Candidates make final plea to public

The jury goes out for Bush, Dukakis

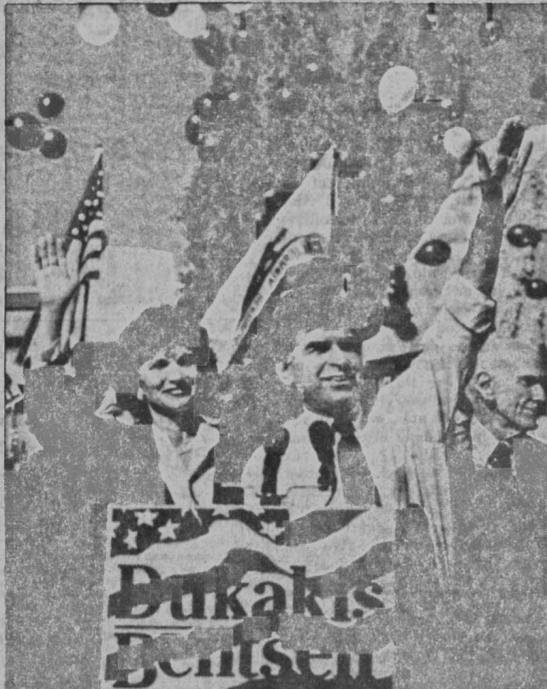

By David Espo
The Associated Press

George Bush sent his case to the voters Monday, leading in the polls as he pledged a "steady hand" at the helm to build on the accomplishments of the Reagan years. Michael Dukakis campaigned into overtime, vowing a "November surprise" that would land him in the White House.

Some polls suggested Bush's support might be eroding as both men raced across America in a final-day search for votes. Both campaigns spent nearly $1 million apiece on competing half-hour appeals on network television, and the vice president also aired a new five-minute commercial that sharply attacked his Democratic rival.

"It's in the hands of the gods and the American people," the vice president said before heading for Houston and the final rally of his candidacy. "I'm going to do my best to be a fine president and a good leader and somebody you can be proud of," Dukakis said in the closing commercial of his campaign.

"No retreat baby, no surrender," said Democratic running mate Lloyd Bentsen, echoing rock star Bruce Springsteen. Dukakis was on a 48-hour campaign blitz through 8,500 miles that wouldn't end until election morning in Boston. He told a crowd of 20,000 in California that Democrats would kick Bush "right out of our future" — and then flew off into the night.

Michael Dukakis and his wife, Kitty, spent part of the campaign's last day at a rally in San Francisco.

Party leaders take final local stand

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

Republicans and Democrats traded last-minute charges Monday over who was responsible for the relentlessly negative presidential campaign as Iowa voters prepared to render their verdict after nearly three years of watching the race unfold.

Republican Gov. Terry Branstad insisted the Democrats were to blame, pointing to hot rhetoric at the party's convention in Atlanta. Jesse Jackson, campaigning where he made his headquarters in Greenfield, Iowa, pointed to "age-old" and "ugly" tactics by Republican George Bush.

Jackson also hinted that the media was a willing partner in reducing the presidential campaign to a war of the television "sound bite."

Branstad said, "I believe that people are getting tired of negative campaigning. It started with the Democratic convention where they just unmercifully beat at George Bush, called him names, joked about him, his background and all of that sort of stuff. I think that kind of personal ridicule has no place."

Jackson, not surprisingly, offered a different view, attacking Republicans and what he called a "polling virus" that could depress turnout.

"You've been, in effect, disenfranchised by media speculation," Jackson told a breakfast meeting with supporters.

The latest charges came as politicians scurried across the state in a last-ditch effort to fire up supporters and boost turnout among the 1.69 million Iowans who are registered to vote.

They were getting a hand from the National Weather Service, which was predicting an end to the chilly, gloomy weather that's gripped the state in recent days. Forecasters predicted a classic fall day in the state, with clear skies and temperatures in the 50s.

The next round of showers was predicted to hold off until Wednesday.

The Democrats put on a big push at the end, bringing in Jackson and scheduling Michael Dukakis for a pre-dawn rally at the Des Moines airport today.

They've built a big margin in registered voters, with nearly 86,000 more registered Democrats than Republicans.

