China releases names, photos of 21 'wanted'

Soldiers now appear unified

BEIJING (AP)—The government flashed pictures of 21 pro-democracy activists on national television Tuesday and said the students were wanted for leading a counterrevolutionary rebellion.

"Every province, region, city, police department, railway bureau, airline and transportation organ is asked to prevent them from escaping," the television and radio report said.

The government also put border guards on alert to prevent the escape of China's leading dissident, Fang Lizhi, and his wife, Li Shuzhen, who were accused of counter-revolutionary propaganda but were not on the wanted list. They were in hiding at the U.S. Embassy in Beijing.

Among the students on the wanted list was Wu'er Kaixi, who told Premier Li Peng in a televised meeting in May that he should "stop beating around the bush" because China faced a political crisis.

The television report also showed footage taken by a hidden camera of the charismatic student leader and friends eating at a "high-class hotel" and U.S. TV footage of him addressing rallies for democracy and a freer society.

Li, who played a leading role in crushing the seven weeks of protests, told a meeting of top officials Tuesday the army had won only an "initial victory" when it cleared student demonstrators from Tiananmen Square on June 3-4.

"At present, our task is to restore order and strike relentless blows at the counterrevolutionary rebels," the official Xinhua News Agency quoted Li as saying.

Chinese witnesses and Western intelligence sources say as many as 3,000 people were killed when the government turned army troops on unarmed residents. The Chinese government has said nearly 300 people died, mostly soldiers.

Streets adjoining Tiananmen Square were reopened to car and bicycle traffic Tuesday, although no stopping was allowed and pedestrians remained barred.

Missing from the meeting with Li were Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang and high-level party official Hu Qili, moderates who reportedly opposed the crackdown and were stripped of their power by conservatives led by senior leader Deng Xiaoping.

Li also said China would not yield to foreign pressure to change its policy toward the protesters.

"We hope that all countries that wish to keep and develop friendly relations with China will take a long-term view and avoid doing anything to hurt the feelings of the Chinese people," he said.

Many countries, including the United States, have condemned China for ordering its army to fire on the students and supporters. Several countries have recalled their ambassadors in protest, but none has broken ties.

In Washington, the Bush administration indicated it won't allow Fang and his wife to be arrested. International law forbids Chinese authorities from entering the embassy compound, which is regarded as American soil, without U.S. permission.

Fang, an astrophysicist, did not play an active role in the pro-democracy movement. But he has long been an outspoken human rights advocate, criticizing Marxism and China's top leaders.

Bush nixes wage-raise legislation

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP)—President George Bush on Tuesday vetoed legislation to raise the hourly minimum wage to $4.55, swiftly asserting himself in his first domestic policy clash with Congress and its majority Democrats.

Bush, traveling in the Midwest, vetoed the measure less than an hour after it arrived at the White House, upstaging Democratic congressional leaders who were still preparing for an event designed as a final plea to him to sign the measure.

The Democrats promised to try Wednesday to override the veto, with new House Speaker Thomas Foley saying he would work through the night seeking the 30 or so additional votes he would need. Prospects seemed even less positive for the Democrats in the Senate.

White House aides joked about the speed with which the veto came. However, Democrats said the swiftness only highlighted insensitivity to minimum-wage workers, who last saw an increase in 1981.

In a message to Congress accompanying the first veto of his administration, Bush said the Democrats' bill would hurt those it was designed to help.

"This bill would increase the minimum wage by an excessive amount and thus stifle the creation of new job opportunities," Bush said in a message that ran more than 1,500 words. He repeated arguments the administration unsuccessfully made in trying to persuade Congress to adopt a more modest increase, to $4.25 an hour.

The bill Congress approved "would damage the employment prospects of our young people and least-advantaged citizens," the veto message said. "It would accelerate inflation. It would not help those in poverty. And thus it would fail to properly reflect the thought behind this measure; to help our lowest paid workers."

The Democrats attacked those

Council approves building of Westport Plaza 5-2

Tonya Feit
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Council voted 5-2 Tuesday night to rezone 28 acres on Highway 1 West from industrial to commercial land, effectively giving final approval to the building of the proposed Westport Plaza.

The developer, Joseph Co. of Peoria, Ill., may now begin applying for a building permit for Wal-Mart — the only store that has committed to buy space in the plaza.

The plaza, when completed, is expected to contain 222,202 square feet of total retail space, consisting of three large anchor stores and several smaller retail stores.

"A new shopping plaza creates competition, and competition is good for a business environment," Councilor Darrell Courtney, who voted for the proposal, said.

An opposition group is currently circulating petitions calling for a referendum on the city's decision to allow the building of the plaza — but Councilor Randy Larson said such a referendum might not have any effect on the building of the plaza.

"If the referendum is passed, the action is not retroactive," Larson said. "A referendum does not undo anything that happens in the interim (between the time the council passes the rezoning and the referendum is voted on)."

If the issue is put on a referendum ballot and passed, the developer may continue construction and open any stores for which it has building permits. It could not, however, apply for more building permits, expand on the plaza in the future or rebuild in the case of a natural disaster.

Councilors Susan Horowitz and Karen Kubby voted to defer the issue until the group has had a chance to get the signatures they need to place the issue on a referendum ballot.

"I think we're impeding the democratic process we need to protect," said Kubby.

Horowitz also said it was unfair of the council to have voted on the issue without allowing the referendum to take place first.

"This is a system of checks and balances," Horowitz said. "It's their way of saying perhaps we need to re-evaluate our vote."

But Larson said that the vote could not be postponed, claiming that the plaza might not become a reality.

"If we defer our decision tonight, we have the probability of losing the project," he said. "It's clear to me that a referendum should not decide whether the center is built. This is a distortion of the referendum process."

Councilor William Ambrisco also said he was against postponing the vote, claiming he did not want to see the council bow to political pressure.

"We're elected by the people to do our best to make judgments," Ambrisco said. "If we have to bow to a group of people — large or small — every time they may disagree, we're not doing our job."

COMMITTED to kicking the habit

C.R.-Marion volunteers deter smoking habits

Heidi Mathews
The Daily Iowan

The smoky smell that lingered on Madge Phillips' skin, clothes and pillow the morning after she tried puffing on a cigarette her freshman year in college was enough to deter her from ever lighting up again.

"I woke up, and there was just this awful stench in my pillow — I don't even know why I smoked," Phillips said.

But this Cedar Rapids resident realizes it's going to take more than a nasty scent to help the millions of smokers who have kept going after their first Marlboro — and so do other individuals involved in COMMIT, a newly implemented smoking deterrence program in which Phillips volunteers her time.

COMMIT, which stands for Community Intervention Trial for Smoking Cessation, is a new "kick-the-habit" program designed by persons in the UI College of Medicine and funded by the National Cancer Institute. The program has recently been put into action in the Cedar Rapids-Marion area, an area selected by the NCI to test the program's effectiveness.

Based more on creating a large support system for those who smoke and wish to stop rather than attacking and complaining about the smoking community, COMMIT believes in educating rather than condemning smokers.

Simply trying to bombard a smoker with guilt about how annoying their habit can be to others just won't do the trick, said Paul Pomrehn, associate professor of preventive medicine and environmental health and principal investigator of the COMMIT study at the UI.

"Ask any smoker — they're tired of people nagging them, it's going to take more than that," he said.

Pomrehn said it takes, on the average, seven years for a smoker to eventually quit his or her habit.

"They have this continual feeling of 'should I or shouldn't I?'" he said. "Start-stop, start-stop, that's

Legal Services Corp. stays open due to grant

Sara Langenberg
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City branch office of Legal Services Corp. of Iowa, a federally funded organization which provides free legal assistance to low-income people, will be in business a few months longer because of a $350,000 grant awarded by the Iowa Supreme Court.

The office was scheduled to be closed in September when the increasing costs of keeping the Iowa City branch open exceeded the amount of money Congress had awarded Legal Services Corp. of Iowa.

As a result of the lack of funding, the central Des Moines office of Legal Services Corp. decided to close two branch offices in Iowa City and Dubuque. The grant by the court will allow the Iowa City and Dubuque offices to stay open until June 30, 1990.

Legal Services has nine regional offices in Iowa. The Iowa City branch serves eight southeastern Iowa counties and Iowa City, according to Dennis Groenenboom, deputy director of Legal Services Corp. in Des Moines.

Groenenboom cited poverty statistics which showed more than 30,000 people in the state of Iowa close to the assistance.

The closing of the Iowa City office would have meant there would be fewer attorneys and offices to serve people, Groenenboom said.

Sweepstakes goof-up wins lawsuit for Kraft

GLENVIEW, Ill. (AP)—Kraft won't say what rocked its "Ready to Roll" game, but the food giant may have to explain in court how more than 100 people wound up with winning game pieces for a "one and only" $17,000 grand prize.

"We've declared the game null and void. We're still evaluating what our next step will be," Kathy Knuth, spokeswoman for Kraft General Foods Group of Philip Morris, said Tuesday at the company's suburban Chicago offices.

"We're telling people who've matched the pieces to go ahead and mail them in, but we don't know what we'll do," she said. "Obviously we feel very badly about the situation."

Apparently not as badly as some of Kraft's customers, who filed a class-action lawsuit Tuesday in Cook County Circuit Court.

A promotional insert in Sunday newspapers in the Chicago and Houston areas carried the right half of four game pieces for "Ready to Roll."

Specially marked packages of Kraft cheese contained a left half, and matched pairs could be redeemed for one of 8,000 free packages of cheese; one of 500 skateboards; one of 100 bicycles; or, at odds of 15 million-to-1, a 1990 Dodge Caravan LE.

"The problem is that instead of there being a limited number of winners, almost all of the game pieces that went out with the cheese had winning pieces of one kind or another," said Knuth. She would not say who put the game together.

Attorney Jay DeGroot, whose firm filed the lawsuit Tuesday, declined to discuss it. His law firm filed a class-action lawsuit three years ago, when a mistake caused Beatrice Cos. to cancel a promotion, and won a $2 million settlement for 2,400 players.

"I'd be willing to go to court, if only because I had to go into the garbage can to get mine," said Larry Bernstein, a dissatisfied customer who is not named in the lawsuit. He explained that his 7-year-old son, Richard, loves contests and his wife, Joyce, had thrown out the game piece that came with the cheese to hide it from Richard.

'Course packs' could lead to lawsuit

Publishing houses complain that New York Kinko's has violated copyright laws

Brian Dick
The Daily Iowan

A possible lawsuit between eight national publishing houses and Kinko's Copies Inc. could prove detrimental to students — including those in the Iowa City area, according to a company spokesman.

Basic Books, Harper and Row, John Wiley and Son, Prentice-Hall, McGraw Hill, Penguin U.S.A., William Morrow and Richard D. Irwin have said in a complaint that Kinko's, which operates a nationwide chain of more than 400 stores located mostly on or near university campuses, has violated copyright laws.

