Thousands left homeless; 14 die in winds

Hugo rips islands at 125 mph

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Hurricane Hugo's 125-mph winds pounded Puerto Rico on Monday after ripping across other islands in the eastern Caribbean, leaving at least 14 people dead and thousands homeless.

The National Weather Service said Hugo, the most powerful storm to hit the region this decade, slammed into the eastern tip of Puerto Rico and skirted the northern coast before roaring to the west-northwest toward the Bahamas.

Hugo also threatens the Dominican Republic, which shares the island of Hispaniola with Haiti, and civil-defense authorities in the Dominican Republic declared a state of emergency before dark Monday.

Eastern Airlines spokeswoman Karen Ceremak in Miami said the carrier flew a special Boeing 727 charter to the Dominican resort of Puerto Plata Monday and returned to Miami with about 135 vacationers.

The storm's winds overturned cars and stripped roofs off houses and office buildings and sent chunks of concrete plunging into streets in San Juan, where one-third of the U.S. commonwealth's 3.3 million people live. Fifty airplanes were reportedly destroyed at the airport in Isla Verde.

There was widespread damage in San Juan's Condado Beach area, the site of many of the island's large tourist hotels. Shattered glass, strips of roofing and overturned trees littered the streets, and few drivers ventured out in their vehicles.

Hugo cut power and disrupted international communications to the island.

One woman in a San Juan high-rise told radio station WOSO of watching sections of the city darken as the first high winds and heavy rains hit San Juan. Widespread power outages also were reported in the Dominican Republic.

There were no immediate reports of casualties in Puerto Rico, although one man was electrocuted while trying to remove a television antenna as he prepared for the storm Sunday.

Bands of people, mostly youths, looted storm-damaged shops in San Juan, and police patrols were reinforced at the main Post Office, See Hugo, Page 6

Youth takes 11 hostages in classroom

McKEE, Ky. (AP) — An armed teen-ager stalked into a high-school classroom, fired a shot at the ceiling and took 11 classmates hostage Monday, police and witnesses said. After a day-long standoff, he released them all and surrendered.

Several shots were fired, but no one was injured in the confrontation, which began about 9:50 a.m., police said. There were conflicting reports that a shot was fired at a television news helicopter.

The youth, whose only request to police was to speak to his father, told his hostages he did not want to hurt anyone. The final two hostages were freed shortly after 5 p.m. EDT, and the teen-ager gave up about an hour and a half later, authorities said.

The state police declined to identify the hostage-taker, but classmates said he was Brian Pierce, a 17-year-old senior at Jackson County High School. McKee is a town of 250 people about 50 miles southeast of Lexington in the Appalachian foothills.

Bush discusses policies on China, environment

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — President George Bush said Monday that "it's not time for normalcy" in relations with the People's Republic of China, despite a gradual increase in contacts in the months since the summer's bloody crackdown on student dissent in Beijing.

The president was emphasizing environmental issues in a three-state swing to South Dakota, Montana and Washington. Bush fielded reporters' questions in the ornate Senate chamber of the Montana Legislature, defending his decision not to travel to Alaska to view the oil spill damage in Prince William Sound.

He said he was hopeful that "winter will be kind" in restoring environmental conditions in Alaskan waters. He said he'd sent his "environmental vice president" to inspect the cleanup efforts and predicted Exxon would "come back" next spring if further cleanup was necessary.

A reporter noted news accounts that Bush's brother Prescott who had resumed business contacts with the Chinese and asked Bush if it were time to resume normal relations.

Asked about China, Bush said,

"No, no, we're not" ready, although he said he hoped he would soon see "proper signals" from the Chinese leadership that would lead to improved relations.

The president also vowed to fight on the floor of the Democratic-controlled House to win passage of his plan for a cut in the capital gains tax, and said his plan is "not as my critics say, a tax that will help the rich."

On other subjects, he indicated he was willing to compromise with Democrats in Congress on the final shape of an anti-drug program, although he complained the initial Democratic response was "spend more and raise taxes."

Asked about threats to himself or his family by South American drug lords bent on revenge for his own drug program, the president said he didn't know of any "hard intelligence" that the danger against him or his family had increased.

"I can't say I'm totally unconcerned, but I don't have any hard evidence," he said.

Bush also sidestepped a question of whether he would grant Yasir Arafat, the leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, a visa to attend this month's United Nations General Assembly session. "I will consider that matter when and if it comes to my attention," he said.

Bush was criticized last summer for a measured response to the Chinese crackdown, and he defended what he had done.

"I've tried to protect and preserve a long-term relationship that is very important for the United States. No, it is not time for normalcy... but I don't want to hurt the (Chinese) people by cutting off commerce," he said.

On another foreign policy issue, Bush said it's up to the two Germans to decide whether to move toward reunification. "I don't accept" such a move is a threat to See Bush, Page 6

UI football player Polly pleads not guilty to assault charges

The Daily Iowan

Iowa football player Edward Polly pleaded not guilty to charges of assault Monday, according to Johnson County District Court records.

The defendant, Polly, 246 Slater Residence Hall, was not scheduled to appear in court until Tuesday morning, but the plea was filed early in order to avoid a court appearance, said James Prescott, UI student legal services representative.

Polly was charged with assault August 31 for allegedly punching Gina Weerts, 19, in the face, leaving her unconscious, according to court records.

The incident allegedly occurred in the Iowa City Downtown Pedestrian Mall August 6, after an argument between Weerts and her boyfriend and Polly and his friends, in the College Street Club, 121 E. College St., according to court records.

An order preventing Polly from contacting Weerts personally or over the telephone was issued September 8, according to court records.

The no-contact order was deemed necessary to prevent the possibility of retaliation by Polly against Weerts, based on the publicity of the case and the severity of violence allegedly used by Polly, according to court records.

Trial is set for November 7 at 11 a.m., according to court records.

Obscene phone calls are a fact of life in Iowa City for some reason, according to Craig Lihs, Iowa City police sergeant.

Close to 300 obscene phone calls were reported last year to the Iowa City Police Department and to UI Campus Security.

"This could be only a fraction of the number of callers," Don Hoganof, a campus security officer said. "We have no way of knowing how many people don't report calls."

The most important thing for people to remember is that it is your phone, and it is your right to hang up, Lihs said.

UI enrollment figures for 1989 show that, while the number of minority students increased this semester, the overall UI enrollment figures have declined, according to a final report released Friday by UI Registrar Jerald Dallam.

Minority enrollment at The UI this fall shows gains in the number of black and Hispanic undergraduates, transfer and graduate students.

"If we can continue to meet our annual goals, we will make our target, based on declining enrollments," Philip Hubbard, UI vice president for student services and Opportunity at Iowa director, said of the minority enrollment figures.

The number of black freshmen increased from 86 students to 110 students, or 28 percent, while Hispanic freshman enrollment increased from 35 students to 52 students, or 48 percent.

"It's really heartening, especially for all of us who have worked so hard to see that there is a real opportunity at Iowa for people of color," Michael Barron, UI director of admissions, said.

The total UI enrollment fell by 346 students, or about 1.2 percent, Dallam said.

Total fall 1989 enrollment — which includes undergraduate, graduate and professional students — is 28,884 students, compared to 29,230 students in the fall of 1988, Dallam said.

"It's verifying what we thought would be the scenario due to the declining number of students graduating from high school and the demographics from the areas we draw from," he said.

The total UI enrollment figure is 160 students less than an earlier projection of 29,044 students.

Edward Lawler, sociology professor and chairman of the UI strategic planning committee, suggested a target goal of 29,000 students in a report released by the planning committee in July. He said the lack of the 160 should not affect the UI's academic environment.

CAC opposes higher student health fee

Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

Calling the suggested mandatory student health fee an outrage and a hidden tuition increase, the Collegiate Associations Council Tuesday urged that the UI administration rescind the proposal.

UI administrators are expected to request the state Board of Regents impose a fee on students, reaching $80 per year after three years, to cover UI Student Health Service funding.

Students now pay about $20 a year for the service as part of their tuition.

"The whole point is if the UI is going to impose some sort of fee for student health outside of tuition, which they've never done before, then they should not concurrently withdraw their own support," said Dan Shanes, CAC president.

According to the UI proposal, presented to student government by Hunter Rawlings, UI president, and Susan Phillips, UI vice president for finance and university services, two weeks ago, the UI general fund allocation to Student Health Service would drop from the current $935,774 to $250,000 in 1992.

That general fund allocation would remain at $250,000 — while the student fee would increase at the rate of inflation, Shanes said.

Chris Anderson, CAC executive associate, said the mandatory Student Health Service fee would represent about a 3-percent increase in resident undergraduate tuition.

Anderson added that the student health budget has not kept pace with the UI budget, and the large debts are based on poor planning. He said 90 percent of the budget is committed to constant expenditures, such as salaries.

CAC has been meeting with state Board of Regents' members to discuss the proposed health fee and tuition costs prior to Wednesday's regents meeting in Cedar Falls.

Another objection voiced on the increased fee is that students will pay more money but will not receive additional health care.

"We currently live in an economic situation where our state is going to have more money to spend than it has ever had to spend in its history, both in real dollars and inflated dollars," said Jerry Miller, CAC executive associate. "Given that scenario, I think that the UI should first go to the Legislature and ask for more money and then maybe consider some kind of alternative for funding UI Student Health Services."

Army pilots fear officials grounding them for reporting safety violations

ROCK ISLAND, Ill. (AP) — Two pilots say they are fighting for their jobs and their reputations after blowing the whistle on the U.S. Army Rock Island Arsenal for safety violations involving its airplanes.

But Army officials say there have been no reprisals against the two civilian pilots, Curt McRae, 40, and Lloyd Williams, 50.

After years spent flying Army brass, equipment and dangerous chemicals and weapons across the country, McRae and Williams say they're grounded, and their futures are in jeopardy.

"I put up with safety violations and broken rules, and even participated myself, for six years because I was afraid of losing my job," McRae said in a recent interview.

"I spent 13½ months in Vietnam with the Marines. That was a cakewalk compared to what I've gone through at the arsenal."

In September 1987, McRae began reporting violations at the flight detachment based at Quad City Airport in nearby Moline. Many of the problems he cited were subsequently acknowledged and corrected by Army officials.

But in October 1987, McRae was grounded.

"I put up with safety violations and broken rules, and even participated myself, for six years because I was afraid of losing my job."

"In calling for my disqualification as a pilot, my supervisors accused me of a mental disorder and suggested I would sabotage an aircraft if allowed to return to the airport," he said.

At a February news conference, McRae was credited with pointing out "weaknesses in safety, management and operations" at the flight division by Gen. Marvin Brailsford, commander of the U.S. Army Armament, Munitions and Chemical Command at the arsenal.

"Corrective actions were taken to fix those deficient areas," Brailsford said. "A number of allegations were substantiated," including failure to report aircraft mishaps, transportation of unauthorized personnel, falsification of official documents and failure to notify the airport of hazardous cargo.

Disciplinary action was taken against supervisors, the flight detachment was reorganized and new safety checks were added to daily routine.

Additional allegations leveled by McRae and Williams are under investigation by the Army's criminal investigation division, said arsenal spokesman Al Schwartz.

In January, McRae was told he was being fired because he was unfit for pilot duties. His dismissal has been suspended pending an investigation by the Merit Systems Protection Board.

Since his grounding nearly two years ago, McRae said he has sorted tools in a machine shop while drawing his $39,100 annual pilot's pay.

"They want to make an example out of me," he said. "They are trying to destroy me and my family. They are trying to destroy any chance I have for employability in the airline industry. They have assassinated my character and slandered me beyond belief."

Appointment awaits regents approval

Margot Kruppner
The Daily Iowan

Susan Mask, a contractual adviser for the UI since 1986, has recently been appointed acting director of affirmative action.

Mask, whose appointment is expected to be approved in the upcoming state Board of Regents meeting, said the UI's Office of Affirmative Action is a strong one.

"This university is committed to affirmative action," Mask said. "We want to build on what the past director did, and even go further."

UI President Hunter Rawlings has asked for an upcoming review of the affirmative action office, and Mask said she looks forward to the review as an indication of what the office might do better in the future.

"The role of affirmative action at UI is a very important one, Mask said. She envisions an increase in outreach programs given by office employees to UI groups and organizations.

"Diversity is a positive and worthy goal," Mask said.

lascivious acts with a child was sentenced Friday to a maximum of five years in prison for sexually abusing a 14-year-old girl, according to Johnson County District Court records.

The defendant, Stephen M. Phillips II, 20, was placed in temporary custody of the Johnson County sheriff, according to court records.

Bond on appeal was set at $5,000, according to court records.

• A man, address unknown, was charged with assault with intent to commit sexual abuse Saturday after he allegedly attacked a woman in a pickup camper, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Police located the defendant, Kenneth L. Sanders, 33, from a description given by the victim, according to court records.

Sanders allegedly admitted struggling with the victim earlier, according to court records.

Sanders was placed in the custody of the 6th Judicial District Department of Corrections, according to court records.

Preliminary hearing is set for October 5, according to court records.

• A Coralville man was charged with false imprisonment Saturday after he allegedly locked a woman in a car against her will, according to Johnson County District Court records.

• A man who pleaded guilty to

The defendant, Donald R. Mueller, 18, 209 Holiday Road, Apt. 206, allegedly admitted to police that he locked the victim in a car, according to court records.

Mueller was also charged with assault causing injury/domestic abuse. He was released from custody on his own recognizance, according to court records.

Preliminary hearing in the matter is set for October 6, according to court records.

• An Iowa City man was charged with assault causing injury and burglary Friday for allegedly beating a man after the defendant's girlfriend told him their relationship was over, according to Johnson County District Court records.

