Concern rises as Bush talks of amendment

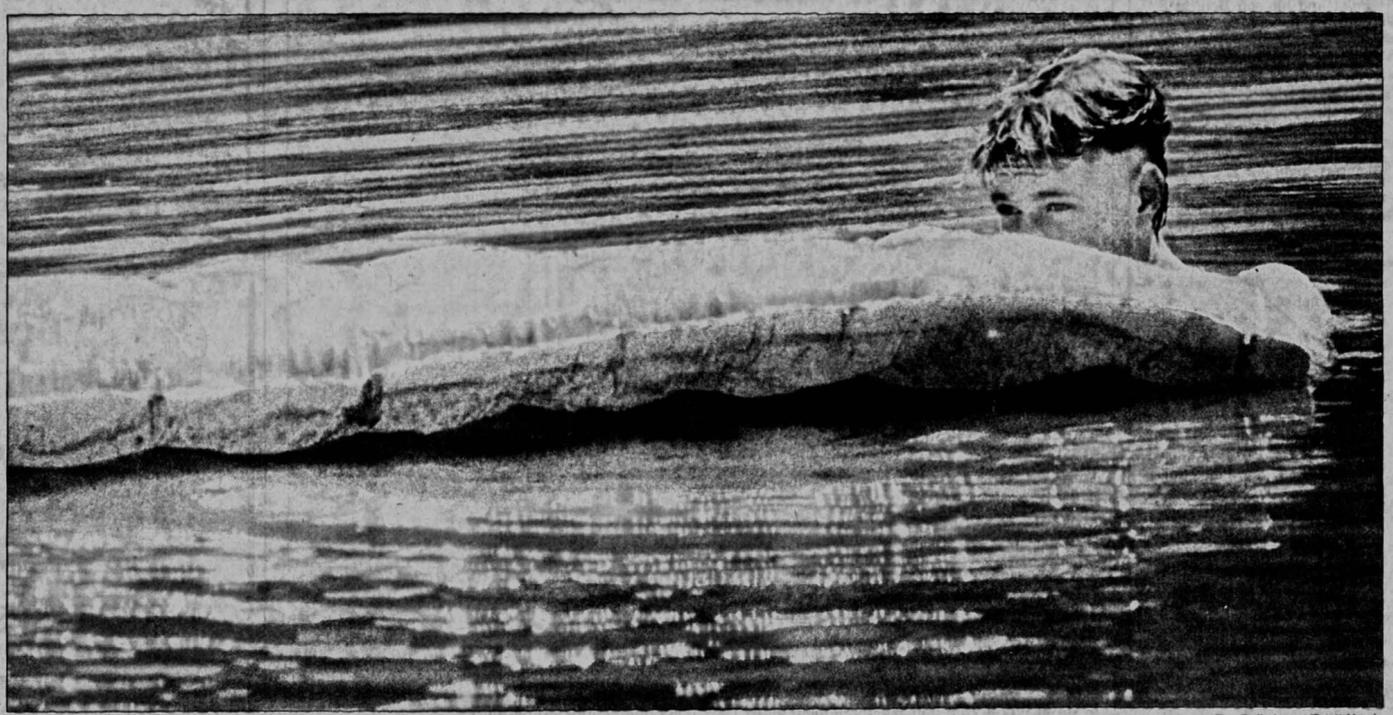

WASHINGTON (AP) — Free-speech advocates, reacting strongly to a proposal by President George Bush, said Wednesday a constitutional amendment to protect the American flag inevitably would lead to censorship of many unpopular views.

"The minute you establish the principle that there can be exceptions to the First Amendment for offensive speech, there's no principled way to limit it," said Ira Glasser, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union.

"The first exception will not be the last," he said. "Someone adds an exception for derogatory racial remarks. If you're a woman, you want an exception for Playboy. If you're a Jew, you want an exception for Nazis marching. Pretty soon, you don't have a First Amendment."

The president's call for an amendment on Tuesday was sparked by the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling last week that burning the flag is a constitutionally protected form of political protest.

Bush didn't say just how his proposed amendment would read, but he did call the flag a "unique symbol" of America, suggesting he believes the Constitution can be

Congressional pay raise proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President George Bush, revisiting an issue that drew public outrage earlier this year, will propose a gradual pay raise for Congress tied to a phase-out of fees for outside speaking engagements, an administration official said Wednesday.

Bush's proposal for salary increases for members of Congress as well as top government officials will come in a speech today in which he also unveils a package of campaign finance reforms, other officials said.

The president planned to advance the idea of a phased-in salary increase coupled with an end to honoraria — income congressmen earn from outside speaking engagements, said one official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"He'll make a point that he thinks honoraria and pay raises should be linked," and he will offer to work with Congress to put together a deal, the official said.

Bush was deciding late Wednesday whether to propose a specific pay increase for Congress and executive-branch officials to go along with the 25-percent raise he already is seeking for federal judges, the officials said.

A proposed 51-percent pay raise for Congress, government officials and judges went down in flames earlier this year in a backlash of public resentment. That raise would have increased congressional salaries from $89,500 a year to $135,000.

Bush aides noted a proposal this month by Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., that would increase salaries for members of Congress, top executive-branch officials and the judiciary by 10 percent per year for four years. At the same time, honoraria for lawmakers would be phased out. Congressmen currently augment their salaries with thousands of dollars in speaking fees, a practice criticized as an invitation to influence-buying.

Marlin Fitzwater, White House spokesman, told reporters that Bush had not decided Wednesday whether to push for a congressional raise, and it appeared the final formulation was still being worked out before his speech today at the Library of Congress.

"He will in some way reiterate his concern," another official said about the issue that four months ago was hastily abandoned by Congress following a public outcry.

The pay increase was to be included in a speech today outlining the president's proposals for election-law reform. The package, according to those working on it, is expected to include the abolition of special-interest political action committees, a ban on carrying over campaign funds from one election to the next, curtailment of gerrymandering methods of drawing political district lines, and full disclosure of so-called "soft" contributions.

Bush was also considering restrictions on franking privileges, which allow members of Congress to send mail to their constituents free, and a system of logging calls to administration officials from congressmen seeking to influence policy.

Bush has been meeting in recent weeks with Congress members, advocacy groups and campaign-law specialists to address concerns that special interest money plays too

Ex-police commissioner shoots, kills 2 in Grenada

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada (AP) — Grenada's former police commissioner went on a shooting rampage at police headquarters Wednesday, killing the commissioner and a U.S. diplomat and wounding two high-ranking officers, an official said.

In Washington, the State Department said the American died trying to subdue the gunman, who was later killed by other law officers.

The shooting occurred at 11:30 a.m. at Fort George, the police headquarters, which overlooks St. George's Harbor.

The State Department and officials in Grenada said the slain diplomat, John Angelo Butler, 33, of Twentynine Palms, Calif., the political officer at the U.S. Embassy, was not the original target. Police Commissioner Cosmus Raymond also was killed, officials said.

Daniel Searles, the acting police superintendent, and Collis Barrow, deputy police commissioner, were wounded and taken to St. George's General Hospital, Deputy Prime Minister Ben Jones said. Both were listed in stable condition.

Officials identified the attacker as Grafton Bascombe. His motive was not known.

State Department press officer Dennis Harter said in Washington his department understood Bascombe was on loan to the neighboring Caribbean island of St. Vincent and had been about to return there.

Albert Xavier, an adviser to Prime Minister Herbert Blaize, said Bascombe's return was delayed because he was in charge of funds made available for joint military exercises with the United States and was to have given an accounting to Raymond on Wednesday.

Xavier said Bascombe entered Raymond's office and fired two shots from a .45-caliber revolver, hitting the commissioner in the head and stomach and killing him instantly.

Bascombe next walked into Barrow's office next door, where U.S. Embassy and police officials were meeting. Butler and administrative officer Roy Sullivan were representing the embassy.

Harter reported: "They were discussing administrative details connected with the recently concluded Operation Trade Winds joint military exercises held in Grenada last week."

"They were also discussing security plans for the Fourth of July

Bush, key senators threaten slash of House drought-relief package

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is threatening to veto, and key senators are promising to slash, an ambitious drought-relief package approved by the House that would send more than $900 million to farmers facing crop losses from severe weather.

Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter warned he would recommend a veto of the House plan unless the Senate alters the measure, which he says is too expensive and covers too many crops.

The House passed the legislation by voice vote Tuesday, hoping to speed assistance to winter wheat farmers in Great Plains states where dry weather is expected to sharply reduce this summer's harvests and to also bring relief to farmers of other crops.

Supporters estimate the price tag will be about $975 million and that the money could be covered by expected savings in federal commodity subsidies, which would be lower because market prices for drought-shriveled wheat harvests are expected to rise.

Yeutter estimated the House bill could cost up to $1.5 billion. He said the administration would support drought assistance limited to winter wheat.

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said he would work for a tighter plan, calling the House bill a "lavish multicrop, multiperil, multibucks bailout for over 600 crops."

Democratic and Republican leaders in the Senate Agriculture Committee, which is scheduled to take up drought relief on July 19, have said they favor targeting payments to winter wheat growers.

The drought bill introduced in the Senate would limit relief to this year's crops planted in 1988 — primarily winter wheat. The House would set up assistance for crops planted this year, although damage to those harvests is not yet known.

Yeutter said "an all-inclusive disaster relief program... very well might not be necessary" for spring-planted crops because their prospects have been improved by recent rains.

The House legislation is also not restricted to drought problems and would make farmers eligible for aid if they have losses this year for hundreds of other crops because of severe weather.

"No crop is covered unless it suffered a natural disaster. If there is no disaster there is no coverage at all," said Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., chairman of a House Agriculture subcommittee on wheat, soybeans and feed grains. "So for all of those farmers who are suffering an extraordinary loss, let us do the same thing we did last year. Let us show compassion. Let us show mercy for those people."

IC school board considers switching from junior highs to middle schools

Cathy Jackson
The Daily Iowan

On a campaign to help emerging adolescents overcome common problems of low self-esteem — both in the social and intellectual realms — the Iowa City Community School District is considering a switch from junior high schools to middle schools.

A committee of 25 teachers, parents, administrators and school board members has been investigating a middle-school program for about two years, and presented a report of its study to the school board about two weeks ago.

The committee, designed to study the needs of the emerging adolescent — kids between the ages of 10 and 14 — and find out whether the Iowa City schools are meeting those needs, used a variety of sources in their study.

Jim Ferguson, committee chairman, said the committee has brought in guest speakers, conducted surveys and attended conferences, as well as reviewed a range of literature about middle schools. He said the findings have pointed to positive results if the

Phase III tuition-reimbursement plan approved

Brian Dick
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Community School District Board agreed on the way the district will apply tuition reimbursement money for teachers at its Tuesday meeting.

The state-funded assistance program, called Phase III money, comes from a state legislature appropriation to better the quality of teaching in the district by providing continuing education.

Members of the Iowa City Education Association, the teachers' union and school administrators had previously agreed to limit the number of college credits for which they would reimburse teachers to six per semester.

School Board President Connie Champion said both the number of hours and the kind of courses available to teachers have already been determined by administrators and the Phase III approval committee. She said the Phase III program was designed to enrich the quality of a teacher's teaching and not simply for enjoyment.

"Teachers only could accumulate six hours per semester, and they have to be approved courses," Champion said. "They couldn't take something like a belly dancing class."

Part of Tuesday night's debate on the Phase III application included discussion from board members as to how to distribute the state funds fairly among part-time and full-time teachers.

While some school board members said limiting the number of hours to six was not enough and others said it was too many, Champion said the school board failed to agree with the way the current Phase III appropriation system operates.

"We'd prefer to have the money pro-rated as with all the other benefits," she said.

But the ICEA prefers having the money universally applied to both full-timers and part-timers, without establishing the amount of time teachers work, Champion said.

"They haven't had a problem with it yet," she said. "If it becomes a problem, I'm sure they'll deal with it then."

Board member Alan Leff, the dissenting voter in the board's 6-1 decision to approve the Phase III proposal, said part-time teachers could benefit from the program more than full-time teachers.