In their complaint, the publishers have targeted "course packs" — photocopied anthologies used by professors who supplement or substitute these anthologies for textbooks. The complaint is directed against two New York City-based Kinko's stores who allegedly infringed on copyright laws by publishing copyrighted material in "course packs" without first obtaining permission from the respective publishers.

Kinko's legal counsel Kurt Koenig said it hasn't been made known

"If the publishers decide to take this to court and they win, it could mean that in the future students might not buy the books they need for a class because they're too expensive." — Kurt Koenig whether or not the universities or faculty members would also be named in the lawsuit, but added that a case of this nature could have repercussions on both.

"If the publishers decide to take this to court and they win, it could mean that in the future students might not buy the books they need for a class because they're too expensive," he said. "Or it could mean that, because photocopied material can be used for educational purposes, that the only place they could make copies would be in the library."

Although many Kinko's still verify their own permission requests for copying materials, the company now has a program to centralize permissions, Iowa City Kinko's manager Mike Campbell said.

"We have someone that handles them here, but all requests are processed through a main office," Campbell said.

Kinko's generally deals directly with the publishers by phone or fax machine to secure the rights to photocopied material, Koenig said, but added this process often amounts to an exorbitant expenditure of money and time, because they receive over 13,000 requests a month.

"We're spending millions to move hundreds of thousands of dollars, and this is the kind of mismanagement we're going to talk to the publishers about," he said.

The lawsuit could have a trickle-down effect beyond the university to the students, Koenig said.

In the case of one of the New York City Kinko's stores, three students purchased course packs, and Koenig said he wonders if they will ultimately be affected by the lawsuit. "The law truly is a can of worms, and I'd like to know who's going to bring a suit against three students in New York," he said.

Kinko's has already filed an answer to the charge, saying they've been following all applicable laws in response to the publishers' claims, and Koenig will begin a series of negotiations with the publishers today in New York to discuss the legal parameters surrounding the charges.

"It's going to be a tough one, because there's no case law or court decisions that determine where the line is drawn in terms of what photocopied material is considered fair use," Koenig said.

American copyright law allows single photocopies of copyrighted materials for research or teaching and multiple copies for classroom instruction, provided:

- The copyright materials are not used repeatedly.
- No more than one copy is made for each student.
- A copyright notice is on each copy.
- Students are not charged more than the reproduction costs.
- The portion copied is not substantial.

German summer exchange possible

Jean Thilmany
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City's City High students may have the chance next summer to study for three weeks in a northern German high school and then to travel for one week, Iowa City German teacher Bob Lauer told the Iowa City Community Schools' board Tuesday night.

Lauer said the exchange program is currently in the planning stages. The board gave approval to Lauer to continue planning the program, which is hoped to be implemented next summer.

"This is a one-for-one exchange between American and German high schools," he told the board.

The month-long immersion in the German language will benefit students as much as one and a half years of classroom experience, Lauer said. As many as 14 students have expressed interest in the program, and Lauer said he will have to work out a system to choose the students who will participate.

A City High student will stay three weeks in the home of a German high-school student, and that student will come to Iowa to stay in the City High student's home for three weeks in the fall. In addition, Iowa students will travel through Berlin for one week.

The trip will cost students about $800 and will accommodate 10 to 20 students. The German airline and the German government will help subsidize the trip, Lauer said. He will chaperone students while in Germany.

But one board member criticized the program because it would be limited to City High students.

"This is a good deal, but our language trips have always been district-wide," board member Alan Leff said. "I'd like to see if this trip could be district-wide if at all possible."

Leff suggested the board give Lauer permission to plan the trip only if he would look into making joint travel arrangements with Iowa City West High.

Lauer replied that the German government would rather have the trip be a one-on-one exchange between high schools, but that he had never asked about the possibility of combining two small, same-district schools.

"I haven't planned with West because of the logistics of the thing, but that doesn't mean that I can't," he said.

Mule-diving faces protest

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP)—The Linn County Humane Society has gone to court to prevent the All-Iowa Fair from allowing mules to plunge off a 30-foot-high platform into a pool of water about six feet deep.

The humane society is asking a Linn County District Court judge for temporary and permanent injunctions to prevent the All-Iowa Agricultural Association, which oversees the fair, from allowing the "Tim Rivers' High Diving Mules" act at the fair Wednesday through Sunday.

The court will hear arguments on the temporary injunction at 10 a.m. today.

Humane society officials contend the act would violate several state and local laws, although they don't cite which ones.

Veterinarian C.M. Towers of Cedar Rapids and Robert Nejd, humane society board member and investigator for the American Kennel Club, said in affidavits filed with the suit that the act is cruel to the animals.

"Certain elements of the act constitute, without question, torment and unjustifiable pain and suffering upon the animals and constitutes an abusive situation," Towers said.

Nejd said the act "torments the animals and causes unjustifiable pain and/or suffering to the animals."

Rivers was expected to arrive in Cedar Rapids Tuesday and was unavailable for comment. Steve Gander, coordinator of the All-Iowa Fair, said the act has been checked out by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and independent veterinarians and deemed safe.

"The good Lord willing, and if the mules desire, they can dive each day at 1:50 p.m., 3:50 p.m., 5:50 p.m. and 7:50 p.m., Wednesday through Sunday," said Gander.

Gander said the suit is "unfounded."

City veterinarian Russell Anthony said he will watch each performance to see "that those animals aren't abused in any way."

Anthony said he would close the show if any of the mules show signs of torment or overwork.

'Kukla, Fran & Ollie' s human foil dies at 81

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fran Allison, best remembered as the warm-hearted human foil for puppets on the live, unscripted "Kukla, Fran & Ollie" television show, died Tuesday, a spokeswoman said. She was 81.

Death was blamed on bone marrow failure, an inability to produce sufficient numbers of white and red blood cells, said John Rogovin, Sherman Oaks Community Hospital spokeswoman.

Allison joined Burr Tillstrom's popular puppet show, originally known as "Junior Jamboree," when it began on local television in Chicago in 1947.

"It was a delight working with him from the very first moment," she said after Tillstrom died in Palm Springs in 1985. In nine years of daily shows, they never worked from scripts, she added.

Allison had worked as a singer and radio personality in shows originating from Chicago during the '30s and '40s, and was particularly known for her role as the gossipy Aunt Fanny on "Don McNeill's Breakfast Club."

She was born in LaPorte City, Iowa, in 1907, and was married 35 years to Archie Levington, who died in 1978, said Nan Calvin, Allison's niece.

The whimsical puppet program, featuring Tillstrom's "Kuklapolitan Players," emerged from the early age of television to become one of TV's longest-running children's programs.

Allison co-starred with a bald, gentle clown named Kukla and an exuberant bucktoothed serpent, Oliver J. Dragon. A menagerie of Tillstrom-inspired characters appeared in supporting roles, including Ophelia Oglepuss, Cecil Bill, Col. Crackie and Mercedes, the troupe's ingenue.

Allison essentially played herself, a Chicago singer and actress who appeared in front of the puppet stage, and whose concern, joy and infinite patience for her co-stars enthralled millions of young viewers.

"She was so honest, I think that was what made it work so well," said Jon Stone, a Sesame Street creator and producer at the Children's Television Workshop. "She took the puppets at face value."

"Fran was a bridge character between the audience and the puppet characters," said Jim Henson, who created Sesame Street's troupe of Muppets.

Dubuque police monitor drivers' seat-belt use

DUBUQUE (AP) — Police officers will be cracking down on drivers who don't wear seat belts, a move that has won approval from Mayor Jim Brady even though he has not always supported Iowa's mandatory law.

"I think the seat-belt issue is important in Dubuque, as it is everywhere," Dubuque Police Capt. Bill Gravatt said. "It has been proven that using safety restraints helps save lives and prevent injuries."

Saying he is "still not in agreement with the law," Brady supports the police department's efforts to enforce it.

"I would much rather see seat belts worn voluntarily, and not be mandatory under the law," said Brady.

Gravatt said police will be checking for seat-belt use Saturday during a session of the city's Serious Traffic Offender Program.

Police will watch several of the city's 10 most dangerous intersections to cite traffic offenders, with an emphasis on seat-belt law violators, Gravatt said.

Iowa's S&Ls turn small profit following record loss in 1988

Best performance in 3 years despite rising interest rates

DES MOINES (AP) — Iowa's savings and loan institutions made a dramatic turnaround in the first quarter of this year, earning a profit of $2.4 million after losing a record $92 million last year, the government reported Tuesday.

It was the best quarterly performance in three years, according to the Federal Home Loan Bank of Des Moines. The 45 Iowa thrifts lost $22.8 million in the first quarter of 1988 and lost $2.45 million in the final three months of that year.

Nationwide, S&Ls lost $3.4 billion in the January-March period. Thrifts in Texas accounted for $2.2 billion of that total.

An FHLB official said the improved health of the Iowa thrifts was a sign that the restructuring of insolvent S&Ls was working. Last year, insolvent thrifts accounted for $74.1 million of the $92 million in losses.

Iowa had eight insolvent thrifts at the beginning of the 1988 and four at the end of the year, including two under the conservatorship of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., a government agency. The total number of thrifts in the state dropped from 50 to 45.

"The resolution of a large number of insolvent institutions in 1988 is beginning to pay off," said Hassan Honarmand, vice president and chief economist of the FHLB of Des Moines. "With fewer loan losses and a good spread between the cost of funds and mortgage yields, thrifts in Iowa are turning the corner."

"The fact that the rebound occurred against a backdrop of rising interest rates was particularly encouraging," he said.

From 1984-88, Iowa thrifts lost $249 million. The only profitable year during that period was 1985, when the thrifts had combined earnings of $600,000.

The quarterly report showed vigorous activity in commercial lending by the Iowa thrifts but a decline in the closing of mortgage loans.

Iowa's thrifts closed $134 million in commercial loans during the first three months of the year, compared with $14.2 million for the same period in 1988. The 45 institutions closed $110.6 million in mortgage loans during the quarter, down from $139.2 million in the first quarter of last year.

Consumer loan closings increased slightly, from $62 million in the first quarter of 1988 to $62.7 million in the first three months of this year.

Honarmand said higher mortgage rates slowed activity in that area.

Withdrawals exceeded deposits by $267.5 million during the quarter, but that was partially offset by $102.5 million in interest payments to savings accounts. In the first quarter of last year, the Iowa thrifts reported a $5 million gain in deposits and $89.2 million in interest credited to accounts.

Honarmand attributed the weak deposit flows to higher rates offered on instruments such as Treasury bills and uninsured money market funds, as well as higher rates offered by some out-of-state institutions.

The FHLB of Des Moines regulates S&Ls in Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, South Dakota and North Dakota. Thrifts in South and North Dakota turned profits in the first quarter of the year, while insolvent S&Ls in Minnesota and Missouri produced in aggregate losses for those states.

North Dakota's six S&Ls recorded a total profit of $3 million for the first three months of the year, their 12th consecutive quarter of profitability. South Dakota's 12 thrifts showed profit of $2.4 million for the quarter and the highest return on assets in the five-state region — .65 percent. Iowa thrifts had a return of 0.1 percent.