The defendant, Steven R. Shorter, 23, 1225 S. Riverside Drive, allegedly went to the residence of the victim to speak to his girlfriend. When she told him that their relationship was over, he allegedly entered the residence and sought out the victim and beat him, causing welts on his forehead and a bloody nose, according to court records.

Shorter was taken to the Johnson County Jail on $10,000 bail, according to court records.

Preliminary hearing in the matter is set for September 25, according to court records.

• An Iowa City man was charged with assault causing injury Sunday after he allegedly struck a 15-year-old boy, causing a welt on his left temple, according to Johnson County District Court records.

The defendant, James M. Knebel, 39, 45 Thatcher Trailer Court, was released on the condition that he would not have any contact with the victim, according to court records.

Preliminary hearing in the matter is set for October 2, according to court records.

• Two Des Moines men were charged with third-degree criminal mischief Saturday after they allegedly broke the glass door of The Wig and Pen Limited, 1220 W. Hwy. 6, Coralville, resulting in $250 worth of damage, according to Johnson County District Court records.

One defendant, Phillip J. Williams, 30, 212 E. Third St., Des Moines, fled the scene. When he was located, he allegedly told police that he was jumped by several people at the bar and that his hand was forced through the glass panel, according to court records.

The other defendant is Michael T. Williams, 31, 708 Sandahl St., Des Moines, according to court records.

Preliminary hearing in the matter is set for October 6 for both defendants, according to court records.

U.S. radon studies need more criteria

Research targets efficiency

Brian Dick
The Daily Iowan

Studying more stringent criteria are needed in areas of the United States with high radon concentrations, said John Neuberger during a seminar on the health effects of radon exposure Monday.

Neuberger, assistant professor of preventive medicine at the University of Kansas, hosted the seminar in the UI's Bowen Science Building as one in the series of lectures sponsored by the UI Center for Health Effects of Environmental Contamination.

CHEEC, established in 1987, aids the state in studying the effects of contaminants in its air, water and food supplies.

Neuberger's lecture focused on studies of non-occupational radon exposure and lung cancer, and highlighted part of his recently completed research project on worldwide studies of household radon exposure and lung cancer, funded by the U.S. Department of Energy.

Neuberger's research investigated past cancer mortality studies and other published studies, summarizing the results of the ongoing studies in order to recommend weaknesses and strengths that will, in the future, produce more efficient information, he said.

"Of the 31 studies (conducted in the United States and foreign countries), 16 showed a positive association between radon and lung cancer," Neuberger said.

Risk factors associated with lung cancer include urban factors such as "ambient asbestos, genetic susceptibility, chest X-rays and a low dietary intake of Beta-carotene," he said.

Household exposure to radon usually occurs in one of several ways, Neuberger said.

Factors affecting radon exposure are caused by the geology of the land, "soil permeability, moisture, foundation type, (atmospheric) pressure differences and air circulation and ventilation," he said. Cracks in the floor and in the joints of houses also increase the susceptibility of exposure to radon.

Sealing the floor joints and cracks, and improving a house's ventilation system can reduce levels of radon by limiting the amount of exposure time, Neuberger said.

Radon is primarily responsible for respiratory system (lung) cancer, Neuberger said, but can also induce blood, liver, spleen, muscle, bone and gonad cancer.

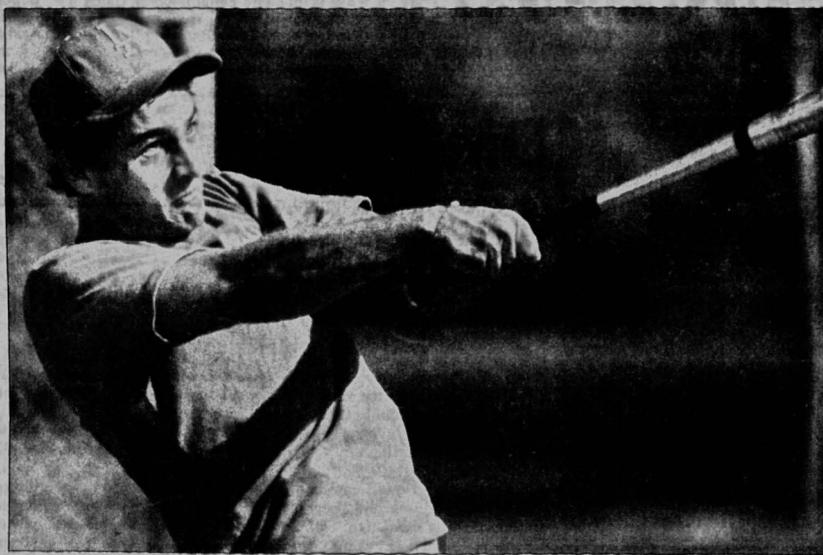

"The major locus of concern is the respiratory system," he said. "(Radon) deposits in lung cells beneath the lung's mucous lining, and the basal cells near the membrane of the lung tissue are most likely to turn malignant."

Absorption of radon through the blood stream, however, can spread the malignancy, causing the infestation of other internal organs, he said.

In the United States, scattered occurrences of Uranium-bearing coals and shales — the geological foundations in which the element radon is found — are present in the Midwest but are more prevalent in the mountainous regions of the West. The southwestern portion of Iowa sits over a large expanse of such mineral deposits, Neuberger said.

Currently, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency funds one ongoing study of radon levels in the state of Iowa, statistically measuring relative differences between smoking and non-smoking participants as well as male and female participants.

"A number of useful case-control studies are underway," Neuberger said. "The problem is that a number of them appear to be missing some relevant information, like a study of diet, family history and X-rays."

Weddington to discuss Roe at UI

The Daily Iowan

Sarah Weddington, who at 26 successfully defended "Jane Roe" in the precedent-setting Roe v. Wade U.S. Supreme Court decision, will speak on the implications of the ruling tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

Weddington has been a driving force in law since the age of 21 when she became one of the first women to graduate from the University of Texas Law School. She is currently a lecturer on government and history at the University of Texas and Texas Women's University.

She defended "Jane Roe" in the 1973 case that determined women had the individual right to continue or terminate an unwanted pregnancy.

She also was appointed general counsel for the U.S. Department of Agriculture, was named President Jimmy Carter's assistant for women's affairs for three years, directed administration policy on women's issues and served as a political liaison for various state leaders.

She served a two-year term as a Texas lobbyist and has held a position as director of the Office of State and Federal Relations in Washington, D.C.

Beyond her work in legal and federal matters, she was president of the Botwinick-Wolfensohn Foundation, directed public affairs at a New York investment firm, served a three-year term in the Texas Legislature and became the first person to hold an endowed chair at the University of New Mexico.

She is also a corporate director, the president of the Bob Marshall Foundation, and is on several non-profit organization boards. She has been involved in writing the "Washington Report" for Glamour magazine and in writing other articles on the Constitution, legal and women's issues.

3 grants given for research on aging

Amy Davoux
The Daily Iowan

Due to $5,000 in seed grants being given by the UI Committee on Aging and the UI Office of the Vice President for Research, three UI staff members will be conducting research projects into health problems of the elderly this year.

Projects being conducted under the 1989 grants are: the growth of brain cells in people with degenerative disorders by Nicholas Pantazis, associate professor of anatomy in the UI College of Medicine; effects of aging on vision by Lynn Zimba, assistant professor of psychology; and use of electrical stimulation to alleviate night leg pains by Keela Herr, assistant professor in the UI College of Nursing.

Pantazis will be looking at whether a lack of protein affects the life-span of certain nerve cells causing Alzheimer's and Parkinson's diseases. Brain samples taken from people with and without the disease will assist him in determining the concentration of nerve growth factors.

Zimba will be determining if some of the dysfunction causing deterioration of structures within the eye are connected to losses due to structure within the eye or cell losses in visual cortex. She will also consider the rates of deterioration in peripheral vision in the elderly.

Herr will focus on the possibility that electrical stimulation can help patients avoid night leg pains caused by circulation problems. Patients involved in her study will be subjected to a noninvasive treatment called transcutaneous nerve stimulation, and results will be taken before, during and after this process.

These grants have existed since 1984, and a total of $136,000 has been awarded to date. All UI faculty members are eligible to apply for the grants as long as the research falls under a topic concerning the elderly or the aging process.

The concept behind the grants is to allow funding for the researchers to compile pilot data and test their hypotheses on a small scale. This pilot research can then be used to apply for major grants through private agencies.

Since these major grants involve large sums of money pilot, research is vital to reassure agencies that the researcher is on the right track. UI research projects originally funded by seed grants have gone on to attract over $1.1 million dollars from various foundations and federal agencies.

SEXUAL ASSAULT AWARENESS WEEK

Acquaintance Rape Prevention Strategies

Many of us are brought up holding a certain image in our minds of a rapist: a stranger, someone who is crazy, someone who looks a certain way, someone we could certainly identify and recognize as dangerous. But in reality, most rapes are acquaintance rapes - it's been estimated that in as many as 70% of rapes, the victim knows the assailant. Rapists very often may appear "normal" - many are attractive, articulate, and charming. Although rape is NEVER the victim's fault and many rapes are unavoidable and unpredictable, there are several behavioral warning signs that we can become aware of and learn to listen to - warning signs that may indicate danger:

- *Someone who emotionally abuses you - through insults, comments, ignoring your opinions and/or feelings
- *Someone who tries to control elements of your life or your relationship - who tells you who you may be friends with, who you can talk to, what you can wear
- *Someone who always insists on making decisions, for example - the movie you'll see or the restaurant you'll go to
- *Someone who talks negatively about women in general
- *Someone who holds false, dangerous ideas about women - for example, that women ask to be raped
- *Someone who gets jealous when there's no reason; who is overly possessive or overly accusatory
- *Someone who acts in an intimidating way towards you (sits too close, uses his body to block your way, touches you when you tell him not to, speaks as if he knows you much better than he does)
- *Someone who is physically violent to you or others, for example, grabbing and pushing to get his way
- *Someone who is unable to handle sexual and emotional frustrations without becoming angry
- *Someone who drinks heavily or uses drugs and tries to get you intoxicated
- *Someone who berates you for not wanting to get drunk, get high, have sex, or go with him to an isolated or personal place - his room, your apartment, etc.
- *Someone who doesn't view you as an equal, either because he's older or because he sees himself as smarter or socially superior

Pell Grant victims

Students who rely on Pell Grants to assist in their education costs are being victimized by the U.S. government.

Currently, they are required to sign a statement promising not to become involved with drugs during their college careers in the use, manufacture or distribution of illegal substances. Thereafter, if a student is convicted of any drug offense, the grant is discontinued. The student is also required to repay all aid received up to that point and is disqualified from future Pell Grants. If a student chooses not to sign the form in the first place, the funds are withheld.

The argument in support of this caveat to the grants is that any student who relies on federal help to pay for college owes the government his or her assistance in the fight against drugs.

What's the matter with the government using its muscle to enforce the law? What's wrong with tying complicity to education? Economic discrimination, that's what.

It's not the first time that students have been coerced into conforming to government regulations by unrelated arguments. When the Carter administration reinstated the draft, students who wanted loan assistance had to prove they were registered before any money changed hands.

So what's the problem? What's the matter with the government using its muscle to enforce the law? What's wrong with tying complicity to education?

Economic discrimination, that's what. Students who don't need the Pell Grants don't have to sign any statement at all. Students convicted of drug offenses who pay their own tuition, or whose parents do, aren't penalized beyond the normal sentence or fine. On the other hand, students who rely on federal funds to attend college are punished more than their affluent classmates. And when the Carter administration tied loans to registration, affluent students had the option of disobeying the law, yet still attending school.

There's nothing wrong with wanting federal funds to be given only to law-abiding students. There's nothing wrong with enlisting them in the fight against drugs. There's even nothing wrong with forcing compliance with drug laws, wherever Congress has the muscle.

But when rich kids don't play by the same rules, or suffer the same consequences, and when needy students are forced to make promises that their classmates aren't, the concept of equal rights is no longer at work.

Praise for Hungary

We all knew it was too good to last.

A week ago, Hungary threw open its long-closed borders to East German citizens seeking an escape from the repression of their native country. Thousands of East Germans took advantage of what seemed like a dream come true: Not only were they being permitted unchecked passage to the West, but it was also courtesy of a country that was supposed to be following the communist policy of not permitting travel, let alone emigration, to the West.

As of September 17, more than 16,000 East Germans had crossed the border and were on their way to starting new lives, free from the suffocating presence of communist rule.

But, as the saying goes, all good things must come to an end. Czechoslovakian and East German authorities have begun seizing the visas and travel papers of refugees awaiting passage to West Germany in camps along the Hungarian border. State police are coming to people's homes and apartments to confiscate passports, trains are being stopped and travelers forced to turn back in mid-journey.

And yet, as if the initial move by Hungary to open its borders didn't sufficiently amaze, the Hungarian foreign minister has continued to defend his government's decision to aid the refugees' flight.

In doing so, Hungary continues to demonstrate a respect for human rights rarely associated with a communist government. Americans have difficulty imagining a government empowered to limit freedom of travel. Perhaps that's the reason the world has watched this exodus of East Germans with such joy and relief.

But the iron curtain is closing again. For those who were lucky enough to make it over the border before East Germany took action, undreamed of opportunities in the West await. For those camped out on the West German border — on the verge of freedom — it is probably too late.

East Germany deserves our condemnation for driving thousands of its citizens to desperation in their attempts to flee, an image that will stay in the minds of free people everywhere for a long time.

Conversely, to merely praise Hungary for writing a new chapter in Eastern Bloc history is insufficient. Officials in that country have shown not only the world, but their Warsaw Pact allies as well, that a communist nation can grant people the right to determine their own lives without compromising its political ideology or endangering security.