He said part-time teachers have more time to apply to their studies than full-time teachers and would use the extra time for educational purposes.

"The money is not designed to be used in that way," Leff said. "To me, it creates the possibility for abuse."

Leff added the Phase III money could be depleted if part-time teachers with extra time to spare competed for funding against the district's full-time teachers. As a solution, Leff also proposed pro-rating to even the distribution of funds.

"I think that it should be pro-rated. That would take the part-time factor into consideration," he said. "It could happen that a graduate student from the university who only teaches four-tenths of the time as opposed to full-time could pay for his entire education."

Leff said he was not certain if the ICEA and the school board had agreed on the proper measures to ensure adequate distribution of the Phase III money.

"I have a hard time feeling that proposal is widely accepted by all the teachers in the district," Leff said.

Joint animal shelter seeks funds to complete building

Jean Thilmany
The Daily Iowan

Though the ground has already been broken and funding granted for the joint Coralville-Iowa City animal shelter, officials are still in need of extra dollars to complete the building.

To try to raise the needed money, the shelter is currently in the midst of a three-month fund drive.

"We just need a little money to fill in the cracks so the shelter can function completely in every way," said Beverly Horton, Iowa City shelter director.

She said the shelter will still need outdoor fencing and examination tables and counters after the new building is completed in December. Shelter officials would like to raise $21,000 through donations for the equipment.

In January, Iowa City and Coralville finalized plans to build a joint animal shelter and licensing facility. The shelter will be housed in the same place as the current Iowa City shelter, at Kirkwood Avenue and Clinton Street.

The plans call for a 3,000-square-foot addition to the existing Iowa City shelter and will include a 30-foot-by-73-foot fenced-in outdoor kennel and dog run, where animals can be more easily exercised.

The addition will provide expanded areas to house the dogs and cats that are picked up by the animal-control officers.

The current Iowa City facilities are extremely cramped, according to Horton.

"I think $21,000 is a nominal amount to ask for from people. We're not asking them to fund the whole project," Horton said.

The shelters' merger was approved last January by the Iowa City City Council, which granted much of the $272,000 the project is expected to cost.

Horton said the animal shelter houses stray animals, runs an extensive lost-and-found service, controls the animal population, investigates animal cruelty charges and grants pet licenses.

Horton said the present shelter's conditions were too cramped, and the building extension was necessary.

"The odor and noise are overwhelming. There's no circulated air, and you can't get into the cat room. It only holds two adults and one child," she told the city council when requesting the additional space.

Donations to the animal shelter may be sent to the Animal Shelter Building Fund, 410 E. Washington St., Iowa City. The shelter is also selling buttons at local businesses.

Grassley defends Atwater style

DUBUQUE (AP) — Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, has come to the defense of National Republican Chairman Lee Atwater, under fire for a hard-hitting campaign style that included a mailing many interpreted as questioning the sexual preference of House Speaker Tom Foley.

While many Republicans have tried to put distance between themselves and Atwater, Grassley said it's time for an aggressive and conservative head of the Republican National Committee.

"I like his (Atwater's) attacking method," said Grassley, adding that Republicans need a national chairman who doesn't "apologize" for being a conservative.

Branstad locates funds for IPTV transmitter

DES MOINES (AP) — Gov. Terry Branstad on Wednesday ended speculation about a special legislative session by announcing he has found money for a television transmitter.

"That's that," said spokesman Richard Vohs.

Legislative leaders said the announcement is "just more manipulation" of the state's finances but conceded it was the end of their call for a special session.

"I figured that would be the out he would take," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Hutchins, an Audubon Democrat.

In a letter to legislative leaders, Pat Cavanaugh, the governor's top budget aide, said he had found $772,501 in the state's budget to transfer for purchase of a transmitter for Iowa Public Television.

That money comes from a special fund aimed at paying state workers for an extra pay period in this year's calendar. Cavanaugh said less money than anticipated was needed, and there's enough money for "an immediate source of completing the necessary costs of this project."

"The approach taken with this letter reflects the governor's preferred approach to pay for these improvements," said Cavanaugh.

Branstad has the power to transfer the money without legislative approval, though lawmakers have two weeks to offer their comments about the switch.

"It's just more manipulation of appropriated funds," said Hutchins. "It raises the whole question of management of state dollars."

The flurry began Monday when Hutchins and other legislative leaders called on Branstad to call a special legislative session because of the governor's veto of a $500,000 item earmarking money for a new transmitter for the public television network.

The Democrats said the governor's veto would cost the state hundreds of thousands of dollars in federal money. They said the $30,000 cost of a one-day special session was far less than would be lost.

As the Earth's ozone layer continues to become depleted, and as oil spills and garbage continue to plague America's beaches, environmentalist groups have become more prevalent, visible and vocal about their concerns.

One such group is Earth First, a chapter of which was recently formed in Iowa City. About 15 people attended the first meeting of the group June 8.

Hal Rowe, founder of the Iowa City chapter, said the local group is interested in several issues threatening Iowa's ecology.

"Locally we're interested in watershed issues — rivers and creeks and the amount of pollution put into them by the agriculture industry," Rowe said, adding that these pollutants are endangering our biosystem.

Rowe said the group is also urging state legislators to set aside tall-grass prairie preserves.

"Tall-grass prairie was originally the majority of the ecosystem in Iowa, over 80 percent of it, I think," Rowe said. "Now it is only one tenth of one percent."

Preserving the environment and the ecosystem are the primary goals of all Earth First chapters, which are located across the country.

"As these things (threatening our environment) become more understandable in the minds of all human beings, I think it will become more clear to more people that the Earth must become our number-one priority," Darryl Cherney, a three-year member of the Earth First movement from Mendocino County, Calif., said. "That's what Earth First means."

Earth First was the 1980 brainchild of five environmentalists who decided that they were tired of always compromising.

The men wanted to create a group which would ask for anything they wanted, one with a motto of "no compromise" and one which would employ a wide variety of tactics to achieve their goals, Cherney said.

Earth First now has a membership of 10,000 nationwide, but the Iowa City group is only one of about 50 localized groups in the United States, Cherney said. Earth First doesn't have a central organizational location — its beat is the whole planet.

"Earth First is not an organization," Cherney said. "Essentially, it is a movement more akin to a philosophy than anything else."

"One of the basic philosophies of Earth First is biocentrism — all living organisms are of equal importance," Iowa City member and UI graduate Todd Hubbard said.

Cherney described biocentrism in opposition to anthropocentrism, or a man-centered world view.

"As an example, loggers say to us 'there's already plenty of parks for tourists to go to.' But Earth First says 'we're not interested in parks for tourists,' Cherney said. "We're interested in wilderness. We're not saving the wilderness for humans but for all wildlife — birds and bees and trees — every thing has a right to exist on its own intrinsic value."

Earth First has been a leading force in protesting environmental destruction throughout the nation. For example, in Northern California, Earth First has been successfully lobbying for the preservation of ancient Giant Redwoods there, Cherney said.

In Northern California, Cherney said members of the group have protested Redwood logging by sitting in the trees for several consecutive days.

But Earth First protests are not limited to Northern California. A "cave-bug" — a bug normally found in caves — was recently added to the federal list of endangered species under "emergency status" as a result of an Earth First group in Texas protesting a proposed building site near a cave which would have endangered the bugs, Cherney said.

Similar civil disobedience tactics include sitting in front of bulldozers at construction sites and attending public hearings dressed in outrageous costumes or in an Earth First T-shirt with a clenched fist and the motto: "No Compromise — in Defense of Mother Earth," Cherney said.

Rowe said the Iowa City chapter has primarily sponsored community activities to raise awareness of ecology issues. He added the Iowa City chapter has a different angle than the chapters in the West.

"Their focus (in the West) is to save what's there. We are trying to bring some of what's been taken back," Rowe said.

Nagle accuses Yeutter of bashing farmers

DES MOINES (AP) — Rep. Dave Nagle, D-Iowa, said Wednesday that instead of supporting farmers, Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter has been attacking them.

"Instead of being the chief advocate for farmers, Mr. Yeutter has become the chief basher of farmers," Nagle said in a speech to the American Seed Trade Association meeting in Washington.

Yeutter spoke to the seed group Monday, saying if all demands farmers make for government aid were met "the federal deficit would double or treble."

Nagle, a member of the House Agriculture Committee, called Yeutter's statement "absolute nonsense."

"You could wipe out the Department of Agriculture — current total budget about $10.5 billion — and not significantly affect the $150 billion budget deficit," Nagle said.

Nagle said agriculture spending this year accounts for only two percent of federal spending, but farmers have been asked to take 16 percent of federal budget cuts.

"We're doing our part and then some and doing it after seven years of record farm foreclosures and farm bankruptcies," Nagle said. "I find it deceptive, divisive and offensive for the secretary of agriculture to now claim that the budget deficit disaster is the American farmer's fault."

Yeutter's statements are designed to divert attention from the secretary's own actions, Nagle said.

"In his first six months on the job, the secretary has not got the job done," Nagle said. "That is his fault, not the American farmer's fault."

The real deputies

A new criterion has been established for Soviet government service, and with it, a new word for the Soviet political vocabulary: competence.

Tuesday, in what might have proved a showdown between Politburo hardliners and the voices of reform, the new Soviet legislature blocked eight nominees to the Council of Ministers, the Soviet executive branch of government. All eight were tacitly approved by both Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and the Politburo, but found wanting by a vocal minority in the legislature.

But the showdown never came. After paying lip-service to the correctness of the nominations, Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov conceded that "he could not find any serious evidence" to refute the opinions of the reviewing committees and withdrew six of the eight from consideration. Two others withdrew of their own accord.

"These people do not meet the growing demands of the people's deputies," Ryzhkov said.

The who?

Ryzhkov's retreat is even more startling when one considers that the new Supreme Soviet is, at best, only semi-democratic, with over half of its 542 seats occupied by party members who ran unopposed. Had he chosen, Ryzhkov could have pushed the eight nominees through the legislature, certain of majority approval.

But his reference to the "people's deputies" indicates that a working distinction exists within the legislature between those who were duly elected and those who weren't. And despite their minority of numbers, the true "people's deputies" have substantial power of review.

Not unexpectedly, the installation of democratically elected representatives in the loop of Soviet government has compelled the Communist Party to require more of itself and those it wishes to place in high office. Mediocrity no longer suffices, when Little Brother is watching.

Economist Leonid Ibalin, an advisor to Ryzhkov, later suggested that Ryzhkov gave his nominees up so easily because they were not spectacularly qualified men. "It would have been possible to find more competent leaders," Ibalin said.

Now, those possibilities must be explored. The long history of Soviet rubberstamp legislatures, dutifully approving party insiders for jobs they know nothing about, may be drawing to a close.

Feeling the heat

The U.S. Supreme Court's unfortunate decision last week defending protesters' right to burn the American flag may have infuriated George Bush, whose defense of the flag was a major weapon in the 1988 presidential campaign, but the court's strangely split ruling may have provided Bush with an ideal political vehicle.

During Ronald Reagan's two terms, with strong-minded conservatives Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia and Anthony Kennedy joining the brethren (and William Rehnquist elevated to Chief Justice), the court moved perceptibly to the right. The result: distinctive conservatism evident in decisions on a range of focal issues during Reagan's tenure and the first months of Bush's presidency.

And that general conservative direction made the court's flag-burning decision all the more surprising and confusing. Split along lines far from ideology, with Scalia and Kennedy joining liberals William Brennan, Thurgood Marshall and Harry Blackmun in the majority, the flag issue cleaved the court's conservative bloc.

But confusion over the legality and ethics of flag-burning did not plague the president. As the furor over the issue unfolded, Bush pounced on the issue: "Flag-burning is wrong, dead wrong."

And now, as Bush waits — possibly in vain — for sufficient bipartisan support to push through a constitutional amendment protecting the flag, he strides into a political "no lose" situation.

Few Democrats have forgotten Bush's reliance on the flag to flog Michael Dukakis in 1988. Dukakis is vanquished, but, as some on the Hill have suggested, many Democrats are still reluctant to commit themselves to Bush's drive. Their unwillingness may derail the potential for a constitutional amendment, but it will give Bush easy ammunition on a popular issue that is certain to resurface in 1992.

