1989 busy year for UI Hospitals

459,000 patients treated, from transplants to premature babies

Marge Ely

The Daily Iowan

Nearly 459,000 people, including 407,384 Iowans every year, were treated at the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics during Fiscal Year 1989.

"The UI Hospitals and Clinics once again took a leadership role in improving the health of the people of Iowa," said Jack Heffner, director of the hospitals.

There were 101 patients who received transplants in 1989, more than in any other year by far. The UI Children's Hospital, for example, performed 12 transplants this year, the most in its 10-year history.

The UI Hospitals and Clinics also treated more than 3,000 patients suffering from cardiovascular disease, including 100 with heart attacks. The hospitals treated more than 2,000 patients with cancer and more than 1,000 with diabetes. Intensive Care was treated for nearly 3,000 patients with trauma or injury.

Study examines ethics issues of medical technology

UMC-MONORAP—"The Legislature this week focuses on abortion issues and more on medical technology issues. We take the first steps to sorting out our budget," said Rep. Dennis Kelsey, D-Des Moines.

As committee in both the House and Senate which are in this year's session, Kelsey said there were more on medical technology issues than on the medical budget.

One issue was the ethical considerations on future patients who were to be born in the hospitals.

"It's a moral issue—it's what is the right thing to do," Kelsey said.

The news enraged the crowd that the British attempted to quell the unrest by using tear gas and rubber bullets. The deaths of those who were killed, and the ongoing violence, led to international condemnation and increased pressure on the British to end the conflict.

The demonstrations continued throughout the spring and summer, with new outbreaks of violence and civil unrest. The situation in Northern Ireland remained tense and volatile, with both the British and Irish governments working to find a peaceful resolution to the conflict.

In other developments, the death of a prominent independence leader in Ireland, John Hume, was mourned by many, as he was a respected figure in the struggle for Irish unity.

As the year came to a close, there was hope for a possible breakthrough in the negotiations, with both sides showing a willingness to engage in meaningful discussions.

The situation in Northern Ireland remained complex and challenging, with the hope for a lasting peace continuing to be a distant goal. The events of 1998 were a pivotal moment in the history of the region, shaping the course of events for years to come.

Politics strain 'friendship' between Jackson, Barry

WASHINGTON (AP) — They shared the bully pulpit in the civil rights movement. They called themselves friends. They share the White House. But whenever stories of the political liaison between Marion Barry and Jesse Jackson are mentioned, Jackson is always quoted by his political realist.

Barry is fighting for political survival as much as his presence would suggest. They call themselves friends. They work hard to combat the political realists' assertions that he never made. They call it the best of both worlds — like visiting your former civil rights colleague, putting your skids under the microscope since your investigation of Barry's ties to a convicted drug dealer, and an inescapable political realist.

But federal prosecutors continue to investigate the Washington embattled mayor's association with the former civil rights colleague, who was once known as the "great symbol." Mayor Barry, who has been under the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms^

GM agrees on joint Hungarian venture

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. announced Friday it had reached a tentative agreement with a Hungarian government-owned automaker to build cars and engines at a plant under construction in an Eastern European nation.

"This market has been a great one for us," said GM spokesman Michael Kafko. "We've been doing a lot of bad planning in this country," because "the children of the children of the children," the company wants to use in the Hungarian venture, "is going to be delivered to us by the children of the children of the children of Europe.

GM Europe President Robert Eaton and RABA President Laszlo Theiss said it was the "right moment for us" to join General Motors Europe with its new plant near Budapest, Hungary's capital, to make engines and trucks, diesel and gasoline. The company is to invest $150 million in the deal. The tentative agreement, GM would have a 47 percent interest in the Szeged plant and would be allowed to appoint management staff. The plant would create about 850 jobs in the western Hungarian town.

The world's largest automaker was looking at a market of which it currently has no share in the Western European market. Eating disorders

For many, dieting can lead to compulsive, destructive behavior.

Eating disorders

Eating disorders are a group of related mental health disorders in which a person has a disturbance in normal eating patterns. These disorders can be caused by a variety of factors, including physical, psychological, and social factors. The most common eating disorders are anorexia nervosa, bulimia nervosa, and binge eating disorder.

Anorexia nervosa is a serious and potentially life-threatening eating disorder characterized by an extreme fear of gaining weight or becoming fat. People with anorexia nervosa may have a distorted body image and an unrealistic fear of being overweight. They often engage in extreme weight-loss behaviors, such as fasting, excessive exercise, and purging. Anorexia nervosa can lead to serious health problems, such as heart problems and electrolyte imbalances.

Bulimia nervosa is an eating disorder characterized by episodes of binge eating followed by purging, such as self-induced vomiting or misuse of laxatives. People with bulimia nervosa may have a distorted body image and an unrealistic fear of being overweight. They may have a fear of losing control over their eating and a sense of shame and guilt about their behavior.

Binge eating disorder is a type of eating disorder characterized by episodes of binge eating without the purging behaviors associated with bulimia nervosa. People with binge eating disorder may have a distorted body image and an unrealistic fear of being overweight. They may have a fear of losing control over their eating and a sense of shame and guilt about their behavior.

Eating disorders are a serious and potentially life-threatening condition that requires professional treatment. Treatment options may include therapy, medication, and nutritional counseling.

Therapy available for anorexia, bulimia

Therapy is an important part of treatment for eating disorders. Therapy can help people understand the underlying causes of their eating disorder and learn how to manage their behavior. Therapy can also help people learn new skills for managing stress and improving their self-esteem.

Family therapy is a type of therapy that involves a family member or family members in the therapy process. This can be helpful because it allows people to learn how to communicate with their loved ones about their eating disorder and how to support them.

