans

Hall. "Financial aid distributed about $2 million in short-term loans to more than 8,000 people last year," said Nick Ryan, assistant director in the UI Office of Student Financial Aid.

Ryan added there has been more than $100,000 in defaults on emergency loans over the last five years. The interest-free loans are to be paid at the end of the semester in which they were borrowed.

Ryan said students may wait three to five days to receive cash under the new system, which may deter some students who do not need the money from applying.

But he said, "I think that most of our students use the system quite sensibly."

The UI Collegiate Associations

Council passed legislation Monday night that requests that the financial aid office add a clause to provide immediate cash for students who need it.

"For people who have real cash needs there's a very good likelihood they can't get a cent," Chris Anderson, CAC executive associate, said. Streamlining the process is good but puts students who need immediate cash at a disadvantage, Anderson said, adding that the system takes up to five days to disburse cash.

Students who have a genuine need for money but have an unpaid U-bill will have to find another source of funding under the new policy, Ryan said.

Ryan said the new procedure will use a drop box for student applications. Funds will be placed directly in student university accounts.

He said the system will allow financial aid personnel more time to act as financial aid counselors and long-term loan advisers. Long lines of students waiting for short-term loans will cease to be a problem.

"It was just a long wait for students. Some days we do 80 a day," he said.

CAC President Gordon Fischer said about 95 percent of emergency student loans are now received in cash.

The ready funds are more convenient for immediate expenses including rent or health care, another CAC counselor said.

"As one that had one of these bills before, it came in handy, and I promptly paid it back by the end of the semester," Dave Elick, LASA executive associate, said.

suit and read the statement in a steady voice. He was shaven, his hair was combed and he wore glasses. He said he was being treated well.

It was the third videotaped message from Anderson released by the Islamic Jihad, which kidnapped Anderson on March 16, 1985. He is the longest-held of the 14 foreign hostages. Nine are Americans.

The previous two messages were released Oct. 3, 1986, and Dec. 24, 1987.

In addition to Anderson, Islamic Jihad holds Thomas Sutherland, 56, of Fort Collins, Colo. He was acting dean of agriculture at The American University of Beirut when he was kidnapped June 19, 1985.

Islamic Jihad has freed three American hostages in the last three years — the Rev. Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian minister; Martin Lawrence Jenco, a Roman Catholic priest; and David Jacobsen, former director of the American University Hospital in Beirut.

Jacobsen's release on Nov. 2, 1986, was linked to the U.S. arms sales to Iran.

"Our problem could have been solved long ago without such complications as arms deals," Anderson said in his message.

"Our problem could have been solved long ago without such complications as arms deals." — hostage Terry Anderson

"I heard on the radio of the generous and ambitious efforts to free three trapped whales a few days ago and the president's thanks to the Soviet Union for its help. It is a warming story," he said. "That kind of cooperation and spirit is absolutely necessary to bring this situation to an end."

The tape ended with a message to his family: "Peg, Madeleine, Dad, kiss my daughters for me. Keep your spirits up, and I will try to do the same, and one day soon, God willing, this will end."

Anderson has two daughters, Gabrielle, 13, and Sulome, 3. The reference to "Dad" indicated Anderson does not know his father died in 1986.

"Peg" referred to his sister, Peggy Say, and "Madeleine" is Madeleine Basil, the mother of Sulome.

Reagan

But when pressed again whether he was answering "yes" to Bush's alleged involvement in the TWA hijacking, Reagan turned to answer another query about the circumstances of the release of the tape.

In Washington, Bush told NBC in an interview at his residence by Tom Brokaw that he was never involved in negotiations either in the TWA or the Iran-Contra cases, according to press secretary Sheila Tate.

The vice president previously has said he was not a key player in the sale of arms to Iran and was unaware of details and the planning of it.

Pressed to explain his and Bush's involvement in the Iran-Contra affair — which the questioner described as having developed into a scandal — the president shot back, "There was no scandal. That scandal, I'm afraid, has been artificially created by a media that I cannot understand."

About prospects for release of Anderson and other Americans held in Lebanon, the president said, "I'm not going to give up hope for any of our hostages that are held; that's just too unthinkable."

Israeli election turns on Palestinian uprising

JERUSALEM — Israelis vote Tuesday in an election tied to 11 months of violence that has cost the lives of more than 300 Palestinians and 10 Jews, including a rabbi's daughter and her three children killed in a weekend attack.

Sunday's fire-bomb attack on a bus that killed 27-year-old schoolteacher Rachel Weiss and her children was expected to boost the chances of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of the conservative Likud bloc, who advocates tougher measures against the Arab uprising in the occupied lands.

"There's no question it will help Likud," said Daniel Elazar, a political analyst of the Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs.

Venezuelan troops fire on fishermen's picnic

CARACAS, Venezuela — Border troops killed 14 Venezuelan fishermen at a weekend picnic, mistaking them for Colombian guerrillas, the government said Monday.

Two fishermen escaped the Saturday morning attack by diving into the Arauca River and swimming a half-mile to a ranch near the border town of El Amparo, sources there said.

The Venezuelan-Colombian border incident, the bloodiest in years, took place at Guafitas, 360 miles southwest of Caracas.

Interior Minister Simon Alberto Consalvi said the victims were "peaceful Venezuelan fishermen" not members of Colombia's National Liberation Army as the Defense Ministry originally stated.

"President (Jaime) Lusinchi has ordered a wide, summary investigation into the incident," Consalvi told The Associated Press on Monday.

Grimelda de Marquez, an El Amparo government official, said in a telephone interview the fishermen "carried no weapons at all. At most some had just knives, as any ordinary fishermen do."

"They were looking to have a chicken stew when soldiers started to fire. They were all honest people."

John Houseman, 86, dies in his Malibu home

MALIBU, Calif. — John Houseman, the producer who terrified millions with the "War of the Worlds" and won an Oscar for intimidating his students as the imperious law professor on "The Paper Chase," died Monday. He was 86.

Houseman died at his seaside home before dawn, said Ivan Goff, a family friend and scriptwriter. Margo Harley, a longtime friend and colleague, said he had spinal cancer.

Houseman brought a magnetic eloquence to the role of the curmudgeon and gained wide fame while in his 70s as Professor Charles Kingsfield in "The Paper Chase," a role he first played in the 1973 film and then in the television series.

He parlayed his fame and his distinctive speaking style into a lucrative series of commercial endorsements, including ads for the investment firm Smith, Barney in which he growled, "They make money the old-fashioned way — they EARRNNN it."

Houseman's characters were marked by a stern, autocratic tone, yet those who knew him well described him as quiet and gentle.

Motel clerk not 'spooked,' foils robbery

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — An apparent robbery attempt fizzled when a motel clerk assumed a gunman was merely decked out for Halloween and refused to take him seriously, a sheriff's spokesman said Monday.

