United flight crashes in Sioux City

185 feared dead in attempted emergency landing

SIoux CITY(AP) — A United Airlines DC-10 carrying about 290 people crashed Wednesday in an explosive ball of fire and cartwheeled down a runway after the pilot tried to make an emergency landing. The fire chief estimated 185 to 195 people were killed.

At least 125 survivors were treated for injuries, officials said. There was no immediate explanation for the discrepancy in numbers.

Flight 232, from Denver to Philadelphia via Chicago, carried 11 crew members and an estimated 279 passengers, including one infant, said United spokesman Lawrence Nagin. United spokeswoman Deborah Jones earlier said there were 287 passengers. No one could immediately explain the differing numbers.

The plane crashed on an inactive runway at Sioux Gateway Airport after circling for about a half-hour while pilots told passengers to prepare for a crash-landing, survivors said. The accident could be the second-deadliest air disaster in U.S. history.

The 15-year-old plane had "complete hydraulic failure" before the crash just after 4 p.m., Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Fred Farrar said. The tail engine failed, and this may have caused a hydraulic failure, said Bob Raynesford, another FAA spokesman.

Nagin said he did not know if hydraulic problems were a factor.

Fire Chief Bob Hamilton estimated the number of dead at 185 to 195. The search for bodies was difficult because they were scattered in a field of corn 4 feet tall, he said. Nagin said he could not confirm the number of dead.

Survivor Charles Martz of Castle Pines, Colo., said there was no panic after the pilot announced there was engine trouble. Then, just before landing, the pilot "came on and said that this may be more than a rough landing, so do the best you can to assume the (crash preparedness) position."

"Suitcases, paper, mail, clothes, unfortunately people, were laying all over the runway," said witness Ed Forst. "It must be scattered a good quarter of a mile down the runway."

Still, some people walked away from the wreckage. Melanie Cincala of Toledo, Ohio, a passenger on Flight 232, said there was a fire on the plane, and a fireball "flashed past us." The plane burst into flames after she got off, she said.

"We could see the plane tumbling down the runway," said Mark Smith, a witness who said he was working about 1,500 yards from the site.

He said the plane broke into "15,000 different pieces." A couple said they found the plane's nose 75 miles away.

Maj. Rick Sorensen with the Iowa Air National Guard said he had just landed his plane when the jetliner crashed.

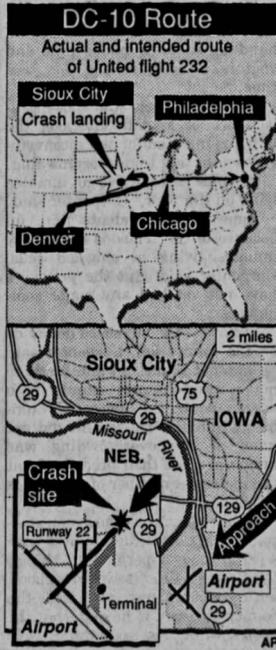

"Shortly before touchdown . . . the right wing began to dip or began to roll, and the nose began to fall to a position of approximately 15 to 25 degrees right-bank and possibly 10 degrees nose-low," he told CNN. "It was very apparent at that moment that he could not make a safe landing. The only question would have been how disastrous a landing would it be. It was a very disastrous landing. There were a lot of things falling off the plane."

Sorensen said that while he was in the air, he heard radio traffic from the pilot.

"The suggestion . . . was that he could turn only in one direction, and he was not sure he could make the runway. Then he turned left and headed for the southwest runway . . . and everything appeared to be somewhat about normal," with the DC-10 approaching faster than usual. He said that in general the faster the approach in such a case, the more control the pilot has. That's when the right wing dipped.

The plane "bounced twice, flipped into the air, and

CAC audit: $1.5 million misspent in UI programs

Brian Dick

One and one-half million dollars lost to improperly budgeted UI academic programs and services has been identified by the UI Collegiate Associations Council in an internal audit unofficially released Wednesday.

In the wake of the state Board of Regents' efforts to eliminate the duplicated services at the three regents' universities, students at the UI have begun a similar measure of their own to trim the academic budget.

The soon-to-be-released six-month study done by the CAC examined a number of programs and services provided by the UI, which, if eliminated, could net central administration $1.5 million in savings.

The team of student investigators — made up of members of the CAC, Liberal Arts Student Association and Student Senate — began the audit last February to strengthen the UI's academic programs by identifying areas of waste and cost overrun within the university system, CAC President Dan Shanes said.

"Every dollar we save today improves the quality of our education while holding down potential tuition increases," he said. "We feel it was the least we could do."

The audit team focused its study primarily on the Office of Campus Programs and Student Activities and the UI's in-house printing service, both of which auditors targeted for elimination.

According to the office's mission statement, its goals are to "create opportunities for students to participate in a wide number of diverse activities, assist the development of the panhellenic system, foster the development of leadership skills and assist student organizations utilize the full resources

Sandinistas celebrate 10th year in power

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega marked the 10th anniversary of the Sandinista revolution Wednesday by calling for President George Bush to "stop his policy of war against Nicaragua" and dismantle the Contras.

"Today the people are better off than before 1979," Ortega told more than 100,000 people who jammed the Plaza of the Revolution along the shores of Lake Managua.

"Better days are coming," he said as the chanting and singing crowd held aloft a sea of the red-and-black flags of the ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front.

Ortega said the rally showed the depth of Sandinista support 10 years to the day after they took power following the defeat of dictator Anastasio Somoza, whose family had ruled Nicaragua with U.S. support since the 1930s.

Until Wednesday, celebrations had been low-key, in part due to Nicaragua's miserable economic state which left many unenthusiastic about the Sandinistas.

But when rain clouds that had dampened the city cleared away, thousands flowed into the plaza. Soviet-made MI-17 helicopters with news photographers aboard circled overhead.

Most of those at the rally were young people, chanting "The land is ours!" and "We have 10 (years) down, and we continue ahead!"

Vice President Dan Quayle answers questions during a brief press conference at the Cedar Rapids Airport Wednesday night. Quayle was the featured speaker at a fund-raiser for Gov. Terry Branstad and other Iowa Republican candidates in Cedar Rapids later Wednesday night.

Quayle tells fund-raiser guests he's 'looking forward' now

Jay Casini
The Daily Iowan

CEDAR RAPIDS — Vice President Dan Quayle made a short visit to Iowa Wednesday night to speak at a Cedar Rapids fund-raiser for Iowa Republican candidates.

Quayle began a brief press conference at the Cedar Rapids airport by expressing his condolences to the families of the victims of a United Airlines flight that crashed in Sioux City just hours before the vice president arrived in the state. Quayle and his family were returning to Washington, D.C., after spending four days in California.

During the press conference, Quayle was asked for his reaction to a new book by political analysts Jules Whitcover and Jack Germond, "Whose Broad Stripes and Bright Stars? The Trivial Pursuit of the Presidency in 1988." In one chapter of the book, political consultants who worked with Quayle during the campaign characterized him as a "light-weight," childlike candidate extremely unprepared for the rigors of a national campaign.

"I haven't read the book, and I haven't talked to any of them, but it's sort of given me a little bit of understanding on how some of the negative things that were said during the campaign didn't really come from the opposition. It came from the people who were supposed to be loyal to me," Quayle said. "That's unfortunate, but the campaign's behind me. We're looking forward."

But when Quayle was asked whether he was prepared to take the presidential reins in the event of a crisis, the vice president smiled thinly and replied, "I'm prepared."

After the news conference, Quayle spoke at a dinner to raise funds for Iowa GOP candidates. Iowa Republican Chairman Richard Schwarm said Quayle's visit is evidence that the Bush administration has not written off Iowa, although Bush and Quayle lost the state in the 1988 election.

The vice president said he was delighted to be back in Iowa, a Midwestern state he said shared similar values with his native Indiana.

"We haven't been avoiding it," Quayle said. "Let me say that the next time around we hope to do better."

Quayle said it was important for the Republican party to re-establish a majority in the U.S. Senate and said Rep. Tom Tauke reflects the values of Iowans better than Democratic Sen. Tom Harkin.

"We certainly feel that Tom Tauke will offer a clear choice over the incumbent," he said.

Quayle briefly addressed the Bush administration's views on current drought-relief legislation. "Let's get all the facts in first," Quayle said.