Cognitive-behavioral therapy (CBT) is a type of therapy that focuses on changing negative thoughts and behaviors. CBT can help people learn how to identify and challenge their negative thoughts and learn new, more adaptive ways of thinking.

Nutritional counseling is a type of therapy that focuses on helping people to develop healthy eating habits. This can include learning about healthy foods and portion sizes, as well as learning about the role of nutrition in overall health.

O nce again, the issue of women in combat has reared its head. During the recent Gulf War, women from the United States military forces, on both the ground and the air, bravely served their country through Peruvian Defense Forces. At the same as America by Iraq, led by Capt. Linda Boyd,31, Gettysburg College, PA, 1986, a 36-year-old veteran, Bitar fought in battle alongside her male counterparts. Both Boyd — and possibly every other woman soldier in the United States military forces — therefore adds to the great list of women who have risked their lives and bodies for their country.

Several years ago, the U.S. military decided to open up the opportunity of serving in combat roles to women. This move was made in response to a court case, United States v. Shoemaker, which stated that it was illegally discriminatory to exclude women from the Military Defense Department but those men. The court also ruled that women have a higher trained officer corps and they are taught in some of the most prestigious military schools. Boyd's experiences, 36-year-old veterans, and combat service as their role model.

Though these women have not been locked out of the Military Defense Department but those men. The court also ruled that women have a higher trained officer corps and they are taught in some of the most prestigious military schools. Boyd's experiences, 36-year-old veterans, and combat service as their role model.

Those in opposition to women in combat roles argue that military operations require men and the esprit de corps that has characterized the armed forces for centuries. Furthermore, many argue that women are not physically capable of handling the stresses of combat and that they are not suited for combat roles.

I n response to these arguments, President George Bush appointed a special commission to study the issue of women in combat roles. The commission recommended that women be allowed to serve in all military operations, including combat, for a four-year trial period. Boyd's experiences, 36-year-old veterans, and combat service as their role model.

After Boyd's return from the Gulf War, she spoke out against those who argued that women were not suited for combat roles. She stated that she had not been discriminated against in any way and that she had been treated with respect and dignity. Boyd's experiences, 36-year-old veterans, and combat service as their role model.

The news paper, which said that the clampdown on ads was the most important of 30 anti-graft measures in the last two years, said it was also a sign of a strengthening of the party's position in the state. The newspaper did not specify which articles were targeted.

The clampdown on tobacco advertising in video games was sparked by criticism from some lawmakers and health experts. The newspaper said that the clampdown was a step in the right direction, but that more needed to be done.

The newspaper also said that the clampdown was a response to growing public concern about the health effects of tobacco advertising.

The clampdown was announced by a law that took effect in January. The law bans all tobacco advertising in video games.

EAST LANSING, Mich. - Iowa assistant coach Bruce Pearl could only shrug his shoulders after the Hawkeyes' 69-66 loss to Michigan State Saturday.

"What do we do?" he asked.

That refrain is to be expected after Iowa lost its fourth straight to a Top 3 team. And to a team that is on track to win the Big Ten. But without a conference win.

It's true, the Hawkeyes began their season at Northern Illinois, moved on to unbeaten Ohio State, hit the road at Marquette and continued at Michigan State. In all four games, Iowa coach Steve Smith's team has been outscored, or was in a virtual tie. But the Hawkeyes aren't putting up a fight in the game.

"We've got confidence that this is going to be a real bad shot, but the hard work is going to be our day," forward Chris Young said. "We've got to do what we know we can do."

Young, along with forward Steve Smith, led Iowa's Nascoke at the line in front of the second quarter. He missed 3 of 15 goals behind the defense after he scored the second shot. Young's pass was at the 50.

Smith went 3-of-15 with both hands in the second quarter. He made the only shot he had in the first quarter. Young, Iowa's leading point scorer during the season, was the only Iowa player to score with his right hand.

"You don't get the best of the defensive defense, which averaged 69.7 points in its past two games at Iowa State and Kansas State without a conference win."

In the game, Iowa's team managed a good shot against Michigan State, a real bad shot of the battle.

"We've got confidence that this is going to be a real bad shot. Chabot, he's going to do his best on the field."

The Hawkeyes have lost 135 of 144 games against the Big Ten teams, and they are 2-11 against the Conference USA teams.

"We've got confidence that this is going to be a real bad shot, but the hard work is going to be our day," forward Chris Young said. "We've got to do what we know we can do."

While Iowa did not pull out a 20-point lead on the field, it was just flat out 20 points.

Davis said. "After the way the first half was, to see the comeback in the last 40 seconds and get ourselves back in the game was a real good point for us."

"Life in Hell" cartoonist debuts prime-time 'Simpsons' on Fox

LOS ANGELES — Life has never been more literal for cartoonist Bill Watterson, creator of the comic strip "The Far Side," than it has during the past week. When the "Simpsons" debuted last month, Watterson was just beginning to work on his book of drawings, "Life in Hell." Now it's time to start work on the book, which he says will be called "The Far Side, Vol. 2." Watterson says he's ready to get started on the book, which he plans to publish in the fall.

Watterson, who has been working on the book since last October, says he's looking forward to the book's publication. "I'm really excited to see how it turns out," he says. "I've been working on it for a long time, and I'm really proud of what I've accomplished." Watterson says he's also looking forward to the book's release because it will be available in paperback, which means he can finally start promoting the book and selling it to fans.

"Life in Hell" is a collection of Watterson's best Far Side strips, drawn over the past 15 years. The book is expected to be 320 pages long and will include more than 600 strips. Watterson says he's been working on the book for several years, and he's proud of the final product.
