List inquiry elicits anger

UI charged with 'denial'

By Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

UI administrators have inadequately addressed violent incidents on campus, several local citizens claimed at a press conference Thursday. Speakers slammed UI administrators for historically not acting on violent incidents — including their handling of sadistic graffiti found in a Rienow Residence Hall men's restroom Feb. 16.

Members of New Wave said the UI administration did not take proper action to investigate the incident until outside groups pressured them to respond.

"I think we can claim credit in many ways for any investigation at all," said John Riley, New Wave member.

New Wave sponsored a picket in front of Rienow March 13 and presented to the UI administration a list of demands including a call for a full investigation of the incident, decisive action against the perpetrators, release of the report of the UI Task Force on Violence and improved orientation programs concerning violence on campus.

Marianne Cherni of the Take Back the Night committee demanded Thursday that the UI impose a mandatory rape awareness program for all students at orientation.

Karla Miller, director of the Rape Victim Advocacy Center, said the attitudes expressed in the Rienow list contribute to a violent society. She added that 38 rapes were reported to her office during the last six months of 1988.

"We must fight denial and minimization with every fiber," Miller said. "When someone (whether a man or a woman) says, 'It's no big deal' or 'This will blow over' or 'This has been blown out of proportion... these guys were just kidding around,' we are witnessing insensitivity, invalidation, denial and minimization at its finest."

Miller met last month with various departmental representatives, including Campus Security and the Office of Student Services, to discuss strategies for identifying those responsible for the graffiti.

Phillip Jones, UI dean of student services, said the residents of the floor were sent a letter March 17 requesting that they assist the UI administration in identifying the authors of the list.

If no specific information is volunteered by the residents, Campus Security will proceed with an investigation of criminal mischief, Jones said.

"Criminal mischief is a misdemeanor," Jones said. "It has nothing to do with outrage but rather a prosecutable crime."

Of the more than 300 UI disciplinary cases heard last year, 22 percent dealt with acts of violence or assault. Penalties ranged from academic probation to expulsion from the UI.

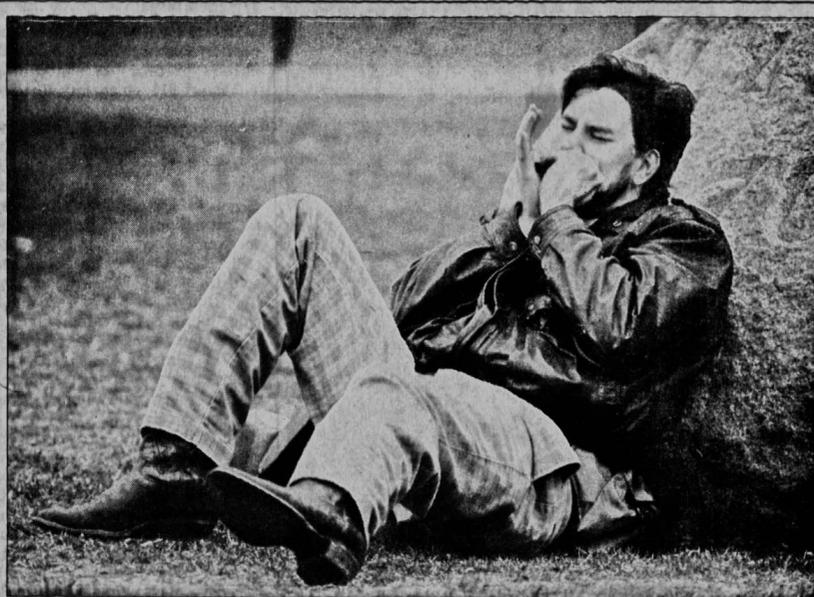

"People who wish to see more visible action taken are not aware of the facts," Jones said.

Currently, the UI uses a confidential disciplinary system that does not make public facts about individual cases, a practice Jones said would not change.

"We are, in essence, prosecuting violence and sexual assault within the university disciplinary system," Jones said.

UI statements that condemn violence and support affirmative action or other issues are meaningless, unless supported by decisive action, several speakers said.

Speakers at Thursday's press conference said the Iowa City community See List, Page 5A

Cheney: Streamlining efforts may bring more base closings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said Thursday he might ask Congress to close more military bases as a money-saving move in efforts "to try to create a leaner, more efficient" structure for America's armed forces.

Cheney, in his first lengthy Pentagon interview since taking office March 17, said a base-closing initiative undertaken last year by the Reagan administration was "a hell of an idea" but "obviously a first-time effort."

"We may well want to go further and start again," he said.

"While I understand the problems that some of my former colleagues (in Congress) face — individual situations in their districts — I just have to believe that there are opportunities for economies in reviewing a base structure that has been basically unchanged for 50 or 60 years," said the former congressman from Wyoming. "I'm not ready to make an announcement today," he continued.

"But I think if you're going to look at finding ways to maintain the nation's defenses with less money... then I have no choice as secretary but to look for ways to save money. And one of those ways is to close bases that aren't necessary, to consolidate operations and to try to create a leaner, more efficient infrastructure for our military forces."

Cheney also said it was much too premature to discuss the withdrawal of American troops from Europe, given the absence of progress in conventional arms control talks with the Warsaw Pact.

In addition, he said he wanted to do everything possible to provide military support to authorities fighting the drug trade but didn't want to see soldiers being used as policemen, and agreed he had no magic answer to dealing with Panamanian leader Manuel Antonio Noriega.

The situation involving Noriega is a problem the Bush administration inherited from the Reagan administration, which tried unsuccessfully to pressure Noriega to step down after he was indicted on drug charges in the United States.

"I don't know that I've got any light I can shed on the Noriega problem," Cheney said in the interview with wire service reporters.

"It obviously is a continuing problem. It's something this administration inherited from our predecessors. But I don't have anything this morning that I can give you by way of new policy or a new idea."

Asked if he had any reason to think that elections in Panama could be conducted democratically, he replied: "There's always hope."

Exxon captain drunk during accident

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — The captain of a tanker was legally drunk when his ship veered off course and ran into a reef, causing the worst oil spill in the nation's history, federal investigators said Thursday.

Exxon Valdez skipper Joseph Hazelwood had a blood-alcohol reading of 0.061 when measured nine hours after the ship rammed Blight Reef, said William Woody, head of a four-man National Transportation Safety Board team investigating the spill.

Under a federal law that prohibits operating a commercial vessel at sea while intoxicated, the limit set by the Coast Guard is .04, Woody said. For automobile drivers in Alaska and most other states, a blood-alcohol reading of .10 is considered legally drunk.

Hazelwood was not on the bridge when the tanker ran aground March 24. Third mate Gregory Cousins, who the Coast Guard says lacked proper certification, was giving the orders.

Woody said a Coast Guard officer told investigators he smelled alcohol on Hazelwood's breath a few hours after the accident. But the Guardsman and a harbor pilot agreed Hazelwood appeared competent, Woody said.

On the advice of their lawyers, Hazelwood and Cousins have refused to talk to investigators, Woody said.

Coast Guard spokesman Todd Nelson said the agency is waiting for final findings from the NTSB before proceeding with any criminal charges. Such charges could lead to up to one year in prison and not more than $5,000 in fines, according to the Coast Guard and Marine Safety Office in Juneau.

Penalties for operating a ship while intoxicated also include the loss of a seaman's license or up to $1,000 in civil fines.

Woody said there was no sign of alcohol in Cousins' blood or urine. Nor was there any indication of alcohol in the tests administered to helmsman Robert Kagan, he said.

However Woody said a civilian Coast Guard employee, who came on duty just before the ship ran aground, tested at .20 Friday afternoon. The employee, Bruce Blandford, was one of two people on duty in the radar room in Valdez, where tanker traffic is monitored as it moves through the Valdez Narrows.

Blandford had begun work at midnight, four minutes before the tanker accident, and stayed several hours after his normal 8 a.m. quitting time, authorities said.

He had been off duty for several hours when he was recalled for the alcohol test, Woody said. He denied drinking Thursday night, and his superiors said his performance appeared normal, Woody said.

Telephone threats preceded 'foul' assassination of Ahdal

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The Moslem cleric slain in his Brussels office had been threatened with death for opposing Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's order that author Salman Rushdie be killed as a blasphemer, officials said Thursday.

Vice Premier Willy Claes said Abdullah Ahdal, who was killed Wednesday, got a telephone threat March 24 because of his disagreement with Khomeini's death sentence on the Indian-born British novelist for writing "The Satanic Verses."

Rushdie has been in hiding in Britain since Khomeini issued the proclamation Feb. 14.

Claes said "the Islamic world is deeply divided" by Khomeini's execution order, which Iranian clerics accompanied with a reward of $5.2 million, and the threat "clearly referred to the moderate viewpoints" Ahdal had expressed.

He did not exclude other motives for the murder, however. No one has claimed responsibility.

Britain offered to help find the killers. "I stand ready to offer any assistance which may be See Staying, Page 5A

Sex behavior survey may help scientists in fight against AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government wants to ask 2,300 Americans when they last had sex, what they did and whether their partner was a man or a woman.

That's not all. Scientists want to know other intimate details of respondents' sexual lives, such as: How often do they have sex? Do they use condoms? How often do they masturbate?

Scientists and public health experts recognize these are sensitive matters, but they say the information they would gain would paint a comprehensive picture of Americans' sexual behavior essential to the fight against AIDS, the lethal disease spread by sexual contact.

Such answers also would help health experts plan better strategies to combat other sexually transmitted diseases and unwanted pregnancies, the experts say.

Still, said one critic, "Mom and Pop America just aren't going to answer these questions."

Charles Turner, the director of the AIDS research committee at the National Research Council, an arm of the National Academy of Sciences, defended the need for the survey.

"To understand the course of the AIDS epidemic, you have to understand the patterns of sexual behavior in the population," he said. "At present, we do not have the basic information that's essential for understanding those behaviors."

"We're in the same position as a pilot trying to fly the plane with the radar turned off, which isn't to say you can't land the plane with just your eyes, but you'd do a lot better if you had more information."

The survey attempts to gather information on virtually all aspects of sexual behavior, including how people chose their sexual partners and practices, such as anal sex, a high-risk activity for AIDS transmission, and oral sex, one of the most common ways in which other sexually transmitted diseases are spread.

The survey aims to more accurately estimate the number of gay See Sex, Page 5A

Package deals turn beach fun into 'hell,' UI travelers attest

The beaches were sandy, the water was warm and the beer was cold. But the hotel was full.

So was the airplane, and the buses took two days longer than they were supposed to.

Ah, memories of Spring Break 1989. Many students who signed up for college-sponsored spring break vacations and thought they were paying someone to take care of all the details found out the hard way that travel-package wholesalers aren't always what they claim to be.

"They're out to get your money, and that's just what they're doing," said Angie Rotenburger, who went on University Travel's trip to Cancun, Mexico.

Neither was having all her money and jewelry stolen by the hotel maids.