The vice president also discussed an address by President George Bush scheduled for Thursday that will provide "a sense of direction" for the U.S. space program in the next decade.

Bush deciding fate of possible moon station

WASHINGTON (AP) — President George Bush, hoping to revitalize the U.S. space program on the 20th anniversary of man's first steps on the moon, was deciding Wednesday if and when America can afford a multibillion dollar mission to the moon and Mars, officials said.

Bush was reviewing a draft of a major policy speech, to be delivered Thursday, endorsing the idea of a permanent U.S. moon station from which astronauts could fly to Mars, according to administration sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The president was said to be weighing the huge costs involved as well as the technological problems, trying to avoid setting forth a challenge that budget constraints would make impossible to achieve. But he also was said to be determined to declare a substantial goal.

"He recognizes that the lack of goals has been a hindrance" to space progress since the nation's Apollo missions ended, said one official.

One source said a possibility under consideration was to call for the lunar station by 2010 and the Mars flight by 2020. Such a venture would double the nation's $13 billion-a-year space program, officials said.

Other sources said there were no timetables or cost figures included in the recommendation that Bush was reviewing.

An alternative option, sources said, would be for Bush to back the concept of the moon-Mars project but ask the National Space Council to develop a specific proposal.

One administration official close to the issue said Bush appeared likely to endorse in some way the goal of building a permanent moon post as a way station to Mars. But whether that would be set out as a general concept or a more specific policy was unclear.

"It's not a question of whether we will go to Mars. Some day we will go to Mars. It's a question of how quickly," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The moon-Mars recommendation originated in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which sent it to the president via Vice President Dan Quayle and the staff of the National Space Council that he chairs.

Bush's speech Thursday, on the 20th anniversary of the U.S. moon landing, will include a "pretty general two- or three-sentence kind of goal," said Marlin Fitzwater, White House press secretary.

As he weighed his decision, Bush spoke to Quayle about the matter on Tuesday and planned to discuss it with him again Wednesday by telephone from California, where the vice president is on a speaking

No end in sight to crowding in national and county jails

Johnson County sheriff reports nearly constant 'full house'

Kathryn Nielsen
The Daily Iowan

Inmate populations are burgeoning in prisons and jails across the state and nation, and Johnson County jails are no exception, according to Robert Carpenter, Johnson County sheriff.

The Johnson County Jail, built just eight years ago and expected to meet the county's jail needs until the next century, has been filled to capacity almost daily since the beginning of the year, Carpenter said.

"With the exception of about two or three days, or, say, maybe a week, we've been over capacity since January," he said.

Eight years ago, a daily average of 18 inmates occupied the county jail. But since then, the daily population has grown. Now, an average of about 55 inmates occupy the jail cell daily, Carpenter said.

That amounts to a 33-percent increase in the daily population of the jail.

Originally designed to hold 47 inmates, the Johnson County Jail gets strained when 55 and sometimes over 60 inmates occupy the cells, Carpenter said.

Considering that the number of deputies working in the Johnson County Jail is only one more than eight years ago, the crowded conditions create safety concerns and other problems for officers, he said.

"It's just the fact that you've got more people to do running for. We're constantly on the run here," he said.

Having to shuttle prisoners back and forth from the courthouse and handling inmates' phone calls and visitors all require the deputies' time, he said.

While the officers suffer the inconvenience of a staff shortage, the inmates must suffer the inconveniences resulting from overcrowding.

"In some cases, we've got inmates lying on the floor," Carpenter said.

Some minor incidents flare up because of the tensions created by inmates living in crowded cells, Carpenter said. But the prisoners have not yet had any major complaints.

In spite of the increased demands on the county jail, Carpenter said he has not requested any funds to make the changes required to accommodate the increased number of inmates. He said he did not know if the overcrowding was temporary but then predicted that the increased number of inmates is permanent.

"At this point, it would appear — considering the situation over time — that it is a permanent thing," Carpenter said. "It would appear, with the amount of cases the county attorney is having, that the overcrowding is something we'll have to deal with fairly soon."

The best method of dealing with the crowded conditions would be to add space to the existing county jail, Carpenter said.

Presently, the Johnson County Board of Supervisors would not be prepared to funnel money toward the jail.

"We're just getting the first rumblings ourselves," Supervisor Patricia Meade said. "We'll have to look at it, assess it and come up with alternatives."

Whatever the solution, it will cost money, Bob Burns, supervisor chairman, said.

He said that before anything is done, it must be established by the sheriff and Johnson County attorney that the overcrowding is permanent.

Carpenter said the prison population will remain high until he is told by state officials to reduce the inmate population.

"Right now I'm not sure when that will be," Carpenter said. "Naturally, if I can put up a cot and keep them here, it's cheaper for me and it's cheaper for the county."

Burns said that new state and national laws may be the reason for the overcrowded conditions in Johnson County jails.

"With the differences in sentences and drunken driving laws, they'll be picking up and putting an awful lot of people in jail," Burns said.

Grant funds program to increase awareness of career opportunities

Tonya Feit
The Daily Iowan

A $25,000 grant will be used for a new program to increase teen awareness of non-traditional career opportunities through three local educational facilities.

The Sex Equity Incentive and Model Grant was awarded to the Mayor's Youth Employment Program, the Iowa City Community School District and the School District Foundation by the State of Iowa Bureau of Career and Vocational Education.

The program is designed to target teen parents or prospective teen parents, according to Peg McElroy, executive director of the Mayor's Youth Program. But it is open to any teen-ager who would like help in identifying career opportunities.

"This program opens opportunities in individuals' lives to explore careers that typically have not been available to them because they were gendered male/female," McElroy said. "We want to show (careers in) those areas are open and even encouraged."

The directive of the model grant is specifically for teen women to explore non-traditional careers, but the program is open to young men as well.

McElroy said the program will help teen parents explore careers they thought may not be open to them because of gender, such as a young woman discovering a skill in plumbing or a young man finding interest in clerical work.

In breaking down traditional gender roles, more jobs will be available to teens to support their families, she said.

The program also provides the opportunity for teens to explore their wide variety of interests before choosing a career.

The Mayor's Youth Program will set up and monitor apprenticeships with approximately six local businesses for teens.

Before receiving an apprenticeship, individuals will attend a series of workshops sponsored by the foundation and the district. The workshops will help teens identify their areas of interest and explore careers involving those interests.

Once the interests have been focused to a vocation, an apprenticeship will be set up for each teen for one to three trimesters.

Interim Superintendent Al Azinger said the district is positive about its role in identifying students for the program and in setting up workshops to help them.

"This will help a lot of kids that need support in terms of dealing with job choices," Azinger said. "We don't really have a program like that right now."

Originally, the program hoped to serve 36 teens. But complete funding was not available so the number will decrease significantly, McElroy said.

The program is scheduled to begin in late September.

Climatologist: Iowa has enough rain to sustain

DES MOINES (AP) — Several areas of Iowa have received normal rainfall, and barring a prolonged heat wave, farmers in those areas won't need any more rain to sustain crops, state climatologist Harry Hillaker said Wednesday.

But the rest of the state, despite the generous rains early in the week, remains abnormally dry.

"We hope this is the start of something good. But on the negative side, it doesn't look like there is any really good chance for rain in the near future," Hillaker said.

Some areas are lucky enough not to need any more, at least for the growing season, he said.

"There are little pockets where they've essentially had normal rainfall," he said. "The Fort Dodge and Webster City area, Cass County in the southwest, and the area between Oskaloosa and Ottumwa, each of those places has actually had normal to a little above normal for this entire summer."

"Barring a big heat wave, there is probably enough moisture to make a good crop regardless if they get more rain," he said.

"So far this year, we're up to about 12.5 inches on the average statewide, which is about 5.6 inches below normal," he said.

Verdict still out on Mack case; Will jury believe him, or White?

NEVADA, Iowa (AP) — Former Iowa State University basketball player Sam Mack had too much at stake to rob a restaurant willingly, so he must have been forced to commit the crime, his lawyer argued Wednesday.

In final remarks at Mack's trial, attorney Ray Rosenberg told jurors the verdict will turn on whether they believe Mack or Levin White, a former ISU football player who pleaded guilty to first-degree robbery in the March 20 robbery at a Burger King in Ames.

The jury deliberated four hours Wednesday night without reaching a decision. They will return Thursday morning.

