Higher drinking age figures in less vandalism damage

Kelly David
The Daily Iowan

The bad news is that over $75,000 was spent repairing vandalism damage in UI residence halls in 1989. The good news is that this figure is decreasing, according to one residence hall official.

"We are not really having more problems (with vandalism)," said George Droll, director of residence services. "There's generally been a downward trend in the amount spent on vandalism."

In past years, graffiti, broken light globes and jammed elevators have cost residence services almost $90,000.

The 1986 legislation raising the legal drinking age in Iowa from 19 to 21 may be partly to blame, according to Dwayne Thomas, Slater Residence Hall coordinator and chair of the vandalism committee for residence services.

Vandalism is often alcohol-related, Thomas said, adding that with fewer students in the residence halls of drinking age, fewer students are likely to commit the punishable misdemeanor.

Two years ago, many students living in the residence halls fell under a grandfather clause which allowed them to legally consume alcohol under the age of 21. But since the two-year grace period has ended, many hall residents are no longer of legal age to drink.

Today, 95 percent of the students living in the residence halls are underage, said Pam Boersig, assistant director of residence halls.

"But (the decrease in vandalism) doesn't mean that it isn't significant," Droll said. "We are continually working to make students more aware of the damage they can do." See Vandalism, Page 4A

Barry arrested on drug charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Marion Barry was arrested by the FBI on a drug charge Thursday night at a downtown hotel.

Details were sketchy, but the manager of the Vista International Hotel, Rex Rice, confirmed word from two federal law enforcement sources that Barry had been taken into custody by FBI agents.

First word of the arrest was broadcast shortly after 10 p.m. by television station WRC.

A third federal source said the drug involved was cocaine, but gave no details.

The 53-year-old Barry, a former civil rights worker with graduate training in chemistry, has been the subject of many allegations of drug use in recent years. He has denied all allegations.

A longtime friend of the mayor's, Charles Lewis, said in open court last fall that he had provided cocaine to the mayor.

Barry was visiting Lewis' hotel in December 1988 when city police were en route to investigate a report that Lewis was offering drugs for sale. When the officers found out Barry was present, they abandoned their mission in an episode not yet fully explained.

Lewis has been convicted of selling drugs in the Virgin Islands.

Annual Inflation

Inflation increases; construction falls

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inflation increased modestly in 1989 to an eight-year high of 4.6 percent, boosted by double-digit price increases for dairy food, eggs, tobacco and fuel oil, the government said Thursday.

Construction of new housing, meanwhile, plunged 7.6 percent last year to 1.37 million units, the lowest level since the recession year of 1982.

In December, consumer prices climbed a moderate 0.4 percent despite a sharp rise in fuel-oil costs during the holiday cold snap. The weather also prompted a seasonally adjusted 8 percent decline in housing starts from November to December, the steepest in 10

Kremlin steps up militia to control ethnic battles

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin is boosting military units to wartime strength in several regions and calling up reservists in its struggle to end the ethnic strife that has turned the southern Caucasus into a battlefield, Soviet radio reported Thursday.

Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov called the Armenian-Azerbaijani warfare, which has left at least 66 people dead and more than 200 wounded, "a great disaster."

Most of the victims have been Armenians attacked by mobs in the Azerbaijani capital of Baku. Terrorized Armenians were said to still be fleeing by the thousands.

Soviet troops ordered in Tuesday to enforce a state of emergency have become caught up in the fighting, their efforts hampered by defiant nationalists who have been setting up blockades.

Yazov told Soviet radio that "in order to ensure order, we are compelled to bring up to wartime strength" some units in neighboring regions. He did not say how many troops were being called up or exactly where. The republic of Georgia, which has its own ethnic quarrels, and the Russian federation are the areas nearest to Armenia and Azerbaijan.

Moscow radio said some young men who recently completed compulsory military service were being called back to the barracks.

Also today, President Mikhail Gorbachev made his first public comments on the civil strife, noting that a centuries-old conflict was involved.

"The problems which have been accumulating for tens, no, for hundreds of years have erupted ...," he told a meeting in Moscow.

The Kremlin on Tuesday poured more than 11,000 additional troops into the troubled mountain region in a bid to quell the deadliest round of violence in the most protracted ethnic conflict of Gorbachev's nearly 5-year tenure.

The soldiers were authorized Wednesday to fire on gunmen who attack them or people who are trying to steal weapons. But Yazov said their numbers were still insufficient to bring the situation under control.

He said he understood reservists would be unhappy about being called up to maintain order in another Soviet republic, but emphasized that "no one is setting them the task of killing, shooting, going onto some offensive. It is principally to protect public order."

However, soldiers' lives have been endangered. An Interior Ministry lieutenant was shot and killed in the disputed Nagorno-Karabakh region and a private was mortally wounded, according to official reports.

