Congress debates raise

Wright's plans for rollback come under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Thursday night voted to reject a proposed 51 percent congressional pay raise, but Speaker Jim Wright said the House would let it take effect next week and then vote to reduce it to "a decent raise" of 30 percent.

The Senate voted 95-5 to reject the raise for Congress and other top federal officials, and to change the law to eliminate current procedures that allow a pay increase to take effect without a vote.

The vote against the pay increase was lopsided but largely symbolic, since both chambers must vote to block it. House procedures make it easier to protect a pay raise in that chamber, and Wright, D-Texas, continued as the main target of opponents as he maneuvered to protect most of the raise.

House members' public positions, like those of the Senate, have been overwhelmingly against the 51 percent pay increase, which must be disapproved by both chambers before Feb. 8 or it will automatically take effect.

But Wright said Thursday a "clear majority" of the House privately supported his plan for dodging a pre-deadline vote and then voting a partial rollback of the raise along with a ban on honoraria.

However, the restrictive parliamentary procedure planned by the speaker requires a tough two-thirds vote before the bill could be sent to the Senate. The 51 percent raise would remain in effect unless both chambers agreed to cut it back, and House opponents vowed to roll it back to zero whether Wright wins or loses.

"It would be very difficult for the speaker to find two-thirds for this resolution," said Rep. Tom Tauke, R-Iowa, even though Wright's tactic would force pay-raise opponents to appear to be voting to protect the full pay increase.

Wright released partial results of a personal questionnaire, showing 57 percent of House members opposing a pay-raise vote before the deadline and 54 percent favoring instead a vote to reduce the raise to 30 percent.

The $26,850 pay raise he was proposing was "a decent raise but not an exorbitant raise," Wright said, compared with the $45,500 increase proposed by former President Ronald Reagan and endorsed by President George Bush.

The 30 percent figure was equal to the amount of income House members could lose in a ban on honoraria. The Senate figure is $35,800, as senators are currently allowed to retain honoraria equal to 40 percent of their salaries.

House members would still make the same amount of money they make now, he said. "The difference is we will be serving one master, not two; that is, the American people," he said.

Actually, most House members would find their incomes substantially increased, since fewer than half reach the current honoraria limit of 30 percent of income, according to their financial disclosures.

Wright said it was his intention that all top federal officials, including federal judges, would receive the same increase. Under his strategy, federal judges might still win the full 51 percent pay increase, since under the Constitution those new salaries cannot be reduced once enacted.

Wright has met with House Republican leader Bob Michel of Illinois to solicit his endorsement of the plan. Wright was joined at his news conference only by four leading Democratic members, and the second-ranked Republican in the House supported the concept of a dollar-for-dollar trade-off of salary for honoraria.

Senate committee delays vote on Tower Cabinet confirmation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Armed Services Committee postponed Thursday's expected vote on the nomination of John Tower, and the panel's top Republican said a meeting had been scheduled with the FBI concerning President George Bush's choice as defense secretary.

Tower, a one-time chairman of the committee, had appeared on a clear path to confirmation after telling his former colleagues he had no alcohol problem and would not be swayed by past business ties with defense contractors.

But committee chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., interrupted a hearing on another matter Thursday to say the panel was not ready to act.

Nunn had said a day earlier that he expected a favorable vote on Thursday. In his new comments he said, "The file is still not complete, and there are members now who have made a request to review certain items in the files, so we will not be voting today."

At the White House, Bush spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the administration had only sketchy information about why the committee wanted more time. "Obviously, the president has confidence in Mr. Tower. He urges prompt consideration of his nomination," Fitzwater said.

Nunn said, "We will announce as soon as we are able to as to the definite date of the vote."

The committee's ranking Republican, Sen. John Warner of Virginia, said he and Nunn "have been looking at some additional information that has come to the attention of the two of us," and had scheduled a meeting with the FBI later in the day.

Warner, asked if the information included allegations against Tower, told reporters: "Just information that I would not attach any measure of credibility or non-credibility to."

He said he and Nunn are "absolutely determined to do a very thorough job. We've done it this far."

Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., a member of the committee, was asked if the information dealt with Tower's personal or professional life. "Possibilities in both areas," he said.

Lott said Nunn and Warner want to make sure "that every possible question, every possible lead" is resolved. But he added, "I don't think this one is going to be protracted unless some new things come out."

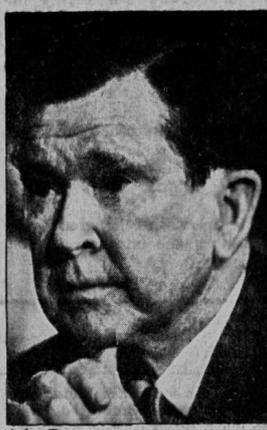

Nunn had said Wednesday he expected the panel to vote Thursday to recommend that the Senate confirm Tower's nomination. He also said the committee was awaiting additional information from the White House on Tower.

Although the hearings for Tower have lasted longer than those for other nominees to Bush's Cabinet, the senators have treated him politely.

In his testimony on the fourth and final day of hearings, Tower rebutted allegations made Tuesday by conservative activist Paul Weyrich that Weyrich had "on a number of occasions" seen Tower publicly inebriated and in the company of women other than his wife.

Asked by Nunn if he had a drinking problem, Tower replied: "I have none. I am a man of some discipline."

The 63-year-old former senator told the committee: "It is essential that the secretary of defense be at all times capable of exercising the duties and responsibilities of his office, some of which are even more sensitive and more critical than the general public realizes.

"Therefore I think there should be zero toleration of anyone as secretary of defense or any other sensitive job in the Defense Department who has an alcohol problem."

Weyrich will be out of town until next week and was unavailable for comment on Tower's remarks, said a spokesman at Weyrich's Coalitions for America office.

Radioactive 'Zadar!' premieres at Hancher

By Locke Peterseim
The Daily Iowan

Tonight, Iowa City will get a chance to see what came of all the fuss last summer as Hancher Auditorium hosts the world premiere of Duck's Breath Mystery Theatre's "Zadar! Cow From Hell."

And just what is "Zadar! Cow From Hell?"

"It's a zany, little weird movie," said Duck Dan Coffey, who stayed behind in Iowa City and teaches a radio-production class at the UI.

"It's a postcard to Iowa, from the cynical folks in L.A.," said Duck and "Zadar!" screenwriter Merle Kessler who didn't.

"It's a slice o' life," said Duck's Breath Manager Steve Baker.

"It's a story about people in transition, holding up the American family for examination," said "Zadar!" director Bob Hughes in The Hollywood Reporter Jan. 20.

On a more concrete level, "Zadar!" is a film within a film. It's the story of a Hollywood movie crew that arrives in Iowa to make a seedy horror film about a radioactive cow. But after the filmmakers alienate the locals, the Iowans take over the production and make their own film.

"Zadar! Cow From Hell" was filmed in Iowa City and nearby communities last May and June. Not only did the filmmakers use locals as extras — and for more than half of the film's 40 speaking roles — but they also relied heavily on the use of the UI Communication Studies Department facilities and volunteer help from UI film students.

So "Zadar!" and its Duck's Breath stars roll back into town tonight for the big premiere — there will be screenings of "Zadar" at Hancher Auditorium tonight at 8 and Saturday at 7 and 10 p.m. — but they won't be here to just flash the finished product and fly back to parts west.

"('Zadar!') is almost as much a community film as it is a Duck's Breath Film," Baker said. And with that in mind, the filmmakers are hoping to

City plans use for Holiday Inn debt payback

By Paige Bierma
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City Council members have begun considering how to spend the $4.4 million they will be receiving from the Holiday Inn over the next 20 years. The payment will be made in monthly payments of $20,000.

The city applied for a federal Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG) five years ago to encourage economic development by loaning the Holiday Inn, 210 S. Dubuque St., the money to be for start-up costs.

The company agreed to begin paying the city back after five years and began payments in December.

City allocation of the money is restricted to some extent by federal UDAG guidelines, but the council will have considerable flexibility, said City Manager Stephen Atkins.

UI housing cat owners face ouster ultimatum

By Troy Stanton
The Daily Iowan

Either the kitty goes, or you go. That is the ultimatum the UI Family Housing Office recently presented to a UI student and his wife.

Eric Creach, 24, said he and his wife received notice that they must either give up their cat, or move out by spring break.

Although leases for married student housing specify that no pets are allowed, Creach said family housing officials misled him when he signed his contract.

"It's there in black and white, but when we entered, we asked if it was enforced. They said there were many pet owners living in student housing and they were actually thinking of getting rid of (the rule)," Creach said.

Creach said he has experienced no problems with his pets during the 2½ years he has lived in in family housing. However, rumors that all of the approximately 300 cat owners in family housing would receive eviction notices prompted him to call the humane society, he said.

"The options given were to either move out as soon as possible or get rid of the cats," he said. "There's no way we're getting rid of our cats, though."

Ursula Delworth, vice president of the Johnson County Humane Society, then contacted George Droll, See Cats, Page 4A

UI religion professor speaks at lecture

George Forell, Carver Professor of Religion in the UI School of Religion, will speak on teaching religion in schools during the sixth annual UI Presidential Lecture, at 2:30 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 19, in Clapp Recital Hall. Forell will speak on "The Sacred and the Secular — Religion in a State University."

Forell, who will retire from full-time teaching on June 30 after 35 years at the UI, says the subject of his talk is as timely today as it was when the School of Religion was founded in 1927.

"My talk will raise the whole question of why one should teach religion in a secular university. When the UI School of Religion was founded, it was thought of not only as an academic department, but also as a chaplain's corps for the university," Forell said.

"Some outsiders thought of the professors as Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish chaplains. This has completely changed, and, in my opinion, for the better. That was an inappropriate function; the university should not be in the business of organizing worship," he said.

Forell said many contemporary world conflicts have a religious dimension.

"Religion, for most people in the world, is a communal thing. People identify themselves communally through their religion. Religious conflicts are very often communal conflicts," he said.

Forell, one of the world's foremost authorities on the work of Martin Luther, is the author of more than 100 articles, reviews and commentaries, as well as some 20 books on religion, religious ethics and Luther.

A reception at the UI Museum of Art at 3:30 p.m. will follow the lecture.

As a part of the Presidential Lecture, the UI Museum of Art will present an exhibition of prints and drawings Feb. 11 through April 9, titled, "And There Was Light: Scenes from the Old and New Testaments." Both the lecture and the reception are free and open to the public.

The library's children's room will also have a display of Coretta Scott King Award-winning books and others that celebrate black Americans.

The library will also have available copies of tax forms, income tax preparation guides and Internal Revenue Service regulations.

Compassionate Friends support group to meet

The monthly meeting of the Compassionate Friends support group will be held on Monday at 7:30 p.m. at Mercy Hospital, first floor conference room.

Jane Anderson, a psychologist in private practice, will present the program on "Children, the Forgotten Grievers/Siblings of Grief."

Compassionate Friends is a self-help group offering friendship and understanding to bereaved parents. The purposes are to promote and aid parents and siblings in the positive resolution of the grief experience and to foster the physical and emotional health of parents and siblings.

Los Angeles filmmaker to give talk, show video

Jesus Trevino, Chicano film screenwriter, producer and director from Los Angeles, will give a lecture entitled "Directing Afterschool Specials" at 3:30 p.m. Friday, Feb. 3 in the Communication Studies Building.

County increase in crime rate leads state with 30 percent

By Heather Maher
The Daily Iowan

The crime rate in Johnson County jumped nearly 30 percent from 1987 to 1988 — an increase County Attorney J. Patrick White said is dramatic.

"Our statistics indicate that total criminal activity has increased dramatically, and the majority of those consist of indictable misdemeanors," White said.

According to a report from the county attorney's office, a total of 1,878 criminal cases were filed in 1987. In 1988, 2,604 cases were filed, constituting an increase of 826 cases. Since 1982, the number of criminal cases has increased 1,458.

The bottom line of such statistics is that criminal activity in Johnson County has increased more in the past year than it has in any of the past six.

White hasn't given a reason why such a noticeable increase has occurred, but he did say the rise was probably due to a number of factors.

The number of cases involving drunken drivers has also significantly increased in the past year. That figure is up 330 from 1987 levels and up 580 since 1982.

White said earlier that most people, including those arrested for drunken driving, are unaware what amount of alcohol consumption causes impairment.