Mack testified that White forced him at gunpoint to take part in the robbery at a Burger King in Ames on March 20. White said Mack planned the robbery because he wanted to get money to deal cocaine.

Rosenberg called White "one of the biggest liars I've ever had the misfortune to encounter."

Story County attorney Mary Richards countered that Mack had plenty of chances to back out of the robbery and contended that compulsion was the only defense Rosenberg could muster because Mack was caught "red-handed" at the restaurant.

Mack has been on trial since July 11 on charges of first-degree robbery and second-degree kidnapping. District Court Judge Mark Cady said the jury could find Mack guilty or innocent of those charges or of second-degree robbery or third-degree kidnapping.

Mack testified earlier this week he went along with the robbery only because White threatened to shoot him and everyone in the restaurant if he didn't cooperate.

"The issue is clear," Rosenberg said. "Only two people know exactly what happened between them in the vital hours preceding their entry into Burger King."

Rosenberg said the jury should believe Mack because White had lied consistently, both to police officers immediately after the robbery and on the witness stand.

The lawyer also said Mack had a lot to lose by doing something illegal. He reminded the jurors that Mack, Iowa State's third-leading scorer last season, had a promising future in basketball and had been named to a Big Eight Conference all-star team that was to play several games in Australia.

In addition, Rosenberg said, Mack didn't need money because he received a $1,400 Pell Grant on top of his athletic scholarship and had $140 in his pocket the night of the robbery.

"He had everything in the world going for him," Rosenberg said. "Do you believe that a person with his reputation, everything going for him, would commit a crime when there was no possible way he would not get caught?"

Richards contended that Mack had no choice but to say he was forced into the holdup.

Harkin on flag-burning: Let passions cool

DES MOINES (AP) — Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, expressed growing doubts Wednesday about a constitutional amendment to prohibit flag-burning, saying it is time to "cool the passions."

"More and more, I'm beginning to question that as the proper course," Harkin said. "As a veteran myself, I will never desecrate the flag, and as a senator, I don't want to do anything to desecrate the freedoms the flag stands for."

Harkin said he is not ready to take a position on the proposed amendment, preferring instead to await the outcome of congressional hearings. But he said he is uncomfortable with the concept and doesn't like the emotion surrounding the debate. "I don't know that you make good policy decisions in the heat of passion," said Harkin during a conference call with Iowa reporters. "I think we ought to wait until the hearings run their course. Let's see if there's another way to solve it without amending the constitution."

Last month, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that burning the flag was a protected form of free speech. That touched off an uproar and led to the introduction in Congress of a proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit flag-burning.

Harkin said he did not want to alter the Bill of Rights contained in the first 10 amendments to the Constitution. "I have some great fears that once that is breached what it might lead to," Harkin said. "I'm going to take my time. I'm going to look at it."

Harkin said the heat of the debate may be centered in Congress. During a swing around Iowa over the July 4th holiday, the issue didn't come up, Harkin said.

"I sense that the passions are cooling very rapidly," he said. "People are beginning to take a more sober, serious look at it."

"I never had one person come up to me and ask me to support the constitutional amendment," Harkin said.

Haunting anniversary

On Tuesday, July 18, Sen. Edward Kennedy faced a haunting anniversary. Exactly 20 years before, around midnight on Chappaquiddick Island's Dike Bridge, Kennedy walked away from his sinking automobile while a young woman drowned inside.

Days later, in an appeal to Massachusetts voters, Kennedy described his behavior on that fateful evening as "indefensible." Yet, in 1989, Kennedy remains one of the most revered leaders in modern Democratic politics and continues to garner surprising support from in the Democratic Party's regular scramble for electable presidential candidates.

Despite their best efforts, the powerful Kennedy clan could not erase the past completely; Chappaquiddick has stood as a looming obstacle in Kennedy's runs for the Democratic nomination. The father of Mary Jo Kopechne, the Kennedy campaign worker who was killed that night, said the tragedy brought one benefit — "It kept the senator from becoming president."

But, although Chappaquiddick derailed the youngest Kennedy son's seemingly inevitable track to the White House, it did not completely destroy an ascending political career. The reputations of greater men, from families of less stature, have been ruined by indiscretions nowhere near the magnitude of Chappaquiddick. Why not Kennedy?

For his political salvation, Kennedy owes a great debt to Kennedy clout and the Kennedy myth.

Kennedy's behavior on July 18, 1969, was indeed indefensible. And after a grave mistake and a horrible tragedy, Kennedy relied on his family and a loyal corps of campaign workers to shield him from the law and from the truth.

Even after the massive cover-up was chronicled in a number of published accounts, Kennedy escaped. Whether it was Kennedy's own stature and charisma that saved him from revelations about the cover-up, or the Democratic faithful's allegiance to the memory of his slain brothers, Kennedy's evasion of the reality of Chappaquiddick paints an appalling portrait of both the senator's use of power and his contemptible conscience.

Quayle: No mercy

The Associated Press photo of Vice President Dan Quayle that came over the wires yesterday proved irresistible to many newspapers, The Daily Iowan and The New York Times among them.

The photo, taken at the General Dynamics plant in San Diego, showed the vice president beaming broadly as he waved a model of the Atlas rocket — harmless enough, but the embarrassing visual metaphor, to all who saw the photo, came across loud and clear.

The photo itself is hardly worth more than a giggle, but it's one more feature of a bad week for the vice president. On Saturday, speaking before a gathering of Young Republicans, he confused moon-walking astronaut "Buzz" Aldrin with Congressman "Buz" Lukens, the Ohio representative recently convicted for having sex with a minor. Worst of all for the hapless VP, previews of a forthcoming book by syndicated columnists Jack Germond and Jules Witcover indicate that it will revive the competency issue, this time from inside the Republican party.

Scheduled for general release in late summer, the book describes Quayle as, in the words of Reagan White House insider Joseph Canzeri, "like a little kid."

The synchronicity of the week's events was not lost on editors at the Times, who ran the ostensibly unrelated Quayle model-rocket photo next to a story with the headline: "Quayle depicted as inept by GOP aides in book."

For the media to manipulate photos and text unfairly to portray a world leader as a buffoon is unconscionable. But in the case of Dan Quayle, one has to wonder where reporting should end and mercy begin.

And despite his and George Bush's loud cries of "disloyalty," one also must wonder what Quayle campaign insiders, all with deep ties to the GOP, would possibly gain by unfairly sinking the good character of a man from their own political house.

Watching Dan Quayle made a fool of disturbs the sense of kindness. But he is not, as George Bush told reporters aboard Air Force One Tuesday, a victim of "the ugly side of politics" or, butchering his metaphors, "a post-mortem kick in the ankle."

He is the victim of a colossal, irrefutable mismatch of man and office. He is the victim of George Bush.

Go ask Ottumwa

Ottumwa school officials should not bow to pressure from parents to ban "Go Ask Alice" from classes in the district's junior high schools.

Parents who have complained about the book — the diary of an anonymous teen-ager who became addicted to drugs — apparently don't mind the content. It's the offensive language that troubles them.

Censorship issues aside, what a preposterous complaint about a book whose authenticity, offensive language included, makes a persuasive statement to young people not to take drugs.

That's a message that can't be tidied.

Agreeable, but can he lead?

For a true political junkie, July 20 is not the 20th anniversary of man's first walk on the moon. No, it's the six-month mark of President Bush's White House tenure. It's a time when the early kinks in the staff have been — or should have been — smoothed out; a time when the central themes, strategies and tactics of the president should be clear.

So what has George Bush been telling us about the kind of president he will be?

First, he's keeping his word about his concept of presidential leadership. Back in the campaign, Bush was at pains to distinguish himself from Ronald Reagan, disdaining "crusades" and telling us, "I'm a practical person; I like what works."

He has shunned the notion that the presidency is a place of "trumpets and high drama" — in part because it embarrasses him, in part because he couldn't pull it off if he wanted to, in part because the times neither require nor desire that kind of leadership.

Since his inauguration, Bush has produced not one single line of memorable rhetoric, not one single gesture that could remotely be called dramatic or riveting.

Instead, he has tried — with a good deal of success so far — to fulfill the basic claim he made not just in 1988, but in 1980: that he is "the president we won't have to train," a man steeped in the business of public policy.

