North sentence includes no time in prison

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver North was sentenced to two years' probation and fined $150,000 for Iran-Contra crimes on Wednesday by a judge who said North had "willingly and sometimes even excessively" done the bidding of cynical superiors.

North said he recognizes he made mistakes and grieves about them, "and I truly do pray about it every day."

"As you stand here now, you are not the fall guy for this tragic breach of the public trust," U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell told North. "You're here now because of your own conduct when the truth was coming out."

Gesell sentenced the 45-year-old former Marine and White House aide to suspended terms of three, two and one years for the three felony convictions by a jury two months ago. "Your punishment will not include jail," said Gesell. North's lawyers declined all comment on the sentence and gave no indication of whether they will file an appeal.

During his three-month trial, North contended that in the Iran-Contra affair — in which U.S. arms were secretly sold to Iran and profits were diverted to the Nicaraguan rebels — he only acted on behalf of Reagan administration superiors.

The judge said, "I do not think in this area you were a leader at all, but really a low-ranking subordinate working to carry out initiatives of a few cynical superiors. You came to be the point man in a very complex power play developed by higher-ups."

Still, the judge said, North responded "willingly and to some extent even excessively" to their requests.

North, speaking almost inaudibly, told the judge, "I have devoted nearly two decades to the service of our country, and I would never knowingly do anything to hurt it or any of its institutions. . . . I grieve over what has happened, and I truly pray about it every day."

He said, too, "I also recognize that I have made many mistakes, and as a result of those mistakes I have been convicted of serious crimes."

As a result of the sentence, the Navy said it is suspending North's $23,000-a-year pension earned in 20 years of service, but is recommending that it be restored by Comptroller General Charles Bowsher, who has the final say.

North spoke of the trauma "this 2½-year nightmare" caused his family and said to Gesell, "I ask only that you consider these things when you weigh the sentence: that you be lenient so that they may have a chance to rebuild their lives."

After the sentencing, North walked to his wife Betsy in the front spectator row, kissed her

Officials call for end to Lebanese conflict

Gorbachev, Mitterrand unite in statement

PARIS (AP) — Presidents Mikhail Gorbachev of the Soviet Union and Francois Mitterrand of France called on Wednesday for an immediate truce in Lebanon and a halt to arms deliveries to Lebanese groups involved in the conflict.

In a statement issued at a joint news conference after two days of talks, the two men said they were "convinced that Lebanon must remain sovereign, independent, united, with its territorial integrity respected."

Gorbachev also indicated on Wednesday that he was prepared to meet with leaders of Poland's Solidarity union movement and said the Soviet Union would accept governments in the Soviet bloc that were not dominated by the Communist Party. He said "the right to free election . . . is of vital importance."

"How the Polish and Hungarian people decide to structure their society and their lives will be their affair," he said.

The Gorbachev-Mitterrand statement on Lebanon supported Arab League attempts to settle the civil war but also said their countries were available to help with other efforts to reach a peaceful settlement "notably in the framework of the United Nations Security Council."

France and the Soviet Union, together with the United States, China and Britain, make up the five permanent members of the Security Council.

"We are not going to take the place of those on the spot," Mitterrand said, referring to the continuing efforts of the Arab League. "But we're not going to leave things as they are, that is clear."

Answering questions about President George Bush's call for a withdrawal of all Soviet troops from Poland, Gorbachev said Moscow and Washington should avoid dealing in propaganda.

"We're trying to do business so as not to engage in propaganda-type initiatives," he said.

Gorbachev's comments on propaganda were not directly aimed at Bush's appeal, although a simultaneous translation into English provided at the news conference made it appear they had been.

Gorbachev, making a three-day visit to France with his wife Raisa, recalled dealing with Bush's predecessor, Ronald Reagan, "when attempts were made to give us lessons, to make prosecutorial-type accusations against us."

"The idea is not to score propaganda points but to really understand that we are coming out of a complex period of Cold War encumbered with mistrust and confrontation, and all of this has to be gotten rid of."

U.S. Supreme Court shaped by Reagan's conservative pace

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court's slow journey toward conservatism over the past two decades became a quick-paced march in its 1988-89 term, with Chief Justice William Rehnquist leading and Ronald Reagan's three appointees right with him.

The Rehnquist court came of age as it cut back abortion rights, curtailed affirmative action for women and minorities, limited other civil-rights protections, condoned mandatory drug testing and permitted capital punishment for juvenile and retarded killers.

Justice Anthony Kennedy tipped the balance of power. In his first full term, he solidified a comparatively youthful conservative majority that prevailed in a series of important 5-4 votes.

Thus with three appointments, former President Ronald Reagan accomplished what Richard Nixon failed to do with four — fundamentally reshape the nation's highest court and perhaps the future of American law as well.

Reagan named Sandra Day O'Connor to the court in 1981, then promoted Rehnquist and appointed Antonin Scalia in 1986 after Chief Justice Warren Burger retired. Kennedy joined them early last year.

Allied with Rehnquist and Byron White, who was appointed by President John F. Kennedy in 1962, the Reagan appointees are now in control.

Conservatives two years ago were panning Rehnquist's first term as chief justice, dejectedly admitting that he had been outmaneuvered and overshadowed by William Brennan, the court's leading liberal.

Rehnquist clearly assumed a leadership role the next year, but not without joining in some surprising rulings that sparked commentators to say he had moderated his staunchly conservative ideology.

"Statesmanlike" is what some conservatives called Rehnquist's performance in the court's 1987-88 term. But Kennedy's votes in the

No mail delay expected in new ZIP code zones

Kathryn Stevens
The Daily Iowan

Residents who were assigned new ZIP codes last summer should still be receiving mail without delay even if the sender does not use the proper ZIP code, Iowa City postal officials said Wednesday.

Because of a surge in population growth, the city has been divided into three ZIP code zones from one ZIP code since July 1 of last year.

Areas south of Muscatine and Iowa avenues and east of the Iowa River kept Iowa City's original ZIP code of 52240 because of the high population density of the area. Areas north of Muscatine and Iowa avenues and east of the Iowa river were assigned the 52245 ZIP code, and areas west of the Iowa river were assigned the 52246 ZIP code.

Presently, only bulk mailers are penalized if the wrong ZIP code is used. They fail to receive the pre-sorted discount if they do not use the proper ZIP code.

Other mail may eventually be delayed if the wrong ZIP code is used but not until enough citizens use the new ZIP codes, Kim McCarty, customer service representative of Iowa City's post office, said. He said he could not determine when that would be.

"When the volume of mail is large enough to each zone, if and when customers have started using the ZIP, then we can move the mail to these different zones faster," McCarty said.

McCarty said he hopes penalizing bulk mailers will help encourage other people to use the ZIP codes, adding that penalizing them would allow postal workers to save time in sorting.

As more people use the new ZIP codes, Iowa City postal workers would not have to sort the mail manually as often, and a faster, mechanized sorter would do the work.

Postal clerk Twyla Morland said the additional codes make sorting and delivering mail easier because they "save time and money."

Typed ZIP codes — as opposed to handwritten ZIP codes — are easier for the postal service's sorting machines to scan, she said.

Doctor discusses medical problems for Palestinians

Cathy Jackson
The Daily Iowan

A vast decline in Palestinian health-care resources and the abuse of Palestinian medical personnel are among the devastating results of the 1967 Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza and the recent Palestinian uprising, said Ramon Rantisi, who spoke in the Union Wednesday night.

Rantisi, who detailed the medical conditions in the occupied territories, is the official doctor of Bir Zeit University and a member of the Executive Committee for the Popular Committees for General Health Services in the Occupied Territories.

He cited a host of examples of the problems in Palestinian medical care since the Israeli occupation, including a decline in the number of functional hospitals in the West Bank — from 1.9 hospital beds per 10,000 citizens to 1.2 beds per 10,000.

This decline, Rantisi said, is due in part to the Israeli occupation forces transforming hospitals into detention centers, prisons and military administration offices, and to the closure of hospitals by Israeli forces.

A report published by the Popular Committees for Health Services also reported that "the Israeli authorities also directed the hospital management (of a closed facility) to refer its regular patients to Israeli hospitals, ignoring completely the fact that they were much more expensive and that only a limited sector of the well-to-do people are able to afford enrollment in a health insurance

Donating blood can be quick, easy way to help those in need

Jeanne Alt
The Daily Iowan

If you're over 17, in generally good health and have occasionally found yourself with some time to spare, take a look at what 45 minutes sliced from a daily schedule could do for someone who's in need.

Take a look at donating some blood.

Then join the 3,263 UI students currently registered with UI Hospitals and Clinics as whole-blood donors, according to Chris Kemp, coordinator of the Johnson County Blood Donor Program.

Giving blood is as easy as one-two-three, Kemp said. Upon arrival at the UI donor center, individuals sign in at the reception desk and are given a packet to read. This packet contains information about exposure to AIDS and how this and other health considerations affect eligibility as a donor.

The next step in blood donation is as simple as the first. After potential donors finish reading, an assistant leads them into a small room to answer questions concerning medical history and current state of health. Afterward, temperature readings and pulse are taken, and a finger-prick sample of blood is drawn and tested.

The preliminary steps to donating blood have now been taken — now comes the actual pin prick.

While you are seated in a comfortable reclining chair, your arm is prepped with an alcohol swab and iodine. Then an assistant brings out the plastic packets and tubing and the needle. For each donation a sterile, unused needle is used and then thrown away.