Grade school starts drug testing plan

CHICAGO (AP) — Some students at a Roman Catholic elementary school are reporting to a hospital to give urine samples in what may be the nation's first primary-school drug testing program, school officials said Thursday.

The first of the 25 students chosen at random from the sixth through eighth grades at St. Sabina Academy were taken by their parents Wednesday night to Little Company of Mary Hospital for the test, Principal Linda Bond said.

Testing is to continue through Friday evening. A lottery to choose a different group of students for testing will be held each quarter of the school year.

"Then we wait for the results, and if any kids are tested positive they are going to be going through counseling," Bond said.

Jay Miller, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Illinois, called the testing "outrageous," but said it couldn't be challenged on constitutional grounds in court because it had been adopted by a private school.

"It's the first case I've heard of in this country of any testing being done on children in this age group," Miller said. "I think it's a terrible overreaction."

But many youngsters at the all-black school and their parents are proud that the school may be the nation's first to test pupils for drugs.

"I care about the lives of these children," says the Rev. Michael Pfleger, pastor of St. Sabina's Church. "When you talk about rights, if a child dies on drugs, he has no rights."

Pfleger, who has gained a national reputation as an anti-drug crusader, said officials doubt a drug problem exists at the school, "but we're doing the preventative stuff to make sure we don't."

The Chicago Archdiocese's Office of Catholic Education rejected a proposal by Pfleger that drug testing be introduced in all local parochial schools, but said it wouldn't block individual schools from introducing such programs.

St. Sabina's school board approved the random drug-test program in November after a survey found that 210 parents favored it and only five opposed it, Pfleger said.

"The overwhelming majority of parents are behind the program, although we've encountered opposition from some parents who feel strongly about the psychological effects and invasion of privacy," said parent Sheila Grace.

Grace's 13-year-old son, Sherman, an eighth-grader at the school, said he was glad to participate in the program.

"I'm proud to be a part of it because we are making history in showing that our school wants to be drug-free," said Sherman, who was to be tested Thursday.

Violations may close Pike house

Members of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity could find themselves without a place to call home if they fail to comply with a court mandate by noon today.

According to records filed in Johnson County District Court Thursday morning, District Associate Judge John Sladek tentatively ordered the Pi Kappa Alpha house, 1032 N. Dubuque St., to be vacated by noon today unless certain fire-safety violations are not corrected.

The Dubuque Street property is apparently missing fire doors on its lower level. Such a violation of city code constitutes an emergency situation, court records indicate.

Hiring trends indicate minority discrimination is on the wane

Margo Ely
The Daily Iowan

Authorities in Iowa say an increase in the number of minorities being placed by state employment agencies reflects a nationwide trend toward less discriminatory hiring practices.

During the first five months of the Iowa Employment Services' fiscal year 1989, 3,367 minorities were placed — a 20 percent increase over the same period last year.

"One thing that has happened across the country is a trend for more minorities and women to be included in the workforce," said Jerry Mathiasen, deputy director of the Department of Employment Services.

Mathiasen said the U.S. Department of Labor predicts that only 15 percent of the additions to the workforce between now and the year 2000 will be native white males.

Iowa is following the national trend and hiring more of the groups targeted through affirmative action, such as veterans, the elderly, women and people with disabilities, according to Mathiasen.

"(Affirmative Action) has certainly helped increase awareness in the government as well as the private sector," Mathiasen said.

The Iowa City area has seen an increase in job opportunities in the last year and a half, according to Tom Bullington, manager of Job Service of Iowa, 1810 Lower Muscatine Road.

"There have been more jobs available," Bullington said. "We've always been fortunate in this area, even in the bad economic times we've had jobs available."

Job Service of Iowa serves Johnson and Washington counties, although Bullington said anyone that can legally work in the United States can fill out an application with the Iowa City office, regardless of where they live. He also said that although people think unemployment is a prerequisite for their service, this is not true.

Job Service of Iowa places a cross-section of applicants in a cross-section of jobs, including service jobs, professional, managerial, sales and many clerical and part-time jobs, Bullington said. There is no cost for either the applicant or the employer.

"We see people with little formal education and some with degrees," Bullington said. "We see a lot of people with degrees that come in and wish to remain in the area — they like the community and wish to stay."

Mathiasen said that native Iowans have an advantage with employers because of the fine reputation of Iowa's educational system.

"We have a big advantage," Mathiasen said. "Our people, whether minorities or anyone, are pretty well-educated."

Although the Iowa population is educated, blue-collar jobs are still in demand, he added.

"The manufacturing-type jobs are still a major part of Iowa," Mathiasen said. "People are contining to seek those jobs."

Mathiasen also said Iowa has developed more diversified jobs in the last decade, like technical jobs needing computer skills.