Jeff Greenfield

And indeed there is something reassuring about watching Bush at a press conference, knowing that a dozen aides are not cringing on the sidelines or in their offices, waiting for him to declare that Montevideo is the capital of Switzerland, or that a recent survey showed that high marginal tax rates caused an outbreak of yaws in Sierra Leone.

It is also reassuring — in fact, it's astonishing — to watch Bush systematically repudiate the massive presidential media machine developed to perfection by the Reagan administration.

Just about every political pro around assumed that the Reagan White House had set the table for presidential media manipulation forever; that the Mike Deaver School of Image Control would shape all future administrations.

Bush seems personally indifferent to, even annoyed by, such machinations. His White House has managed to get itself sharply reduced time on the network evening newscasts by providing almost nothing of substance or drama in the way of speeches or events, save for the occasional trip abroad.

The result? George Bush is higher in the polls today than Ronald

Since his inauguration, Bush has produced not one single line of memorable rhetoric, not one single gesture that could be called dramatic or riveting.

Reagan was for most of his presidency.

Is it possible that George Bush actually has decided to spend more time governing than posturing, and that the public accepts this idea? If so, it would be a contribution to modern statecraft of enormous proportions.

What we have, then, is an agreeable president, who appears to rank high on the good-guy, mentally healthy scale, who has no political enemies list, who understands negotiation and compromise and detail.

What we do not yet know is whether we have a genuine leader in the White House. What we do not know is whether we have a president willing or able to stake out ground on a matter of principle and stick with it, even when the political currents of the day are moving against him.

There was never any evidence of such commitment in George Bush's long public life — no cause for which he could be said to have risked himself politically.

Nor have the last six months produced any such evidence. He has been quick to seize political advantage from the flag-burning furor, but if you ask yourself, "What did George Bush enter the presidency determined to do?" the answer is: He was determined to become president.

That's fine, as long as things are placid. Today, with recession a fear rather than an impending reality, with the international community almost eerily peaceful, George Bush can govern as our national president over this new Era of Good Feelings.

But when the political winds begin to blow against a president, when the storm clouds gather, a genuine leader survives and prevails with a constituency — with a following that is intellectually and viscerally committed to a president because of what he stands for.

We still do not know whether President Bush has that kind of constituency, because, one-eighth of the way through his term, we still do not know what he really stands for — or indeed whether he stands for anything at all.

Decisions of state

To the Editor:

Yes, in China, abortions are mandatory after the birth of the first child. No pro-choice advocate would argue that the situation in China is admirable, and it offends me that Mr. Brinkhuis ["Privacy and choice cease where unborn are concerned," the DI, July 17] implies that we might. What Mr. Brinkhuis ignores throughout his essay is the real argument of the abortion activists, that is, the importance of preserving basic human freedoms and rights, the foremost of these being the right to privacy. There is no right to privacy in China. The people's lives are ruled solely by the decisions of the state. Is Mr. Brinkhuis advocating a similar solution here?

Dithering dinosaurs

To the Editor:

Sara Anderson's editorial ["Fusion delusion," the DI July 17] suggesting the University of Utah should dip to the Department of Energy on cold fusion shows that an otherwise intelligent and reasonable person can also be a very naive one. The "obdurate group of doubting Thomases" who convinced the DOE that low-temperature nuclear fusion is out in the cold are undoubtedly dithering dinosaurs of an antiquated energy policy ghostwritten by the fossil-fuel industry (read Exxon, etc.). Other examples of real progress which would save consumer dollars and provide good product for the money (i.e., the Tucker automobile) have in the past been pooh-poohed by the giants of the industry in which they have sought to compete. Hand-in-glove with backstabbing government agencies (ostensibly charged with protecting the public interest), these industry leaders have managed to scuttle burgeoning new products (energy sources, ideas) showing signs of gaining popularity with a public tired of being gouged by big money interest.

The Utah research may in fact be off the wall, but just because the DOE says so isn't enough to convince me.

More drastic choices

To the Editor:

I wish to respond to the opinions of Randy Brinkhuis ["Privacy and choice cease where unborn are concerned," the DI, July 17] concerning abortion.

I cannot believe that he is seriously concerned about the statistics on the adverse side effects of abortion, sterility and post-abortion trauma, since those numbers would be much greater if all abortions were illicit.

Clearly he has never been involved in bringing a child into this world, or he could not say: "the only clear, definitive junctures during pregnancy are conception and birth." He would know of quickening, when the baby's movements can be felt, and the mother-to-be believes that the child-to-be exists, and of amniocentesis and fetal maturity tests.

When the subject of choice comes up, a lot of attention is paid to one choice, and it is a drastic one. Let's examine some of the other choices available:

● Poverty. A disgracefully large percentage of Americans living in poverty are single mothers and their children. Caring for a newborn baby is a full-time job. For the woman who is not independently wealthy, keeping her child means going on welfare and living without.

● "Giving it up." As Mary Beth Whitehead can tell you, when a woman carries a baby to term, she gets attached to it. The traditional form of adoption in this country involves giving your newborn baby to people whom you never have seen and never will see. The woman who goes through this feels all the same emotions of the woman whose baby is kidnapped. Even worse, the mother is an accomplice to the kidnapping of her own child. What a choice.

● Death. Many a pregnant unwed woman has thought to herself that all her problems would be solved if only she killed herself. Drastic, yes. If it comes to that, which is more drastic: suicide or abortion?

I ask Randy Brinkhuis to consider his own question: "Who decides who is expendable?"

Wendy Berth
Iowa City

Cross purposes

To the Editor:

In response to Elyce Rae Helford's letter on July 11 ["Letters," the DI] on burning the flag:

The U.S. Supreme Court has opened the door for further restrictions on abortions. You are angry and feel immense pain. Does burning the American flag ease the pain or erase the anger?

You considered it to be an effective means of drawing attention to the fact that abortion restrictions are not getting enough attention. You did draw attention, but did you draw it to your cause or to yourself? Did women's rights benefit by the flag-burning, or did the incident draw criticism to yourself and attention away from the issue which you are fighting for?

I can sympathize with your anger over not being able to make your own decisions, but bringing up a separate issue does no good at all.

"We were sitting there upside down, and it began to fill up with smoke," said Cliff Marshall of Columbus, Ohio, a passenger returning home from Denver.

"Then God opened a hole in the basement, and I pushed a little girl out. I grabbed another, kept pulling them out until they didn't come no more."

Marshall said he thought he helped a half-dozen out, and then he ran.

Dick Vohs, spokesman for Gov. Terry Branstad, said from an emergency operations center set up in Des Moines that 95 people had been taken to two hospitals in Sioux City, and 30 were treated at the scene.

"That would mean there are approximately 125 survivors. We're hoping for more," Vohs said. Terry Schmidt, Sioux City fire captain, estimated 115 survivors but had no estimates of the number killed.

Asked about a survivor who reported an explosion before the crash, Nagin said he knew nothing beyond the report and that talk about sabotage was "only speculation."

At O'Hare International Airport in Chicago, where the plane was due, people waiting for Flight 232 were in a room guarded by airline personnel and police. A clergyman was in the room.

Lavonne Quirin of Alta in Buena Vista County said she and her husband found the plane's nose cone in a corn field at their seed-corn business, 75 miles from the airport.

"It's the nose cone, or the front of the plane. It's about the size of a car," she said. She said no one at the farm saw or heard the object fall.

said his government is controlling inflation, which reached an estimated 20,000 percent last year, and accused the United States of "imperialist aggression" for maintaining an economic boycott and blocking financial credits.

Ortega also praised two people who were once allies but have now become enemies: Alfonso Robelo, who became a leader of anti-Sandinista forces, and Violetta Barrios de Chamorro, publisher of the opposition newspaper La Prensa.

Ortega claimed the throng at the plaza topped 300,000, but observers estimated it at between 150,000 and 200,000.

Ortega said the rally showed the Sandinistas have at least that many votes assured for next year's elections. He said the Sandinista show of strength might scare the opposition into abstaining.

"But let's all be very clear about this... they can take or leave the elections, but there will be elections on Feb. 25, 1990," Ortega said. "And they will be clean and honest elections."

Ortega has said he was willing to talk to the political opposition to discuss further reforms of electoral and news media laws.

The opposition claims the Sandinistas have an unfair advantage for the elections, set as part of an agreement among Central American presidents that also calls for dismantling the U.S.-supported Contra guerrillas.