Dinkins defeats cynics in Big Apple

because he is black.

Faced with demurrals — what about Dinkins' tax problems, what about his lack of toughness — the black journalist unleashed his ultimate weapon: "I can't believe," he said, "that you're all so uncynical!"

A few hours later, as the exit polls began to make the pattern of Dinkins' decisive victory, a whole lot of New Yorkers, maybe a whole lot of Americans, may have been feeling a lot less cynical.

It was, after all, less than two weeks since Yusef Hawkins, a 16-year-old black, had been shot to death by a member of a bat-wielding mob in a white Brooklyn neighborhood, mistaken for a black youth who had allegedly been dating a neighborhood white girl.

Inevitably, that outrage was followed by the posturing of black political opportunists, blatantly racist coveting by some white neighborhood hooligans, and the general assumption that New York City was in the grip of a steadily worsening racial crisis.

It had been another in a litany of events, from the death of a black man three years ago at the hands of another white mob, to the brutal rape and beating of a white female jogger in Central Park at the hands of a black mob earlier this year.

And yet, for all of this, the Democratic primary for mayor turned out to be a remarkably clean, civil campaign.

Koch, usually unable to resist an acerbic, cutting remark, wound up promising to "heal" New York.

Dinkins campaigned in every neighborhood in New York, ending up in the largely white middle-class borough of Staten Island, as a symbolic gesture of inclusion.

Moreover, there were virtually no signs of the political poisons that bubble up from the nether regions in ugly campaigns. There were no ugly fliers mysteriously circulating in white neighborhoods, issuing phony "warnings to whiteness!" that could "prove" the malicious intentions of black politicians. There were no phony "KKK" leaflets produced so as to enrage and engage the black electorate.

It was not even the kind of "tribal" campaigning that marked Chicago's election of its first black mayor in 1983, when the candidates disdained virtually any appeal for unity and simply went about mobilizing their troops.

David Dinkins had the support of most New York City labor unions and a wide array of white elected officials. Koch's ads featured a heavy percentage of black and Hispanic supporters.

It was, in other words, an election much like the normal tribal patterns of big-city politics, where candidates secure their respective bases, then move out to try to cobble together a coalition of temporary allies.

Dinkins won 95 percent of every 100 black votes, to be sure, but he also captured roughly one-third of white voters — an extraordinarily high percentage for a black non-incumbent (only Los Angeles' Tom Bradley in 1973 did better, and that was his second try for the mayoralty).

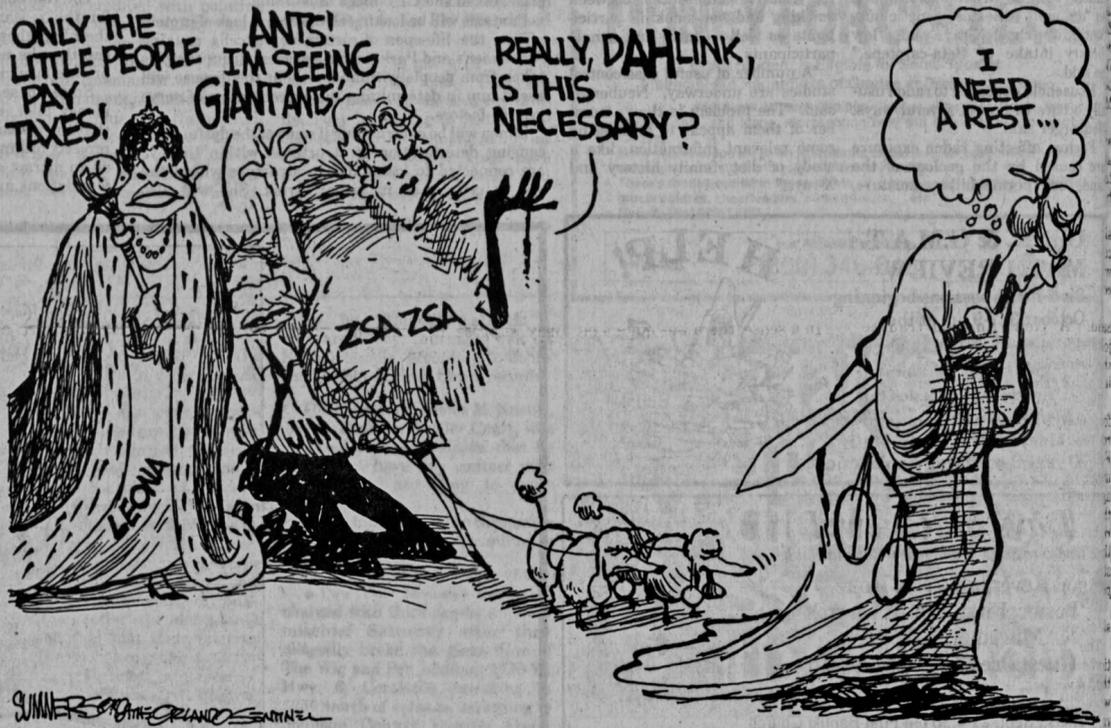

That kind of result might really mean that — much to the surprise of many of us — a lot of New Yorkers were ready to turn to a candidate who promised a quieter, less abrasive kind of leadership, perhaps even a version of the more muted voice that George Bush has thus far brought to the presidency.

There are still nearly two months to go until the general election. It is at least possible that an angrier kind of racial politics could arise — although Republican mayoral nominee Rudy Giuliani has nothing in his personality or public record to suggest he would attempt such a campaign.

It is, in fact, much more likely that the race will be a high-level battle between two candidates both appealing to "the better angels of our nature."

How utterly, remarkably, splendidly uncynical a possibility that is.

Fatalism is healing balm for Iowa fans

Justin Cronin

There are certain things that a man has to do to call himself a man, certain rituals to perform, and most are barbaric to the core: a man's first fistfight, the first time he hauls off and kills something that doesn't deserve it, his early, formative (and usually comic) experiences with power tools. Not things to be especially proud of, but there they are. I'm sure women have something similar they don't like talking about.

Big-10 football is such a ritual, and a lot of people in Iowa are griping this week about the Hawkeye's 44-6 loss to a team so nerdy they call themselves "Ducks." The fans are suffering, and I mean to comfort them.

Which is why I want to say a few words about bullfighting. Unusual circumstances took me to Spain last spring, and what is Spain without a trip to the bullring? How could I call myself a man if I let that ancient spectacle escape my notice? That, anyway, is how I saw it.

It was appalling. Three of the four matadors were ghastly amateurs. They botched the kill until the crowd's boos shook the stadium, and I longed for someone to produce a rifle and put the poor, enormous, bleeding stupid thing out of everyone's misery, and maybe take a shot at the matador for good measure. It was embarrassing. It made me want to be throw up and then cry, and it made my neck hurt a lot.

But there's something at stake in the bullring, something much larger than the off-chance that the men in charge will blow it. Hemingway wrote that the only way to understand a bullfight was to view it as a tragedy; that one enjoys a bullfight only insofar as one can experience the catharsis of an elaborately orchestrated death.

He was right. A good matador has a lot to do with a good bullfight, but he is not the hero. The matador chooses to be there; his risks, though large, are voluntary. The stakes in a bullfight have little to do with his personal fate, and even if they did, the spectacle of a man in trouble by his own foolhardy consent is far less compelling than the final, inevitable moment of a bull's life.

So what's at stake is the bull — how he will die. If Lear's tragic flaw is vanity and Hamlet's indecision, then the bull's flaw is his place on the foodchain. He is huge, dangerous, and dumb as, well, a bull, a quality for which he pays dearly. The whole thing sounds barbaric because it is, but the most sophisticated person has only to see a bull tear into the ring, snorting and throwing his horns, to know he is in the presence of something both noble and doomed; better than we are, and worse, and, the average computed, a lot like us.

Of the eight bulls I saw that day, six died in ghastly accidents. They might just as well have been hit by a bus, and I began to doubt Hemingway's axiom. But the fourth matador, a slight, baby-faced youngster, worked his bulls well and after the prescribed time dispatched them with something very much like elegance, and I found myself admiring both of them, live matador and dead bull. The women in the audience got so worked up they threw red pumps into the ring, and if I hadn't been wearing hiking boots I would have done the same.

Saturday's game at Kinnick reminded me of nothing so much as that hot afternoon on the sunny side of the bullring. For a newcomer to Big-10 football, there was much to look at besides the game, many barometers of disaster: Herky patrolling the sidelines looking drugged, stumbling occasionally as if he'd received an arrow; the pom-poms running up and down the end zone doing a cheer that sounded like "Don't bum out!" When in the fourth quarter Oregon kicked a thoroughly unnecessary field goal, the man behind me remarked, "I'm glad I'm drunk or I'd really be upset," and I guessed I agreed. It was, as football games go, a pretty lopsided affair.

Football is a complex game, always played at a distance, and designed to confuse. Most people who watch and enjoy football haven't the slightest idea what's really going on, and I am one of them. I have no earthly notion what went wrong, what they had that we didn't, what tragic flaw (inexperience? bad advice?) did us in. Obviously, it was rather large.

But if there is one, overarching problem with American sports, it is the psychotic craving for things to be close — our failure to appreciate what is, in fact, a necessary ritual of defeat. On the subject of sports, Americans, unlike their Mediterranean counterparts, are not at all fatalists. We believe the game is always up for grabs.

But in Spain, bulls always lose big; everybody accepts it, a fact which frees spectators to experience the contest as it really is: a bull fight, and finest, hour.

We could use a dose of Mediterranean fatalism, for football is not so different. When a game begins, it's anybody's guess who, that afternoon anyway, is higher on the foodchain, who is matador and who bull. Yet one team is doomed from the start — not knowing it, very like the bull — and everything that happens after the coin toss, even the moments of excruciating reprieve, is an increment in the drama of somebody's defeat.

Sports writers knock themselves out looking for new verbs to describe a game with a 38 point spread. Monday's Daily Iowan headline, typical of most, read, "Ducks dump Iowa."

Better had it said: "Hawks meet their fate at Kinnick Stadium; fans cover field with red pumps."

UI researchers clone proteins in search of CGD cure

Ann Marie Williams
The Daily Iowan

UI researchers have found what may be a cure for chronic granulomatous disease, a rare but often fatal genetic disease which affects small children.

UI College of Medicine researchers have successfully cloned proteins vital to the body's immune system, moving closer to finding an effective treatment for the disease.

Two proteins necessary for the body's infection-fighting white-blood cells to kill bacteria were identified in previous research. It was also discovered that the absence of either of these proteins can cause one form of CGD, which leads to severe infections of the liver, lungs, bone and skin.

"We discovered that it may be possible to treat the disease by supplying the missing protein or by replacing genes that lack the proteins," said Robert Clark, head of the research team and director of the infectious disease division in the UI internal medicine department.

Assisting Clark with the study was William Nauseef, UI associate professor of internal medicine, and Bryan Volpp, UI postdoctorate fellow in internal medicine.

Results of the study were published in a September issue of the New England Journal of Medicine and in a September issue of the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Researchers expect that the new treatment possibilities will be more effective than the current treatment of using antibiotics to prevent infection. Even with antibiotic treatment, the disease is often fatal.

Clark said the research centered on two of the body's proteins, eventually concentrating on the smaller protein, believed to be the more common deficiency.

"Identifying the proteins involved in the disease was an important step because they were unknown before," Clark said. "But now that we're able to clone that protein, we can begin to determine the actual genetic basis for the deficiency."

The research on cloning will enable the structure and function of the CGD-related proteins to be studied, Clark said.

Although the cause of the genetic unbalance is unknown, there are many possible reasons some CGD patients lack one of the proteins, Clark said.

Tablets remain under wraps

Davenport museum won't show 'fakes'

The Associated Press

DAVENPORT (AP) — On a cold January day in 1877, hardly ideal weather for an archaeological expedition, the Rev. Jacob Gass strong-armed his way through 2½ feet of frozen soil and started digging an Indian burial mound.

He was astonished at what he found.

It was, said experts at the time, proof once and for all that a lost nation of immigrants was the first to inhabit the New World, somehow later to vanish as native Indians took over.

It was, says former Iowa state geologist Marshal McKusick, nothing of the kind.

Unearthed that day were two heavy slate tablets — one of them fractured by an eager thrust of a shovel — containing diagrams, symbols, characters from ancient languages and even signs of the Zodiac. They're still stored away deep in the Putnam Museum in Davenport, unavailable for viewing because, said museum director Mike Smith, they're fakes.

Not only that, said McKusick, an associate professor of archaeology at the UI, but the slates were taken from the outside wall of a house of prostitution in Davenport.

The marks and diagrams, McKusick said, were meant to fool Gass, considered something of a blowhard, into thinking he had discovered the link to the lost nation.

"It's just jibberish," McKusick said. "A New England Yankee joke. It's a wonderful story about the beginnings of archaeology, but it's a joke that got out of hand."

The story would be simply a footnote in history if it weren't for retired Harvard professor Barry Fell. Fell says he has learned the meaning of one of slates — he agrees the other is a fraud — and that the early experts were on the right track. His several books on the topic have caused a steady stream of the curious to seek a peak, all to be turned away.

"We're not going to make a sideshow out of this," said Smith.

The discoveries drew great attention to the museum's predecessor, the Davenport Academy of Science, whose directors went to embarrassing lengths, McKusick says, to defend the tablets in face of growing evidence that they were fakes. Members who questioned the authenticity were expelled.

In the first years, experts had all sorts of interpretations, with one professor declaring the tablets showed a connection to Noah and the Ark. Another said the original inhabitants were a lost tribe from Israel.

Janice Hall, curator of the Putnam Museum in Davenport, holds a heavy slate unearthed from an Indian burial mound more than a century ago in Davenport. She thinks it is a fake.