The increase of criminal and civil cases translates into a heavier workload for the attorney's office. In September of last year, the staff was handling more than 200 active cases at a time.

Johnson County's rate appears to be unique in its dramatic upswing. White said that in other Iowa counties, crime is rising at normal levels.

On the heels of reports on Johnson County's 1988 crime increase comes another report from the State Department of Corrections that paints a grim picture of the state's overcrowded prison system.

The capacity of Iowa's prisons is limited to 2,918 inmates, but current figures show that 3,104 prisoners are now housed in state correctional institutions.

"That's 218 more than this date last year and 144 more than January 1987," said Paul Grossheim, director of Iowa's corrections department.

Gov. Terry Branstad has asked the state Legislature for $9 million in funding to expand the correctional system.

Supervisors debate purchase of land for county garage site

By Lisa Swegle
The Daily Iowan

Johnson County Board of Supervisors debated Tuesday whether a replacement county maintenance garage should be built in Lone Tree or outside of the town.

Johnson County Engineer Glen Meisner recommended purchasing a three-acre site in Lone Tree because the site would be easily accessible for county employees.

Town water and sewage systems are also readily available at the Lone Tree site.

Meisner said it would be cheaper to purchase land 1½ miles west of Lone Tree on Highway 22, but such a move would incur additional costs like installation of water and sewer systems, and construction of a driveway.

"I think that in the end they would probably be fairly equal in price," Meisner said.

Supervisor Betty Ockenfels said she didn't want the county to purchase three acres in town when just half an acre could be purchased outside of town.

Supervisor Charles Duffy said he favored purchasing the site outside of town.

"I think there probably are some (Lone Tree) people who do have concerns so I do think we should go for the site in the country," Duffy said.

The supervisors deferred action on choosing a site until next week. Meisner will ask Lone Tree official if they would sell less than three acres at the site.

Meisner and the supervisors presented the maintenance garage plan at a Lone Tree City Council meeting in January.

"I think the council was split at the time to either have us in town or not," Meisner said. "But I think that since that time, they have indicated that they would rather have us look for another location if it meant us moving out of town."

Meisner has been looking at sites since December.

The county is replacing the old county maintenance garage because more storage space is needed. Meisner estimated building costs at $35,000.

The sentencing date has been reset for Michael Robert Sack, 22, the Iowa City man found guilty in December of second-degree arson, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Sack waived his right to trial by jury Dec. 12 — the day the trial was scheduled. Sentencing for the crime was set for Jan. 27, but an order filed Wednesday reset the sentencing for Feb. 17, according to court records.

The sentencing was set back after a pre-sentence investigation was filed late, according to court records.

Sack, 522 E. College St., was found guilty of setting fires in three vehicles last July. He was originally charged with setting seven car fires, according to court records.

Sack pleaded guilty to third-degree arson in December, according to court records.

UI students milk experience from hard work on 'Zadar!'

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

Working on the set of the movie "Zadar! Cow From Hell" provided about 35 UI students a chance to experience the good, the bad and the ugly of film production.

Though several of the UI students hired for the film worked with the cameras and sound crew each day, the majority of students put in long hours directing traffic.

Most were not paid and put in 12-hour days during the film's five-week shooting in Iowa City, Mount Vernon, Solon and Tipton.

"This wasn't typical by any means, because it was so low-budget," said Carrie Foresman, a UI senior who worked as a production assistant.

Foresman's unpaid duties included running errands for the wardrobe department and the second assistant director. She also policed traffic for 12 to 15 hours a day during the eight days she worked.

"It's always good to see first-hand what goes on on and around a movie set," she said.

Clark Bender, a UI graduate student who worked on the set, said he had a unique opportunity to work with the camera equipment and cinematographers on the film.

Bender's typical work day began at 5:30 a.m. and ended about 8 p.m. He drove the camera van, and set up and took down the equipment for each location.

"I wasn't getting paid, but after a while I didn't really care. We put in pretty long hours," Bender said.

The difficult hours and number of volunteers required for the film may have stimulated the company to come to Iowa, he said.

"I think they knew that by coming to Iowa they would be able to take advantage of the university," Bender said.

He added that many of the Duck's Breath Mystery Theatre crew are native Iowans and offered to help the UI students find work in California.

Many UI students were hired as volunteers, and some believe they were treated unfairly by the crew, said Sally Mendzela, a UI graduate student.

"There was some definite disenchantment, but it's not only tied to money," she said.

The show premieres at Hancher Auditorium tonight, but none of the UI student workers received complimentary tickets.

"As far as I know, everybody is paying for their own," she said,

"which I think is pretty tacky."

Scott Smith, executive producer for "Zadar!" said a lack of organization and expense did not permit the company to distribute complimentary tickets.

He said it would be too difficult to distribute tickets to the hundreds of Iowans who assisted with the film.

Menzela said the numbers of people and pressure around a movie production such as "Zadar!" is something students can only understand after first-hand experience on a movie set.

"In the most basic sense it just gives you an idea about how it's really done," said Mendzela. "Even the bad things had some value."

She said some "abrasive Los Angeles personalities made it very awkward at times for people to work."

The personality clashes provided as big an educational tool as the job's duties of finding props and assembling daily production schedules, she said.

"You have to work with a lot of people when you're doing television or film," Mendzela said, "You have to learn to get along or walk away."

Israeli peace activist protests country's 'war of free choice'

By Noelle Nystrom
The Daily Iowan

The Israeli government is pushing its people beyond the limits of duty, an Israeli peace activist said Thursday night.

"There is a limit to obedience," Ronen Shamir told a crowd of about 60 gathered at the Iowa City Public Library, 123 S. Linn St. "We learned from World War II that you can't excuse your actions and say that you were just obeying orders."

Shamir served the full compulsory term of three years in the Israeli army where he was assigned to the Syrian border. In 1979 he was released from military duty as a sergeant.

Last year Shamir served as a spokesman for Yesh Gvul, an organization of Israeli military reservists who refuse to serve in the occupied territories.

"Yesh Gvul" is an idiom that means "there is a limit." The Hebrew colloquial use of the phrase is equivalent to the American phrase "enough is enough."

At present, about 700 Israeli reserve officers have signed a letter of refusal announcing that they will not participate in repressing the Palestinian uprising, Shamir said.

In the letter the officers announce "... we shall refuse to take part in "The unique thing about (Yesh Gvul) is that we are a group of good citizens. We are not pacifists. We are the flesh and bones of Israeli society. But there is a limit to obedience." — Ronen Shamir

"The unique thing about (Yesh Gvul) is that we are a group of good citizens," he said. "We are not pacifists. We are the flesh and bones of Israeli society. But there is a limit to obedience."

"We told ourselves that, although we are occupiers, the Palestinians are better off with us than with (the Arabs). But there is no such thing as a humane occupation. There is a saying now that the Israelis are shooting and crying at the same time."

Shamir said Yesh Gvul has two important goals — to provide support for those who would rather go to prison than fight in the occupied territories, and to transform this act into a political statement.

Shamir said the Israeli government and authorities have become too concerned with the need for security. All related issues have become vulnerable to all kinds of manipulation, he added.

"The concept of security has become all-encompassing," Shamir said. "The government admitted (the fighting in the occupied territories) is not a war of last resort, it is a war of free choice."

Shamir said he is not concerned with the Palestinian people as a whole, but he is worried about the Israeli society.

"Israel is becoming an angry and frightened nation," he said. "And I'm terrified."

repressing the uprising and rebellion in the occupied territories."

About 166 reservists have been jailed for not serving in the army, and Yesh Gvul provides moral, legal and political support for them and their families, Shamir said.

Now completing his doctorate in sociology at Northwestern University, Shamir said he is not a political man and was never involved in politics. Most individuals involved in Yesh Gvul are ordinary citizens, he added.

Council

The money can be used for economic development, lower and middle-income housing, housing development, rental rehabilitation, handicapped services and a variety of other programs, Atkins said.

"I'm going to try to put together a shopping list for the city council," Atkins said.

Although councilors have only begun to discuss the UDAG money, they appear to be divided on the subject.

Councilor William Ambrisco said he'd like to see most of the money go toward economic development projects.

Ambrisco is in favor of creating a revolving loan pool in which the city council would place money at no interest — along with other Iowa City banks and possibly Iowa-Illinois Gas and Electric Company — to provide lower interest loans to new businesses or existing local businesses wanting to expand.

"It could be just that kind of sweetener we could use to give us a competitive edge when businesses are considering coming to Iowa City," Ambrisco said.

Money in the loan pool would keep circulating as businesses borrowed and paid back the funds.

Councilor Karen Kubby is also in favor of the revolving loan pool, but added that restrictions should be placed on borrowers.

"I'm not interested in just giving money to anyone," Kubby said. "People should have to show us that they don't have the resources to get a loan from a regular bank."

But Kubby would also like to see some of the UDAG money go to other city programs.

"There are plenty of funds there that we can spread around," she said.

"I really want the council to ask the Committee for Community Needs (CCN) if they want any part of (the money)," Kubby said.

Kubby, who chairs the CCN committee, said there were several things which were high on the committee's priority list that didn't get funded this year.

Kubby said she'd also like to see some of the money go to Aid to Agencies, the city's budget for human service agencies.

"Federal human services block grants are getting smaller each year ... while the needs keep growing and growing," Kubby said.

"There has to be some way to fund these agencies, and this money could do that for 20 years," she said.

Allocations for UDAG funds won't be settled for over a month, Atkins said.

Cats

residence services director, to clarify the rumor. She said it would be unfortunate if up to 300 pets were ousted at one time.

"We were very concerned about the reported plan to suddenly enforce the no pet rule," Delworth said. "For one thing, hundreds of cats being dumped in the city would be disastrous, because most wouldn't have homes."

Family Housing Manager Carol Casey said she sent out three form letters following the discovery of the cats, reminding student-residents of Hawkeye Court's no-pet policy. Residents were given approximately one week to respond.

"As of spring break, they have to get rid of the cats," Casey said. "And failure to comply could result in eviction."

Creach was surprised at the shrinking number of notices served, because it started out around 300, jumped down to seven, and now sits at three, he said.

"It was implied that everyone with pets would be served," he said. "It seems as soon as someone from the Humane Society, with 'power behind their words' spoke, it dropped to seven. I think they're evicting people slowly to avoid the Humane Society and a large number of people (complaining)."

UI officials do not actively seek out animals in student housing, Casey said. "I am not out there combing the bushes for cats," she said. "I react to them as I see them."

The policy has never been actively enforced, said Maggie Van Oel, UI assistant housing director. "We've never been in the position of peeking through doorlocks," Van Oel said.

There are not plans to change the no pet policy, she said. "We've never even considered it," she said.

Van Oel said the family housing office received a number of complaints of the cats leaving their deposits in sandboxes.

Zadar

get feedback from the audiences this weekend.

"We may be giving the audience a multiple-choice or essay test after the screening," said Baker. "We really do respect the opinions of the Iowans who helped make the film."

"The credits unfortunately don't list everybody who helped us out," Baker said. "If they did, we'd have a couple more miles of film."

The members of Duck's Breath are all UI graduates. Not only had the comedy troupe been waiting for a chance to take its show off the stage and on to the screen, but the Ducks also were anxious to return to Iowa City. They got their chance when they met fellow Iowa City native Scott Smith in New York. Smith was planning to shoot a low budget film in Iowa.

"It had always been in our forefront to do a film in Iowa, and, as it turned out, the timing for 'Zadar!' was perfect," Baker said.

Smith then created the Iowa City-based Stone Peach Productions for "Zadar!" and with director Bob Hughes, shooting began on "Zadar!" in May. Last week, eight months later, the finished product was privately shown as part of the U.S. Festival in Park City, Utah — an event sponsored by Robert Redford's Sundance Institute.

Response from the festival was positive, but the filmmakers still feel there's work to be done on the movie. Smith says about 10 minutes need to be cut from the film's 90-minute length.