A man wearing an olive green ski mask and carrying a .410-gauge shotgun walked into a Scottish Inn lobby in Knoxville on Sunday, said Art Miller, Knox County Sheriff's spokesman.

The clerk and another man had been talking, glanced at the gunman and continued their conversation.

Finally one of the men asked the gunman if he was going to rob the motel, and the masked man said he wanted money, said Sheriff's Detective Carl Seider.

The masked man then pumped a shell into the shotgun chamber, Seider said. The man who had been talking to the clerk then pretended to reach for a gun in his waistband, and the gunman fled.

Procrastinators give award to gray whales

MIAMI — The Procrastinators Club of America issued its top award to the California gray whales that dallied so long off the coast of Alaska after they became stuck in ice, a club official said Monday.

"They exemplify the highest standard of procrastination," said Joseph Weiss of North Bay Village, the club's secretary-treasurer. "They waited until the last minute to go down to their spawning grounds."

The Philadelphia-based club has not yet decided what the prize will be or when and how it will be awarded, Weiss said.

"Their award will be sometime in the future — we have to have a lot of meetings first," he explained.

The two whales, whose plight attracted attention worldwide, are believed to have finally escaped their icy prison near Barrow last week after two Soviet icebreakers cut a path for them to open water.

Sears, Roebuck and Co. to sell Sears Tower under new restructuring plan

CHICAGO (AP) — Sears, Roebuck and Co. said Monday it is selling the world's tallest building and revamping its merchandising approach in a sweeping bid to strengthen the lackluster earnings record of the nation's largest retailer.

Sears also said it would buy back up to 10 percent of its stock, divest its Coldwell Banker commercial real estate subsidiary and take $425 million in after-tax-fourth-quarter charges.

Edward Brennan, chairman and chief executive officer of the 102-year-old Chicago-based company, stressed the restructuring plan is designed to enhance Sears' value to shareholders immediately and at the same time concentrate its resources over the longer term on consumer-oriented businesses — retailing, insurance, real estate and financial services.

He conceded, however, that the timing of the announcement may have been affected by the recent wave of takeover activity.

"We are aware that we operate today in an investment environment increasingly focused on the short-term basis," Brennan said. "Sears has not been untouched by the rumor and speculation that thrives in these conditions."

"But make no mistake, this strategy is not solely a reaction to that environment."

Brennan declined to say how much Sears hoped to get for its landmark Sears Tower, which rises 110 stories — 1,450 feet — in the downtown Loop business district. It was built in 1974 and has been valued at $1.8 billion.

Sears' share of the retail market has eroded steadily despite attempts to update the company's image.

The company has test-marketed stores devoted to a single product area, such as apparel or appliances, and offering a wide range of national brands. It also is scrapping frequent sales in favor of "everyday low pricing."

Farm prices hold steady in October

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prices farmers got for raw products in October held steady at their late-summer level but still averaged 13 percent more than they did a year ago, the Agriculture Department said Monday.

The department's Agricultural Statistics Board said in its preliminary report that higher prices for oranges, milk, lettuce and corn were offset by lower prices for tomatoes, apples, eggs and soybeans.

Meanwhile, prices paid by farmers to meet expenses — a figure computed only every three months — rose 1.2 percent from July and averaged 5.5 percent more than a year ago.

Farmers paid more for feeder cattle and calves than they did in July, but feed and fuels were lower, the report said.

Prices received by farmers for some major commodities are based on mid-month averages and then are revised the following month when additional information is available.

Nation/Walesa closure

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — infuriated Lech Walesa Monday to fight government to close down the Lenin site where the Solidarity union was born.

The state-owned shipyard Gdansk is being closed down. It is the first big industrial to be closed out for closure month-long government of Minister Mieczyslaw Rakowski.

The decision was announced the shipyard was closed on of All Saints' Day and caught workers and Solidarity activists surprise. The yard re-opened Wednesday.

A longtime foe of Solidarity, Rakowski took office Sept. 2 on a pledge to restructure Poland's aging industrial base and economy moving. In an interview with the BBC, he said the decision "has nothing to do with Solidarity."

The announcement came in an impasse in preparation talks between representatives of Solidarity and the government which had been promised by Walesa on Aug. 31 during the strike at the shipyard.

Walesa denounces closure of shipyard

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — An infuriated Lech Walesa vowed Monday to fight government plans to close down the Lenin shipyard, the site where the Solidarity trade union was born.

The state-owned shipyard in Gdansk is being closed down Dec. 1. It is the first big industrial plant to be closed out for closure by the month-long government of Prime Minister Mieczyslaw Rakowski.

The decision was announced while the shipyard was closed on the eve of All Saints' Day and caught many workers and Solidarity activists by surprise. The yard reopens Wednesday.

A longtime foe of Solidarity, Rakowski took office Sept. 27 with a pledge to restructure Poland's aging industrial base and get the economy moving. In an interview with the BBC, he said the decision "has nothing to do with Solidarity."

The announcement came during an impasse in preparations for talks between representatives of Solidarity and the government, which had been promised to Walesa on Aug. 31 during the last strike at the shipyard.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Walesa denounced the decision as Rakowski's "personal provocation . . . against the birthplace of Solidarity."

Rakowski was a firm supporter of the Dec. 13, 1981, martial-law crackdown on Solidarity.

Walesa, himself a worker at the shipyard, said in a later statement that "Solidarity will defend the enterprise which is for the union and for the whole nation a symbol of the struggle for a new and better Poland."

The state-run news agency PAP said Rakowski on Saturday approved an Industry Ministry recommendation to close the yard. It referred to the premier's Oct. 13 speech when he presented his plan to parliament.

Rakowski told the BBC that "there is no other way. If someone wants to make the Polish economy more healthy, he has to start with very strong steps."

"Rakowski announced that his government will go from words and plans to firm acts which would recover the Polish economy," PAP said. "That would include liquidation of enterprises that are inefficient, unproductive and some enterprises which require subsidies from the state treasury."

PAP added the decision should come as no surprise because the possibility has been discussed publicly "for a long time."

Rakowski replaced Prime Minister Zbigniew Messner, who was criticized as ineffectual in reforming Poland's inefficient and debt-ridden economy.

Since taking over, he has announced cuts in several government departments and allowed several independent groups to be legalized. But closing the Lenin yard is his first move to streamline Poland's heavy industry.

The century-old shipyard, the scene of strikes in May and August, employs about 10,000 workers and was scheduled to build 11 ships this year. It constructs ships primarily for the Soviet Union for non-convertible currency.

U.S. seeks rapport with North Korea

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States on Monday took tentative steps toward ending decades of hostility with North Korea by relaxing some trade, travel and diplomatic restrictions against the communist nation.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman said the steps were being taken in support of the efforts by South Korean President Roh Tae Woo to promote the eventual peaceful reunification of the Northeast Asian peninsula.