But Branstad dismissed that edge. "Regardless of how people are registered... I think you know enough about Iowa voters that most people in this state make up their own minds and no one tells them who to vote for," Branstad said. "I know that a lot of Demo-

UI market poll tempers Bush lead

By Andy Brownstein
The Daily Iowan

Going into Election Day, the UI Presidential Stock Market is predicting a considerable victory for Republican candidate George Bush.

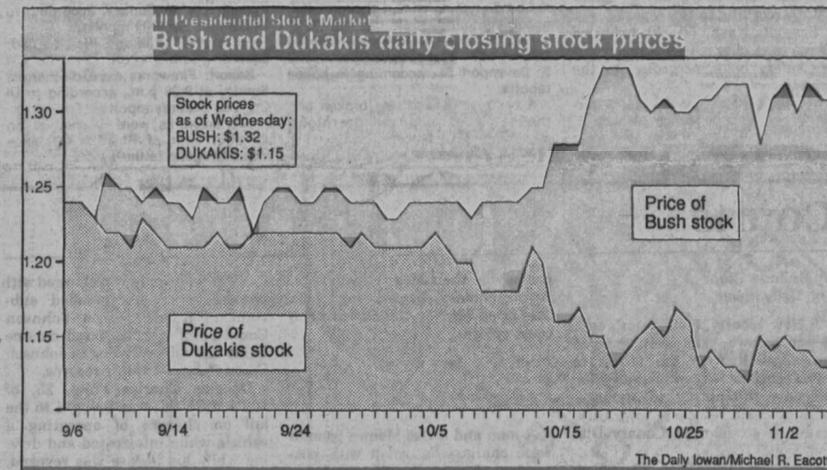

By 6 p.m. on Monday, market listings showed Bush stock selling at $1.30 and Dukakis at $1.13, with 2 percent of the total shares going toward third-party candidates. These figures translate into a 6.8 percent projected lead for the vice president in the popular vote.

Though all national polls show Bush ahead by a considerable margin, their results have been much more erratic than the UI market.

"The evidence is extremely strong that something is wrong with the opinion polls," said Forrest Nelson, associate professor of economics and co-director of the UI market. "They're either not correctly gauging the attitudes of the voters or the voters are changing their minds."

The market was created this summer as a way of specifically dealing with this problem. Because the market is based on financial incentive rather than whims or party biases, Nelson believes the results are much more accurate than those of opinion polls.

"In our market, it doesn't matter if a trader is a Bush or Dukakis supporter, so long as they're rational and have a profit motive," he said.

Nelson added that "the polls have been much further away from an even price than the market has," with shifts as large as 24 percent between the two candidates since June. The UI market, on the other hand, has never wavered more than 10 percent.

Nelson said Dukakis' most recent "media blitz" has been somewhat effective according to the national polls but has not had much effect on the UI market.

"I think his efforts are too little, too late," he said. "Here was his chance to do something, and he just repeated the same old tired platform."

Nelson said he is confident of the market's prediction of a Bush win in today's election.

"I feel quite comfortable with the 7 percent lead we have for Bush," he said. "I think the polls are too far out of line."

"While I don't think that Bush will win by a 12 percent landslide, I do think he will win by a considerable margin," Nelson said.

The UI Presidential Stock Market, which will be featured in the upcoming issue of Fortune magazine, now represents 190 traders and almost $5,000 in shares. After five months and almost 16,000 share exchanges, the market will close at 9 a.m. on Wednesday, the day after the election.

Presidential Race

Democrats expressed confidence they would command majorities in the 101st Congress that will govern alongside the new president. They also angled for modest gains in the dozen statehouse races on today's ballot.

Both presidential campaigns relied on their 30-minute network commercials to reach the millions of voters that the pollsters said hadn't yet chosen a candidate with certainty.

Bush's blended snippets of biography, family tenderness and praise from Reagan with a final taped appeal from the vice president. "Americans are better off than they were eight years ago, and if you elect me president you will be better off four years from now than you are today," he said.

He paid tribute to his rival but said he was a man without experience in national security affairs.

"I can say that I believe I have the experience to be a steady hand guiding our country," he said.

The Massachusetts governor's commercial was a similar blend of speech-making and images from the campaign trail and bosom of his family.