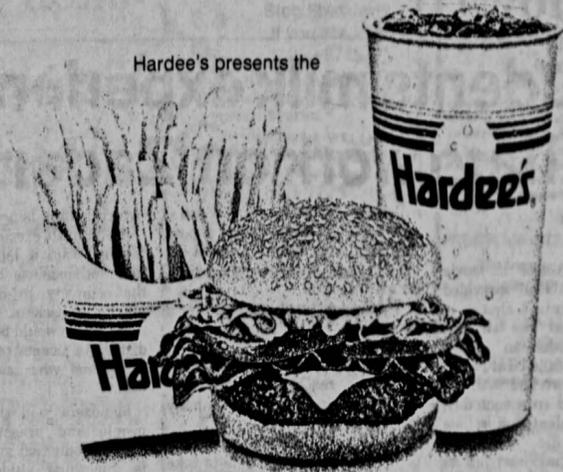

Smith, who as executive producer on "Zadar!" was in charge of finances, organization and logistics — "where it was gonna be, when it was gonna be, who was gonna be where, when" — said the film's future is still "unknown — up in the air." Smith is negotiating with distributors for a final sale of the film, hoping that last week's Utah screening will stir up interest.

"Zadar!" is a tough sell; though the production's independence allowed the filmmakers creative freedom, it also means that the film was made without any prior distribution deals. It's most likely that, because of the film's low budget and the relative unknown state of its stars, "Zadar!" will only have a limited release to theaters. But the makers hope to make most of the profits through overseas and video sales.

Freed from both the geological and artistic confines of Hollywood, the Ducks all found the making of "Zadar!" a pleasant experience. "I'm amazed the movie happened," Kessler said. "It was serendipitous."

"I was very pleased to find that I could be subtle enough to act in a movie," said Coffey after seeing himself in the film. "Most of what I'd been doing was stage and radio acting." And how did Coffey make the transition? "I had to pretend I was Paul Newman ... it took great concentration to imagine that my eyes were blue, I was a foot shorter and much handsomer."

Tonight's premiere won't be a "stuffy, tuxedoed affair," said Baker, but Kessler said he and the other Ducks (Duck Bill Allard cannot attend due to a previous commitment) might "have one tuxedo that we'll all share — I'll have the cumberbund, Dan'll have the jacket."

U.S. team flies to battle Antarctic oil spill

SANTIAGO, Chile — Tons of equipment left the United States on an Air Force transport with a team of cleanup experts headed for Antarctica today to tackle an oil spill that poses a major environmental threat.

The huge C-5 plane was bound for the southern city of Punta Arenas, where its cargo and the 15 passengers will be transferred to a U.S. research vessel, the Polar Duke, the U.S. Embassy in Santiago said.

In the Antarctic, U.S. scientists were trying to catch floating oil barrels and propane containers near the spill, which was 4 miles in diameter and moving southwest, the National Science Foundation said.

The agency said in Washington that the Argentine supply vessel that released the oil after it ran aground and sank had carried 250,000 gallons of diesel fuel. It said an "incurable disaster" would result if all the fuel leaks into the pristine region's unspoiled waters.

In Buenos Aires, an Argentine navy spokesman insisted that the spill was not posing a serious ecological threat.

The Bahia Paraiso (Paradise Bay) ran aground on Saturday in the Bismarck Strait, about 600 miles south of the southern tip of South America and 1 1/2 miles from the U.S. Palmer Research Station on the Antarctic Peninsula.

All passengers and crew were rescued, but the ship floated free in heavy seas and sank Tuesday, spilling barrels of oil and several hundred propane gas containers, said Jack Talmadge, a spokesman for the National Science Foundation. Another foundation spokesman in Washington, Jack Renner, said most of the oil was in steel drums so the ecological threat may not be as big as originally feared.

Botha resigns as leader of National Party

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha, who is recovering from a stroke suffered two weeks ago, resigned today as the leader of the governing National Party, the government said.

There was no immediate indication if Botha had any plans to step down as president. Doctors said today that Botha would need at least another month before he could consider returning to work.

Botha was replaced as party leader by National Education Minister F.W. de Klerk, who is considered one of the leading candidates to succeed Botha as president.

Botha became party leader in 1978 at the same time he was elected to prime minister. He became president in 1984 under a new constitution that abolished the post of prime minister.

Iran celebrates 10th anniversary of revolt

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran celebrated the 10th anniversary of its Islamic revolution by marking the minute Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini arrived home from exile.

Millions of the 88-year-old leader's supporters cheered, rang bells and exploded fireworks at the appointed hour Wednesday, Tehran Radio said. There were sports tournaments, cultural festivals and street re-enactments of revolutionary events.

The celebrations will climax Feb. 11, the anniversary of the day the last government, formed by the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, collapsed and the revolutionaries took over to proclaim the Islamic republic.

Khomeini, living at that time in Paris, returned to triumph in Tehran.

But the festivities that began at 9:03 a.m. Wednesday to mark the minute Khomeini touched Iranian soil a decade earlier come at a deeply troubling time.

Infighting between pragmatists in the Tehran hierarchy and radicals has led to a wave of political executions and a bitter power struggle that is expected to flare when Khomeini dies.

Hiroshima seeks contributions for dome

TOKYO — Hiroshima will seek contributions from around the world to help pay for preserving a wrecked dome left standing as a reminder of the atomic bombing of the city in 1945, a city official said today.

Toru Kataoka, of the city-run Hiroshima Peace Memorial Hall, said about half of the $1.5 million needed for preserving the Atomic Bomb Dome will be funded by donations. The rest will be covered by the city government, he said.

The Aug. 6, 1945, bombing in Hiroshima killed up to 140,000 people. The Atomic Bomb Dome used to be the city's Industry Promotion Hall.

Three days after the Hiroshima attack, 70,000 more people were killed in Nagasaki when the United States dropped a second atomic bomb.

Kataoka said Hiroshima could have funded the project alone but decided to solicit funds to spread its message of peace worldwide.

The dome in Hiroshima Memorial Park is the only wrecked building still in place from the bombing.

Alaskan air mass brings cold, snow

By The Associated Press

A blast of cold air out of Alaska brought snowstorms and plunging temperatures to the West and Midwest, triggering hundreds of traffic accidents and closing schools and threatening to end the East's record warm spell today.

"Today was it. It will get seasonal," National Weather Service meteorologist Bill Seura said at Atlantic City Airport in Pomona, N.J., where a balmy reading of 69 degrees was one of 51 high-temperature records broken or tied in the East and South on Wednesday.

At least two people died in weather-related traffic accidents in Idaho and Oregon on Wednesday. Authorities in Coleraine, Minn., blamed minus 20-degree temperatures for the hypothermia death of a 31-year-old woman whose frozen body was found on a sidewalk.

Snow continued falling today from the Pacific Northwest to the northern Rockies, northern Plains and upper Mississippi Valley, and was expected to spread to the Great Lakes. Freezing drizzle slickened roads from Missouri to Indiana.

The foul weather was accompanied by equally foul temperatures in many places. In the Dakotas and Montana, where Gov. Stan Stephens declared a state of emergency, winds up to 40 mph produced wind chills as low as minus 90 degrees Wednesday.

Low-temperature records for the date were set this morning in Casper, Wyo., where it was 23 below zero; Great Falls, Mont., 33 below; and Sheridan, Wyo., whose 28-below reading beat the old record by 8 degrees.

The storms caused traffic accidents in Washington state, Oregon, California and Utah, and knocked out power to thousands of people in Washington, Montana and Utah.

Snow closed schools in Washington, Oregon and Idaho on Wednesday, and dangerously low temperatures shut them in Montana today and in North Dakota through Friday. Farther east, some schools in Indiana and Michigan were closed because of freezing rain that made travel hazardous.

Pupils at Richholt Elementary School in Bismarck, N.D., were "running down the halls and shouting, 'Sinner for president! Sinner for president!'" Principal Rick Buresh said Wednesday after Gov. George Sinner ordered schools shut. Officials said it was the first time in memory that schools were closed statewide in North Dakota because of cold.

Near Truckee, Calif., in the Sierra Nevada 75 miles northeast of Sacramento, a tour bus overturned on icy, wind-swept Interstate 80, sending 23 people to the hospital, authorities said. Six were admitted.

In Washington, icy roads caused a 100-car string of accidents.

Bush offers to cooperate with Ortega

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — President George Bush said in a telegram to Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega that he was "willing to work for peace," Ortega said Wednesday.

Ortega also met on Wednesday with former President Jimmy Carter and President-elect Carlos Andres Perez of Venezuela. Ortega and Carter both are in Venezuela for Perez' inauguration ceremonies this week.

Ortega brought with him a new peace proposal, which he showed to Perez, Carter and others.

A source close to Vice President Dan Quayle, who is in Venezuela for Perez' inauguration, said the plan had to do with resettlement of rebels in Nicaragua once peace is achieved.

Contra leader Alfredo Cesar said that Socialist international leaders familiar with the plan told him it also contained provisions for political prisoners in Nicaragua and for granting civil liberties in the country.

Misplaced blame

The Oliver North trial started this week, and along with scores of lawyers gathered for the proceedings, hundreds of members of the press have arrived to report on Ollie's day in court.

But even before opening arguments have been heard, Judge Gerhard Gessell has announced he is considering issuing a contempt of court citation to a reporter covering the trial.

On Tuesday, ABC-TV's Tim O'Brien aired a report on how North's attorneys were arguing against the selection of any juror who had seen the Iran-Contra hearings in the summer of 1987. O'Brien showed footage from the hearings, during which North testified on the condition his words would not be used against him in court. The report ended with O'Brien saying, "If you (a juror) have watched this report too closely, you would be excused from duty."

For this, Gessell may cite O'Brien for what he considers a deliberate attempt to jeopardize the selection of an impartial jury.

Understandably, the publicity that surrounded the hearings and now North's trial has made selection of an unbiased jury difficult.

But citing O'Brien for contempt because he replayed footage of hearings that were covered in their entirety by all major networks and press journals is equivalent to arresting the barn door after the horse has escaped.

ABC's report was apparently too effective for Gessell's taste in putting two and two together to show how tangled jury selection has become. But not only was O'Brien within his legal rights when he re-broadcast North's testimony, he was within his ethical rights as a journalist. Gessell seems to have forgotten that a journalist not only reports the facts, but also must interpret them.

It sounds like the good judge is criticizing O'Brien for simply doing his job.

Legacy of chaos

After nine long years, the Salang Highway from Kabul to the Soviet border is finally witnessing the last troop movements of the retreating Soviet invasion forces. What they leave behind, though, is hardly cause for celebration.

Despite general quibbling about how long the city's defenders can hold out against the final rebel assault, virtually all observers agree: Kabul, and the government of Afghan President Najibullah, will fall. And with the Mujahedin rebels embroiled in internal political and religious disputes of their own, no stable leadership exists to fill the vacuum and restore that embattled country to autonomous political health.

Comparing the Soviet military involvement in Afghanistan with the American Vietnam experience has always been irresistible. Both qualify for the doubtful distinction of costly, bloody escapades. Both received the sternest criticism at home and abroad. Both dragged on interminably and ended by attrition.

Simplistic criteria, perhaps, for evaluating two very different wars waged by very different nations with goals as diametrically opposed as subjugation and liberation. As wars, there really is no comparison. But as foreign policy failures, Vietnam and Afghanistan have more in common than not, and in the evening of the Soviet presence, one must note a final, sobering similarity.

For the people of Afghanistan, as for the people of South Vietnam before them, the wound left behind by the blunt instrument of superpower military brawn is chaos and disarray on a scale that those unhappy nations could not have inflicted on themselves.

Two-sided issue

At first glance, the recently proposed 50 percent Congressional pay increase looks like a terrible idea, but if tied to restrictions on other income sources it may be an excellent move.

The media has focused on the pay raise proposal submitted by President Reagan, which will go into effect if not rejected by both the Senate and House by Feb. 8. But there is another aspect to the pay raise plan that has been virtually ignored.

Democratic leaders hope to avoid a rejection of the pay increase, and plan to follow the raise with new laws banning the receipt of speaking fees and other honoraria from special interest groups by members of Congress.

By appearance if not in fact, such payoffs from private groups are just that — payoffs. Members of Congress can claim they aren't influenced by that money, but it looks terrible, and at the very least the potential for abuse is there.

The obvious solution is to limit or bar the receipt of such funds by members of Congress, thereby insulating them from special interest coercion and enticement.

In a time of huge budget deficits, it's easy for critics to attack a pay raise. And it's easy for the media to focus only on that aspect of the proposal. What is difficult for newspaper and television reporters is presenting the entire issue to the American public in the proper perspective. That takes some effort. As usual, the national media is incapable of performing the difficult, and as a consequence an imaginative proposal will likely be rejected.