Before you know it, it's over, and you're munching on a donated cookie, checking out the stretch bandage on your arm and waiting for someone to tell you you can go.

UI Hospitals maintains a computerized donor file for all of Johnson County, Kemp said. Donors are added to the file when they give blood at the donor center or a blood drive or when they register at a table set up at the Union.

The Elmer DeGowin Memorial Blood Center at UI Hospitals uses 275 to 300 whole-blood donors a month. All blood drawn at the UI donor center is used at UI Hospitals, Kemp said.

UI Hospitals receives about half

Candidates needed for district directors

The residents of the Iowa City Community School District will elect two directors, each for three-year terms in the school election which will be held on Tuesday, Sept. 12.

Any person who is a citizen of the U.S., 18 years of age or older and a resident of the school district may become a candidate for the school board.

Nomination papers are available from the board secretary, 509 S. Dubuque St., or from the county auditor. The papers must be filed with the secretary between July 10 and August 3 before 5:30 p.m. The nomination petition must contain the signatures of at least 10 eligible electors of the school district. An affidavit acknowledging the candidate's eligibility must also be filed.

I.C. school district resolves to begin superintendent search immediately

By James Cahoy
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Community School District could see a new superintendent by July 1990 if a timeline reviewed by the school board Wednesday night can be met.

The timeline calls for the search for a new superintendent to replace departed Superintendent David Cronin to begin almost immediately, with a final decision to be reached in February of next year. The new superintendent would begin his or her term on July 1, 1990.

Cronin left the district on June 30 to take a job in the Elmbrook School District in Wisconsin.

"Once the news of the search is out, we'd like to begin talking to candidates right away, although the intensive search will be in the fall," said Karl Plath, who heads PNR Associates, the education-management consultant firm out of Northbrook, Ill., that is handling the search.

Plath told the board that the firm hoped to have the number of candidates narrowed down to 12 to 16 by January. From that list, they would identify five to seven candidates to be interviewed by the school board in January and February.

"In January, we'd be ready to talk with you about the candidates," Plath said. "Hopefully, we can make some decisions by then."

The board would narrow the list down to three candidates, Plath said, from which the superintendent would be chosen at the end of February.

In addition to interviewing the candidates, PNR Associates also plans to conduct community interviews with local organizations, UI officials, taxpayers associations and business officials — as well as various organizations within the school district — to determine what kind of qualifications to look for in the next superintendent.

The firm will also be using advertising and brochures to attract prospective candidates, according to Plath.

Plath said he thought the timeline presented to the board would not result in a rushed search process, adding that he did not think the process should be sped up either. "I don't think the advantage of waiting is outweighed by the advantage of getting ahead," he told the board.

Legislators gain leverage in controlling budget

DES MOINES (AP) — The governor does not have the power to withhold money for programs approved by the Legislature unless he finds a cheaper way to accomplish the same goal or the state runs out of cash, an attorney general's opinion issued Wednesday said.

Legislative leaders said the opinion gives them new leverage in a dispute between legislative Democrats and Republican Gov. Terry Branstad over control of the state's purse strings.

The opinion said the governor is free to seek streamlined methods of accomplishing the Legislature's purpose, but "the governor is not free to refuse to spend funds for the purpose of amending or defeating legislative objectives."

"The real issue is gubernatorial authority," said Rep. Jack Hatch,

D-Des Moines, one of the heads of a legislative budget committee. Hatch was one of two lawmakers who sought the opinion.

At issue is what happens to the state budget after the Legislature adjourns. Hatch and other Democrats said Branstad in past years has ordered some state agencies to "revert" some money approved by the Legislature.

In some cases, Hatch said, that meant money approved for programs by the Legislature has never been spent.

The opinion did not request a ruling on the legality of a specific action but asked for a general definition of the governor's power over the budget.

The opinion, written by Asst. Atty. Gen. Candy Morgan, said the governor has a series of powers. If state revenues fall below projections, the governor can order across-the-board spending cuts, the opinion said.

In addition, if the governor can devise a cheaper way to accomplish a goal, he can order the money saved returned to the state treasury, she wrote.

But the governor is not free to target programs and block funding for them.

"An executive mandate that an agency reduce its expenditures by a specified percentage would likely be found to be an impermissible impoundment," she said.

"The governor can, however, prevent unnecessary and wasteful spending above that necessary to achieve the legislative purpose," she wrote.

Debate over abortion awaits next state legislative session

U.S. Supreme Court ruling puts earlier proposals in new light

DES MOINES (AP) — When the Legislature convenes next year, it will find the framework of an abortion debate already in place.

Two measures introduced with little fanfare this year remain before subcommittees of the Iowa Senate, with one simply prohibiting abortions under virtually any condition.

The bill would also appear to outlaw several forms of birth control and contains penalties of up to 25 years in prison for even suggesting to a woman that abortion might be an option.

The other measure, far less strict, requires that a parent be notified before an abortion is performed on a minor.

Both measures were introduced by Sen. Ray Taylor, a Steamboat Rock Republican and leader of the conservative wing of the GOP. Little attention was given to the measures this year because both sides in the dispute agreed not to push for a vote, opting instead to wait and see where the U.S. Supreme Court landed on the issue.

Now that the court has ruled that states may regulate abortions, the bills take on new significance. This spring, they were quietly assigned to the Senate Human Resources Committee, headed by Sen. Beverly Hannon, D-Anamosa, and in turn referred to a subcommittee consisting of Taylor, Hannon and Sen. Charles Bruner, D-Ames.

Since the measures were introduced during the first session of a two-year General Assembly, they will remain eligible next session, but the tacit agreement not to push the issue will no longer apply.

The initial measure Taylor introduced would virtually eliminate all abortions, declaring its "acknowledgment by the General Assembly that an unborn child at fertilization is a living human being" and "current practices of abortion endanger the family and consequent stability of the state."

The measure declares that it's the responsibility of the state to prevent harm to a fetus after fertilization, which is defined as "the moment at which the sperm cell penetrates the ovum cell."

Several common methods of birth control — including many intrauterine devices — prevent pregnancy after fertilization.

In its ruling this week, the high court upheld several restrictions in a Missouri law such as banning public officials from counseling or performing abortion, but Taylor's proposal goes well beyond that.

It prohibits anyone from obtaining or performing an abortion, and includes tough penalties for someone "who knowingly induces, counsels, advises, directs or aids a pregnant woman to procure an abortion."

Under the measure, providing such advice can bring conviction of a class B felony, carrying a potential 25-year prison term. The only harsher punishment provided by Iowa law is the mandatory life term for such crimes as first-degree murder.

Iowa's anti-abortion forces said in the wake of Monday's decision they had no plans to "rant and rave" and seek an outright ban on abortions, but would instead seek restrictions.

Staffers at the Legislative Service Bureau — the bill-drafting arm of the Legislature — said they've received no requests to begin preparing other measures.

There are a host of ways that the issue could come before the Legislature, and it would be virtually impossible to block debate entirely. Those two measures could be amended to accomplish differing goals, or amendments could be offered to other measures, such as the spending measures which authorize appropriations to pay for the state's budget.

The issue is particularly acute in Iowa, because all of the state's abortion regulations were taken off the books in 1976 when the criminal code was revised.

Other than boiler-plate language approved in budget bills each year banning the use of public funds for abortions, there is no abortion regulation on the books.

Fiscal year ends with revenue growth

DES MOINES (AP) — The Legislature's top budget adviser on Wednesday said the state ended its fiscal year with $42 million more than had been predicted.

When the final figures are tallied, Iowa probably will have about $100 million in the bank as of the fiscal year's end last Saturday, said Dennis Prouty, head of the Legislative Fiscal Bureau.

A panel of budget experts had predicted the state would see an 8.6-percent growth in revenues over the year, but the actual figure was 10.3 percent, Prouty said.

That means there's enough money to launch an ambitious construction program, which had been included on a "wish list" approved by the Legislature.

Lawmakers had approved those projects, but their actual construction was contingent on enough money being left over at the close of business June 30, when the last fiscal year ended.

"It came in better than our projections," said Prouty.

He said a sharp decline in unemployment bolstered income tax collections and spurred sales tax collections, the two areas where the state collects the bulk of its $2.6 billion budget.

Personal income tax collections grew by 10.8 percent, and sales tax collections were up 5.2 percent, Prouty said.

The numbers released by Prouty on Wednesday are for the major areas of taxes collected by the state. Administration budget officials next week will release the final totals, which include miscellaneous items such as how much Iowa earned in interest.

Prouty's rosy numbers come on the heels of glowing economic reports last week showing record levels of employment in the state.

Despite those reports, Prouty said budget officials are growing increasingly nervous about this summer's weather.

The drought has returned full force after some rainfall in June, Prouty said. He said predicted dry weather could continue through crucial stages of the development of this year's crop. If that happens, farm income could take a jolt and the tremors would reverberate throughout the state's economy.

Grants available to UI cancer researchers

Jean Thilmany
The Daily Iowan

Cancer investigators who are researching original projects at the UI may have a chance to receive $10,000 in funding from the American Cancer Society, according to Richard DeGowin, director of the UI Cancer Center.

The award from the society will allow the UI to provide four investigators with the one-year grants to purchase supplies, small pieces of equipment and technical help.

"The young investigators need evidence that they have a good idea and can perform the research if they are to receive substantive grants from the American Cancer Society or the National Cancer Institute in the future," DeGowin said.