It showed him fielding questions on farm policy, homelessness and

For a good time, check out barroom-wall graffiti

By Heidi Mathews
The Daily Iowan

If you ever find yourself in a bar searching for a change in conversation, just take a glance at the walls or check out the bathroom stalls and tune in to the dialogue that never seems to end.

It's called graffiti, and while it's verbally silent, the song lyrics, political statements and sexual innuendos have certainly made a resounding splash in the Iowa City bars.

Graffiti has been around for thousands of years, representing every type of society, group and individual possible, on every type of surface, says Stephen Wieting, a UI sociology professor, but it's function and representation has changed over time.

"Most of us look at it (graffiti) as a nuisance because it represents redundancy and continuing stereotypes," Wieting said. "But what you have to remember is that derivative graffiti stems historically from people who were disenfranchised and used graffiti as their only means of publication."

"Generally, bar graffiti is an attempt to repeat somebody else's creative efforts," Wieting said.

Derivative graffiti is a form of expression that is not creative or original. And it screams out from the barroom plaster in mass amounts.

The Rolling Stones are quoted repeatedly on the bathroom walls of the Deadwood, 6 S. Dubuque St., giving advice to bathroom users on everything from full-time jobs — "Don't need the aggravation, I'm a lazy slob," — to soul-searching — "I look inside my head, and it's painted black."

Quips such as "Reclaim your freedom" and "A hard man is good to find" are other representatives of derivative graffiti, says Wieting, because of the non-original views and twist on words the phrases embody.

But most of the writing found in barroom bathrooms clearly revolves around a sexual theme. Popular catch phrases such as "shoot fags," "I got syphilis from a stiff-legged sheep," "sex is very humorous" and "for a good time call..." are typical of this theme and are shared by all bars, whether they're conservative or liberal.

Given the alcohol consumed by the defacers, there is a common tendency to justify the type of language scrawled on the walls, but Wieting says alcohol does not play a major role in contributing to the Local voters expected in droves

County officials say voter turnout here for today's national election is expected to be big.

That will inevitably mean long lines at polling places, which will be open from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. today.

Early this morning should be the best time to vote, according to Jeff McCullough, Johnson County deputy auditor. Most people try to vote after work, he explained, creating a rush-hour jam at polling places.

Most sites — including all of those in Iowa City, Coralville, North Liberty and University Heights — are accessible to disabled individuals, McCullough said.

"Even if they don't want to get out of their cars, there's curbside voting provided for people," he said.

Iowa law says voters are allowed three minutes to make their choices, once in the voting booth, but McCullough said that will not be enforced.

"There's no way anyone is going to be able to vote this ballot in three minutes," he said.

A public debate sponsored by the UI Forensic Union on the issue of sanctions against South Africa will be held from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Main Library, Shambaugh Auditorium.

Senior Beth Lucht and sophomore John Nugent will affirm the resolution that "the 1988 House bill establishing additional U.S. sanctions against South Africa should become law." Freshman Peder Barling and junior Cary Stamp will negate.

The debate is the third of four to be held this fall in Shambaugh Auditorium. The last is scheduled for Nov. 30.

Streb announces City Council candidacy

Iowa City resident Mary Jo Streb announced Friday that she will seek a position on the Iowa City Council.

Streb, 703 Benton Court, has turned in the necessary nomination papers that guarantee her a spot on the ballot and will run for the three-year term vacated by George Strait.

Streb is the co-owner of Streb Construction Co. Inc., a realtor with Williams Realty Co., and owner and manager of U Store All. She has also served three years on the Iowa City Housing Commission and was a candidate for council appointment when Kate Dickson resigned in August.

Streb said her experience as a resident, student, mother, wife, businesswoman and property owner give her the experience to make the decisions faced by the council.

Luce has been the director of the Asian Resource Center in Washington, D.C., since 1979. He has lectured and written extensively about the culture, politics and economies of Southeast Asia, and has also contributed to and coordinated production of several television documentaries on the area.

Reception to honor All-State musicians

Hills Bank and Trust Company is sponsoring a reception today honoring All-State music students from the Iowa City Community School District.

The event will take place from 6:45 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. at the Iowa City Central Administration Office, 509 S. Dubuque St., and will recognize musicians and their parents for the efforts they have made in qualifying for the All-State Music Festival.