If you stop and think about the concept of "spring break" — a mass vacation by thousands of 17- to 23-year-olds who are sick of lectures, exams and cold weather — it's no surprise that the reality See Ripoff, Page 4A

Board debates proposal for county 911 service

By Lisa Swegle
The Daily Iowan

Supervisor Charles Duffy voiced concern Tuesday about the complicated process of installing enhanced 911 emergency services in Johnson County.

Pending county residents' approval of a 25-cents-a-line telephone surcharge, E911 might be installed in Johnson County, Supervisor Dick Myers said at Tuesday's Johnson County Board of Supervisor's meeting.

"I've been to several meetings, and something new is always coming up," Duffy said. "It is really getting more complicated than it started out."

E911 immediately informs emergency personnel of the address and phone number of an emergency caller.

Duffy likened E911 to a movement several years ago by a company that sold signs to rural homeowners. The signs were supposed to aid emergency personnel in finding homes in the county by listing the homeowner's name, telephone number and address.

Homeowners who purchased the signs wasted their money, Duffy said.

Myers agreed the county has a long haul to travel before E911 is installed, but said the service will be valuable to county residents.

"You've got people sitting out in the county who don't know what emergency number to call," he said.

Myers said the main obstacle blocking the installation of E911 is the question of how money will be raised for telephone companies to upgrade equipment: from county residents through a phoneline surcharge, from taxpayer money or by individual telephone companies.

E911 expenses have been estimated at $300,000 for initial equipment costs and $4,782 a year to maintain the service.

Another problem is that some phone companies in Johnson County service other counties as well. If the board paid for part of the E911 system, it would be subsidizing other counties, Myers said.

"I would not be enthused about upgrading equipment in Cedar County," Supervisor Bob Burns said.

Duffy said the new rural addressing system will cause residents additional confusion. Some rural residents have had their telephone numbers and addresses changed three times.

In other business, Myers said final interviews were conducted Wednesday with candidates for the position of 6th Judicial District Director.

Five finalists were selected from an original field of more than 40 applicants, he said. The director will be named April 19.

Applicants flood UI law school

By Brian Dick
The Daily Iowan

Applications for enrollment to the UI College of Law have increased dramatically over the past four years, and UI law school graduates have been making their way in the job market with greater facility than their competitors, according to UI law placement statistics.

Spurred possibly by the attractiveness of television's "L.A. Law" series and the recent attention paid to the Supreme Court nominations, the College of Law has received five times more applications than it can accommodate, administrators said. Even though the UI has recently constructed the Boyd College of Law building, the faculty can meet the educational demands of only 225 entering students yearly.

In contrast to the mid-'80s, when law school interest dropped to a historic low in Iowa, nearly 1,200 students have applied to the College of Law for the 1989-90 academic term. N. William Hines, dean of the UI Law College, said there was no explanation for the recent increase.

"We've been approaching doomsday demands for entrance, but these figures fluctuate yearly." — William Hines, dean of the UI College of Law

"We've been approaching doomsday demands for entrance, but these figures fluctuate yearly," Hines said. "The number of applicants could very well drop by 25 percent next year."

In addition to the enticements that both "L.A. Law" and the Supreme Court controversies have proffered for prospective law students, Hines suggested a third possibility as to why more people want to gain entry to law school now, but he noted that "there isn't any research that would confirm the validity of these speculations."

"The third possibility, in addition to the 'L.A. Law' and Bork theories, is that the increase is the result of 'Black Monday' in 1987 when people in the business schools chose to pursue law because they thought they were about to witness the end of their world," Hines said. "The bottom line is that there is no rhyme or reason as to the upsurge in demand for entry."

Those applicants fortunate enough to gain entry into the UI law school, which is ranked in the nation's top 20 law schools by the American Bar Association, have managed to secure employment at a greater and more expedient rate than their legal contemporaries, according to the annual UI law placement survey.

Within six months after graduation,

97 percent of the UI law graduates in the 1987-88 class found employment. This figure bested the previous year's national average of 93 percent, the survey announced.

Brian Lewis, UI College of Law employment placement director, said these placement figures are dissolving the idea that today's legal market harbors an overabundance of lawyers.

"In places where the economy hasn't been as good as others, where there's been bankruptcy, for example, there's still a need for lawyers," Lewis said. "In good times and bad times, the demand is there for lawyers."

The reputation of UI law grads, however, has increased the number of recruiters coming to the UI to attract the abundance of fresh, new talent, Lewis said.

"We had a record year with 297 employers interviewing on campus," he said. "The reason we're getting contacts from new employers is because of the school's reputation, but it's also because of the students' reputations."

UI little sister programs fading

Fraternities give in to national pressure, avoid insurance risks

By Michelle Strang
Special to The Daily Iowan

Little sister programs in UI fraternities have been fading fast in the past few years mainly because of problems with insurance companies and negative stereotypes.

Of the 29 fraternities on the UI campus, only eight still have little sister programs. More than half of the fraternities have discontinued their little sister programs within the last three years.

Problems with insurance coverage and stereotypes have caused the little sister programs to fade in the past few years.

"Insurance companies don't like little sister programs at all," said Phi Kappa Sigma president Tim Summers, whose chapter had a program until last year. "Our national organization told us it would be in our best interest to get rid of it."

According to Pat Sammarco, president of Sigma Chi, insurance companies dislike little sister organizations because they are tied to partying and drinking. Sammarco said national fraternity organizations prefer to stay away from activities related to alcohol as much as possible.

Mary Peterson, Office of Campus Programs and Student Activities coordinator, said most of the national fraternities now refuse to recognize little sister programs. In addition, Peterson said her office has nothing to do with little sister programs on campus.

"Most of the fraternities have been smart enough to wipe out the programs," Peterson said. "There's just too much else to do within their chapter to risk any potential problems with the national organization."

Besides alcohol risks, another factor in the decline of little sister organizations is myths surrounding the role of fraternity little sisters.

Each fall, fraternities that still sponsor the programs host little sister rush parties for women who are interested. According to Dar Sampson, UI Interfraternity Council president, fraternity members stress uplifting, positive activities with their little sisters.

Sampson said those activities can include going out for lunch, studying at the library or "just hanging out." Also, if a fraternity member doesn't have a date to a formal party, he can take his little sister.

But Anne Ferin, a UI junior, said she has heard few positive things about little sister programs on campus.

"From what I've heard, they're just a private dating service for fraternities," Ferin said.

"One of the myths is that little sisters are 'little sleazes,'" said Mark Gibson, Tau Kappa Epsilon little sister co-chairman. "This statement is far too generalized. It only takes a few girls to ruin the reputations of all of them."

"When we have a little sister party, we're just recreating the same atmosphere as at a sorority-fraternity exchange or downtown," Sammarco said. "The stereotype of a little sister having to sexually earn her way into a house is just ridiculous."

Sammarco said it would not make sense to eliminate little sister programs unless greek exchanges are also eliminated.

Tim Van Wyngarden, president of Pi Kappa Alpha, also believes many little sister stereotypes are untrue.

"The myths aren't true at all," Van Wyngarden said. "None of the positive stuff, like going to the library, is ever focused on."

But some UI women claim that sometimes the negative stereotypes become reality.

Jennifer, a sophomore who recently quit a little sister program at a UI fraternity, said a number of her friends also disassociated themselves from the program after a short time.

"The people I've known who were little sisters quit after one or two months," she said. "It seems like most of the frat guys just want to use and abuse them."

But Dayna Glasson, a UI sophomore who is little sister president at Tau Kappa Epsilon, said cases of harassment rarely occur. "I've never seen big brothers hitting on their little sisters be a problem," Glasson said.

Pi Kappa Alpha little sister Andrea Schultz said she was surprised by some negative rumors about little sister programs.

"My big brother has been nothing but a gentleman to me," she said. "In fact, if anything he's protective of me."

UI senior Chris Leach, a former little sister at Phi Delta Theta and Delta Chi, said she never had any problems with harassment from fraternity members. "There are some sleazy connotations that seem to go with being a fraternity little sister, but really it all depends on the woman who's a little sister and what her morals are," said Leach. "I've never been molested or anything. The guys were really nice."

Opponents of little sister programs also claim that the programs take away rushees from the sororities. Van Wyngarden disagrees.

But because of pressure from their national organization, Van Wyngarden still expects his fraternity to discontinue the program next year.

"Our national organization really wants us to drop it," he said.

Iowa landfill, tannery make list of most hazardous waste dumps

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency on Thursday added the Mid-America Tanning Co. at Sergeant Bluff, Iowa, and the Red Oak City Landfill in Red Oak, Iowa, to its list of hazardous waste dumps that pose the greatest long-term threat to public health and the environment.

The Iowa sites were among 101 in 33 states added to the EPA list, bringing to 1,163 the number of waste sites eligible for federal funds under the EPA's $8.5 billion "Superfund" cleanup program.

Mid-America Tanning was among 10 recommended for inclusion on the Superfund list in 1988.

EPA officials say 900 cubic yards of tanning sludge were dumped into an unprotected trench at the Mid-America plant nearly 10 years ago and that a dangerous level of chromium, manganese and arsenic later were detected at a nearby lake and at monitoring wells.

Two workers died at the tannery, now called U.S. Tanning, earlier this year when they were overcome by hydrogen sulfide gas. Eleven people who tried to help them were taken to Sioux City hospitals, but they recovered.

Conservation corps work available for youths

By Sharon Hernandez-Dorow
The Daily Iowan

If you need a job this summer and are interested in conservation work, the Young Adult Conservation Corps may be able to help you.

In conjunction with the UI, the Mayor's Youth Employment Program is offering a summer-job program for unemployed people ages 18-24.

"This program is designed to give young people meaningful and productive experience with conservation work," said Teresa Ulin, administrative assistant director for the program.

The participants will be working with different conservation programs with the UI Division of Recreational Services. Most of the employees will be working at the MacBride Recreation Area, said Ulin. Participants will work in park maintenance, soil conservation and community improvement projects, Ulin added.

"A lot of these students are interested in or are majoring in conservation. This program can do them a lot of good," Ulin said.

The employment will run from May 15 to September 15, 1989. Both part-time and full-time positions are available. Wages are between $3.35 and $5.00 an hour depending on the job. To be eligible for the program, participants must be unemployed for at least two weeks before applying.

"It's also important for people to know that this is individual work and not a group setting," Ulin said.

This is the program's third year. Last year, the program was able to employ 40 people, but because of funding cutbacks the number may be smaller, said Ulin.

"It's going to be a great benefit to the university in terms of projects that we will be able to complete with the help of this grant program," said Harry Ostrander, director of the Recreational Services Division.

"This offers the University of Iowa an opportunity to employ many young adults who are in need of employment that will allow them to continue their education," he said.

For more information on eligibility and application for the program, contact the Mayor's Youth Employment Service or the UI Division of Recreational Services.

UI student 'drops cultures'

By Kathleen Brill
The Daily Iowan

Watching the dance floor and listening to the last few songs at a UI African cultural celebration, John Van Etten jumped forward in his chair and said, "Yeah, Yeah! That's exactly how they danced."