He said the grants are considered "seed" money to permit new faculty members — associates, instructors and assistant professors — who are initiating careers in cancer research to begin research.

Past seed grants administered by the UI Cancer Center have been awarded to 72 researchers from 19 departments in the colleges of medicine, dentistry, pharmacy and liberal arts. DeGowin said liberal-arts majors included chemistry and biology.

He said the grants have been very helpful to the researchers who have won them.

Past seed grants administered by the UI Cancer Center have been awarded to 72 researchers from 19 departments in the colleges of medicine, dentistry, pharmacy and liberal arts.

"It's help with a small piece of research that can lead to an even larger (substantive) grant," he said.

Jan Schaaf, cancer center administrator, said the center has received around 20 to 30 applications each of the 11 years the grants have been awarded.

She said the committee of senior investigators who review grant applications look for scientific merit when awarding the grants.

"They look to see if the research is justifiable; something that is a fresh, new idea," Schaaf said. "They make sure there is a need for research in this area, and they make sure people who have no other research behind them get support."

She said the group — made up of representatives of a broad spectrum of UI departments — also gives high consideration to investigators whose research is not being done jointly by other investigators.

Last year's four winners of the American Cancer Society and UI Cancer Center grant were:

Robert Deschens, an assistant professor in biochemistry whose project was "Isolation and Characterization of Genes Involved in Growth Suppression."

Ross Siemers, an internal medicine associate whose project was "Monoclonal Antibodies Against the Cell Surface Receptor for Alpha Interferon."

Andrew Russo, an assistant professor in physiology and biophysics whose project was "Oncogene Induction of Endocrine Cell Differentiation."

Karen Beetham, a radiology associate whose project was "Repair and Express of Radiation-Induced Potentially Lethal Damage in Normal and Transformed Intestinal Epithelial Cells."

Schaaf said the UI Cancer Center awarded an additional grant because of the large number of applicants.

The total value of awards granted by the American Cancer Society to the UI Cancer Center the last 12 years totals $440,000.

No consensus

Although it might be premature to write an obituary for Roe v. Wade, the U.S. Supreme Court's Monday ruling in Webster v. Reproductive Health Services should make us wonder what we are about to lose, and how we have come to lose it.

The erosion of women's rights to terminate undesired pregnancies disturbs sufficiently by itself, but equally troubling is the arena in which that erosion has occurred — behind the closed doors of the Supreme Court, a body of appointed, not elected, officials. And one wonders: Why should a changing court membership overturn what, for close to two decades, has functioned as a civil liberty? Something feels arbitrary.

In fact, it was the design of the Roe decision to solve this very problem. It intended to take abortion out of the hands of political judgement and public morality altogether, depositing it where any moral dilemma belongs — in the private consciences of women and men.

The state, including the arm of the judiciary, has the right to legislate and enforce certain minimum standards of moral behavior, which we are able to identify because: 1. They are obvious and; 2. We have achieved cultural consensus that they are obvious. Murder, rape, arson, fraud (and for that matter, slavery), are outlawed because the consensus exists that they are both immoral and so corrosive of society's fabric that the state maintains a vested interest in their abolition.

The polarization of the Supreme Court — indeed, of America at large — on the matter of abortion proves that no such consensus exists. It is therefore a matter of private, not public morality. It is, or ought to be, a matter of choice.

Though draped in the robe of law, life under Roe has never qualified as behavioral enforcement. Nothing about the Roe decision insisted on abortion, declared abortion morally correct, or even gave abortion a morally neutral status. Roe was a decision not to decide, and not to let the states decide, either. The starkness of its language, and the clarity of its directive, gave us the only useful principle to live by on matters so abstruse: neither the federal nor the state government has any business trafficking in the mystical debate about life's beginnings, and even less business enforcing its opinion through law.

Unhappily, with the solicitation of new abortion cases for the next session, the Supreme Court appears prepared once again to give the state license to operate where it doesn't belong. And the dismantling of Roe — inevitable by any measure — shifts the battle from Washington to the 50 state houses across the country, where polarized legislatures will strangle on a debate that is, finally, insoluble.

No compromise

The U.S. Supreme Court's ruling on Webster v. Reproductive Health Services suggests that the already fragile Roe v. Wade will be in serious jeopardy when the high court reconvenes. And, just as disappointing, the decision guarantees that the ugly battle over abortion rights will descend to the arena of state government.

After the decision was delivered, Justice Antonin Scalia deplored the intense public pressure from both extremes, which threatened to usurp the justices' detachment from the popular will. But in a federalist decision which failed to definitively affirm or reject Roe, the court has put the states at the mercy of extremists from both sides.

It would be naive to assume that a decisive legal interpretation could quell the intense debate, but the court's decision to give individual states the responsibility for setting limitations on abortion access creates a chaotic environment destined to ravage state politics.

A decision on an issue as personal, volatile and emotional as abortion cannot be left to elected politicians. The theological, moral and legal complexities of the issue make it nearly impossible to resolve — apart from the immense pressures from both extremes to which elected politicians are vulnerable.

The essence of legislative decision-making is compromise, but the gap between anti-abortion and pro-choice finds no compromise.

Defenders of the anti-abortion position are driven by the sanctity they perceive in their cause. What cause, they demand, is more important than the preservation of human life? The answer, of course, may be the preservation of the quality of human life, but their rigid defense of the unborn is at the same time admirable and illusory. In an ideal world, the moral foundations of their position would be clear. But in our world, the evils that may result from carrying an unwanted fetus to term sometimes outweigh the wrong of abortion.

In that sense, pro-choice advocates enjoy the advantage of simple, reasonable logic: In some situations, it is better to destroy one life than to destroy two. But too often, the defense of a woman's right to abort becomes distorted as an expression of feminist political clout rather than the exercise of an unfortunate but necessary alternative.

Ultimately, the final decision must rest with the court. The tone of Webster suggests that when the court reconvenes, Roe will be toppled. If that happens, the decision must be challenged in the proper domain — the American legal system. But until that decision is rendered, defenders of the principles of pro-choice must hope that the justices converging toward overturning Roe become suddenly enlightened.

People should mandate flag law

Amendment process will bring Constitution to level of flag-burners

Since the U.S. Supreme Court's flag-burning decision was bound to trigger a political firestorm, there's reason for a small sense of relief at the form it is taking: a proposed constitutional amendment to outlaw any desecration of the flag.

Why a sense of relief? Because the alternative form of political action would have posed far more danger. Congress might have chosen simply to pass a law forbidding flag-burning, and then denying the courts any power to rule on the constitutionality of the law.

This approach — which in other times was proposed to deal with divisive issues such as school busing — is inherently dangerous, since it would permit Congress to pass laws in direct conflict with the Constitution, and then deny courts the power to strike down such laws.

Scholars have debated for decades whether the Constitution in fact meant to put that kind of power in the hands of Congress. But there's no reason to doubt that it would be a direct threat to our whole concept of an independent judiciary.

A constitutional amendment, by contrast, would require a national consensus that the American people do not consider flag-burning part of our concept of free expression.

Since it would require a two-thirds vote in the House and Senate, and the approval of three-fourths of the state legislatures to be approved, an amendment would reflect the national will far better than a piece of legislation.

Does that mean, then, that such an amendment is a good idea? Probably not.

The traditional fear about amending the Constitution is that interest groups of all sorts would tack on extraneous, repressive additions that would wind up turning the First Amendment into a nullity. Start with the flag, the argument goes, and the next thing you know we will be carrying out racist, sexist, anti-Semitic, anti-American speech from First Amendment protection.

While that's always a possibility, I simply have more faith in the common sense of legislators and the public than that. I do not believe we are a nation of political Cro-Magnons, drooling with lust at the prospect of dismembering our freedoms. It is entirely likely that an anti-flag-burning amendment will cover flag-burning and nothing else.

Indeed, the more that politicians and interest groups try to burden such an amendment with additional elements, the more likely it would be that a consensus would be lost.

So why not go ahead and prohibit a particularly odious form of expression? It has to do, I think, with the very nature of a constitution.

When we talk about "the supreme law of the land," we're talking about a structure for a government, not a set of detailed blueprints. Our system neither requires nor forbids a free market, a national energy policy, a balanced budget, affirmative action, political parties or a paid company holiday on the Fourth of July.

When we start using the Constitution as a bulletin board for the venting of specific political sentiments — no matter how worthy — we begin to tamper with the very idea of what a constitution is all about. Further, we have many ways to express our disgust with flag-burning. By far the most effective way is to recoil from those who use that twisted form of expression.

Indeed, in 1989, such an act is, almost by definition, a symbol that the flag-burner is declaring himself completely outside the mainstream of political thought. That's probably why such acts have become all but extinct.

My own view is that a prohibition against flag-burning does not subtract much at all from the sum total of political and social expression. Such activity is on an intellectual plane with the smashing of Japanese televisions as a way of protesting imports — with, of course, the added element of gross offense to almost all Americans.

But would such a prohibition be worth the constitutional tampering it would require? Apart from making our politicians look good, would it accomplish much? I think our Constitution is simply too magisterial to be dragged down to the level of the flag-burners.

Sanctions against Nicaragua must end

Guest Opinion

Geoffrey Barrett

Nicaragua still endures the crippling effects of U.S. economic warfare.