Minnesota thrifts had a total loss of $250.8 million, but that was caused by one S&L — Midwest Savings Association, formerly Midwest Savings and Loan Association of Minneapolis.

Even before the army action, many top student leaders went into hiding. The Beijing Daily newspaper reported Tuesday that some student leaders had surrendered, but it gave no names.

The government's wanted list indicated none of the top leaders had done so. In addition to Wu'er, it included Beijing University history student Wang Dan, and Chai Ling, one of only two women on the list, who sent a tape from hiding that was broadcast last week by CBS News.

The list accused the 21 students of "inciting and organizing counter-revolutionary rebellion in Beijing," and contained details about their height, hair and other features.

Chinese television has more than doubled its usual 30-minute news program on recent nights to show the arrests of more than 1,000 workers and unemployed youth nationwide for alleged participation in anti-government demonstrations.

The government announced the arrest of a second Hong Kong resident in connection with the protests.

Guangdong provincial radio in the southeast said Guo Wenshen was arrested in Shaoguan city after posting "reactionary slogans" on poles. Another Hong Kong student was arrested at the Shanghai airport on Sunday and accused of leading an illegal student organization.

The government regards Chinese residents of Hong Kong as Chinese citizens, even though Britain will not return the colony to China until 1997.

In the first official indication of possible discontent within the army, Jilin provincial radio reported that soldiers of an unidentified army unit had pledged in writing to "learn from troops supporting the crackdown" and to "abide by orders."

The radio report, monitored by the BBC, did not say what prompted the written pledges. There were small skirmishes last week between troops carrying out the crackdown and soldiers opposed to it, but there was no large-scale opposition and by week's end the army gave an appearance of unity.

The army's presence in Beijing remained strong Tuesday.

Food as weapon

Under the guise of humanitarianism, President George Bush has decided to sanction the oppressive Chinese government by stopping certain U.S. military equipment from being sent to China. However, in an apparent effort to carry on the so-called "Constructive Engagement" policy of the Reagan Administration, Bush chose not to cut off U.S. wheat supplies because "that would hurt the Chinese people."

On the surface, this seems to be a humanitarian policy. Yet, our president is not always so people-oriented in his foreign affairs.

If the Bush Administration really cared about harming innocent people, that concern would be the bedrock of U.S. foreign policy.

Take the example of Nicaragua, where our caring government — with Bush's full public support — suspended all credits for U.S. wheat in 1981, effectively cutting off a much-needed food supply. And just last month, Bush continued Reagan's total trade embargo of Nicaragua.

This policy contradiction should not be counted as support for worldwide "democracy," but as a way to placate the Chinese government and maintain what Bush calls "good economic relations with China."

Clearly, Bush does not hesitate to use food as a political weapon. His decision regarding wheat shipments to China was formulated to serve his political, not humanitarian goals.

Enforced equality

Tuesday's U.S. Supreme Court ruling to allow anyone to contest an employer's hiring decision as "reverse discrimination" is being decried as a step backward for women and minorities.

But what is most important about this new ruling is what it does not say — affirmative action has not worked and is not working.

The intent of affirmative action was to increase the employment opportunities of women and minorities and give them legal backing to fight discriminatory decisions in hiring.

It is one thing to hire, without regard to sex, race or creed, the most qualified person for the job.

But it is quite another to hire women and minorities to "plug into" jobs to achieve an unreal balance in the workplace. Affirmative action is not doing its job when, in effect, it forces a false equality between "white males" and "everyone else" in the workplace of a society with no such equality in its cultural heritage of male hegemony. Such an equality cannot be built into the system at the top.

True equality cannot be achieved at the contrived level of the workplace without first being achieved at the level of the cultural community.

And cultural change can't be wrought overnight. Changes have to come from within the American community, not imposed upon it.

A forced equality gives white males ample opportunity to cry "reverse discrimination" when an employer decides to open up the workplace to women and minorities of equal or lesser qualifications — and now white males who were not hired as a result of affirmative action have a Supreme Court precedent to back them up.

Talk to the animals

Though it is a dubious and little known sport, no one but the animal itself can tell us if mule diving is humane.

Forcing a mule to the end of a board until it has no choice but to make a 30-foot bellyflop into a 6-foot deep vat of water sounds like something no right-thinking person would do, let alone watch, but maybe it's fun for the animal. At least it's not harmful, according to mule diving supporters in Linn County.

Controversy is raging in Cedar Rapids. Should the "Tim Rivers' High Diving Mules" be allowed to take the plunge during this week's All-Iowa Fair? Steve Gander, fair director, defended his booking by saying the mules are not forced to make the leap — they do it because they want to.

Meanwhile, the Linn County Humane Society asked for but was not granted a temporary injunction to stop the performances. The humane society claimed the injunction would not "cause undue inconvenience or loss" to the association sponsoring the event but would "prevent irreparable injury" to all concerned, mules included.

Society's job should be to stop animal cruelty in any form, the humane society says.

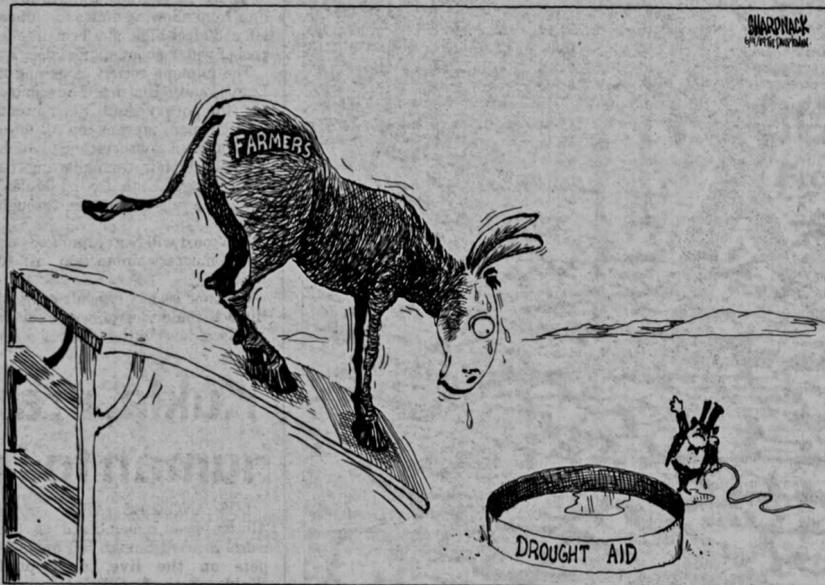

But in the 32 years the act has been on the road, only one mule has died, apparently from a heart attack, said Cedar Rapids veterinarian Russell Anthony. No clear-cut cruelty is going on here. The injunction claims the act "violates several state and local laws," but does not specify which ones.

The act does humiliate the animals, but the main offense is that a group of citizens would try to close an event down, calling it cruel without being able to vocalize exactly how, and then take it upon itself to determine where society should stand on the sport.

Mule-diving fans — also members of society — have just as much right to their sport as do other sports fans until the humane society can state exactly how the diving is inhumane.

Learning by failing: Dad speaks, kids don't hear

My parents recently celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary, and at the party their children gave in honor of them, my father prepared a little speech.

It included the following: "... one of the greatest lessons I've learned over the years deals with the proper way of raising children. I've warned my children of the many bad things in life; I've tried to teach my children from my bad experiences, so they won't have to experience it themselves; and I've talked until I was blue in the face hundreds of times trying to instill into them the correct way of living.

"But it wasn't until last year that I finally realized what I had been doing wrong. Our children need the opportunity to make mistakes and learn from their experiences, just like I did when I was young. All a parent can do these days is try to aim their children in the right directions. I hope that their pitfalls won't be too deep or dangerous, but deep and dangerous enough to teach them a lesson about life — probably one I've been telling them for years."

After that segment of his speech, my dad told a few dirty jokes and sat down to a chorus of boos. But his part on raising children really made me think — about the wrong way our country is attempting to end the use of drugs by America's youth.

The latest effort to scare and educate has come in the form of television commercials. Remember this one: "... This is your brain" (as the viewer sees butter sizzling on a frying pan), "and this is drugs on your brain" (this time the viewer sees an egg being fried on the same pan). This has some very good symbolism, but the only effect it would have on a bunch of stoned viewers would be hunger for a fried egg sandwich.

Or how about the commercials which feature prestigious athletes telling everyone to "say no" to drugs? Initially, I felt these public service announcements would have a profound effect on millions of viewers who would think, "Gee, if Michael Jordan tells me he doesn't do drugs, and that I shouldn't do drugs either, maybe he's right.

"I hope that their pitfalls won't be too deep or dangerous, but deep and dangerous enough to teach them a lesson about life — probably one I've been telling them for years."

Maybe if I work hard enough, and keep my body in shape, I can learn to play basketball like him."

I honestly thought this method could work. And after I saw Miami Dolphin wide receiver Mark Duper speaking out against drugs during halftime of an NFL game, I believed it might help lead our country's floundering youth in the right direction.

There's nothing better than good role models. I changed my mind several weeks later when Duper was caught with empty role models, especially a drug addict telling kids not to indulge. Duper's "do as I say, not as I do" credo took away all the credibility these advertisements carried.

Come to think about it, even the believable Jordan promotions might fail. More realistic viewers will realize that there is absolutely no way to excel at basketball like Jordan does — even without using drugs. So, they will probably just get very depressed and smoke a joint.

The newest ads have occurred at halftime of the NBA playoff games recently. They feature comedian Arsenio Hall talking with youngsters, 12- and 13-year olds, about their drug problems.

The dialogue goes something like this:

Arsenio: "Jason, when was the first time you got high?"
Jason: "Well, the first time I got high was when I was seven. I smoked a lot of pot."

What does this aim to accomplish? The only reaction it received when I saw it with some friends was, "Wow, I didn't even see drugs until I was a senior in high school. That Jason probably has one hell of a tolerance level."

The point being, is that the American youth is going to have to learn the right and wrong ways of living by their own experiences. When my dad told me to take four years of Spanish in high school, I ignored him. And when my parents kept pestering me about how important grades were, I watched television. Now, I despise having to take another year of a foreign language, and if my grades had been better, I would be sunning on the UCLA campus instead of the Iowa River.

My parents told me the right way, but I had to learn it for myself.

Our government is fighting a losing battle in the drug war. No matter what type of advertisements appear on television, today's youth will continue snorting, smoking and shooting up until they discover that it's wrong for them.

The Bush Administration and the other sponsors fighting the war on drugs should realign their goals. The only way to stop the use of drugs in our country is to diminish the supply. Let's stop wasting money on commercials, and start focusing more on policing the borders.

Nobody can destroy brain cells if there aren't any mind-altering drugs around.

Parents, too, can help. If parents can instill enough self-confidence and self-esteem into their children, then they will acquire the knowledge that they don't have to follow the crowd and succumb to peer pressure.

Hopefully.