"The United States still hasn't decided to respect the rights of the nations of the Third World and of Nicaragua," Ortega said.

"If the president of the United States is for peace he should stop immediately his policy of war against the people of Nicaragua and should let the Contras be dismantled from Honduran territory," Ortega said.

Most Contras, as the U.S.-backed anti-Sandinista rebels are known, moved to camps in neighboring Honduras after U.S. military aid ended and their leaders and the Sandinistas signed a truce in March 1988.

However, pockets of Contras still roam northern and central provinces and occasional skirmishes are reported. Non-lethal U.S. aid continues.

Recalling the first few months of the revolution, Ortega gave guarded praise to Chamorro and Robelo, who were members of the Junta of National Reconstruction that took control after the Sandinistas entered Managua on July 19, 1979.

Chamorro, a powerful symbol of the upper-class stand against Somoza, resigned from the junta a year later and said the Sandinistas' goals were incompatible with her hopes for a democratic Nicaragua.

She now is a leading opposition presidential contender, according to polls.

Ortega said Chamorro's decision not to accept "conditions that the gringos wanted to impose on the junta" was "firm and courageous." Barricada, the official newspaper of the Sandinista Front, published a special edition with an editorial that called the last 10 years "exciting, agitated, tormenting, hard and sweet."

The newspaper's front page had no stories, only two huge pictures of happy people and, in big red letters, "Ten Years of Change and Victory... Better Days Are Coming."

Of Robelo, Ortega said he recalled his attraction to common people and said "he even wore the red-and-black kerchief (of the Sandinista Front) and sang 'workers to power' (part of a revolutionary song)."

"But he couldn't make the jump," said Ortega.

Robelo, a millionaire industrialist, joined the directorate of the Nicaraguan Resistance, the umbrella organization of anti-Sandinista guerrilla and political forces. He resigned last year to run a party that tentatively plans to take part in next year's elections.

Audit

of the university." But Shanes said the OCPSA's basis for existence has "seen its better day," and students can obtain the advising they need from specific university departments.

"The OCPSA, whose role is to advise clubs and social organizations, has outlived its usefulness," he said. "Eliminating OCPSA would allow student organizations to draw upon the expertise of the university community — a practice metaphorically discouraged by (OCPSA's) existence."

While Shanes said the UI has outgrown the need for OCPSA, audit director Jerry Miller maintained that the office serves valuable student needs.

Helping minority students, coordinating Black History Month and advising members of the greek system are three of the OCPSA's duties which Miller said should be maintained.

"There are things the OCPSA does and does well, but we feel they could do better if they decentralized and regrouped within the university administration," Miller said. "We feel the services they provide should continue but under a different name."

OCPSA's $300,000 budget could be trimmed by $200,000 if it consolidated its operation into an existing structure of the UI administration, Miller said. In addition to streamlining OCPSA, the audit proposed dissolving the UI's Printing Service to save about $1,000,000.

UI Printing Services, established to meet the printing needs of the UI in a cheap and cost-effective manner, has now been hedged out of the market by private sector printers, auditor Eric Sanders said. "It's criminal that the administration would tolerate a department notorious for its excessive overcharging and poor service," he said.

All sectors of the university are required to use the UI Printing Services, but the survey team received a number of complaints about the amount of time required to complete a job.

In addition to poor service, the audit specified printing cost overruns ranging from "a few hundred to thousands of dollars."

When the survey team took three similar printing projects to UI Printing Services and a number of local printers, they determined private sector bids to be "significantly lower than Printing Services," according to the audit.

"Through the examination of several jobs involving UI Printing Services, we discovered that the private sector printers could have done the same jobs in less time and at less cost," Sanders said.

Savings stemming from the estimated $1.5 million budget reductions could be allocated to departments currently experiencing budget shortfalls, Miller said.

With academic departments struggling with financial cutbacks and space shortages, Miller said the savings "should go toward library automation or the addition of new faculty and teaching assistants."

"We noticed that while most of the university's academic departments were severely crippled by the recent budget crunch, OCPSA actually grew," Miller added.

tour. "There's a lot of analysis that needs to be considered, especially in terms of cost" to maintain a human outpost on the moon and to mount a Mars mission, Fitzwater told reporters. "It is a costly venture, and those aspects need to be considered."

At NASA, Frank Martin, the head of the exploration office, said such a project would more than double the current NASA budget of some $13 billion a year, pushing it above 2 percent of the total federal budget.

Congressional leaders who spoke to reporters at the White House after meeting with Bush on other topics voiced caution about the cost of such a proposal.

"We will be... anxious to come together with a program that can provide continued American involvement in projects of importance and scientific value," said House Speaker Thomas Foley. "but obviously we also have to consider the problems that we have here at home. We have resources that are not as unlimited as they once were. ... Certainly we are under very great budget restraints."

Measles shots recommended for millions

CHICAGO — Measles vaccinations are being recommended for as many as 100 million people of age 32 or younger, and two doses of vaccine are being urged for children after reports of measles outbreaks in 18 states.

The recommendations from the American Academy of Pediatrics and the Centers for Disease Control were prompted by an estimated 350-percent increase in measles cases nationwide this year, William Atkinson, an epidemiologist at the CDC in Atlanta, said Wednesday.

CDC figures show that 7,563 measles cases have been reported nationwide this year through July 9, compared to 1,586 cases during the same period last year.

It's the worst outbreak in nine years, Atkinson said. Measles hits most often in winter, and most outbreaks wind down with the onslaught of midsummer heat, he said.

"It's primarily inner-city black and Hispanic children who don't get into the health-care system very easily" who are affected, Atkinson said.

The disease — characterized by a high fever, cough and rash — is extremely contagious and generally more severe in adults.

Khashoggi extradited to United States

NEW YORK — Saudi financier Adnan Khashoggi arrived in the United States on Wednesday to face charges in the alleged $100 million plunder of the Philippine treasury by Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos.

Khashoggi, the millionaire arms dealer who was middleman in the Iran-Contra deal, landed at Kennedy International Airport shortly after 3 p.m. after flying first-class from Switzerland with an escort of two police officers.

The former fugitive, handcuffed and wearing a green leisure suit, did not talk with reporters before leaving the airport with FBI agents about an hour after his arrival. He smiled at photographers from the back of a car that was taking him to U.S. District Court in Manhattan for arraignment and a bail hearing.

No bail agreement has been worked out in advance, said Khashoggi's attorney, Robert Morvillo. Prosecutors said they would request that Khashoggi, once among the world's wealthiest men, be held without bail.

Khashoggi had been jailed in Switzerland, where officials forced the United States to drop racketeering and conspiracy charges against him as part of the extradition agreement.

Korea promises U.S. jet purchase

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney praised South Korea's decision to purchase U.S. fighter jets on Wednesday, but indicated the sensitive topic of coproduction of the sophisticated fighters hasn't been resolved.

Cheney met with reporters after completing the annual series of talks with his South Korean counterpart, Lee Sang Hoon.

"I would like to get the best deal that we can," Cheney said, when asked about the issue.

The subject of coproduction, still eagerly sought by the South Koreans, has raised concern among some lawmakers on Capitol Hill who are worried about the transfer of sensitive technology with a nation eager to build its own aviation industry.

Lee told reporters South Korea intends to purchase U.S. fighters but had not yet decided which type.

Asked about a possible coproduction plan, Cheney said he had advised his counterpart to purchase U.S. produced fighters.

Jaruzelski named president in single-candidate election

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski was narrowly elected to Poland's new, powerful presidency Wednesday, a triumph for the communist leader who imposed martial law in 1981 but later encouraged political reforms.

The National Assembly, Poland's two-chamber legislature, elected Jaruzelski to the six-year term by a vote of 270-233 with 34 abstentions. The sole candidate, he had needed 269 votes to win.

Jaruzelski won in part because some members of the Solidarity opposition movement boycotted the election, thus reducing the number of votes he needed for victory.

Government ministers gave one another a thumbs-up sign when word spread through the chamber as the paper ballots were tallied.

Jaruzelski, 66, has ruled Poland since 1985 as head of the Council of State — the collective leadership that includes top members of the communist coalition led by a chairman who was sometimes referred to as president of the council. Real power rested with the ruling Politburo, which he also led.

By electing Jaruzelski, the National Assembly assured he would have control of the military and foreign relations. Jaruzelski will also nominate the next prime minister, who in turn will form a government with parliamentary approval.

