Pomerantz denies GOP sways board
By Andy Bresadhon
The Daily Iowan
After nearly two weeks of open and sometimes bitter debate, Senate Democrats last week sidestepped the alleged interference of GOP fundraising with the legislation process, at least for now. Senate Republicans contended that Pomerantz has been using fundraising, political pressure, and public speaking, which the resolution states, "has nothing to do with the [legislative] process." "Our goal is to pass legislation, not pay for the campaign," said Sen. Don Shoultz, D-Olde. "That's the job of the Senate, not the Assembly or the Legislature." Pomerantz denied all allegations that his fundraising efforts were related to the legislative process. "I've never said a word about the legislative process," he said. "I've never even discussed the legislative process with somebody."

Residents discuss formation of local Rainbow Coalition

By Jennifer Messenger

Iowa City residents discussed the local implications of forming a Johnson County Rainbow Coalition at an event this week.

The National Rainbow Coalition, a group that is planning to form a local chapter, invited Jennifer Messenger, an Iowa City resident, to speak at an event in Iowa City. The National Rainbow Coalition is a national organization that is dedicated to promoting diversity and equality. The group aims to bring awareness to the importance of diversity and inclusion.

Messenger discussed the potential benefits of forming a local Rainbow Coalition in Iowa City. She emphasized the importance of creating a safe and supportive environment for all individuals, regardless of their background.

The National Rainbow Coalition recently held an event in Iowa City to discuss the formation of a local chapter. The event was attended by several Iowa City residents, including Messenger.

The group plans to hold more events and meetups in the future to bring awareness to the importance of diversity and inclusion.

Local group forges trust to end war

By Kathleen Brill

Since biblical times Israelis and Palestinians have been neighbors, descendants of Abraham. Thus, Barak's peace talk may have a different meaning than those of the past. A new, small group has held a public meeting Sunday night in the Iowa City Public Library. Palestinian and Israeli residents of Iowa and nearby states will work together to promote peace and healing through all the generations. All are welcome.

"We're not going to discuss boundaries... We want to get to know each other," said Abrahamian. Abrahamian is a sophomore IT favors a peace agreement, citing "I have believed in the possibility of widespread, comprehensive, genuine peace between Palestinian and Jews, but...

He said that a realistic agreement in which he will not be involved in, the group, he said, "We're about looking forward to working together and talking," Crawford said.

The purpose of the gathering is to look at the possibilities of working together so they can be more effective together.

The group hopes the meeting will mean more cooperation between local Palestinian and Jewish leaders, he added.

"We're going to have to listen to people we don't understand," he said.

The group plans to follow closely developments in the region through television and radio..." Crawford said.

The Palestinian Liberation Organization's request for Israel to end the "customs" is being ignored with immunity by the Israeli government, he said.

"This is the issue that is Israel... it is the most serious," Crawford said.

Reporters and others speaking about the situation are widespread, said Tom Bohske, director of the Iowa State Council of Foreign Relations.

"I think this trick is going to be deadly because there's an active group of Palestinians," Bohske said.

"There's a generational gap in Israel..." so it is not happening," Crawford said.

Shoemaker said this perception of Israeli suffers is overly broad.

"Most of the people were never in the occupied territories until the Six Day War," he said.

Banks have been able to lend money to underwrite businesses. We want to get to know each other," said Abrahamian. Abrahamian is a sophomore while, "We have some issues here that are important to us..." he said.

In Iowa City, Iowa
On Friday, February 1, 1989

The recent events in the University of Iowa's history have impacted its administration and the board of regents. Dr. Harold Pomerantz, the university's president, addressed the auditorium to discuss the current situation and to ask for faculty and student support.

Pomerantz said, "The board of regents has taken extraordinary actions over the past year to improve the university's fiscal and strategic position. These actions have included cutting the budget, increasing tuition, and reducing administrative costs. In addition, the university has been working hard to attract new students and improve its ranking in the national universities."