Mobilizing opinion by television

While there are fundamental differences between the situations in China and in Apartheid South Africa, certain parallels can be drawn. The excessive violence with which the Chinese authorities reacted to the recent peaceful demonstrations was, in many ways, reminiscent of the 1976 massacre in Soweto, when the Apartheid regime reacted to student demonstrations by killing 700 unarmed high-school students.

Guest Opinion

Obed Norman

The action of the Chinese authorities also seems to indicate that they are of the same mindset — that protests are always the work of a few instigators and agitators, and that the only proper response is a program of ruthless repression, accompanied by cynical manipulation of the facts by way of the official news media and censorship of the foreign press.

An important fact highlighted by recent events in China is the extent to which American public opinion can be mobilized by television images. Young unarmed students with arms outstretched in front of tanks, the bloodied, lifeless bodies of fallen students being carried away by their grieving fellows — it was these powerful images that contributed in no small way to the heightened consciousness and outrage that seems to have engulfed American public opinion.

We all need to be reminded that Soweto in 1976 and Beijing in 1989 are more than just grim images on a TV screen...

The fact is that, less than four years ago, similarly powerful television images from South Africa led to a similar heightened consciousness and outrage about events in Apartheid South Africa. Unfortunately, that outrage seemed to dissipate when the South African regime imposed a clampdown on press freedom, effectively removing those images from America's television screens. The Chinese authorities have already moved to impose similar restrictions on the flow of information from China.

We all need to be reminded that Soweto in 1976 and Beijing in 1989 are more than just grim images on a TV screen, and that for the people in those situations, the grim reality represented in those images will continue long after they have disappeared from view. Although South Africa has been blocked out from American screens, the truth is that the legalized racism and institutionalized violence of Apartheid continues its assault on the people of South Africa. A few days ago, the state of emergency which provides for sweeping powers of detention without trial was reimposed. A particularly disturbing feature of present-day South Africa is the operation of right-wing death squads, which assassinate and harass opponents of Apartheid with seeming impunity from prosecution.

Friday, June 16, is the 13th anniversary of the Soweto massacre. Commemoration services and rallies will be held in many centers in this country and others. In Iowa City a service, to which all are invited, will be held in Old Brick Chapel, 26 E. Market St., at noon. Speakers will address the question of repression — not only in South Africa, but also in other regions of the world.

UI researcher announces athletic injury study

The Daily Iowan

Approximately one-fourth of all high-school basketball players and wrestlers receive injuries which take them out of play during the year, according to a study directed by a UI research associate for the National Athletic Trainers Association.

The results were announced in Dallas on Monday at the NATA's 40th annual clinical symposium.

The study — directed by John Powell, a research associate in the UI Department of Orthopaedic Surgery — found that 22 percent of boys' basketball players and 23 percent of girls' basketball players sustained at least one injury each year that took them out of play.

In a study of high-school wrestlers, researchers found that 27 percent of the participants were injured at least once each year, and more than one-third of the injuries sidelined athletes for more than a week.

Sixty percent of the injuries that occur during high-school basketball games occur during the second half and about two-thirds of injuries among high-school wrestlers happen during practice, according to the study.

About 18 percent of the more than 110,000 injuries girls sustained were knee-related. While only 3,700 of all injuries required surgery, 89 percent were knee repair procedures.

Among male basketball players, as many as 42 percent of the injuries were to an ankle or foot, far outnumbering injuries to the hip, knee, forearm, wrist or hand.

After reviewing data collected since 1986, the NATA estimates that more than one million students are injured in high-school athletics each year.

Powell said NATA studies of high-school sports have helped identify areas where further study may make a difference in reducing the number of injuries sustained by athletes.

"When taken as a whole, the research provides us with an excellent overview of injuries in these particular sports. But the study does not provide a complete pattern of injury trends," he adds.

"The study only measures injuries at schools that have certified athletic trainers, and fewer than 20 percent of the nation's high schools do."

Powell says it is up to the parents of all high-school athletes to make sure their child will have the proper health care if he or she becomes injured during practice or a game. By taking an active role and asking questions about emergency action plans, health care practices and the first aid training of coaches and staff, parents can help protect student athletes.

"I hope the findings of these studies will raise the level of awareness about the protection that is needed for student athletes," he adds.

Other results of the study include:

- Injuries occur more often in practice than in games, because most teams have more practices than they do games.
- During games, 59 percent of the injuries among boys and 63 percent among girls occurred during the second half. "Fatigue may be a factor, but there's probably more to it than that," he says.
- While re-injuries cannot be prevented entirely, they can be minimized.
- Wrestlers and female basketball players face almost the same chances of sustaining an injury that requires surgery.

Wage

arguments as unfounded, and promised to advance another bill should they fail to override the veto. They also took Bush to task for refusing to support the minimum-wage increase at a time he is seeking to expand capital-gains tax breaks enjoyed primarily by the wealthy.

"It is particularly offensive to millions of poor working Americans that President Bush would veto a bill over 30 cents an hour at the same time that he is pushing hard to give a $30,000-a-year tax cut to the very richest Americans," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said. "Those are not the proper priorities for our nation, nor should they be for the president."

Robert Martin, director of the Chamber of Commerce's employee relations policy center, said, "We are encouraged by the president's action today." But Gerald McEntee, president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said, "This veto is a slap in the face of the working poor."

Foley, facing a major confrontation with the White House in his first full week as speaker, refused to answer directly when asked whether he had any realistic chance of gaining the votes needed to override a veto.

"Hope springs eternal," Foley said with a broad smile.

But even if Foley could deliver the votes in the House, Bush appears destined to prevail. Thirty-five Republican senators have signed a letter pledging to back Bush in the veto fight — two more votes than the GOP would need to sustain a veto in the Senate.

The chief sponsors of the legislation, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., vowed to revive the issue if Bush wins the initial fight.

"There will be an increase in the minimum wage," said Kennedy, "if not today, then soon."

In his message, Bush again called in Congress to pass his own proposal, which would boost the minimum wage from its current level of

$3.35 an hour to $4.25 by January 1992. Bush's measure also would allow employers to pay all new hires a subminimum wage for six months, a provision he said would prevent most of the job loss he believes would be triggered by a higher minimum wage.

Democrats contest the job-loss projections as unfounded and consider Bush's subminimum wage proposal a cloaked attempt to allow employers to create a new underclass of low-wage workers.

The Kennedy-Hawkins bill calls for a $4.55 an hour minimum wage by October 1991, with the first incremental increase taking effect this year, and contains a far more restrictive provision allowing a subminimum to be paid to workers with less than 60 days' work experience.

"My difference with the Congress is not just about 30 cents an hour," Bush said in the veto measure. "It is about hundreds of thousands of jobs that would be preserved by my administration's approach as opposed to those that would be sacrificed under the excessive increase included in this legislation."

Mitchell insisted he was not surprised by the swiftness of the veto, but the leaders seemed caught off guard. Kennedy and Hawkins had printed statements urging Bush to reconsider, only to be told by Mitchell just before the Democrats' event was to begin that his office had just been informed of the veto.

White House officials said the bill arrived at the White House at 1:39 p.m. EDT and Bush, traveling on Air Force One from Wyoming to Nebraska, was notified by a clerk. Bush signed a prepared veto message he had taken on the trip and at 1:55 p.m. authorized the White House to affix his signature to another copy of the message and immediately return it to the Capitol.

Bush said that if Congress is unwilling to accept his approach toward raising the minimum wage he would examine the possibility of raising the Earned Income Tax Credit to help the working poor.

Smoking

how it usually is. It's a very compelling habit."

Enter COMMIT's "Blueprint for Better Health", the backbone of the smoking cessation program. Centered around four task forces designed to reach varying groups of individuals, this "blueprint" exists to create a supportive and encouraging environment aimed towards helping smokers quit, Pomrehn said.

"The idea is really to mobilize the community's concern for health — and in particular to make everyone aware of the effects smoking has on the individual," Pomrehn continued.

"We think this type of program will have the greatest impact on smokers in the community," he said.

Task forces functioning in the program are made up of community volunteers, who are responsible for all COMMIT activities including the development of resource materials, implementation of public education efforts and coordination of effort with other local groups.

The work place task force operates as an informant to area employers, unions and other organizations. Its primary function is to "get the organization to think about what their policies are concerning smoking," Pomrehn said. This should trigger employees' awareness of health habits.

Another task force is aimed toward health-care professionals.

"All of them have the potential to talk to their patients and help educate them," Pomrehn said. "Probably three out of four people visit a physician annually, so you can see how this could be an effective channel in which a lot of people can be reached."

Workshops designed to help implement educational sessions into separate health-care practices will enable professionals to create a more systematic approach to educating their patients, Pomrehn said.

Among the resources that will be made available in addition to the task forces are a Cessation Resource Guide, a smoker's newsletter and a smoker's hotline.

"Continued encouragement must be provided for smokers who decide to kick the habit," Pomrehn said.

The program's success seems highly likely, Pomrehn said.

"When you put all four (task forces) together, the program has great potential to work, but it's no magical cure, and I'm not trying to make any fantastic claims."

Grant

there will be reallocated to other offices.

The main problem the low-income people will face will be less access to the legal services provided by the Legal Services Corp. For instance, Groenenboom said, low-income individuals in Iowa City will have to go to Cedar Rapids in order to receive legal assistance.

Legal Services only provides legal assistance in civil cases, Groenenboom said.

Indigent individuals whose applications for Aid to Dependent Children payments have been denied or who have been turned down for disability payments, landlord-tenant disputes, and domestic abuse cases are the most common cases Legal Services provides assistance for.

"There's really no other organization that provides that kind of help," Groenenboom said.

Groenenboom said the increasing costs of salaries, employee medical benefits and office operation expenses exceeded the amount of federal funding the organization received, mandating the closure of the Iowa City office in September.

The $350,000 grant, accumulated from a commission interest on lawyer trust accounts in Iowa, arguments as unfounded, and promised to advance another bill should they fail to override the veto. They also took Bush to task for refusing to support the minimum-wage increase at a time he is seeking to expand capital-gains tax breaks enjoyed primarily by the wealthy.

"It is particularly offensive to millions of poor working Americans that President Bush would veto a bill over 30 cents an hour at the same time that he is pushing hard to give a $30,000-a-year tax cut to the very richest Americans," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said. "Those are not the proper priorities for our nation, nor should they be for the president."

Robert Martin, director of the Chamber of Commerce's employee relations policy center, said, "We are encouraged by the president's action today." But Gerald McEntee, president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said, "This veto is a slap in the face of the working poor."

Foley, facing a major confrontation with the White House in his first full week as speaker, refused to answer directly when asked whether he had any realistic chance of gaining the votes needed to override a veto.

"Hope springs eternal," Foley said with a broad smile.

But even if Foley could deliver the votes in the House, Bush appears destined to prevail. Thirty-five Republican senators have signed a letter pledging to back Bush in the veto fight — two more votes than the GOP would need to sustain a veto in the Senate.

The chief sponsors of the legislation, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., vowed to revive the issue if Bush wins the initial fight.

"There will be an increase in the minimum wage," said Kennedy, "if not today, then soon."