Redman said the United States will encourage unofficial, non-governmental visits from North Korea in academics, sports, culture and other areas.

Redman said financial regulations are being revised to permit group travel by Americans on a case-by-case basis to North Korea, which is one of the few countries in the world with which the United States does not have diplomatic relations.

American diplomats will be allowed substantive contact with North Korean diplomats for the first time in almost a year, Redman said.

In addition, the spokesman said, commercial exports of humanitarian goods to North Korea will be allowed on a limited basis. Currently, humanitarian items must be donated.

After summing up the series of moves, Redman said, "we look to that government for a positive, constructive response."

Roh has announced a series of initiatives aimed at easing tensions on the peninsula, including a call for a North-South summit meeting and for two-way trade.

On Oct. 20, he met with President Ronald Reagan and asked for conciliatory measures toward the North to complement the ones he has taken.

Roh's diplomatic offensive, which included a major speech two weeks ago at the United Nations, is seen by U.S. officials as a reflection of South Korea's growing self-confidence.

The country's economic growth has been accompanied by development of democratic institutions, and the Olympic games held in Seoul in September are widely regarded as a success.

The officials said recent developments have left North Korea more isolated than before, and it may be amenable to peaceful exchanges with the South. North Korea's principal backers, China and the Soviet Union, ignored North Korea's appeals for a boycott of the Olympics.

Redman said that China and the Soviet Union have been advised of the U.S. policy switch and been asked to convey the American position to North Korean authorities.

He said that any discussion of removing the 40,000 U.S. troops from South Korea is premature.

"The first point is to see if there is a positive, constructive response from North Korea," Redman said.

Evidence of North Korean good will, he said, would be reflected in progress in the fledgling North-South dialogue and North Korean willingness to cooperate in providing an accounting of American servicemen missing since the Korean War. He said the north has acknowledged holding the remains of five Americans.

Copyright law provides international protection

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Surrounded by a bevy of Hollywood stars, President Ronald Reagan signed legislation on Monday that gives U.S. artists and writers important reciprocal copyright protections offered in 76 other countries.

"Today, we celebrate a victory in the name of a right as old as the union itself and as central to our union as any — the right of all Americans to protect their property," Reagan told his audience.

In a ceremony at the Beverly Hilton Hotel attended by the likes of Merv Griffin, Tony Bennett, Cyd Charisse, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Chuck Norris and Charlton Heston, Reagan signed a measure that brings U.S. copyright law into compliance with the 102-year-old Bern Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works.

Reagan said the pact "provides for the protection of copyrighted works from international pirates who make their living by stealing and then selling the creative accomplishments of others."

The president charged that such thievery cost the entertainment industry $2 billion in potential revenue in 1986, and the computer and software industries more than $4 billion in the same year.

The Senate ratified the treaty on Oct. 20. But legislation making changes in American copyright laws also was needed before the United States could become a full-fledged member of the convention. The House gave overwhelming approval to the measure with a 420-0 vote and the Senate approved it by voice vote.

Differences between American and other nations' copyright laws stalled ratification for decades, but many of the obstacles were removed when Congress enacted a sweeping overhaul of U.S. copyright law in 1976.

Participation in the convention will enable the United States to have copyright relations with 24 countries with which it now has none, officials said.

The convention was signed in Bern, Switzerland, on Sept. 9,

Ronald Reagan

1886. It spells out minimum copyright standards, detailing what is protected and how long the copyright lasts. It also bars member nations from discriminating against protected works from other member states.

The signing ceremony was Reagan's only public event of the day.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan scheduled meetings later in the day to discuss the status of his presidential library.

2 clubs, lone player split largest Lotto jackpot

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Two gambling clubs and a lone player will share a $61.98 million lottery jackpot that officials say is the world's largest, it was announced Monday.

The windfall will be divided among a group of 25 Sears employees in Sacramento, 15 hospital workers in San Diego County, and Ron Smith, a 45-year-old Shell Oil Co. production supervisor who lives in Westminster, said lottery spokesman Bob Taylor.

Each of the groups and Smith will receive one-third of the jackpot, or nearly $20.66 million, which will be paid over two decades in equal annual payments after taxes, Taylor said. The lottery deducts 20 percent of winnings for federal income taxes.

The overall jackpot increased from an estimated $60.8 million to $61.98 million when annuities that will be used to make payments to winners were purchased Monday, said Taylor.

"We're very common, real people," said Smith's wife, Linda. "We have our friends, and this is our house. We're not going to move."

The two now earn about $40,000 a year. Smith said he plans to quit his job so he and his wife can travel.

Smith said he went to work Sunday and told co-workers of his good fortune. "They thought I was kidding," he said. "Then they decided I was serious."

Appliance repairman Frank Kopita, 42, of the El Dorado County town of Shingle Springs, 30 miles east of Sacramento, held the winning ticket for the group of Sears workers, lottery officials said.

The lottery first scheduled, then canceled a news conference with the Sacramento winners. The employees said they wanted to avoid the publicity and had to return to work, said lottery spokeswoman Kim Rendahl.

A woman who identified herself only as Shirley at the Sears service center said she was one of 25 people in the pool there who won. "I'm pretty excited about it. Wouldn't anybody be?" she said.

Surinder Sanghera, owner of Sangheras House of Liquors in Sacramento, where the Sears group bought its tickets, said of its members: "They are regulars. I think they've been buying here since the lotto began."

Colleen M. Peach-Van Horn, a 36-year-old intensive care nurse, held the winning ticket for 15 Fallbrook Hospital workers in San Diego County.

Carrie Dragon, a technician at the hospital, said she joined 13 nurses, laboratory technicians and other employees — as well as a friend of one of the workers — in putting $40 each toward the tickets. All told, she said, the group bought $600 worth of tickets.

Republican candidates taunt Dukakis for using 'liberal' label

By The Associated Press

The Republican ticket of George Bush and Dan Quayle snickered in unison Monday at Michael Dukakis' late-campaign declaration of liberalism in the race for the White House. Dukakis was running as heir to a great Democratic tradition of "caring government" as he struggled to gain ground.

"Miracle of miracles," taunted Bush, who has waged a campaign-long effort to depict Dukakis as a liberal outside the mainstream. Quayle said he was glad the Massachusetts governor had resolved his political "identity crisis."

Dukakis invoked the names of Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman and John Kennedy, saying those Democrats stood for "caring government and caring political leadership. That's the kind of president I want to be."

At his first stop of the day, he did not repeat the "I am a liberal" statement he made Sunday after dodging the label for months. But he later cloaked himself in the "liberal tradition of great presidents" as he made his way through California and said Bush doesn't understand "the tradition of being on the side of working families."