Lost in the mood of the music, Van Etten was reminiscing about his two years teaching math as a Peace Corps volunteer in Mayumba, Gabon, on the West African coast near the equator.

His sudden enthusiasm about the music and dancing triggered still more emotions and memories about his stay in Gabon, which ended last summer. Van Etten is currently a UI graduate student in Urban Planning.

"I wanted an ineffable experience," he said, laughing. Then he grew quieter, and said, "dropping cultures" was the best way to explain the moments when he really felt he was communicating on a deeper, more honest level with the people he met in Gabon.

To communicate effectively, he said he needed to change his outlook and to stop responding to situations with his American attitudes. "You realize how much you rely on programmed responses," he said.

Even though his American culture was very different from the traditions in Gabon, Van Etten said he felt his efforts to communicate were often successful. "There's still some kind of a link. When you can drop cultures and just be people — it's an incredible experience," he said.

One of his more memorable occasions of establishing such cross-cultural links took place when he made friends with a fisherman. The two were speaking about children and other family matters while the fisherman was working on a fishing net in a hut next to the sea. Van Etten said he learned the importance of "just being human" by having this ordinary conversation with someone whose life experience had been very different from his own.

When people with very different cultures try to work and talk together, their own cultural norms won't serve their mutual needs. "They have to come up with something new," he said.

This "something new" didn't originate from the customs in Gabon or the United States. It was a personal, custom-made solution between two individuals, he said.

Learning to step out of his own culture increased his awareness and understanding of his teaching job, Van Etten said, adding that he wasn't trying to save the world. He mainly wanted to meet the community's need for a math teacher, he said.

"That's all a Peace Corps volunteer can hope for — is to transfer a little something," he said.

Van Etten's goal to accomplish "a little something" demonstrated a realistic attitude toward his job as a volunteer, said Peace Corps Recruiter James Spevak.

The volunteer's job is not to westernize another country, he said, adding that volunteers must work as a part of the community.

They need to learn how to work in a way that isn't patronizing and is realistic for the accepted practices of the area, or else not only may their work be unappreciated — in drastic circumstances an insensitive, bullying or ineffective volunteer could be sent back, Van Etten said.

But volunteers are rarely asked to leave, because the application process usually screens out people who won't be culturally sensitive or flexible, Spevak said.

The difficulty of working within the culture and community rules sometimes causes volunteers to encounter emotional burnout, which can occur when the volunteer is unable to adapt to the culture and rules in the community. These problems sometimes compel volunteers to quit.

After working for six months, Van Etten still hadn't fully adjusted to standard practices of Mayumba. Once, he threatened to quit and fly immediately back to the U.S. because his requests for a lock and for roof repairs were ignored, he said.

His West African Peace Corps coordinator managed to convince him to stay, and three months later Van Etten moved to a different house. The community had expected him to move rather than to have the house repaired. After resolving the problem, Van Etten said he developed a clearer understanding of how his American attitude conflicted with his community's procedures.

Confusion similar to Van Etten's is typical, Spevak said. "There are going to be times when the volunteer is going to be unhappy. And that's when you need to draw upon some of those personal reasons that you're there — what else besides just helping," he said.

Making friends in a new culture proved to be worthwhile, despite the confusion and frustration he sometimes felt, Van Etten said. His two years working in Gabon enriched his understanding of people, he said.

But his memory of Gabon itself is slowly starting to fade. Van Etten's memory of the faces and names of the people have started to grow dim.

Lawsuit dismissed in shooting at Mount Pleasant city council

FORT MADISON, Iowa (AP) — District Judge David Fahey dismissed a lawsuit Wednesday that was filed against Mount Pleasant Police Chief Jerry Richenberger after Ralph Davis' shooting spree at a city council meeting in 1986.

Fahey, ruling in a suit brought by former Mount Pleasant City Council members Joann Sankey and Ronald Dupree, said the police chief had no duty to protect the council members during a meeting.

Davis entered a meeting at the Mount Pleasant City Hall in December 1986 and began shooting, wounding Dupree and Sankey and killing Mayor Ed King. Davis had been feuding with the council about a sewer problem at his home.

Davis was tried and convicted of first-degree murder in King's death and is serving a life term.

Sankey and Dupree filed suit against Richenberger in September 1987, saying he acted negligently in not protecting them from the attack. Richenberger was at the meeting but not injured.

Reform or Revolution?

Movements for reforms—such as abortion rights or affirmative action—play an important role in the struggle for social change. But are reforms enough?

Nancy MacLean of the Madison branch of the ISO will explain how the struggle for reform ties in with revolutionary strategy for the complete transformation of society.

is often less than the fun-filled vacation most students anticipate.

"A lot of it was just gross," said Priscilla Fifles, a UI junior who went to Daytona.

Trashed hotel rooms, rude restaurant and bar employees and uncaring hotel managers seem to be the norm when college students descend en masse on popular spring break towns.

"The hotel people said, 'We're sick of you spring breakers' to us," David, a UI junior, said. "It seems they think they can be disrespectful to us because we're students."

"Burge (Residence Hall) on a Friday night was better than my hotel," Fifles said. "Our room was above the bar and had music that went until three in the morning. The maids would come in and give us more towels, but they would forget to take the old ones. They never vacuumed, and the sheets weren't changed."

"The hotels were pretty sad for the amount of money you were paying," said Mark, a UI junior who went to Daytona. "They don't treat you like a normal guest, and that's pretty much the general attitude down there."

And escaping bad hotels to drown yourself in alcohol means more problems.

"The bars charge $10 cover if you are legal and $15 if you are underage," said David. "With that, you could drink free from 7 p.m. until 9 p.m., but they wouldn't open the bar until 7:30 p.m., and then you had to tip the bartender just to get served."

"You had to put a dollar on your glass just to get served," Fifles said. "Otherwise it would take three hours. And a Coke cost $6."

"I expected (cover) to be high, but not that high," Mark said. "You couldn't drink cheap in a bar. You can plan on dropping $30 to $40 bucks a night if you want to drink down there."

David also said there were line patrollers outside the bars who lied to students about the kind of drinks available inside.

Fifles said a bartender told her not to believe anything the line patrollers said because, "They'll say anything to get your money."

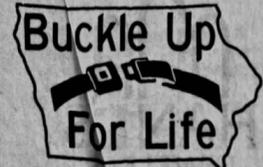

"They wouldn't treat anyone else like that but college students. I've never seen anything else like this before," Fifles said.

"For the most part, we had fun," Mark said. "You just really have to watch out for yourself there."

And sometimes, it's not just the hotels or bars causing the problems.

"The people were the grossest things," Fifles said. "I mean, the girls with their thong bathing suits, and the guys were just pigs — they would walk up to you and put their hand down your suits. You're like, 'Oh, hi. What's your name?'"

"It was the raunchiest people in the raunchiest setting. But I survived. I'm still here," she said.

men, one of the population groups at greatest risk of contracting acquired immune deficiency syndrome, and how many of them also have sex with women.

The proposed $2.1 million survey, a precursor to one of 20,000 people expected to cost $15 million, has broad support in the scientific and public health communities.

But the project also has brewed a political firestorm among critics who say the government already has enough information about the AIDS epidemic and has no business snooping in the bedrooms of American citizens.

The battle between science and politics is being played out in the Office of Management and Budget, a White House agency that must approve all government-sponsored surveys.

Survey supporters say a recent OMB decision to delay consideration of the proposal was a bad omen.

The agency "is being overly responsive to political pressures and affecting the direction of science as a direct result," said William Bailey, AIDS policy officer of the American Psychological Association.

"Science doesn't operate well in a politically charged environment," he said. "Science has to be allowed the freedom of inquiry, and sometimes that takes the inquiry down the road politicians and activists may not embrace or appreciate."

The survey was submitted by its sponsor, the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, part of the National Institutes of Health, in December. Earlier this year, OMB asked for additional justification for and revisions to the survey, said Shannah Koss-McCallum of OMB's Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs.

necessary to track down those who perpetrated this foul crime," Home Secretary Douglas Hurd said in a letter to Justice Minister Melchior Wathelet.

Police strengthened border security and said they had no leads.

Sources reported tension among Belgium's 225,000 Moslems on the Rushdie issue and said Ahdal had argued hours before the murder with some who disagreed with him.

Ahdal had been in Belgium for six years and directed the Moslem World League in Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg. The league, based in Mecca, is a moderate Islamic institution.

The 36-year-old Saudi national was shot to death in his office at the city's main mosque along with Salem Behir, the mosque librarian. Behir, 48, was a Tunisian.

Police said they were shot at close range with single shots to the head and chest, with no signs of a struggle. Ahdal was on the telephone when he was shot, they said.

In a Belgian TV interview on Feb. 20, six days after the Iranian patriarch ordered Rushdie killed, Ahdal agreed "The Satanic Verses" was blasphemous but said of the death sentence:

"One should not have done that. Rushdie should have first appeared (before an Islamic tribunal). He should have explained himself, defended himself. He should have been asked to repent."

In democratic societies "everyone has the right to speak his thoughts, to express himself as he wants," he said.

should increase educational efforts to prevent violence. The Council on the Status of Women, Emma Goldman Clinic, Take Back the Night, Students for Reproductive Rights, Domestic Violence Project, Women Taking Action Against Violence and the Women's Caucus were among groups represented Thursday.

The UI administration recently released A Report on University's Response to Sexually Explicit and Violent Graffiti in Residence Halls in which the administration responded to many of the New Wave's demands.

Outlining the UI administration's response to the residence hall incident, the report said the UI is in full concurrence with the goal of eradicating violence against women and others in the university community.

The report also said the UI Task Force on Violence will release a draft policy to reaffirm a commitment to act when violence occurs that affects the institution and specify the range of disciplinary actions that may be taken against those who engage in violent behavior.

were paid as much as $700 by students to reserve rooms in respectable hotels but that instead offered them "fleabag" motels and then denied responsibility for the screw-ups.

"We had problems with the wholesaler we went through, and it wasn't just us — it seems that everyone who went there had problems. They overbooked a lot of places," Rotenburger said.

"We went on a charter flight, and first they screwed up our reservations by claiming that some of our participants had been scheduled to leave on an earlier flight, even though our tickets didn't say that," she said.

Rotenburger said only after all the other passengers had been let on the plane did airline officials finally let the students on the flight.

She also told of how agencies regularly overbooked hotels. "There were some really nice hotels out there that people had paid a lot to stay in, and they ended up in fleabags."

"Our grade of hotel was another problem," she said. "Half our people got the quality of hotel we paid for, and half didn't."

Lynn David is a UI student who bought a tour package to Daytona, Florida from Intercampus Marketing at the University of Illinois and has similar tales of terror from spring break.

"It was hell. It was a vacation, but I would never go back," she said of her week in the sun.

David said the first indication of trouble came when the Illinois tour group arrived at the Holiday Inn in Daytona, where the travel wholesaler was supposed to have booked rooms.

"We were told by the desk clerk that no one from Illinois had a room reserved there," David said. "We ended up waiting three hours before they finally told us no one from our group could stay there."