Universally, McKusick said, experts at the time thought the native Indians couldn't have been the ones to build the burial mounds, and the search was on for the lost "mound builders."

"In a sense, there was quite a bit of latent racism," McKusick said. "People got the idea that the Indians weren't capable of any sustained effort."

"These were lively times in the scientific community," said Smith. "People mixed religious and scientific views fairly regularly." By the turn of the century, he said, the scientific community concluded that the slates were fakes and that the Indians built the burial grounds.

No one ever owned up to the fraud except for one person who wouldn't have been old enough to participate at the time, said McKusick. "They took the secret to their grave."

But he said that's not too surprising. "Look at the Piltdown man, the internationally famous hoax (unearthed in Sussex, England, in the early 1900s) that lasted 40 years before it was proven a fake.

It's still uncertain who did it. It shouldn't surprise you that there isn't a signed confession in the Davenport conspiracy," the professor said.

In McKusick's first book on the subject, "The Davenport Conspiracy," published in 1970, he described Gass as a Lutheran minister from Switzerland who spoke only German. He enjoyed success in earlier digs, and "we may suppose he made his point that systematic work rather than random excursions provided results," McKusick wrote.

But some members of the academy, more of a social than scientific club, thought Gass to be a "windjammer and liar," according to stories handed down over the years.

Thus spawned the inspiration to give him enough rope to hang himself, McKusick said, and "salt" his diggings with phony relics.

There is more than enough evidence to show both tablets are fakes, he said. The dirt near the "relics" appeared to be recently disturbed and bone fragments were scattered. Both tablets were found in the same clump of clay, and the markings were made with tools that the ancients didn't have. The one all agree was fake had evenly drawn circles, apparently made by a compass, plus signs of the Zodiac and two nail holes.

Arnould says signs litter Iowa roads

DES MOINES (AP) — House Majority Leader Bob Arnould urged state officials Monday to halt a highway beautification program he said is replacing trash with "a littering of signs."

"The possibility exists that, in exchange for twice-yearly litter removal, we may find our highways littered with signs," said Arnould, a Davenport Democrat.

"I also am concerned these signs could become a safety hazard for drivers and maintenance workers," Arnould said in a letter to Austin Turner, head of the Iowa Transportation Commission.

Arnould's concern was raised by an "eat-a-highway" program announced by Gov. Terry Branstad earlier this year. That program encourages community groups to adopt a stretch of road and pick up litter periodically.

In exchange, state officials put up a sign giving recognition to the groups.

Arnould said the signs are, in many ways, as ugly as litter.

"I wonder if we are not replacing litter along the highways with a littering of signs," Arnould wrote.

Report says Iowa must tighten laws, protect against hate-crime violence

DES MOINES (AP) — Hate crimes in Iowa are increasing, and state laws need to be toughened to protect minorities and homosexuals, a study released Monday said.

"In the past five years, there has been an increase of bias-motivated crimes in the Midwest," the study compiled by the Coalition of Iowa Civil and Human Rights Organizations said. "Iowa is not immune to this disturbing trend."

Gov. Terry Branstad should name a task force to "develop an overall government strategy" to quell hate-crime violence, the study said.

The Iowa Department of Justice received 40 reports of hate crimes such as cross burnings in 1987 and 1988, the study said. The actual number is probably far higher, the study said.

Iowa law "is limited in scope" and should be toughened to encourage prosecutors to act, the study said. The study asked for tougher penalties and "a workable mechanism for the reporting, documentation, investigation and prosecution of bias-motivated crimes."

Protections also should be extended to homosexuals, who are increasingly the target of violence, the study said.

"Individuals target gays and lesbians for hate violence activities, just as they target blacks, Hispanics and Jews," the study said. "Those who are victims must find protection under the law."

Marc Solomon, executive director of Jewish Community Relations, said that Iowa's population is becoming more diverse, and that has increased violence.

"Crimes of hatred are indeed a new challenge," said Solomon.

Though there is a state law banning hate crimes, Solomon said the penalties aren't tough enough to convince local prosecutors they should act.

"Individuals target gays and lesbians for hate violence activities, just as they target blacks, Hispanics and Jews," the study said.

The comments came at a news conference by the coalition.

Solomon said despite the 40 reported hate crimes, "there have been no prosecutions."

"Part of this is due to a limited penalty," he said.

Donna Dillon Ridgely of Burlington, head of the Association of Iowa Human Rights Agencies, said the state has a long tradition of being progressive on civil-rights issues.

"Iowa has a history of being at the forefront on these issues," she said.

She said the task force could underscore Iowa's determination to end hate crimes.

"It's clearly a national problem," she said. "It's clearly growing."

The groups are particularly alarmed by what appears to be a sudden upturn in violence, she said.

There was only one reported incident in 1984 and five in 1985. But there were 20 in 1987 and 20 in 1988, officials said.

While hate crimes have grown about 10 percent nationally over a five-year period, they have increased 40 percent in an eight-state Midwest region, they said.

"The groups that tend to be the most violent are the youths aged 17 to 24," Solomon said.

Ridgely said officials are worried about an upturn of violence and racial incidents on college campuses.

"Iowa campuses have not been exempt from that," she said. "There are people who feel at risk."

"If it's here in Iowa at all, we must address it as Iowans."

The Legislature this year debated a bill toughening civil-rights law. That measure foundered, primarily over the issue of extending protection to homosexuals.

Obscene Enrollment

"I strongly encourage victims of obscene phone calls to exercise that right," he added.

Lihs gave suggestions on what the victims of obscene phone callers should do.

- Victims should hang up as soon as they realize it is a crank call.
- They should never enter into conversation with the caller.
- Victims should never give someone their name on the phone until they know who it is.
- They should be careful of how much information they give out on an answering machine and leave no message that says the resident is not at home. The obscene phone caller could take such a message as an invitation to come over.
- Victims should call the police, especially if the phone call is threatening.

More often than not, it is better to have as little communication with the caller as possible and to remain calm, Lihs said.

"If you don't talk to them or listen to what they say, they have very little chance of upsetting you," he said. "People who make obscene phone calls usually get some sort of satisfaction out of upsetting you."

One way to get rid of an obscene phone caller is to blow a police whistle into the phone, Lihs suggested. This gives the victim some satisfaction.

"If the phone calls persist, the police will usually contact the phone company," said Lynn Gipple, a U.S. West Communications spokeswoman.

"We ask you to keep a log of when you are getting the calls to see if there is a pattern that might help us track down who is making the calls," she said.

"In many cases it ends up being someone you know," she added. "So you can be a great help to the phone company in tracking down the caller."

There are several ways the phone company can assist victims of obscene calls. Victims can have their phone numbers changed and can also obtain an unlisted or unpublished number.

An unlisted number doesn't appear in the phone book, but can be listed in directory assistance. An unpublished number is not in the book and cannot be received from directory assistance.

Women who live alone may wish to have their number listed using their first initial instead of their full name, Gipple said.

"We have been very fortunate in that we have never dealt with a phone call where the caller has followed through on the threats," Lihs said. "We still encourage people to report calls to the police. Often, your caller is someone else's caller too. By reporting it to the police, you could be helping them figure things out."

Obscene phone callers are charged with harassment. The maximum sentence is a $100 fine and 30 days in jail.

throughout the day in exchange for items such as food, soft drinks and cigarettes, "said he wasn't going to hurt anybody," according to Craig Eversole, a classmate who was held but released. "He said he wasn't going to shoot nobody."

Police Trooper Ed Robinson said the hostage-taker was armed with a shotgun, a .357-caliber Magnum revolver and "some type of automatic pistol." Eversole identified the other weapons as a .44-caliber Magnum and a 12-gauge shotgun.

Robinson also said the teen-ager apparently had held one hostage overnight — the son of school Principal Betty Bond. He said the two boys arrived at school in the younger Bond's red pickup, and it appeared the armed youth had been holding the principal's son since the night before.

It was not clear why the youth took over the classroom. Authorities described him as a newcomer to the school who was living with his grandparents, but some students said they had known him for years.

Police Capt. John Lile said the boy's parents are separated.

Robinson said the student's first request had been to speak with his father who lives in Delray Beach, Fla. He later asked to talk with his grandparents.

Lile said the father had been contacted. Pauline Parks, whose son was still being held, said negotiators told her at mid-afternoon that the boy's father was en route to Kentucky, but police would not confirm the report.

Parks said she spoke with one of the last hostages to be released.

"He said they were walking around doing anything they want to do," Parks said. "They're watching TV, drinking pop."

Eversole, a 15-year-old junior, said he was in the classroom when the armed youth came through the door after reportedly firing a shot.

ment. "We proposed a target of roughly 29,000 students, and it looks like we are basically there," Lawler said. "(The lack of) won't have an effect on anything at this point. It looks like we are in the ballpark."

Hubbard said the UI is on target to match or beat the 8.5-percent minority enrollment goal established by the state Board of Regents.

But minority recruitment and retention efforts for Native American students have not been very successful, Hubbard added.

He said plans call for Milo Lone Eagle Colton, a UI law student, to work in the Sioux City area recruiting students from 29 various tribes.

"We still want to increase substantially the undergraduate numbers more than we have," Hubbard said.

Barron agreed there is much more that needs to be done in terms of minority recruitment, but credited the publicity, coordination and direction achieved with Opportunity at Iowa for much of the minority enrollment accomplishments.

Dallam said that the total UI entering freshman class declined by 245 students. All the undergraduate colleges showed declines in enrollment, except for the UI College of Nursing, which boosted enrollment to 336 students, up 16 students from last fall.

peace or to Western interests, he said. Bush also stuck to his opposition to a ban on all assault rifles, touching on a gun control issue that is politically potent in rural Montana.

"I have long felt that the answer is to go after the criminal and not, in the process, to do violence to the rights of legitimate gun owners," he said.

Bush struck a combative tone when it came to his plan for a capital gains tax cut — a plan approved in the House Ways and Means Committee last week with the help of six Democratic votes.

"We'll fight for it on the floor and hopefully get it passed and then approach the follow-on budget discussions," he said.

Senate Democratic Leader George Mitchell said after the vote that Democrats would not be willing to enter into comprehensive budget negotiations with the administration if the capital gains tax cut were approved.

Said Bush: "This idea that we won't talk — I don't think that's right, and I don't think the American people would support that."

Bush made a capital gains tax cut a key part of his 1988 presidential campaign, and said, "I happen to feel that it is good for creating more jobs. I think it is good for risk-taking."

Total UI undergraduate enrollment is down by 518 students. The Iowa Department of Education reported about 1,850 fewer high-school graduates this year and stated that the trend is expected to continue with 3,100 fewer high-school graduates anticipated in 1990 and 2,900 fewer in 1991.

Lawler said UI officials will have to "more vigorously recruit students from both in and out of state" in upcoming years to make up for the decrease in graduating high-school students.

"In the process, we hope to diversify our student body," Lawler added.

Despite the decline in entering freshmen, the number of undergraduate transfer students increased by 105 students, and the number of graduate students new to the UI increased by 60 students.

The UI College of Business Administration enrollment decreased by 211 students, or 17 percent. Last fall, that college limited enrollment in an attempt to optimize space and resources.

"The figures are close to our expectations and in line with what we feel our faculty and facilities can handle," said Gary Fethke, acting senior associate dean of the business school.

Enrollment increased in the UI College of Law as in most UI professional programs.

In a boutique on the ground floor of the two-story building housing The Associated Press bureau in San Juan, young looters defied winds hitting 100 mph at the peak of the storm and carried out armloads of women's clothing.

The storm blew out the windows in the AP office on a peninsula between the sea and San Juan harbor, destroying its computers and office equipment. One staffer said his furniture was blown out the windows of his apartment on the 20th story of his building.

At 6 p.m. EDT, Hugo's center was latitude 19.5 degrees north and longitude 67.0 west, or 90 miles northwest of San Juan, said the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla. It said Hugo was moving 13 mph in a wobbly, west-northwest to northwest direction.

Maximum sustained winds declined slightly over the day, to 115 mph, and hurricane-force winds extended up to 75 miles from its center, the forecasters added.

Meteorologist Jesse Moore at the National Hurricane Center said it was too early to tell whether Hugo would strike the U.S. mainland. He said the storm was expected to be off southeastern Bahamas by Wednesday and "after that, it's anybody's guess."

Five people were reported killed, 80 injured and more than 10,000 homeless Sunday on the French island of Guadeloupe, relief officials said. Two people were killed in Antigua, according to Beacon Radio in Anguilla, and there were reports of six deaths in Montserrat.

Richard Weening of Milwaukee, chairman of Caribbean Communications Co., which operates the GEM Radio Network from its headquarters on Montserrat, said ham operators linked to the network said the storm killed six people on the British Island and damaged 95 percent of the homes and the hospital.

Nearly all of Montserrat's 12,000 residents were homeless and without food or fresh water, said ham radio operator Stuart Haines of Queens, N.Y.