Of course, if Bush can muster enough bipartisan momentum to carry the issue through Congress and ratification by two-thirds of the states, it will be an important symbolic victory for the president. And, as the Democrats should realize by now, protecting the American flag doesn't lose many votes at election time.

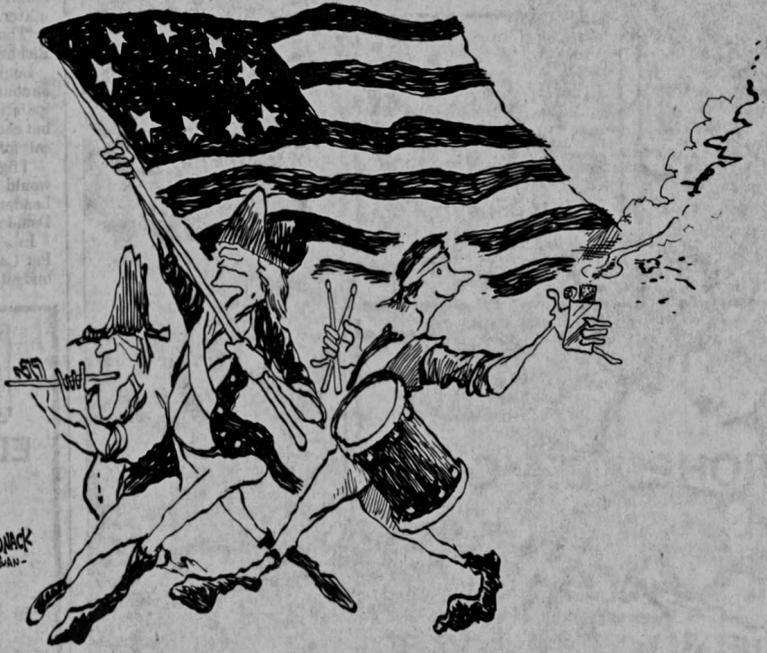

Obviously, Bush would prefer to be remembered as the president who spearheaded the drive which wrested the American flag away from the vermin who would desecrate it.

But even if Congressional Democrats reject Bush's efforts to extend the issue of flag-burning to his agenda of bipartisan initiatives, they will have handed Bush and other Republican candidates an advantage on an enormously emotional issue that could become a lethal threat in 1990 and 1992.

Rarely has such a poor decision, delivered by a Supreme Court stacked specifically to avoid ideological blurs, provided such an appealing political opportunity for an American president — win or lose.

Flag debate scrambles court but 'symbolic speech' prevails

Letters

Call to arms

To the Editor:

It is time the veterans of the UI who enlisted in the military service prior to January 1977 take a look at the calendar. Have you people realized that our benefits expire at the end of this year? Unless funding is approved by September, we lose all hope of ever regaining it. Time is running out on getting letters to our congressmen and senators to get some sort of legislation passed.

I visited Congressman Dave Nagle's [Iowa City district] office and was told by the staff that I had been the only one to voice an opinion to them. Don't for a moment think that because you are currently enrolled in college, or because you may not have reached the 10-year discharge date, that your benefits will continue at the end of the year. We lose the GI Bill for education regardless.

Our numbers may be small here at the UI. But start adding the voices of other veterans at other universities and colleges and Congress may grant extensions or waivers. What about the rest of you veterans also? Congress is taking away benefits we thought would never be lost; who says they can't take yours away someday down the road?

So let's get with it, veterans at the UI. We proudly fought and served our country. Now let's fight for ourselves and our families' futures through our education.

Freedom of dissent

To the Editor:

It is sadly ironic that, while Americans are still criticizing the Chinese government for denying freedom of speech to its citizens, our president has vowed to fight for a constitutional amendment that would prohibit an expression of dissent in this country. I am referring to the proposed constitutional amendment seeking to make it illegal to burn the American flag.

What is particularly tragic is that the many Americans who support this amendment have placed a colorful piece of cloth above the true meaning of America. The flag is not our country; it is merely a symbol of what our country stands for. The flag represents freedom. Inherent in that freedom is the freedom to express dissent, even if exercising this freedom takes the form of burning one of its symbols.

I, like many others, feel a deep respect for the American flag. It upsets me to see the flag desecrated. But proponents of this amendment fail to realize that by allowing people to express dissent by burning the flag, we are not allowing them to destroy freedom. Rather, we show the world that America truly stands for freedom for all, including freedom for those who disagree.

larily shocking manner, "I hate this country; I hate its sense of itself; I hate what this flag stands for."

In their dissents, Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice Stevens kept returning to the meaning of the flag. Rehnquist quoted the poem "Barbara Frietchie" ("Shoot

It is precisely because the burning of the flag offends the vast majority of Americans that it becomes, in fact, symbolic speech.

if you must this old gray head but spare your country's flag") and the "Concord Hymn" ("Here the embattled farmers stood and fired the shot heard 'round the world"). Stevens summoned images of "the Philippine Scouts who fought at Bataan, and the soldiers who scaled the bluff at Omaha Beach."

These are splendid political sentiments; they express eloquently why the burning of the flag so offends the soul. What they do not do is to explain why the government can ban such symbolic speech.

On that ground, the dissenters' arguments were far less convincing. Rehnquist wrote that flag-burning is "the equivalent of an inarticulate grunt or roar that... is most likely to be indulged in not to express any particular idea but to antagonize others."

But if speech is to be protected only when it is articulate or lucid, then what is to be done about "USA all the way!" or the right to boo the Dodgers — the right for which American GIs were supposedly fighting in World War II?

He also argued that democratic societies may "legislate against conduct that is regarded as evil and profoundly offensive to a majority of people — whether it be murder, embezzlement, pollution or flag-burning."

The difference, of course, is that murder, embezzlement and pollution all involve conduct that tangibly damages another; flag-burning is much closer to the "intentional infliction of emotional distress" that the First Amendment, according to a unanimous court, is supposed to protect.

Stevens, for his part, compared flag-burning to "graffiti on the Washington Monument." But that conduct would be punishable because it defaced a monument — whether the graffiti artist wrote "Down with America" or "I love America."

What the dissenting opinions reflected — with extraordinary passion — is that flag-burning is designed to make most American furious, to offend us. Just so; and the fact that our system permits the desecration of the symbol of our land is one reason why that symbol is to be treasured.

Leonard...
 His spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, underlined that idea Wednesday, saying, "The president does not believe this amendment would cause an unraveling of the Constitution."
 Burton Yale Pines of the Heritage Foundation supported Bush, saying, "This is no frivolous exercise, no slippery slope down which a host of democratic guarantees may slide. The amending process would permit a national debate and referendum on the flag."
 But the ACLU's Glasser disagrees.

"I think it's impossible to draft limiting language," he said. "Would it say flag-burning or flag desecration? Would desecration include wearing the flag, or superimposing a dove on it, or failing to salute it?"
 Flag amendments already pending in Congress generally would give the federal government and the states authority to prohibit desecration of the flag and to impose criminal penalties for such actions.
 One introduced by Sen. Strom Thurmond, ranking Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee, does not mention criminal penalties, but says:

"The Congress of the United States and the states have the power to prohibit the desecrating, mutilating, defacing, defiling or burning of the flag of the United States."
 Amending the Constitution is no easy matter. An amendment beginning in Congress must be approved by two-thirds of the House and Senate and by 38 state legislatures.
 The constitutional right to burn the American flag, as seen by the court, is not absolute. It does not protect those who burn someone else's flag.

big role in politics.
 Advocates of campaign reform were complimentary of the president's efforts but said he was not going far enough to make an impact.
 For instance, he was expected to call for full disclosure of soft-money, a term used to describe funds that are raised outside the guidelines of federal election law. The frequently cited example is that of corporate and union funds, barred in federal campaigns, that are given to political parties which then help the candidates.

 Ellen Miller, who heads the non-profit Center For Responsive Politics, said disclosing the sources of money will not eliminate special-interest influence. But she said, "The very fact that he is in this ballgame, that he is clearly personally concerned and committed to change and reform in this area is a major step."

 In April, Bush endorsed a 25-percent pay increase for federal judges, which is pending in Congress.
 At a news conference on Tuesday, Bush was asked about his concern that many people have left government service for higher-paying private-sector jobs.

western Corn Belt have not recovered from the drought of 1988, despite recent rains in some areas. Lingering dry conditions early this year particularly hurt producers in winter wheat-growing states, which range from Washington to Ohio and Texas to Montana.
 Nationwide, the winter wheat crop is projected to be the smallest since 1978. In Kansas, traditionally the nation's leading wheat producer, forecasters say this year's harvest will be more than a third smaller than last year.

 Key provisions of the House relief package would:
 • Make farmers eligible for assistance if they suffer losses of more than 35 percent from a weather-related disaster.

 • Cap benefits at $100,000 for each producer and prohibit payments to those with $2 million or more in gross farm revenues.

middle-school plan is implemented in Iowa City.
 "Middle schools give teachers total flexibility in terms of working with students as individuals as well as with groups — they can rearrange groups of students to meet the needs of the kids," Ferguson said.
 Although a proposal for the plan has not yet been drawn up, Ferguson said the committee has made recommendations to the board of directors to change the shape of Iowa City's junior highs.
 The middle-school program would consolidate groups of students and teachers — with about 100 students and 4 to 6 teachers working together for an entire year — and do away with departmentalization.
 "You really have two separate schools in the same school," Ferguson said. "Part (of the reason the committee is endorsing the middle-school program) is that because of the more personalized approach you can help prevent dropout by addressing their needs."

 Another part of the middle-school plan would be a teacher-adviser program to help each student on an individual basis with both academic and social problems.
 The recommendations have been met with much support from both the community and the school board.
 "I think there's a strong chance it (the middle-school plan) will eventually be implemented," said Connie Champron, school board president. "I think it's a really positive way to teach kids. It does allow for some flexibility with the kids, and the scheduling does have a lot of behavior modifications that allow kids to learn better because it allows them to be themselves."

 A report released by the Carnegie Corporation last week also supported the committee's findings about middle schools, saying junior high schools were too impersonal.
 Ferguson, who will present a report to the board next month about the cost of implementation, said there are no plans yet for when the program would go into effect. He said the committee is asking the school board to endorse the middle-school plan and make a commitment for an in-depth study in the future.

Grinnell enhances computers with fiber-optic network lines

GRINNELL, Iowa (AP)—Grinnell College's move to fiber-optic cable to improve and expand its computer network has its pluses and minuses, the school's director of computer services says.
 "Students won't have to run down to the library as much. Of course, they might not meet as many dates that way either," Director Bill Francis joked Wednesday.
 Crews from Digital Equipment Corp. arrived on the 1,270-student campus this week to begin installing about 4,000 feet of fiber-optic cable to link the library and several classroom building computers with the Noyce Computer Center, named after Robert Noyce, a Grinnell graduate and co-inventor of the integrated circuit that transformed the computer industry.
 That $130,000 project and the next phase, linking computers in the residence halls and administrative offices, will allow students and administrators to retrieve much more data in a fraction of the time.
 Francis said it also will move the college away from a centralized computing environment to a more distributed one.
 "It moves us away from 'dumb terminals' and toward a more integrated, capable system," Francis said.
 The entire project will cost about $700,000 when it's finished in about two years, but it will increase Grinnell's data communication capability one-thousandfold from its "slow speed" of 10,000 bits per second to a high speed of ten million bits per second, Francis said.

 At 10,000 bits per second, a person can actually read the incoming data as it scrolls up onto the screen, "but at ten million bits, forget it. It's there instantaneously like that," he said, snapping his fingers.
 The fiber-optic cable and equipment being installed by Digital is compatible with the emerging standard, the Fiber Distributed Data Interface, Francis said. FDDI is a fiber-optic cable that can be updated to the ultra-high speed of one-hundred million bits without additional work.
 "We decided that if we were going to do it, let's do it now so that we'll be hooked up" for FDDI, Francis said.
 There are several other advantages of fiber-optic cable, as opposed to traditional coaxial cable, he said.
 For instance, the noise level of fiber-optic cable is one-millionth of that of coaxial cable, it's difficult to wire tap and it's impervious to lightning strikes, Francis said.
 With the FDDI system, transmissions can be looped around in the opposite direction if the line is cut accidentally, he said.