"A lot of people ended up sleeping on the beach, in their cars and on lawn chairs," she said.

Representatives from Intercampus Marketing had assured students that tour agents would be available to answer questions and oversee the details, but David said "there was no one in sight."

"We had signed up with this particular travel company because they were offering rooms at the Holiday Inn, which we knew was a good hotel," she said. "But in the end, we didn't stay there at all."

Some of the students on David's tour tried their luck at The Voyager Motel on Atlantic Avenue, only to be greeted by hundreds of rioting college students, several Daytona television stations and a crowd of local police.

"These were students who were just ending their spring break and were protesting because the motel management had kept almost $2,000 worth of their room security deposits," David said.

The students finally left after motel personnel refused to refund their money, but before leaving they told the Illinois group "to trash the motel because they wouldn't get their money back either."

In the end, David said, the motel kept the security deposits from their group as well.

Rotenburger also said she talked to a group of girls from a Philadelphia college tour who were taken to the cleaners by another wholesaler agency.

"They were called by the wholesaler and told the night before they left they had to take a train to another town, and pay an extra $100 each to leave from that town," she said. "Because they wanted to go so badly, they paid the money."

The same girls had paid $600 to stay in a quality hotel in Cancun, only to find the agent was trying to send them to a fleabag, she said.

Rotenburger also said the same airline fiasco that occurred on the way to Cancun nearly happened again on the trip home, with group members being told by airline officials that there was no room on the flight.

"They weren't totally rude about it, but they weren't very helpful. On the way home, the same thing happened — some almost didn't get on, and the airline said they had 90 people who needed seats and only eight seats were available," she said. "They also said some girls on the trip were supposed to go out the night before."

There were problems with those on the Daytona trip as well. Problems like transportation foul-ups and scheduling mishaps lengthened bus trips and caused sudden changes of plans for some students.

White supremacist to run for House seat

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — A white supremacist has won the right to run for Wyoming's vacant seat in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Daniel Johnson, who 10 days ago announced he had moved to Casper, Wyo., from California, succeeded in obtaining signatures from 479 registered voters to qualify for a spot on the April 26 special election ballot, Secretary of State Kathy Karpan said Wednesday.

For Johnson, the achievement gives him a platform on which to spread his views that America is quickly going downhill.

"Whites don't have a future here in this country, and that is... one of many issues that I am addressing," Johnson said Wednesday during a telephone interview from California.

The 34-year-old attorney is one of three independent candidates. The others are Craig McCune, who ran for Congress as a Libertarian last fall, and Al Hamburg, a perennial candidate aligned with the New Alliance Party.

The special election was called after former Rep. Dick Cheney, a Republican, resigned the seat after being nominated as defense secretary.

Defense presses to put Reagan on stand

WASHINGTON — Oliver North's lawyers argued Thursday that former President Ronald Reagan "is without question a material witness" and should be ordered to testify in North's Iran-Contra trial.

North, a former National Security Council aide being tried on 12 charges in connection with the Iran-Contra affair, had wanted Reagan as the leadoff witness when the defense case opens Monday. U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell said he will rule Friday, which is a day off for the jury.

Reagan, who has called North "a national hero," would be the first ex-president to testify in response to a subpoena.

The Justice Department and Reagan's personal attorney argued that Gesell should quash the Reagan subpoena because North's lawyers had failed to show that the former president has any information that bears on the case.

Court gets unsolicited abortion advice

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court is receiving what appears to be a record amount of unsolicited advice as it considers a request to overturn or limit its 1973 decision legalizing abortion.

The justices will hear arguments April 26 in a Missouri case that has become the most-watched battleground in the continuing political fight over abortion.

Missouri and the Bush administration, among others, are urging the court to use the case to reverse or severely limit Roe v. Wade, the 16-year-old ruling that said women have a constitutional right to seek abortions.

A decision is expected by July.

Washington exhorts Soviets to work toward Latin peace

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration on Thursday stepped up its appeal to the Soviet Union to change course in Central America, urging the Soviets to take steps to further peace in Nicaragua and halt the flow of arms to the region.

In remarks by Secretary of State James Baker and by spokesmen at the White House and State Department, the administration signaled that the upcoming visit to Cuba by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev would be a good opportunity for the Soviets to indicate a new direction.

"We are looking for signs of new thinking," Baker said in a speech in Atlanta. "The Soviet Union now has an opportunity to demonstrate it in Central America."

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said Gorbachev has been made aware "in the past and recently" of President George Bush's thinking that the Soviets should stop shipping arms to the region, or use their influence to push Nicaragua's ruling Sandinistas to abide by regional peace accords and make democratic reforms.

Fitzwater, when asked what the United States might be willing to do for the Soviets in return, told reporters the administration sees Soviet performance in the region as "interrelated" with other aspects of U.S.-Soviet relations.

While stating he could not discuss specific diplomatic overtures, Fitzwater said, "The president has made his views known to General Secretary Gorbachev on this issue. We would like to see the Soviet Union... use its influence in Nicaragua to bring about a peaceful settlement of the situation."

"We would like to see the Soviet Union withdraw their resources and support in Nicaragua," he said. "And we would like to see Secretary Gorbachev take an active role in furthering both of those objectives."

Baker, speaking to a conference in Atlanta hosted by former presidents Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford, said of Central America: "We must send a clear message to others outside this hemisphere: this is not a dumping ground for their arms or their failed ideology."

And, at the State Department, spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said the Soviet Union and Cuba, "through their continued aid and support of violence and subversion in the region have been undermining the prospects for peaceful resolution" of the Nicaraguan war.

Fitzwater said Baker had discussed that position recently with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

The Central American peace efforts are expected to be central to separate meetings Bush will hold next week with El Salvador's incoming president, Alfredo Cristiani, and with Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, who has been a leader in pushing regional peace solutions in Central America. Bush also is expected to discuss the issue on Saturday when he sees Venezuela's President Carlos Andres Perez to talk about the Latin debt crisis.

Bush began publicly stepping up the pressure on the Soviet Union in remarks March 24 when he announced the administration's plan to keep the Contra rebels alive with an extension of non-lethal aid. He blasted the Soviet Union and Cuba for "continued aid and support of violence and subversion in Central America."

Texas Air turns down Ueberroth buyout bid

Texas Air Corp. on Thursday rejected a $464 million buyout offer for strike-crippled Eastern Airlines made by outgoing Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth, one of the principal bidders in the offer said.

J. Thomas Talbot, a former airline executive from California who has represented Ueberroth in negotiations with Texas Air, said his group was outbid by a contender for the strikebound airline but would not raise its offer.

He declined to identify the higher bidder and said Ueberroth did not plan a new, higher offer.

There was no immediate comment from Texas Air, Eastern's parent company, on whether it intends to sell the airline to the higher bidder. Texas Air's board was known to be meeting Thursday to mull buyout offers.

The Ueberroth offer, which would have given the Eastern unions a 30 percent share in the airline in exchange for wage concessions, had garnered support from the unions in recent days. It was considered a favorite to beat a long-awaited offer by takeover strategist and TWA owner Carl Icahn.

"We're obviously disappointed that we're unable to proceed," Talbot said in a telephone interview in New York following a meeting of the Texas Air board.

TWA general counsel Mark Buckstein said Icahn would have no comment. Other sources close to the situation said they believed Icahn was not the bidder who beat Ueberroth.

The Ueberroth deal, negotiated over the past 2½ weeks, would have included Eastern's Northeast shuttle service, Talbot said.

As spokesman for developer Donald Trump said Thursday he still was in negotiations with Texas Air chairman Frank Lorenzo about buying the Eastern Northeast shuttle. Trump agreed last October to purchase the New York-Boston-Washington service for $365 million, but the transaction has not yet been completed, and Trump since then has asked for a lower purchase price.

Alaska paper wins second Pulitzer Prize

NEW YORK (AP) — The Anchorage Daily News won the 1989 Pulitzer Prize for public service Thursday for a series on alcoholism and suicide among native Alaskans. The Philadelphia Inquirer and Chicago Tribune each won two prizes.

The public service award "will give us a chance to reiterate the point of the stories done in the first place: We've got a serious problem up here," said Pat Dougherty, city editor of the Daily News. The newspaper also won the public service award in 1976 for a series on the Teamsters union in Alaska.

Donald Barlett and James Steele of the Inquirer won the national reporting prize for a 15-month investigation of provisions in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 that gave special tax breaks to many politically connected individuals and businesses. The Pulitzer Board said the series aroused so much public indignation that Congress rejected such breaks.

The Inquirer's David Zucchino won a feature writing prize for his series "Being Black in South Africa," described as "richly compelling" by the judges. The Pulitzer Board had switched his entry from the international reporting category to features.

It was the 16th Pulitzer in 14 years for the Inquirer and the second such prize for Barlett and Steele, who won in 1975 for reporting on the Internal Revenue Service. Steele said doing the series "was almost like a treasure hunt. We got one break after another. They came slow. But they were there."

The Chicago Tribune's winners were Clarence Page in the commentary category, for his columns on local and national affairs, and Lois Wille for editorial writing.

The Anchorage paper's 10-day, 44-story series found that alcoholism is rampant in rural Alaska and the suicide rate for Eskimos and Indians is four times the national rate. The series also detailed high rates of child abuse and other domestic violence. The stories attributed such problems to a lack of job opportunities and a clash of cultures between native Alaskans and others.

Bomb drill mistake embarrasses British Airways

LONDON (AP) — A new furor over airport security broke out Thursday after the discovery that a British Airways jet flew with an explosive aboard for at least two weeks because police on a bomb-detection drill forgot to remove it.

The gelignite was tucked in a seat pocket in economy class of the Boeing 747, news reports said Wednesday night. Authorities would not say when the gelignite was put on the plane.

The incident was particularly embarrassing to British officials trying to tighten security following the Dec. 21 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

The Air Transport Users Committee, a consumer group, called it "the sort of carelessness we can't afford."

Lawmaker David Wilshire of the governing Conservative Party said the public was always being told British Airways was among the most security-minded airlines.

"My mind boggles at the thought of what airlines in Timbuktu are like if this is the best," he said.

The chairman of British Airways, Lord King, said the explosives worked their way through the upholstery and that a cleaner found them Monday after the jet returned to Heathrow Airport from Toronto.

Police Inspector Andrew Nielson said the gelignite weighed less than a pound and was four inches long and less than an inch wide.

Who are these people?

According to a former employee in the UI Registration Center, the story of academic improprieties in the UI Athletic Department told by former Hawkeyes Ronnie Harmon and Devon Mitchell recently is just part of a wider problem.

The two NFL players and former stars for Hayden Fry admitted in court that they made little or no effort to graduate while at Iowa, taking easy classes in order to stay academically eligible until they were able to turn professional.

But the former employee told The Daily Iowan that Harmon and Mitchell are not unique, and that many athletes are pampered by UI employees, while their academic progress goes unverified.

