Panama coup fails: 6 reported dead
U.S. soldiers, Noriega patrol city

General Manuel Noriega faces a defiant salute as he leaves the military court.

The U.S. military forces that surrounded Panama's Noriega Saturday appeared to have settled into a pattern.

The troops around the capital awaited word from Washington about the next steps. Noriega, who is facing charges of murder and drug dealing, denied he has ordered any coup attempt.

Across the U.S. military base where Noriega was arrested on Friday, at least 150,000 people were deployed.

U.S. forces said they were prepared to move in if the situation deteriorated.

The situation was tense as the military buildup continued.

U.S. troops have been deployed throughout the country, blockading streets and guardsing buildings.

The U.S. forces are expected to remain in the country for an indefinite period.

The U.S. has been accused of planning a coup to overthrow Noriega.

The U.S. military operations have been described as "peaceful and orderly."

CAC suggests new tax check-off plan
Funds would go to financial aid

Anne Marie Williams
The Daily Iowan
The United College Associates Foundation in Iowa City last week went public with a legislative tax check-off plan that could be set up in the state.

The plan, which is expected to be the subject of a public hearing before the Iowa Senate Appropriations Committee next month, would allow students to contribute to the CAC Foundation through the state's income tax system.

According to the plan, taxpayers would be able to designate a portion of their income tax to support the CAC Foundation, which would then use the funds to provide scholarships and other forms of financial aid to college students.

The plan was introduced by the CAC Foundation as a way to increase access to higher education for students who may not otherwise be able to afford it.

"This is an opportunity to help students who are facing significant financial barriers," said Anne Marie Williams, director of the CAC Foundation. "We believe that everyone should have the opportunity to pursue higher education, regardless of their financial situation.

"By allowing taxpayers to contribute to the CAC Foundation through the income tax system, we can ensure that more students have access to the financial support they need to succeed in college."

The Hazardous Waste Cycle

When hazardous chemicals are put in a landfill, water from rain and melting snow become contaminated by them. The contaminated water then seeps through the sides of the landfill into the ground. State will not fund world trade center
Gov. balks at investing state $$$

DESMOND (AP) — The state will not build a new convention center to finance a world trade center being discussed in Des Moines, Iowa, said Friday.

"It would be a financial risk for the state," said Friday. "We don't want to do anything that could jeopardize our ability to borrow money at reasonable rates." Friday said the state's economy is too fragile to support such a venture.

"We're concerned about the potential for default," she added.

Friday also criticized the proposal, saying it was "a classic example of how the state's leaders cannot work together to make informed decisions." She said the state needs to focus on more immediate priorities, such as education and infrastructure.

Gov. seeks support to fund businesses

DESMOND (AP) — Gov. Terry Branstad is planning a series of meetings throughout the state to build support for a proposed loan program to help businesses with funding needs.

"We know that small businesses are the lifeblood of our economy," said Friday. "They create jobs and drive innovation, so we need to do everything we can to support them." Friday said the proposed loan program would provide low-interest loans to small businesses.

"This is a great opportunity to help our small businesses thrive," she added.

Judge will hear tape of accused murderer

DESMOND (AP) — The Iowa Supreme Court on Wednesday ordered a judge in the case of accused murderer to hear a tape recording of the accused's confession.

"We believe the tape will be critical to the case," said Friday. "It will help us determine whether the accused made a voluntary confession." Friday said the judge will hear the tape in closed session.

"This is a serious matter," she added. "We take it very seriously and are committed to finding the truth in this case."

Machinists union strike bold action

NEW YORK (AP) — The strike against Boeing Co. in another holdout state was about to enter its third week when workers at a Nebraska plant voted overwhelmingly to authorize a walkout.

The International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, which represents 16,000 workers at the company's St. Louis, Mo., plant, said in a statement that it would hold a vote on a strike in the near future.

The union has been negotiating with Boeing since early March. But that strike was rejected by the company in early March.

Union members at the Wichita Boeing plant voted to authorize a strike if there is no agreement on terms. The Wichita strikers voted out on their jobs of $15.80 an hour.

The strike is expected to last for up to two weeks, and it could extend for another week if the company does not agree to the union's proposals.

The Machinists union is seeking higher pay, better benefits, and better working conditions for its members.

The Machinists union represents about 500,000 workers in the aerospace industry.

The strike is expected to affect about 1,500 workers at the St. Louis plant, which produces the Boeing 747.

The strike is the latest in a series of labor disputes in the aerospace industry, with workers at other companies also voting to strike.

The Machinists union has been negotiating with Boeing for several months, but the company has been slow to respond to the union's proposals.

The strike is expected to affect about 1,500 workers at the St. Louis plant, which produces the Boeing 747.
Missed opportunity

The Bush administration missed a golden opportunity to cement its argument against abortion rights for women in the Pennsylvania legislature yesterday.

Bush was aiming to win over Pennsylvania lawmakers by focusing on the issues of women's rights and reproductive choice. However, his approach fell short of what it could have been.

Bush's speech was well-received by some Pennsylvania lawmakers, but his arguments were too vague and lacked specificity. He failed to address the core issue of women's reproductive rights and how it impacts their lives and decision-making.