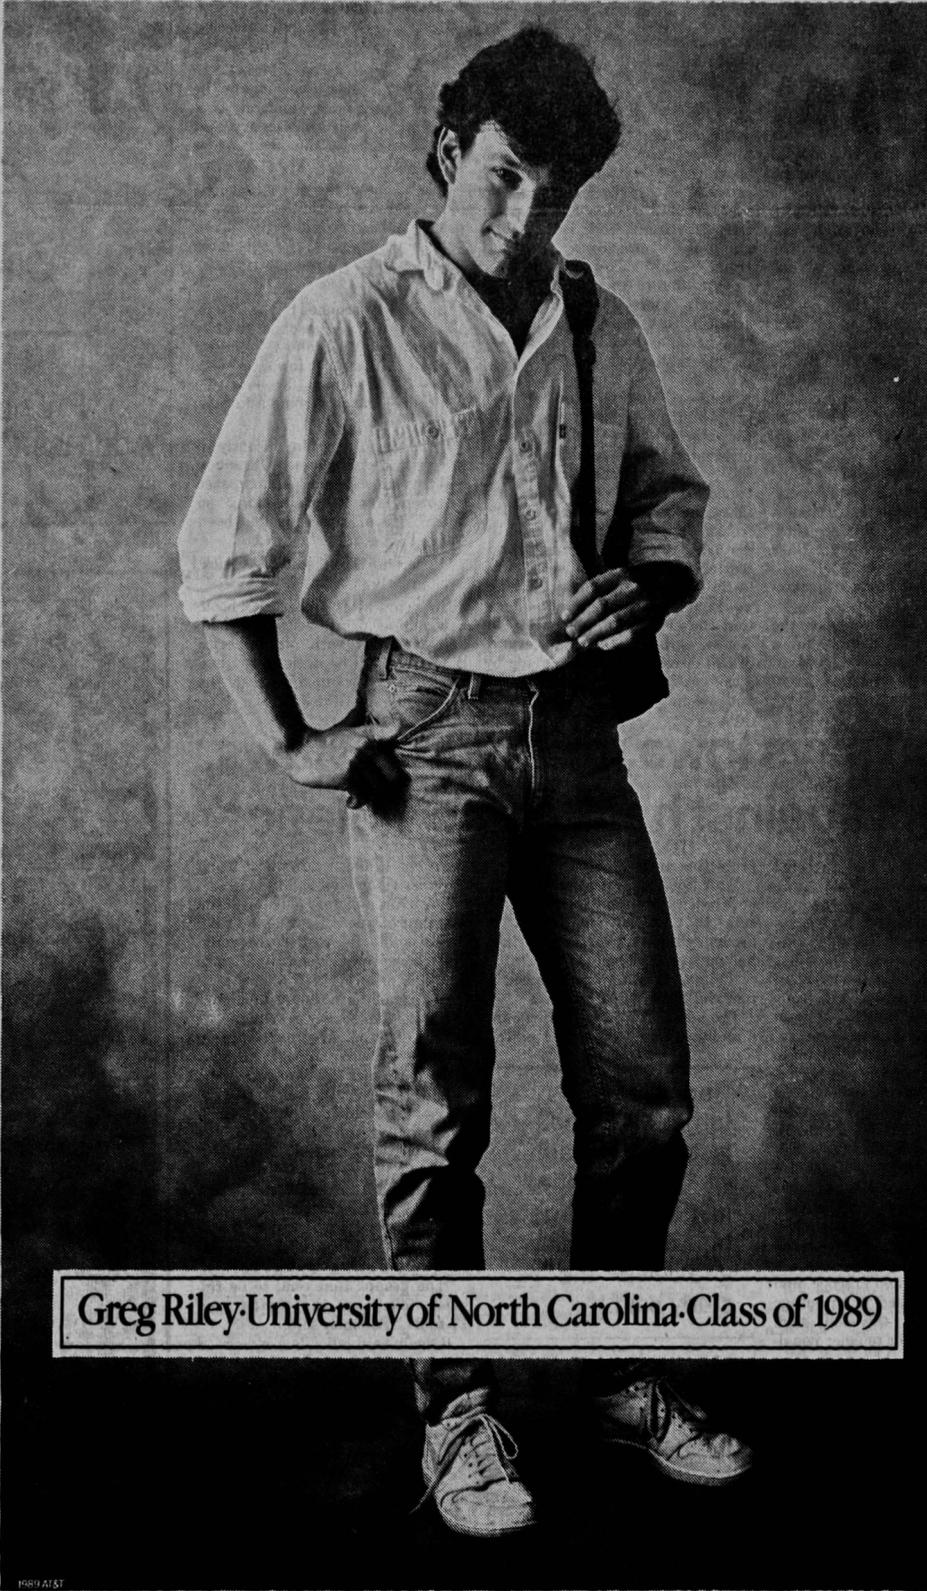

Off St. Thomas, charter boat captain O.B. O'Brian told Miami TV station WTVJ that many boats and homes had been damaged. "I'd say the island is pretty well devastated," he said.

Most of the Virgin Islands' 106,000 residents live on St. Thomas and St. Croix. On St. Croix, a ham radio operator said the winds tore off the roofs from up to 75 percent of the homes.

Officials said stores in the St. Croix town of Christiansted were heavily damaged, and there were reports of looting. National Guard Adjutant Gen. Robert Moorehead said 1,000 people were evacuated to rescue shelters in St. Croix.

Storm watches were in effect for parts of the Dominican Republic, and a hurricane warning was issued for the southern Bahamas, including the Turks and Caicos islands.

'Yeltsin-bashing' story re-run in Soviet paper

MOSCOW (AP)—Opposition legislator Boris Yeltsin shopped and drank until he dropped on his tour of the United States, said a scathing article reprinted Monday in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda.

The Communist Party maverick "leaves behind him a wake of catastrophic prophecies, insane expenses, interviews, and above all the perfume of Jack Daniels Black Label," the Italian newspaper La Repubblica said in an article translated into Russian and printed in full by Pravda.

Pravda did not comment on the article. But it gave its readers a taste of the page-5 piece in a front-page box quoting the article as saying Yeltsin found the United States "a holiday, a stage, a bar 5,000 kilometers long."

Yeltsin, who arrived back in Moscow late Monday evening, denied the report.

"It's garbage," Yeltsin told The Associated Press, flushing with anger.

"It's a simple lie, slander and revenge for the fact that Americans received us with admiration," he said before slipping into a black Volga car to be whisked into Moscow.

The article is potentially very damaging to the silver-haired, 58-year-old populist who has become a hero to many Soviets by criticizing special privileges for party and government officials and urging that President Mikhail Gorbachev speed up his reforms.

It raises the question of the character of a leading politician more clearly than it has been done in decades. It also cast Yeltsin as enjoying the good life just as much as the Moscow officials he criticizes while Soviets line up for sugar, meat and dozens of other everyday items.

But previous attacks on Yeltsin have been regarded by his supporters as an effort by powerful Kremlin figures to discredit him, and Yeltsin has turned that deep-rooted suspicion of central authority to his advantage.

Yeltsin returned one day ahead of a crucial Communist Party Central Committee meeting on ethnic unrest. Central Committee meetings also are empowered to consider personnel questions, and Yeltsin could be asked during the closed meeting to explain his behavior or be censured.

Earlier this year, party officials investigated Yeltsin.

Menem to pardon 18 on trial

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP)—Eighteen retired generals and admirals facing trial on charges that they committed hundreds of human-rights abuses in the '70s will be pardoned, President Carlos Menem announced.

The cases of six other people, including two former presidents already convicted and sentenced, will be considered at a later date, Menem said late Sunday in a brief interview with official television.

"In this first stage, we are going to pardon those who are now facing trial," Menem told Channel 7. "We will take a look later at those who already have been sentenced."

Menem's statement was the first firm indication of who would be included in the controversial pardon, expected to be formally announced following his return September 28 from a visit to the United States.

It brought an immediate protest from human-rights leaders who oppose any form of pardon.

"This is really alarming for us," said Carlos Zamorano, an attorney and leader of the Argentine League for Human Rights. He questioned the president's constitutional power to pardon people facing trial who have not yet been sentenced.

"A pardon always represents the pardoning of a sentence," he said Monday. "Those on trial still have not been sentenced and might even be acquitted by the court..."

"This is getting worse and worse," said Hebe Bonafini, founder of the Mothers of the Plaza de Mayo, a group made up of relatives of people who disappeared during the '70s. "All the military is responsible for what happened — for the kidnappings, the torture and the disappearances."

Sixteen retired army generals and two navy admirals currently are facing trial in civilian courts on hundreds of charges, including kidnapping, torture and murder, growing out of a brutal campaign conducted against leftist subversives during the 1976-83 military regime.

Six others were convicted of similar charges in 1984 and are serving terms ranging from eight years to life at a military prison.

They are former military presidents Gens. Jorge Videla and Roberto Viola, former Navy commanders Adms. Emilio Massera and Armando Lambruschini and former Buenos Aires provincial police chiefs Gens. Ramon Camps and Osvaldo Riccheri.

A government commission named by Menem's predecessor, former President Raul Alfonsin, determined that at least 8,900 Argentines disappeared during the anti-subversion campaign and were presumed dead. Rights groups have accused the armed forces of genocide.

Soviets discuss ethnic problems

MOSCOW (AP)—Communist Party leaders converged in Moscow Monday for a long-awaited Central Committee meeting on ethnic problems that have resulted in more than 200 people dead, one republic virtually blockaded and mass movements calling for secession.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev first promised the special session — which begins Tuesday — 18 months ago, after 31 people were killed in Armenian-Azerbaijani rioting in the republic of Azerbaijan in February 1988.

Since then, ethnic tension in this country of more than 100 nationalities has worsened. Violence has broken out in Armenia, Georgia, Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan in addition to Azerbaijan. The ethnic problems have combined with severe shortages of consumer goods, food rationing and unsettling political changes — all threatening Gorbachev's program of perestroika, or economic and social restructuring.

Gorbachev said last week on national television that discordant voices are speculating openly about the possibility of a coup, imminent chaos, and even civil war.

The Central Committee meeting will have to deal with a range of problems.

They include the following:
 • Armenians say their republic is being strangled by an economic blockade launched by neighboring Azerbaijan, which controls the key rail and highway access.

• Millions of Baltic residents have signed documents favoring independence for Estonia, Lithuania and Latvia.

• One-hundred ten enterprises with mostly Russian workers are on strike in Soviet Moldavia over a law making Moldavian the official language of the republic.

The death toll of around 200 in the ethnic unrest includes 100 killed in rioting in the Fergana Valley of Uzbekistan in June and more than 100 killed in violence between Armenians and Azerbaijanis since February.

Out of this unrest, the Communist Party says it hopes to create a situation where all Soviet citizens can "feel at home in any part of the country."

A draft ethnic policy published for discussion last month calls for restructuring the Soviet Union as a federation of republics with broader autonomous powers and even suggests that the agreement that created the union in 1922 could be rewritten.

It blames the ethnic tension on disputes dating back centuries, aggravated by dictator Josef Stalin's mass reprisals and "resettlement" of whole peoples, including the Crimean Tatars, Meskhetian Turks, Germans, Koreans, Greeks, Kurds, Kalmyks, Karachayevs, Balkarians, Chechen and Ingkush.

It offers the republics the power to question national laws before a strengthened high court and the right to use and distribute their national resources. But it reserves for the national government the right to decide "property relations" at a time when Baltic leaders want to legalize private property.

Koop: Government must reach teens about AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retiring Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, urging a return to "old-fashioned morality," said Monday the government must find a better way to reach teen-agers who are ignoring AIDS warnings.

"We know that sexual activity is rampant, and that people of the group I'm talking about are not listening to us," Koop said in a brief appearance before the new national AIDS commission.

"We have to remember that the fear of the consequences of behavior has not ever been enough to turn a teen-ager's mind."

Koop, praised for raising the nation's awareness of AIDS, also urged the panel to stop the spread of a "mean-spiritedness" in some Americans toward people with the disease.

The commission, formally known as the National Commission on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, held its first day of testimony from experts, including researchers, advocates and AIDS patients. The panel, created by Congress last year to advise the president and Capitol Hill on AIDS issues, held its first meeting last month.

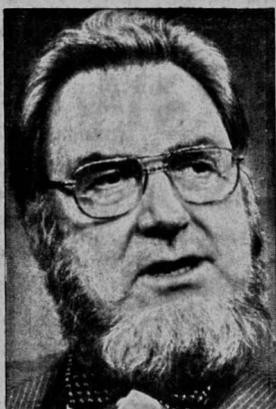

The panel will use as a basis the work of an earlier AIDS commission formed by President Ronald Reagan and chaired by Adm. James Watkins, which called for a major escalation of federal efforts to treat, cure and prevent AIDS and to pass legislation to protect victims from discrimination.

Koop, who officially leaves his post at the end of the month, stressed the need to reach teen-agers and said Americans may have to teach young people about sexuality at an earlier age.

"We have to go back to old-fashioned morality and expand it beyond just the transmission of sexually transmitted diseases and make clear to young people that it's been proven among many generations that the postponement of sexual activity not only prevents the diseases that we're talking about, but makes for better lives, makes for better marriages," he said.

In addition, Koop said, more must be done to foster compassion for people with AIDS.

"There is a certain mean-spiritedness among a section of our society who will not respond just to a message about risk, a message about society, a message about improving relationships among fellow man," Koop said.

C. Everett Koop

The federal Centers for Disease Control said Monday that the latest figures indicate 60 percent of the 105,990 Americans diagnosed as having AIDS are homosexual or bisexual males, while another 20 percent are intravenous drug users.

Commission member Belinda Mason, a 30-year-old mother of two, contracted AIDS through a blood transfusion. The panel can make a difference in the lives of people with AIDS, she said.

AZT wholesale price lowered

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — Burroughs Wellcome Co. announced Monday a 20-percent reduction in the wholesale price of AZT, the only drug approved in the United States for fighting AIDS.

The company said, however, it couldn't guarantee that the full savings would be passed on to consumers, who have been paying $7,000 to $8,000 per year for the drug.

The reduction, effective immediately, reduces the price to the wholesale distributor from $1.50 to $1.20 per capsule.

Louis Sullivan, secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, said he was pleased with the company's action. He said that the price cut, combined with recent findings that lower dosages may be effective, will reduce the cost of AZT treatment.