On more than one occasion the source encountered student athletes who appeared unable to read. Other athletes had schedules loaded with weak classes. Yet despite these problems, some employees at the registration center bent over backwards to accommodate the athletes.

"You should see the courses some of these people take," the source said. "It's incredible. I don't know how we expect them to graduate from college. They needed a lot of help just filling out their schedules, and I don't know how they read their textbooks."

On one occasion an Iowa wrestler needed to make some adjustments in his schedule but when the former employee told him to make the changes by referring to the Schedule of Courses, he was unable to do so. "He couldn't read," the source said.

When Harmon and other well known athletes came in to register, they were treated with kid gloves. "(Harmon) was really kind of arrogant," the source said, "and some of the people in there would just fawn all over him — the big hero."

But while Harmon was a hero athletically, he was a zero academically, taking just one course in his major field of study over four years. The source said that can probably be attributed to poor academic advice, or non-advice. "If you have one of those advisors who just signs your card and tells you to go fill out your schedule," you can get away with the kind of class load Harmon had.

Most of the employees in the registration center are conscientious, according to the source, but there is a small group that attends Iowa football and basketball games regularly, and pamper some athletes when they come in to register.

Athletes are whisked through the otherwise cumbersome registration process, avoiding the long lines and other hassles. That is due in part to the athletes' practice and class schedules, which make it difficult for them to take the time usually needed to register, the source said. But other students with difficult schedules are not given the same consideration.

"They'd work like crazy to accommodate some of the athletes who came over there, but by the same token, I've seen the door slammed in the face of a dental student who had appointments and couldn't get in at any other time. That student's time is just as valuable as anyone else's."

According to the former employee, the UI is simply not facing up to what should be obvious — many athletes are not qualified to do the work expected of them, or are unwilling to put forth the required effort. But instead of stopping the indiscretions, the UI allows them to continue for the good of the athletic programs.

"For a lot of these kids, to get through Kirkwood (Community College) would be an accomplishment, and some of them couldn't even do that," the source said. "But they're useful to us as wrestlers and football players. We ought to be more honest and forthright, and admit we're hiring ourselves a team."

The source said there are those at the UI that honestly care about the athletes as students, and cited Assistant Athletic Director Fred Mims as one of the most dedicated. But too many UI officials aren't doing their jobs.

"I think a lot of people knew what Ronnie Harmon was doing, but they just looked the other way," the source said.

The question is, who are those people, and what are they doing at this institution?

Death of the cup

Another grand old sporting event has been ruined by the 20th century.

With Dennis Connor's most recent defense disqualified for violating "the spirit of the Deed of Gift," the America's Cup now goes to New Zealand, a country which has never earned it on the water. The judge who made that decision must have a keen aptitude for symbolism, for truly there are no winners here.

In fact, the America's Cup ceased resembling itself two years ago with New Zealand's blindsiding challenge, based on a narrow technical reading of the Deed. The only thing possibly less sportsmanlike than the New Zealand challenge was the San Diego Yacht Club's response — a high-tech catamaran that was to New Zealand's traditional monohull what a Lear jet is to the Goodyear Blimp.

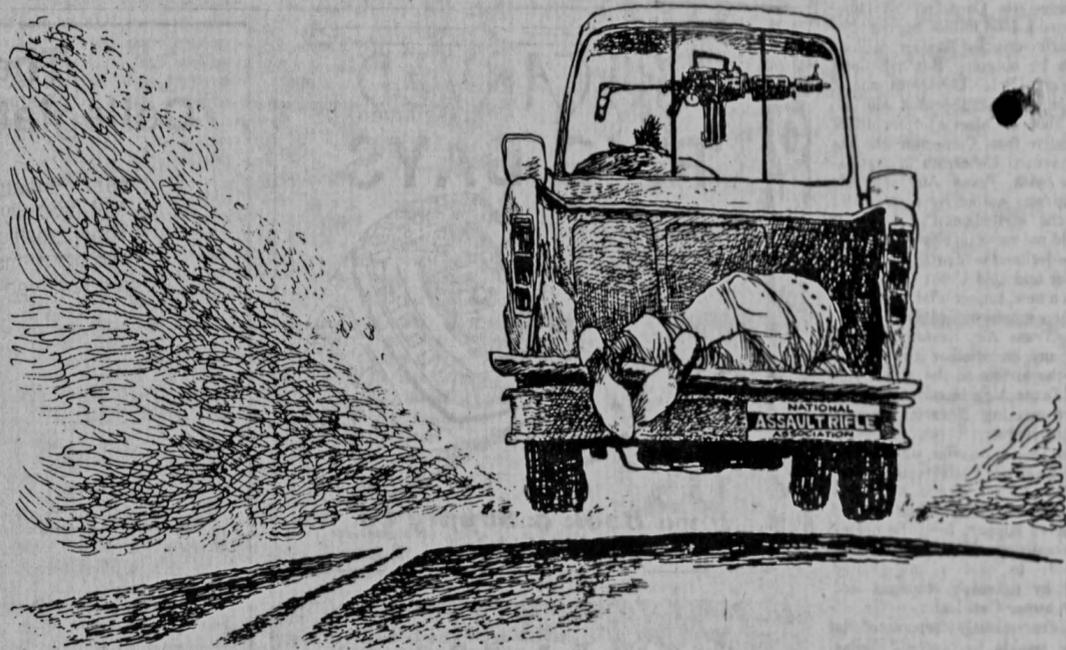

Since then, all parties have spent as much money on attorneys as on sails, as much time in court as on the water. And ironically, all the media attention has made the America's Cup more popular than ever, transforming a largely ignored contest into a high-stakes marketing bonanza in the name of — what else? — national pride.

Those who loved the Cup for what it represented — a 138 year tradition of sportsmanlike behavior off the water and blood and guts competition on — have nothing left to love.

A quick quiz on college athletics

Well, now that we've all had time to recover from spring break (Was it as much fun as the Miller Brewing Company said it would be?), it's time to turn our attention to the more cerebral pursuits of college life. And what better way to get yourself in the mood than a pop quiz?

In honor of the semifinals of the NCAA College Basketball Tournament tomorrow, the topic of today's quiz is: BIG TIME COLLEGE ATHLETICS.

Today's quiz, by the way, is sponsored by the Exxon Corporation. If you've ever had a minor problem involving the law and alcohol, such as being picked up for drunk driving twice, don't let your problems keep you from having a job. At Exxon, even people with serious alcohol abuse problems are allowed to take charge of big oil tankers with the capacity for major ecological destruction. That's because at Exxon, they care more about people than stupid fish. Exxon: You can count on them to deliver the oil, no matter what the cost.

Now on to the quiz. Pencils ready?

1. Noticeably absent from the NCAA Final Four tomorrow will be last year's winner, Kansas. In fact, Kansas was not even allowed to be in the tournament this year. Why was that?
 - a. Their poor record.
 - b. A new NCAA rule not allowing teams to repeat as champions for two years in a row.
 - c. Pete Rose bet on their games.
 - d. They were found to have committed numerous recruiting violations during the season preceding their championship.
2. One of the teams allowed to play in the NCAA this year was North Carolina State. A book about the North Carolina State basketball program reportedly makes several accusations about it. Which of the following were not among the accusations?
 - a. Serious drug abuse among players.
 - b. Large sums of money were given to players illegally.
 - c. Grades had been altered to keep players eligible.
 - d. Pete Rose was seen hanging around the N.C. State locker room during half time.
3. In the competition for the prestigious NCAA title of "Most players indicted for criminal activities," the current leader is the University of Colorado's football team. How many players on the team have been arrested for crimes ranging from rape to assault since February, 1986?
 - a. 5
 - b. 7
 - c. 9
 - d. 12
4. While Colorado leads in quantity of crimes, when measured by sheer quality, the crimes allegedly committed by members of the Oklahoma Sooners football team cannot be beat. This year alone, these arrests include:
 - a. An offensive tackle, a running back and tight end for allegedly raping a woman in their dormitory.
 - b. A cornerback who allegedly shot an offensive lineman in the chest after a late-night argument in a dormitory.
 - c. The quarterback, arrested for selling 17 grams of cocaine to an undercover officer after lecturing elementary school kids earlier in the week about the evils of drug abuse.
 - d. All of the above.

James Cahoy

5. Oklahoma has also been put on three years probation by the NCAA this year for "major recruiting violations," including giving cash to recruits. In response to all of these problems, the Oklahoma Board of Regents took the extraordinary step of:

- a. Firing head coach Barry Switzer.
- b. Abolishing the football program for one year.
- c. Conducting a thorough investigation into the program.
- d. Banning women from visiting the football player's dormitory.

6. Here at Iowa, athletes have been in trouble with the law much less than at most other schools. However, there are still questions about whether some athletes are seriously pursuing an education while here. Former Iowa running back Ronnie Harmon recently testified he took all but which of the following courses during his four years at the UI:

- a. billiards
- b. bowling
- c. water color painting
- d. More than one course toward his major in communications.

7. The charges leveled at the UI by Harmon and another athlete, Devon Mitchell, led sociologist Harry Edwards to label Iowa as "a football factory." Which of the following events would best prove Edwards wrong?

- a. Harmon quits football and is later acclaimed by Vanity Fair magazine as "the finest water color painter of his generation."
- b. The entire offensive line of the Hawkeyes join MBA programs after graduation.
- c. Devon Mitchell achieves fame as a billiards player.
- d. A study reveals that 45 percent of football players actually get jobs as physical education instructors at major secondary schools and colleges.

8. Of course, we shouldn't be too surprised that Harmon and Mitchell may not have been that interested in academics while they were here. According to Iowa State football coach Jim Walden, what percentage of football players actually go to college for an education?

- a. 50 percent
- b. 40 percent
- c. 30 percent
- d. 20 percent

The answers to all of the above questions: d.

Scoring: 1-4 — You're too naive. Better take up watching less corrupt sports, like Trivial Pursuit.

5-7 — Not bad. You could be president of a major college or university.

Perfect — Great job! You could be cynical enough to apply to be the next athletic director at Oklahoma.

UI law student James Cahoy's column appears every Friday on the Viewpoints page.

Perestroika for big-time collegiate athletics

As stute readers will immediately understand the tone of my essay by the fact that I find it necessary to begin with a disclaimer: I do not hate sports. No, I am a lover of sports on any level, including intercollegiate sports.

Nevertheless, it should be apparent even to those of us who turn to the sports pages first when we read our newspapers that intercollegiate athletics are running amok, not only at such football factories as Oklahoma, but even here at the UI.

The fact that in a recent issue Sports Illustrated focused on the sorry state of intercollegiate athletics indicates that even those persons whose lives revolve around competitive sports are coming to the belated realization that big-time collegiate sports are, at the very least, past the point where minor repairs are adequate.

Here at the UI, the recent revelations about the UI Athletic Department's shamefully lax academic standards have prompted UI President Hunter Rawlings to launch an investigation, a welcome sign that somewhere in the fog of Hawk-mania there is a lonesome glimmer of clear thinking.