Bush and Dukakis threw themselves into the frenzied final week of campaigning while carpenters were at work outside the Capitol in Washington, erecting the inaugural stand where one of the would-be presidents will stand on Jan. 20 and take the oath of office.

The battle of television commercials entered the late phase, as well.

Dukakis charged the Republicans with "running for the highest office in the land by waging the lowest-level campaign in modern history" in a five-minute network commercial to be aired Tuesday night. In a bid to steal one of Bush's most memorable campaign lines, he said his values — not the vice president's — would make America "a kinder, gentler nation."

Bush's latest commercials included one depicting Dukakis as an incorrigible tax-raiser, saying he increased levies on interest, dividends, meals, corporations, payrolls and state income and had signed a sales tax on items "never taxable before."

"And now he wants to do for America what he's done for Massachusetts," says a narrator. "American taxpayers can't afford that risk."

Bush was in Missouri and Kentucky, and he waved a 347-page book that was a compilation of position papers and speeches to buttress his argument that he's run a campaign based solidly on the issues.

He jumped on Dukakis' weekend embrace of liberalism with gusto.

"Now for the breakthrough," the vice president said. He recalled that in their last debate in Los Angeles, Dukakis had "jumped all over me for using the 'L' word. Well, speaking of my opponent, yesterday, miracle of miracles, headlines read all about it, he's using the liberal label again."

The vice president also brushed aside Dukakis' call for an election-eve debate, sarcastically suggesting that Dukakis debate himself — "the new left versus the old left." At the end of this imaginary debate, Bush said, the moderator should ask, "Will the real governor of Massachusetts stand up?"

Quayle was in Michigan, where he accused Dukakis of falsely associating himself with Kennedy, Roosevelt and Truman and said this year's Democratic candidate was more like Jimmy Carter, Walter Mondale and George McGovern.

"I didn't know JFK, and I didn't serve with him, but I'll tell you one thing, Michael Dukakis is no JFK," Quayle said in a variation of the line that Democratic running mate Lloyd Bentsen used against him in their vice-presidential debate.

Dukakis aimed his California appeal at women, listing his support for comparable wages, affordable childcare, parental-leave laws and a woman's right to have an abortion.

He shook his head as he said Quayle had told a 12-year-old girl last week that the law should require her to bear a child if she were raped by her father and became pregnant. Quayle last week told an 11-year-old girl in Illinois that in such a circumstance, she should have the child rather than an abortion.

Nervous, excited playwright awaits 'Brother's' premiere

By Steve T. Donoghue
The Daily Iowan

Somewhere on the West Coast, Ken Prestininzi is getting more and more nervous. And justifiably so. University Theatres will present "Catch My Brother's Eye," an original drama written by Prestininzi, at 8 p.m. Wednesday, in Theatre A of the UI Theatre Building. This premiere coincides with the staging in California of

"Touch Me," which Prestininzi also wrote. "I've never seen either play with an audience, never seen what the audience will be doing with the play — it is frightening. Right now, I can be very rational, but I'll probably be a mess on Wednesday. Right now, I've got more important things to do than worry . . ."

"Catch My Brother's Eye" is a contemporary psychological thriller that leads the audience into a nightmarish world where nothing is as it seems. Midwesterner Dominick Agrusa journeys to New York to search for his brother, Angelo, in the hip, erotic underground of the city. As the trail leads to violence and murder, Dominick begins to realize his brother's true nature, as well as his own.

"The play pushes at the extremes of an experience. It deals with people at the edge, going on instinct, whether that instinct is to survive or to feel something, whether to laugh or feel pain."

Tickets for "Catch My Brother's Eye" are $8 ($6 for students, senior

Troupe relives '60s in mime

By Kevin Goulding
The Daily Iowan

And it's one, two, three, what are we fighting for? Don't ask me I don't give a damn, next stop is Vietnam . . ."

Bruce Barthol, former bassist with the 1960s rock 'n' rowdy group Country Joe and the Fish, remembers the '60s with a sense of awe.

"There was something in the air, it was hard to disconnect from everything that was going on," he said in a phone interview. "It was a cultural revolution. For example, we used to travel around with long hair. I remember one time we flew into Portland, and this airport security guard's face dropped — and then he pointed his shotgun at us."

Since 1976, Barthol has been the musical director with the San Francisco Mime Troupe. The troupe brings their newest show, "Ripped Van Winkle," to Hancher Auditorium this Wednesday and Thursday nights.

"Ripped Van Winkle" is the tale of Winkle "Rip" Ripowitz, a radical hippie circa 1968 on his way to Chicago to confront Lyndon Johnson and Mayor Daley at the Democratic convention. 1968 — Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. assassinated, student unrest and anti-war demonstrations sweep the globe and the "conflict" in Vietnam rages. Only, on his way, Rip meets a beautiful French woman in Golden Gate Park who offers him a hit of "dynamite" acid, which of course he takes (Hey, it's the '60s; everone did acid). When Rip awakens from his psychedelic slumber, it's 1988! And, as the Troupe's promo material tells it, "Follow the adventures of our furry, freaked-out hero as he finds out where his friends are . . . What happened to the revolution . . . Who was the mystery lady . . . And what mission she has planned for him in the cold, new world of 1988."

Since 1963, the S.F. Mime Troupe has been performing their own brand of musical political satire and comedy, with influences ranging from Commedia dell'Arte (16th Century Italian street theater), Bertolt Brecht and Karl Marx. Masters of the "anything, anywhere" style, the group's image became synonymous with arrests and agitation. From the beginning, the troupe has performed free concerts in the parks of San Francisco. In 1965, the San Francisco Park Commission revoked the troupe's park permit, arresting the founder, R.G. Davis on obscenity charges, the first of many arrests. A benefit performance by Jefferson Airplane, Lawrence Ferlinghetti and The Grateful Dead was arranged to cover the necessary legal fees.

Barthol became acquainted with the group when he worked on an "election show" in 1972 with a street opera group titled "The Bebe Rebozzo Rolling Repertory Theatre." The show was "Profiles in Porridge; America, Like It or Lump It."

Barthol sees politics as "the motivating force, the glue" to the troupe's work.

"We are the current manifestation of the Greek concept of theater. We put on stage issues of contemporary life and current problems for people to look at."

For "Ripped," the troupe wanted to "juxtapose the energy and enthusiasm of 1968 to now," according to Barthol. "This country doesn't have a sense of history — Vietnam could've been 50 years ago as far as many people know."

Barthol makes the point that "Ripped" is not an effort to make the '60s look so great. "On the other hand, eight years of Reagan have been amazingly grim, compared to the previous generation which was just grim." When presented with a scenario of a Bush presidency, Barthol laughed, responding, "Maybe then you just leave."

"The 1,000 points of light, you see, will be 1,000 crack pipes lighting up."