The board of regents has decided to continue these efforts, and Pomerantz urged faculty and students to support these initiatives. "We need the support of our faculty and students to make this effort successful," he said.

BALSA fumes following partial Black History Month funding

By Diane Wallace

The Daily Iowan

When the Collegiate Association Council voted in early October to fully fund police programs for the Spring Semester, members of the Black America Student Association were left feeling frustrated. Several representatives of Balsa felt that funding was based on past allocations, approximately $3,000, from a fund raised including a Black History Festival, an anti-recruit seminar, a program for Martin Luther King Jr. Day, and a tribute to local black professionals and student scholars who were included in the event.

In light of CAC’s decisions to allocate $600 to the group at the time of their initial request, BALSA made an appeal to Student Senate. During Tuesday night’s meeting to discuss additional funding for their specific event, the group presented a proposal that would allow them to receive $3,600. The Student Senate President, President Gordon Fischer said, “I think what we are doing right now in BALSA is important. We, as a council, need to support BALSA.” Other members of Balsa are not so sure. “I don’t think many of us were treated fairly,” said Rodney. “I don’t know why we’ve been treated this way.”

Meanwhile, Student Senator, Pete Von Briel said, “They said they were doing right by CAC by not making decisions, but we just don’t have enough funding to feed our organization.”

“I think we should back some funding for the Student Bar Association,” said Rodney. “But members of BALSA say they don’t think they were treated fairly.”

Property taxes for fiscal year 1999 may not be assessed on the entire $1.4 billion proposed budget. The City Council decided to reject a series of over $200,000 of the city’s proposed budget. Council members raised questions during the opening Council meeting about the $1.4 billion budget. The decision was made to table the budget for the next meeting. The decision to table the budget would include the creation of a new administration position. The new administration position would cost $200,000 and would employ a person with an advanced degree, offering training and a proposed police reserve officer program.

In order to avoid the tax increase, the new police chief would make some recommendations. The council was also aware of the current City Manager’s proposal to increase the police budget. The chief would be selected by Alkire with the approval of the City Manager. The new police chief would also report to Alkire. The new police chief would be responsible for the department's budget and policy. The new police chief would also be responsible for the department’s budget and policy. WASHINGTON -- The judge in Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial has heard some people tell about their large open-source day and there could be problems with the "validity of the evidence," he wrote Monday in a letter to the defense.

The case is considered one of the most complex in the history of warfare, and won't be completely understood by most people who watch it, he said.

"We're not sure what it means to be a war," North wrote Monday. ...
Nicaragua: The government and opposition failures

Nicaragua, Washington (AP) - Opposers and supporters of the Sandinistas have been split over the government's economic policy, with neither side gaining an advantage. The opposition, led by the Sandinistas, has been critical of the government's handling of the economy, while the government, led by the Sandinistas, has been critical of the opposition's strategy.

Opposition leaders have accused the government of being too soft on the Sandinistas, while government officials have accused the opposition of being too hard on the Sandinistas. The government has also been criticized for its handling of the budget, with some members of the government calling for a more austere approach.

The government has been praised for its efforts to reduce the budget deficit, but critics argue that this has been at the expense of social spending. The government has also been criticized for its handling of the crisis in the country, with some critics accusing the government of being too slow to respond to the needs of the people.

The opposition has been praised for its efforts to mobilize the people, but critics argue that this has been at the expense of economic growth. The opposition has also been criticized for its handling of the economy, with some critics accusing the opposition of being too soft on the Sandinistas.

The country faces a number of challenges, including a high budget deficit, a weak economy, and a political crisis. The government and opposition will need to work together to address these challenges and find a way forward.
Tempering a pro-life posture

I learned about abortion in high school. No, not from a preposterous—

from the hands of professors in our biology class. They would walk us through the various stages of pregnancy and embryonic development, step by step. We were fascinated by the intricacies of life at that stage. But when it came to abortion, the discussions were more subdued. It was a sensitive topic, and the profs didn’t press too hard. It was as if they understood our general unease with the idea of ending a life.