In the spirit of the times, I am offering a modest proposal, a sort of athletic perestroika. My reform program is based on three indisputable premises. First, the revelations in recent years about recruiting violations, abysmal academic standards, and downright criminality amount to a national problem which threatens not only intercollegiate athletics, but the integrity of American higher education. Second, that higher education is — or ought to be — an academic community, and that intercollegiate athletics are — or ought to be — an integral part of that community. Third, that the over-riding mission of colleges and universities is to educate students, including student athletes.

Now that I have laid my cards on the table, I can at last present the following modest proposal for the restructuring of intercollegiate athletics:

1. Dissolve the NCAA. In place of decisive action, the NCAA has offered rank hypocrisy and empty platitudes. Not only that, but a separate governing body for intercollegiate athletics encourages the belief that athletics are separate from the university as a whole. Responsibility for governing intercollegiate athletics should be turned over to the American Council on Education (ACE).
2. Among the first steps undertaken by the ACE should be the promulgation of minimum standards for integrating athletics and academics. Among these standards should be the requirement that all athletic revenues be made part of the regular university budget. In addition, colleges and universities will be required to offer at least as many full-ride scholarships based on academic performance and economic need as the number of full-ride athletic scholarships it grants annually. The funding for these scholarships must come solely from revenues generated by intercollegiate athletics.
3. All coaches must be qualified to teach academic courses at the university level and, moreover, will be required to teach a full course load for at least one semester per academic year. All coaches not qualified to teach at the university level will be given a grace period of five years to obtain the necessary qualifications.

4. Congress should pass, with all deliberate speed (Congress' usual pace for any legislation more important than National Tulip Week), legislation requiring universities to hold athletic departments accountable to certain minimum standards as a condition for receiving federal dollars.

It is my firm belief that the modest reform program I have outlined is at least a step in the right direction. Of course, some — those who simply do not like sports or who think big-time intercollegiate athletic programs are beyond salvaging — will say that my proposal does not go far enough. Others — those whose enthusiasm for sports knows no bounds — will say that my modest proposal threatens to bring about the demise of intercollegiate athletics as they now exist. To the former group, I respond that I do not share your pessimism. To the latter group, I respond that the demise of intercollegiate athletics "as they now exist" is an end devoutly to be wished.

Since when has graffiti become news?

I don't know about you guys, but I'm getting a little fed up with the (seemingly eternal) controversy surrounding the infamous "Rienow List." However, before we bring the interminable social navel gazing to a close, and before all you you deeply-distressed-and-concerned-crazed-raving-liberal-types go back to work, I think that some legitimate questions need to be asked.

First of all, aside from defacement of public property, (can somebody tell me when this became offensive to the activist Left?) what actual harm was done? None. What harm was threatened? None. The list was not circulated in an attempt to scare those women — it was scribbled on a bathroom wall in a fit of temper, for God's sake.

When I was growing up, my younger sister perpetually and rudely demanded that I lower the volume in my stereo. To be honest, removing her eyeballs and replacing them with "red hot ball bearings of comparable size" is a pretty mild concept compared with some of the "tortures" I dreamed up for her.

Was my attitude demented, sick and immature? Maybe. Okay, probably. But it wasn't dangerous, and it obviously didn't have the first thing to do with the fact that she was female. I firmly believe (as one member of the floor in question explained) that, had the residents of the floor below been male, the list indeed would have been titled "Things to do to the Dicks Below."

John Riley, in a recent guest opinion (Mar. 29), asked us "Why was the UI interested in covering the incident up?" Covering it up? Relax, John, this isn't Watergate, somebody wrote on a wall. Besides, I'm surprised you're so concerned, you and your New Wave buddies seem to enjoy that sort of thing.

And, as long as I'm digressing here, I might as well ask a few more questions that have been nagging at me since the discovery of this Rienowgate Listscam Cover-up:

1. Is Iowa City so boring that we have to open up the newspaper ("news" being the key word here) and read about a piece of graffiti — the same piece of graffiti, mind you — for weeks on end?

2. Is there anything that New Wave won't protest?

3. Does anybody have a sense of perspective anymore?

I realize that to many of you it would seem I am trivializing a serious issue. Quite the contrary. Certainly violence against women is a tragic and frightening problem on this campus and in this country in general. As a woman, I am directly concerned, aware and afraid every time I consider walking across campus after dark. I have actively protested situations and attitudes that I believe are harmful to women. I do not condone the actions of, I am not amused by, nor do I wish to meet the authors of the Rienow list.

I am, however, disappointed that so many people have inflated (to ridiculous proportions) an issue that ought never have become an issue at all. With your pettiness and hysteria, you, yourselves, have undermined and yes, trivialized, a very noble and worthy cause. Get out of the bathroom girls — a world full of real problems is waiting outside.

Letters

Plantation analogy is 'terribly wrong'

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter because of recent publicity surrounding the UI Athletic Department and its commitment to the education of athletes. Particularly, I refer to a statement made by Harry Edwards, professor of sociology at the University of California. Professor Edwards stated that "Iowa uses Black athletes for profit while accepting no responsibility in providing an education."

As an African American who was in an athletic scholarship at the UI (winning two national titles in wrestling during that period and eventually earning a Doctorate of law from Cornell University), I want to assure you that Professor Edwards is terribly wrong.

While anecdotal evidence is often viewed with skepticism, I believe my academic observations and experiences outlined below proves the integrity of the athletic department. When I attended Iowa, the wrestling office was continuous with the academic advisor's office. Everyday I saw the hard work put into complying with NCAA rules and, more importantly, helping student athletes.

The athletic department provided tutors to all who required assistance. The advisors constantly stressed about the importance of doing well and set up programs to that end. I know an athlete who was marginally literate when he entered the UI. Upon discovering his problem, the department worked with him year after year. As of my last conversation with this individual, he had earned a master's degree and written a book.

It took me six years to earn an undergraduate degree. I needed time to mature and realize the significance of a college education. The Athletic Department could have taken the position that my immaturity should not cost it two extra years. However, Bump Elliott personally ensured that those two years were paid by the athletic department. When I asked several other African-American football players (incidentally, not starters) about how they were treated after their athletic eligibility ended, they told me that Bump had supported them in an identical manner.

President Rawlings, you and all Iowans can be proud of Iowa's Athletic Department. Furthermore, should you decide to praise the athletic department's academic record in spite of the negative publicity, I will be the first to stand behind you.

Unfortunately correct

To the Editor:

Unfortunately, the young man's comment in "UI officials, students protest restroom list," (DI, March 14) was correct, sexism in the form of graffiti does "happen all the time."

But fortunately, frequency does not validate these attitudes, nor does it provide an excuse for the contemptible behavior of others who wrote in response to the incident would have the public believe.

In the 1930s and '40s, swastikas were painted on the houses and synagogues of German Jews. It was "just graffiti." In America during the '50s and '60s, crosses were burned in front of blacks' homes and white men in robes held secret meetings. They were "venting frustration." Now it is the '80s and I am disgusted such attitudes are still preached and, worse yet, still tolerated.

Violence, whether physical or verbal, directed against the "bitches below," the "dicks above," gays, blacks or anyone is not a vent for frustration, it is an act of aggression, an attempt by impotent minds to gain control and power through fear.

To say the writers of the list had not intended for the atrocities to actually occur denies the capacity for fear and degradation these written images create. Each item on the list carries a graphic picture of violence and the attitude that such violence is acceptable. Furthermore, we are lead to believe that such violence is acceptable. We are lead to believe that because they complained of loud stereotypes, the "bitches" somehow deserve the tortures described. Like the classic rape victim, they brought it on themselves.

To the men on the floor who realize the severity and cruelty of this "joke," let others on the floor know of your disgust and intolerance of such "humor." To members of the community, be aware that incidents of sexism, racism and violence abound, whether overtly scrawled on the walls of public, state-owned restrooms or hidden in the attitudes of social culture.

And to the UI, DO SOMETHING! Tolerance of sexism and violence is a terrible example by which to lead.

A vote for Skid Row

To the Editor:

It's unfortunate that Brian Jones' review of the Bon Jovi concert had to be ruined with a cheap attempt at humor against the opening act, Skid Row.

I think Skid Row did an excellent job of serving their purpose, which was to warm up the crowd. I don't expect everyone to agree with me, but calling them "losers" and saying that they work at a 7-11 hardly seems like a journalistic way to evaluate a band's performance. How could you have expected your readers to take this article seriously when the last paragraph of what started as a concert review, ends by slamming people who work at convenience stores.

NBA players may sport USA jerseys

MUNICH, West Germany — At the place where America's perfect record in Olympic basketball came to an end almost 17 years ago, top officials of the sport are expected to vote this week to give the United States such an edge that it may never lose again.

FIBA, basketball's international governing body, is to decide Friday whether to open its world championships and the Olympic tournament to professional players.

The move would allow American stars of the NBA, such as Michael Jordan and Magic Johnson, to wear "USA" on their jerseys and play for an Olympic gold medal.

"Our intention is to have the best possible players in the Olympics, as with other sports, and our feeling is that professional contracts should not be the criteria for eligibility," said David Turner, technical assistant to FIBA secretary general Boris Stankovic and a key figure in the drive to allow pros in the Games.

At first glance it would seem that the move, in the works for the last three years, could tip the balance of power in Olympic basketball too far in the United States' favor. That may seem unfair for a country that invented basketball and has lost just two times since the sport was introduced to the Games in 1936.

But supporters are confident the measure will be enacted and argue that many nations besides the United States will benefit from the move.

"It's not just Americans who play in the NBA," Turner said. "Look at West Germany, which has three players in the NBA. Puerto Rico and Canada also would benefit."

The Philippines, which has a thriving professional league of its own, would get a boost in Olympic competition, Turner said, while Nigeria, which never has played in the final Olympic group, could suddenly become a power with the eligibility of one of the NBA's superstars, Akem Olatujon of the Houston Rockets.

"This is hypothetical, of course, but imagine the program Nigeria could build around Akem," Turner said. Turner also admitted high-profile professionals could raise interest in the sport and help basketball development worldwide.

The Olympics had an uninterrupted string of U.S. gold medalists in the men's basketball tournament from the sport's introduction in Berlin through the 1968 Games in Mexico City. The Americans were unbeaten in that stretch and few teams came close to their power. After beating Canada 19-6 in the 1936 gold-medal game, the closest the Americans came to a loss in the Olympic finals was in 1952, when the Soviet Union resorted to a stall and the United States won 36-25 behind Clyde Lovellette.

Then came 1972 in Munich. Led by college stars such as Doug Collins, Tommy Burleson, Bobby Jones and Tom McMillen, the United States breezed through the first eight games before meeting the Soviets in the final. In one of the greatest controversies in international sports history, the Soviets scored a last-second basket after the clock was reset for a 51-50 victory, ending the U.S. winning streak at 62 games.

Turner said opposition remained within the federation to the plan but expected the measure, which was narrowly defeated two years ago, to pass.

"We are optimistic," he said. "There is a group opposed to it, but we believe it will be adopted."