The performances for the two shows are sold out.

Sci-fi shows leave much to be desired

By Charlie Zimmerman
Special to The Daily Iowan

Two new syndicated science-fiction shows have recently hit the airwaves, attempting no doubt to cash in the success of last year's hit revival of Star Trek, "Star Trek: The Next Generation." Produced by Paramount at a cost of roughly $1.3 million per one-hour episode, "The Next Generation" proved that good science-fiction television can find an audience outside of your standard network and cable conglomerations. Too bad the producers of these new shows missed that bit about "good."

First off, "The War of the Worlds." "War" is a sequel to the movie of the same name that was based on the book by the same name back in 1897. Thirty years after the aliens first trashed Earth, they're back to try again. Seems the aliens didn't really die in the film, they just fell into a bacteria-induced coma that lasted while they were packed into steel drums and stored on a remote Army base. When some 1988 terrorists invade the base and start shooting up the place, they hit the drums full of radioactive waste stored — directly above the aliens! Of course, the glowing goop oozes down into the aliens' drums, and — presto! — instant alien. Better living through physics, right?

Now the aliens can take over living humans, and although they walk and talk funny, not many can really tell that something is wrong, except — our heroes!

Part of the premise here is that no one remembers the aliens because the governments of the world covered it up to avoid a panic. What did they do — kill the survivors? Anyway, if you could believe the plot, or if the actors could show any depth of emotion greater than that of a coffee table, you might actually enjoy the show. But you can't, they can't and you probably won't.

So try "Superboy," from the father and son team, the Salkinds. They're the ones who made the Superman movies — I, II and III.

But . . . "Superboy?" Sure. Clark Kent's off to school at Schuster University, working his way through as a mild-mannered reporter in the journalism department. Clark knows the son of Perry White, editor of The Daily Planet, T.J., as an aspiring photographer and fans of the Superman comics will be glad to see Lana Lang along as well. Since the drinking age has taken freshmen out of the bars, trouble is supplied amply by a young Lex Luthor and his young, dumb sidekick, Otis.

John Haynes Newton makes a decent Clark/Superboy, without seeming like a low-budget Christopher Reeve. Continuity is out the window from the beginning, since Superboy never existed in the movies, and a cosmic crisis wiped him out of the DC Comics reality some years ago. So don't fret about how this Superboy in 1988 relates to any other Superman you've ever seen.

So give the Boy of Steel a try, but save yourself from "The War of the Worlds." The former isn't great but beats anything else after college football at 5 p.m. on Saturdays, and the latter is on late Sunday nights when you should be starting that paper due Monday anyway.

By the way, you can find the animated Man of Steel on Saturday morning cartoons this fall, but I don't get up early. Not even for him.

UI student's titanium brooch wins international art award

Daniel Huber, a senior in the jewelry making and metalsmithing program in the UI School of Art and Art History, has been awarded a medal in the 1988 International Art Competition.

Huber, a student of UI professor Chunghi Choo, won in the Miniature Art category of the competition. His winning piece, "Reality of Time," is a 3- by 3-inch brooch of silver and titanium.

From thousands of entries submitted for the competition, 42 artworks were selected for inclusion in an exhibition held in New York in August. During the exhibition, the works were judged by a four-person jury that included curators from the Metropolitan and Whitney museums in New York and a

"When I discovered titanium, it opened up possibilities not available with paper and painting." — Daniel Huber critic from Art in America magazine.

Three medals were subsequently awarded in each of the 11 categories of the competition.

Huber said "Reality of Time," which is in the shape of a pyramid with one side eroded away, was influenced by the Egyptian structures. "All three of my entries in the competition were influenced by ancient structures," he said. "The title of this one refers to the fact that the pyramids were built to last forever, but the reality is that they are decaying."

In order to create the vivid colors,

Huber used a torch and an anodizer, which coats metallic surfaces electrolytically with a protective oxide. "I used a torch for a more spontaneous effect, to create the illusion of burning. With the anodizer, I was able to create more controlled patterns of color."

Huber, who originally worked with drawing and painting, switched to titanium after a class with UI instructor John Horn. "When I discovered titanium, it opened up possibilities not available with paper and painting. I enjoy the aesthetics, the color and the three-dimensionality of the materials."

Comic book sidekick killed by consensus

By Charlie Zimmerman
Special to The Daily Iowan

This just in from the Middle East: Robin, famed Boy Wonder and trusty companion of the Dark Knight detective, Batman, has been blown to smithereens by that insidious evil-doer, the Joker.

It's true, he's dead. No doubt about it, because Batman checked the pulse and buried the body himself. You see, in comics, you gotta have the body, or it doesn't count. We've got the body this time — Robin is finished!

But save those Bat-tears and put away that Bat-hanky if you're mourning the passing of Dick Grayson, youthful ward of millionaire Bruce Wayne. No, mourn instead for Jason Todd, since Dick left Wayne Manor to become Nightwing some time ago, and Jason stepped in to fill those oh-so-cute green shoes.

DC Comics, however, started to rethink this recasting. It was like Donna Reed as Miss Ellie: cute, but not convincing enough. So, in a publicity-generating move (Hey, look at this article), the Batman's publisher left it up to the fans to vote on a toll-free Bat-line: should Robin live or die? And out of over 10,000 votes, Robin was toast by a margin of only 72 calls. In the issue of "Batman" now on sale, we find that Batman was too late to save Robin, who went off to find his real mother, only to be blown up by the nefarious Joker.

It could be that readers (and DC) want Batman to remain the "lone wolf" sort of hero, grim and forboding as he's been portrayed in the "Dark Knight" graphic novel saga and other special works. And we'll probably see a Robin in the sequel to the Batman movie currently in the works. But for now, a legend is dead.

Farewell, old chum.

Baroque virtuosity dazzles audience

By Bill Stuelke
The Daily Iowan

It wasn't at Hancher; it wasn't at Clapp. Last Sunday, Iowa City played host to three musicians the likes of which are rarely seen even in our own university's magnificent music halls. The Lyra Chamber Players, brought to Iowa City by the Iowa City Early Keyboard Society (ICEKS), gave a performance to which words cannot do justice.

Listeners were humbled and awed by the musicianship and virtuosity of the group. Nowhere was this more apparent than in the "Sonata in G Minor for Violoncello and Bass" by Antonio Vivaldi. Baroque cellist Rebecca Humphrey captivated the audience with her incredible musical emotion. Her subtle dynamic variation and tonal precision were exceptional despite the extremely difficult positional changes on the period instrument.

Her cello, built well over 300 years ago, had a rich and beautiful sound, particularly full in the lower ranges. The baroque cello has no end pin, so the player must hold it between his legs. Consequently, the player must be much closer to the instrument while playing. "It becomes almost a part of your self," said Humphrey.