It's hip, it's now — it's the '70s

Believe it or not, at one time I used to like the 1960s. In the days before the Vietnam War went pop and old Motown songs were thought to be sung by people such as Marvin Gaye and Stevie Wonder rather than clay figures made up to resemble dried fruit, I used to be fascinated by the history of a decade in which everybody and everything seemed so much more idealistic and bigger than life than the time we currently live in.

But God, I'm sick of the '60s now. I'm tired of the music, the television shows, the movies and especially the people who grew up during the decade and who now reminisce about how much better it all was back then. In the '60s people actually believed in something besides making money, while today everyone under the age of 30 is secretly a closet Reagan supporter who believes all homeless people should be shot.

But it's a pretty safe bet that the '60s nostalgic craze can't last forever. And when it ends, guess what comes next? Just think, what's the next decade following the '60s? That's right, the most fun and exciting decade in this century with the possible exception of the 1930s. We're talking — THE '70s.

Yes, it's true. Everyone from The Village Voice to The Chicago Tribune is predicting that '70s fever will be the next big trend. Of course, in all the excitement of the '80s, some of you may have forgotten what the previous decade was like. To help you truly enjoy the '70s nostalgic craze when it hits, I have compiled a brief guide to the decade. Here, in a nutshell, is everything the '70s were famous for:

BAD PRESIDENTS — not since the 1920s have we had such a collection of great statesmen leading this country. First there was Richard Nixon, the first president ever to resign. Then there was Gerald Ford, who was the first president who never won election to the office. After him, there was Jimmy Carter, who was so bad that eight years after his term ended, the Republicans would still run against him — and win.

BAD MUSIC — When most people think of '70s music, they think disco. And it's true that disco acts such as Andy Gibb, The Bee Gees and K.C. and the Sunshine Band were among the most popular stars of the decade. But disco wasn't the only kind of music burning up the pop charts during the '70s. The list of songs which reached No. 1 during the decade also included such generational anthems as "Saturday Night" by the Bay City Rollers, "The Night Chicago Died" by Paper Lace and the infamous "Afternoon Delight" ("skyrockets in flight/afternoon delight") by the Starland Vocal Band.

SERIAL KILLERS — Perhaps inspired by songs such as "Afternoon Delight," serial killers seemed to proliferate during the '70s. Such men as Juan Corona, Ted Bundy, John Wayne Gacy and David Berkowitz (alias "Son of Sam") helped make even mundane acts as getting picked up in a bar or hiring a clown to entertain at a children's party seem like an adventure during the decade.

REPRESSIVE DICTATORSHIPS — Many of the '80s most beloved rulers got their start in the '70s, including Chile's Augusto Pinochet, Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini and South Africa's P.W. Botha.

But far more impressive is the list of dictators who didn't quite make it to the end of the decade. These included Uganda's roly-poly self-proclaimed "conqueror of the British Empire," Idi Amin; the Central African Republic's Emperor Jean-Bedel Bokassa, who is currently on trial in his former "empire" for, among other things, cannibalism; Rhodesia's fun-loving racist president Ian Smith; Nicaragua's American puppet ruler Anastasio Somoza; and Cambodia's Pol Pot, who in the course of his short three-year rule over that country, topped everyone else by managing the impressive feat of killing off over 1 million of his nation's population.

TRASHY LITERATURE — Every decade produces its share of junk writing, but never before the '70s had so much of it hit the bestseller lists. Besides the 9,000 or so books on Watergate which came out during this period — most of which make the current crop of books by former Reagan administration officials seem of historic importance by comparison — there were also such notable literary masterpieces as The Book of Lists, a collection of inane lists which was so popular it inspired two sequels, and Looking Out For No. 1, a book whose central theme was to tell readers it was okay to screw over anyone standing in the way of their success.

But probably the nadir of '70s literature was Johnathan Livingston Seagull, a 10,000-word essay by Richard Bach which concerned the thoughts of a seagull who decides that he's just not like other seagulls and needs to find himself. In the process of this, he becomes enlightened and really gets in tune with what it means to be a seagull in today's world. This deeply meaningful tale became one of the decade's big hits, selling millions of copies and becoming a movie with music by (who else) Neil Diamond.

ETC. ETC. — This is just a brief summary of the decade that was the '70s. Of course, there's not enough space to list all of the decade's many high spots: pet rocks, the jogging craze, platform shoes, streaking, Hare Krishnas, Patty Hearst, singles bars, Mary Tyler Moore, "Star Wars", the Bicentennial, leisure suits, high inflation, the oil crisis, or Legionnaires Disease. Suffice it to say that the '70s were a decade unlike any other.

Thank God.

Sports heroes have to be accountable

I am a sports fan. I like the excitement and I appreciate keen competition and effort that pushes bodies to the very limits of their capabilities. I like the sense of community and that sports is one area in which it is still possible to have heroes.

I like the principles of sports such as the building of strong moral character, the teaching of life-long skills and values, the development of discipline and the meaning of honor.

I am a sports fan, but I also work for the Rape Victim Advocacy Program. I know that the principles are too often just rhetoric for some of the players. Athletes have been the perpetrators of crimes from drunken-driving to assault to rape. It is unfair to players who abide by the rules and laws, to the fans who support athletics, to the coaches who do so much to help these players succeed, to the kids who idolize these players, and to the community who supports the team but suffers the consequences of the crimes some athletes commit.

It is more than unfair; it is a crime and it is shame. In most cases, there is no criminal trial and many times, not even a report to the police.

In cases of sexual assault, the victims are often compromised by alcohol or drugs, by being acquaintances or friends of the offenders, and by other circumstances that they feel reporting would be hopeless or they would be blamed or disbelieved. Many times, they are right.

Karla Miller

Since I began working with victims, I have seen many cases in which the offenders and their supporters have used the excuse that victims were team "groupies," implying that the victim would willingly sleep with any of the athletes for the privilege of having intimate contact with those who society has elevated to stardom. Or that her behavior "asked for it." Or it is asserted that the victim is lying.

When challenged that victims do not ask or deserve to be raped or beaten, and that victims do not (in an estimated 98 percent of the cases reported) falsely report rape, the response invariably is "I know that's usually so, but this case is different."

There is the old defense of having men testify as to having had sex with the victim; therefore, it couldn't possibly be rape because she has been a willing sexual partner in the past. In court, this tactic in most states is now somewhat limited. In other areas, however, it is not.

I have seen incredible pressure applied to victims to remain silent by threats of exposure and publication of personal, embarrassing, painful or compromising information unrelated to the charges that cast dispersions on her character or her word. The trick is to get everyone looking the other way.

These tactics are very effective and serve to keep the offenders from being held accountable for their behavior by facing criminal charges, being tried for the actual crimes they committed, or being held accountable through administrative sanctions. And when everyone is involved in discrediting the victim, it becomes impossible to take effective, corrective action that will hopefully rehabilitate the offender.

Who wins here? The diversion and denial tactics may work to get one, or a few individuals, out of a scrape; but the team doesn't win. Neither does the coach. Or the fans. Certainly not the victims. Only the offender. But we are not doing him any favors.

If we really care about our heroes, we will see that they are held accountable for their behavior. We must teach them how to cope with life. This must become an integral part of the education that we give them.

We must support those whose job it is to hold the offender accountable and see that he is taught how to appropriately express himself off the field or court and keep his aggression, competition, and dominance where it belongs. Most importantly, he must learn that violence is not an acceptable option for dealing with life issues.

I cannot help but feel concerned when I see an athlete who has committed a crime that he was not charged with, or that was minimized, exceed in his sport. But, victories are not quite as sweet as they should be. The victory is tarnished by the character of the offender.

Each infringement hurts their programs and reputations. Each time they must deal with a player who is arrested for drunken-driving or who is accused of assaulting someone diverts the energy and resources that otherwise would go toward building and maintaining a winning program. It brings negative publicity that takes the attention off of their positive accomplishments and focuses only on their difficulties.

The coaches cannot do it alone. Nor should they be expected to. They need the support of their institutions, their players, their fans and their communities. They do not need denial or equivalent policies and attitudes of violence and anti-social behavior that leave loopholes for their players.

They need to know that we want winning teams whose victories are not only those reflected on the scoreboard but in the hearts, souls and moral characters of their teams. We need a new emphasis on values as well as on a winning record. I truly believe that values and winning go hand in hand. Success will naturally follow.

Who wins when we say "no" to violence and anti-social behavior by athletes? We all do. Who's responsible for bringing this about? We all are.

Karla Miller, director of the Rape Victim Advocacy Program in Iowa City, submitted this guest opinion for the Viewpoints page.

Acknowledgment of Reagan

To the Editor:

With a new administration in Washington, it's time to acknowledge the end of the Reagan era. It's too late to re-write history, but it's not too late to correct the record, too late to correct conflicting positions, or to reclaim the places abandoned in the temporary political adventures of the past. The past cannot be reinterpreted in the sequences. The past engendered Reagan's victory. The past were carried out in future generations, likely to be charmed by the possibility of the "C" factor.

The scandals of the past years also reflect on the responsibilities of the office of a single individual. History states that Congress, bureaucracy, and people demand to be selected figurehead from themselves.

Acknowledging the end of Reagan's era

To the Editor:
With a new administration in Washington, it's time to acknowledge the end of the Reagan era. It is too late to re-write (or shred) the record, too late to clarify senseless or conflicting positions, and too late to reclaim the ethical principles abandoned in pursuit of temporary political advantage.

The past cannot be changed, although actions are commonly reinterpreted in light of their consequences. The policies which engendered Reagan's popularity were carried out at the expense of future generations, who are less likely to be charmed by the irresponsibility of the "Great Communicator."

The scandals of the past eight years also reflect on the weaknesses of the office. Perhaps the responsibilities are beyond the control of a single individual, however competent. History may demonstrate that Congress, the federal bureaucracy, and the American people demand too much from their elected figurehead — and too little from themselves.

A short lesson in criticism

To the Editor:
Realizing that time should ideally be spent debating more significant issues than the competence of your award-winning newspaper's movie reviewer, I will be brief.

Criticism of a performance, or any other attempt at artistic communication, should involve an intelligently presented, reasonable appraisal of its worth and/or significance. The question answered should be: "Why should or shouldn't I spend time and money to see 'The Accidental Tourist' or 'Working Girls'?" not "Is William Hurt's head really too big for the rest of his body?" or "Does Melanie Griffith pick up Don Johnson's underwear in the morning?"

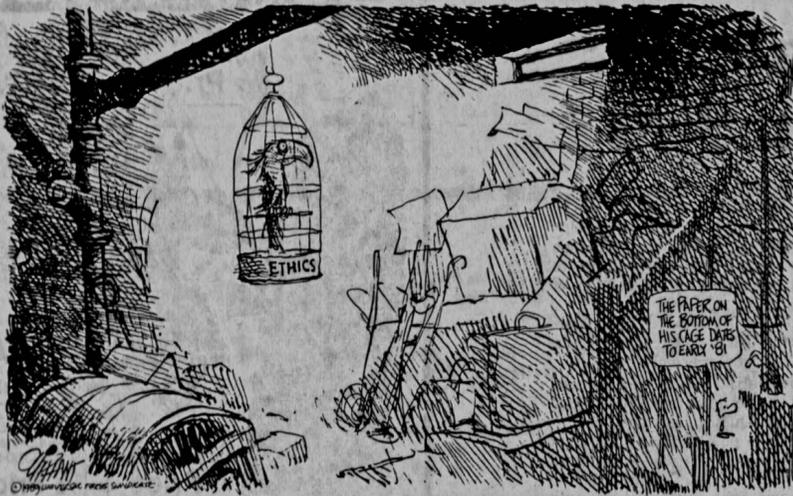

Quit trying to perfect an imitation of USA Today's gossipy, sophomoric mentality and give us reviews that don't waste column space.

Missing the issue

To the Editor:
Despite its confident tone, John Bartenhagen's editorial "Not sex-

College of Law

MEANWHILE, DEEP IN THE WHITE HOUSE BASEMENT, A LONELY HOSTAGE AWAITS RESCUE...
Universal Press Syndicate/Pat Oliphant ist, it's business" (The Daily Iowan, Jan. 24), completely misses the issue.