One by one, lawmakers filed up to a wooden box at the front of the chamber and deposited printed paper ballots.

Many held up ballots showing they were voting against Jaruzelski. At least three said they weren't participating at all because there was only one candidate.

"I was and I am for Lech Walesa," said Sen. Gabriel Janowski of Siedlce said as he deposited his ballot against Jaruzelski.

In making the nomination, Politburo member Marian Orzechowski acknowledged that no politician in Poland would be met with "universal approval" but praised Jaruzelski as an advocate of national reconciliation.

Wojciech Jaruzelski

Solidarity's parliamentary floor leader, Bronislaw Geremek, neither endorsed nor opposed the nomination. But he said opposition lawmakers could not forget Jaruzelski's 1981 martial-law decree that was directed against the union and led to the imprisonment of many of them.

"We express the hope that the future president . . . will act for the realization of the promises of democratization for the fulfillment of the promises of change in our country," Geremek said as he took the podium after Orzechowski.

As lawmakers gathered for the vote, about 50 anti-Jaruzelski demonstrators from the Confederation for an Independent Poland rallied outside. "Jaruzelski Must Go," read one of their banners.

Under Poland's newly revamped constitution, the office of president gives Jaruzelski control of the military and foreign relations and allow him to nominate the next prime minister.

Some Solidarity members, while not forgiving the general for past repression, argued that defeating him could undermine reforms directly needed to reverse the country's economic decline.

Errant pilot's head moved, sources say

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Pilot Thomas Root's head turned toward military chase planes during the time he claimed he was unconscious and his small plane flew 800 miles on autopilot, an investigator said Wednesday.

Authorities also ruled out carbon-monoxide poisoning, based on a blood test, as an explanation for his claimed loss of consciousness. Results of drug and alcohol tests are expected later this week.

Root continued to stick to his story, that he passed out during a routine business trip after putting his single-engine Cessna on autopilot. He said he revived when the plane ran out of gas and ditched in the sea near the Bahamas, where he was rescued. Doctors later found he had been shot in the abdomen.

Andrew Alston, an air-safety investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board, interviewed the 36-year-old Washington communications attorney again Wednesday at Hollywood's Memorial Hospital.

Alston, who first interviewed Root on Saturday, two days after his crash and rescue, said at a news conference that he confronted Root with inconsistencies in his story, but Root had nothing substantially different to say in response.

Alston said inconsistencies include Root's failure to remember the gunshot, the movement of his head toward military planes sent to intercept and follow him, and movement of his windshield sun visor.

Report says inflation is easing now in the U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices rose a modest 0.2 percent in June, the smallest advance since early last year, the government said Wednesday in a report that bolstered the view that inflationary pressures are beginning to ease.

The slowdown in the Consumer Price Index reflected the fact that energy and food costs, which had been shooting upward this year, finally moderated last month. Energy costs actually fell while food prices edged up by the smallest amount in seven months.

Even with the June price moderation, consumer prices for the first six months of the year rose at an annual rate of 5.9 percent, the sharpest increase for the first half of a year since 1982.

The Bush administration hailed Wednesday's report as "very good news" that the country is not headed for another inflationary spiral.

"We remain confident in the ability of the economy to sustain its growth while controlling and ultimately reducing inflation," Michael Boskin, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisors, told reporters at the White House.

Many private economists were just as upbeat, saying the inflation report could not have come at a better time for Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, who must testify before Congress on Thursday about the progress the central bank is making in controlling price pressures.

"This is about as good as one could ask for on the inflation front right now, particularly when you think back to six months ago when everyone was fearful that we had runaway inflation," said David Jones, economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a government securities dealer in New York.

The report on consumer prices was the second good signal on inflation. Last Friday, the Labor Department said that wholesale prices actually fell in June, their first decline in 18 months.

In another report Wednesday, the Commerce Department said that housing construction rebounded seven percent in June, the biggest one-month increase in 16 months, to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.40 million units.

Analysts said the upturn in new homes and apartments reflected the hopes of builders that mortgage rates will be headed lower as the central bank turns its attention from fighting inflation to keeping the country out of a recession.

Responding to widespread signs of an economic slowdown, the Fed has already made two small moves toward loosening credit conditions in the past seven weeks, and analysts predicted further easing steps in the months ahead.

"The CPI report suggests that there is no great acceleration in inflation going on," said David Wyss, senior financial economist at DRI-McGraw Hill, an economic consulting firm. "I think we are going to see much better numbers on inflation in the second half of the year, mainly because of improvement in food and energy prices."

At the beginning of the year, energy costs shot up at an annual rate of 40.3 percent, reflecting the worldwide run-up in crude oil prices.

However, energy prices at the consumer level actually fell by one percent in June, the biggest decline since a 1.9 percent drop in October 1986, another period when a rapid run-up in petroleum costs was followed by a price rollback.

The cost of gasoline at the pump dropped by one percent, and home heating oil, natural gas and electricity costs were down as well last month.

Food costs, which had been climbing at the fastest pace since 1980, slowed in June to just a 0.2 percent increase, the smallest advance since last November.

After surging by 3.2 percent in May, the cost of fruits and vegetables declined one percent in June. Prices of beef, port and dairy products fell also.

NFL spring league to begin in 1991

SCHAUMBURG, Ill. (AP) — NFL owners gave the go-ahead Wednesday to their new international spring league, which will probably begin play in the spring of 1991.

The vote was 27 with one abstention, the Chicago Bears, who said they wanted more time.

The league, to be known as the World American Football League, will have 12 teams, four based in Europe and eight in North and Central America.

The league will be run by Tex Schramm, the former president of the Dallas Cowboys and overseen by a committee of seven NFL owners or team presidents. It was authorized to begin no later than 1991.

"We're looking no further than that," said Dan Rooney, chairman of the steering committee overseeing the new league. "That doesn't rule out 1990, but we have a lot of work to do."

Schramm, who has been touring prospective sites, said one problem was television contracts in Europe, where there is no one network. He said that even if the league is sold to Eurovision, a continent wide outfit, it would have to convince stations to take the game.

The other problem is length of game. "They want two-hour blocs," Schramm said. "They don't have three-hour sporting events the way we do."

On the other hand, there seems to be little question that some combination of regular and cable television networks in the United States will carry games. ABC and NBC, which are losing baseball to CBS next year, are the likely candidates, although Schramm said all three major networks have expressed an interest.

NHL appoints new director of officiating

MONTREAL (AP) — Bryan Lewis was appointed as the NHL's director of officiating Wednesday, replacing the late John McCauley.

The league also named Wally Harris as assistant director and Will Norris as coordinator of development for officials.

Lewis, 46, replaces McCauley, who died in early June from complications from surgery.

"We are pleased to announce the appointments of these three gentlemen who bring with them a combined total of over 50 years of experience in the NHL officiating ranks," vice-president Jim Gregory said.

Lewis, a former president of the NHL Officials Association, refereed 1,031 NHL games in 16 years before retiring after the 1985-86 season. He has since worked as coordinator of development, recruiting and developing minor league officials.

Lewis refereed four Stanley Cup final series, the 1981 All-Star game and the Canada Cup.

Baltimore close to signing McDonald

BALTIMORE (AP) — Louisiana State pitcher Ben McDonald, who led his team into the College World Series six weeks ago, may find himself firing his 95-mph fastball and assortment of off-speed pitches in another World Series come October.

After weeks of often bitter negotiations, the Baltimore Orioles and their top draft choice are reportedly close to reaching a contract agreement.

The Washington Post said the basic elements of an agreement were worked out last week when Orioles president Lawrence Lucchino visited McDonald at his Denham Springs, La., home.

"I can't say it's going to get done," said Larry McDonald, the player's father who is acting as his son's agent. "We're not that far apart. I think we can finish it over the telephone."

times people think that I'm a real jerk. You'll have that in any business."

But the pros learn to endure the process as Maltbie, Rummells and John Huston were all in tolerable moods after their 18-hole excursions with four amateurs.

"You have to make sure to stay out of the way," Huston said. "One time I thought we were all on the green. I was talking to my caddie and all of a sudden he gets hit in the head."

"We had a close call," Maltbie said. "But it wasn't from our group. We were walking up toward our green and a shot from another fairway went buzzing past me."

The fact is that the PGA tour could not survive without the pro-ams. Local players had to shell out over $900 apiece to play in Wednesday's Hardee's event.