The students will be officially recognized at 7:30 p.m. during the School Board meeting.

Traditionally, Iowa City has had the largest number of students qualifying for the All-State Festival of any community in Iowa. In addition, the concert mistress (the first violin position) of the All-State orchestra has been from Iowa City the past five years.

Referendum will decide role of Iowa's leaders

By Matt Devine
The Daily Iowan

If Gov. Terry Branstad is ever incapacitated, he wants another Republican to fill his shoes.

Referenda on the ballot today ask Iowans whether the governor and lieutenant governor should be elected as a team and whether the lieutenant governor should have the duties provided by law and assigned by the governor.

A yes vote on the issue would give the governor freedom to choose his own lieutenant governor at the party's nominating convention. It would also change the role of the lieutenant governor from president of the senate to a close adviser to the governor, transferring traditional duties from the legislative branch to the executive branch. The senate would elect its own president.

Advocates of the amendments to the state constitution said the measure would strengthen both the legislative and executive branches and most importantly, guarantee continuity to the office of governor in the event the incumbent was incapacitated.

The order of progression stipulates the lieutenant governor would be first in line for a transfer of power. Supporters believe the lieutenant governor should be of similar political bent as the governor.

"Under our current system, there's no guarantee of continuity in political philosophy," said Dick Vohs, Branstad's press secretary.

The people already have the power to match political parties in the two posts under the present system of casting separate votes in the gubernatorial and lieutenant governor contest, said Minnette Doderer (D-Iowa City). The amendment would shift the power of selecting a lieutenant from the people to the politicians.

The past two lieutenant governors have been Democrats under a Republican governor.

"The people decided they wanted a Democrat in the lieutenant's position," Doderer said. "What makes you think that Democrats all think alike or Republicans all think alike?"

Doderer said the likelihood of a lieutenant governor rising to the governor's slot under Branstad is slim.

"He's a pretty healthy young man," she said.

In some states the lieutenant governor heads the department of economic development, but Vohs didn't say whether such a title is in the cards for Iowa's No. 2 executive if the referenda pass Tuesday.

Vohs said both Branstad and Jo Ann Zimmerman, current lieutenant governor and a Democrat, have been mentioned as potential gubernatorial candidates in 1990.

The amendment would ease tensions between a governor and a rival lieutenant governor who's gunning for his seat, Vohs said.

Doderer said such rivalries aren't new to the territory.

"The governor is always going to be suspicious of the lieutenant governor," she said.

The change wouldn't shrink government and make it more efficient as some supporters claim, Doderer said. She said the amendment would add a new post, plus staff, to the executive branch payroll. And taxpayers would pick up the bill.

"Twenty-one states have a lieutenant governor in the executive branch," she said. "They all have much bigger budgets."

Political scientists in the 1960s first suggested a two-tiered ticket combining the party's governor and lieutenant governor nominees on the ballot. The theory was that such a partnership would strengthen state government against increasingly broad federal mandates.

"It would make the executive branch more efficient," Vohs said.

"We don't need to strengthen the state government," said Doderer.

"We have enough power. We just need more money from the feds."

Students overlook parking lot

By Diana Wallace
The Daily Iowan

In the midst of the UI's continuing parking dilemma, the UI Parking and Transportation Department decided this fall to silence some detractors by converting a student storage lot into a student parking lot.

The only problem is, the students seem to be ignoring it. David Ricketts, UI director of parking and transportation, said he can't understand why students haven't been using the newly converted replacement parking lot, located south of the UI Main Library on Madison Street between Prentiss and Harrison streets.

"It's the strangest thing," Ricketts said. "It's the only parking lot on campus I could show you at any time during the day that would be almost completely empty."

Ricketts said that the 224-space lot, which has 10-hour meters and the cheapest metered parking on campus at 30 cents per hour, has attracted only about 10 to 20 cars

"It's the only parking lot on campus I could show you at any time during the day that would be almost completely empty." — Dave Ricketts, UI director of parking and transportation per day since being converted at the beginning of the fall semester. Leanna McGuire, office coordinator for parking and transportation, said the department has made an effort to get the word out about the new lot.

"When students register their cars with us we outline the various parking areas available to them," McGuire said. "And at night we go around the library where the cars are really packed in and put memos on the windshields about the new lot."