In the age of the Bush administration, the reactionary rhetoric of the Reagan years has been put aside, to some extent, in favor of a more reasoned approach. In terms of foreign policy, George Bush has abandoned Ronald Reagan's path on some important issues, including indefinite aid to the Nicaraguan Contras. It appears that the Contras' best days are now behind them. But the United States still has one thorn to shove into the side of the Sandinista government: economic sanctions originally imposed by the Reagan administration.

Despite the unwillingness of both Reagan and Bush to use economic sanctions, which they call "immoral," against other governments, the economy of Nicaragua has been hampered by an embargo and Washington's pressure on its allies to adopt similar policies toward the tiny nation. In answering demands from the anti-apartheid advocates, Reagan and Bush claim that economic sanctions against the South African government would only "hurt the people we're trying to help." Bush offered the same answer in response to demands for stronger action against the Chinese government for its brutal repression of the recent pro-democracy student movement. Yet Nicaragua, which is far less repressive than either of those two nations, still endures the crippling effects of U.S. economic warfare.

Though the effects of the embargo are demonstrable, they are often wrongly attributed by conservatives and the media to the failure of the Nicaraguan experiment. It is clear, on further study, that the government of Nicaragua stood little chance when confronted with the economically and militarily antagonistic policies of the United States. Not only must Nicaragua recover from the debilitating decades of Anastasio Somoza, but it must also overcome the U.S. embargo, wage a war against U.S. proxy forces and recover from the destruction of a recent hurricane.

per 1,000 live births (according to the 1989 World Almanac), which is better than those reported for Guatemala (67), Honduras (73) and El Salvador (71). Of these four countries, Nicaragua also enjoys the highest literacy rate at 66 percent, compared to 48 percent for Guatemala, 56 percent for Honduras and 62 percent for El Salvador.

Despite these problems, the Sandinistas have made significant progress in some areas, such as infant mortality rates and education, far outdistancing other Central American countries which enjoy millions of dollars in U.S. aid. Free medical care has resulted in an infant mortality rate in Nicaragua of 37 estimates because, as Americas Watch explains, it is "too dangerous" for human-rights organizations to operate inside Guatemala.)

For Nicaragua, Americas Watch reported 300 civilian deaths for this period, all in association with the resettlement of the Miskito Indians. There is no question that this is reprehensible. However, it appears to have been an isolated event and small in magnitude when compared to human-rights violations in El Salvador and Guatemala.

When the case of Nicaragua is looked at objectively and in the context of U.S. foreign policy toward more offensive governments, it becomes clear that Nicaragua is undeserving of the harsh treatment it has received. It is time for the Bush administration to come to terms with reality and lift the economic sanctions against Nicaragua. Only when this has been taken can the Sandinista government be objectively judged on its own merits.

Scarlet fever bacteria coming back stronger

BOSTON (AP) — Scarlet fever bacteria, which have largely disappeared since the 1940s, may be returning to cause a disease that can progress from a minor skin infection to death in a single day, doctors report.

In Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, doctors describe 20 cases of severe illness, including six deaths that were seen from 1986 to 1988 in four Western states.

They blamed the outbreak on microbes known as group A streptococcal bacteria, which make a toxin that causes scarlet fever. Other group A strep bacteria which do not make this poison cause sore throats as well as rheumatic fever and other illnesses.

The scope of the newly identified outbreak is unclear. However, doctors said it could be part of the apparent reappearance of especially potent strains of streptococcal bacteria.

"It's a bigger problem than 20 patients, believe me," said Dennis Stevens, chief author of the study. "This is just being recognized. After this article is published, I suspect I will get a lot of calls and find out about a lot of cases."

However, Robert Breiman of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta cautioned that occasional severe strep attacks may have merely escaped doctors' attention in the past.

"Whether these 20 cases are a major change from the past, it's hard to know," Breiman said.

Stevens saw his first case in 1984 at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Boise, Idaho. The victim had gone to the hospital with a mild fever. After 10 hours, he went into shock, and he died eight hours later.

"I was amazed at the rapidity with which this occurred," he said. "I saw another case a year later. I started talking to colleagues. They told me of similar cases."

His colleagues, a group of infectious-disease specialists who meet once a year at the Rocky

"I was amazed at the rapidity with which this occurred. . . I started talking to colleagues. They told me of similar cases." — Dennis Stevens, chief author of the scarlet fever study Mountain Pus Club, assembled the 20 cases from Montana, Idaho, Utah and Nevada. He has since seen more, including some in California and Washington state.

Stevens believes the disease is caused by streptococcal bacteria that make scarlatina toxin, the poison responsible for scarlet fever. He prefers to call the newly recognized disease streptococcal toxic shock syndrome, since it can kill without causing the classic rash of scarlet fever.

Strep bacteria were once a major cause of life-threatening diseases, mainly scarlet fever and rheumatic fever, but these illnesses largely disappeared around 1940. No one knows precisely why, since this was before the development of antibiotics.

About two years ago, other doctors began reporting an increase in the number of cases of rheumatic fever. In addition, outbreaks of severe strep disease have recently been reported in England and Scandinavia.

Edward Kaplan of the University of Minnesota, a co-author of the latest study, said he believes there may be some connection between the emergence of these dangerous strep illnesses, perhaps a genetic change in the strep bacteria.

"With all due respect to some people who are skeptical, one can't help being impressed with what has happened," he said. "This could be either because we are looking harder, or it's a real event. I think it's a real event."

Of the 20 cases described in the latest report, six victims, or 30 percent, died of the illness. Most started with red, tender skin and quickly went on to more serious symptoms, including shock, kidney failure and breathing failure.

Most were healthy young adults. Their median age was 36 and all but four were under age 50.

"People born before 1940 (when scarlet fever was more common) probably have had contact with this toxin and probably have antibodies that protect them from developing this shock-like episode," Stevens said. "We think the reason it's attacking young people and not old people is predominantly because they are immunologically virgins to this toxin."

Blood

its donated blood from the donor center, and the rest comes from blood drives. Drives are held every semester in each of the UI residence halls and one or two times a year in most of the colleges.

Blood drives in the dorms are usually sponsored by student organizations, which sometimes hold contests with prizes such as a movie or a pizza party for residents of the floor that donates the most blood.

Since the UI Hospitals have no mobile unit, regional units from surrounding areas are responsible for the blood drives.

"The UI Hospital is a tertiary-care hospital; it's a statewide, regional hospital, and only about 11 percent of our patients come from Johnson County," Kemp said. "So we really don't rely on Johnson County residents to supply all our blood needs."

Regional units that conduct blood drives in Iowa City are required by federal law to run the necessary testing on blood drawn themselves. After this, the blood is sent to UI Hospitals where each unit is tested further and cross-matched to determine which patients will be able to receive it.

In addition to on-campus sites, blood drives are held regularly at local churches and high schools, and occasionally at factories, businesses and malls.

Increased publicity and fear of AIDS has brought down the number of donors elsewhere but hasn't really damaged the UI Hospitals' donor program or blood supply, Kemp said.

"I don't think it has (caused problems) in Johnson County. I think we really have an educated population," she said.

In addition to the whole-blood program, the blood center runs an apheresis donor program. Participants in this program donate just one component of whole blood — platelets — by means of a machine capable of drawing the blood, separating the various components by weight and returning the red blood cells to the donor.

"As the blood comes out of your arm into the bag, the centrifuge will spin it, the platelets come off, and as the platelets are spun off the rest of the blood is returned to you in your other arm," said Crystal Meier, apheresis recruiter at the blood center.

Through this process, the center is able to obtain seven to eight times as many platelets from a single donor than they can take using a centrifuge and a unit of whole blood, Meier said.

Platelets are most commonly used for leukemia patients and cancer patients undergoing chemotherapy treatments. Other patients who face major blood loss, including those undergoing bone-marrow and other types of transplants, also make extensive use of platelets.

The UI blood center draws about 150 apheresis donors a week. "It's kind of funny, because there's a blood center located maybe 100 miles from here; they supply nine hospitals, and they draw approximately 40 donors a month," said Meier. "That gives you some idea of the great demand that we have here."

Apheresis donations do take longer — approximately two hours, as opposed to half an hour to 45 minutes for whole-blood donations. The actual donation time is shorter than the two-hour estimate, but time is required for paperwork, for taking health history records and for doing a mini-physical with blood-pressure and pulse readings.

To participate in the apheresis program, donors must have given at least one unit of whole blood in Johnson County, and an orientation program is mandatory.

The apheresis donor program offers donors the option of accepting $30 upon each platelet donation or of donating it to the blood center's education fund, Meier said.

"The $30 is basically for time involved in donating. We don't buy blood, we don't buy platelets," she said. "We're just offering you something for the amount of time that you have given up to spend here."

Persons interested in becoming donors of either whole blood or platelets can call the blood center at 356-2058 for further information.

Court

just-completed term allowed Rehnquist to be Rehnquist again, standard-bearer for the causes conservatives hold most dear.

Two major exceptions to the court's conservative path through the 1970s and 1980s — abortion and civil rights — are exceptions no more.

Waiting until the last day of the 1988-89 term to announce a decision in its most closely watched case of the decade, the court gave states far greater power to regulate abortion.

The immediate impact: Abortions are likely to become harder to get.

The implications: It now appears much more likely the court will reverse its 1973 decision, in Roe v. Wade, that women have a constitutional right to abortion. Reversal, which could come as early as next year, would allow states to outlaw most abortions.