Many Iowans, he said, are diversifying their skills to keep up with the diversifying job market.

As Iowa's population continues to age, young people will increasingly play an important role in the state, Mathiasen said.

"These young people are going to be key factors in the development of the economy," Mathiasen said.

UI senior and honor student, Lori Brandt, dreams of creating the kind of world in which everyone's dreams can come true.

Her dream is reflected in her course of study at the UI and her fervor is evidenced by achievements in and outside of class. Both have been recognized by USA Today in selecting Brandt as one of 20 members of its All USA-Academic First Team.

Brandt will attend an awards luncheon today at the Gannett newspaper's headquarters in Washington, D.C., where she will receive a $2,500 cash prize.

The first team was selected by panels of educators from among 749 scholars nominated for the honor by their colleges and universities. Candidates were judged on academic performance, honors, awards, rigor of academic pursuits, leadership roles in activities on and off campus, and the ability to express themselves in written English.

Brandt, who will receive a bachelor's degree in May with majors in history and religion, has received numerous awards, including being named a Younger Scholar of the National Endowment for the Humanities in 1986 and the recipient of the Virgil M. Hancher Memorial Scholarship in 1989. She is co-president of the Phi Beta Kappa honor fraternity and a member of the UI Liberal Arts Honors Program.

With plans to be a theology professor, a major focus of Brandt's academic career has been to combine intellectual pursuits with humanitarian goals.

"I recognize the bridge connecting thought and action and have tried to journey across it," she said. "For example, as the coordinator of the Iowa City Coalition on Hunger, I am continually confronted with the relationship between thought and action. Action against hunger and poverty needs to be directed by understanding and analysis of the problem."

While other students spent their winter break last year vacationing in sunny climates or were earning personal spending money, Brandt was on her hands and knees, tiling and grouting a bathroom to help provide adequate housing for the poor in St. Louis, Missouri,

College of Law's military recruitment ban upheld

Council says refusal is consistent with UI code

Ann Marie Williams
The Daily Iowan

The UI College of Law's decision to prohibit military recruiting in its building last fall was upheld by the UI Faculty Council Tuesday.

The College of Law's refusal to allow employers who use discriminatory hiring practices from recruiting in their building is consistent with the UI Code of Human Rights, the council voted.

John Nelson, the faculty senate president, said the decision allows the College of Law to keep the recruiting policy intact, but was not intended to encourage other colleges on campus to follow suit.

"This does not mean that the faculty council passed a proposal to bar military recruitment campus-wide," Nelson said.

The policy was a reaction to a mandate from the American Association of Law Schools which prohibits its members from supporting discriminatory hiring practices in recruiting situations, Nelson said.

Military hiring policies forbid homosexuality and discrimination against individuals on the basis of age and physical handicap, law professor Michael Green said in an interview last October.

The law school submitted their decision to the faculty council in order to institute the decision on a permanent basis, Nelson said, adding the issue will be presented to the faculty senate next Tuesday.

In theory, any UI college could present a similar proposal to the faculty council, Nelson said, but no other colleges have done so, so far.

Captain John Bowers, a recruiter at the UI Air Force R.O.T.C., said that the law school's policy has not affected the military programs at the UI.

"It's been in the news," Bowers said. "But I haven't noticed any effect."

He added that the military uses mail and other recruiting methods in response to the law school's prohibition.

Although about 20 law schools have implemented similar policies on military recruiting, Bowers said he is unaware of any universities which ban the recruiting campus-wide.

"It is discrimination," Bowers said. "But it's legal discrimination which has been held up in the courts."

Bowers said he is concerned about the possibility that a policy similar to the law school's might be implemented in other UI colleges.

danger in the event of a fire, said Larry Kinney, Iowa City fire marshal.

Kinney said the fraternity has failed to install fire doors between the building's basement and first floors for almost one year, adding that the location of the kitchen in the basement could easily increase the chance of a fire spreading to other parts of the house.

"It would be considered a dangerous place," Kinney said.

Without fire doors to contain a possible blaze in the building's basement "it would be a chimney-type effect," Kinney said, indicating that a downstairs fire could climb to above floors.

The fraternity's property also does not have illuminated exit signs above its secondary exits, handrails on the entries and exits on the east and west side of the building or a valid rental permit, records show.

These violations need to be corrected by February 20, court orders state.

Stephen Greenleaf, the attorney representing the city in Thursday's trial, said he didn't know if the fraternity's 24-hour notice to install fire doors was insufficient time in which to comply.

The building had been inspected several times over the past year and fraternity officials had been notified of the building's fire-safety deficiencies, Greenleaf said.

"From the point of view of the city, the path that led us into the courtroom began in February of 1989," Greenleaf said. "They've had almost 12 months to remedy the situation, and they've repeatedly ignored these requests."