"Some of the tour players could do without them, but the tour wouldn't survive without pro-ams," Huston said. "If people want to see the pros play, they can come out the rest of the weekend."

Wednesday belonged to the celebs like Bradshaw and Dr. J. Former St. Louis Cardinal football player Jim Hart, Chicago Blackhawk Troy Murray, Illinois football coach John Mackovic and Iowa State basketball coach Johnny Orr were other contestants that drew considerable galleries.

And as long as it's o Wednesday, it doesn't bother the golfers at all.

"Hell, we get plenty of attention," Maltbie said. "Dr. J is a legend, he deserves to be mobbed."

individual stage victory alone. Theuniss won in 5 hours, 10 minutes, 39 seconds.

"I was dreaming of a victory in l'Alpe d'Huez but it wasn't to be today," Fignon said. "But to be 26 seconds in front of LeMond is not too bad."

"I was thinking it wasn't going to be possible to catch LeMond because he was very strong," he said. "But in the last kilometers I felt I was flying."

Delgado caught Fignon with about a little more than a mile to go, then waited until the last 100 meters for a final sprint for second. Both were 1:09 behind Theunisse. LeMond struggled in 2:28 back of the winner, 1:19 back of Delgado and Fignon.

Delgado is now third in the overall standings, 1:55 behind Fignon and 1:29 behind LeMond, of Minneapolis.

Andy Hampsten, the other top American, had his hopes crumble with a poor performance. He finished 60th for the stage, more than 18 minutes behind.

That put him in 18th place overall, a sharp drop from his fifth-place position last Saturday.

With some 250,000 people crowding the slopes of the final hill, Fignon recaptured the leader's yellow jersey on the 70th anniversary of its birth. On July 19, 1919, Henri Desgrange, who founded the tour, decided to show off the leader by putting him in a distinctive color.

Fignon took it on top of the 5,940-foot l'Alpe d'Huez summit with snow-covered peaks in the background.

There are still four stages left in the Tour de France. First come two more mountain stages, although less difficult than Wednesday's leg, a relatively flat ride on Saturday and the closing time trial from Versailles to Paris on Sunday, July 23.

After gaining back the lead last Sunday, LeMond said that "the ideal situation for me would be to lose the yellow jersey and be about 15 seconds behind going into the final time trial."

He could get his wish.

Moore

The Red Sox stole the momentum with that homer and went on to win the game in 11 innings.

"Everything revolved around one . . . p." Downing said in a somber Angels' clubhouse in Toronto Tuesday, where players were told of Moore's death after a 1-0 victory over the Blue Jays.

"You (reporters) destroyed a man's life over one pitch. The guy was just not the same after that," Downing said. "I never ever saw the guy be credited for getting us to the playoffs because all you ever heard about, all you ever read about, was one pitch."

Moore, pitching in Game 5 of the American League playoffs despite a sore right shoulder, had a 5-4 lead going into the ninth inning. The Angels were ahead three games to one in the best-of-seven playoffs.

With two outs and two strikes on Henderson, Moore threw a forkball that Henderson hit for a two-run homer that gave the Red Sox a 6-5 lead.

The Angels sent the game into extra innings, but Henderson victimized Moore again, connecting for a sacrifice fly in the top of the 11th that gave the Red Sox a 7-6 victory.

The playoffs moved to Boston, where the Red Sox won the next two games to advance to the World Series, where they lost to the New York Mets in seven games.

Pinter said Moore never stopped blaming himself for the team's failure to get into the World Series and was frequently depressed.

Steve Stone, a 1975 teammate of Moore with the Chicago Cubs, said Moore may have been especially tormented by the end of his athletic career.

"There are some personal demons that haunt all of us, and a lot of people are able to resign themselves to a life after baseball, and there's a lot of people who feel uncomfortable when the dream ends," Stone said.

But he said Moore was probably troubled by much more than that one pitch.

"In some players' minds, it ends a little too soon. I can't possibly try to interpret the motivations and what brought Donnie Moore to his decision to end his life, but I would have thought that it had to be something outside of just the fact that he couldn't throw the baseball any longer."

Neighbor Betty Bailey said Mrs. Moore told her the marriage was violent. "He abused her. She said he beat her up and left bruises," she said.

Neighbor Greg Lawrence, 16, said he was a friend of the couple's teen-age daughter and described Moore as "very hotheaded." He said the girl feared his return from road trips.

Moore had his best year as a relief pitcher in 1985 when he had 31 saves and finished 57 games, both team records. Nagged by injuries, he pitched in just 14 games for the Angels in 1987, his last major league season.

Moore, a native of Lubbock, Texas, also played for the Cubs, St. Louis Cardinals, Milwaukee Brewers and Atlanta Braves during a 13-year career.

He played in seven games with the Omaha Royals this season and had a 1-2 record with a 6.39 ERA in 12 2-3 innings before he was released on June 12.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle ponders questions from reporters Wednesday in Schaumburg, Ill. after he appointed a new search committee to replace him as head of the National Football League.

NFL starts search process, again

SCHAUMBURG, Ill. (AP) — The NFL resolved Wednesday — at least temporarily — what Commissioner Pete Rozelle called the worst split in his 30 years in office by starting over in its search for Rozelle's successor.

Nonetheless, Jim Finks, the New Orleans Saints president and the original choice for the job, seemed to be in stronger position than ever to get it.

Rozelle resolved the dispute by appointing a new six-member committee to replace the one that recommended Finks and only Finks for the job. However, 11 teams blocked Finks from getting the 19 votes he needed for the job.

At the same time, the owners approved with 27 votes and the Chicago Bears abstaining to form a new international league, to start play either in the spring of 1990 or a year later. The later date seems more likely.

The new selection committee contains two of the 11 who blocked Finks — Minnesota's Mike Lynn and Seattle's Ken Behring; the co-chairmen of the old committee, Kansas City's Lamar Hunt and Wellington Mara of the New York Giants, plus Al Davis of the Los Angeles Raiders and John Kent Cooke of Washington. It is the first major committee assignment in 12 years for Davis, who was a minority of one while he was suing the NFL over his team's move from Oakland.

That seemed to bode well for Finks — Mara, Hunt, Cooke and Davis all voted for him the first time and Lynn also supported him right up to 20 minutes before the ballot. Nonetheless, Rozelle said the new committee will recommend more than one candidate.

"Oh, yes," Lynn replied when asked if Finks remained a viable candidate and the echo was similar from almost everyone else.

"Everyone on the new committee is an announced Finks supporter," said Ed McCaskey of the Chicago Bears.

"I think Finks is very strong right now," said Victor Kiam of New England, one of the 11 votes that blocked Finks' election. "I think a lot of the owners that voted against him liked him as a candidate, they just didn't like the process."

"I think his candidacy is alive and well and I think it will stay that way," said Cleveland's Art Modell, a member of the first search committee.

And Finks himself said: "I think this committee will do what some owners think the other committee should have done."

The appointment of the new committee followed a series of late night meetings involving Rozelle and many of the 11 dissidents, most of whom had different reasons for abstaining on the vote.

Of the 11, however, six were not even present for the discussions — Norman Braman of Philadelphia, Hugh Culverhouse of Tampa Bay and Georgia Frontiere. The Los Angeles Rams didn't attend; San Francisco's Edward DeBartolo left before they began and Patrick Bowlen of Denver and Joe Robbie of Miami left during Monday's session.

The most common complaint is that the dissidents wanted to be a larger role in league affairs.

As a result, early in the session Modell announced he was resigning as the chairman (and, in fact the only member) of the television committee. He and Rozelle had negotiated over $5 billion in television contracts since 1962.

A few minutes later, after drawing praise from Davis and others Modell agreed to take the job back pending the election of a new commissioner. The league must negotiate a new television contract this fall.

Meanwhile, Rozelle was informing the owners that Mara had told him that according to Roberts' Rules of Order, the old search committee had dissolved when it presented its report on July 6. As a result, he appointed the new committee.

Friends shed light on Moore tragedy

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Donnie Moore's career and marriage were crumbling and he was tormented by the pitch that denied his team a spot in the 1986 World Series, friends said.

Moore, 35, wounded his wife during an argument at their home Tuesday and then fatally shot himself in the head, police Lt. Marc Hedgpath said.