A clear majority — Rehnquist, White, Scalia, Kennedy and O'Connor — believe Roe v. Wade was wrongly decided. Only O'Connor's reluctance to throw out the 1973 ruling stopped the court this time, but three new abortion disputes will be on the court's docket when it ends its summer recess in October.

In other key rulings this term, the court:

- Made it more difficult for minorities and women to prove on-the-job bias by using statistics.

- Gave white men more power to challenge court-approved affirmative action plans helping minorities and women as unlawful "reverse discrimination."

- Shielded states and state officials from some civil-rights lawsuits.

- Made it more difficult to sue cities when their employees violate someone's civil rights.

- Limited the scope of a key civil-rights law, ruling that it does not apply to racial or sexual harassment in employment.

- Ruled that states may not be sued under a federal law aimed at bettering the educational opportunities of handicapped people.

Palestine

plan." Rantisi also cited the blocking of medical equipment and supplies, the absence of a comprehensive health-education program in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and the decline in the number of health personnel due to denial of work permits as results of the 1967 occupation.

But Rantisi said these problems have compounded since the recent Palestinian uprising. "There's a second phase taking place now," he said. "The delay and blocking of the transportation of the injured leads to fatal results in many cases."

Rantisi said other developments in this second phase include the assault and detention of health professionals, the increase of health fees in hospitals and clinics, the substantial increase of medical insurance fees and the installment of long periods of curfews on refugee camps, villages and cities prohibiting access to medical care. "Curfews mean you are not allowed to open your window," he said, "And you can imagine a country which is already poor facing a curfew for more than one week — it results in births taking place in the home and (patients going without) insulin. A four-year-old girl was badly beaten because she opened her door to get some water."

Rantisi also said the Israeli forces have begun using gas bombs.

"I've seen many cases where these bombs were thrown into hospitals, mosques and churches," he said. "We have witnessed (several hundred) spontaneous abortions from exposure to tear gas."

"I think we deserve to be treated as human beings at least," he said.

But Rantisi ended the lecture on a hopeful note. He said the mental health of the Palestinians in the occupied territories is good.

"The more you are oppressed, the more you are united and the more you feel how great and valuable is your struggle and the more you feel close to your brothers," he said. "We have more dignity than we ever had before."

cheek and whispered in her ear, and they both smiled broadly.

Outside the courthouse, a group of supporters called for a presidential pardon. President George Bush's spokesman said that Bush wouldn't comment on the sentence and that a pardon "hasn't ever been discussed."

North, his lawyers, his minister and others with him left the courthouse by a side door. He made no comment.

John Keizer, North's chief prosecutor, also left without comment. Keizer's boss, independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, who had sought a prison term for North, said in a statement: "Sentence is uniquely a matter for the judgment of the trial judge. We had a full opportunity to present our views. We have no further comment."

During the probation period, Gesell ordered, North must devote

1,200 hours to a soon-to-start new program to help District of Columbia youths avoid involvement with drugs. "I want the community to get the benefit of your organizational and administrative skills, which are very, very high," the judge said.

North is free to continue the $25,000-a-speech tours that have occupied his time since his conviction for aiding and abetting in obstruction of Congress, for destroying or altering government documents and for accepting a gratuity — a security fence around his home.

The shredding conviction bars North from holding federal office, a disappointment to those who have been urging him to run for Congress.

He is expected to appeal the convictions.

For this we have to be very wise and very courageous," the Soviet president said.

Bush, who visits Warsaw on Sunday, urged the Soviet Union to withdraw military units it has stationed in Poland since the end of World War II.

On behalf of the NATO alliance, Bush called last month for sweeping reductions in conventional forces in Europe that would cut the number of U.S. and Soviet troops on the Continent to 275,000 for each superpower.

The Soviets would have to remove 325,000 men under the ceiling. The United States would have to cut only 30,000.

Panama blocks entrance to U.S. base

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Nearly 150 Panamanian paramilitary troopers blocked the entrance to a large U.S. Army base on Wednesday to protest what they called "lack of respect by the United States for Panama."

No incidents occurred during the nearly one hour that members of the so-called Dignity Battalion blocked the entrance to Fort Clayton, home of Brig. Gen. Mark Cisneros, commander of U.S. Army South.

Earlier Wednesday, the Foreign Ministry accused the U.S. Army of "provocations and intimidation" through weekend military maneuvers in civilian areas near the Panama Canal.

Cisneros said he ordered the exercises and they would continue. His forces are in charge of defending the canal.

The development was the latest in the confrontation between Washington and the government controlled by Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, commander of the defense forces.

Noriega is under U.S. indictment on drug trafficking charges, which he denies.

Flag-burner freed from federal prison

ATLANTA — A Puerto Rican nationalist sentenced to the federal prison in Atlanta for burning an American flag has been freed since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that such a protest is a legal exercise of freedom of speech.

Greg Bogdan, a spokesman for the U.S. Bureau of Prisons in Washington, D.C., confirmed Wednesday that Carlos Mendoza-Lugo, 36, was freed last week.

Mendoza-Lugo had filed a petition in U.S. District Court seeking release after the U.S. Supreme Court issued its ruling June 21.

Bogdan said the Puerto Rican magistrate who sentenced Mendoza-Lugo to the maximum one year in prison reduced the sentence to seven months, making him eligible for release.

But he said he did not know when the judge reduced the sentence or whether the reduction was tied to the Supreme Court ruling.

Jordan elections to exclude West Bank

AMMAN, Jordan — The government on Wednesday announced new procedures for the first nationwide elections in 22 years — and the first to separate the kingdom from the West Bank since Jordan's independence.

In a statement broadcast with the election announcement, Prime Minister Zeid Bin Shaker connected the new voting law with Jordan's support of the PLO as representative of Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied West Bank.

Government sources said the elections will take place Nov. 16, but there was no official announcement of the date.

Sources close to the prime minister said a ban will remain in effect on political parties, which were outlawed after a coup attempt in 1957.

An Interior Ministry statement over official Radio Jordan said the amended election law called for an 80-member Parliament elected solely from Jordan.

Gun-toting beer thief had had "a bad day"

TULSA, Okla. — A man who told a store clerk he had had a bad day pulled a .357-caliber Magnum handgun and stole a single bottle of beer, police said.

Police later arrested a man who handed over a gun but drank the rest of the evidence as officers approached.

A man took a 16-ounce bottle of beer to the counter of a convenience store Tuesday night, said Sgt. John Bowman.

"He said, 'Let me have this. I've had a bad day,'" Bowman said. "The attendant said he couldn't do that."

Bowman said the man then pulled the gun and pointed it at the clerk.

"He said, 'This is all I want. I don't want anything else' and walked out the door while continuing to hold the gun on the attendant," Bowman said.

Officers later saw a man fitting the robber's description at a parking lot. Bowman said the officers approached the man and ordered him to drop the gun and the beer.

"He complied with half of the order and drank the rest of his beer," Bowman said.

Presidential elections delayed in Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The legislature will put off electing Poland's new president until after President George Bush visits next week, a Communist official announced Wednesday.

Politburo member Marian Orzechowski, leader of the Communist deputies caucus in the Sejm, said the election by the National Assembly could not be held earlier because state officials will be out of the country Friday and Saturday and will be busy after that with the Bush visit.

The news came on the second day of the meeting of Poland's new Sejm and Senate, the first legislature in four decades in the East bloc to have opposition representation.

Bush is to visit Poland July 9 through 11 at the invitation of Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, who will accompany Bush during his activities in Warsaw and Gdansk. Before that, Jaruzelski will be attending a conference of Warsaw Pact political leaders in Bucharest on Friday and Saturday.

Orzechowski said at a news conference that he expected the presidential vote before July 22, Poland's national day, and that his caucus supported Jaruzelski for the post.

Communist Party and Solidarity officials earlier insisted the new president would be chosen before Bush's visit. The postponement Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski and Solidarity leader Lech Walesa sit together during the first session of the newly created Senate earlier this week. The legislature announced Wednesday it plans to delay choosing a president.

appeared related to ongoing indecision over who the party will nominate for the new six-year office that will oversee the army and foreign relations.

The presidency, a powerful post similar to the one created in the Soviet Union for Mikhail Gorbachev, is being restored after 37 years.

The president will oversee the army and foreign policy. He will be elected by the Sejm and Senate sitting together as the National Assembly, where the Communist coalition will have a 300-259 majority over Solidarity legislators. Jaruzelski had been the party's prime candidate, but he surprised the nation Friday by announcing he would not run and nominating Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak instead.

Since then, the party has asked Jaruzelski to reconsider. Orzechowski said he believed Jaruzelski still had not made a decision Wednesday.

He said the Communist caucus "supports the candidacy of Gen. Jaruzelski and is leading its activities in this direction." Jaruzelski was the best candidate "because of internal and international reasons," Orzechowski said.

Solidarity Sejm Deputy Adam Michnik has proposed that the union support the Communist candidate if Solidarity is given the right to form the next government. Behind-the-scenes negotiations on such an arrangement evidently continued.

Although initially greeted with skepticism by Solidarity members reluctant to take power so quickly, especially with the economy in disarray, Michnik's proposal appeared to gain cautious support among others quoted Wednesday in the union's Election Gazette daily.

The proposal should be taken as "an indication of a political possibility," said Sejm deputy Jacek Kuron.

West upset about Soviet MiG-23 crash

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — West Germany, the Netherlands and Belgium sharply criticized the Soviet Union Wednesday for not informing them sooner about the pilotless MiG-23 fighter jet that careened out of control over their territory.