 Grinnell, which has about 500 Macintosh, IBM and other computers on campus, needs to connect a new electronic card-catalog at the college library with workstations and microcomputers across campus. That was one reason the school decided to go ahead with the fiber-optic project, Francis said.
 Once that network is established, students, faculty and administrators — using a computer — will be able to determine if the library carries a particular book or periodical, he said.
 Another impetus for the project is to connect the growing number of microcomputers and computer workstations on campus, including up to 80 planned for Alumni Recitation Hall.
 Francis said FDDI systems have either been installed or are being installed at several larger colleges across the nation — Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Carnegie Mellon, Stanford — but no other small liberal-arts colleges have systems that can be upgraded to the FDDI level.
 Iowa State University has high-speed connections to several buildings on campus, and the computing center at ISU plans to have a campus-wide high-speed network as well as experiment with FDDI.

reception scheduled to be held at the American Embassy. According to eyewitness accounts, ... Bascombe ... burst into the room, fired several shots, critically wounding ... Barrow and ... Searles.
 "John Butler made a move to subdue the assailant, who then shot Mr. Butler point-blank before fleeing the room.
 "Mr. Butler apparently was killed instantly.
 "We ... can't speculate on ... (Bascombe's) motives but we have no indication that Mr. Butler was a deliberate target of the killer. This does not appear to have been an act of political terrorism."

According to Xavier, Bascombe fired first at Barrow, hitting him in the thigh, and then at Searles, hitting him in both legs.
 Xavier said Butler was shot fatally in the stomach. He said Sullivan was not hurt.
 Harter said the California-born Butler had been assigned in Grenada as political officer since the summer of 1988.
 Butler joined the foreign service in 1980 and served in the Dominican Republic and Costa Rica, Harter said. Butler was a graduate of the University of San Diego and had a graduate degree from San Diego State. He leaves his wife and a stepchild, both of whom were in Grenada.

 After the attack, Bascombe reportedly walked onto the veranda of the police station, threw his revolver and police cap into the yard below, then put his hands above his head and ran down the hill, Xavier said.
 One witness said, however, that Bascombe was apprehended by police in the station yard and dragged to a police building. A doctor who examined Bascombe said he found him handcuffed, lying on the floor and bleeding from a facial wound, Xavier said.
 Harter said the department had no details of how Bascombe was killed.

Jewish-Arab couple struggles for quiet life

RISHON LETZION, Israel (AP) — As Palestinian rioters and Israeli troops battle in the occupied territories, a young Arab refugee and an Orthodox Jewish woman have done what is almost unthinkable in Israel: They married.

Ignoring their families' outrage and the war that separates their people, Zaki el-Amoudi and Nurit Yehuda signed a marriage contract on a parked car in front of Nurit's aunt's apartment last year.

Since then, Nurit's family has abducted her several times — and once sent her to the United States — and Jewish extremists have kidnapped the couple's baby daughter.

Only intervention by Israeli police and the FBI reunited the couple and their daughter. A restraining order banning Nurit's family from approaching their home has given the Palestinian "Romeo" and Israeli "Juliet" a semblance of quiet.

Zaki said his story of love conquering hate should be a message to the Israeli and Palestinian people.

"My daughter was born in the middle of a war," said Zaki, sitting in his small, suburban apartment near Tel Aviv. "It shows how much we need real peace."

Zaki, 25, and Nurit, 24, met four years ago when they worked at a chocolate factory near Tel Aviv.

"I invited her for a cup of coffee, but she refused," Zaki said, laughing.

He pursued the shy, quiet Nurit, and after two months she agreed to meet him after work in a park.

For more than a year, they met clandestinely, until Nurit's parents discovered their daughter was seeing a Palestinian from work.

Zaki el Amoudi looks on as his wife, Nurit Yehuda, right, holds their 5½-month-old baby daughter Lina at their apartment near Tel Aviv. Zaki, an Arab refugee, and Nurit, an orthodox Jewish woman, ignored their families' outrage and married.

Nurit said when she returned from a meeting with Zaki, "My mother began shouting at me and Moshe (her elder brother) slapped me in the face and shouted 'From tomorrow on, you're not going to work!'"

Zaki said when his family found out about his Jewish girlfriend, they barged into his apartment. "They wanted to break my legs and take me home," he said.

Nurit's family forced her to quit her job, but the lovers managed to meet secretly for two more years.

Then "we got the idea that if she was pregnant, her family would have to accept us," Zaki said. "But things became even worse."

When Nurit's parents found out she was pregnant, they took her and hid her in her aunt's home north of Tel Aviv. Zaki found her and rushed to the house with a marriage contract, which the two lovers signed on the parked car.

Nurit's parents sent her to Baltimore, where they had hoped she would have an abortion. But doctors refused to perform one when they discovered she was in her seventh month of pregnancy.

"They thought that if we were apart our love would die, and the baby would be unnecessary," said Nurit.

When Zaki learned that Nurit was in Baltimore, he called an Israeli lawyer who contacted the FBI. He said the FBI forced the Orthodox Jewish family that was holding Nurit to allow her to return to Israel.

Zaki and Nurit then moved to Khan Yunis, a town in the occupied Gaza Strip, to live with his family, which had become reconciled to the idea of an Israeli-Arab marriage.

Nurit went into labor late one night when Gaza was under a military curfew.

"I grabbed my brother and told him the pains had started and we had to go," Zaki recalled.

He and his brother, Samir, took Nurit to a hospital, but when Zaki returned home he was stopped by soldiers at an army checkpoint.

"I told them that my wife was pregnant, but I certainly didn't tell them she was Jewish," he said.

The soldiers didn't listen and ordered Zaki to clear a roadblock set up by Palestinian protesters. That's where he was when his daughter, Lina, was born.

When the couple returned to Tel Aviv a month later, Nurit's family again abducted their daughter along with the infant.

"I called the aunt and she said, 'We have Nurit, we have the baby. Go to Gaza, go to hell,'" Zaki said.

Zaki took the case to court in April and won custody of his child. But the family again seized Nurit, and Jewish extremists kidnapped the two-month-old girl and gave her to Jewish settlers in the occupied West Bank.

Troops kill Palestinian radical; Bomb wounds 4 near Tel Aviv

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli troops Wednesday shot and killed a Palestinian radical who kidnapped an American relief worker last week, the army said.

Earlier, a bomb wounded three Israelis and an Arab in a crowded, open-air market in the Israeli town of Ramle, and vengeful Israelis stabbed two Arabs, police said. Paramilitary police rushed to the town near Tel Aviv to prevent further violence against Arabs.

The dead Palestinian radical, Mohammed Abu Nasr, was identified as leader of a three-man gang that abducted Chris George of Montclair, N.J., on June 22.

Israel television and Arab reports said Nasr was in a taxi he had hijacked when soldiers shot him. He was carrying a pistol and two clips of bullets, said an army statement that gave no details of the shooting.

George was freed unharmed after a day when he agreed to carry a letter from Nasr pleading with President George Bush to recognize Palestinian rights.

The army said Nasr is suspected of two other Gaza Strip attacks this month.

Jiang vows 'no mercy' to dissenters

BEIJING (AP) — China's new Communist Party chief said Wednesday that the government would show no mercy to leaders of the pro-democracy movement.

Chinese embassies in more than 20 countries said their ambassadors were being recalled to Beijing, and a diplomatic source said they were to meet to discuss the military crackdown on the movement for a freer society.

Party General Secretary Jiang Zemin said the "work of quelling the counterrevolutionary rebellion and putting an end to the turmoil must be firmly carried on."

"We should thoroughly expose and mete out according to law, timely and severe punishments to the plotters, organizers and behind-the-scenes commanders," the official Xinhua News Agency quoted him as saying in his first public comments since being named party chief Saturday.

"For them, an iota of forgiveness should not be given," Jiang added.

His comments were in line with his reputation as a political hardliner.

As party boss in Shanghai, China's largest city, he took a strong stand against political dissent and press freedom that went beyond limits acceptable to the party.

Jiang, 62, replaced party chief Zhao Ziyang, who was stripped of his party posts for expressing sympathy for the student-led pro-democracy movement.

U.S. defector committed suicide

MOSCOW (AP) — A former U.S. Navy intelligence analyst who spied for the Soviet Union cracked under the pressure of his work before he committed suicide, the head of the KGB said Wednesday.

Defector Glenn Michael Souther killed himself June 22 at age 32, according to Soviet officials.

"His nervous system could not stand the pressure," said Gen. Vladimir Kryuchkov.

After his obituary in the Soviet military newspaper Red Star listed his name as Mikhail Orlov, speculation arose that Souther had been a Soviet mole, but Kryuchkov discounted that, saying he was a native-born American.

Souther never admitted spying. He had been under investigation by the FBI when he disappeared in 1986 from his job as a civilian intelligence specialist in the Navy's 2nd Fleet headquarters in Norfolk, Va.

"They used him like a spider playing with a moth, and when they were going to finish with him, they finished with him." — said Barbara Fahey, an acquaintance of U.S. defector Glenn Michael Souther.

His obituary Tuesday in Red Star, an illustrated article on him Wednesday in the government newspaper Izvestia, and Kryuchkov's comments amounted to unusual publicity for any KGB officer and a rare Soviet admission of spying.

But Kryuchkov shrugged off the disclosures, saying, "You have spies, we have spies."

Soviet reports on Souther's death said he was driven to betray his country because of a fear of nuclear war and a growing interest in Soviet culture.

His nerves were a problem even in the "several years" he spied before defecting in 1986, Kryuchkov told reporters outside the meeting hall of the Soviet legislature.

"He long ago started to show a nervous state of mind. He was a gifted, emotional, caring, sensitive person. He was easily hurt," the KGB chief said.

Kryuchkov would not say how Souther took his life, but he said that "the motive was not political."

Larger parties can't agree in Greece

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — For the first time in their 71-year history, Greece's communists were given a chance Wednesday to form a government after the socialists and conservatives failed to do so.

The Coalition of the Left and Progress seemed set on using its three-day mandate to discuss possibilities of a "national unity government." But efforts to form an all-party government were hampered by the two larger parties' insistence on leading it.

National elections June 18 failed to produce a winner. The Coalition, an anti-American grouping of the Greek Communist Party and the Eurocommunist Greek Left, emerged as the power broker with 28 seats in the 300-seat unicameral Parliament.

The conservative New Democracy Party won 145 seats. The Panhellenic Socialist Movement, or PASOK, came in second with 125 seats, ending eight years of socialist rule.

Coalition leader Harilaos Florakis has been general secretary of the Communist Party since 1974, when it was legalized after the fall of the military dictatorship. It was founded in 1918.

The Coalition rejected a joint-rule proposal by PASOK leader Andreas Papandreu, the hospitalized caretaker premier, whose mandate to form a government ended Tuesday night. Before that, the conservatives had tried to form a government.

Florakis said his party proposed a government of "widespread acceptance" that would not be led by Papandreu or New Democracy leader Constantine Mitsotakis.

Mitsotakis ruled out formation of a government that would not be headed by himself.

"How is it possible for the 13 percent of the Greek people to impose their will on the 44 percent?" Mitsotakis said.

New Democracy won 44 percent of the vote, PASOK 39 and the Coalition 13 percent.

If the Coalition cannot form a government by Friday, President Christos Sartzetakis will ask the three major parties to try to set aside their differences and form a coalition. If that fails, the president will call early elections under a caretaker administration.

Soviet magazine prints attack on Lenin

MOSCOW — Through all the twists of glasnost, one figure in Soviet history has stood above criticism: Vladimir Ilych Lenin. But an official magazine now has breached that taboo with a vehement attack on the man who led the communists to power in Russia.

"Lenin — all victories of the party and the state are linked with the name of Lenin," wrote Vasily Grossman in a work published posthumously in the June issue of the Otkrytyy literary magazine. "But all cruelty committed in the country has become the tragic legacy of Vladimir Ilych."