Dividing actuarial tables by sex is not the only demographic decision that would make business sense. For example, Afro-Americans statistically have shorter life expectancies than white Americans. Yet, insurance companies do not have race-based actuarial tables permitting Afro-Americans to pay less for annuities (or more for life insurance). If stereotypes are accurate, Jewish drivers (of whom I am one) drink less and should be entitled to lower auto rates, but insurance companies do not have religion-based tables to accommodate this.

Why don't we have race-based or religion-based actuarial tables if making business decisions based on these characteristics is sound? The answer is that we regard the social costs of selecting people for adverse treatment by race and religion to be too great. Businesses know that making such distinctions in commerce would be repulsive.

Why then are insurance companies willing to base actuarial tables on sex? Not because "it's business." As much could be said for racial or religious discrimination. It must be because we are not as repulsed by sex discrimination as we are by other forms of discrimination. That, I take it, is what Rep. Doderer perceives to be sexist, and that's the point that Bartenhagen missed.

No one has the right

To the Editor:
I just recently found out that one of my best friends is pregnant. She's 18, in high school, and doesn't know who the father is. And she's getting an abortion.

I support her decision. I used to oppose abortion, but the more I examined the arguments, the less sense the anti-abortionists made, and the more they reeked of hypocrisy. It's easy for someone else to tell a poor, unwed, pregnant teenager to give her child up for adoption. But it's a different story for the woman who has to endure a long, painful pregnancy and give birth, only to then give away the child she's developed strong maternal feelings for.

NO ONE has the right to impose such physical and emotional trauma on a woman. Neither do they have the right to consign my friend to the endless cycle of poverty that's so common among unwed mothers that it's almost cliché.

I can hear the anti-abortionists sneer: "She didn't have to get pregnant, did she?" As if pregnancy were some sort of divine punishment for being sexually active. Here we find the real motivating force behind the anti-abortion crusade. I know. I used to believe that twisted dogma myself.

Why else would we see the same group of fundamentalists Christians fighting for abortion rights with one hand, and birth control and sex education with the other? It doesn't have anything to do with a concern for life, let alone the quality of life. It has everything to do with reimposing a failed and misogynist morality on you and I. Keep your laws off me and the bodies of my friends.

Quayle discusses area issues with Latin American leaders

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle warned Latin American leaders that the United States will not look kindly on formation of a "debtors' cartel" to deal with the region's creditors.

Quayle, on the first day of a three-day Latin American trip, met with regional leaders to discuss subjects including the region's active drug trade, the Contra war in Nicaragua, and Latin America's staggering debt load — $440 billion in total national debts.

He met Wednesday with Colombia's president, Virgilio Barco, with outgoing Venezuelan president Jaime Lusinchi and with Lusinchi's successor, Carlos Andres Perez, who is being inaugurated today.

Quayle today continued his effort to meet as many heads of state as possible while he was here for the Perez swearing-in. The schedule included meetings with the presidents of Spain, Brazil, Costa Rica, Honduras, Peru and Portugal and a lunch with Caribbean leaders.

Michael Skol, a State Department Latin America specialist traveling with Quayle, said the vice president was taking a cautious approach.

"He's not saying too much when he shouldn't say too much," especially on topics for which President Bush's policy is still developing.

Quayle arrived on the Bush administration's first overseas diplomacy mission to find an atmosphere buzzing with talk of the region's financial crisis.

During his meeting with Perez, aides said, the two agreed to disagree on the Third World debt issue, but concurred on the need to push for democratic reforms in Nicaragua and Panama.

The Venezuelan leader has been active in promoting the idea of a coordinated Latin effort to deal with the countries' debts. The United States opposes any organization amounting to a cartel but is not ruling out other kinds of multilateral approaches, said Quayle's national security adviser, Carnes Lord.

Quayle told reporters the new administration is "absolutely opposed to the idea of a debtors' cartel."

Perez pressed for more U.S. flexibility on the issue and Quayle promised to relay the request to Washington, said an aide, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Perez, who previously served as Venezuela's president in the 1970s, also is expected to play a key role in efforts to develop a regional peace plan.

He told Quayle briefly about a new peace proposal he had received that morning from Nicaraguan president Daniel Ortega, Quayle aides said.

Ortega also showed the plan to former President Jimmy Carter, who was attending the inauguration of his longtime friend Perez. But Carter refused to discuss details, saying only that it dealt with relations between Nicaragua and its neighbor Honduras, where much Contra staging activity has been conducted along the border.

Contra leader Alfredo Cesar told reporters at a reception hosted for Quayle by U.S. Ambassador Otto Reich that he sees Perez as the main leader for resolving the Nicaraguan conflict.

Perez supported the Sandinista overthrow of Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979, but now has joined other critics of the Sandinistas' curtailment of individual freedoms.

Cesar said Quayle told him at the reception that the Bush administration supports the Contras but that he offered no specific commitment.

In his meeting with Barco, Quayle mostly listened as the Colombian told of his country's anti-drug efforts and fight against guerillas, "and how much help they need from the United States," said Quayle spokesman David Beckwith.

He said Quayle congratulated Barco for making progress but said U.S. resources to help are limited.

Explosion forces Helena evacuation

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — A chemical explosion caused by runaway railroad cars rocked Montana's capital city Thursday, cutting off electricity and forcing the evacuation of thousands as wind chills dipped to 70 degrees below zero.

The force of the 4:48 a.m. blast overturned automobiles, shattered windows at a nearby college and homes, and hurled pieces of railroad car through buildings a quarter-mile away. Only two minor injuries were reported.

"It's a miracle no one was killed or injured," said Ed Schild, Lewis and Clark County undersheriff.

The accident happened as a severe cold snap paralyzed the state. Gov. Stan Stephens shut down state government throughout Montana, citing the bitterly cold temperatures, power outages and noxious fumes emitted by the fire.

The explosion occurred in an open area on the city's west side and severed one of three major power lines, authorities said. Although power initially was knocked out for 37,000 people in and around Helena, electricity was restored to most areas by 11 a.m.

Fourteen cars broke loose from a westbound freight train approaching the Continental Divide west of town, racing nine miles downhill before slamming into a locomotive and two other cars, derailling and exploding, police Capt. Bud Carbis said.

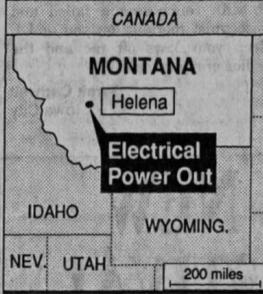

"I jumped out of the way from being squashed," said Mike McNellis, who was aboard the locomotive struck.

Several tanker cars carried chemicals, including isopropyl alcohol and hydrogen peroxide, which is highly flammable, Carbis said.

The fire spread to a car containing polyvinyl chloride in a granular form, which sent a black cloud of smoke and hydrochloride gas billowing over the valley.

"We want everybody in town to stay inside," Carbis said. One paramedic was taken to a hospital after inhaling toxic fumes. Firefighters wore respirators as they tried to pour water on the flames.

Authorities evacuated 4,000 to 7,000 people from an area one square mile around the burning railroad cars, said Col. Gary Blair, the adjutant general for Montana's National Guard.

Evacuees fled to churches, the Helena Civic Center, the National Guard armory and schools, which were already closed by the severe cold. Temperatures hovered near 30 degrees below zero, which combined with winds to produce wind chills of 70 degrees below zero, the National Weather Service said. Snow fell intermittently.

Forecasters said the temperature probably would dip to 40 degrees below zero overnight.

"The weather couldn't be worse," said Mayor Russell Ritter. "Displacing people in these circumstances is tragic, but Helenans are tough people. We'll adjust."

China-Soviet relations strained by Cambodia

BEIJING (AP) — The foreign ministers of China and the Soviet Union agreed today that progress is being made in resolving the Cambodia conflict, which has hampered Sino-Soviet efforts to end a generation of strained relations.

The Soviet, Eduard Shevardnadze, also concurred with the Chinese position that international supervision will be needed to ensure peace in Cambodia after Vietnam ends its 10-year occupation of the Southeast Asian country.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Li Zhaoxing said Shevardnadze's nearly three-hour meeting with Foreign Minister Qian Qichen focused on Cambodia and did not touch on the main purpose of Shevardnadze's visit — setting a date for the first Sino-Soviet summit since 1959.

The meeting between Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and Chinese senior leader Deng Xiaoping, expected this spring, is likely to be discussed when the foreign ministers meet again Friday.

Li quoted Shevardnadze as saying the process of settling the Cambodian question is "speeding up." Qian agreed, saying "the situation concerning the Kampuchean (Cambodian) question has been developing."

Qian said the three Chinese-backed resistance factions and the Vietnam-backed government should be allowed to solve the question of Cambodia's future free from outside interference.

Asked by reporters if Cambodia has ceased to be an obstacle to better Sino-Soviet relations, Li said: "Both China and the Soviet Union maintain that Vietnam should pull out all its troops from Kampuchea as early as possible. The two sides hold that the Kampuchean question should be given a fair and reasonable solution, and for this purpose the two countries have been making much effort."

Differences reportedly remain on the structure of a transitional government and the nature of the "international supervision" to be introduced after Vietnam's pullout. Vietnam has promised to withdraw its troops by September.

China has said Moscow's financial support for Vietnam is the most serious of "three obstacles" to normalizing political relations strained for the past three decades.

The other two were the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan — which Moscow says will end this month — and Soviet troop strength on the Sino-Soviet border. Gorbachev last month pledged to reduce Soviet troops in Asia, many of whom are along the Chinese border, by 200,000.

Progress on those obstacles paved the way for Qian in December to make the first trip by a Chinese foreign minister to Moscow in 32 years.

Li said the "question of relaxing the situation along the Sino-Soviet border" was also discussed at the meeting in the Great Hall of the People.

The two sides fought a short border war in 1969. Sino-Soviet relations soured in the late 1950s as Nikita Khrushchev and Mao Tse-tung split over ideological and strategic differences, and Khrushchev ended all Soviet technical and military aid to China in 1960.

Economic and cultural relations have slowly improved in the 1980s, but party and government ties will not be formally normalized until the summit takes place.

Jet crashes in Vermont; crew safe

KIRBY, Vt. (AP) — An Air Force FB-111 fighter-bomber jet crashed and exploded today in a wooded area in northeastern Vermont, but the two crewmen aboard parachuted to safety just seconds before it hit the ground.

"They were at about 1,000 feet when they separated," said Gary Boog, a doctor who saw the crash from his car. "Then the plane hit the ground and exploded. And it just disintegrated. There are parts scattered a quarter-mile in every direction."

"It felt like an earthquake," said Joan Hahr, who also saw the crash. "If there was anybody left in the plane they would have been killed. It completely exploded."

The plane, a medium-range fighter-bomber with a two-man crew, was based at the Air Force base in Plattsburgh, N.Y., which is about 80 miles west of the crash site.

Senior Airman John Gardner, a public information officer at the air base, confirmed that both crewmen survived the crash, which occurred shortly before noon. The jet crashed less than a mile from a heavily traveled highway.

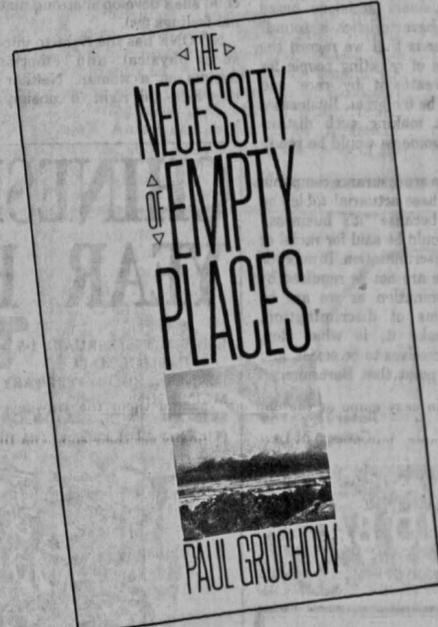

"We went up into the woods to look for them," Boog said. "Apparently they landed close to a farm house. They radioed the other plane that was with them that they were OK."

The jet crashed in a wooded area, just next to a field, less than a mile from Route 2.

"They did a good job tucking that plane where they did," Boog said.

Author Reading

Naturalist author Paul Gruchow will read from his new book on Monday, February 6 at 8 pm.

