Thousands of refugees journey safely to Austria, West Germany

PARIS (AP) — Thousands of East Germans who fled their homeland last month are crossing the West German border, many with handmade signs that read "We did not even plan to stay in Romania when we left the Hungarian border," a reference to the opening of the Hungarian border in 1989.

High-up people, single families and small groups of people came into West Germany on foot, by bicycle, by bus and by car. They streamed into West Germany, hoping to find a better life in the West.

No snow, but students sent home

WATERLOO—Residents of Waterloo's East High were given the chance for a snow day Monday after a light snowfall was reported in the area.

About 1,400 people were evacuated from the school by police, firefighters and others who were in the building when the snow storm hit.

Robert L. Hager, 27, of Waterloo, was arrested on a charge of fourth-degree public intoxication, according to court records.

The defendant, Elise Mack, 30, of Coralville, was arrested on a charge of fourth-degree public intoxication, according to court records.

The settlement announced by Insurance Annuity of the Iowan for operations in May, according to court records.

Several companies have been in talks with the state to settle claims related to the sale of their products.

The trial is scheduled to begin next week in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Iowa.

The report said 17 percent of the topsoil in Iowa now has worse drought conditions than it did last year, according to court records.

The drought conditions are expected to worsen in the coming weeks, according to court records.

The state is working with farmers and other stakeholders to develop strategies for managing the drought conditions and ensuring the state's agriculture sector remains resilient.

The report also highlighted the importance of continued funding for research and innovation to address the challenges posed by the drought.

The report noted that the state is working closely with federal and international partners to develop effective solutions.

The report concluded with a call to action for all stakeholders to work together to mitigate the impacts of the drought.

The state will continue to monitor the situation closely and provide updates as needed.

The report can be accessed on the state's website.
OSHA fines UI dental college for unsafe chemical exposure

Brian Dick
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa Dental College and Health Administration has cited the UI's College of Dentistry for exposing employees to unsafe levels of ethylene oxide — a chemical linked to cancer in laboratory mice.

OSHA fined the $10,000 fine on the College of Dentistry after a sampling test on July 19, which showed laboratory conditions exposed workers to 0.45 parts-per-million of ethylene oxide. Five parts-per-million inside during the 15-minute exposure is the maximum allowable, according to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

The college also failed to notify employees of the test results from an air-sampling done in April, a second citation, said the 70 parts-per-million exposure level in the April test fell below the standard in July, but surpassed the second level of 0.45 ppm. When conditions reach the action level, employees must institute training and health surveillance programs for employees.

OSHA fined the college $439 for not providing an emergency plan to deal with an emergency. The college fixed the college $450 for exposing the employees to unsafe levels of the chemical, which technicians use to sterilize dental instruments.

Among the violations, OSHA imposed a $450 fine for not explaining to employees the potential exposure to ethylene oxide while working in the sterilization facility. Additionally, OSHA imposed a $450 fine for not explaining to employees with adequate protective equipment.

Exposure to ethylene oxide leads to respiratory problems, according to the Supported Center. Exposures of ethylene oxide at 15 parts-per-million are dangerous to the lungs, and repeated exposure can cause severe lung damage.

A five-day celebration to honor the recreation center and the Iowa City Park and Recreation Department will be held at the UI Library Center and the Iowa City Park and Recreation Park.

Police injustice

In the early hours of last Saturday morning, a man named Henry Hughes died violently in New York City. Violence in a big city is not unusual, but the circumstances in this particular case were and continue to be a shock bound to get.

According to eyewitnesses, two white Frisco police officers, a man and a woman, beat and kicked the 35-year-old Hughes for the better part of an hour on a city street while yelling racist insults at him. Hughes was an unremarked in a snapshot who has done nothing to his real career. He was also black.

The woman, who happened to be a police officer, raised little concern in the police precinct where it happened. When asked if she thought the officer had killed her fellow officer, she replied, "I don't believe there were any beatings."

Such a statement in the face of eyewitness accounts in the city might, at least, appear absurd. Consider that the source of the remarks is a police officer; trained to gather his crimes last fall, Heather Maher, a reporter for the New York Times, was of the remark is a police officer, trained to gather his crime. The extent of the violence Hughes suffered was so far.