But Ricketts said the location of the lot, which is four blocks away from the Main Library, might be part of the reason students are avoiding it.

"I guess their resistance is because they don't want to walk this far," he said.

The converted lot is just one of several efforts the department is making to compensate for parking spots continually lost to various building projects, such as the 99 spaces that will be given up north of the Union when construction of the UI's new laser facility begins.

"We're anticipating the loss of a lot more parking spots in the future. There's things going on all the time," Ricketts said, citing such possible projects as a new college administration building, an expansion of the engineering building and "dozens of others."

One immediate project the department is working on is the addition of 85 metered student parking spots directly south of the Main Library along the railroad tracks.

But Ricketts said the installation of these spots, which was supposed to occur this fall, has been set back.

"I don't see it being very likely until next spring," he said. "Everything's been set back due to the weather and the controversy surrounding the conversion of the Union Field last summer."

UI administrators originally planned to replace parking lost to the construction of the laser center by converting about one-half of the Union Field into a temporary parking lot. An alternate proposal involving the construction of a lot on the site of the Old Music Building was adopted following student outcry. The date for completion of the new lot, however, is indefinite.

In the meantime, the UI community is forced to make due with what parking that's currently available, including the new replacement parking lot.

UI boilers to get mufflers by winter

By John Bartenhagen
The Daily Iowan

Stop the whining. That's what a flood of callers to the UI Physical Plant have been saying about an "unanticipated resonance" in a new boiler system first fired up this fall.

Now the system's manufacturer, working with physical plant employees, is conducting a final series of tests this week that will save the eardrums of local residents one way or the other.

"Until we get that thing fixed, there's no way we'll fire it up for good again," Don Paul, power plant manager, said.

When the new system was first tested this fall, it produced a whine caused by air being pulled through the boilers and into the smokestack.

Paul said a silencer or "muffler" will be designed to fit the $8.5 million fluidized bed boiler system. Testing, which is scheduled for between the hours of noon and 10 p.m., may be completed as early as Thursday, but Paul said there's no way to be sure.

"We have to get more noise data before we can figure out exactly what to do with it," Paul said. "But I couldn't really say for sure when the testing will be done, because we haven't arrived at the problem yet."

Paul said he hopes to have the silencer installed by sometime in December.

"It'll probably be after the first of the year before we'll get the boiler going again — at least, that's what we're hoping," he said.

John Schenk said a total of 16 hours of testing is still needed, adding that it will be done as the weather permits.

Schenk said the state-of-the-art boiler system, built by Riley Stoker Corp. of Worcester, Mass., will operate more efficiently and economically than the old system and incorporates new technology that will significantly reduce the emission of sulphur and other pollutants.

Sulfur emission will be reduced by adding lime to the coal prior to the burning process. Limestone neutralizes the sulfur in the coal so the by-product is less harmful.

The boiler system, which is projected to save the UI an average of $2 million per year over the boiler's expected life of 25 years, will be able to burn 50,000 of the 140,000 tons expected to be used in the current academic year. The other 90,000 tons will be burned in the five oil- or gas-fired boilers already operating in the physical plant on the corner of Burlington Street and Riverside Drive.

The five boilers now in operation burn a relatively inexpensive Kentucky coal, while the new boiler is equipped to burn Iowa coal.

Iowa coal contains more sulfur than coal mined in several other states. Iowa coal is about 4 percent sulfur, while coal mined in Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Wyoming is less than 2 percent sulfur.

High-sulfur coal is potentially more harmful to the environment than lower-sulfur coal, but if the pollutants can be economically treated before by-products are released into the air, money can be saved by using the lower grade, high-sulfur coal.

Schenk said Riley Stoker is absorbing all costs involved in silencing the system and guarantees that the muffler will bring the UI power plant into full compliance with OSHA and Iowa City noise standards.

New era begins today

After a year and a half of campaign rhetoric, today represents the bottom line of what it's all about.

Here's a chart of the major candidates on today's Johnson County ballot. It's a long ballot and should take you some time to complete.

We recommend you go to the polls prepared — organize your thoughts before entering the voting booth.

This chart might help you keep all of the races straight in your mind and reduce the amount of time you spend voting. That's something to keep in mind — turnout is expected to be heavy today, county officials say.