In the tradition of Annie Dillard's Pilgrim at Tinker Creek and Gretel Ehrlich's The Solace of Open Spaces, The Necessity of Empty Places is rich in literary and scientific allusions. It is a philosophical evocation of western North American landscapes that are treeless, windswept, seemingly barren, and largely unpopulated. Creating a sense of place for his readers whether the tallgrass prairies of Minnesota, the alpine tundra of the Rockies, the scrub desert of Baja, the buttes and bandlands of the western Dakotas, or the river shallows in Nebraska where sandhill cranes stand in their quiet, primitive splendor—Paul Gruchow conveys the hidden appeal of these demanding, uncompromising places that our culture has largely prevented us from truly appreciating.

We've heard it all before

There was something not quite right about the interview, something that just didn't fit, like a piece of a jigsaw puzzle that you simply can't squeeze into the last available space.

It wasn't the voice. It sounded clear, sincere, honest. It wasn't the words. They were the right words. And yet, something was wrong.

Very wrong. Once, the voice and words belonged to Mitchell Wiggins of the Houston Rockets, who was exiled to the Continental Basketball Association two years ago last month after the NBA caught him putting strange stuff up his nose.

Speaking from some roadside motel in Mississippi, a bus stop in a bus league, Wiggins insisted he now was clean. There was no question about it, Wiggins promised. He would be back in the NBA before we knew it. He would challenge the two-year ban and apply for an early return. There was no reason for him to stay out that long. He had learned his lesson. No more junk for him.

It sounded good. It turned out to be not so good. Ten months after bailing out of the NBA, Mitchell Wiggins failed another drug test, thus succeeding in getting himself suspended again, this time by the second-chance league.

That cemented the full two-year NBA ban for Wiggins, just in case his previous transgression had not. He now has applied for reinstatement and the league's official position is that the application is under review.

In the wake of the Wiggins affair, it might be wise to approach an interview with Stanley Wilson a bit warily.

Wilson is the NFL's world champion drug recidivist, with three suspensions and five rehabilitations behind him. Unlike Wiggins, Wilson had landed squarely on his feet in, of all places, that pot of jam called the Super Bowl. There the Cincinnati Bengals running back was surrounded by 2,000 or so writers and broadcasters. What a wonderful spot for him to tell his story.

The counselors encourage addicts to talk about their problems and Wilson said all the right things, the same things he'd heard in each of his various rehabilitations from cocaine addiction, the same kinds of things Mitchell Wiggins said.

He talked about how drugs had destroyed his marriage, about how it had hurt people close to him, about how he had used his experience to turn his 6-year-old son away from the garbage.

He talked about taking each day as it comes, about how ex-teammate Gary Burley had him involved in a new business publication that would be launched this summer, about how he would keep busy with that project, avoid the idle hours that cause so much trouble for addicts.

It all sounded so good, and yet, like with Mitchell Wiggins, it wasn't quite right.

Two days after the interview, on the eve of the biggest game of his life, while his team met for the last time to refine the game plan, Stanley Wilson went back to drugs.

After a week of talking about its pitfalls, about how it had robbed him of two playing seasons, cost him thousands of dollars, his wife and nearly his life, the lure became too much to ignore and Stanley Wilson resumed his affair with cocaine.

And if you believed he was clean, you felt cheated, violated, much the way you did when Mitchell Wiggins failed that CBA drug test.

Perhaps the words once written by Simon and Garfunkel sum it up best.

"Hello darkness, my old friend."

Hawkeyes wear down Wildcats in 102-84 win

By Brent Woods
The Daily Iowan

It took a while, but Iowa's pressure eventually wore down Northwestern Thursday night and the Hawkeyes cruised to a 102-84 win over the Wildcats in Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Northwestern's Walker Lambiotte rained in a career-high 32 points from the inside and out, but he and his team faded down the stretch to allow Iowa to win by a deceiving margin.

"It was a tough game the whole way through," said Lambiotte, who had scored 20 points by intermission. "We got run down physically, but we also stopped executing as well as we did in the earlier part of the game."

The victory pushed Iowa's record to 16-4 overall, 4-3 in the Big Ten, while the Wildcats fell to 8-11 and 1-8.

Northwestern opened the game fast, applying some pressure defense of their own and jumping out to a 10-4 lead on two Lambiotte free throws.

The Wildcats extended the lead to 22-13, but Ray Thompson's layup and subsequent 3-pointer pulled the Hawkeyes to within four at 22-18.

Iowa took its first lead of the contest, 37-35, when James Moses hit a baseline 3-pointer, and went on to lead 47-44 at intermission.

"Going into the game, we talked about how good Northwestern was and is," Iowa Coach Tom Davis said. "I think you saw tonight reality. We made it look like an easy game at the end of the game, but obviously it was anything but that."

"Lambiotte had a great game," Ed Horton provided the punch for Iowa in the second half. After scoring only four points and grabbing only two rebounds in the first half, Horton got motivated in the locker room and finished with 24 points and nine boards.

Northwestern was able to keep the game close for the first 10 minutes of the second stanza, but B.J. Armstrong's 10-of-10 effort from the free throw line, coupled with Horton's second-half outing, kept Iowa ahead.

The Wildcats pulled it to 72-70 with 11:11 left, but they failed to take advantage of an Iowa turnover and gave up one themselves. That swung the momentum toward the Hawkeyes and Iowa was able to pull away.

"When we brought it back to two, at that point, we really had an offensive power shortage," Northwestern Coach Bill Foster said. "We just couldn't score. They were on the line a lot, and they made their free throws."

Lambiotte failed to score in the final 10 minutes and missed the front end of four straight one-and-ones.

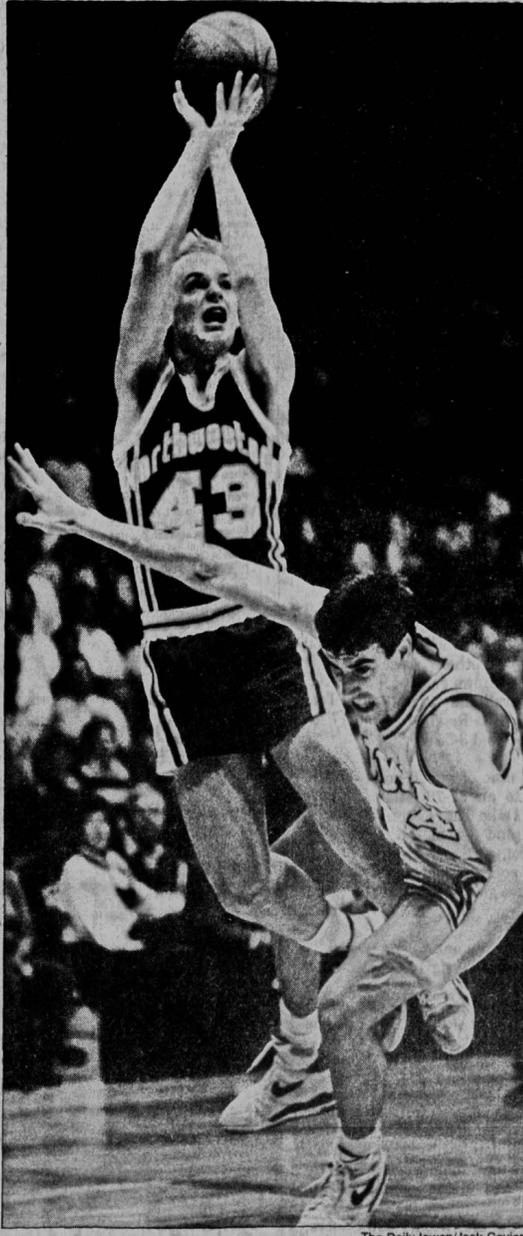

"I'd like to have had (Lambiotte) out for a while," Foster said. "He was tired. I should have taken him out, just for a minute and a half or two minutes."

Horton's 24 points led Iowa. Roy Marble scored 19, and Armstrong added 17 points and seven assists. The Hawkeyes outscored the Wildcats 42-25.

Moses, who went two of three from 3-point range and recorded 11 points, said with the win behind them the Hawkeyes can finally set their sights on Illinois, which lost to Purdue Thursday night.

"We need to be getting ready for the big game coming up Sunday," Moses said.

Matt Bullard will practice with the team today for the first time since his knee injury.

Horton rallies in second half

By Bryce Miller
The Daily Iowan

Somebody woke Ed Horton up — and that somebody was Ed Horton.

The senior pumped in a team-high 24 points, 20 of which came in the second half, in lifting Iowa to a 102-84 win over Northwestern Thursday night at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

"I came out a little flat in the first half," Horton said. "I thought our team came out a little flat. We had to start playing the basketball we're capable of playing. We got the job done in the second half."

Horton hauled down a game-high nine rebounds, with all but two coming in the last session. But while the Springfield, Ill., native proved highly productive in the second half, he was not a factor in the opening stanza.

"Eddie Horton came on real well and rebounded in the second half," Iowa Coach Tom Davis said. "He just couldn't get himself going in the first half. He ended up with nine rebounds, which was a pretty good performance."

The numbers for Horton in the first half were far from par. Four points, two rebounds and two-of-six shooting from the field caused many people to be concerned, except Horton.

"I just had to concentrate on what I had to do," Horton said. "I thought we came out better on defense in the second half and tried to do my job. This is a good Northwestern ballclub, I didn't have time to think about the first half."

The Wildcats got a tremendous effort out of junior transfer Walker Lambiotte. The North Carolina State refugee garnered a career-high 32 points but said

Injuries may hamper Hawks against Tigers

By Bryce Miller
The Daily Iowan

Iowa Coach Dan Gable has a schedule for his wrestlers to keep — and right now they're not doing it.

"We've fallen behind schedule," Gable said of where he wants his team to be at this point in the season. "I want to be going into these matches feeling good about where my team is, and I'm not doing that."

Saturday, the Hawkeyes will entertain the Missouri Tigers in a dual that will start at 7:30 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Gable said he hopes the dual will serve as a tune-up for next weekend's matchups with top-ranked Oklahoma State and second-ranked Arizona State.

"My concern is that we get things accomplished this weekend," Gable said. "I want to win the dual, but it's been hard keeping people in the practice room."

Some key injuries have jumbled the Iowa lineup. Senior co-captain John Heffernan, at 167 pounds, is coming off a knee injury that has kept the all-American out of recent action.

"My knee is doing better," Heffernan said. "Right now it's a fifty-fifty chance that I will go against Missouri. We'll just have to wait and see."

Gable said that Heffernan definitely will stay out of action against the Tigers. Gable said that Heffernan hasn't practiced enough to decide if the knee can take the pounding.

"We won't know about John until we see him in workouts," Gable said. "He will have to show that it is ready to go before we put him back in the lineup."

Sophomore Eric Pierson, who will be at 142 pounds for the Missouri matchup, aggravated a shoulder injury in Iowa's 23-17 loss to the Michigan Wolverines last weekend, but said he is confident that he will perform well.

"I think a lot of it was mental," Pierson said. "I got the shoulder stretched and it scared me a little. It will be okay. I just need to keep my mind off of it."

Although the Hawkeyes have some key duals coming up, Gable said the Missouri meet is still important.

"We have to be ready for next weekend from a physical point of view," Gable said. "Right now, I doubt that we are. (Missouri) will give us a chance to try and change that before next week."

Iowa hopes to break Big Ten deadlock

By Michael Trilk
The Daily Iowan

For the first time in recent memory, Iowa and Ohio State have some company at the top of the Big Ten women's basketball standings.

After upsetting the Hawkeyes last weekend, Purdue has joined Iowa and the Buckeyes in the league's upper echelon. Currently the three teams are tied for first in the league, and it looks as though the Big Ten champion will be the team that can beat the other contenders on the road.

That possibility scares Iowa Coach Vivian Stringer. Her Hawkeyes are accustomed to walloping opponents in Carver-Hawkeye Arena, but they have a little trouble playing on the road.

"We take on a serious new look on the road," Stringer said. "The heart and soul with this team lies with its fans. Unfortunately, we can't take them along with us everywhere. To be a legitimate Top 10 team, you have to be able to take care of the things on the road

This weekend will be a chance for Iowa to gain some confidence in a hostile setting. The Hawkeyes will play at Wisconsin tonight and Northwestern Sunday.

Iowa will take a 16-3 record into Madison, while the Badgers stand 9-6, 2-5 in the Big Ten.

It's not often that a Big Ten opponent catches the Hawkeyes coming off a loss, but Badger assistant coach Mike Peckham says that may be a disadvantage for his team.