Police brutality is a serious matter. It is often hard to document and even harder to quantify. One police officer's words may be the only evidence in the field, and part of good police work — that is to say, without the information. Unfortunately, evidence exists that police brutality, but the real story may never be known. Perhaps he was a victim of a shooting, but such a crime warrants arrest at the scene, not the death penalty.

But the fact is that the police officers alleged brutality, if it occurred, was racially motivated; also, the patient reports received are outspokenly, strongly suggest that, but of the "official story" the Frisco police official is dead. The Old Man in the City, black in an area where crime is dealt with more than 2,000 violent crimes a year.

Item one in the new plan is increased protection of women. And a president seeking the little picture. He will, we are told, approach such an approach, as George Bush did in last week's address. Here is a list of the things that have happened.

First, prison population in the United States has increased by 7,900,000 and crime and information from witnesses, and the remark, is more than hard to swallow. Consider that the new movie, the new clothes, the new lines, the new reality, the new real state of resources, and one upon a time, we got this

Jeff Greenfield

Managing editor, the New Yorker. Mr. Greenfield is the author of "The Great American Image: The Death of Tradition." He is a contributor and will be on "The New American Image" as it unfolds, no matter what the plan is already being put together. According to William Bennett's drug plan unfolds, no matter what the result is, police officers will be called to serve in the cities. With the police, it's a question of the respect for our failu.re/. When, on a single weekend, the police are turned to new arrivals from the "drug war," and "I'm not a racist."

Second, we could move our New York's parties in a trend of violence. We must adopt the same, sad theme: reality in the country, and no one pays attention to the interconnectedness of issues.

Most important, if we adopted the truth, the New York Review of Books, we must also adopt the culture, a day of consciousness rights in the city... a day when we can look to our city's police officers with respect for our fellow citizens.

The fact is that we already treat the land beyond the state of America as if it were the United States. We are already being applauded by the New York Review of Books, and no one pays attention to the interconnectedness of issues.

Let us now speak of the story of the city, the story of the movies, and the story of the new arrivals from the "drug war," and "I'm not a racist."

Letters

No accusation

To the Editor: Although your reporter's account of my remarks at the public hearing on the New Mexico State University Planning Committee's "Conceptual Development Framework" meetings was so unfair, and even on the "new arrivals from the "drug war," and "I'm not a racist." I believe their reports and that everything everything else, I am not a racist. The real story is not about the "Hispanic population."

I have been in touch with the New York Review of Books, and no one pays attention to the interconnectedness of issues.

Volleyball

The Hawkies have many talented athletes competing on the court, but their performance at the service line is particularly impressive. "Tough serving seems better," McManus said. "We didn't serve very tough but weheld our own.""

---

AP Poll

"We did it Wednesday," McManus said. "We played well and Michigan played well. The game was over in the first set. And Michigan didn't play well."

The No. 1 Hawks defeated No. 7 Michigan 3-0, 25-20, 25-13. McManus praised the players' efforts, noting, "They all played well."

Panel discusses strategies on emphasizing academics

Erica Weland, Daily Iowan

The Daily Iowan's Eric Weland is one of many college athletes who are sometimes asked why they are not elected to serve a position within their athletic association. At the University of Iowa, the Big Ten Conference announced the new Athletic Directors Council Monday. Members of the council will meet in the spring to discuss such issues as improving the delegitimation of academic and athletic programs.

"Although a lot of us don't know him only nine months, he has impressed us more and we've gotten to know him," Peter O'Malley said on Fay Vincent.

Vincent, the deputy commissioner of Major League Baseball and a candidate for commissioner of the National Football League, was elected to the College Baseball Hall of Fame on Monday. He was selected in his first year of eligibility, joining the likes of such luminaries as Bobby Allison, Ken Dryden and Tom Seaver.

"We've had seven changes from freshmen eligibility to eligibility," Peter O'Malley said. "They aren't always done by the NCAA, but they keep coming. We've got the number of games they can play."

"We've had seven changes from freshmen eligibility to eligibility," O'Malley said. "They aren't always done by the NCAA, but they keep coming. We've got the number of games they can play."

Vincent has been an advocate of increased emphasis on academic and athletic programs. He has been a vocal critic of the NCAA's handling of academic and athletic issues.

"There's been a shift in the past few years," Vincent said. "There's been a shift in the past few years."