In his message, Bush again called in Congress to pass his own proposal, which would boost the minimum wage from its current level of

$3.35 an hour to $4.25 by January 1992. Bush's measure also would allow employers to pay all new hires a subminimum wage for six months, a provision he said would prevent most of the job loss he believes would be triggered by a higher minimum wage.

Democrats contest the job-loss projections as unfounded and consider Bush's subminimum wage proposal a cloaked attempt to allow employers to create a new underclass of low-wage workers.

The Kennedy-Hawkins bill calls for a $4.55 an hour minimum wage by October 1991, with the first incremental increase taking effect this year, and contains a far more restrictive provision allowing a subminimum to be paid to workers with less than 60 days' work experience.

"My difference with the Congress is not just about 30 cents an hour," Bush said in the veto measure. "It is about hundreds of thousands of jobs that would be preserved by my administration's approach as opposed to those that would be sacrificed under the excessive increase included in this legislation."

Mitchell insisted he was not surprised by the swiftness of the veto, but the leaders seemed caught off guard. Kennedy and Hawkins had printed statements urging Bush to reconsider, only to be told by Mitchell just before the Democrats' event was to begin that his office had just been informed of the veto.

White House officials said the bill arrived at the White House at 1:39 p.m. EDT and Bush, traveling on Air Force One from Wyoming to Nebraska, was notified by a clerk. Bush signed a prepared veto message he had taken on the trip and at 1:55 p.m. authorized the White House to affix his signature to another copy of the message and immediately return it to the Capitol.

Bush said that if Congress is unwilling to accept his approach toward raising the minimum wage he would examine the possibility of raising the Earned Income Tax Credit to help the working poor.

how it usually is. It's a very compelling habit."

Enter COMMIT's "Blueprint for Better Health", the backbone of the smoking cessation program. Centered around four task forces designed to reach varying groups of individuals, this "blueprint" exists to create a supportive and encouraging environment aimed towards helping smokers quit, Pomrehn said.

"The idea is really to mobilize the community's concern for health — and in particular to make everyone aware of the effects smoking has on the individual," Pomrehn continued.

"We think this type of program will have the greatest impact on smokers in the community," he said.

Task forces functioning in the program are made up of community volunteers, who are responsible for all COMMIT activities including the development of resource materials, implementation of public education efforts and coordination of effort with other local groups.

The work place task force operates as an informant to area employers, unions and other organizations. Its primary function is to "get the organization to think about what their policies are concerning smoking," Pomrehn said. This should trigger employees' awareness of health habits.

Another task force is aimed toward health-care professionals.

"All of them have the potential to talk to their patients and help educate them," Pomrehn said. "Probably three out of four people visit a physician annually, so you can see how this could be an effective channel in which a lot of people can be reached."

Workshops designed to help implement educational sessions into separate health-care practices will enable professionals to create a more systematic approach to educating their patients, Pomrehn said.

Among the resources that will be made available in addition to the task forces are a Cessation Resource Guide, a smoker's newsletter and a smoker's hotline.

"Continued encouragement must be provided for smokers who decide to kick the habit," Pomrehn said.

The program's success seems highly likely, Pomrehn said.

"When you put all four (task forces) together, the program has great potential to work, but it's no magical cure, and I'm not trying to make any fantastic claims."

there will be reallocated to other offices.

The main problem the low-income people will face will be less access to the legal services provided by the Legal Services Corp. For instance, Groenenboom said, low-income individuals in Iowa City will have to go to Cedar Rapids in order to receive legal assistance.

Legal Services only provides legal assistance in civil cases, Groenenboom said.

Indigent individuals whose applications for Aid to Dependent Children payments have been denied or who have been turned down for disability payments, landlord-tenant disputes, and domestic abuse cases are the most common cases Legal Services provides assistance for.

"There's really no other organization that provides that kind of help," Groenenboom said.

Groenenboom said the increasing costs of salaries, employee medical benefits and office operation expenses exceeded the amount of federal funding the organization received, mandating the closure of the Iowa City office in September.

"But we were looking through the paper Sunday, and she realized she had the matching half. I called Kraft, and by the time they called me back, I was told hundreds of people claimed the same thing," Bernstein said.

Almost immediately, Kraft began recalling all the specially marked packages from store shelves in both the Chicago and Houston areas.

Knuth declined to reveal any details about the promotion, other than to say the company's position is that it cannot be held liable for the error.

"It is so obviously unintentional," she said.

But the Illinois attorney general's office already has heard from 50 angry customers, said spokeswoman Therese McMahon. And a private attorney, who already has been contacted by one winner, says the company "may not be able to say 'Oops,' and forget about it."

"In breach-of-contract matters like this, you can defend yourself by saying the error was so obvious that the person who benefits from it should know," said attorney James Magee. "I'm not sure that will wash in this instance, especially in front of a jury."

Robert Blashek, executive vice president for Ventura Associates International, a New York-based contest, sweepstakes and game-planning service, rated the Kraft mixup "pretty bad as these things go."

"But on the scale of foul-ups," he added, "I've heard of worse. The difference is that most of those don't reach the public."

Shanghai police detain U.S. TV crew

SHANGHAI, China — Police in Shanghai detained a crew from ABC News as it tried to photograph a family watching China's evening TV news, a correspondent for the U.S. network said Tuesday.

"It was like a scene from a bad Gestapo movie," said ABC News correspondent Mark Litke.

He said two uniformed police and three plainclothes men burst in on the crew without warning Monday night.

"They swept aside a curtain and were confronted by us with our camera, two big lights, a mike man with a boom," Litke said. "They looked very surprised."

The three-member crew and its government-assigned interpreter were held for about 2½ hours, Litke said, adding that the Chinese family was not arrested, and no videotape was confiscated.

Searchers discover missing tour plane

HONOLULU — The wreckage of a sightseeing airplane that had disappeared with 11 people aboard was found Tuesday strewn over a rugged cliffside in a remote valley on Hawaii Island, authorities said.

There was no immediate sign of survivors.

The crew of a Hawaii County Fire Department helicopter sighted the Scenic Air Tours Hawaii plane above Waipio Valley on the island's northeast coast, according to Hawaii County Fire Battalion Chief James Higashida.

The twin-engine Beechcraft disappeared without indication of trouble Sunday afternoon during a planned hour-long flight from Hilo Airport on Hawaii to Kahului Airport on Maui.

"They have spotted bodies at the site," Butts said. "At this point, there is no indication there are any survivors."

U.S. ambassador visits Gaza Strip

JERUSALEM — Palestinian leaders in the occupied Gaza Strip on Tuesday asked U.S. Ambassador William Brown to urge the United States to step up its Middle East peace efforts.

The Israeli army demolished four houses and sealed seven others in the occupied West Bank to punish Palestinians accused of attacks on troops and on Arabs suspected of collaborating with Israel.

Arabs in Gaza met with Brown as he made his first trip to the territory, home to more than 700,000 Palestinians, since he became ambassador in December.

"We strongly suggested there has to be more serious intervention on the part of the United States to get people moving," said lawyer Fayed Abu Rahme, who attended a luncheon meeting with Brown. Two physicians also participated.

Rahme said the Palestinians were critical of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's peace initiative, which calls for elections in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip to select Palestinians to negotiate an interim autonomy settlement for the lands.

Pilot says bird may have caused crash

PARIS — A Soviet pilot said Tuesday he battled to keep his MiG-29 from crashing into a crowd at the Paris Air Show last week after a bird or other foreign object got caught in the fighter jet's engine.

Anatoly Kvochur, who saved himself by ejecting from the aircraft about 500 feet before it crashed Thursday, said he took about three seconds to decide where to aim his falling jet.

The 37-year-old pilot, who suffered only minor injuries, spoke at a news conference inside a huge Antonov-225 transport plane.

About 2 minutes and 50 seconds after takeoff, Kvochur said he pushed the throttle to increase thrust, and at that moment the right engine stalled. He said the MiG-29 is equipped with a special system to deal with such a situation and he believed the engine would recover.

Sunken Hitler yacht must be moved

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — A yacht built for Adolf Hitler and sunk with great fanfare to commemorate the "Voyage of the Damned" was mistakenly dropped on a delicate coral reef in a shallow shipping lane, officials said Tuesday.

"They're going to have to move it," said Coast Guard spokeswoman Veronica Cady.

The 85-foot Ostwind yacht was supposed to become an artificial reef in 250 feet of water about two miles off the coast.

It was sunk June 4, 50 years after the U.S. Coast Guard turned away the SS St. Louis as its more than 900 Jewish passengers were seeking refuge from the Holocaust.

The sinking site was supposed to be near where the Coast Guard intercepted the St. Louis, whose passengers also were turned away by Cuba and forced to return to Europe, where most later died in Nazi concentration camps.

For unexplained reasons, the Ostwind was pushed off a barge about a mile north of the site and is resting in 25 feet of water on a living reef, threatening damage to coral and sponges.

Soviets dominate despite arms cuts

"It is rather difficult for Americans — and those in many other countries — to see how such a massive array of power is mandated by the legitimate needs of defense." — Adm. William Crowe Jr.

MOSCOW (AP) — Despite its unilateral cuts, the Soviet military's "overwhelming numbers" still make it the world's biggest war machine and don't back up Kremlin claims about a switch to defensive strategy, the chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff said Tuesday.

"Speaking candidly, it is rather difficult for Americans — and those in many other countries — to see how such a massive array of power is mandated by the legitimate needs of defense," Adm. William Crowe Jr. told students and instructors at the Voroshilov General Staff Military Academy in Moscow.

Crowe, on an 11-day official visit to the Soviet Union, also suggested that instead of announcing more unilateral reductions, the Kremlin join the United States in negotiating mutual cuts, even of modest scale — a step he said would best promote progress in arms control.

"You'd be surprised at the effect it would have, and pave the way for more dramatic steps in the future," Crowe told his Soviet audience.

The 64-year-old admiral, accompanied by an entourage of top U.S.

brass and Gen. Mikhail Moiseyev — his official host and head of the Soviet general staff — also visited once secret military installations outside Moscow to examine weaponry.

It was the latest in a series of high-level military visits designed to dispel mistrust between the superpowers. The visits began in July with one to the United States by Marshal Sergei Akhromyev, then Soviet chief of staff. In August, then-Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci visited the Soviet Union.

In a heavy rain, Crowe and top U.S. military officers who accompanied him were shown a training version of a snub-nosed SS-19 missile in its silo at the Balabanovo base, where officer cadets are taught how to launch the ICBM the Pentagon says can carry six nuclear warheads up to 6,200 miles.

At the Kubinka air garrison, Soviet warplanes painted in camouflage, including the MiG-29 fighter and Su-24 attack aircraft, were parked on the tarmac for the admiral and his entourage to inspect.

Like Carlucci, Crowe also clambered up a metal ladder to board the Soviet Union's newest long-range strategic bomber, the needle-nosed Tu-160, better known in the West by its NATO designation of "Blackjack."

After viewing the aircraft, Crowe said he was very impressed. "We're talking world-class aviation here," he said.