"I don't know that there is ever a good time to play a team like Iowa," Peckham said. "Our kids know what Iowa represents and they are fired up, but we know that

Conference powers will collide: Patton's squad meets Michigan

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

For the past few years, the Michigan men's swimming team has dominated Iowa. Now, the Hawkeyes feel their chance to return the favor has come, at 7 tonight at the Field House Pool.

In 1987, Michigan beat Iowa 72-41, which was closer than it appears, because the Hawkeyes were merely outouched in several events.

Last year, in a lopsided meet, the Wolverines defeated Iowa 74-39.

But this time, the Hawkeyes feel they are ready. "I think we're more ready than we were the last two years," Iowa's Erik Bacon said. "Our attitudes are better."

"It won't be an easy meet," Michigan sprinter Greg Varner said. "They have a lot of strength. We don't have the depth comparable to Iowa, and they're always gunning for us. We just can't let our guard down."

As the old rivalry continues, the two teams will stroke it out for the top place in the Big Ten. Going into the meet, Michigan holds that honor, along with the No. 2 ranking in the country. Iowa is second in the league and seventh in the nation.

"We've been preparing for this for a long time," Michigan Coach Jon Urbanek said. "Iowa has always been a challenging meet. It's the big rivalry in the conference, and this year Iowa has improved."

Urbanek said that part of Iowa's improvement has been in confidence, since diver Tomasz Rossa and middle-distance swimmer Artur Wojdat joined the team. Both competed for Poland in the Seoul Olympics.

Men's Swimming

One big matchup could come in the 200-yard freestyle between Wojdat and Michigan's Brent Lang, if Lang swims that event. Lang, who may swim in the 50-yard instead, won a gold medal in the Seoul Olympics for competing as part of the 4x100 freestyle in the qualifying round.

Wojdat captured the bronze medal in the 400-meter freestyle in the Olympics in Seoul.

The key event, however, will be the 400-yard medley relay, which opens the meet.

"We have to try to win the medley relay," Iowa sprinter Dave Kohmetscher said. "Last year we lost that and never recovered. We can't let that happen again."

The divers will also compete, and according to Iowa diving Coach Bob Rydze, the divers could be a crucial part of the meet. Iowa has not had a diving win against Michigan since Randy Ableman in 1982.

"Michigan probably has the second-best men's diving unit in the country, behind Indiana," Rydze said. "Any one of the four (Michigan divers), possibly all four, could score at the NCAA championships."

Rydze also said that while Rossa has the advantage of competing on his home boards, anything could happen when it comes to diving.

Tonight the Hawkeyes will have a chance to break

Iowa will honor 34 for academics

The Iowa Board in Control of Athletics will recognize 34 Iowa athletes for academic achievement at halftime of the Iowa-Illinois basketball game Sunday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Those student-athletes who maintained a 3.0 cumulative grade point average and lettered during the 1987-88 school year will receive medallions in honor of the achievement. First-year award winners receive a bronze medallion, light bronze is given for the second year, silver for the third and gold for the fourth.

According to Fred Mims, assistant athletic director and director of athletic student services, the award is to recognize the accomplishments of student-athletes.

"When a student-athlete has academic difficulty, it's plastered all over," Mims said. "But you hardly ever see headlines about successful students."

"You need recognition like this to promote academics," swimmer Rob Leyshon, who will be receiving his first medallion, said. "Being successful in athletics helps in academics. It helps you learn to budget time."

Seventeen athletes are receiving their first medallion; nine, their second; two, their third; and six, their fourth.

Purdue slips past No. 2 Illinois

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Melvin McCants scored 12 of his 16 points in the second half and Purdue made 61 percent of its shots to upset No. 2 Illinois 76-72 in Big Ten play Thursday night.

The Boilermakers' torrid shooting kept them in contention in a game that was tight all the way, with neither team leading by more than five points.

Purdue, 10-11 and 3-5, broke a four-game slide. The Boilermakers, who shot 71 percent in the first half (17-for-24) and cooled down only slightly in the second half, took the lead for good with 7:42 to play 62-60 on a jumper by Tony Jones, who led all scorers with 22 points. Lowell Hamilton topped Illinois with 18, while Nick Anderson had 14 and Kenny Battle and Bardo scored 13 apiece.

Wisconsin 69, Michigan State 64 (OT)

MADISON, Wis. — Trent Jackson hit a 14-foot, go-ahead jump shot with 1:10 left in overtime Thursday night as Wisconsin rallied for a 69-64 Big Ten victory over Michigan State.

After Jackson's basket gave the Badgers a 65-63 lead, Michigan State had two chances to tie.

Mark Montgomery missed a short follow for the Spartans with 30 seconds to go, and Michigan State got another chance when the Badgers' Danny Jones missed two free throws eight seconds later.

Jones led the Badgers, now 12-6 overall and 4-5 in the Big Ten, with 20 points and Jackson added 15. Ken Redfield scored 17 for Michigan State, which dropped to 12-6 and 3-5.

Georgia Tech 81, No. 12 Duke 76

ATLANTA — Dennis Scott scored nine of his 20 points in the final 2:40, sparking Georgia Tech to an 81-76 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over 12th-ranked Duke Thursday night.

The Yellow Jackets, 13-6 overall and 3-2 in the ACC, were leading 68-66 when Scott took control, getting his flurry toward the finish on six free throws and a 3-point basket.

Duke, losing for the fourth time in five games, fell to 14-4 and 4-4 despite a 27-point effort by Danny Ferry.

No. 4 Arizona 86, California 59

TUCSON, Ariz. — Sean Elliott hit six 3-pointers and scored 26 points as fourth-ranked Arizona beat California 86-59 Thursday night in a Pacific-10 game of sports.

Arizona, the Pac-10 leader, improved to 10-1 in the conference and 16-2 for the season. Cal fell to 14-7 overall and 5-5 in league play.

Sauers, Pate, Brooks lead L.A. Open

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gene Sauers shot a 67 during the worst of the chilly afternoon winds, and gained a share of the first-round lead Thursday in the $1 million Los Angeles Open.

He was tied for the top spot at four under par with Steve Pate and Mark Brooks, both of whom played in the more favorable morning conditions.

"It was about two shots harder in the afternoon," said Sauers, who finished just before darkness enveloped the Riviera Country Club course.

Pate agreed that the early starters got the best of it.

"It seems like we got a pretty good break in the weather," he said.

Atlanta's James loses in arbitration

NEW YORK (AP) — Atlanta Braves outfielder Dion James lost in the first arbitration hearing of the year on Thursday and six players settled their cases.

James, who had been seeking $540,000, will get the same $400,000 he earned in 1988, arbitrator Daniel Collins decided. James batted .256 in 1988 with three homers and 30 runs batted in.

Horton

the job was difficult with Horton in the paint.

"You could all see his size," Lambiotte said. "We really don't have anybody with as much meat on the backside. Anybody would have trouble boxing him out. I don't know if he turned it up a notch or what, but he was tough inside."

Iowa trailed much of the first half, before tying the game at 28 with eight-minutes, 14-seconds left in the half. After the intermission, the contest stayed tight before the Hawkeyes pulled away in the latter stages.

Both coaches felt that Horton's improvement in the second half of the game was a key in the Hawkeyes' shaking a pesky Northwestern club.

"Horton was really a problem for us," Northwestern Coach Bill Foster said.

"Ed made up his mind that he was going to be a factor (in the second half)," Davis said.

Sunday, Horton will be on the floor when Illinois comes to town. Although the Fighting Illini were upset by Purdue Thursday, Horton said the Hawkeyes had better be prepared.

"The Big Ten is so tough," Horton said. "You don't know who's going to lose or who's going to win. It just shows you how good the Big Ten really is."

"Sunday's game is going to be a great Big Ten basketball game."

Women

Vivian will want to get back on track and we expect her kids to be fired up, too."

Another thing that wears Stringer is her team's turnovers. Iowa is turning the ball over much more than would be expected from a Top 10 team.

"We need to cut down on our turnovers," Stringer said. "We are turning the ball over, but we are unforced turnovers and we can't afford to do that."

Swimming

the Wolverines' dual-meet winning streak at 44 — the longest in the nation. Michigan recently broke Iowa's 99-meet Big Ten wrestling winning streak, and that may motivate the swimmers.

"We're trying to stop Michigan's winning streak," Iowa Coach Glenn Patton said. "But we're not too revenge-oriented."

"I was hoping we'd lose that streak to Stanford (Jan.

21)," Urbanek said. "I'd much rather have lost it to a Western school than to a Midwestern school. It does not serve any purpose."

"They have a really talented team," Kohmetscher said. "It will be a meet of depth. We'll trade off first places pretty evenly, so it'll be the other places that will make the meet. It should be a close one."

Illness deals blow to Hawks' depth

By Mike Pollisky
The Daily Iowan

After having two weeks off to prepare for this weekend's meets against Wisconsin and Michigan State in East Lansing, Mich., the Iowa men's gymnastics team featured a solid lineup.

That is until Iowa City's influenza bug flew off with the Hawkeyes' top gymnast, Jeff Dow, who is currently ranked 13th nationally in the all-around.

"Jeff hasn't practiced since last Friday," Coach Tom Dunn said, "and he won't be making the trip with us to East Lansing."

"Missing Jeff will make things a lot tougher than we expected. Because, if you take out Dow's scores from the Windy City tournament, our team score is comparable to that of Michigan State."

The loss of Dow has placed added pressure on captain Keith Cousino, ranked 18th nationally in the all-around, and still rings specialist Paul Wozniak, ranked second in the country.

Both gymnasts will have to raise their performances up a notch to compensate for Dow's absence.

"I think it puts a little pressure on the whole team," Cousino said. "It's going to be a close meet. The freshmen looked real good this week and so does Keith Rooks. We're coming off a great week of practice, now all we have to do is hit our routines."

"The whole team has been practicing great this week," Rooks said, "and especially on vault. Losing Jeff is tough, but the way we've been practicing, we should be able to overcome it."

Dunn's freshmen are also going to feel the pressure.

"There is some positive which comes out of this," Dunn said. "We will get a chance to take a good look at the freshmen. It will be interesting to see how Dillon Ashton, Paul Bautel and Don Scarlett perform. They have been looking good in practice lately."

Dunn stressed the importance of individual performances in this weekend's competition.

Tom Dunn

"This is the weekend when we start thinking about who will make up our strongest line-up," Dunn said. "We have to start determining who will be our best fifth and sixth person."

"We're looking for a couple wins right now. And we are also looking to gain some more experience for the freshmen."

Dunn has been using up to nine men in recent competitions. The line up of Cousino, Ashton, Scarlett, Rooks, Wozniak, Rick Benvenuto and Erik Heikkila will remain intact, with the exception of Bautel moving into Dow's all-around spot.

Iowa will compete in East Coast meet

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's gymnastics team will travel to Durham, N.H., Saturday for a quadrangular meet with Iowa State, Michigan State and New Hampshire.

"We're really looking forward to the meet," Iowa Coach Diane DeMarco said. "Michigan State is one of the highest-scoring teams in the conference."

Michigan State's best score this season is 186, the best in this weekend's field. Laura Johnson leads the Spartans with a 37.2 all-around score.

The Hawkeyes, 3-2, are ranked fourth in the Central Region and held the 21st spot in the nation last week.

Freshman Lori Cole paces Iowa with three all-around titles this season.

New Hampshire has a 3-1 record and scored a season-high 181.45 points last weekend. The Wildcats are led by all-arounder Lori Brady, who holds the season-best score of 37.05.

Iowa State recorded a top score of 181.25 last weekend and is paced by Dani Muszkat with a 36.50 mark in the all-around competition. The Cyclones are 2-5 for the season.

Women's Gymnastics

Last weekend, Iowa defeated Southeast Missouri State with a total of 182.45 points. According to junior Robyn Zussman, the team is out to break that total — and possibly the school record of 182.65 — this weekend.

"We want to break that record," Zussman said. "That's what we're shooting for. I think we can even go as high as 183 or 184 if everyone performs well. We're coming off doing well (last weekend), and we don't need any more motivation than that."

Zussman also did not think that the traveling would be too hard on the athletes.

"It won't make any difference," Zussman said. "We have time to adjust, since we're leaving Thursday."

Despite the short week of workouts, DeMarco felt that the practices have been very productive.