In the last five years, more and more sports have opened Olympic eligibility to professionals. Ice hockey, among the first to allow pros, has had problems getting players from the National Hockey League into the Olympic program because the Winter Games come in the middle of the league season.

Wojdat crushes swim records

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

INDIANAPOLIS — Iowa freshman Artur Wojdat cut through the water in second place for most of the 500-yard freestyle race at the NCAA Men's Swimming Championships Thursday.

Second place, that is, until the last 25 yards.

Just before the final turn, Wojdat shot ahead of Arizona's Mariusz Podkostielyni not only winning the race, but setting a new U.S. Open, NCAA, Big Ten, Iowa and pool records. His time of four minutes, 12.24 seconds led the Hawkeyes in the opening day of competition.

To add a twist to the story, Wojdat and Podkostielyni, both Polish athletes, have been teammates and friends for several years. In the preliminary round of the 500-freestyle, Podkostielyni beat Wojdat by two seconds.

"I wished that one (of us) could win and the other one get second," Wojdat said, "and it really happened. I felt I could win, but deep in my heart, I thought Mariusz would win."

The Hawkeyes ended the day with a new school record in the 50-yard freestyle. Dave Kohmetscher won Thursday's preliminary round with a time of 19.66, topping the old mark of 19.67 seconds set by Tom Williams in 1986.

In the final of the 50-yard freestyle, however, Kohmetscher slipped to eighth place in 20.10.

"The important time to swim fast is in the morning," Iowa Coach Glenn Patton said of performing in the preliminaries. "If they don't do well in the morning, they might not even have a chance to score points."

Iowa, which had nine team points at the end of the first day in last year's competition, stood in seventh place Thursday with 72 points. Texas, the pre-meet favorite, was first with 149 points.

Sanders will challenge NFL draft policy

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders notified the NFL Thursday that he is turning pro, setting up a possible test of the league's restrictions against drafting underclassmen.

"We have received a request from Barry Sanders for special eligibility in the draft," NFL spokesman Joe Browne said in New York.

In Stillwater, Oklahoma State athletic director Myron Roderick confirmed the junior running back's decision after Sanders scheduled a news conference in Denver Saturday.

"He's through. . . . We are declaring him ineligible for 1989,"

Roderick said. "We're 100 percent behind him and we'll be watching him as he develops as a pro. He's a great kid and has done a great job for us."

What likely figured in Sanders' decision is Oklahoma State's probation for recruiting violations. The NCAA banned the university from bowl games for three years and from television appearances for two.

Sanders' status with the NFL, however, is not clear.

A true junior, he is ineligible for either the regular or supplemental drafts without a special exemption from Commissioner Pete Rozelle.

Browne said Rozelle has granted about six of those exemptions a year for the past 20 years, mostly to players who were never drafted.

The most recent was last year when Pitt's Craig Heyward was allowed to enter the draft with a year of eligibility remaining and was taken in the first round by New Orleans. In Heyward's case and others, Rozelle has cited the possibility that if he turned down the request, it might be challenged in court.

Rozelle declined to comment during last week's NFL owners' meeting on Sanders' status, but Browne said Thursday:

"His application will be reviewed by this office and while there is no timetable for a decision, the decision will be made by Commissioner Rozelle prior to the April 23 regular draft."

Other NFL sources, however, have indicated the league is more inclined to go to court now to test its rules against drafting underclassmen.

A pro football source told The Associated Press that Sanders will be represented by David Ware, an Atlanta-based agent. However, it wasn't clear whether he had formally signed with Ware.

Neither Sanders nor his parents were available for comment Thursday. Ware did not return phone calls to his office.

Sanders, who in 1988 rushed for 2,628 yards and scored 39 touchdowns, both NCAA records, had said when the NCAA handed down the four-year probation for the football program, that he would be back for his senior year.

But in recent weeks he had said he was unsure of his plans and he asked to be excused from spring football drills.

"This is no shock," said Steve Buzzard, Oklahoma State's sports information director.

Wolverines fit in at Seattle

SEATTLE (AP) — The setting of this Final Four makes perfect sense for Michigan.

Here's the city of Seattle, home of the Space Needle, playing host to a group of Michigan shooters who have been playing out of this world.

The Wolverines have shot an NCAA-record 57.3 percent as a team on their way to a 28-7 record. There have been only three times this season when they shot less than 50 percent.

And they haven't padded their stats with dunks and easy shots down low — the Wolverines are shooting 47 percent from 3-point range, including 51 percent in their four NCAA tournament games.

That 3-point percentage is remarkable, considering the national average from outside the stripe is less than 40 percent.

"We've got some people who can shoot the ball," says interim coach Steve Fisher.

No one has been shooting the way Glen Rice has. The 6-foot-7 senior, who made 58 percent of his shots during the regular season, has raised his game in the postseason. Rice is shooting 62 percent overall and 60 percent from 3-point range while averaging a tournament-best 31 points per game.

"Going into the tournament, I just decided to pick it up to another level because I didn't want to go out with an early exit," said Rice. "I really wanted to end my career with a championship ring on my finger."

Rice is coming off a breathtaking set of games in the Southeast Regional. He scored 34 points against North Carolina in the semifinals, making eight of 12 shots from 3-point range. Then

Associated Press

Michigan forward Glen Rice is mobbed by autograph seekers upon arriving Wednesday night at Seattle-Tacoma airport. The Michigan star and his teammates will take on Illinois Saturday following the Duke-Seton Hall game.

he went 13-for-16 against Virginia with four 3-pointers, good for 32 points in 32 minutes.

"We want Glen to shoot his shot whenever he gets it," said Fisher. "We've said all year that Glen Rice is our No. 1 option, with (Terry) Mills the No. 2 option inside."

Mills, a 6-foot-10 forward, scored 12 points per game and shot 57 percent. If he isn't making his shots, there is always center Loy Vaughn, a 13-point scorer whose field goal percentage dropped to 68 percent after he went 8-for-18 in the four regional games.

Rice isn't Michigan's only outside threat, however. Not by a long shot.

Two Hawks travel to NCAA regional

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

For the first time ever, the Iowa women's gymnastics team has qualified two individuals for the NCAA Central Region Championships to be held April 1 in Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Freshman Lori Cole and junior Robyn Zussman will represent the Hawkeyes at the meet, which they qualified for by virtue of their 37.06 regional-qualifying scores in the all-around competition.

"I had a good feeling I would (qualify)," Cole said. "I feel really good about my performance this season."

Cole and Zussman are among the top-eight, at-large berths in the all-around, tying for the second-best score recorded by qualifiers. The region's top-eight gymnasts, who are not members of qualifying teams, advance to the competition.

Iowa Coach Diane DeMarco said the two were deserving of the spots.

"They've both been working hard throughout the year," DeMarco said.

See Gymnasts, Page 2B

Postema snubbed by National League

NEW YORK (AP) — Pam Postema was once again turned down for an umpiring spot in the National League Thursday, as Bill Hohn and Jerry Layne were picked to fill the two vacancies.

Postema, who has worked spring training games in each of the last two years while attempting to become the first woman umpire in the major leagues, will return to the Triple-A Alliance this year. She was a crew chief last year.

Hohn, 33, umpired in the International League for the past two seasons after six years in the Pacific Coast League. He began his umpiring career in the Gulf Coast Rookie League in 1977, moved to the Florida State League in 1978 and to the Southern League in 1979 and 1980.

Layne, 30, had umpired in the P.C.L. for four seasons. He began his umpiring career in 1978 in the Appalachian Rookie League, umpired in the Florida State League from 1979-81 and in the Southern League from 1982-84.

Hohn and Layne will begin the season in the Triple-A Alliance and will be brought up to the NL in late May when vacations begin. Greg Bonin and Mark Hirschbeck also will begin the season in the minors.

Hohn and Layne replace Lee Weyer, who died last season, and Dave Pallone, who resigned.

Sportsbriefs

Griffith leaves Iowa

Yolanda Griffith has withdrawn from the University of Iowa and apparently will never play for the Hawkeye women's basketball team. Griffith, who dropped out Jan. 14, was Iowa's top recruit a year ago but was forced to sit out this past season under Proposition 48 guidelines. Griffith averaged 35 points and 17 rebounds during her senior year in high school.

Melchiorre nabs wrestling honor

MANCHESTER, Iowa (AP) — Four-time all-American Joe Melchiorre was named winner of the 1989 Mike Howard Most Valuable Wrestler Award at Iowa. Melchiorre finished third in this year's NCAA championships, higher than any Hawkeye wrestler. The 134-pound senior from New Jersey was ranked second nationally most of the year behind Michigan's John Fisher. He wound up his career with 107 wins and 31 losses. Other awards presented at a Thursday night team banquet included the Michael McGovern Most Courageous Wrestler Award, given to senior all-American John Heffernan and the J. Donald McPike Award, given to Iowa City native Dave Munson, for the highest grade point average.

Perez will rejoin Expos

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Pascual Perez, who has spent the last two months in drug rehabilitation, received clearance from commissioner Peter Ueberroth's office Thursday to rejoin the Montreal Expos. A statement issued by the commissioner's office said the Perez will be allowed to return "as soon as he is physically and medically capable of playing baseball." Perez, who has been at the Palm Beach Institute since Feb. 3, was scheduled to be released by the weekend. He will accompany the Expos on their flight to Montreal following the team's last exhibition game Sunday.

day at NCAA's in my 14 years here," Patton said. "We are very happy." In other individual events for the Hawkeyes, sophomore Tomas Gawronski swam the 500-freestyle in 4:22.22, to place fifth in the consolation final. In the consolation of the 50-freestyle, junior Steve Grams placed eighth. Iowa's 200-freestyle relay squad of Marc Long, Kohmetcher, Grams and Todd Kellner finished fourth in the finals with a time of 1:19.04. The 400-medley relay team of Rick Williams, Doug Mencl, Long and Kellner gained fifth in the consolation round. Leaders heading into today's competition include Long in the 100-butterfly, Wojdat in 200-freestyle and Tomek Rossa in 3-meter diving. "We're real happy where we are," Patton said. "Our goal is to be in the top ten. Hopefully, we can do that."

seven innings, allowing six hits. "I really try not to think about it," Eldred said. "I know their around, but today John (DeJarld) had a better day than I did." DeJarld, 3-1, earned the win in the nightcap. The right hander struck out three and only allowed four hits. "I didn't have my fastball today, but I was able to get my breaking pitches over for strikes," DeJarld said. In the opener, Mankato State jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the fourth inning before Iowa got on the board. Iowa tied the game in the bottom of the inning and took the lead in the fifth. Iowa shortstop Tim Costo hit a two-out double scoring Joel Williamson and Keith Noreen to give the Hawkeyes a 4-2 lead. Williamson had reached base on a Mankato State error and Noreen reached on a walk. Mankato State pulled within one, 4-3, on an unearned run in the sixth but Eldred shut the Mavericks down the rest of the way. Iowa added an insurance run in the sixth. "Their a good team. We knew coming into today that they were going to give us a tough game," Iowa coach Duane Banks said. In the second game the Hawkeye offense exploded for five runs in the first inning and then cruised to the win. A two-run single by Costo and a three-run homerun by Chris Hatcher provided Iowa's quick start in the nightcap. It was Hatcher's sixth homerun of the season. He also has 26 RBI's. Costo added another RBI in the sixth inning when his sacrifice fly scored Errol Shirer. Noreen added an RBI single in the inning to round out the Hawkeye scoring. "It was cold but it felt good to be on our own field," Noreen said. "After a couple at bats we were able to get in a groove. We're happy with the way we have been playing. Our ultimate goal is the Big Ten season, and we still have a lot of work to do before then." Noreen finished the day with six hits and four runs scored. Costo ended the doubleheader with three hits and five RBI's. Larry Ogden doubled in the top of the fifth inning scoring Mike Feidrich for Mankato State's only run of the second game. Iowa will entertain Quincy Saturday and Western Illinois Sunday.