Gen. Monroe Hatch, deputy chief of the U.S. Air Force, said all 10

Soviet warplanes and helicopters on display already had been seen by Westerners, some at international air shows or during Carlucci's visit last year. "But to say many people have seen the Blackjack is an overstatement," Hatch said.

In a Dec. 7 speech to United Nations, President Mikhail Gorbachev announced the Soviets unilaterally would cut their armed forces by 500,000 men, to 3.7 million. Last month, during a session of the Congress of People's Deputies, he also pledged defense spending would be cut by the equivalent of $15.3 billion by the end of 1991.

Soviet officials say the reductions are in line with the new military doctrine, announced by the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact in May 1987, of "reasonable sufficiency," which stipulates that a country needs enough military might to repel an assailant, and no more.

Crowe, in his speech at the academy on relations between the U.S. and Soviet militaries, welcomed Gorbachev's U.N. declaration as an "important step," but played down its overall significance.

Ortega announces pay raises following currency devaluation

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega Tuesday announced pay raises of up to 50 percent for public employees and accused businessmen of fueling inflation by speculating in dollars.

The announcement came a day after Ortega ordered the sharpest currency devaluation so far this year, causing prices to skyrocket. The 52 percent devaluation brought down the cordoba, Nicaragua's currency, from 9,500 to the U.S. dollar Friday to 20,000 per dollar on Monday.

Ortega said there would be no further devaluations this month. He also said he hoped to halt black market speculation in dollars that he said fuels inflation.

In Leon, the nation's second-largest city, taxi drivers demonstrated to protest a 110 percent increase in the price of gasoline, from 17,700 to 37,200 cordobas a gallon.

Bus fares on routes within Managua went up from 500 to 750 Cordobas overnight and dozens of people on Tuesday hitched rides from private car owners saying they couldn't afford the new fares. Most cabs emptied after the fares doubled.

Salaries also dropped in food markets after prices shot up following the devaluation.

Ortega said the nation's 43,000 public school teachers and health workers will get a 50 percent pay raise to make up for losses to inflation. Teachers also will receive a 14-percent increase that Ortega promised May 20.

Another 87,000 government employees will receive a 36 percent pay raises, retroactive to June 1, Ortega said.

Speaking on government television, Ortega said businessmen were fueling cost-of-living increases by speculating in dollars.

Daniel Ortega

"Over these last few weeks, a great deal of money has been moving in the speculative markets. And over the last few days, there has been a massive withdrawal of savings in order to speculate," he said.

Inflation was 15.5 percent in May. The cost of living rose 20,000 percent last year.

The government has said that an austerity program launched in January has checked hyperinflation. But the program also brought a recession.

Nicaragua, traditionally a food exporter to the rest of Central America, will have to import basic foods such as tomatoes, onions, bananas and cabbages in June and July to make up for domestic shortages, Ortega said.

Deficit increases 7 percent after consecutive decreases

WASHINGTON (AP)—The deficit in the broadest measure of U.S. trade widened sharply in the first three months of the year as an improvement in the sale of American merchandise was swamped by a deterioration in the country's investment balance sheet, the government reported Tuesday.

The Commerce Department said the deficit in the current account, which had fallen for two consecutive quarters, jumped 7 percent. Analysts viewed the setback as disturbing evidence of how severe America's trading problems are.

Meanwhile, the government also reported Tuesday that retail sales, held back by weak auto and department store sales, rose a slim 0.1 percent in May.

The current account, also known as the balance of payments, is the most important trade statistic because it measures not only trade in merchandise but also transactions in services, primarily investment flows between countries.

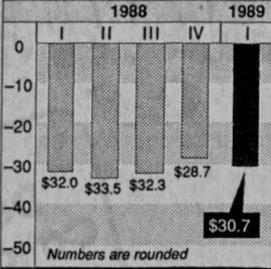

For the first three months of the year, the merchandise portion of the deficit showed a marked improvement, narrowing by 13.7 percent to $27.63 billion, the smallest deficit for merchandise trade in four years.

That improvement was offset, however, by a steep drop in the services category, which fell to a tiny surplus of $369 million from a surplus of $8.36 billion in the fourth quarter of 1988.

Most of the first-quarter decline was blamed on the rising value of the dollar, which lowers the profits of U.S. companies operating overseas because their foreign earnings buy less when they are changed back into dollars.

Beyond the currency movements, analysts said the trade report was disturbing because it reflected the fact that America, once the world's largest creditor nation, is now its largest debtor.

Simply put, that means foreigners now own more in investments in the United States than Americans hold in overseas investments. The total excess of foreign holdings is estimated to have risen above $500 billion last year although the government's official accounting of the U.S. net debtor status will not be released until June 29.

Many economists believe America's standard of living will deteriorate in coming years as the country is forced to transfer more and more of its wealth into foreign hands to service its foreign debt.

"The current account reflects how much we have to continue to borrow," said Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co.

Pentagon funds TV research

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government formally joined a high-stakes technology battle with Japan on Tuesday when a Pentagon agency picked five companies to receive government grants to develop high-definition television.

The Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency announced that it would immediately open negotiations with the five over how much money to give them.

The agency has committed roughly $30 million to the high-definition, or HDTV, technology program and has received 87 requests from corporations and laboratories for money.

The Pentagon said it could not predict how many other contractors might receive grants.

There will definitely be other contractors selected, however, because the five selected Tuesday are all working on the displays — or what amounts to the picture tube in a standard TV — for the new technology, the agency said.

Also being contemplated are other grants to companies working on high-definition "processor technology" — the computer brains needed to allow HDTV systems to receive, manipulate and display pictures, maps or video.

Four of the five companies selected Tuesday are working on so-called "projection displays," while the fifth is working on a "plasma flat panel display" similar to the liquid-crystal displays found on many watches and portable computers, DARPA said.

The four working on projection displays are NewCo Inc. of San Jose, Calif.; Raychem Corp. of Menlo Park, Calif.; Texas Instruments Inc., of Dallas; and Projectavision Inc. of New York City.

The firm working on plasma displays is Photonics Technology Inc. of Northwood, Ohio.

NewCo has told the Pentagon it is working with a subcontractor identified as Spectra Physics Inc. Raychem has listed the Xerox Corp. as a subcontractor. Texas Instruments has listed the David Sarnoff Research Center in Princeton, N.J., as a subcontractor. Projectavision has not identified any partners.

Texas Instruments also is working on the plasma display technology as a subcontractor to Photonics Technology. The University of Michigan also is on the Photonics team.

The Pentagon's primary goal is developing an advanced, small TV-type screen that can display text, characters or video signals with great clarity.

Argentina: Early inauguration

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President-elect Carlos Menem changed his mind and said Tuesday he will take office June 30, the date Raul Alfonsin intends to resign because of the worst economic crisis in Argentine history.

"We are willing, totally willing, to assume the direction of the Argentine republic on that date," Menem told reporters in La Rioja province, of which he is governor.

On Monday night, Alfonsin said in a nationally broadcast speech he lacked the political support to manage the crisis and said he would leave office at the end of the month.

From La Rioja, 700 miles northwest of Buenos Aires, Menem expressed surprise at the statement and said he could not assume the presidency on such short notice.

Menem's change of heart Tuesday appeared to resolve an impasse that began when his Peronist Party defeated Alfonsin's Radical Civic Union in national elections May 14, seven months before the Dec. 10 inauguration date stipulated in the constitution.

The constitution requires four months between election and inauguration of a president so a formal electoral college vote can be taken, but Alfonsin called the elections early because of the economic crisis. The charter limits a president to one six-year term.

For half a day after Alfonsin's speech, it appeared Menem's

The Daily Iowan/Laura Speer

The Peronists and Radical Civic Union tried for weeks to reach an accord on an early transition, against a backdrop of inflation that nearly doubled prices every month, a growing budget deficit, a nearly worthless currency, record interest rates and rising unemployment.

At least 14 people were killed and dozens seriously injured in food riots and looting that began the last week of May.

Some in Alfonsin's party said the main obstacle was Menem's insistence that Alfonsin end the divisive trials of about 18 officers accused of violating human rights in the "dirty war" against leftists by the military governments of 1976-83.

Alfonsin refused to intervene in those cases or to grant amnesty to officers already tried, convicted and sentenced to prison.

Army officers demanding the trials be stopped led three rebellions between April 1987 and December 1988.

In a draft agreement Alfonsin signed and sent to Menem on Monday, he said Radicals in Congress would support Menem's economic and social legislation.

Menem said Tuesday he needs those votes and asked for "an explicit commitment before the Argentine people that the package of laws that will be sent to the national Congress are going to be respected, approved and sanctioned."

He did not mention the military question.

brother, Eduardo, president of the Senate, would be interim chief executive.

At a news conference Tuesday, surrounded by his Cabinet designees, Carlos Menem said: "We are prepared to assume this responsibility on the date the president has decided. That is to say, on June 30 we will begin to govern Argentina."

Political killings continue in Guatemala

LONDON (AP) — Guatemala's army and police continue to operate death, torture and abduction squads, despite the rise of the civilian government in 1986 that pledged to end political killings, Amnesty International said Wednesday.

The London-based human rights organization said it has reports of 222 people who have disappeared since President Vinicio Cerezo took office.

"Although the number of abuses decreased initially, there has been a resurgence of abductions, 'disappearances' and extra-judicial executions in the past 18 months," the report said.

It added that many of the abuses, which include murder and mutilation, are carried out by "police and military agents both while in uniform and while in plain clothes in the guise of the so-called death squads."

Cerezo, a centrist Christian Democrat and Guatemala's first civilian leader in 20 years, took power pledging to end political killings, intimidation and other abuses of previous military governments.

Wealth is concentrated with a military-backed business and landowning minority. The impoverished majority are mainly Mayan Indian peasants.

An Amnesty International spokeswoman said Cerezo, who put down an attempted military coup last month, was not apparently directly involved in the death squads, but his government failed to investigate the killings.

"We know that the army is running some of these squads," researcher Tracey Ulltveit-Moe, who drew up the report, said in an interview. "There may be some government officials involved, but we don't think to the same extent as when there was military rule."

She said Cerezo has become "a useful front for the military ... He has become more successful in convincing some potential donors that the police and military have cleaned up their act."

Druse militiamen rekindle firing in Beirut; 9 wounded

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian and Christian soldiers exchanged fire for five hours Tuesday in an artillery war that has killed hundreds of people in the past three months, most of them civilians.

An Arab League envoy met with Christian leaders about ways of stopping the battle. The league proclaimed a cease-fire in April, but it has been violated regularly.

Police said nine people were wounded Tuesday by shelling with howitzers, tank cannon and recoilless rifles along the southeastern flank of the 310-square-mile enclave east of Beirut where 1 million Christians live.

At least 367 people have been slain and 1,441 wounded since the fighting began March 8 between Christian army units led by Gen. Michel Aoun and a Moslem alliance of Syrian soldiers and Druse militiamen.