Harpisichordist Barbara Weiss last appeared in Iowa City in February of 1985 — at ICEKS' second concert. Since then ICEKS has been excitedly waiting for her return and understandably so. The harpischord is not noted for its musical and emotional appeal, yet Weiss was able to woo the audience into admiration of its music. With selections by Claude-Benigne Balbastre, Weiss played with precision and emotion that even surpassed the performance last week by the Paris Harpischord Competition's first-prize winner Arthur Haas.

Flutist Paul Jacobson opened the concert with solos for the transverse flute written by Jacques Hotteterre le Romain. He also explained the nature of the French music at the time and related it to the pieces he was playing. Italian music was pretty well dominating the hearts of Europeans at the time. The Italians were preoccupied with strong emotion and virtuoso performance. The French considered this somewhat barbaric, and they reacted by emphasizing the intellectual appeal of music by imitating nature and language. The pieces Jacobson played used melody and ornamentation as extension of speech. It "makes the melody communicative," he said.

Not only were the three musicians exquisite soloists, they all played well together. It's easy to see — and hear — why they are acknowledged masters of authentic baroque performance practice. They are all soloists from the larger group, The Lyra Concert, a baroque orchestra headquartered in the Twin Cities.

The ICEKS concludes its concert season next Sunday in The Preucil School of Music with celebrated harpischordist Elisabeth Wright. Tickets are available at Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St.

Garner, Marble play well in 1st intrasquad scrimmage

DUBUQUE, Iowa (AP) — It takes a game to bring out the best in Brian Garner.

The Iowa redshirt freshman guard sparked as a playmaker in the first of four intrasquad games the Hawkeyes will play around the state over the next three weeks.

Playing with a team that included projected starters Roy Marble, Matt Bullard and Michael Ingram, Garner handed out 12 assists and scored five points in helping that unit to a 93-91 victory at Dubuque's Five Flags Center on Sunday.

"I saw a lot of Brian Garner's potential, especially the way he handles the ball and directs the offense," Iowa Coach Tom Davis said. "He forced some things, but he looked better than he has in practice."

"We need his type of play, plus good rebounding, to make our transition game work. And I saw some rebounding potential in people like Michael Ingram, Matt Bullard and Les Jepsen."

Garner, a 6-foot-1, 165-pounder from Milwaukee, Wis., would have had even more assists had his teammates not missed shots after he passed them the ball.

"I'm very confident during games," Garner said. "I made a lot of mistakes in practice, but that's where you should make them because it's there where you should polish your game."

"But during the game I know what to do. I've been a take-charge point guard ever since I started playing. I like to pass the ball. It gives me great satisfaction to see someone else score off my pass."

Marble, who's making the switch from forward to guard this season, led the white-shirted team with 38 points, including two 3-point field goals. The 6-foot-6 senior made only one 3-pointer last season.

Bullard and Ingram, who are eligible this season after transferring, scored 20 points each.

"Did Roy really have 38 points?" Davis said. "He played so much under control that it didn't seem like it. The points seemed to come so easily. You could just see his confidence. He was a big reason his team won. I only hope it's just the beginning."

Senior guard B.J. Armstrong led the black-shirted team with 29 points, freshman James Moses scored 18, senior Ed Horton 14 and freshman Ray Thompson 13. The 6-6 Moses, who came to Iowa with a reputation as an excellent outside shooter, sank three 3-pointers.

"I was a little tight in the first half," Moses said. "But we talked at halftime about how we were rushing our shots. We passed the ball around and got it inside better in the second half and I kind of relaxed and got into the flow of the game."

NCAA to issue Kansas decision

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — The University of Kansas called a news conference for 9 a.m. Tuesday and was expected to announce the NCAA decision regarding allegations against the Jayhawks' national championship basketball program.

Sources said the result of the lengthy probe would be announced. No other details were available.

Kansas beat Oklahoma 83-79 in Kansas City last spring for a national title. On June 20, the NCAA informed the school that it was probing 14 allegations of violations, most of them between June of 1986 and April 1987. The charges all had to do with recruiting and most involved illegal "extra benefits."

Kansas officials spent all day Sept. 30 in a closed-door meeting with the Infractions Committee.

The Jayhawks are the fourth winningest basketball program in NCAA history. The violations would have occurred while Larry Brown was head coach.

Brown resigned shortly after winning the national title to accept a lucrative offer from the NBA's San Antonio Spurs. Brown and several of his former assistant coaches at Kansas appeared before the committee along with other Kansas officials.

The Kansas football program was served a two-year probation in 1983-85 for numerous violations.

Hawks still hope for bowl game

An outside chance at the Rose Bowl slipped away Saturday at Indiana, but the Hawkeyes are still in the bowl picture.

Nine bowls — the Florida Citrus, Gator, Peach, Holiday, Liberty, Sun, Freedom, Hall of Fame and

All American — were represented at the Indiana game.

Iowa Coach Hayden Fry said he thinks his team still has a good opportunity to get to a bowl game if the Hawkeyes can win their last three games. And Fry said three bowl representatives expressed continuing interest after the 45-34 loss to the Hoosiers.

"We have an opportunity to win the next three games," Fry said. "It's going to be very difficult with the injury situation the way it is, but it's possible."

Now that's scary

Fans at Monday night's game between the Indianapolis Colts and the Denver Broncos get into the spirit of Halloween by wearing masks of ABC's commentators. The Colts won the game.

Grayer will miss Bucks' opener

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Jeff Grayer, the Milwaukee Bucks' top draft choice, will miss the NBA team's 1988-89 season opener at Indiana on Friday night because of his bout with the chicken pox. Grayer is expected to be sidelined for at least a week. He came down with the illness last Friday and missed Sunday's final preseason game at Iowa State University, his alma mater.

"It's a setback because of the way Jeff has been playing," said Bucks Coach Del Harris. "He's been incredible. But right now we can't rush him with an illness like this. We've got to bring him along slowly."

Grayer, a 6-foot-6 guard-forward, averaged 25 points for Iowa State last season and played on the U.S. Olympic team that won the bronze medal at the Seoul Olympics.

"When I first noticed the bumps I kind of thought it would be chicken pox since I never had it before," Grayer said by phone Monday from his hospital room.

Griffin, 10 others file for free agency

NEW YORK (AP) — Alfredo Griffin, the shortstop of the World Series champion Los Angeles Dodgers, was among 11 players who filed for free agency on Monday, raising the total to 50, the Major League Baseball Players Association said.

Griffin batted .199 this season with one home run and 27 runs batted in. He hit .160 with three RBIs in the National League playoffs and .188 in the World Series.

Griffin is a career .256 hitter in 10 major-league seasons. He drove in a career-high 60 runs for Oakland in 1987.