A NATO commander joined the Netherlands and Belgium in calling for better East-West cooperation to avoid such incidents.

The Soviet fighter plane took off Tuesday from Poland on a training flight, but its pilot ejected after a mechanical problem developed, according to Tass, the official Soviet news agency. The jet, apparently still on automatic pilot, entered West Germany, crossed the Netherlands and crashed Tuesday near a heavily populated area in Belgium, killing one man in his home.

NATO officials said two U.S. Air Force F-15 aircraft shadowed the MiG as it flew for 560 miles over the three NATO countries but did not try to shoot it down for fear of spreading flaming debris over cities and towns.

"You can't just go up and shoot the plane down," said Lt. Col. Bernard Beck, a spokesman for Allied Forces Central Europe in Ramstein, West Germany.

"West Germany is densely populated, and you don't know where the plane will fall if you shoot it down at 30,000 feet. The risk factor is too great."

About 75 minutes elapsed between the time NATO first detected the plane and the time it crashed.

West Germany, the Netherlands and Belgium protested they had to wait more than 10 hours before Tass provided Moscow's first reaction to the incident.

Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov said Wednesday an investigation in Poland and at the crash site would try to determine why Warsaw Pact forces failed to detect and shoot down the plane. "It is difficult to say why it was not shot down, why it was not detected," Yazov told Tass.

A military report to the Soviet parliament said Soviet commanders learned within 90 seconds the pilot had bailed out but that they were still searching for the plane when its crash was reported by Western news agencies.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, who is on an official visit to France, said: "I regret this incident. The Belgians know. The Belgians know the cause. This type of accident can happen."

In Brussels, Foreign Minister Mark Eyskens summoned Felix Bogdanov, the Soviet ambassador, to discuss the crash. Afterward, Eyskens said the Soviets were "extremely slow" about notifying NATO countries.

To avoid such incidents, Belgium called for an improved flow of information between the NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

"My conclusion, corroborated by the Soviet ambassador, is that information systems have to be improved between the two blocs," Eyskens said.

Former neighbors criticize North's sentence as 'harsh'

PHILMONT, N.Y. (AP) — People in the rural village where Oliver North grew up criticized his sentence Wednesday as too harsh and said the former White House aide was a "fall guy" for higher-ups.

"If he came to Philmont tomorrow, I'd give him a hero's welcome," Mayor Phillip Mossman said after North was sentenced in Washington to two years' probation and a $150,000 fine for Iran-Contra crimes.

North, who could have been sent to prison for up to 10 years, was also given suspended prison terms of three, two and one years for his three felony convictions.

Charles Havelka, a retired real-estate agent whose son was a friend of North, called the sentence "ridiculous."

Havelka asserted that the former Marine lieutenant colonel was "just an intermediary" between then-President Ronald Reagan and then-Vice President George Bush and "all the rest."

Havelka said he remembered young North as a regular churchgoer, a Boy Scout, and later as a Marine, and said he's sure North did no wrong.

"If he's a patriotic American and he said he didn't do anything wrong, then he didn't," Havelka said.

North, a key figure in the scandal over the use of profits from arms sales to Iran to illegally fund the Nicaraguan Contra rebels, was convicted of aiding and abetting obstruction of Congress, destroying or altering government documents and accepting a gratuity, a security fence around his home.

Public support in this village of fewer than 2,000 people about 30 miles south of Albany has been mostly on North's side since congressional hearings on the Iran-

Oliver North

Contra scandal in the spring of 1987.

The hearings made North a hero to many Americans. Philmont even held an Oliver North Day in August 1987 to show their support.

The feeling that North was a patsy for higher-ups, especially Reagan and Bush, seemed widespread in the village.

At the sentencing, Judge Gerhard Gesell told North, "As you stand there now, you're not the fall guy for this tragic breach of the public trust."

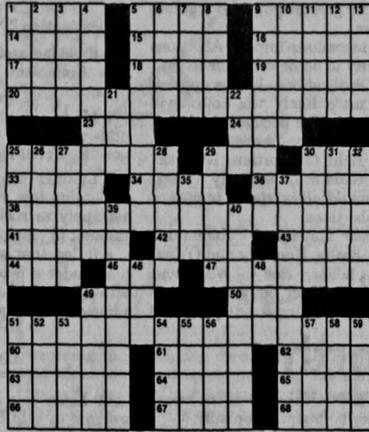

Mossman, though, said North's sentence was too harsh and that he was a "fall guy."

"Don't tell me that Reagan and Bush didn't know what was going on," Mossman said. "They come out on national television and call him a hero, and the next day they fire him."

Sharon Johnson, a real-estate broker, said North is "not the only one that should be in the position he is in."

ISU football players arrested

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Four Iowa State University football players are awaiting court action after being accused of the theft of bicycles valued at more than $3,000.

Charged with third-degree theft are sophomore offensive lineman Lance Henkel of Des Moines and sophomore linebacker Larry Ratigan of Council Bluffs. Charged with second-degree theft are two defensive linemen — junior Matt Rehberg of Omaha, Neb., and senior Randy Bern of Spencer.

The arrests took place late last week. The ISU security force said the investigation was triggered by a citizen's report of someone trying to steal bicycles on the campus of the Ames school.

All four athletes have been released pending further court proceedings.

Finks expected to replace Rozelle

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Finks, who once beat out John Unitas for a quarterback job but is better known for turning three losing teams into winners as an executive, is expected to be chosen Thursday as the NFL's first new commissioner in 30 years.

According to several NFL sources, Finks, who will turn 62 on Aug. 31, will be the only recommendation to the NFL owners by the six-member selection committee when the owners meet at 3 p.m. EDT.

In fact, Finks met with the committee in New York on Tuesday to finalize the details of his contract.

The vacancy was created when Pete Rozelle shocked the owners by announcing his retirement in March after 29 years. Rozelle's tenure was the second longest of any commissioner in a major sport — only the NHL's Clarence Campbell served longer, 32 years.

"We're going to recommend one man. We were told to identify a guy and that's what we're going to do," Wellington Mara of the New York Giants, co-chairman of the committee, said Wednesday.

Mara would not confirm that Finks was that man and stressed that the other owners didn't have to abide by the nomination.

McEnroe

a postmatch tirade against McEnroe, saying he was fed up with his antics.

"I think he behaved very well today," Wilander said. "I think he was just very concentrated. Maybe he has a little more respect for the top players."

McEnroe let his racket do most of the talking against Mild Mats, a stoic Swede whose reputation for calmness and coolness on the court is as ingrained as the American's bad-boy image.

In winning 7-6, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 to reach his first Grand Slam semifinal since 1984, McEnroe did it with feathery drop shots and volleys, slashing passing shots and hooking serves.

With Wilander matching him almost stroke for stroke for nearly four hours, McEnroe couldn't afford to get sidetracked with temper tantrums.

His few outbursts lasted only a few seconds.

Some snippets:

— "Oh no, you can't be serious," he shouted at Kaufman, complaining about a Wilander serve that was called in during the first set tiebreaker.

— "Every time! Can't you get it right?" after what he thought should have been called a service let in the second game of the second set.

— "C'mon, will you get with it?" he yelled at Kaufman, adding sarcastically, "Sure it was a good call" as he disputed another service line call in the fifth game of the second set.

— "I'm sick and tired of all this (crowd) noise," he shouted as Wilander served for the second set.

— "How can you call the ball out before it bounces?" he yelled in the first game of the fourth set.

— "That was definitely outside the line," he griped in the fifth game of the fourth set. "Sure guy, some call. See if you get this one."

At the postmatch news conference, McEnroe was asked whether his opponent affects his behavior on the court.

"When I go out there, it's mainly myself that I need to sort of keep on top of," he said. "But sometimes when you play someone like Mats, you prepare yourself better mentally."

McEnroe said his family life has had a calming effect.

"Having kids and marriage is the ultimate challenge," he said. "Playing tennis is the easy part. This in a way makes it more enjoyable."

McEnroe was asked what it is about him that stirs up so much interest and controversy.

"It's a combination of everything," he said. "A combination of my personality, a combination of the way I play, the fact that I've had a lot of success."

There were some who thought McEnroe might explode when asked about Fitzgerald's comments. But he was as calm as ever as he defended himself.

"I feel that was our grapes," he said. "It's easy to walk in after you lose a match and make it seem like I was the guy that was trying to pull this number on him or whatever, but I saw it a totally different way...."

"It was just one of those things as far as I'm concerned. It's the heat of the moment. When you are out there, you are exposing your whole soul. Both people are. Those things happen sometimes."

McEnroe further bolstered his nice-guy image later by comforting an 8-year-old girl who was knocked to the ground by a crowd that surged forward to catch a glimpse of him as he made his way through the All England Club.

The girl, Katie Watson, suffered a bruised hip and shoulder and a bloody nose.

McEnroe, who saw the incident, asked for the girl to be brought to the players' lounge where he and his wife, Tatum O'Neal, comforted the crying child.

"John was really nice," said the girl's mother, Mary Watson. "He sat Katie on his knee and said he wanted to buy her some sweets or something because he was so sorry for what had happened."

Wimbledon

"The guy was just bombing me," he said, rating Becker's serve as best among the semifinalists that also include Lendl, Stefan Edberg and John McEnroe. "Boris showed me today that he probably has the biggest serve out of all of them, and it just depends on his consistency of getting that first bomb in."

"It's just a huge serve. There really isn't anything you can do if he gets it in. I found myself trying to guess where he was going to hit it because it's a tough serve to read."