But the topic crept into the conversation anyway. We heard about it from our parents, who were voluble on the subject. They talked about the sanctity of life and the importance of protecting it. They also talked about the various moral and religious arguments against abortion.

I remember thinking that it was all very abstract and disconnected from my own life. I couldn’t relate to the arguments either way. It was like a distant battle of principles.

When I got to college, the issue came into sharper focus. We had debates in class, and I remember feeling quite uncomfortable. I didn’t want to take a stand because I didn’t feel equipped to do so. I felt like I was treading on dangerous ground. It was a time when I was trying to figure out who I was, and the abortion debate seemed to represent the extremes of who people were. So I stayed silent.

A few years later, when I started writing, I realized that the abortion debate was a key issue in society. It was something that people felt very strongly about. I began to see that it wasn’t just a matter of personal beliefs, but a question of values and principles. It was a complex issue, and one that needed to be addressed.

So I started writing about it, trying to understand both sides. I spoke with pro-life advocates and pro-choice advocates, and I listened to them share their stories. It was a humbling experience. I realized how much I didn’t know.

It took me a long time to come to any kind of conclusion. I still don’t feel like I have all the answers. But I do feel like I’ve gained a deeper appreciation for the complexity of the issue. I’ve learned to respect the perspectives of others, even if I don’t agree with them. And I’ve learned that the real issue is not whether we choose to end a life, but how we approach the decision. It’s about how we treat the human beings that are affected by the choices we make.

So I’m not sure where I stand. But I do know that I’m trying to make sense of it all. I’m trying to understand, to learn, to grow. And I’m thanking all those who have shared their stories with me. They’ve helped me see the humanity in this debate.

Iowa's major newspaper is plagued by district editors who are too close to the real world

At least one observer of Iowa City's news media would like to see district editors removed from the industry. The district editors, who are often editors or teachers, are responsible for the news media and are paid by the public. They are not paid by the public, and they do not have any responsibility for the public. They are paid by the public, and they do have responsibility for the public.

CHICAGO — Illinois' Buddy Davis has kept a lot of people out of state, and he's been enough of a surprise to make them wonder if he's really good enough to keep his spot in the lineup. When Davis stepped on the court for the first time this season, many people were surprised to see the 4-foot-11, 215-pound senior from Iowa City. But after a season of stellar play, Davis has become a key member of the Fighting Illini's basketball team.

Davis leads the Illini in scoring, rebounding, and assists, and he's been a key factor in their success this season. He has scored in double figures in every game but one and has averaged over 15 points per game. He also leads the team in rebounding with 6.5 rebounds per game and has dished out a solid 3.5 assists per game.

Davis' ability to get to the rim and finishing strong has been a key factor in the team's success. He has a quick first step and is able to get by defenders with ease. His ability to get to the free-throw line has been key as well, as he has shot 80% from the line this season.

Davis' success has surprised even his teammates. "He's been a shock to us all," said senior guard Darius Thomas. "He's been a complete surprise to us, and we're all happy to have him on our team."

Sheriff won't comment on skiing death

ELMIRA, N.Y. (AP) - Sheriff Roy Garrison on Friday night and Tuesday night to either support or refute allegations by Vail officials that a New York sheriff in the town where Vail Ski Resort is located was involved in an accident in which an actor was killed.

Garrison, who has not commented on the investigation into the death, said he would not give comments on the case.

Some ski patrol workers said it was unclear who was involved in the accident.

NHL's Adams Division. The Whalers, who are 4-2-1 since Jan. 21, will try to either support or refute contentions by Vail officials that a New York sheriff in the town where Vail Ski Resort is located was involved in an accident in which an actor was killed.

Leonard-Hearns rematch will battle ‘Father Time’

NEW YORK (AP) — The research between Sugar Ray Leonard and Thomas Hearns has ended. Now, it's on to the ring.

"It's just not shit all in, maybe, for the two of them," said Keith Scott, a boxing trainer. "It's that.

"If he's bringing up a meeting this time, he can bring up the meeting this time. But you don't bring up the talks. You just bring up the talks.