In printing the Ukrainian-born writer's short novel "Forever Flowing" in the Soviet Union for the first time, the monthly implicitly questions President Mikhail Gorbachev's often-stated view that the nation needs only to shake off the totalitarian heritage of Stalinism and return to true Leninist ways to construct a democracy in which the liberty of each citizen is respected.

Abortion ruling may come down soon

WASHINGTON — The latest word on abortion law, expected in a Missouri case that has become the most closely watched U.S. Supreme Court controversy of the decade, may be announced Thursday.

And maybe not. The case, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, has captured enormous attention because the justices are being asked to use it to overturn the court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion.

It is one of five cases in which decisions are pending, and some word must come in each before the 1988-89 term concludes.

The court last week announced it would release decisions Monday and Thursday this week. The assumption, and probably still the best bet, was that today would be the court's last day on the bench.

But there is no guarantee. When the justices take the bench at 10 a.m. EDT today, they might not have all five decisions.

Court officials could announce that some decisions will be released later. That could delay announcement of a decision until sometime in 1990.

Panel rejects more cuts in bomber funds

WASHINGTON — The House Armed Services Committee, going along with President George Bush, rejected amendments Wednesday that would have cut deeper into money for the B-2 stealth bomber in order to buy a Marine aircraft the administration wants to cancel.

The panel, in its second day of drafting a $295 billion military budget, neared a vote on whether to accept Defense Secretary Dick Cheney's $64 billion procurement portion without any additions or deletions.

First, it beat back efforts to provide money, at the expense of the stealth bomber, for buying the V-22 Osprey, a revolutionary aircraft that would take off like a helicopter but fly like an airplane.

One day earlier, the radar-evading B-2 took a slight hit as lawmakers accepted a $351 million reduction in research and development money for it in order to provide R&D money for the Osprey.

Court decision a Mickey Mouse ruling

TRENTON, N.J. — A lawsuit in which a boy accuses Mickey Mouse of assaulting him at Walt Disney World cannot be tried in the youngster's home state, an appeals court ruled Wednesday.

The decision upheld a Morris County trial court's ruling against Evan Makopoulos and his mother, Paula, of Parsippany. They claimed they should be allowed to sue in New Jersey because of the difficulty of attending a trial in Florida, where Disney World is located.

Anthony Macri, a lawyer for the Makopoulos family, argued that Disney World does business in New Jersey because it advertises heavily in the state to draw visitors.

Spill results in captain's federal arrest

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The captain of a Greek tanker that spilled 420,000 gallons of heating oil into Narragansett Bay was arrested and charged Wednesday with violating the federal Clean Water Act and Refuse Act.

The captain, Iakovas Georgudis, 43, surrendered and was charged promptly in federal court in Providence to ensure that he would remain in this country, said U.S. Attorney Lincoln Almond.

Each of the two criminal counts carries up to a year in prison and $200,000 fine or double the actual damages, which the Coast Guard has estimated at $1.6 million.

The Clean Water Act prohibits the negligent discharge of pollutants; the Refuse Act prohibits unlawfully discharging refuse into navigable water without a permit.

In a hearing on a second spill on the Delaware River, the pilot and captain of a Uruguayan tanker testified that the ship's anchor was dropped too soon, causing the vessel to run aground and leak more than 310,000 gallons of oil.

Painstaking cleanup continued on those spills, while workers using hand-held skimmers were close to finishing the cleanup of 250,000 gallons of crude spilled when a third tanker collided with a barge in Texas, soiling a mile-long stretch of Galveston Bay shoreline.

All three spills occurred within hours of each other over the weekend.

In Rhode Island, U.S. Magistrate Jacob Hagopian set bail for Georgudis at $50,000 and ordered the captain to surrender his passport and remain on the ship until bail is paid.

Georgudis also was subpoenaed to appear at a statewide grand jury Wednesday that is investigating possible violations of state pollution laws and a statute that requires ships within Narragansett Bay to have harbor pilots on board, but he did not testify, said State Atty. Gen. James O'Neil.

"His attorney indicated he was going to exercise his privilege" against self-incrimination, O'Neil said. Georgudis declined to answer questions as he ran into the courthouse followed by his attorney, Peter DiBiase.

In interviews with Coast Guard officials and the governor after the spill, Georgudis admitted he made a mistake in not taking on a pilot to escort the vessel into the harbor.

At the Philadelphia hearing into the Delaware River spill, pilot Robert Anderson said the transit of the 749-foot-long Presidente Rivera was normal, and he started slowing down more than 10 miles below his destination, the Sun Marketing and Refining Co. refinery in Marcus Hook, Pa. He said he told the captain to prepare for anchoring.

Trial promised for contempt case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Wednesday overwhelmingly passed a bill aimed at freeing a woman jailed nearly two years by a judge for refusing to reveal the whereabouts of her daughter in a child-custody case.

The bill would require prosecutors in the District of Columbia to release or to file criminal contempt charges — guaranteeing a trial and the possibility of bail — against anyone who had been held more than 12 months for civil contempt of court.

The measure, which passed by a 376-34 margin, is designed to apply retroactively to the case of Elizabeth Morgan, a local plastic surgeon.

She was jailed for civil contempt in August 1987 after refusing to produce her daughter Hilary for court-ordered visits with Eric Foretech, her ex-husband and the girl's father.

Morgan hid Hilary after alleging that Foretech had sexually abused the 6-year-old girl; Foretech has repeatedly denied those charges.

Before the legislation could take effect, the Senate would have to act as well. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, has introduced a similar bill, but it has not yet been debated.

Congress has review power over all District of Columbia laws, but it rarely uses its right to intervene in the city's court system.

Morgan's case now stands before the city's appeals court, which is reviewing D.C. Superior Court Judge Herbert Dixon's May 11 decision to keep her behind bars until she reveals where her daughter is.

The case has gained national attention as women's rights groups and organizations concerned with child abuse have rallied to Morgan's defense. Foretech has been backed by several fathers' groups.

The Associated Press
Elizabeth Morgan has spent nearly two years in a Washington, D.C., jail cell for refusing to reveal the whereabouts of her daughter in a child-custody case.

"The controversy (involving Morgan) is not the issue we're addressing . . . we're addressing a flaw in the criminal justice system," the bill's sponsor, Rep. Frank Wolf, R-Va., said during floor debate. "The flaw is that anyone — including Dr. Morgan — can remain behind bars indefinitely on civil contempt charges."

Striking miners ignore court order

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Gunshots rang out Wednesday in the coal fields of Virginia and West Virginia, ending a lull in wildcat walkouts by at least 37,000 miners in seven states who ignored a federal judge's order to refrain from strike activities.

Hundreds of United Mine Workers members from six states clogged Virginia roads used by coal trucks for Pittston Coal Group Inc., the company at the heart of the wildcat sympathy strikes.

Four coal trucks were peppered with gunfire in West Virginia and Virginia, police said. No injuries were reported and no arrests were made.

Gov. Gaston Caperton, who has tried to bring Pittston and the UMW together for talks, reiterated that state police would investigate all reported violence and make arrests when possible. "The use of criminal activity by either side of the conflict in our coal field is an intolerable response to labor-management problems," he said.

At least 37,000 union miners remained on strike Wednesday. An additional 6,000 had been on strike, but it was unclear if they had returned to work or were on vacation. The miners' staggered two-week vacation periods began this week.

The wildcat walkouts are in support of 1,900 UMW members who are on strike against Pittston in West Virginia, Virginia and Kentucky in a contract dispute. At one point, the wildcat walkouts included 46,000 miners in Missouri, West Virginia, Alabama, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Virginia. The miners in Missouri and Virginia have gone back to work.

The UMW said it would encourage the wildcat strikers to comply with U.S. District Judge Dennis Knapp's order to refrain from strike activities.

Knapp said the wildcat strikes break National Labor Relations Act guidelines against secondary strikes, and he ordered UMW officials to report to the NLRB within 10 days on what steps they have taken to meet the court order.

The UMW says it is not responsible for the wildcat strikes, which violate the contract the union signed in February 1988 with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association. The BCOA represents most major coal operators but not Pittston.

North juror admits to misinformation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A juror in the Oliver North trial testified Wednesday that she gave incorrect background information to the court because she forgot that her brother had been sent to prison for armed robbery.

Tara Leigh King, who was on the panel that convicted North on three Iran-Contra charges last month, had said "no" when asked on a jury selection form whether "you or any member of your immediate family" had been involved in any court proceeding or investigation.

"When I filled this out, I had forgotten about my brother," King said during a 90-minute hearing.

North's lawyers had asked for a hearing, saying her misstatement "raises serious questions about juror bias and impartiality, and suggests the defendant was deprived of his right to a fair trial by peremptory and causal challenges in an informal manner."

North, a former aide on the National Security Council, was at the defense table with four other lawyers but took no part in the proceeding. U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell said he will today whether the jury was tainted by the evidence. His most serious remedy would be to grant a mistrial.

North's sentencing had been set for June 23 but was postponed to July 5 when the juror problem arose. She faces a maximum prison time of 10 years for lying and abetting in obstruction of Congress, destroying or mutilating official documents and accepting a gratuity.

King said when she filled out the questionnaire on June 1, she also had not remembered being questioned by detectives, receiving a subpoena, appearing before the grand jury and about her mother telling her that her brother was in prison.

"I had forgotten about it after I shed tears," she said. "It stuck with me, but not until the point he got out."

King's brother, Samuel King, 51, was in prison from 1987 to mid-1988 for armed robbery.

The questioning it was brought out that Samuel and Tara both lived at home. Tara King said she was a mother of 15 children, eight boys and seven girls. "It was a little embarrassing to talk about this?" she said.

Brendan Sullivan, North's lawyer, said King explained that she forgot about Samuel's arrest sometime in 1986. "It wasn't a nice thing to say," she said, adding, "I had a job to go to, and let it tear me down. I had to live my life."

Syd Straw, Chris Isaak can really sing

'Shangri-La - A Kinks Tribute' needs a little something

VATICAN CITY, West Virginia — Syd Straw — "Surprise" — Virgin

INNOCENT: The recent emergence of the female "folk" pop singer has predictably seen the better artists (Lucinda Williams, Sam Phillips) go virtually unnoticed by the masses, while the mediocre (Natalie Merchant) and the truly awful (Indigo Girls, Edie Brickell) become beloved millionaires. For this reason, it will be interesting to see what happens to Syd Straw's LP "Surprise," since it embodies elements from all of the musicians mentioned above.

The album opens promisingly enough with a cover of the dB's classic "Think Too Hard," but then immediately declines into a song that sounds as if it fell off the "Blind Man's Zoo" bandwagon. The rest of the side struggles with mediocre commerciality, uninspired songs with safe-as-milk production. (Are you listening, Edie Brickell?) The side ends with an interesting rendition of Stephen Foster's "Hard Times," which is impressive if only for the musicians involved — John Doe, Ry Cooder, Jim Keltner and Van Dyke Parks.

The second half of this LP achieves the greatness the pop realm has expected from Syd Straw since first hearing her on the second Golden Palominos record. The duet with the ostensibly omnipresent Michael Stipe, "Future 40's (String of Pearls)" is a wry comment on our now-retro society: "This isn't the way I dreamed it would be someday (this is what I've settled for)." It is here that Straw resembles fellow Texan Lucinda Williams the most; her words are simple and direct, not steeped in sophomoric poetry (N. Merchant); and the production is modest enough to allow her twangy voice to shine.

The only song that is overtly "literary" is "Sphinx," a humorous tale about the anguish of love, and the obvious incessant rhymes are all tongue-in-cheek. This song is one of the better pop songs of the year, proving that Straw can write a unique and intelligent song when she puts her mind to it; now if she would only leave the mainstream sensibilities to those artists beneath her. Bands like the Maniacs, the New Bohemians, etc., will always clutter our tired airwaves; unfortunately, we have to go out and search for music made by the likes of Syd Straw.

An epigraph to one of the songs reads: "A trip around my world in popera form," and by God, she almost got it right.