Chamberlin got so exasperated at his inability to return Becker's serve late in the second set that he jokingly gestured to Becker to show him where the next one would be heading. Becker pointed to a spot and the Californian from Manhattan Beach was able to win that point with a service return.

"Even if I knew where he was going to serve it, still it's only 50-50 to get it back," the former University of Arizona player said. "I think he said he was going to go to the backhand and he ended up going to the forehand."

"He just served it in there," said Chamberlin, who returned a winner for only his second point off Becker's serve in the set. "That was probably my best return of the match. Probably the only one I made off his first serve."

A Jepsen-Lohaus matchup holds some irony. Three years ago Lohaus was in a similar situation. Lohaus ended up being

He scored 10 points and grabbed 10 rebounds in a game against North Carolina last year. He was the PTL's MVP last season. But one summer and one game does not a Big Ten warrior make.

Last year Jepsen was the PTL's top gun. His team depended on him. This time around Jepsen is small change. His First National Bank team is loaded with talent.

NBA bound players such as Horton and Armstrong and the New Jersey Nets' Bill Jones play on the same team with Jepsen.

"It's more realistic this year," Jepsen said. "With those guys on my team I have to work for my offensive opportunities. Last year we'd just bring it down and get it in to me."

Jepsen doesn't have all the league's talent on his side. There are other giants to go up against. Like Minnesota Timberwolves Brad Lohaus.

A Jepsen-Lohaus matchup holds some irony. Three years ago Lohaus was in a similar situation. Lohaus ended up being drafted by the Boston Celtics before recently winding up in Minnesota.

"Les is doing all the right things, it will come with time," Hawkeye teammate Michale Ingram said. "Who'd of ever thought that Kevin Gamble would go from overseas to the CBA to the Celtics after being cut from the NBA once. Anything can happen."

Jepsen wouldn't mind that scenario.

"Hey I wouldn't mind being in Brad's shoes now," Jepsen said.

"He fit his role well. He got his points and rebounds and it got him a contract. But I'm not Brad, I'm Les, and there are points and rebounds to be had."

Now all Jepsen has to do is prove himself to the Big Ten.

"The only person you can intimidate is yourself," Jepsen said. "You can't outthink yourself or take everybody's opinions and develop a game. You just have to go out and play. I just want to go out and do what I know I can do."

Chinese officials claim Zhao tried to split party

BEIJING (AP) — Chinese legislators said Wednesday that ousted Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang tried to enlist the congress in his fight against hardline leaders who crushed student pro-democracy protests.

Delegates to the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress also condemned one of their number for supporting Zhao's effort.

The legislators' speeches, made in a closed meeting but carried by the official Xinhua News Agency, gave the first details of Zhao's failed power struggle against hardliners led by senior leader Deng Xiaoping. Party officials who ousted Zhao on June 24 said only that he "made the mistake of supporting the turmoil and splitting the party."

One congress delegate also lashed out at the U.S. Congress for voting for trade and aid sanctions against China following the army's June 3-4 attack on the protesters in which hundreds and possibly thousands of people died.

"It is a violation of the international law as well as a slander and attack on the Chinese people and Chinese government," Xinhua quoted Fu Hao, a delegate from northwestern China's Shaanxi province, as saying.

It quoted another delegate, Song Rufen of Sichuan province, as saying that after Premier Li Peng declared martial law May 20 to end the student protests, "people from Zhao's think tank came out from behind the scenes and advocated 'opposing martial law'."

"They also demanded... a special session of the National People's Congress," Song said. "The very next day, Zhao Ziyang also suggested that an emergency meeting of the (congress) Standing Committee be held."

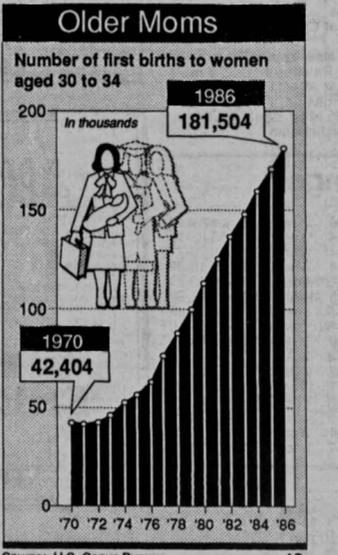

Song and several other delegates accused fellow legislator Hu Jiwei of supporting Zhao. Hu enlisted the help of a research institute run by China's first private high-technology company, the Stone Corp., in collecting legislators' signatures on a petition for an emergency congress session.

Women postpone 1st babies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of women having their first babies after age 30 has quadrupled in the last 16 years as they find time for families after completing educations and starting careers, a government report indicates.

As a result, women having their first babies are generally better educated than in years past, are seeking prenatal care earlier and are having fewer underweight children, the National Center for Health Statistics reported Wednesday.

The report comes just two weeks after a Census Bureau report showed that one-third of the children born in 1988 had mothers aged 30 and over.

Source: U.S. Census Bureau

Between 1970 and 1986, the number of first births to women aged 30 to 34 increased from 42,404 to 181,504, the health statistics center reported. For women aged 35 to 39 the total rose from 11,704 to 44,427 first births.

At the same time, the rates of first births for women in their teens and twenties were declining, the center added.

This decline, widely referred to as the "baby bust," has been attributed by social scientists to the growing desire of women to complete their educations and launch careers before beginning families.

But when asked in surveys about expectations of future births, large numbers of these women continued to report plans for families.

"The question that remains is to what extent those women who intend to have children will actually have the children they expect to bear," commented Stephanie Ventura of the statistics center in her report.

Meanwhile, the postponement of motherhood in favor of education is showing up in the statistics.

Among women aged 30 to 34, the proportion of first-time mothers who have college degrees increased from 40 percent in 1975 to 48 percent in 1986, Ventura's report showed.

While some increase can be attributed to the overall increase in educational attainment among women, the rate also reflects the postponement of childbearing by some women, the report commented.

"It is apparent that well-educated women... have postponed childbearing and that they are making up for at least some of the delay at a growing pace," Ventura concluded.

This increased educational level has proven a critical factor in women seeking early prenatal care and in having fewer underweight babies, she noted.

Birth weight is widely used as a measure of infant health, with those under 5 pounds 8 ounces considered to suffer from low birth weight, putting their health at risk.

For women aged 30 to 34, the report found, 7.5 percent of all births suffered from low birth weight, but among women with college educations the share was 5.8 percent.

"Greater educational attainment... is associated with more timely receipt of prenatal care and a better outcome in terms of birth weight," observed Ventura.

Shamir strengthens stance

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, giving in to demands from hawks in his right-wing Likud bloc, adopted a hard line on Wednesday that may make it more difficult to sell his peace proposals to Palestinians.

Shamir, in putting down a challenge to his leadership, came out strongly in favor of more Jewish settlements in the occupied territories and the exclusion of 140,000 Arabs in east Jerusalem from proposed elections to choose Palestinian negotiators.

He also demanded an end to violence associated with the Palestinian uprising before any vote could be held and rejected any possibility of a Palestinian state being formed.

Shamir's hardline speech raised a debate on whether his stands killed his plan for a vote among the 1.7 million residents of the occupied territories to choose representatives to negotiate limited Palestinian self-rule.

Finance Minister Shimon Peres, leader of the rival Labor Party, attacked the statements and raised the possibility his center-left party would drop out of the coalition government.

"I think they have put heavy shackles on the peace process, and the Labor Party institutions will have to debate where we go from here," Peres said. "I know there are some members who have reached a conclusion that we should leave the government."

The Palestine Liberation Organization had criticized the plan as a device to prevent creation of a Palestinian state.

In his address to 2,600 wildly cheering members of the Likud's Central Committee, Shamir used tough language that could further alienate Palestinians and thwart U.S. efforts to arrange peace talks.

While he noted the U.S. view that settlements are an obstacle to peace, Shamir sent his "warm blessing" to 80,000 settlers in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"We call for continuation of Jewish settlement in Judea, Samaria (West Bank) and the Gaza Strip... Every Jew who wants to will be able to settle in any place in the land of Israel and will receive support and security from the Israeli government," Shamir said.

He also restated Israel's claim to east Jerusalem, which was captured from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East war and which the PLO has demanded be the capital of a Palestinian state.

"Jerusalem is not part of the initiative," Shamir declared, sweeping aside a key Palestinian demand that east Jerusalem Arabs be allowed to take part in the proposed elections.

He also said Israel's security forces would "wipe out" the Palestinian uprising before any election was held.

Shamir's speech quieted a revolt led by Trade and Industry Minister Ariel Sharon, who wanted to amend the plan to include the hardline Likud positions.

Shamir won overwhelming approval, by a show of hands, for a compromise vote to accept his speech as party policy.

Intentional oil spill holds value

TRONDHEIM, Norway (AP) — A tanker spilled tons of thick crude oil into the ocean off Norway, and environmental experts liked what they saw.

U.S. and Norwegian scientists dumped 9,200 gallons of oil into the North Sea from the tanker Esso Bergen over the weekend. The object was to study the slick so that cleanup techniques could be improved.

Researchers who tracked the oil as it spread over six miles judged the experiment "a great success."

The U.S. Department of Interior paid much of the project's $600,000 pricetag. Private companies and the Norwegian government also backed the experiment.

It was conducted off western Norway because the United States virtually never allows such experiments to take place, said ocean engineer Mark Reed.