AIDS activists had been pressing Burroughs Wellcome to cut the cost of AZT. On Thursday, five activists chained themselves to a banister at the New York Stock Exchange to protest the drug's cost. Three of the five, who were members of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, were described as having AIDS or AIDS-related complex.

They unfurled a banner that read, "SELL WELLCOME," referring to Burroughs Wellcome, before they were removed by guards and turned over to police. Burroughs Wellcome, however, is traded over the counter and not at the New York Stock Exchange.

about what we planned to do at a time when we were still trying to decide what that would be," he said.

In April, four members of ACTUP sealed themselves into an office at

"Actually, I can say the protests slowed things down a little bit. We had to field inquiries from the media and other people about what we planned to do at a time when we were still trying to decide what that would be." — Burroughs Wellcome spokesman Thack Brown

Burroughs Wellcome spokesman Thack Brown said the decision to cut the price was based on test results showing that people who have HIV infection but no symptoms can benefit from the drug.

"That means more patients will be using the drugs, which broadens the financial risk," he said at a news conference.

He insisted that protests by AIDS activists did not affect Burroughs Wellcome's decision.

"Actually, I can say the protests slowed things down a little bit," he said. "We had to field inquiries from the media and other people

Burroughs Wellcome. They were arrested after authorities broke down a wall.

Peter Staley of New York, one of the ACTUP members who was arrested in April, said the 20-percent reduction wasn't enough.

"This is a step in the right direction, but a very small step," he said. "It's not enough. ACTUP will continue to fight to make sure that all AIDS treatments are provided to all who need them, free of charge, which means we will continue to pressure Burroughs Wellcome for further price reductions."

Prisoners' blood tests reveal number with HIV

HOUSTON (AP) — Blood tests of prison and jail inmates across the country show that about one in 24 is infected with the AIDS virus, fewer than expected, researchers said Monday.

The study is the first to try to estimate the prevalence of AIDS in prisoners, said its principal author, Dr. Ford Brewer of the Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health in Baltimore.

The 11,198 inmates in the study came from 10 prisons and jails.

"They were selected to give us a pretty good overall picture" of the extent of AIDS infection in inmates, Brewer said at a meeting of the American Society for Microbiology, where he presented his results.

Of the inmates tested, 476, or 4.25 percent, were infected with AIDS, Brewer reported. Smaller local studies by others had found infection rates of up to 3.2 percent among prisoners, with the exception of one New York City study that found 17.4 percent of inmates were infected, Brewer said.

Brewer found the highest rates of infection, up to 8 percent, in the mid-Atlantic states—reflecting the high prevalence of AIDS infections in that population, he said. As few as 2.7 percent of the inmates were infected in one jail on the West Coast.

The figures at all the institutions were lower than expected, Brewer said. "Most of these prisons and jails thought it was going to be four or five times as high," he said.

That is because other surveys have found that between 27 percent and 41 percent of inmates report that they are intravenous drug abusers, and between 3.6 percent and 7 percent report that they have engaged in homosexual activity.

Homosexuals and intravenous drug abusers are the groups most affected by AIDS so far.

Blood for the testing was obtained from the inmates during routine medical screening when they entered the jails and prisons.

Union squabble forces health dept. to pass up donated music in video

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The state Health Department spiked plans to use 30 seconds of donated music in an AIDS prevention video after a union said the musicians had to be paid for their work.

The squabble spoiled plans to send the video to every junior and senior high school in New York state for the beginning of the school year, according to Health Department spokesman Peter Slocum.

"Based on our past history and experience, it had never occurred to us that we would have run into this situation," Slocum said.

The department had hoped that 10-second snippets of three popular songs would lend a more realistic view to the video. The artists and their record companies gave the state permission to use the songs for free, but the American Federation of Musicians said no.

The union said it had an obligation to make sure its members were paid for their work and didn't want to set a precedent. The Health Department said the union had no spirit of public service.

New York state schools are required to teach children about AIDS, and the video prepared by the Health Department was designed to be part of that curriculum.

Titled "Flashback," the video shows teen-agers being told about the ways they can contract acquired immune deficiency syndrome, usually spread through sexual contact or the sharing of needles.

One "flashback" shows a teen-age party. For background, the video producers wanted to include brief portions of three songs: "Stand by Me" by Ben E. King, "A Shoulder to Cry On" by Tommy Page and "Oh Yeah" by Yello.

"We felt that using songs that kids would recognize and that are popular for the students would lend reality to the situation and increase the level of interest," Slocum said last week.

But when the department sought union permission, in what it expected to be a formality, the union unfurled its price scale. The rates include $80.23 an hour for a musician and $160.46 for an arranger.

Aoun rejects Arab cease-fire plan

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Rocket and artillery barrages blasted Beirut on Monday after Christian army commander Michel Aoun rejected a proposed committee to monitor a cease-fire in his 6-month-old war against Syrian troops.

Police said the exchanges at times averaged 20 shells a minute and that at least six people were killed and 14 wounded.

That brought the toll to 921 killed and 2,713 wounded since March 8, when the confrontation began between Gen. Aoun's estimated 20,000 troops and Syria's 40,000 soldiers.

Corroborated shelling of the Shiite Moslem slum of Haret Hreik demolished a seven-story apartment building. A police spokesman said three bodies were found in the rubble of the Mokdad building, seven people were wounded and three more were missing and feared dead under the debris. He said the building collapsed while its inhabitants were waiting out the shelling in the basement.

Rescue workers hanging from ropes pulled a bloodied woman from the basement. She apparently survived.

43rd General Assembly of the U.N. closes

UNITED NATIONS — The yearlong 43rd General Assembly ended Monday, a session that saw "the end of the Cold War" declared by Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev, said Assembly President Dante Caputo.

Before his presidential term ended in January, Reagan joined the Soviet president in opening a new era of warmer superpower relations, which was reflected in the speeches both men gave to the General Assembly almost a year ago.

Caputo said those declarations "are the deepest and most eloquent reflection of profound change that has occurred."

"They demonstrate, I would venture to say, the end of the Cold War, which hovered over our world for such a long period."

Monday's brief closing session was mainly procedural. Unresolved questions such as the Palestinian issue, Cyprus and the uneasy Iran-Iraq truce were carried over to the 44th General Assembly, which opens today.

2nd rare whale dies at Marine World

VALLEJO, Calif. — The second of two rare beaked whales that beached themselves died early Monday after a record 25 days in captivity, officials at Marine World-Africa USA said.

Hundreds of volunteers had helped care for the young marine mammals, which had never before survived in captivity.

The whale that died Monday, Alexander, was found August 24 on Ocean Beach in San Francisco with a second beaked whale that was named Nicholas.

Alexander had been suffering from pneumonia, but Marine World President Mike Demetrios said the exact cause of death will not be known for up to 10 days, when final results of a necropsy and pathology tests are available.

"He did the same thing the other did right before it died," said Demetrios. "He began swimming very rapidly around the pool."

Nicholas died of a severe case of pneumonia September 8. Alexander had been eating well and was given a shot of antibiotics Sunday night, and a volunteer was in the pool with the whale when it died, he said.

U.S., Hungary negotiate on trade status

WASHINGTON — The United States intends to give Hungary permanent most-favored nation trade status, President George Bush said Monday.

In Budapest, Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher said the United States was negotiating toward a comprehensive pact to "support Hungary's efforts to develop a freer political system and to create and expand private enterprise," said Mosbacher, who is in Budapest for talks with Hungarian officials.

Other parts of the package include improved tariff treatment of Hungarian products, new development programs and the creation of a $25 million fund to help create private business there.

"This step is an important part of implementing President Bush's goal of building an American partnership with Hungary," Mosbacher said in a statement after a meeting with Hungarian Trade Minister Tamas Beck. A copy of the statement was made available in Washington.

President's mother admitted to hospital

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — Dorothy Walker Bush, the president's 88-year-old mother, was admitted to Greenwich Hospital with pneumonia Monday, a White House spokeswoman said.

"She's in stable condition and is expected to improve," said Alixe Glen.

She said the president, who was traveling in South Dakota, Montana and Washington state Monday, was monitoring his mother's condition through White House physician Burton Lee, who is on the trip with him.

Bush, who lives in Greenwich, was admitted to Greenwich Hospital's emergency room at 12:17 p.m., said hospital spokeswoman Michelle Brown.

"She had not been feeling well last week. She had been suffering a mild respiratory condition," Brown said.

Bush's condition began to worsen and her personal physician, Dr. John Prunier, wanted her admitted, Brown said.

A chest X-ray at the hospital confirmed pneumonia, she said. Bush was "resting comfortably" Monday afternoon, Brown said.

Zsa Zsa keeps her mouth shut about case

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Zsa Zsa Gabor kept her lip buttoned Monday regarding her trial on a charge of slapping a policeman, taking to heart a judge's warning that further comments about the case could land her in trouble.

"I'm under gagging order," Miss Gabor told reporters at Beverly Hills Municipal Court, where her trial began its second week. She is charged with four misdemeanor charges.

Mubarak, Rabin meet in Cairo

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Israel's defense minister told President Hosni Mubarak Monday that Israel would accept an Egyptian-sponsored dialogue with Palestinians, but the two leaders disagreed on the composition of the Arab delegation.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Mubarak aired their disagreement publicly after meeting in Cairo for more than three hours.

At a news conference, Rabin said Israel advocated negotiations only with Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza Strip, occupied by Israel since 1967. At a separate news conference, Mubarak insisted that Palestinians from outside the territories be included as well.

But both leaders voiced cautious optimism about the current Israeli-Egyptian exchanges on a scenario for overall settlement of the Palestinian problem, which has kept the Middle East in turmoil for four decades.

They said their two countries will have further high-level talks.

Rabin, a senior member of Israel's center-left Labor Party, flew in for a seven-hour stay and was driven directly to Mubarak's office. The two met alone for 2½ hours, then called in aides.

Hosni Mubarak and Yitzhak Rabin

Both said they expected Israel to present its final position next month on Mubarak's two-pronged peace proposal.

One segment of Mubarak's plan calls for a preliminary Israeli-Palestinian dialogue in Cairo to discuss a Palestinian election plan advanced by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

According to Shamir's plan, Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza

Israeli-annexed East Jerusalem.

Those points have split Israel's coalition government. Both ideas are anathema to Shamir's right-wing Likud bloc but are accepted by the Labor Party headed by Finance Minister Shimon Peres, who says they are a way to get the peace process moving.

Israel radio quoted Shamir as saying Monday that if Labor sticks to its support of Mubarak's initiative, "It will lead to a break in the government."

Rabin's visit was sanctioned by Israel's Cabinet, and Mubarak emphasized he believed that Rabin was acting as a representative of his government — not merely a Labor politician.

Rabin said upon returning to Israel, however, that since the Cabinet had not formed an official response to Egypt's plan, he could offer Mubarak only his own understanding of the Israeli position.

One issue not mentioned by the leaders was the role of the Palestine Liberation Organization. The PLO has rejected Israel's plan mainly because it does not refer to the formation of an independent Palestinian state. Israel officially refuses to talk to the PLO, which it views as a terror group.

UI media: important resources

KSUI, WSUI different but deep

Margot Krippner
The Daily Iowan

It's easy to get lost in a huge university. So much goes on here that remaining aware of what's happening at the UI is no easy task. Unless, that is, one tunes into either of the two public radio stations on campus.

WSUI AM 910 and KSUI FM 91.7 both see themselves as a resource of the UI, for the university community. "We are a part of the continuing education mission of the university," explains John Fischer, KSUI program director. "That's how we are viewed administratively and how we view ourselves."

Extending the resources of the UI is done, Fischer explains, through several different means. The most direct channel involves local programming featuring the university.

Such regular programming includes "Iowa Connections," which comments on education matters; "Iowa Center for the Arts," which discusses a variety of art topics, highlighting current events in the arts at the UI; "UI Radio Forum," detailing various issues from the perspective of faculty and staff; and "The Humanities at Iowa," showcasing numerous issues and events in the humanities.

Although both radio stations run all four programs and are contained in the UI Engineering Building, other similarities between the stations are few. WSUI, founded in 1919, the state's first AM station, broadcasts news and information; KSUI, established 26 years after its predecessor, plays almost entirely classical music.

Both Fischer and Dennis Reese, WSUI program director, agree that the specialization of the two stations is an incredible advantage. Comments Fischer, "Each station has a separate identity that makes each unique. The combination service is very deep."

The radio stations serve the community in other ways besides direct local programming about the university. WSUI and KSUI also see their role within the university as being a cultural resource, providing quality programs that range from Mozart to Garrison Keillor's "Prairie Home Companion."

The stations also provide hands on job experience for numerous stu-

"Each station has a separate identity that makes each unique. The combination service is very deep." — KSUI Program Director John Fischer dent. Tom Maupin works 20 to 25 hours a week for WSUI as part of his graduate assistantship. "This job fits nicely into my career path," he explains, "because I've had the opportunity to work in both public and commercial radio."

The distinction between public and commercial radio has a terrific influence on what KSUI and WSUI do. "We're not listener-driven," explains John Monick, acting director of broadcasting. "We don't target students specifically. Our main goal is to provide quality programming."

Yet there are disadvantages to public radio. Funding comes primarily from the UI, and in a time of federal cuts to education the primary obstacle facing the stations is financial.

"This is a horrible facility," begins Reese, explaining that WSUI is still housed in the original 1919 station. "The studios are crappy, and all of our offices are separated. I can go for two days without running into the FM program director."

Still the stations both maintain a high degree of pride in the programming that is provided. "I'm familiar with numerous public radio stations," Reese comments, "We broadcast more university material than any other station I know of."

For KSUI and WSUI, the aim of the future is simply to continue the tradition of quality programming that has been established. "We provide a very complete service," concludes Fischer. "There's so much choice, the listener is the winner."