Syria has 40,000 soldiers in Lebanon under an Arab League peace-keeping mandate issued in 1976, the year after Lebanon's sectarian civil war began. Aoun has declared a "war of liberation" against what he describes as Syrian occupation.

A spokesman for Aoun's command accused Syrian gunners of provoking Monday's duel by shelling Christian positions around Souk el-Gharb, a mountain resort southeast of Beirut.

Souk el-Gharb commands roads that connect the Christian enclave and mountains controlled by the Syrians and Druse.

The spokesman for Aoun, who would not let his name be used, said Syrian gunners also shelled Kfarshima and Hadath, Christian suburbs of Beirut.

Christian gunners "responded in kind to the enemy fire," according to the spokesman. He said the shells came from Aitah, a Syrian-controlled Druse village south of Souk el-Gharb, and from Chouifat, a Druse suburb of Beirut.

"The Syrian shelling targeted several residential areas," the spokesman said. "The four civilians were wounded in Hadath."

He accused the Syrians of starting the fight to "foil efforts by Arab leaders to work out a solid cease-fire."

Lakhdar Ibrahim, assistant secretary-general of the Arab League, met with Christian leaders in the enclave during the artillery exchange.

It began as he drove across the line from Moslem West Beirut to the Christian eastern sector for separate meetings with Aoun, Nasrallah Sfeir, Maronite Catholic Patriarch, former President Charles Helou and George Saadeh, leader of the right-wing Christian Phalange party.

The Daily Iowan/Laura Speer

Ibrahimi met Aoun at the general's combination bunker and office beneath the heavily damaged presidential palace in Baabda, east of Beirut.

After conferring with the Maronite general, Ibrahim told reporters a three-member Arab summit committee was "determined to achieve its mandate on Lebanon. The contacts I'm holding are within this framework."

The committee — King Fahd of Saudi Arabia, King Hassan II of Morocco and Chadli Bendjedid, president of Algeria — was appointed by the Arab League summit in Casablanca last month to find a settlement of the Lebanese civil war.

Last weekend, Ibrahim was in Damascus for talks with President Hafez Assad of Syria, who has become Lebanon's main power broker, and Foreign Minister Farouk Sharaa.

The latest round in the civil war began two days after Aoun's men blockaded illegal ports run by Moslem militias, which deprive the government of an estimated $100 million a year in customs revenues.

Druse militiamen led by Walid Jumblatt began the shooting. The Syrians soon joined them and Moslem forces sealed off the Christian enclave.

'Gorbachev only hope' says Reagan

LONDON (AP) — Ronald Reagan said Tuesday that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev is possibly his country's only hope for change, and "we should take the risk" of believing he is serious about arms control.

Of China, the former president said: "The Chinese government hasn't learned something very elementary: You can't massacre an idea. You cannot run tanks over hope. You cannot riddle a people's yearning with bullets."

Reagan was addressing The English Speaking Union in the Guildhall, the 1,000-year-old seat of London city government, where he spoke as president 13 months ago and where Gorbachev gave a speech in April.

Reagan, on his first visit to Britain since leaving the White House, mixed jokes and reminiscences with a sweeping vision of a world where "The Goliath of totalitarian control will rapidly be brought down by the David of the microchip."

"I believe Mikhail Gorbachev realizes these things," said Reagan.

"I believe Mikhail Gorbachev is the Soviets' best and probably only hope to turn things around."

"It is true that the West could stand pat while this is happening. We are not the ones who must change. It is not our people who're isolated from the information that allows them to be creative and productive," he said.

"But it is exactly when you are strong and comfortable that you should take risks."

He said: "I believe we should take the risk that the Soviets are serious in their efforts to reach genuine arms reductions with the West. I support President Bush's proposal to keep pressure on the Soviets to make good on their calls to reduce arms."

"The biggest of Big Brothers is increasingly helpless against communications technology," he said.

He said that as long as the Soviets restricted the flow by such measures as banning the unauthorized use of photocopiers, the West should go on refusing to sell the Soviets modern computers.

W. German-Soviet partnership aims to unite divided Europe

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl endorsed a joint strategy Tuesday to "heal the wounds" of European division, which they helped inflict half a century ago.

They assured the world their partnership poses no threat this time, as it did when Adolf Hitler and Josef Stalin divided Poland in their 1939 non-aggression pact.

Both nations want "a common European home in which the United States and Canada have their place" and all nations exist in "peaceful competition with one another," the joint declaration says.

A tidal wave of goodwill toward Gorbachev on the second day of his state visit appeared to wash away fears rooted in the collusion of the dictators and the destruction of World War II.

At least 3,000 people, many waving Soviet flags and hand-painted banners with greetings in Russian, welcomed Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa, in sunny, cobblestoned Market Square.

Chants of "Gorby! Gorby!" arose

when he ventured into the crowd to shake hands, as he so often does on visits abroad.

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said the crowd "made a strong emotional impression" on Gorbachev, and "he said he felt as if he were on Red Square among his own people."

On the steps of City Hall, Raisa Gorbachev beckoned a flower-waving child. Her husband held up Heinrich-Sebastian Schilling, 4, in front of photographers.

At a state banquet at Augustusburg Castle, Gorbachev declared: "Our cooperation can serve as a catalyst for new relations between the whole of East and West."

Dopson sets balk record

BOSTON (AP) — John Dopson of the Boston Red Sox tied an American League record by committing four balks Tuesday night against the Detroit Tigers.

The four balks equalled the AL record set by Vic Raschi of the New York Yankees in 1950, and tied last year by Bobby Witt of Texas on April 12, Rick Honeycutt of Oakland on April 13, and Gene Walter of Seattle on July 18.

The major league record for the most balks in a game is five by Bob Snaw of the old Milwaukee Braves in 1963.

Dopson leads the majors with 11 balks this season. No other Boston pitcher has balked this year.

Dopson allowed five runs on six hits, five walks, one wild pitch and the four balks, but left with the score tied at 5 with two outs in the fourth inning.

Zoeller, Retton taken off apartheid list

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Golfer Fuzzy Zoeller and former Olympic gymnast Mary Lou Retton were removed from a United Nations blacklist on Tuesday after pledging not to compete in South Africa.

However, many other prominent athletes remain on the list compiled annually by the U.N. Center Against Apartheid, the system of racial separation in South Africa.

The list of athletes who have competed in South Africa since 1980 includes tennis stars Chris Evert, Boris Becker and Jimmy Connors and golfers Curtis Strange, Lee Trevino and Greg Norman.

The U.N. list is part of a worldwide effort to pressure South Africa to eliminate apartheid.

The list contains 651 U.S. athletes and 13 South Africans who compete under foreign passports. Runner Zola Budd, a South Africa native who became a British citizen five years ago, remains on the list although she recently said she would no longer compete outside her native country.

Many governments and organizations have banned participation by athletes who compete in South Africa.

Tough pitching shuts down Iowa Cubs

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Steve Fireovid, Jerry Don Gleaton and Luis Encarnacion combined to limit Iowa to five hits as Omaha posted a 7-3 American Association win over the Cubs Tuesday night.

Fireovid improved his record to 6-5 with his third straight win. He gave up four hits and all three of Iowa's runs in the first five innings. Gleaton pitched three innings, holding Iowa to a single. Encarnacion pitched a perfect ninth.

Omaha scored the winning run in the fifth inning on Kevin Burrell's sacrifice fly off losing pitcher Deank Wilkins, 4-4. Burrell also tripled in two runs in the seventh.

The Cubs took a 2-0 lead in the first off Fireovid. Bryan House doubled with one out and scored on Hector Villanueva's two-out double. Orsino Hill then singled, scoring Villanueva.

Omaha took the lead in the third, scoring three runs on one hit. Wilkins walked four batters, including Tom Dodd with the bases loaded to force in Omaha's first run. Jose Castro followed by grounding a two-run single into left field for a 3-2 Omaha lead.

Johnson

"He (Astaphan) told me it's nothing, it's just from the pills," the sprinter said.

Johnson's testimony rebuffed a suggestion by the doctor that the athlete might have taken something on his own in the last days before the race.

The sprinter also said there was no reason to believe that a stranger he noticed in the doping control room would have had anything to do with the positive test, a suggestion that Francis made during his testimony.

The commission's counsel, Robert Armstrong, disclosed that Johnson had not even told his own lawyer about steroid use in the immediate aftermath of Seoul.

"Charlie said I should go back to Canada and try to clear my name," Johnson explained.

Johnson told the panel he had planned to split from his longtime coach and personal physician after the Seoul Olympics.

"You thought you were being used a bit?" Armstrong asked.

"Yes," Johnson replied.

He said the decision was not related to the use of banned substances.

"After the Olympic Games I was going to finish with everybody," Johnson said.

He said he disclosed his intention to Jack Scott, an American sports therapist who had traveled to the Caribbean island of St. Kitts to help with Johnson's pre-Olympic treatments of June 1988.

Johnson was injured in January and May 1988 and twice traveled to St. Kitts, Astaphan's home, for rest and therapy in the months before the Seoul Olympics.

He said any arguments he had in the early summer of 1988 ended in reconciliation.

Johnson said he had a bottle of injectable steroids given to him by Astaphan last year and kept it on a shelf in his home.

Asked what happened to it, Johnson said that two or three days after his return from the Olympics "I smashed it against the wall and just threw it in the garbage."

On Monday, Johnson took the stand for the first time and made his first public statements about his disgraceful exit from Korea.

He admitted years of steroid use in his quest to be the world's fastest man. He also said he knew they were banned substances but never would have taken them if he'd known their potential side effects.

"Nobody bothered to tell me what the side effects were because they were happy to be making all this money," he said.

"Every shot that I got with an injection from (his coach and teammates), I had in my own mind that it was banned," he said.

Johnson said that his first use of steroids was in pill form in 1981 and 1982, the steroids Dianabol and stanozolol taken under direction of Francis.

"Charlie's my coach and if he gave me something to take, I'd take it," he said.

But by the time of the 1983 Pan American Games in Caracas, Venezuela, Johnson said he was aware that he was getting steroids, that they were banned and that he risked disqualification if they were found in his system.

Johnson said he left the concern about clearance times to others.

"I'm not the coach, I just take orders," he said.

Williams

Williams had not called to at least talk to Jackson.

But the 6-foot-6 guard-forward, who averaged 30.4 points, 11 rebounds and 6.4 assists for a state championship team, still said he understood.

Chris Johnson, who will be a sophomore next season, said the only reason he came to Ohio State from his native New Jersey was because of Williams. Williams is from Collingswood, N.J.

"I never considered Ohio State until Coach Williams was at Ohio State," said Jent, a 6-7 forward. "I went to Ohio State because of Gary Williams. But then I came to enjoy the school itself. . . . It's shocking to hear."

Jent said he had no intention of leaving Ohio State.

"I went to Ohio State to play for four years. That's what I'm going to do," he said.

Jamaal Brown, who started all 34 games last season as a freshman guard, said Williams "was one of the big reasons I came here (from Arlington, Texas). I wish he could've stayed. But that's just how it goes sometimes. You can't always get everything you wish."