Hawkeyes open vs. Northern Illinois

By Julie Deardorff
The Daily Iowan

After three years of traveling to Cedar Rapids for indoor tennis meets, Iowa finally returns to the Recreation Building Saturday at 6:30 p.m. against Northern Illinois.

The season-opening meet sets an appropriate stage for Iowa Coach Steve Houghton to record his 100th career win. Houghton's first win at Iowa came in 1982, a 5-4 decision against Illinois State.

Despite last year's easy 5-1 win over Northern Illinois, in which no doubles matches were necessary, Houghton isn't expecting a rout. The Huskies are already 3-1 in the indoor season and have three high-quality players in Steve Wiere, Dan Bowers and Erik Andersch of Sweden. Wiere defeated Iowa's Martin Aguirre 5-1, 7-5, last year, but Aguirre beat Bowers, the team's only senior, this fall.

"Their top four positions are always solid," said Iowa's Paul Buckingham.

"Their coach (Carl Nuefelt) always has good players," echoed Jay Malthy, who plays No. 6 singles. "But everyone is confident and fired up, especially since it's the first time in three years we've been able to play here during the indoor season. We're going to get the season off on the right foot."

Senior Mike Kiewiet will start off the year at the No. 1 singles position, and will get a chance to face Wiere. Kiewiet went 51-1 as a junior at Western Michigan before transferring to Iowa, just missing qualifying for the NCAA meet. Wiere was the player who went instead of him.

Claes Ramel and Aguirre will play No. 2 and No. 3 singles respectively. Aguirre recently made the quarterfinals in the Michigan State Spartan Invitational.

"Both the top three and bottom three singles players are interchangeable," said Houghton. "The doubles are pretty well established, but singles are up in the air. This year is different, because there isn't a spot in singles where I don't feel comfortable that we can win."

Lars Nordmark will start at No. 4 singles, Dave Novak will play No. 5 and Malthy, who currently holds the Iowa career singles win percentage record at 78.7 percent, will play No. 6.

The doubles teams will be Aguirre and Ramel at No. 1, Buckingham and Kiewiet at No. 2 and Novak and Nordmark at No. 3.

Iowa will host nine teams for 1st meet on new track

By Matthew Zlatnik
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's track team will make its only Iowa City appearance of the indoor season when it hosts the Hawkeye Open Saturday at the Recreation Building.

The field will feature Eastern, Southern, and Western Illinois, Illinois State, Bradley, DePaul, Northern Iowa, Drake and Iowa State. Field events will begin at 10:30 a.m., preliminaries at 11:00 and finals at 3 p.m.

Iowa Coach Jerry Hassard said he expects an exciting meet.

"Due to the fact that the teams are fairly comparable in their strengths," Hassard said, "this should make a good team competition. "Since there's so many teams, the fields will be full, with eight or nine teams in each event. I think that every team will play a part in the scoring."

The Hawkeyes hope to maintain momentum from last week's second-place finish at the Minnesota/Reebok Invitational, and Hassard said he thinks competing at home will help.

"They'll be a little more rested at home, and therefore able to perform better," Hassard said. "The hometown crowd helps and our facility, because it's a fast track, will contribute."

"It's a lot more relaxed," senior high jumper Traci Claussen said, "because you don't have to travel."

"There's a lot more team spirit at home," said senior Tricia Kiraly, who will run in the two-mile relay and the 3,000-meters. "You know the crowd is there for you, not the other teams. They're cheering for you, not for Wisconsin or Nebraska or whoever."

Since the Hawkeyes are at home, they will field a bigger squad than the one they sent to Minnesota last weekend. Hassard said the added depth will help, but the strategy will be unchanged from last weekend.

"We'll do what we did last week, which is try to win with quality performances in each area," Hassard said. "We'll try to get quality performances in the fields we're in, and we'll be working toward the team title."

"I just want to see the whole team, including myself, get it together like last week," Kiraly said. "If the team can pull together, it will help us a lot in the future, like at Big Tens."

Claussen, who jumped a personal-best five feet, eight inches to set a meet record last weekend, said her goal is to improve this week.

"I want to jump higher than last week, to go five-nine or five-ten," Claussen said. "(National) qualifying height is five-eleven."

Saturday's meet will be the first college-level competition on the newly resurfaced Recreation Building track. Hassard said practice times show the Iowa track may be faster than most.

"We're still trying to figure out how fast our track is," Hassard said, "but by every indication, from practice and the intrasquad meet, it looks like it's good."

"It's going to be nice, because we haven't had a big meet in our facility yet," Claussen said. "It's the first time any of us have competed in the Rec Building."

Hawks face Gophers on road

By Neil Lewis
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa men's track team considers the indoor track season a warm-up for the outdoor season.

But competition may warm up quickly this weekend when the Hawkeyes will face a fair matchup against Minnesota Saturday in Minneapolis.

Though the Gophers finished eighth in the Big Ten outdoor and indoor meets last season, they return a strong distance-running core and several other key specialists.

Men's Track

"We don't feel we're really ready to compete after the five or six weeks of practice," Iowa Coach Ted Wheeler said. "We will be reaching championship level by the time the Big Ten meets come around, but just barely."

"We just don't put as much emphasis on the indoor season.

The biggest thing is just avoiding injuries."

Minnesota certainly isn't the strongest all-around team in the conference, but should give Iowa some good competition. During early indoor tests, last season's conference leaders, Illinois and Indiana, turned in impressive showings. Minnesota did win its Reebok Invitational meet this past weekend.

Key performers Frank and Roger Bjorkli return for Minnesota in the distance events, and Iowa may have a difficult time challenging John Siekmeier in the shot put.

Iowa opens slate with Texas meets

By Steve Reed
The Daily Iowan

As the Iowa women's tennis team heads into full-squad competition for the first time this spring, the Hawkeyes will try to overcome the loss of players to injury and illness.

The Hawkeyes are in Lubbock, Texas, today to compete against Texas Tech at 12:30 p.m. Then Iowa will look up in singles competition with New Mexico at 6:30 p.m.

The weekend's competition will conclude Saturday with doubles matches against New Mexico at 8:30 a.m. and Texas-San Antonio at 2:30 p.m.

Iowa Coach Mick Schillig said though the team is at less than full strength, she still expects a strong performance.

"We've had a few injuries," Schillig said, "and it seems like anyone who isn't injured has come down with the flu. So we haven't had any full, hard practices."

"But I think the girls are ready for the competition, since we haven't had a dual match in quite a while."

Two key members of the squad won't be competing this weekend but will still make the trip. Junior Susan Evans is out with a stress fracture on her wrist, and sophomore Catherine Wilson is inactive because of a knee injury.

Also, junior Colleen Nichols won't be making the trip because of academic commitments.

The Hawkeyes breezed through their fall dual meet schedule with victories over state rivals Drake and Iowa State. However, Schillig said the spring schedule looks to be a bit more challenging.

"We did fairly decent against Minnesota in a practice match," Schillig said, "but that was a while back and I've seen Texas Tech and they're a strong team. They don't have any superstars, but they have a lot of depth. New Mexico is an awfully good team, too."

Schillig said that Liz Canzoneri, Madeleine Willard and Tracey Donnelly should be key performers this season. Canzoneri was nationally ranked last season as a sophomore.

"It'll be interesting to see how we play Texas Tech, because we're base-liners and they like to serve and volley with powerful one-handed, sliced backhands," Canzoneri said. "We don't see those types of players that often, and how we adjust to them will decide how we do."

Donnelly, who had a solid fall season in her first year as a Hawkeye, said the meet will be tough, but will also be a good experience because Schillig intends to look at different doubles combinations.

"A favorable outcome this weekend will have lasting ramifications because it will build our confidence for the rest of the season," Donnelly said.

NFL veterans go on block

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 600 unconditional free agents formally went on the open market in the NFL Thursday.

Under the new system imposed by the club owners, the players became available to any team in the league, and could be signed without costing the new club draft choices as compensation.

But the true test will be how many teams will window shop and how many will actually sign new players.

There were numerous big names on the list of 619, which included about three-quarters of the players over 30 in the league.

But most interest appeared to be in the young players left unprotected. Everyone seemed to be casting a wary eye on Washington, where general manager Bobby Beathard and his scouts have developed an uncanny ability to spot young, unheralded talent.

"They're one of the most aggressive teams out there. They'll strike like sharks," said Harold Lewis, an agent who represents Ricky Sanders, whom Beathard obtained from New England in a trade after Sanders had proved himself in the USFL.

"That's because there's fresh meat in the water."

The fresh meat from the lists might include Sam Kenney, a San Francisco linebacker singled out for praise by 49er Coach Bill Walsh during Super Bowl week or Mike Arley, a young offensive lineman with the Giants who spent all of last season on injured reserve.

Among those unprotected: — Todd Christensen, Mike Haynes and most of the Los Angeles Raiders from their 1983 Super Bowl winner as well as mainstays from the Super Bowl champion Bears (1985), Giants (1986) and Redskins (1987). Washington's unprotected list included Timmy Smith, who rushed for a Super Bowl record 205 yards as a rookie a year ago but was overweight and out of favor last season.

Several regular kickers, including the Bahr brothers, Matt of Cleveland and Chris of the Raiders, and Jim Breech, who was three-for-three for Cincinnati in its 20-16 Super Bowl loss to San Francisco.

Such past stars as Denver's Tony Dorsett and Mike Haynes; Washington's Russ Grimm; tight end Ozzie Newsome and nose tackle Bob Golic of Cleveland; Cincinnati's Cris Collinsworth and Reggie Williams; the Raiders' Haynes, Christensen and James Lofton; the Rams' Charles White and Dallas Randy White, plus Harry Carson of the Giants, who has already announced his retirement. Most are well past their prime.

McKinney takes gold at Vail

VAIL, Colo. (AP) — Tamara McKinney won a gold medal in women's combined at the World Alpine Ski Championships Thursday, breaking the United States' four-year medal drought by overtaking Swiss superstar Vreni Schneider in the combined downhill. McKinney gave the United States its first gold medal in the biennial World Championships since Diann Roffe won the giant slalom in 1985 at Bormio, Italy. The American team was shut out at the 1988

Olympics. Making an aggressive and surprisingly competent downhill run in an event she rarely races, McKinney added a third-place finish in the downhill to her second-place in Sunday's slalom.

Friday — "Wild Strawberries" (1957) — Ingmar Bergman's film about an eminent physician and researcher who's told by those in the know that he's a schmuck. In Swedish, with English subtitles. 6:30 p.m.

"Cane Toads: An Unnatural History" / "Vernon, Florida" (1988/1981) — The first is a hilarious documentary about great big toads in Australia, and the second is about a small town in the middle of nowhere. 8:15 p.m. Saturday at 6:30 p.m.

"The Dead Zone" (1983) — Christopher Walken is at his haunting best in this David Cronenberg adaptation of Stephen King's greatest fat novel. 10:15 p.m.; Saturday at 10:15 p.m.

Saturday — "Red Sorghum" (1987) — Set in the turbulence of 1930s China, this epic flick concerns Gong Li, a young woman whose husband dies, leaving her with charge of the winery. In Mandarin, with English subtitles. 8:30 p.m. Sunday at 7 p.m.

Sunday — "Little Women" (1933) — It's Louisa May Alcott's soupy little classic, brought to glorious life on the big screen with a very young Katharine Hepburn, before she became box-office poison, and considerably before she became first lady of American cinema. 1 and 3:15 p.m.

"Susana" (1951) — And for those of you who just can't get enough of him, here's the 85th Luis Buñuel movie in as many days — this one about a maid whose militant eroticism shakes up the family for whom she works. In Spanish, with English subtitles. 8:45 p.m.

Television

Saturday — "This Old House" — Bob Villa visits reasonably priced and energy-efficient homes in the Chicago area — immediately following that, he tours Santa's North Pole workshop (1:30 p.m.; IPTV 12).

"Radio Free Iowa" features a chat with some of the Ducks behind "Zadar! Cow From Hell," as well as the usual collection of reviews, poetry and "Lust on the Airwaves." (Friday, 1 p.m.; KRUI).

Musically, KRUI's weekend includes "The Soul Music Show" with Jammin' John Patterson, Friday, 8p.m.-2 a.m.; "The Metal Asylum" with Jeff Wagner, Saturday, 8-11 p.m.; "Guilt and Revenge" with Mark Weills; and "Rhythm Radio" with Mike Ascroft, Sunday, 8-11 p.m.