UITV aim is 'narrowcast'

You won't see "The Cosby Show" on UITV. Or "The Dating Game" — but you might catch coverage of the Voyager mission, or a classic film, or one of several regular programs featuring college life.

UITV's cable Channel 28, allocated to the UI in 1983 by the Iowa City, has seen tremendous growth in the last six years. Since its beginnings, when the station aired two hours of programming every night, Monday through Friday, UITV has expanded to 115 hours of programming per week.

Like public radio stations KSUI and WSUI, UITV is also housed in the UI Engineering Building, is largely run by students and sees its most important function as providing quality programming.

"We don't broadcast," explains UITV's program director, Diana Beeson, "we narrowcast. Much of our programming doesn't have a broad appeal, but we try to hit specific groups."

Examples of recent programming include 24-hour coverage of the Voyager mission, daily news from the Soviet Union, a program featuring the cinema of India, as well as Hawkeyes' Coach Hayden Fry's news conferences.

The channel also serves a unique role as an outlet for student productions. "Student Production Showcase" is one current program that highlights the film and video network of UI students. Another is "PTV," a takeoff of MTV, featuring the poetry of several members of the UI Writers' Workshop.

The channel also attempts to depict the college community through programs produced by various academic departments, as well as coverage of special events.

An increase in local production is one of the station's main goals. "I'd hope to someday do away with all non-university programming," Beeson comments, "and to increase production that completely reflects the broad spectrum of talent, resources and disciplines that are here at the university."

No. 35 rue de la Boucherie - Where Paris nurtures writers

George Whitman carefully inspects the two books I've set near the cash register in his cluttered Paris bookstore. Goated and nearly toothless, the slightly eccentric owner propositions me.

"You must be a writer. Would you like to sleep upstairs?"

I'm a bit surprised, but quickly learn that he's merely offering free inspiration. Whitman has housed 30,000 people since 1951, free of charge, in the upper part of his bookstore directly across from Notre Dame and the Seine.

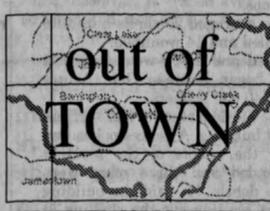

The writers simply make their beds, clean up when necessary, read a book a day and put up with very modest living conditions.

"Anyone with a mentality of mine deserves to be bankrupt," said Whitman, who claims to be the illegitimate grandson of Walt Whitman.

It's the kind of inspiration most writers only dream about. Clutching an old, jagged key, I follow his directions upstairs and find a steep red staircase hidden in the back of the store. A sign, hanging on a small black iron gate says, "You are entering the Sylvia Beach Library. Open only by invitation."

Beach, who housed struggling writers and poets, is probably most famous for publishing Joyce's "Ulysses" when it was rejected by every other major publisher. Whitman met Beach when he came to Paris and opened a bookstore after buying an old Arab grocery store.

He was located about a mile from Beach's bookstore, and changed the name of his store to Shakespeare and Co., after her death in 1964. He has been at No. 35 rue de la Boucherie since 1951, and has housed people such as Allen Gins-

Julie Deardorff

My heart is racing as I sit down at

My first impression as I open the huge wooden door that leads to Whitman's apartment is disbelief. The books, of course, are still everywhere, and pictures and old newspaper clippings of Whitman decorate the walls. The ceiling is flaking away and the wall is painted an very unpleasant green. Nothing is proportional as I duck to get through a doorway, but to me, it's beautiful.

It's grown dark, and although Shakespeare and Co. doesn't close until midnight, I finally walk downstairs into the warm Paris night. Whitman is standing outside and corrals me in front of the store.

"You must have liked it quite a bit up there," he says. "You're just in time for our poetry reading... There's a stool in front."

So now I'm in the bookstore, the shelves are precariously filled with old books, and a poet is reading her work. But I'm hardly listening. I'm thinking about the feeling that is still with me. The rare feeling of knowing what you want to do and where you want to be.

And I'm thinking about how perfectly a writer by the name of David Wiecek captured it after his stay by saying, "I sat behind the desk in the upstairs back room and made like a sponge — trying to absorb some of the genius and madness of the writers who'd been nurtured there... You invited us to stay, to sleep in the upstairs front room, and what you offered us was a piece of magic."

Sportsbriefs

Broncos down Bills

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Denver's big-play defense, sparked by interceptions from Wymon Henderson and Tyrone Braxton, helped the Broncos build a 21-0 lead and they held on for a 28-14 victory over the Buffalo Bills on Monday night.

Denver, which had lost 10 of its last 11 Monday night road games and its last eight games on artificial turf, turned all those negatives around with some positive defense. Just as in their opening victory over Kansas City, the Broncos forced turnovers and converted them into points.

The defense, which ranked 22nd in the NFL last year, converted two points on a first-quarter safety and set up 13 more points. Those points came on Vance Johnson's 9-yard reception from John Elway and field goals of 46 and 24 yards by David Treadwell.

The rookie also hit from 33 and 22 yards.

Divac cleared for NBA

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Vlade Divac, Yugoslavia's star center, was granted a one-year deferment of his military service Monday, clearing the way for him to play for the Los Angeles Lakers in the NBA, the state Tanjug news agency reported.

Divac, who signed with the Lakers last month and is at the club's training camp, was to start his compulsory military service on Tuesday.

Tanjug suggested that Divac could get another year's deferment next year.

All able-bodied Yugoslav men are required to serve one year in the military between the ages of 19 and 27. Although most are called up immediately after finishing high school, many top athletes join the service toward the end of that period.

Failure to report to the military after receiving an official notice from the draft board is tantamount to desertion and punishable by a three-year jail term.

Three other Yugoslav players signed NBA contracts this year. Dino Radja joined the Boston Celtics, Zarko Paspalj signed with the San Antonio Spurs and star guard Drazen Petrovic signed with the Portland Trail Blazers.

NHL tours Russia

RIGA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — The Washington Capitals traveled to this Latvian port on the Baltic Sea Monday as the first tour by NHL clubs to the Soviet Union reached its halfway point with some players aching for home.

The Capitals and Calgary Flames have won three of their four games so far on the tour, which also has included stops in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev. But some players and coaches have complained about distractions harming the training camp atmosphere.

The visitors have had to adapt to frequent traveling, last-minute changes in itineraries and food that is different and less plentiful than at home. Practice sessions often have been conducted under the watchful eyes of Soviet fans and players.

"They have a lot of museums that we don't have, a lot of old buildings from the 1700s that we don't have anything to compare with," said Mark Hunter, a right wing for the Flames who scored twice in a 5-2 victory Saturday at Kiev. "But we have a lot of good things in our country."

USOC is against South Africa

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — The United States Olympic Committee's 21-member administrative committee has recommended that any athlete who competes in South Africa be suspended from competition in any sport over which the USOC has control.

The proposal will be placed next month before the USOC executive board, which is expected to endorse the stronger sanctions at its Oct. 20-22 meeting.

The committee's unanimous recommendation for strong sanctions to discourage athletes from competing in South Africa came at a weekend meeting.

The action follows a decision by the International Olympic Committee earlier this month to ban from the Olympic Games any athlete who competes in South Africa.

Coupled with the administrative committee's recommendation on South Africa is a proposal to broaden the suspension of any athlete who violates the USOC's performance-enhancing drug policy. Any suspension for violation of that policy, too, will extend to any sport in any USOC-controlled competition, if the executive board approves it next month.

Nebraska horses draw investigation

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The attorney general began its investigation of Nebraska's horse racing industry a month or two before Gov. Kay Orr asked in June for a review of alleged wrongdoing among state racing officials, the deputy attorney general says.

And while no criminal charges have been filed, the five-month-old probe continues, authorities said.

Chicago still wins without McMahon

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Bears are 2-0 without their familiar field leader, who now wears lightning bolts on his uniform and toils in Southern California.

It's proof there's life after Jim McMahon for the Monsters of the Midway.

McMahon the Bear was cocky, a wise-cracker, a hard-nosed player.

The punky QB was an exciting and exciting leader on the field. Off the field, he was the chief of the Bears' oddballs.

When McMahon was traded during the preseason to San Diego for a future draft choice, some people said the Bears couldn't win without him. McMahon and other departed veterans said Coach Mike Ditka's ego had ruined the once-dominant team that won the Super Bowl after the 1985 season.

But the Bears, with Mike Tomczak starting in McMahon's old spot, have so far beaten defending AFC champion Cincinnati, and on Sunday rolled over Chicago's perennial NFC Central rival, the Minnesota Vikings, 38-7.

Yet critics still say Tomczak is no McMahon.

They point out Tomczak is a free agent with disappointing career statistics, while McMahon guided the Bears to an NFL title and has proven himself a winner.

But Ditka has reason to believe he can make it to the Super Bowl this season with Tomczak.

"I guess it's the same reason that there's a free agent quarterback in the Hall of Fame by the name of Johnny Unitas," Ditka said Monday.

Ditka said Tomczak does the little things to be a winner, including dodging sacks against the Bengals and Vikings.

"Mike did an excellent job," Ditka said of Tomczak's performance against Minnesota's tough defense. "He threw the ball away. He moved out of the pocket. He moved away from the rush a few times.

"Had we had a different quarterback we might have had some sacks," said Ditka, in an apparent reference to the older, less-mobile McMahon.

Tomczak admits he has some shortcomings as a quarterback.

"I didn't have the sweetest statistics in the world, but we won the game," he said Sunday.

Offensive linemen are talking up Tomczak.

"We have all the faith in the world in him," Tom Thayer said. "He's improved over the past five years he's been in the league. He's never had a backward step."

Walden said that after Navarro, the Cyclones have no one beyond major college football.

Padres. By winning once in the three-game series over the weekend, they remained five games ahead of San Diego instead of three.

The previous weekend at Houston, a victory by left-hander Bob Knepper over his former team enabled the Giants to leave the Astrodome with a six-game lead instead of allowing the Astros to cut it to four.

"Consistency has been our strong suit," manager Roger Craig said of the Padres, who haven't been swept in a series since last September and who have not lost more than three games in a row this season.

"I'm not thinking about the batting title," Gwynn said. "The focus is on the division race. There's no psychology in the batting race. Whoever gets the most hits the last two weeks will win it."

The batting race is about the only major category the Giants don't lead. Kevin Mitchell tops the majors in several offensive categories, including home runs (45) and RBIs (120). Scott Garretts (14-3), who beat the Padres Sunday, is tops with a 2.27 earned-run average and an .824 winning percentage.

The Giants have fared well in head-to-head competition with their prime rivals. They're 8-7 against the Astros, including 5-1 at Candlestick Park, where Houston

Steelers: Once a dynasty but now they're a disaster

PITTSBURGH (AP) — It happened to the Green Bay Packers. It happened to the Dallas Cowboys. Now it's happening to the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Once a dynasty, they're now a disaster. They can't run, can't pass — and can't hide. In two blowout losses, they've allowed more quarterback sacks (12) than they've scored points (10). For the first time in Chuck Noll's 21-year coaching tenure, the Steelers have lost their first two games.

But you have to go back to Noll's first season in 1969, when the Steelers were 1-13, to find comparable losses to the Steelers' 51-0 defeat to Cleveland and 42-10 loss to the Cincinnati Bengals.

"Either the Super Bowl champ comes out of the (AFC) Central Division or we're pretty bad," Noll said.

The statistics indicate the Steelers — who once won four Super Bowls in six years — are just bad.

They've been outscored 92-10, outgained 877 yards to 327. They've committed eight turnovers and forced only one. Quarterback Bobby Brister has been sacked 12 times; their defense has managed only one sack.

After making eight turnovers against Cleveland, they didn't have any against Cincinnati — mostly because the Bengals usually had the ball. The Steelers allowed them 520 yards and 30 first downs, the second-highest totals in their 57-year history.

"Look around the locker room and you see a lot of disgust and a lot of discouragement," cornerback Rod Woodson said. "If we don't eliminate the mistakes, it's going to be a long season."

It's already been a long season for a bruised and battered Brister, who said, "If we don't get something worked out soon, I'm going to have a short career."

At his weekly news conference Monday, Noll said one problem is so many Steelers have had short careers. A young team with 10 first-year players, the Steelers will start four rookies Sunday against the Minnesota Vikings: running back Tim Worley, guard Tom Ricketts, safety Cornell Lake and linebacker Jerro Williams.

"I'm not questioning the people we have, because we have people with potential," Noll said. "We've got to start realizing that potential and we have to hurry up and realize it. "Obviously, we've got to work more on the fundamentals — the blocking, the tackling. We've got to get that done, because that's what is killing us. You've got to be very basic so we can groove the fundamentals and get it done. There's only one guy to look for when you're talking about that, and that's me."

On paper, the Steelers looked better than last year's team, which finished 5-11. They strengthened their offense by drafting a power back (Worley) and adding a quick wide receiver (Derek Hill) to team with Louis Lipps.

But, on the field, they've looked disjointed and unorganized, a shadow of the Super Bowl teams that rewrote the standards by which championship teams are judged.

They haven't been super, they've been sorry. They're losing games, their poise — and their respect. In a tawdry finish to a dismal performance in Cincinnati, defensive end Aaron Jones threw a cheap-shot elbow to quarterback Boomer Esiason's head, and another Steeler flashed an obscene gesture to some Bengals fans.

The Bengals, who seemed to score almost any time they wanted, used the final few minutes to polish their no-huddle offense, prompting complaints they were trying to run up the score.

"We can't babysit another team," Bengals wide receiver Tim McGee said. "We're trying to get to the Super Bowl."

Noll, the fifth-winningest coach in NFL history, is being subjected to unprecedented criticism that he is too predictable and has grown too distant from players 35 years his junior.