Pitchers filing on Monday were Charlie Lea and Dan Schatzeder of the Minnesota Twins, Mike Flanagan of the Toronto Blue Jays, Joaquin Andujar of the Houston Astros, Larry Sorenson of the San Francisco Giants and Odell Jones of the Milwaukee Brewers.

Others filing were designated hitter Darrell Evans of the Detroit Tigers, third baseman Jim Morrison of the Atlanta Braves, catcher Alex Trevino of the Houston Astros and outfielder Greg Gross of the Philadelphia Phillies.

Eligible players have until Friday to file.

Cubs fire minor league director

CHICAGO (AP) — Gordon Goldsberry, who is credited with reviving the Chicago Cubs' failing minor league system over the past seven years, has been fired because of irreconcilable differences with club boss Jim Frey, a spokeswoman said Monday.

Sixteen of the 29 players on the National League club's roster at season's end were products of the farm system. Most notable were starters Shawon Dunston at shortstop, outfielder Rafael Palmeiro, first baseman Mark Grace, catcher Damon Berryhill and pitchers Greg Maddux, Jamie Moyer and Mike Harkey.

Frey, executive vice president of baseball operations for the team, said "there were differences we could not resolve." He declined to elaborate on the reasons for the firing.

Louisville track prepares for $10 million Cup

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—The Breeders' Cup — which organizers call "The World Series of Racing" — makes its first trip to Louisville this week after having been staged three times in the Los Angeles area and once in New York.

"Our objective is, at a minimum, to be included in that rotation," Gerald Lawrence, general manager of Churchill Downs, said. "At a median, it is to be in that rotation more than anybody else, and our maximum goal is that it stops rotating and stays right here."

The Breeders' Cup was tentatively scheduled for Louisville last year but was withdrawn in favor of Hollywood Park in Southern California, where it drew nearly 58,000 people who bet more than $10 million.

But this year, the Breeders' Cup — with its $10 million purses — is in Louisville for sure, and Churchill Downs officials and civic boosters hope to put on such a show that Lexington-based Breeders' Cup Ltd. won't doubt the wisdom of its choice.

Under the Breeders' Cup's organization's contract with Churchill Downs, most of the day's proceeds, including the bulk of the betting money, will go to Breeders' Cup.

Lawrence said the event offers an opportunity for Churchill Downs to win national publicity and demonstrate that it remains among the nation's top tracks. He said track officials also hope a successful event will persuade owners and trainers to send their best horses during the regular racing season.

Louisville Mayor Jerry Abramson estimated that a successful Breeders' Cup could yield $15 million to $25 million in income for hotels, motels, restaurants and other businesses. He based the estimate on standard formulas in the convention and special-event industry.

Churchill Downs officials said about 50,000 tickets have been sold, including every seat in the stands and 3,000 bleacher seats in the infield.

Lawrence said that if all goes well, Churchill Downs hopes for a crowd of 75,000 Saturday, a record exceeding the 69,155 at Santa Anita near Los Angeles in 1986.

Bulls' Jordan will appear on Wheaties boxes

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan was dressed to play basketball Monday, but instead, he talked about breakfast cereal, posed with a picture of a cereal box almost as tall as he, and got down on one knee with an actual-size box in hand.

Such was Jordan's inauguration as only the seventh "celebrity athlete" to be pictured on the front of packages of Wheaties, the General Mills Inc. cereal marketed as "The Breakfast of Champions."

"He truly is a champion in every sense of the word," Jim Nuckols, product manager, gushed as he introduced Jordan to reporters. He called Jordan "a man of real character and integrity," fitting for the positive image the product tries to have.

"I'm very happy to be part of the Wheaties organization," said Jordan, clad in his No. 23 Chicago Bulls jersey and black sweat pants. "A lot of people would love to be in my shoes."

Many might also want to have his bank account, which will swell even further with the Wheaties deal. But Jordan and company officials said that terms were not being disclosed.

What they did disclose was that Jordan's picture would be printed on at least 12 million to 14 million boxes of the cereal.

Others who have contracted with Minneapolis-based General Mills for the Wheaties limelight, beginning in 1956, include pole vaulter Bob Richards, deathball star Bruce Jenner, gymnast Mary Lou Retton, baseball player Pete Rose, football's Walter Payton and tennis star Chris Evert. Richards, now a clergyman in Texas, first adorned Wheaties boxes before Jordan was born 25 years ago, and Jordan admits that as a child, he didn't know about the cereal.

It's only a matter of money

The UI Board in Control of Athletics and Coach Hayden Fry took an admirable stand last week, rejecting the idea of allowing NCAA Division I football teams to play 12 regular-season games.

The stand was courageous and unusual, considering the factors involved.

"It's awfully hard to justify it under any conditions other than just more money," Bump Elliott, UI men's athletic director, said.

That's true, but it's never stopped the NCAA or its member schools before.

Money makes the world, and collegiate athletics, go around. To be completely cynical, and fairly accurate, the system doesn't give a damn about individual athletes.

Sure, Fry cares about his players, both on and off the field. He hates to see them injured, not only because it hurts his chances to win, but because his athletes mean something to him.

Elliott also loves the Hawkeyes. He really wants them to graduate and get good jobs, not only because it makes him look good, but because he cares about them.

But the system, taken as a whole, treats the athletes like, well, athletes.

Sure they get good treatment — choice cuts of food in a private dining hall, free living quarters, scholarships — but so do thoroughbreds.

Some prize racehorses get put out to stud, and some prize athletes get fat professional contracts.

But some horses become injured early in their careers, and most of the others end up munching hay and standing in their own manure.

It's not quite that bad for college athletes, but you get the point. When they can run fast and jump high, the system keeps lobbing sticks and laundry money at them.

But when they lose a knee, or more importantly, their eligibility, they're on their own.

Actually, that's OK. The schools and the NCAA can't take care of them forever, nor should they. But while they're here the athletes should not only be encouraged to get the best education they can, the system should bend over backwards to help them get it. That's what they're here for, aren't they?

Elliott is right, the football season is long enough as it is. Money isn't a good enough reason to add another game.

But what about Big Ten basketball on Monday night? Tell the boys at ESPN to sit on their checkbooks: our athletes need to study. They already know how to dribble better than most corporate executives. It's time they work on other useful business skills.

And spring practice for football? No way. Student-athletes need that time to work on their grades. Throwing for 285 yards in the spring game looks good on an application to graduate school, but a B in physics is better, and more important.

When my old high school history teacher used to tell me college athletics were unnecessary, I used to shoot back: "Oh yeah, well what about all those kids that wouldn't get a good education without football or basketball?"

Yeah, what about them? Are they getting that good education?

Colts running back Eric Dickerson breaks the grasp of Denver's Simon Ditcher on the way to a touchdown in Indianapolis Monday night. Dickerson scored three touchdowns in the first period.