Norway permitted the oil to befoul its waters so scientists could study special buoys for tracking spills and ways to combat oil pollution. It has permitted smaller spills in the past for cleanup training.

Researchers collected 500 samples of the slick, tried chemicals for breaking down crude oil, trailed the floating oil from aircraft and studied its effect on fish and birds, Reed said by radio from Norwegian research ship Ende Dyroey.

"In Norway, we realize that the only way to learn how to prevent damage from an oil spill is to conduct experiments on a real one," said Roar Bjerknes, of the Trondheim marine technology company Oceanor.

"One American scientist told me it was great to be able to come to Norway and be allowed to create an oil slick," said Bjerknes, whose company led the test.

The Americans took a keen interest due to a series of spills of the U.S. coast, including this spring's Valdez, Alaska, accident.

Permission to dump oil of Norway's coast was not granted lightly by this nation noted for strict environmental rules.

Morten Hauge, of Norway's Pollution Control Board, said this record research spill was allowed only after public hearings and risk analyses. He said cleanup equipment stood by in case the slick got out of hand.

"The oil was spilled 70 miles from land and was too far out to sea for there to be any risk of it reaching the coast," he said.

The four-day experiment tested about 40 U.S. and Norwegian electronic buoys designed to track slicks and beam information to a computer via satellite, said Reed, an engineer with the Applied Sciences Associates, based in Rhode Island.

'Mad Mac' excels on Centre Court

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — The Wimbledon crowd came with images of Mad Mac turning Centre Court into Thunderdome.

But all it got from John McEnroe was great tennis.

The only fireworks were from the explosion of winners that lit up McEnroe's quarterfinal victory over Mats Wilander.

Sure, McEnroe occasionally argued over a line call, glared at chair umpire Richard Kaufman and slammed the ball into the net in disgust.

But that's mild stuff from a volatile player with tabloid nicknames such as "McBrat" and "Mac The Mouth."

Why, he even bought candy for a little girl.

Two days ago, in his victory over John Fitzgerald, he complained about a noisy courtside refrigerator, received an unsportsmanlike-conduct warning for delaying, and snapped at his opponent. That prompted Fitzgerald to launch into

Strong serving highlights mens' quarterfinal action

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — They turned Court 1 at Wimbledon into a shooting gallery Wednesday, with a couple of Americans posing as the ducks.

Unseeded Dan Goldie and Paul Chamberlin were ambushed in the men's quarterfinals by the top two players in the world, ending up on the wrong end of 30 aces.

Boom! Top seed Ivan Lendl unloaded 21 aces in a 7-6, 7-6, 6-0 defeat of Goldie, who was hobbled by a hamstring injury.

Thwack! Two-time champion Boris Becker, who is ranked second in the world but seeded third at Wimbledon, crashed nine aces and dozens of service winners against Chamberlin.

"I was still looking forward and the ball was by me," Chamberlin said. "The next time I play him I'll probably wear a cup and a chest protector."

Goldie, ranked 48th in the world, held his serve throughout the first two sets but was unable to handle Lendl's high-kicking deliveries. His mobility was greatly hampered as the match progressed because of a hamstring pull suffered Tuesday during practice. "I was hitting a lot of heavy first and even second serves," Lendl said. "It's ideal for me on grass to hit heavy serves, not 100 percent strength but maybe 85 percent with a lot of spin." Chamberlin, ranked 91st in the world, was overmatched against Becker's arsenal, collecting just six points off the West German's serve in the first two sets of his 6-1, 6-2, 6-0 defeat. Fans call on retired Phillie

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Schmidt and Jose Canseco proved again that when it comes to All-Star voting, popularity counts more than productivity.

Schmidt, retired since May 29, and Canseco, disabled all season, were elected Wednesday to start in next week's All-Star Game.

Schmidt became the first retired player elected. He is ineligible to play because he is inactive, but he will be introduced in pregame ceremonies. Canseco, however, can play and plans to Tuesday night in Anaheim, Calif.

"I'll tip my hat to the crowd and get goosebumps one more time," Schmidt said. "I think that's something I'll always remember and always be proud of."

Schmidt, seventh on the all-time home run list, won the closest race at any position, holding off Cincinnati's Chris Sabo by 16,136 votes as the National League's third baseman. Schmidt, who was batting .203 with six homers and 28 RBIs when he retired, led Sabo by 87,000 votes going into the final week of fan balloting.

"Maybe it will start a new craze. Guys will start to retire before the All-Star game," Schmidt said.

Schmidt said that even if he was allowed to play, he would not.

"There is nothing to gain. If I strike out I'd have to live with that the rest of my life. If I got a hit I'd be second guessed. They'd say that I could still do it, should not have retired," he said. "I made the right decision. I don't belong on the field."

NL President Bill White and All-Star Manager Tom Lasorda of Los Angeles will pick a replacement for Schmidt, an 11-time All-Star for Philadelphia. A starter does not have to be announced until game-time.

Sabo is on the disabled list through the All-Star break and cannot play. Howard Johnson or Bobby Bonilla is likely to start. All reserves and pitchers will be named Thursday.

Canseco, last year's American League Most Valuable Player, has been out since spring training with a fractured wrist. He is playing for Oakland's Class AA Huntsville team on a rehabilitation assignment.

"The fans are and have been extremely supportive of me," Canseco said. "They are the ones who vote for who they want to see in the game, their favorites, and obviously I'm one of their favorites."

Canseco plans to make his 1989 major-league debut on Sunday, the Athletics' final game before the break.

"At least I'll play once before the All-Star Game," he said.

But Oakland manager Tony La

Russa and general manager Sandy Alderson sounded unhappy about Canseco's plans.

"What I'm concerned about is if he has his head on straight about what he's supposed to be doing, and that's to help us win the division," La Russa said. "If he doesn't understand that, then the All-Star Game is just one little problem. I think he understands that."

Canseco, just 5-for-22 with no extra-base hits for Huntsville, was not in the starting lineup Wednesday night because of his sore wrist.

"Well, I'm told he's not playing tonight. So it sounds to me like he's still playing his way into shape," La Russa said.

Added Alderson: "It's our decision when he comes off the disabled list."

Iowa senior will help fill scoring vacancy

Michael Trilk
 The Daily Iowan

School is still out on Iowa senior Les Jepsen.

Jepsen, a 7-foot center, is one of the Hawkeye basketball team's two returning starters who will be faced with the task of filling in for Iowa's three leading scorers. Roy Marble, B.J. Armstrong and Ed Horton are all headed for the NBA.

"The scoring will take care of itself," Jepsen said after Wednesday's Prime Time League action.

"I like to score just as much as anyone else, but I'm not too concerned with it. We'll be able to score points."

That's pretty big talk from a guy who averaged just over four points per game last year. But Jepsen knows he has his work cut out for him.

"Hey we're talking 60 points," he added. "I'm just working on getting stronger, be quicker. I'm working on my shot blocking and my rebounding. In Big Ten play a guy that can get 10 rebounds is a commodity. If I can become better defensively my scoring opportunities will be there."

The question with Jepsen is certainly not size. There is not an abundance of 7-footers in the college game. But his quickness and strength are both question marks on the basketball floor.

He has demonstrated that there is some power in his lanky frame. Earlier this summer he crushed two mammoth home runs in a softball game in North Liberty, Iowa. And he has proven he can contribute on the basketball floor.

Federal judge grants Rose 2 more weeks

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Pete Rose gained at least two more weeks of protection against any disciplinary action Wednesday when a federal judge put off deciding which court will handle Rose's lawsuit against baseball.

U.S. District Judge John D. Holschuh gave Rose's lawyers until July 17 to file their arguments for keeping the lawsuit before a state judge in Cincinnati. Baseball's lawyers must file their arguments July 12.

Lawyers for both sides agreed that while Holschuh considers the case, the Cincinnati Reds manager will continue to be protected against suspension or firing — a safeguard he gained under a temporary restraining order June 25. Rose, who is alleged to have bet on Reds games as well as others, cannot be fired or suspended for at least three days after Holschuh rules.

"I'm very pleased," Rose lawyer Robert G. Stachler said as he emerged from a hearing with the judge Wednesday afternoon.

Rich Levin, a spokesman for Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti, said the delay in getting a decision "wasn't unexpected."

Holschuh will decide a matter that could be pivotal in the outcome of Rose's suit which seeks to bar Giamatti from deciding his case.

The commissioner wants the suit decided in federal court, where previous commissioners have had their sweeping authority upheld. Rose's lawyers want to keep the matter in state court in Cincinnati, where they have managed to tie Giamatti's hands in deciding Rose's fate.

Rose could be banned for life if Giamatti believes evidence that the manager bet on his own team. Rose got a 14-day temporary restraining order June 25 from Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel that prevents Giamatti from holding a hearing on the gambling allegations or suspending Rose.

Nadel was scheduled to begin a hearing Thursday in Cincinnati on a temporary restraining order, but that is now postponed.

Baseball's lawyers turned to federal court Monday after failing to get Nadel's temporary order nullified in a state appeals court, which concluded it had no legal standing to intervene.

Rose's lawyers lashed out against the commissioner's office on Wednesday, saying Giamatti was turning to the federal courts in an attempt to give Rose "a predetermined death sentence."

"By taking two strikes in the state courts, baseball now tries to avoid strike three by removing this proceeding to what it hopes will be a more favorable venue," Stachler wrote, in papers filed with Holschuh.