Bush also missed an opportunity to highlight the positive impact of abortion rights on women's health and well-being. By not emphasizing these points, he failed to connect with Pennsylvania lawmakers who may be hesitant to support abortion rights.

In conclusion, while Bush's speech was a step in the right direction, he missed an opportunity to make a more compelling case for abortion rights. If he had taken a stronger approach, he could have secured more support from Pennsylvania lawmakers.

What are we worried about?

There is no law to prevent holding an intermediate messa

William F. Buckley

A couple of years back, I was asked to give a talk in front of a group of conservative educators. The talk was titled "What are we worried about?"

The title was a play on words, as it was clear that the audience was quite worried about the state of the country. Many of them were concerned about the rise of socialism, the decline of traditional values, and the perceived decline of American exceptionalism.

I began my talk by saying, "I think we are worried about the wrong things." I went on to explain that, while it is important to be concerned about these issues, we should not lose sight of the fact that we are living in a world that is becoming increasingly complex and interconnected.

We are worried about the rise of socialism, but we should also be concerned about the rise of populism and nationalism. We are worried about the decline of traditional values, but we should also be concerned about the rise of identity politics and political correctness.

We are worried about the perceived decline of American exceptionalism, but we should also be concerned about the rise of globalism and the need for a new American identity.

In short, we are worried about the wrong things. We should be worried about the rise of socialism, populism, nationalism, identity politics, political correctness, globalism, and the need for a new American identity.

But if we are worried about the right things, what are we worried about?

In conclusion, we are worried about the rise of socialism, populism, nationalism, identity politics, political correctness, globalism, and the need for a new American identity. But we should also be concerned about the rise of populism and nationalism, the decline of traditional values, and the perceived decline of American exceptionalism.

What is the $4.9 film about?

The Daily Iowan's film review raises critical questions

Guest Opinion

George Nicklesburg

It isn't just another cheap, disposable film. It is a true story of courage and sacrifice.

The movie is based on the true story of a man who refused to give up his life's work in the face of overwhelming odds.

The man, played by Denzel Washington, is a professor of law who, despite being severely injured in a car accident, refused to give up his teaching career.

The film is a powerful reminder of the importance of perseverance and determination in the face of adversity.

It is a story of triumph over tragedy, of hope over despair, of the human spirit over the forces of darkness.

Guitarist Mould breaks into solo act

John Kenyon

Bob Mould has shed a few pounds both physically and musically since his days in Husker Du.

Mould, who at one time looked like the poster boy for the New Wave diet plan, has shed a few pounds of weight and a few pounds of baggage. His recent acoustic performance in Iowa City featured a tilting stool of guitar that he was so well versed at playing that it matched the mandolins and keyboards, Mould has come up with a sound that rivals the past while shining a new light on his art. Mould’s first solo album, "Workbook," released on Sire Records, has been met with critical acclaim. One could argue that the Huskers were writing history, but not necessarily so on a new level as Mould goes solo. Blending hard, guitar-oriented rock arrangements with thoughtful, melodic songwriting, Mould’s solo album shows that there is talent left after Husker Du. He has taken the confidence of his hard work and offered up an album to be enjoyed by a wide variety of fans. Expect this blending of Husker Du intensity with well thought-out experimentation in Mould’s solo work to begin soon. Mould performed live at the University of Iowa in Iowa City. There is talent left after Husker Du, and there is talent left in Bob Mould.

As Mould states on "Workbook," "Hunters and Their Apprentices" (All those things I’ve done I won’t do again; you can blame me but it’s honest) you’ll have no choice but to choose it, or not.) It’s honest that it’s present in that important, and presently things are looking good for the former hardman giant.

Marsalis to 'trump' at Hancher

Jamie Butters

Marsalis was classically trained at the Juilliard School of Music. Following studies in Broadway and record production, he directly took the jazz world by storm. His band, the Marsalis Five, and later the Marsalis Quartet have cemented his place among the world's most successful and visible jazz musicians. In 1984, he became the first African American to draw the best players, but Marsalis was only 29 years old. His performances at the 1984 Grammy Awards were so impressive that his director, Frank Conroy, who is a devotee of Marsalis, became a model for young black musicians.

Marsalis takes very seriously his role as an advocate for jazz and as the symbol for the new generation of jazz musicians. He has always been determined to play both his own and classical music and will probably continue to do both. "It's a very direct and emotional in the history of Western music," says Carpino. "It is the hardest music to do both."

The symposium is sponsored by the History Society which organizes the event. "Our objective is to expand young people's horizons," says Carpino, "to show them that there is more than what they think." A committee from within the History Society reviews abstracts and entries were solicited for this year's symposium. In the examination of the historical process of paintings, there is a chance for students and young historians to contribute and "The symposium presents art history research on topics for a 20 minute presentation."

The symposium provides a chance for students and departing historians to examine art, art history, trends and establish associations with others who are interested in art. "It also promotes the university and the school of art in a national," says Carpino. The symposium is sponsored by the History Society.