said. "We're extremely proud of Lori and Robyn." Zussman and Cole, along with teammate Tracy Junker were named to the all-Big Ten Conference team after leading Iowa to fifth. That was the best league finish for the Hawkeyes since 1979. During that meet, Zussman tied for second in the vault, while Cole tied for second in the floor exercise. "You become stronger and more mentally tough by going through greater challenges," DeMarco said of getting into regionals. "You have to be in control physically and mentally. You have to discipline your mind to take on more demanding experiences. You become a stronger gymnast because of it." At the Big Ten meet, Zussman recorded an all-around total of 36.75 for 10th place. Cole was 14th with a 36.60. The scores that advanced both athletes to regionals are an average of certain performances during the season. "I think it's a really good opportunity to see other gymnastics from around the country," Cole said. "We were disappointed as a team. We felt we should have made it as a team. But it makes everyone work harder for next year"

Hawks ride win streak into weekend

By Cory Cremers
The Daily Iowan

Gayle Blevins hoped that her Iowa softball team would reach a higher level of confidence early on this season. On the heels of a six-game winning streak and a top 20 ranking for the first time in the program's 15-year history, it looks like the Hawkeyes may be finding that confidence level. The 18th ranked Hawkeyes open a four game series with Illinois State and Kansas at the Softball Complex today. They face Illinois State at 2:00 and play a nightcap with Kansas at 4:00. Blevins hopes that the Hawkeyes will be able to keep up their confidence level in what she feels will be a tough tri-series. "It will be a dog-fight," she said, "both Illinois State and Kansas will be extremely competitive. Illinois State has made great strides in recent years. They finished in the top 20 last year." Kansas comes into the series having posted some impressive early season victories. "They have been in a rebuilding stage but they have beaten some very respectable teams like Indiana," said Blevins. Iowa has seen the Jayhawks play

Hawkeyes to open Big Ten season

By Julie Deardorff
The Daily Iowan

Four Hawkeyes will take individual winning streaks on the road Saturday, when the Iowa tennis team opens the Big Ten season at Purdue. Iowa (9-4), then travels to Champaign to face Illinois on Sunday.

"These are two matches we have a chance to win," said Iowa Coach Steve Houghton. "It's definitely a rebuilding year for Purdue, but they could be tough if we look past them."

Claes Ramel, Dave Novak and Jay Maltby will be trying for their fifth-straight wins at No. 1, 5, and 6 singles respectively, while Mike

Men's Tennis

Kiewiet aims for his sixth straight victory at No. 2.

Ramel, a 1988 all-Big Ten selection, is ranked 101st in the country and has a 10-3 overall record. He has won 10 of his last 11 matches at No. 1 singles after two early season losses.

Kiewiet's last win in singles was against Darren Price of Wichita State. Kiewiet has the best record on the team at 8-2, but strained his hamstring and missed the last three competitions. He will play against Purdue.

Martin Aguirre, Lars Nordmark, Novak and Maltby will make up the rest of the singles lineup. Novak is also 10-3, winning every match in two sets.

John Wingarden will play No. 1 for the Boilermakers, Keith Butterfield will be in the No. 2 spot and Brian Ritz will play No. 3. Andy Berlinski, Paul Wagner and Tom Lynch make up the rest of the lineup.

In doubles Aguirre and Ramel will play Wingarden and Butterfield, Kiewiet and Buckingham face Ritz and Berlinski and the No. 3 match will have Novak and Stokstad against Wagner and Lynch. Iowa has already faced Purdue (6-7) in two preseason Invitationals. Aguirre beat Ritz 6-3, 3-6, 6-3 at the Spartan Invitational and Ramel beat Butterfield at Ball State 6-2, 7-6.

The Hawkeyes also saw Illinois in the preseason at both Invitationals. The Illini are 8-6 and are more balanced than Purdue.

"They have more depth down low in the singles lineup," said Buckingham, part of Iowa's No. 2 doubles team.

"Plus they'll probably be crushed by Northwestern the day before," Novak added. "When they get to us, they'll be ready to play."

Injuries plague Schillig's Hawks

By Erica Welland
The Daily Iowan

Despite numerous injuries, the Iowa women's tennis team will open its Big Ten season Saturday at Michigan and Sunday at Michigan State.

Coach Micki Schillig said that although the Hawkeyes are faced with an injury problem, they are confident in the players that are healthy.

"The injuries hurt us a lot," Schillig said. "But so far we've had people strong enough to fill in. We're hoping to pull together and pull out a couple victories."

Women's Tennis

The injured Iowa players include sophomore Catherine Wilson, freshman Tracey Donnelly and junior Susan Evans. Sophomore Tracey Peyton is also injured but she will still play this weekend.

"The injuries may affect the team," Peyton said. "But we seemed to compensate over break. We had to."

The Hawkeyes have just returned from a spring break trip to California where they took on such teams as the University of San Diego and Montana State.

During that trip, the team also had the chance to play outside for the first time of the season, which Peyton said was a helpful experience before starting the Big Ten season. The meets this weekend will be held outside, weather permitting.

"I'm anxious to play outdoors," Peyton said. "We've been inside for so long, and it's always good to play outdoors."

Apology

In yesterday's television section a joke was made about the misnaming of the Orinico hog. At one point it was facetiously suggested that the animal "is also considerably brighter than the average South American." Simply put, this was an unintentionally racist comment. The Arts/Entertainment staff apologizes wholeheartedly.

Yo La Tengo screams velvet

By Brian Jones
The Daily Iowan

You ever notice that just about every American independent-label band of any worth suffers Velvet Underground comparisons? That noted, Yo La Tengo, who, with the Magnolias, SCOPE will present tomorrow night at the Polo Club, 313 S. Dubuque St., often sound something like the Velvet Underground. Not the anarchic, jagged, ugly Velvet Underground, but the hypnotic and chordal Velvet Underground, like maybe "Lisa Says." Except that sometimes, Yo La Tengo does the noisy stuff, too. Got it?

On their latest EP ("President," over 35 minutes long), vocalist/guitarist Ira Kaplan continues to exercise his guitar muse by alternately mesmerizing then tossing out ugly chunks over drummer Georgia Hubley's simple drum parts and Stephan Wichniewski's rock solid (what else?) bass lines. Kaplan sings like, who else, Lou Reed.

At their best, it's difficult to tell if a Yo La Tengo song is imploding or

Yo La Tengo Robert Sletsema

Bands

exploding. Especially live, Kaplan's guitar folds back on itself, then begins to feed back violently. Guitar solos weave their way through songs, seemingly unsure of a final destination, then end up at precisely the right point.

On "President," "Barnaby, Hardly Working" is a screeching, tightly coiled piece of guitar madness, while "The Evil That Men Do" is an insidious surf song. "The Evil That Men Do" is then reprised on side two, via a CBGB performance from 1988, and somehow becomes a caterwauling, feedback-laden bit of ugliness, held together by Hubley's tribal drum thump. Not exactly tension and release, but tension on tension. How many ways can one say a band's good?

You ever notice that any American independent label band that doesn't get compared to the Velvet Underground gets compared to the Replacements?

Okay, so the Magnolias, who are playing with Yo La Tengo, are from Minneapolis (clue one), merge a punk ethos with a more overt pop sensibility (clue two) and have a snotty-voiced lead singer (clue three).

Space precludes a complete discussion, so suffice it to say that the Magnolias' two records suggest they stand every chance of being the next big Minneapolisian thing.

Bergman tries hand at Japanese 'de Sade'

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Ingmar Bergman's production of a Japanese play hasn't gone before the critics yet, but it already has been invited to go on the road.

The famed director opens "The Marquise de Sade," by Japanese playwright Yukio Mishima, on April 8 at the Royal Dramatic Theater, after he scrapped plans to stage Shakespeare's "A Winter's Tale."

The play, with an all-female cast, has received invitations so far from Tokyo and Denmark, theater spokesman Leif Ostman said Thursday.

'Bent' angles into Springfield

By Tom Hunter
The Daily Iowan

"Bent" is a story of love behind barbed wire. Considering its gay theme, graphic violence and heavy sexual content, "Bent" is not for anybody who's bothered by this sort of thing. But those who bother will see an incredible theater experience.

The Iowa City Community Theatre will give two benefit performances of the Martin Sherman play Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30 p.m. at the Community Theatre Building, Johnson County 4-H Fairgrounds. The production is winner of the 1989 Iowa Play Festival, and these performances will fund the trip to Springfield, Mo., where they will compete at the Midwest Regional Festival.

Director John Harper, a UI assistant professor, was impressed with the audacity of the ICCT in even attempting this play. "Simply because of the strength, the violence, the very heavy sexual content, it is quite far away from anything a community theater would typically do in its own season," he said. To the audience, that means to expect scenes where a nude man traipses over the stage, only to be gunned down by SS storm troopers who then slash a second smile in his throat.

The play opens amid the gay cabaret life of Berlin in 1933. Max and Rudy are innocent lovers until Rudy goes to a bar and, by mistake, picks up the "kept boy" of the Nazi high command. The two are chased by the SS, who follow them from the apartment to a forest near Cologne, where they're arrested. Max is forced to help the Nazis kill his lover, then is forced to make love to a young, prepubescent girl. Here the title refers to the guards' doubt in Max's ability to perform the act, they think he's too "Bent."

"They said I was a bit bent, but I did it, I proved that I wasn't," Max says in the scene. Max is transported by boxcar to Dachau, where he is drawn into a love affair with Horst, and over a period of months they become lovers in a situation where they have never actually touched or held each other.

Harper downplays the gay perspectives of the play and points to its broad human themes. "(Max) begins his life at Dachau totally shattered by what he's been through," Harper said. "He's always been a sort of carefree, conscious free-wheeler-dealer type, and suddenly he had to face a lot of realities."

"Bent" originally opened on Broadway in 1979 with Richard Gere in the lead. Rigid time limits imposed by the Midwest Regional Festival have forced the company to trim the play from its original 11 scenes/two act version to nine scenes in one act, giving audiences a straighter version of the drama, without intermission.

Harper above all stresses the humanity at the core of the play. "It's the story of a man coming to terms with his own humanity, what being fully human is all about."