Chris Isaak — "Heart Shaped World" — Reprise

PIUS: It's hard to believe a kid as good-looking and talented as Chris Isaak would have trouble finding dates or would constantly be getting his heart broken by long-legged blonds and sable-haired Mexican beauties. But when he croons, "I wish I could make you cry like I do," on his new record, I do believe him.

Because if Chris Isaak is cursed with the looks that get most artists taken lightly, he is also blessed with undeniable talent as a songwriter, interpreter of tradition and — evidenced now more than ever — a singer.

On "Heart Shaped World," for the first time in his promising career, everything clicks into place, from the Tex-Mex shuffle of "I'm Not Waiting" through the Orbison-saturated "Wicked Game" to the straight rock 'n' roll of "Wrong to Love You." Isaak infuses enough haunting melody, "Love Is Strange" lyricism and vocal panache into the traditional arrangements to strike a contemporary blow to the heart with which you'll want to weep along.

Various Artists — "Shangri-La — A Kinks Tribute" — Communion

INNOCENT: When I was in Pope Training School I never put much stock in the writings of S. Freud; but after hearing the confessions of sinners day in and day out, I have come to realize that it's true most posters want to kill their fathers and have sex with their mothers.

"Shangri-La," a tribute to the Kinks, is further evidence of this pop Oedipus complex.

More bands have begged, borrowed or stolen from the Kinks than any other — even the Beatles and the Stones nicked off the brothers Davies — so a tribute album is only natural. Unfortunately, "Shangri-La" is rife with as much attempted trashing as it is tribute. The album is filled entirely with up-and-coming British indie bands, some of whom love their musical Mother Dave, and others who want to kill Father Ray.

The first half of "Shangri-La" is truly a tribute; bands perform the songs with genuine appreciation for the music. But once the Wolfhounds plod (predictably off-key) through "I'm Not Like Everybody Else," it is difficult to discern whether or not their hearts or heads are in the song at all. They lack the desire to either do a close reading of the song or a sloppy, raucous trashing; instead, the song makes the Wolfhounds sound like tired old stiffies, not the Kinks.

The band CUD comes off the worst, with their stupid selection of "Lola." The problem with the bands who try and kill off the songs is that they don't have an interesting or powerful voice of their own that can suppress or erase the echoes of the original songs. Then again, the inability to eclipse the irrepressible Kinks might be the highest tribute possible.

PIUS: The Kinks do and don't deserve this record. As probably the world's greatest rock 'n' roll band, they deserve the honor, notoriety and publicity of such a tribute. As certainly the world's most misunderstood band, and victims of the most uniformly dire portfolio of covers, the Kinks don't need an entire record consisting of more of the same. Especially one that includes such flaccidly tired selections as "I'm Not Like Everybody Else," "Tired of Waiting" and "She's Got Everything." It's not that the right people haven't tried covering the Kinks. Such great bands as Yo La Tengo ("Big Sky"), Hugo Largo ("Fancy") and the Jam (a woefully inept reading of "David Watts") have tried to crack Ray Davies' leering cynic/ wide-eyed romantic schizophrenia that made the Kinks such a dangerous act. Only Chrissie Hynde, the mother of one of Ray's children, has been able to shoot such complexity into his compositions ("I Go to Sleep," and the semi-hit "Stop Your Sobbing").

As Ray himself once said, "No one can penetrate me."

With little exception, the British indie bands that make up "Shangri-La" haven't really tried to get to the heart of what made the Kinks great, and that's why this record is not only bad, but infuriating. Sure, Ray Davies wrote "Big Sky," but he's also the same man who wrote "God's Children."

Here, we get the bittersweet defeat of "See My Friends" without the bittersweet triumph of a "Two Sisters." We have the societal flip-off of "I'm Not Like Everybody Else" but none of the contentment of an "Autumn Almanac." Worse, there is none of the ambiguity of a "Days," "This is Where I Belong" or even a "Sunny Afternoon" in which the Kinks found themselves making the most sense, and we find no trace of the brave face that took what it could get and forsook everything on which every other rock band fed.

Of course, most of this could be forgiven if the music here were played with anything but a sly wink (there was probably more than one limp wrist in the studio) and the pretense of being HIP, but with the lone exception of a ripping and remarkably musical Mock Turtles rendition of "Big Sky," this album has all the inspiration of another cover of "Johnny B. Goode."

I don't know, maybe I'm expecting too much. This is a tribute, not a retrospective. But I swear to God, the Kinks deserve better than this!

The Popes of Pop are Gregory "Innocent" Galloway and John "Pius" Shipley.

'Grayer, quieter' Who still packs a punch

NEW YORK (AP)—Meet the new Who, a little older, grayer and quieter, but still able to deliver the goods with a punch.

Before a packed house Tuesday night at Radio City Music Hall, the Who played virtually its entire 1969 "Tommy" rock opera in a benefit for autistic and abused children.

It was a different Who, however, with a muted Pete Townshend mostly playing acoustic guitar because of severe hearing problems from years of playing loud electric guitar. He had help on lead guitar from Steve Bolton, who added a 1980s flavor to the band's '60s standards.

John Entwistle's superb bass at times seemed to overpower the other band members, but there was added support from a five-member horn section, three backup singers, drummer Simon Phillips and percussionist Jodi Linscott. Roger Daltrey and Townshend were both in fine voice.

The Who raced through an hour-long, uninterrupted "Tommy," bringing the audience to its feet with "Pinball Wizard," "I'm Free" and "We're Not Gonna Take It."

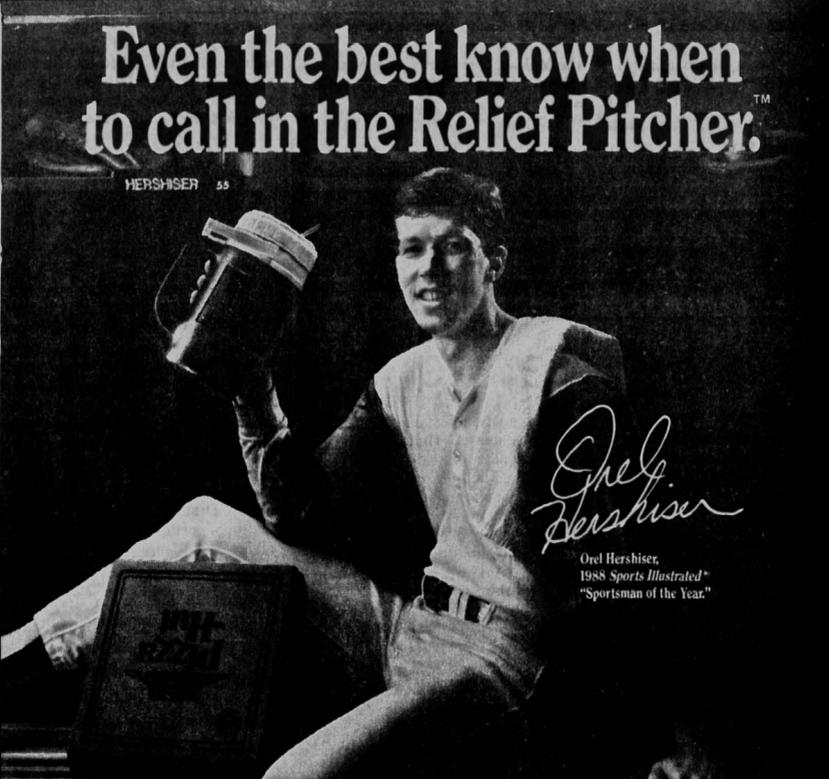

Townshend, who wrote "Tommy," went through as many guitars as he did in the old days, but this time they all went off stage in one piece. One of Daltrey's two tambourines was the only casualty.

The rock opera, with its muddled storyline about a deaf, dumb and blind kid who's cured and becomes a rock celebrity, was first performed in London in 1969. It was made into a movie by Ken Russell in 1975, starring Daltrey, Ann-Margret, Oliver Reed, Eric Clapton, Keith Moon and Elton John as the Pinball Wizard. The Royal Canadian Ballet did its own version, and the London Symphony Orchestra did a recording.

"Tommy" has a rather mystical quality with its songs about pinball, mobs and spiritualism.

Townshend once joked about "Tommy," saying rock critics and many fans took it seriously but that it was really just light entertainment.

Mack arrested for cocaine possession

CLEVELAND (AP) — Kevin Mack, running back for the Cleveland Browns, was arrested Wednesday after police found him with cocaine, authorities said.
Police were waiting to charge Mack, who was being held in the city jail after he was found with an unspecified amount of cocaine, said Detective Paul Payne of the Cleveland Police Department.
"He was arrested for investigation on violation of state drug law," Payne said.
Mack was arrested along with two others about 6 p.m., Payne said.

Bell suspended for bumping umpire

NEW YORK (AP) — Outfielder George Bell of the Toronto Blue Jays has been suspended for the second time this season for bumping an umpire, the American League said Wednesday.
The latest incident, involving umpire Tim Welke during a June 24 game won by Oakland 7-1, resulted in Bell receiving a three-day suspension. The suspension was to have begun Wednesday night, but the league said Bell has appealed, therefore delaying the penalty until a hearing is conducted.
"They gotta realize I'm no one- or two-year player," Bell said. "I've been around five, six, seven years and I don't get no credit. The only credit I get is if I hit a home run to win a game."
"It's obvious they need me in the lineup right now, but if they say I'm guilty I have to serve the three days."

Big Ten dominates NBA Draft

CHICAGO (AP) — The Big Ten, which had the 1989 NCAA champs, also took tops conference honors in the NBA draft.
Seven Big Ten players were taken in Tuesday night's two rounds — topped by forward Glen Rice of national champion Michigan, who was the fourth player selected overall, going to Miami.
Nick Anderson, B.J. Armstrong, Roy Marble and Kenny Battle also went in the first round.

Marble, Armstrong's backcourt mate at Iowa, was taken by Atlanta, and a third Hawkeye player, forward Ed Horton, was chosen by the Washington Bullets.

The Big Ten's Player of the Year, Indiana junior Jay Edwards, had to wait until the second round when he was taken by the Clippers.

Connors

don't care if I win another tournament. I've won enough of them. As long as I enjoy playing the game, I don't need any other reason to play."

Goldie, ranked 47th in the world, had lost his two previous matches against Connors and has never had great success in Grand Slam tournaments. But he made the most of his opportunities Wednesday, breaking Connors twice in the final set.

"I just tried to play my game and fortunately it was good enough," Goldie said. "It's a great thrill for me to win because Connors is still a very good player."

The 33,525 fans who attended Wednesday's rain-delayed matches had a hard time getting to Wimbledon because of a strike by railroad and subway workers. But top-seeded Ivan Lendl and Steffi Graf remained on track by moving into the third round.

Lendl, seeking his first Wimbledon title, dropped the first set before rallying for a 6-7, 6-3, 6-2, 6-2 victory over Sweden's Ronnie Bahm and Graf took just 43 minutes to beat American amateur Kim Kessaris 6-2, 6-1.

French Open champion Arantxa Sanchez won her first match at Wimbledon, beating Jana Pospisilova of Czechoslovakia 6-2, 7-5.

Sanchez, who lost in the first round here the past two years, had a new attitude toward grass after finally winning on the surface.

"I felt it was for, how you say, cows," the 17-year-old Spaniard said. "But now I think different."

The grass wasn't greener for No. 11 seed Brad Gilbert and Helen Kelesi, the 13th women's seed.

In the completion of first-round matches suspended by darkness Tuesday night, Gilbert lost to John Fitzgerald of Australia 6-2, 7-5, 1-6, 3-6, 6-2. Shaun Stafford, who won the NCAA women's singles championship last year at the University of Florida, upset Kelesi 7-6, 7-5 in another first-round match.

"In the past I've always had chances against higher-ranked people and never took advantage of them," said Stafford, ranked 78th in the world. "This is a match when I did take advantage."

Because of a 3½-hour rain delay, several matches were postponed or suspended by darkness.

Two-time men's champion Boris Becker and two women's seeds, No. 6 Helena Sukova and No. 9 Natalia Zvereva, had their second-round matches pushed back a day. In men's play, seventh-seeded Miloslav Mecir was trailing Mark Kratzmann of Australia two sets to one and No. 13 Aaron Krickstein had just saved two match points to even his contest against Javier Frana of Argentina at two sets apiece when play was suspended.