"Let them say whatever they want," he said. "You can say anything you want. ... The only thing I can do is try to prepare people the best we can and get them ready to play. But we can't play the game for them."

Can anyone around here play this game anymore? "We're getting beat up pretty good," Brister said. "We'd better do something quick because we've got Minnesota this week and they're probably as good or better than (the Browns and Bengals)."

"It looks like things will get worse before they get better."

Walden: Iowa State has a chance this year

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP)—Without even trying, Iowa State coach Jim Walden is getting caught up in the rivalry with Iowa.

"You don't have to get into it. It gets into you," Walden said Monday. "It gets all over you. It's like a moss growing on you."

Walden will be facing Iowa for the third time as Iowa State's coach when his team plays host to the Hawkeyes on Saturday. He said the game is as important to Iowa State fans as any the Cyclones play.

"It means a lot to a lot of people," Walden told reporters listening to the weekly conference call with Big Eight coaches. "Society may pick you a bigger opponent, but I can guarantee you the folks at Iowa State don't give a rat's manure about Minnesota like they do the Hawkeyes."

Iowa State lost to Minnesota 30-20 last Saturday to fall to 1-1 for the season. Iowa was beaten by Oregon 44-6 in its opener.

Walden said he was surprised that Oregon, now 2-0, won that game so easily.

"I knew Oregon had a fine team," he said. "I talked to (Oregon coach) Rich Brooks earlier in the summer and he felt he had the parts of a real good team returning if he could get all the parts back together. It looks like they have."

"Iowa is probing to find the replacements for the guys they had a year ago. Iowa on film played pretty good on defense. They just gave up some big plays. You can play pretty good and all of a sudden four plays in a game can destroy you."

Walden is 0-2 against Iowa, losing 10-3 last year and 48-9 in 1987. He said he thought his team had no chance in those two games but added the two teams are more evenly matched this year, which makes it more interesting.

Iowa has beaten Iowa State six straight times, outscoring the Cyclones 268-53 in those games.

"It's the first time that truly a lot of Cyclone people are coming into the ballgame with hope, a little bit of glimmer that we might win," Walden said. "I don't think it's 50-50, but there's a 30 to 40 percent chance that if we play well, we could win."

"For once, all of the people are coming into the stadium not sure who's going to win it. That's what it's all about."

Walden said he'd still rather play Iowa in the last game of the season, when he believes all natural rivalries should be scheduled. When he was at Washington State, Walden said he enjoyed playing Washington in the last game because his team always had something to look forward to no matter how the season was going.

"It's when a rivalry was meant to be played," he said. "Iowa has the upper hand now and won't move it and I don't blame them. But I almost think the NCAA should step in and say natural rivals should play last."

"Oklahoma should play Oklahoma State in the last game regardless of Nebraska. Let Nebraska play Oklahoma in the next-to-last game if they want to. Somewhere along the line, natural rivals should be left for last. It gives somebody hope — fun and hope all year long."

Walden said it's almost certain that starting middle linebacker Mike Shane won't play against Iowa. Shane twisted his ankle against Minnesota and sat out the entire second half. He was replaced by Phil Navarro, who made 11 tackles in the Minnesota game and is listed as the starter for Saturday's game.

Navarro, a 6-foot-2, 238-pound junior, was to have played defensive tackle this year but moved to linebacker after Tyrone Davis quit the team during preseason drills.

"He's a good player. We won't drop

Iowa falls from AP grid poll

Notre Dame's victory over Michigan convinced almost everyone that the Fighting Irish are the best team in the country.

Lou Holtz's team received 57 of 60 first-place votes Monday in The Associated Press' college football poll. The other three votes went to second-ranked Miami, which plays Notre Dame on Nov. 25 in the regular-season finale for both teams.

Iowa, which was ranked 24th last week, fell out of the poll after a 44-6 loss to Oregon Saturday.

Notre Dame extended its winning streak to 14 games Saturday with a 24-19 win over Michigan, which was ranked No. 2 at the time. The season-opening loss dropped the Wolverines to No. 5 in voting by a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Michigan was No. 1 in the preseason poll, but Notre Dame took over the top spot after beating Virginia 36-13 in the Kickoff Classic and has widened its lead each week since.

Last week, the Fighting Irish received 37 first-place votes and 1,463 points. This week, they received 20 more first-place votes and 34 more points.

Nebraska, which improved to 2-0 after beating Utah 42-30, is ranked third. Next are Auburn, Michigan, Colorado, Clemson, Arkansas, West Virginia and Syracuse.

The No. 6 ranking is Colorado's best since reaching No. 3 in October 1977. The Buffaloes (3-0) moved up two places following an impressive 38-7 win over Illinois.

Oklahoma (2-1) and Illinois (1-1) dropped out of the Top 10. The Sooners plummeted from No. 6 to No. 16 after losing 6-3 to Arizona and Illinois fell from No. 10 to No. 20.

It is the first time in five years that Oklahoma hasn't been ranked in the Top 10 during the regular season.

Auburn (2-0) defeated Southern Mississippi 24-3; Clemson (3-0) downed Virginia Tech 27-7; Arkansas (1-0) beat Tulsa 26-7; West Virginia (3-0) topped South Carolina 45-21; and Syracuse (2-0) edged Army 10-7.

Leading off the Second Ten is Washington, which beat Purdue 38-8 for its second victory of the season. Southern California is ranked 11th, followed by Pitts-

Iowa tennis player Madeleine Koorman returns a shot Monday during a Hawkeye workout. The freshman from Doorwerth, The Netherlands, won her first tournament as a Hawkeye.

Koorman brings spark to Iowa Freshman ventures far from native Netherlands

Rick Gabriel
The Daily Iowan

For most freshman, moving to another country to go to college could be a bit overwhelming.

Madeleine Koorman is not most freshman.

She said she plans to be a neurologist or a neurosurgeon. She owns a Swiss teaching diploma in snow skiing. And she plays tennis for the University of Iowa.

Koorman comes from Doorwerth, The Netherlands and is the first foreign player on Iowa coach Micki Schillig's team. She comes in as one of Holland's top-ranked players and she won the first college tournament she played in, just a few weeks ago.

All this success does not come easy, though. Hard work at everything she tries is the key to Koorman's good fortune.

"Lifting weights, practicing or studying doesn't bother me," Koorman said. "As far as that goes, I'm a workaholic."

Schillig said that her hard work ethic along with her confidence are two very important things Koorman brings to the team.

"She adds an air of confidence to our team," Schillig said. "She's a very confident person. She believes in herself 100 percent and that's something we've lacked."

"We know we're good but we look at other teams and think 'oh,

"She adds an air of confidence to our team. She's a very confident person. She believes in herself 100 percent and that's something we've lacked." — Iowa women's tennis coach Micki Schillig they're awful good, too', instead of just believing we're the best. She brings that with her and I think it's going to rub off on the other members of the team."

That confidence is something that was instilled by her parents, Koorman said. They started her playing tennis at age five and encouraged her all through her career.

"They like me to do well," Koorman said. "But it's not like if I do bad they'll shout at me or anything."

Her parents' support was important because there were no high school athletics back home, Koorman said. She had to play for a club team made up of two men and two women.

Koorman helped two separate clubs win championships, one in 1986 and one last year. But because colleges overseas offer no athletics, she had to part from her parents and come to the United States.

"I wanted to keep doing well in tennis, so that's one of the reasons I came over here," she said. Iowa's similar climate and good medicine program were other features that attracted her, she added.

Koorman contacted Schillig about playing for her and Schillig is sure glad she did.

"Madeleine wrote me a letter saying she was interested in going to a university in the United States," Schillig said. "She came for a visit. She liked the things I had to say and I liked the things she had to say — what she wanted to do and her goals — and they kind of fit with mine, so I offered her a scholarship."

A choice that has already paid off.

Koorman beat one of Iowa's top players, Liz Canzoneri, in the finals of the Drake Invitational two weekends ago. But the early success hasn't changed Koorman's goal.

"I just want to improve a lot," Koorman said. "Especially my footwork, groundstrokes and mental part of my game."

Cubs, Giants move closer to NL showdown

Cubs dump Mets in key Eastern tilt

CHICAGO (AP) — Luis Salazar's two-run homer capped a four-run fifth inning Monday night, leading Chicago to a 10-6 victory over the New York Mets that moved the Cubs a step closer to the National League East title.

The loss was the third straight for the third-place Mets and all but doomed their title hopes as they fell 6½ games behind the first-place Cubs. New York has 13 games remaining while Chicago has 12 and a five-game lead over second-place St. Louis. The Cubs magic number is eight.

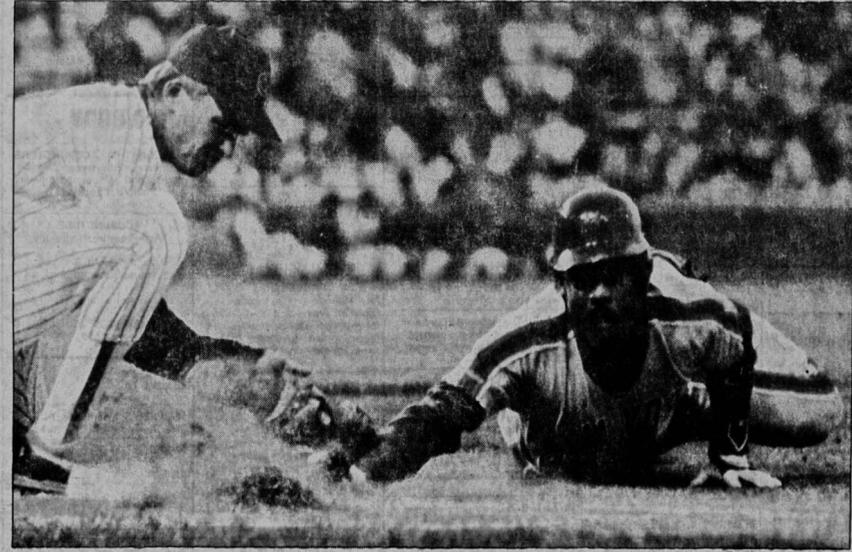

The Cubs added four runs in the eighth, three scoring on reliever Mitch Williams' first major league hit, a three-run homer off New York reliever Don Aase. Williams, the fifth Chicago pitcher, earned his 34th save.

Salazar's homer was his ninth and first for the Cubs, who acquired him from San Diego on Aug. 30. The Cubs had 12 hits against four pitchers, including starter Frank Viola, 3-5.

Chicago reliever Dean Wilkins won in his first major league decision.

With the Cubs trailing 3-0 entering the fifth, Jerome Walton singled and Ryne Sandberg walked. Mark Grace singled to left scoring Walton and when second baseman Gregg Jefferies bobbled Kevin McReynolds' throw for an error, Sandberg also scored but Grace was out trying for second.

Chicago's Mark Grace places the tag on New York's Juan Samuel during action at Wrigley Field Monday night. Samuel was safe on the play but the Cubs beat the Mets 10-6.

for a 4-3 lead.

The Cubs scored two runs in the sixth. Joe Girardi singled but was forced at second on Gary Varsho's bunt. Doug Dascenzo singled and after the runners pulled off a double steal, Sandberg was walked to fill the bases.

Grace walked forcing in one run and another scored as Andre Dawson grounded into a force play at second.

The Mets scored an unearned run in the second when McClendon dropped Keith Hernandez' fly ball for a three-base error and Barry Lyons singled to score Hernandez.

Jefferies, 4-for-5 with two RBIs on the night, opened the Mets' third with his ninth homer. Two outs later, Darryl Strawberry hit his 28th homer, but first since Aug. 16, over the right field wall onto Sheffield Avenue.

Both homers came off starter Paul Kilgus. Jeff Pico pitched a scoreless fourth and Wilkins pitched one-hit ball in the fifth and sixth before Les Lancaster took over in the seventh.

Williams came on after Howard Johnson's RBI single in the eighth. He allowed run-scoring singles to Jefferies and Juan Samuel in the ninth before striking out Strawberry with the bases loaded.

A throwing error by McReynolds, who tried to get Marvell Wynne at third on a fly ball by Dascenzo, gave the Cubs a run in the eighth. Williams, a former American League at-bats, homered into the bleachers in left-center later in the inning.

Cardinals 3, Expos 2

MONTREAL (AP) — Jose DeLeon pitched a strong game and Milt Thompson hit a two-run double for St. Louis, which won for only the fourth time in 12 games.

The fourth-place Expos have won only three of their last 11 games.

DeLeon, 16-11, blanked Montreal until running into control trouble in the eighth. He allowed just two hits, but walked five while striking out five.

Giants stay step ahead of Astros, Padres

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco Giants' ability to avoid series sweeps and long losing streaks has given them confidence they can hold onto first place in the National League West in the final two weeks of the season.

Beginning a three-game home series Tuesday night against the Los Angeles Dodgers, the Giants enjoy a five-game lead over the San Diego Padres and the Houston Astros with 12 games to go.

The Padres and the Astros have two games remaining against each other, and three each with the Giants, so they remain hopeful. But the Giants justifiably are confident heading down the stretch.

They know, for instance, that by merely splitting their remaining games and finishing 92-70, the Padres and the Astros would have to go 12-0 to beat them. A 4-8 record by the Giants would require a 10-2 mark by the other contenders to overtake them.

"The ideal situation would be for us to have a four-game lead with three games to go," said the Padres' Bruce Hurst, who salvaged a doubleheader split against the Giants Sunday with a five-hit, 6-1 victory.

"We've got to be realistic," Hurst said before the Padres headed for Cincinnati and the opener of a three-game series Tuesday night. "It's up to us to keep winning, and we need a little help."

The Giants are doing just enough to discourage the Astros and the Padres. See Giants, Page 11