The couple's three children, ages 17, 10 and 7, were not harmed.

Tonya Moore, 35, was rushed to the hospital in critical condition but was upgraded overnight to serious, said Kaiser Permanente Hospital spokeswoman Donna Donan-Drasner.

Moore's attorney, Randall Johnson, said in a telephone interview that Mrs. Moore was shot in the abdomen, neck and right shoulder. She regained consciousness and was able to talk with family members, he said.

The California Angels released Moore in 1988. He was plagued by injuries during his final years in the majors, and a comeback attempt ended with his release last month from the Kansas City Royals' Class AAA minor league team in Omaha, Neb.

"He was out of a job and so that created some turmoil in the marriage," Johnson said.

The attorney said the couple's argument occurred during a discussion about selling their home, but he did not know what actually set off the dispute.

Johnson said Moore had put the house up for sale and hoped to land a job with the Houston Astros that would return him to his native Texas.

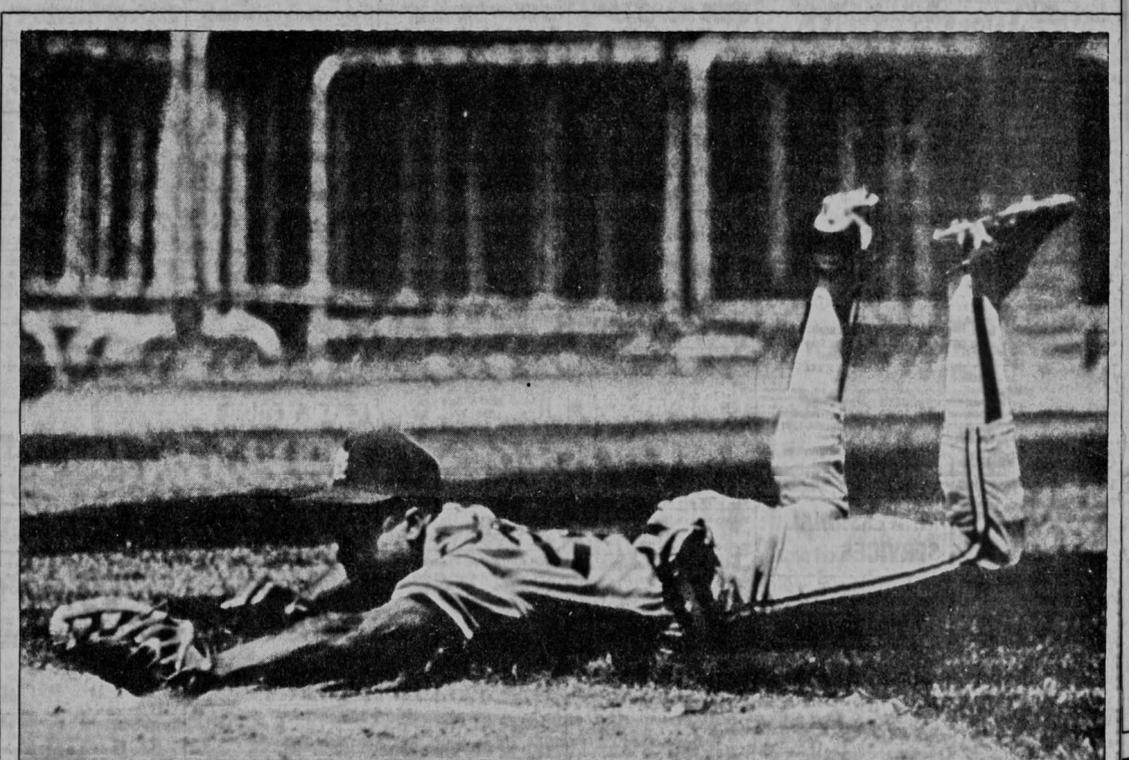

Moore's agent, Dave Pinter, said the couple separated about one month ago, after 16 years of marriage. Neighbors told police arguments were common.

The children, including the 17-year-old daughter who drove her mother to the hospital, were staying with friends, Hedgpath said.

Detectives interviewed the children and nothing they said changed the determination that the shooting was an attempted murder and suicide, he said.

Pinter and former teammate Brian Downing of the Angels said Moore never got over allowing a home run to Dave Henderson of the Boston Red Sox in Game 5 of the 1986 American League playoffs. The Angels and Moore were one strike away from winning the AL pennant when Henderson hit a two-run homer to put the Red Sox ahead.

COAL VALLEY, Ill. — Wednesday is not a day for golfers on the PGA Tour.

Around the tour, Wednesday is the day when NBA legend Julius Erving shows that he can still take the ball to the hole. And former Pittsburgh Steeler quarterback Terry Bradshaw makes note that he can place the ball wherever it needs to be.

A golf ball, that is. On Wednesday at the Hardee's Golf Classic Pro-Am at Oakwood Country Club, the tour members took a back seat.

"It is kind of amazing," tour member Dave Rummells said. "This is a PGA event and the celebrities are the ones that get mobbed. That's kind of strange that that's the way it is."

Some tour pros don't like playing in the pro-am events usually staged the Wednesday before a tournament. Amateurs like Erving and Bradshaw can play well, but there are always a few hackers that don't know which way is up on a golf club.

"I've always liked to play these events," tour veteran Roger Maltbie said. "I've met some great people at these things."

"Most of the time you end up playing with a great bunch of guys. Sometimes you run across a real jerk. But then again, some-

British Open rekindles pride over Ryder Cup

TROON, Scotland (AP) — As 47 Americans prepared Wednesday for their British Open onslaught, interest also started to mount for the next scheduled U.S. golfing invasion of Europe.

When the 118th Open, the sport's oldest and most prestigious tournament, gets under way at Troon's parched links today, the cream of American and European golfers also will be playing for possible spots on their respective Ryder Cup teams in September.

"You always want to make the Ryder Cup team," said U.S. team captain Raymond Floyd. "My players want to go and win and bring the trophy back. This year, there is a definite pride factor involved."

"When you've been beaten, and beaten handily... it takes on a greater significance."

After losing only three of the biennial Ryder Cup contests between 1927 and 1985, U.S. fortunes slumped just as European golf enjoyed a boom.

With former British Open champion Tony Jacklin installed as team captain, the Europeans won the Cup in 1985 and repeated two years later at Muirfield Village, Ohio, their first triumph on American soil.

Floyd said money had replaced hunger to win and was the cause of the American problem.

"Guys leaving college come on the professional tour, have a wonderful run for a month of two, then look in their bank balance and see they have three-quarters of a million dollars," Floyd said.

"The attitude about playing has changed. Winning used to be the important thing. The money was nice to have but it was not the most important thing. Today, the American player doesn't have that strong desire to win any more, he has the strong desire to win all this money."

When the two continents meet at the Belfry in two months, Jacklin will be in charge of Europe again as his team goes for its third straight Ryder Cup success. The 1985-87 defeats were the first time the United States had been beaten in consecutive Ryder Cup matches.

Despite the current European dominance of world golf, Jacklin discounts any talk of his players being the favorites.

"I know what a fickle game match-play is," he said at a news confer-

Fignon regains Tour lead

L'ALPE D'HUEZ, France (AP) — Greg LeMond lost the leader's yellow jersey in the Tour de France Wednesday when France's Laurent Fignon pulled away on the final mountain climb.

Fignon and LeMond rode together most of the day, including the beginning of the last stretch, a climb of more than six miles up the Alpe d'Huez.

With 2½ miles left, Fignon and last year's champion Pedro Delgado moved away, and LeMond failed to respond.

Fignon finished third in the 17th stage, a 100-mile leg from Briançon to l'Alpe d'Huez. LeMond was fifth, 1:19 behind Fignon. The difference allowed Fignon to take over the overall lead by 26 seconds.

"I did my best but it's not over yet. It's far from finished," LeMond said. "I had some difficulty because I had worked hard yesterday and there is a lot of pressure with the yellow jersey."

LeMond gained some time over Fignon in the previous stage to improve his advantage to 53 seconds entering Wednesday's leg, the toughest in the 23-day race around France. It had four climbs, including three rated "out of category" in terms of difficulty and steepness.

It was the last that made the difference. Fignon, the 1983 and 1984 champion, Delgado, the 1988 winner, and LeMond, who won in 1986, waged their own private battle as the Netherlands' Gert-Jan Theunisse went on to the