Darkness couldn't save Connors. After winning the second set, he blew three break points in the opening game of the third set and allowed Goldie to hold with a service winner. Connors had another chance to break his 25-year-old opponent in the third game.

Both players held serve until the final game of the set, which Connors lost on a double-fault and two netted forehands.

the crowd.

"I think the people, they like my game," Sanchez said. "They like to go with me."

Sanchez, the No. 7 seed, said her life had changed little since she became the youngest woman to win the French Open. She said she had acquired two dogs and asked for her name to be changed on the women's tour to Sanchez-Vicario.

"Vicario is my mother's name and in Spain, everyone knows me as Sanchez-Vicario," she said. "That's how I would like to be known."

It is also how she is listed in the Wimbledon draw, although officials of the Women's International Tennis Association said they would continue to list her as Sanchez.

The requested name change already has caused problems for Sanchez.

"After the French Open, two people from the newspapers asked me if I got married," she said. "That's what it looks like from the name. But I'm far too young."

Sanchez said the dogs were given to her by her Spanish sponsors and a friend.

"I have wanted a dog for many years but my parents said I traveled too much," Sanchez said. "Now I have two. I hope to take the little one with me to (tournaments in) the States. The other one is too big."

Sanchez said it would take several years to repeat her French Open triumph on Wimbledon's grass.

"I am not a specialist on the surface," Sanchez said. "But I have a lot of time."

many problems for other teams that you must have guys on the floor who can shoot, and B.J. can shoot."

The 23rd choice in the first round was also a former Hawkeye. Career scoring leader (2,116) Roy Marble was nabbed by the Atlanta Hawks.

Marble was in Atlanta Wednesday and carried the same enthusiasm for his upcoming career as his teammate.

"I think the style is exactly what I was looking for," Marble said. "It's ironic because (the Hawks) are one of the teams I wanted."

Atlanta was also drafting for a position player. After Reggie Theus was taken in the expansion draft, the Hawks went in search of a small forward or big guard — positions where Marble has excelled in college.

"First of all, he's coming out of a winning program," Hawks coach Mike Fratello said. "Roy knows what it takes to win. That's really important."

"Tom's (Iowa coach Davis) style of play is very similar to ours. We like to run and Roy is a terrific athlete. Honestly, we were shocked that he was still around when it was our turn to pick."

For Armstrong, Marble and Ed Horton, taken No. 89 by the Washington Bullets, the task is to make their respective clubs.

"B.J. should get a lot of playing time as a rookie," said Armstrong and Horton's agent Arn Tellem. "He will have a chance to start. Likewise, Washington is excited about Ed."

Tellem said contract talks haven't started for either of his clients. He also represents Indianapolis Colts running back Eric Dickerson and Montreal Expos pitcher Mark Langston.

Marble is represented by two camps, sports agent Charles Tucker and the counsel of the Lamont Smith law agency.

Tucker's client includes Lakers guard "Magic" Johnson, prize fighter Tommy Hearns, Theus, Hawks guard Glenn "Doc" Rivers and Minnesota expansion catch David Rivers.

Smith's group represents Detroit running back Barry Sanders, Broncos defender Mark Jackson and NBA all-star Alex English.

"Roy was a great pick for Atlanta," Tucker said. "They expect Roy to have a good chance to start."

Fratello agreed.

"I told Roy that I hope he has the mentality that he won't be a back-up player," Fratello said. "He and Jon Battle will be fighting for the position and Roy will certainly have a as good a chance as any- one."

'Broken Noses' is Weber's Camelot

Film documents boxer's new chance for the big time

Katie Wolfe
The Daily Iowan

Although they might not know it, it'd be hard to find someone who has not seen Bruce Weber's work. A world-renowned photographer, he is also credited with redesigning the role of the artist in advertising. Weber is the photographer behind the Calvin Klein ads (lots of black and white naked bodies) of the last decade.

In 1987, Weber moved his artist's eye to the wide screen with "Broken Noses," a pseudo-documentary of boxer Andy Minsker. But is this really a documentary about boxing? Just barely. Through Weber's direction, "Broken Noses" becomes something very different.

Weber has produced a testament to a contemporary Camelot story. "Broken Noses" is tinged with an aura of melancholy. Against an almost-constant background of vintage jazz, Weber creates a testament to the irony of America's lust for sculptured bodies, male bonding and the American dream.

Filmed mostly in black-and-white, "Broken Noses" has the grainy look of a big coffee-table book. Weber's obsession with jazz permeates every aspect of the film: From his opening characterization of Minsker as "like a young Chet Baker when he was playing trumpet in Rome," to the "How to Speak Hip" lesson recited during the closing credits, the sounds of the jazz age compound the nostalgic feel.

The focus of the film is Andy Minsker, whom Weber met in 1983 at a photo shoot of Olympic hopefuls. Weber and crew fell in love with his charismatic boy-man combination. Minsker appeared to be on the brink of superstardom. But something went wrong. Somehow Minsker was passed over for the Olympic team, and four years later it appears that he has missed his one chance to make it big.

Minsker now runs a boys' boxing club, mostly for troubled teens, in Portland, Ore. "Broken Noses" peripheral interviews with team members complement our understanding of Minsker. The product of an all-too-prevalent childhood — his stepfather beat him so badly that his mother lost custody of him — he has retained the childlike characteristics of a forgiving nature and a short memory of those bad times. Minsker has become for these boys both a big brother and authoritative father figure.

What is most striking about the film is Weber's skill in capturing "real people" on film, and how entertaining reality can be. The combination of Weber's direction and Minsker's ease in front of the camera may have possibly rewritten fate. It now seems almost assured that Andy Minsker has far from missed his chance at the big time.

"Broken Noses" is showing at the Bijou tonight at 7 and tomorrow night at 8:30.

Big Brother Dick will choose for us

Robert Mapplethorpe is an American photographer who produced a significant body of work. He is highly regarded by critics. He is also dead — he died of AIDS this March. The Corcoran Gallery in Washington, D.C., had plans to show an exhibit of his work, which had traversed the country without undue incident. Plans have changed — the show has now been canceled.

We have someone to thank for this, and I'd like to share his views with you. Before I do, one more thing about Mapplethorpe — he was gay. Congressman Dick Arney, R-Texas, is outraged that gay sexuality is the focus for some of the pieces in the exhibit. I repeat, some of the pieces, for Robert Mapplethorpe, like you and I, was aware and expressive of his sexuality, but not nearly so obsessed with it as Dick Arney seems to be.

Well then. Are the representations graphic? Yes. Mapplethorpe was a confident craftsman, a fully aware human being. His work makes constant use of this awareness. When his subject is sexuality, the result is not the work of a gay Norman Rockwell.

But make no mistake: Mapplethorpe's work received the kind of exposure earned only when peers welcome you as the "real thing." The Nation, The New Statesman, The New Republic, Time, Newsweek, — even Life magazine (former home of Norman Rockwell) — displayed his photography. He was no fluke. His career had been gathering national momentum and attention for at least six years.

Arney's gripe is that the Mapplethorpe exhibit was partially funded by a National Endowment for the Arts grant. That means "taxpayers' money" — money he's decided we'd rather see spent on more wholesome enterprises. The congressman says NEA funding of the Mapplethorpe exhibit amounts to governmental "waste, fraud and abuse."

What's really going on here? It's clear. See Dick. Hear Dick speak: "I don't think these things should be decided by some artsy little clique east of the Alleghenies." (The various committees of the NEA responsible for approving grant allocation are diverse in all ways — geographically, racially, and in terms of sexual preference and gender.)

"I'm not threatening anyone's freedom of expression here, I'm just asking that the board show some sensitivity and responsiveness," said Arney.

Airlines showing 'Rain Man' delete plane-crash statistics

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — A crucial scene from the Oscar-winning "Rain Man" has been excised from the version shown by at least 15 major airlines because the scene about aviation safety was considered unfit for passengers.

In the four-minute "Rain Man" sequence, Dustin Hoffman's autistic savant character refuses to board a plane because he has memorized airplane crash statistics.

Pressed by his brother Charlie Babbitt, played by Tom Cruise, Hoffman's Raymond Babbitt panics and starts screaming and thrashing about. "I think it's a key scene to the entire movie. That's why it's in there," Barry Levinson, the film's Academy Award-winning director, said in a telephone interview Tuesday. "It launches their entire odyssey across country — because they couldn't fly."

"Without that scene, it comes down to this: You basically lose an enormous impact of the film. That scene tells you that they, mechanically, are forced to drive across country and, secondly, that Charlie can only push Raymond so far, because he knows what will happen."

Furthermore, the deletion of the scene makes later references to it nonsensical.

"Rain Man" started showing on airplanes in June and is now being screened regularly on 15 carriers, said Don Sathern, supervisor of visual programming for Sony-Trans Com Inc., the nation's largest in-flight movie service.

"Everybody wanted the scene out," he said. "Usually, plane-crash sequences are automatically out."

One airline spokeswoman said it was the sort of scene that typically could make passengers uneasy.

"It's our policy to remove portions of feature films as they relate to violence, nudity, obscenities or anything that could create discomfort for passengers about being on airplanes," Patricia Graham, manager of in-flight programming for United Airlines, said in this week's People magazine.

Levinson said he didn't have the authority to insist that the scene be restored. "We can't do anything about it," he said. Still, he found the editing ridiculous.

"These airlines don't know that supposedly there is a degree of risk?" Levinson asked. "They've never heard of such a thing? We're saying that over the years, planes have crashed. That is a reality of life."

In the airport scene, Charlie, the hustler brother tries to prevail on his autistic sibling to board an airliner. Raymond was adamant.

"Airline travel is very dangerous," "Don't be silly," Charlie snaps. "It's the safest in the world. You're going to love this. Trust me."

Raymond remains steadfast in his travel phobia, citing 30 air crashes in 1987 and 211 fatalities.

One airline is showing "Rain Man" with the scene intact: Qantas, which Raymond singles out for the best safety record.

"Qantas?" Charlie demanded in exasperation.

"Never crashed," Raymond muttered.

Hefner: For whom the wedding bell tolls

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hugh Hefner is taking a bride this weekend, ending the hedonistic fantasy he nourished through Playboy magazine and as pajama-clad lord of the Playboy Mansion and its flocks of world-class women.

"The king of the playboys is succumbing to romance the way the rest of the country is doing. We are out of the era of play sex," observed media psychologist Joyce Brothers. "The one-night stand is over."

The 63-year-old founder of Playboy magazine and 1988 Playmate of the Year Kimberley Conrad, 26, will recite wedding vows Saturday afternoon at the Playboy Mansion in exclusive Holmby Hills. Some 450 guests will then party the night away beneath a huge white tent alongside the mansion's exotic grotto.

The ceremony is off-limits to the news media.

"I dropped the Mapplethorpe art on the floor when I looked at it, and I'm not that easily shocked. My advice to the NEA committee is, if you can't look at it without dropping it, don't fund it."

My advice to Congressman Arney is, if you can't look at a realistic depiction of sexual intercourse without dropping it, you have no business calling yourself an adult, let alone a viable representative in a world where one in ten constituents in your own and every other congressional district is gay or lesbian.

Arney's smug criticism of NEA grant decisions, and his insistence that he or some other easily outraged idiot sit on a committee with artists and critics to help them decide what's decent enough to merit the great boon of being kissed by a little taxpayers' money, mark the onset of encroachments on artistic freedom we were all told could not happen here. To those of you who think I'm exaggerating, my advice is simple: Don't bet your grant money on it.

Arney has the gall to say that artists unwilling to sacrifice freedom of expression shouldn't ask for federal funds. I say that if we make soothing the general public the prime goal of government arts-sponsorship programs, we have no business using the word "art" at all. We should toss it overboard and frankly adopt the only proper name for such a program: The National Endowment for Maintaining Established Cultural Attitudes.