All three players expressed hope that the next Ohio State coach would continue Williams' full-court pressing, fast-break style of play. And all three said they also hoped that assistant coach Randy Ayers would be considered to succeed Williams.

"Life goes on," said Jackson. "I just hope the next coach they get has the same kind of game style that (Williams) has."

Asked when Ohio State would begin its search for a replacement, athletic director Jim Jones said, "One should not assume that we have not already started the search. . . . I believe a prudent administrator always has a list and, yes, I have a list."

Detroit sweeps Lakers for 1st NBA title

Pistons' Dumars earns MVP while Magic sits on bench

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Detroit Pistons swept away the Los Angeles Lakers' decade of dominance and ended a 41-year title drought Tuesday night.

Most Valuable Player Joe Dumars, who averaged 27.3 points per game in the Finals, scored 23 points in Detroit's 105-97 victory, giving the Pistons a 4-0 sweep of the Lakers, who were going for their third consecutive championship and sixth in the 1980s.

The Lakers went into the playoffs with an 11-0 record and hopes of becoming the first team to make it through the postseason with a perfect record.

Instead, it was Detroit that dominated, giving the Pistons their first title since the franchise started in 1948 in Fort Wayne, Ind.

The Pistons trailed 80-76 in the first minute of the fourth quarter before James Edwards, scoreless in the first three periods, had 10 points during a 13-6 streak that gave Detroit an 89-86 lead with eight minutes left.

After a free throw by Orlando Woolridge, Isiah Thomas got free inside for a layup and then scored on a breakaway for a 93-87 advantage.

The Lakers got no closer than four the rest of the way with Thomas, Dumars and Bill Laimbeer hitting key baskets in the last four minutes.

James Worthy led the Lakers with a career-high 40 points, but no one else had more than 13 for the two-time defending champions. Besides Dumars, Laimbeer had 16, Vinnie Johnson and Thomas 14 for Detroit and Edwards had all of his 13 in the fourth quarter.

The Pistons finished with a 15-2 postseason record, second only in league history to Philadelphia's 12-1 in 1983, when the 76ers also swept the Lakers in the Finals. That year, Los Angeles was plagued by injuries, a problem they also had this year with starting guards Magic Johnson and Byron Scott both sidelined.

The loss by the Lakers marked the end of 42-year-old Kareem Abdul-Jabbar's 20-year NBA career. The all-time leading scorer finished with seven points after scoring 24 points in Game 3. Abdul-Jabbar left the game for the last time with 19 seconds remaining to a standing ovation from even the Pistons who left their bench to applaud.

The injured Magic Johnson grabbed Abdul-Jabbar in a bearhug.

Detroit, trailing 58-52 early in the second half after falling behind by as many as 16 points in the second quarter, took their first lead of the game with nine consecutive points. Rick Mahorn had six of those, while Dumars' three-point play made it 59-58.

Worthy, who made 14 of his first 18 shots, scored seven points during a 9-2 run later in the period that gave the Lakers a 69-66 lead with six minutes left. Los Angeles then took a 78-76 edge into the final 12 minutes.

The Pistons, who were 63-19 during the regular season, became the fourth-consecutive team with the NBA's best record to win the championship.

They are the fifth team to sweep the Finals. In addition to the 76ers over the Lakers in 1983, Boston swept Minneapolis in 1959, Milwaukee did it in 1971 against Baltimore and Golden State in 1975 against Washington.

The 1971 Bucks held the previous record for fewest points allowed in the playoffs, an average of 94.6. This year's Pistons gave up 92.9, and held the opposition under 100 points in 15 of 17 games.

Draw saves Las Vegas bookies

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Bettors lined up Tuesday to get back the millions of dollars they wagered on Sugar Ray Leonard and Thomas Hearns.

But the bookmakers shed no tears because the fight ended in a draw. Enough was bet on other fight propositions that the legal sports books still came out ahead.

The draw, in fact, was cheered by most bookmakers, some of whom would have lost big if Hearns had been given the decision.

"I was thrilled," said Jimmy Vaccaro, manager of the Golden Nugget sports book. "When they said draw, I thought we had a big reprieve. We were in really deep with this one."

A rush of late money on Hearns, who was a 3-1 underdog, had most sports books counting on a Leonard win to make them money.

When Hearns came within a point of pulling out a decision win, sports book operators sighed with relief.

"Eighty percent of them really needed Leonard to win," said Michael Roxborough, who sets odds for most of the major sports books. "Most of them were really happy to see a draw."

Bookmakers said the fight attracted heavy betting, with Vaccaro estimating at least $15 million was wagered on the fight in the city's legal sports books alone.

Because the fight ended in a draw, bookmakers refunded all the money bet on either Hearns or Leonard winning.

"We were here until 2 a.m. with the lines of people waiting for refunds," Bob Gregorka, manager of the Sands Hotel sports book, said. "But we did well even though we refunded most of the money."

Gregorka said just getting the gamblers in the door is good for the hotel, whether or not the sports book makes money off their bets.

Rains threaten U.S. Open

PITTSFORD, N.Y. (AP) — Weather could be a major concern this week in the U.S. Open golf tournament.

The National Weather Service has issued a flood watch for the Rochester area through Wednesday, but meteorologists have said the skies should clear by the tournament's first round Thursday.

That's good news for the estimated 200,000 people expected to attend the tournament and spend between $20 million and $30 million at hotels, restaurants and concession stands.

"This is probably the most significant event Rochester has hosted in terms of tourism in the past 30 years," said Rick Rivers of the Rochester-Monroe County Convention and Visitors Bureau.

He said virtually all of the hotel rooms in a five-county area have been booked and two colleges also have been filling up their dorms.

A total of 5,000 people and an additional 2,200 volunteers have been busy putting the finishing touches on the clubhouse and the 6,902-yard, par-70 East course.

"The course is ready. It's the best I've seen it for championship conditions," course superintendent Joe Hann said.

His crews will be out daily from 4:30 a.m. to 9:30 a.m. and from 3:30 p.m. until dark to ensure that the course stays in good shape.

"My biggest concern is if we get a tremendous amount of rain ...

maintaining the firmness of the greens," Hahn said.

Most of the players have arrived in the city and have been heading out for practice as early as 7 a.m. Practice rounds continue through today.

A golfer who has already attracted a lot of attention in this city practiced Sunday. His name is Mark McNulty and he's one of the players the Rochester Anti-Apartheid Coalition plans to protest against this week outside the country club.

They plan to set up a picket line Thursday and Friday and hold a march and rally on Saturday.

McNulty is among those athletes listed by the United Nations Committee Against Apartheid as having participated in South African events.

"Why don't these people realize that I'm just a golfer? I don't know anything about politics."

Maryland hires OSU's Williams

Buckeyes' upset with decision

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Gary Williams was named basketball coach at turmoil-ridden Maryland on Tuesday, leaving Ohio State after three seasons to return to his alma mater.

"I always thought Ohio State would be the job for me," Williams said at a news conference.

"There's been nothing there that's made me think otherwise, but I never thought I'd get the opportunity to be the head coach at Maryland. ... I might never get another chance to do that."

Williams, 43, replaces Bob Wade, who resigned under pressure May 12 after completing three years of a five-year contract. The Terrapin basketball program is being investigated by the NCAA.

"To conduct a thorough, fair search that results in the appointment of a coach like Gary in 32 days says a lot about the commitment of this university to build a strong basketball program," Maryland athletic director Lew Perkins said.

"Gary Williams represents very well the ideals we sought in a coach when we began the search process. We know that as important as wins and losses are, we should bring to the search an awareness of academics, integrity, and overall character excellence. We feel we have accomplished those goals."

Williams said he spoke with Ohio State athletic director Jim Jones a half-hour before the news conference and that each wished the other well. Williams and Jones have clashed frequently.

The other four finalists for the position were Rutgers coach Bob Wenzel; George Raveling, coach at the University of Southern California; North Carolina-Charlotte coach Jeff Mullins, and Ben Jobe of Southern University.

Mullins withdrew his name from consideration last Friday and Raveling did the same Sunday.

Williams left behind some disappointed players when he gave up the basketball coaching job at Ohio State for the one at Maryland Tuesday.

Jim Jackson, who had been one of Williams' prize recruits, said even though the man who helped him choose a college has left, he will stay at Ohio State.

"It's not my problem. It's a decision he had to make. And whatever decision he makes, he'll have to live with," said Jackson, considered one of the top prep players in the nation last year as a senior at Toledo Macomber High School. "I'm staying at Ohio State. I'm just sorry I didn't get a chance to play for him."

Jackson did say he was disappointed that — after being contacted by someone at Ohio State every week for the last three years — See Williams, Page 11

Canadian Johnson begs for another chance

TORONTO (AP) — Ben Johnson said he lied about cheating at the Seoul Olympics until now because "I was ashamed for my family and friends" and Tuesday begged for another chance to compete for Canada.

"I was just in a mess," the sprinter told a Canadian inquiry into drugs and athletics, on the second day of testimony.

Johnson, who lost his gold medal in Seoul because of steroids, also acknowledged using them before setting a world record in the 100-meter dash at the 1987 World

Track and Field Championships in Rome.

The sprinter said he was given steroid injections for two weeks at the end of June and early July before the August 1987 meet where he set the still-standing world record of 9.83 seconds.

On Monday, the 27-year-old Johnson admitted that he had used performance-enhancing drugs as early as 1981.

Today he said he wanted to send a message to youth.

"I want to tell them to be honest, don't take drugs. I've been there. I know what it's like to cheat," he said.

Johnson said he wanted to compete for Canada in the 1992 Olympics. Asked if he could be the fastest without drugs, he replied: "I know I can be."

The sprinter confirmed that he was given steroid injections by his coach, Charlie Francis, last Aug. 24, and by personal physician Dr. Jamie Astaphan last Aug. 25 and 28 before the Olympics.

Johnson said he took no substances on his own between that time and the 100-meter race at Seoul on Sept. 24.

He forfeited his 9.79-second performance that bested his own world record and the Olympic gold medal because of a positive test for the anabolic steroid stanozolol.

Johnson also said that he did not drink a honey and vinegar beverage that Astaphan sent to him the day of the race.

Although there had been speculation Astaphan was trying to mask the most recent steroid injections, the doctor testified that it was nothing but an energy drink.

Johnson said he returned to Canada immediately from Seoul after returning his gold medal because he was concerned about the security of his family.

"I wanted to get them out of there quickly," he said.

Upon returning, he gave an interview to the Toronto Sun and issued a statement published Oct. 1 saying he was innocent. At a news conference early in October, Johnson reiterated that he never knowingly used illegal drugs.

The inquiry panel appears to be headed toward a conclusion that Johnson's coach and physician rushed in a last-minute steroid program before the Olympics because of Johnson's disappointing August European tour and failed to leave enough clearance time.

Asked if he wondered about the change from the usual routine of steroid treatments in fall, spring and early summer, the athlete answered: "No sir."

Johnson said he was given a diuretic to clear out his system en route to Seoul and noticed that he was going to the restroom six or seven times a day.