Indianapolis, Dickerson blow out Broncos 55-23

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Eric Dickerson rushed for 159 yards to go over 1,000 yards for an NFL record-tying sixth consecutive season and scored a career-high four touchdowns as the Indianapolis Colts stunned the Denver Broncos 55-23 in the first Monday night football game at the Hoosier Dome.

The Colts, scoring on seven of their nine first-half possessions, forced four fumbles, sacked Broncos quarterback John Elway three times and didn't let Denver cross midfield until its seventh possession, five minutes into the second quarter.

By that time, Indianapolis led 31-0 on Dickerson's four touchdowns and the first of two field goals by Dean Biasucci. The Colts built the margin to 45-10 at halftime, four points short of the NFL record for points in a half.

National Football League

The mark is held by Chicago against Philadelphia in 1941 and Green Bay in 1983 against Tampa Bay.

Quarterback Gary Hogeboom, replacing starter Chris Chandler whenever the Colts went to a wishbone offense, threw a 53-yard touchdown pass to Bill Brooks in the second quarter. Biasucci got another field goal in the third quarter and Albert Bentley rushed for a fourth-period touchdown as Indianapolis evened its record at 4-4 with the most points ever scored in a Monday Night game.

The loss before a Hoosier Dome record crowd of 60,544 — many in Halloween costumes — left the Broncos 4-4.

Dickerson, the NFL rushing leader, rushed 21 times in the game. He had 124 yards in the first half and was used sparingly in the final two periods. He raised his season total to 1,038 yards, joining Franco Harris and Walter Payton for the most consecutive 1,000-yard seasons. Dickerson, however, became the first to do it in his first six years in the league.

Dickerson, who came to Indianapolis in a trade with the Los Angeles Rams on Halloween a year earlier, broke the Colts' record of three rushing touchdowns in a game he previously shared with Alan Ameche, Lenny Moore, Tom Matte, Don McCauley and Randy McMillan.

Irish take over No. 1 spot after upset of UCLA

For the first time since early in the 1981 season, the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame are on top of the college football world.

And since Monday's Associated Press poll finds Southern California right behind Notre Dame, it sets up what would be the 24th meeting between No. 1 and No. 2 when they meet on Nov. 26 in the Los Angeles Coliseum.

Before that can happen, however, Notre Dame, 8-0, must defeat Rice on Saturday and Penn State on Nov. 19 while Southern California, 7-0, has to beat California, Arizona State and UCLA, the former No. 1 team, which slipped to sixth in the wake of Saturday's 34-30 upset at the hands of Washington State.

Notre Dame, a 22-7 winner over Navy, received 44 of 58 first-place votes and 1,144 of a possible 1,160 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters. The Irish had been second behind UCLA the last two weeks. Southern California, a 41-20 winner over

Ditka: Patriots hurt McMahon 'illegally'

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Another player intentionally twisted the knee of Chicago quarterback Jim McMahon, Bears coach Mike Ditka said Monday in announcing he would file a report with the National Football League.

"It was illegal. Somebody twisted his knee after he was hit," Ditka said.

McMahon suffered the injury in the second half of Sunday's 30-7 loss to New England and could be out from four to six weeks, his doctor said Monday.

McMahon did not suffer any torn cartilage and will not need surgery as previously feared, said team trainer Fred Caito.

Caito said Clarence Fossier, Chicago's team physician, will make another examination Tuesday and that the knee would be treated conservatively.

The linemen who were in on the tackle denied they intentionally injured McMahon.

"That's a laugh. It's a joke," defensive end Brent Williams said of Ditka's statement. "I've never tried to intentionally hurt anybody."

Tim Goad, a rookie nose tackle, said, "There was no extracurricular activity there. We didn't try to hurt Jim McMahon."

Ditka said McMahon knew he was hurt after the play.

"He was aware the knee was twisted but he walked off the field because he didn't want to show he was hurt," Ditka said. "I'm going to file a report with the league."

Ditka said Mike Tomczak would start against Tampa Bay Sunday. "I'm disappointed and I feel for Jim," Ditka said. "I felt this year he might make it all the way."

McMahon, who has had a variety of injuries causing him to miss numerous games during his seven-year career, had started nine straight games this season before.

Lemieux goes down in NHL hockey brawl

NEW YORK (AP) — Right now, New York Rangers Coach Michel Bergeron doesn't think too highly of Pittsburgh Penguins Coach Gene Ubriaco.

Nor do the Rangers think much of the Penguins as a team, and the feeling is mutual.

"It's going to be a war next time," Penguins forward Mark Kachowski said.

That would be Nov. 23, when the Rangers and Penguins will tangle in another NHL game.

If it's anything like Sunday night's brawl-filled game won 9-2 by the Rangers, then "tangle" is the apropro word. After two periods of hockey that was generally tame, the teams erupted into a violent third period that included 273 minutes in penalties.

At the end, nine players were ejected and one of them — the Rangers' David Shaw — was put on suspension until a hearing by the NHL. Shaw was handed a 10-minute match penalty for deliberate injury for slashing Pittsburgh center Mario Lemieux.

Iowa's Byron Schardt won the men's individual all-events title with a score of 2,628, nine points ahead of Ed Rondot of Michigan.

UI Fencing Club wins Halloween tourney

By Matthew Zlatnik
 The Daily Iowan

For the second consecutive year, the UI Fencing Club swept its Halloween Tournament this past weekend in Iowa City.

"The Iowa club did real well again," club vice president Bob Rosenberg said. "We had pretty good participation."

Iowa fencers Sarah Baker, Larry Segriff and Rosenberg took the top three spots in the foil competition, and in the epee contest Gene Browning of the UI club won, with Ken Baker and John Goodnow placing second and third.

There were 19 competitors in the tournament, including several fencers from outside the state.

"Last year there weren't as many from out-of-state, so that makes the win more impressive," Rosenberg said.

The club will host a novice tournament Nov. 6 in the Field House. "This is a great opportunity for the new fencers in the region to get a taste of competition against fencers of equal ability," Rosenberg said.

Members of the Iowa women's rugby club played in the Midwest

Subunion Select Side Tournament in Columbus, Ohio, this past weekend. A team comprised of rugby players from Iowa and Wisconsin defeated a Chicago-area team 12-6 and beat a Minnesota team 10-6 for the tournament championship.

"Everyone pulled together to play hard," Iowa player Cynthia Miller said. "It was great to win."

"We got second place last year, and beat them this year, so it was nice."

The UI Bowling Club won the men's Big Ten Championship this past weekend at Purdue University in West Lafayette, Ind. The Iowa club had a 12,091 pinfall total for 12 games. A team from Michigan State won the women's competition with a total of 10,043.

Iowa's Byron Schardt won the men's individual all-events title with a score of 2,628, nine points ahead of Ed Rondot of Michigan.