Today's the day of reckoning for the barely talented soap opera crew, as the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, apparently held hostage by an unseen hand, plays host to (trumpet fanfare) "The Daytime Emmy Awards" (NBC at 2:30 p.m.). In the Children's Special category, can "Hey, Benji, Pass Me the Crackpipe, Willy?" upset prohibitive favorite "Runaway Ralph"? In the Animated Program category, does "Those Damn Annoying Smurfs Meet Mr. Steamroller" have a chance against the "New Adventures of Winnie the Pooh"? No doubt about it, it's white-knuckle time as "Jeopardy" faces a stiff challenge from "Wheel of Meat" in the Game/Audience Participation Show category. And they dare call it a vast wasteland!!!

Trump's guests outgrow 'old' yacht

NEW YORK (AP) — Donald Trump, complaining his 292-foot yacht isn't spacious enough for his guests, says he's trading in the Trump Princess for a bigger and, of course, more expensive boat.

Trump told New York Newsday he was looking for "something in excess of 400 feet long, closer to 500 feet." The New York Post reported the same thing, with both estimating the new craft will run Trump about $140 million.

The added space is not needed by him, wife Ivana or their children, Trump said — it's because guests from his Atlantic City casino all want to visit the yacht.

"All of the high rollers in Atlantic City, they love it," he said.

Defending champion Steffi Graf reaches to return a shot from Britain's Julie Salmon during second round action on the Centre Court at Wimbledon Wednesday. Graf easily defeated Salmon 6-1, 6-2.

Upset at Wimbledon
 Goldie hands Connors second-round loss

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Jimmy Connors, blowing a bushelful of break points, made one of his earliest exits from Wimbledon Wednesday with a second-round loss to Dan Goldie.

The two-time titleholder was eliminated by the former NCAA champion 7-6, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2 on a cold, rainy day at the All England Club.

Connors should have held the upper hand in the first three sets, holding serve easily and constantly threatening to break Goldie's serve. But he failed to convert 10 break points during one key stretch in the middle of the match and never recovered after Goldie finally broke him to win the third set.

"Basically, the operation was successful but the patient died," said Connors, the oldest man in the singles draw at 36. "I had every chance to win it, but I didn't."

It was Connors' second straight second-round defeat at a Grand Slam tournament. Last month, he lost to fellow American Jay Berger at the French Open.

In addition, Connors failed to reach at least the fourth round at Wimbledon for only the third time in 18 years.

Despite the loss, Connors said he had no plans to retire.

"Anybody can quit," he said. "See Connors, Page 9"

First Wimbledon win is relief for Sanchez

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Animal lover Arantxa Sanchez used to think grass was fit for only one thing.

"I felt it was for, how you say, cows," the clay-court champion said. "But now I think different."

The 17-year-old Spaniard, who upset Steffi Graf in a dramatic French Open women's final 2 1/2 weeks ago, won her first match in three years on the grass courts at Wimbledon Wednesday and said it was a big relief.

"I didn't play too good today, but I'm so pleased to pass the first round," Sanchez said after beating Jana Pospisilova of Czechoslovakia

6-2, 7-5 on Court No. 1. "I wasn't nervous, but when you've lost in the first round twice in a row, you want to win."

Two years ago, Pospisilova beat Sanchez in the second round of the junior tournament at Wimbledon. The same year, New Zealand's Belinda Cordwell beat the Spaniard in the first round of the main draw. Last year, she lost to Japan's Kumiko Okamoto.

Playing mainly from the baseline in the same way she beat Graf on the red clay of Paris, Sanchez swept to a 6-2, 5-3 lead against Pospisilova. She had much more trouble coping with the grass than the clay, and overhit many groundstrokes. But her speed and drop shots — she scored six winners with them — were reminiscent of her performances at Paris.

When she served for the match for the first time, Sanchez said, she thought too much about breaking her Wimbledon jinx and was broken at love.

"I kept thinking about how much I wanted to win (the) first round," the Barcelona teen-ager said.

She immediately broke back for 6-5, however, and served out the match in 59 minutes. At the end, she gave a two-handed salute to

Court decision goes to Rose again

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pete Rose stayed unbeaten in state court Wednesday, setting up a possible courtroom confrontation between his lawyers and Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti.

The Cincinnati Reds manager got his second legal victory in four days when a state appeals court decided it had no authority to nullify an order that temporarily blocks Giamatti from holding a hearing to decide Rose's fate.

The 1st Ohio District Court of Appeals accepted written arguments from both sides, then issued a two-page ruling that said it had no authority to act on a temporary restraining order.

The appellate decision was not unexpected. Appeals courts rarely even consider nullifying a temporary restraining order, the legal equivalent of a time out and doesn't actually decide the merits of a case.

As a result, Giamatti is still barred from holding a hearing on allegations that Rose bet on his own team and from taking any action against the manager for two weeks. Another hearing is scheduled July 6 before Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel for a preliminary injunction, which would extend Rose's protection while the case is prepared for trial. If baseball can't block the July 6 hearing, Giamatti will appear before Nadel to try to convince the judge he is wrong, baseball lawyer Louis L. Hoynes Jr. said.

"The commissioner will certainly be a witness for us," Hoynes said. "It's important for us, for him, to be here, and he will be here."

In an unprecedented ruling, Nadel decided last Sunday that Giamatti has prejudged Rose as guilty, and concluded a hearing before the commissioner would be pointless. Giamatti can suspend Rose for life if he determines the manager bet on his own team.

Giamatti said Wednesday that the appeals court didn't decide whether Nadel was correct in his assessment, but had concluded it had no authority to act, Giamatti has said he hasn't yet decided Rose's fate.

"They didn't affirm Judge Nadel's finding about me. They just decided they couldn't decide," Giamatti said.

The appellate panel consisted of Judges Rupert A. Doan, Harry T. Klusmeier and Lee H. Hildebrandt Jr.

Hoynes gave no indication of baseball's next legal move, which could include turning to the next appellate level — the Ohio Supreme Court.

Steinbrenner: Ueberroth rode off into sunset

NEW YORK (AP) — To New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner, former baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth was a "master opportunist" who left office early to help his reputation.

"He had six or seven months left on his contract, but his PR people advised him to get out because the things he had left to face were no-win situations," Steinbrenner is quoted as saying in Wednesday's editions of Newsday.

Ueberroth was to have served through the end of the year, but A. Bartlett Giamatti replaced him April 1.

"He rode off into the sunset and left the tough stuff," Steinbrenner said in an interview with the newspaper from his office in Tampa, Fla. "I'm not going to say anything bad. It doesn't serve any purpose for me to comment on something like that," Ueberroth told The Associated Press Wednesday in a telephone interview from his office in El Toro, Calif.

The Yankees owner said he has confidence in Giamatti's handling of baseball's major issues, including the Pete Rose affair.

"Bart's a good man and he's inherited a lot of trouble," Steinbrenner said. "He'll handle it. But he needs our (the owners') support."

"He is a man of substance and integrity, far more than Ueberroth. Ueberroth has substance, too, but he's more show than substance. He's a master opportunist." Efforts by the Associated Press to reach Steinbrenner were unsuccessful.

Sources close to Ueberroth's final months as commissioner also confirmed Wednesday that he offered to handle the Pete Rose matter, and had some misgivings about leaving Giamatti to deal with the fallout.

But Steinbrenner maintained that "Peter wants to be a hero to the population. He knew he couldn't come down on Pete Rose."

Rich Levin, a spokesman for Giamatti who serves in the same capacity for Ueberroth, said Giamatti

"never has complained about timing. On the contrary, he accepts timing and challenges as parts of life."

Steinbrenner did give Ueberroth credit for helping to unify the owners and improve the game's financial status.

"I'm not saying he didn't do any good," Steinbrenner said. "The TV contract was big, but it's nothing to what he left unfinished."

Steinbrenner mentioned the damages to be assessed from the first two free agent collusion decisions and the negotiations for a new contract with the players union as major pieces of business Giamatti inherited when he took office.

Schmidt on target for All-Star history

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mike Schmidt has been retired a month, but he is in position to make baseball history.

Unless there is a large change the voting trend in the next five days, Schmidt will become the first retired player ever voted a starter on his league's All-Star team since the inception of the game in 1933.

In the latest returns in the fan balloting, Schmidt had polled 451,063 to 384,037 for Chris Sabo, a 67,026-vote lead over the Cincinnati third baseman.

Behind Schmidt and Sabo are Pittsburgh's Bobby Bonilla (371,502), St. Louis' Terry Pendleton (371,504), Tim Lincecum of Montreal (295,964), and Howard Johnson of the New York Mets (285,733).

"It's a heck of an honor," said Schmidt, who has been working in his garden since announcing his retirement May 29 at a tearful news conference in San Diego. He quit after 16-plus years of leading the Philadelphia Phillies with his bat and golden glove.

No other player in the All-Star Game years ever has been accorded such an honor, not Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Ted Williams, Henry Aaron, Joe DiMaggio, Stan Musial, Mickey Mantle, Johnny Bench, Jimmy Foxx, Jackie Robinson, or other Hall of Famers. What pleases Schmidt is that fans are doing the voting. The players, coaches and managers did it for a long while.

"It shows the respect and high esteem of the fans, not only in Philadelphia, but around the country," said Schmidt, who is as surprised as anybody with the outpouring of votes.

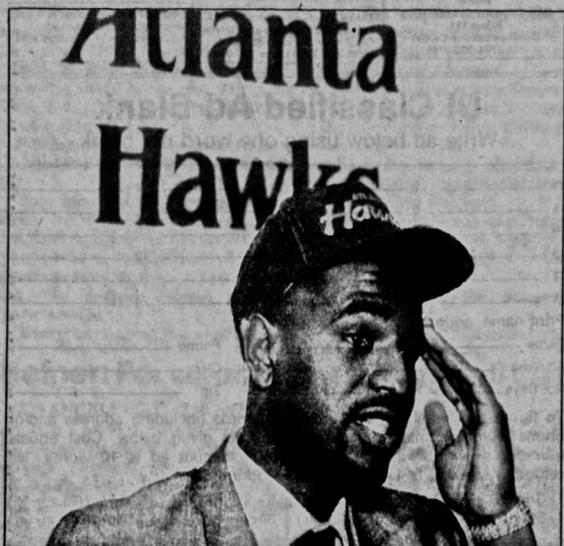

"Obviously it's a sentimental vote. It's emotional for them and for me."

There is a touch of irony. Over the years Schmidt had more than his share of confrontation with the fans. He once described Philadelphia fans as the worst in the world.

Schmidt doesn't want to talk about those days.

"The last five, six, seven years I think I was well-received," he said.

Former Hawks ready to begin NBA careers

Roy Marble, the Atlanta Hawks number one pick, talks to members of the media at a press conference in Atlanta. Marble was the 23rd pick overall in the first round of the NBA draft Tuesday.

Armstrong, Marble are all smiles day after NBA draft

Bryce Miller
 The Daily Iowan

The 18th pick of the Chicago Bulls is all smiles — and nobody blames him.

B.J. Armstrong, the all-time assist leader (517) in Iowa history, could hardly contain himself when he talked during a press conference Wednesday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

"Right now, I'm pretty pleased to be part of the organization," Armstrong said behind a boyish grin. "Right now I'm just excited to get things underway and get things rolling."

But it wasn't always that way. Tuesday night at the Felt Forum in New York, Armstrong was among 15 players invited to attend the proceedings in person. Projected highly among the point guards available in the draft, many were surprised when four guards were picked ahead of him.

Armstrong was also confused when Seattle, who had expressed a keen interest in the 6-foot-2, 175 pound guard, passed on the Detroit native for the 16th and 17th picks.

"Seattle just blew me away," Armstrong said. "I didn't anticipate that at all."

Unknown to anyone, the Super-sonics were acting under an agreement with the Bulls to pass on Armstrong in return for a second-round draft pick in 1993.

Chicago coach Doug Collins said that the Bulls got "who we felt was the best point guard in the draft."

The Bulls were in the market for a point guard who could shoot. Collins thinks that is what made the Armstrong acquisition a key one for his team.

"I think with B.J. Armstrong, what it gives you is an opportunity to have a 3-guard rotation... One thing that you have to understand is that Michael Jordan creates so