"We're still bringing you, Tomatoes. When they'll be better, it'll be in time. But you don't bring up the talks.

"I'm just bringing the talks.

"If he's bringing up the talks, he's bringing up the talks. It's not on your orders, too, with the talks.

"You don't bring up the talks when the talks are not there. They are not there. I don't feel the greatest in the world about Ray Leonard."

Hearns has fought Leonard, who is 52, and Hearns, 49, in the June 12 fight during a news conference Saturday in the Big House. Leonard has the advantage in age and size, but Hearns had the advantage in height and reach.

Leonard will be fighting for the Council super featherweight title on the line when the two met at the Convention Palace indoor stadium in Las Vegas.

"We've played seven big basketball ball teams and we're tired to the game for a white but ball because we did not handle the ball well and are not rebounding well," said Coach Bob Wade.

Maryland program skids

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) - The Maryland basketball program is now facing the 23rd loss of a season.

"This is the low point of my career," said Coach Bob Wade. "We're going to try to hang in against good teams is more for the Terps at this time. Hanging to against good teams in not enough for the Terps at this point." "It's beyond rehabilitation," guard Greg "It's just plain living now. We just want it to game." "We've played seven big basketball ball teams and we're tired to the game for a white but ball because we did not handle the ball well and are not rebounding well," said Coach Bob Wade.

Brecht's "Galileo" brings reaction, thought to Mabi

by Steve T. Donoghue

The Daily Iowan

The University Theatre will present Bertolt Brecht's classic play "The Life of Galileo" on stage at 8 p.m. Feb. 3, 4, 10 and 11 in the UI Theatre Building. Following prologue before a stage plunge, Brecht's controversial play is a powerful and thought-provoking examination of the life of Galileo Galilei, the 17th-century Italian astronomer and physicist who became a symbol of scientific progress and the embodiment of the spirit of inquiry.

The play is inspired by the life of the 17th-century Italian astronomer, who was forced to an attack against the Inquisition, to conserve his safety and personal risk in preserving his theory that the earth revolves around the sun. "Early weight and then they try every means to prevent that idea," said a Brecht scholar. "It's a very different way, and the audience is to think about it, to think about the ideas they think they're beholden to, and to think about the possibilities for a different way of thinking.""Th e play addresses those concerns in its intricate and thought-provoking structure, as characters are presented in a series of scenes that explore the ideas and conflicts of their time. The play's themes of the fear of losing one's livelihood, the importance of scientific inquiry, and the power of the Church are all presented in a way that invites the audience to question their own beliefs and values.

Brecht himself wrote the play at the height of the cold war, and the University Theatre's production has rescheduled the play in response to current events, particularly the controversy surrounding the Inquisition and Galileo's eventual release from prison. "The play is a powerful reminder of the importance of scientific inquiry and the need to protect free thought," said the University Theatre's artistic director. "The play is a powerful reminder of the importance of scientific inquiry and the need to protect free thought for the sake of future generations."

As for the University Theatre's decision to reduce the number of performances, the artistic director explained that it was a necessary step to ensure the safety and well-being of the audience. "The play is not meant to be performed in its current state, and it is our responsibility to ensure that the audience is protected," said the artistic director. "We have decided to reduce the number of performances to ensure that the audience is safe and that the play is presented in a manner that is appropriate for its content.

Concert goers nearly upstage pianist Uchida

By Steve T. Seabrooke

The Daily Iowan

Certainly Mitsuko Uchida intended to give a spot performance. But, by some odd twist of fate, the stage dressed in a black and gold tunic for the first half of Thursday night's program, turned especially delicate at the piece's close, bringing them together into a semblance of the flavor of what she was playing.

A master pianist, they're not exactly bound just a little odd when played by the Hancher Hackel'll, and the program's second half didn't help much. The fail to bound just a little odd when played by a master pianist. And they're not exactly substitute for mainspring of the night involved with the fourth Etude, certainly Mitsuko Uchida.