The Pi Kappa Alpha house's fire code violations are problems that need to be fixed now, Greenleaf said.

"They were well forewarned."

A Pi Kappa Alpha member present at Thursday's trial gave no indication whether the fraternity would meet today's deadline, Greenleaf said.

months.

Economists attributed both the relative stability of consumer price increases and a weak housing industry to the Federal Reserve Board's tight money policy.

Although the central bank has eased its grip on credit in recent months, the Bush administration quickly blasted a suggestion from Federal Reserve policy-makers that interest rates will not fall again anytime soon.

"These numbers... indicate that inflation has remained very steady over the last seven or eight years and that lower interest rates are justified," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said in rare public criticism of the central bank.

The administration is counting on strong economic growth to bolster tax revenues and help it meet budget deficit targets.

But Federal Vice Chairman Manuel Johnson and board member

Wayne Angell, in remarks published in Thursday editions of The Wall Street Journal, suggested little prospect of another interest-rate cut in the near future.

Financial markets, which have been spooked in recent weeks by inflation fears, were mixed in volatile trading. Bond prices plunged, while the Dow Jones industrial average, after a roller-coaster ride, closed at 2,666.38, up 7.25. Traders said the market was reacting more to disappointing corporate earnings reports and worry over interest rates.

The 1989 rise in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index marked a modest acceleration over the 4.4 percent rates posted in 1988 and 1987. Still, it was the steepest increase since 1981, when prices shot up 8.9 percent in a lingering aftershock from the double-digit inflation of 1979 and 1980.

Every fall, the residence services vandalism committee posts the amount of money spent repairing damages caused by vandalism in the halls.

The majority of residence hall vandalism occurs in the elevators, according to Bill Diercksen, president of Associated Residence Halls.

Repairs for jammed elevator buttons and damaged alarms comprise one-third of the yearly total spent on vandalism repairs, he said.

Repairs on fire alarms, fire extinguishers, smoke detectors, doors and door locks comprise another third of the yearly total.

The remainder is spent on window, screen, plaster and bathroom repairs caused by vandalism.

These costs are reflected in increasing room and board rates, Droll said.

Students could receive more services if money were not spent on vandalism, said Diercksen.

"I think it's a big concern for everyone living in the residence halls," he said. "They are cutting back on the living costs of everyone if they are destroying the place where they live."

Although vandalism in the residence halls is decreasing, the number of incidents being reported to UI Campus Security have increased.

Reported incidents of vandalism in UI residence halls rose by 25 from 1988 to 1989, according to Campus Security records.

"A lot of (the increase) is because our people are finding (vandalism) themselves and reporting it more," said UI Chief of Campus Security Don Hogan.

The cost of repairing damage may level off, although it will never be eliminated from the residence services' budget, Droll said.

"The only improvement will come through the volunteer efforts of the students," he said.

"Once Upon A Time..."

And so it came to pass that a great sadness fell upon the Land. For the Great Lords who sat in Washington had caused a snafu to be laid upon the People, to cause them much Pain and Suffering. Throughout the land, there was much wailing and gnashing of teeth. For all believed that all was lost, even unto their Mercedes and Cadillacs.

"Times are Bad!" cried the Media. "You are all about to go down the tubes!" And, lo! the People so hearing did so believe. And they donned sackcloth and ashes, and spoke with lowered voices and much wringing of hands.

But there was amongst them one named Mark the Idiot at M.C. Ginsberg Jewelers, who was weak of mind, hard of hearing and dim of sight, so that he was not able to see, hear, nor understand how bad times were, so stupid was he.

And Mark fashioned for himself a small shield and emblazoned upon it the words "Business is Good," and bound it to his mantle, that all might look upon it.

And as he traveled through the land, the people raised their heads and they mocked at him, saying, "Wherefore do ye wear such a sign upon your breast saying 'Business is Good?'" But Mark of M. C. Ginsberg replied, saying, "I wear this sign because Business is Good."

And one who wailed mightily spake, saying, "Wherefore is your business good, but we are in such distress?" and Mark replied, "Thou knowest my eyes fail me, therefore I cannot read the newspapers that proclaim misery in the land. Thou knowest I hear dimly, therefore cannot I hear the mighty warnings of McNeil and Lehrer. Thou also knowest I am slow of mind, and therefore do not comprehend what Wise Men say in New York and Chicago. So is my heart not burdened, and my work joyful."

Hearing this, the multitude raised their voices, and cried aloud, "Mark, Mark! Make for us one of your Magic Buttons, that we might also shed of our despair." And Mark spake humbly saying, "It's not magic, people, You just gotta believe."

If you would like one of Mark's Magic Buttons, just come into M. C. Ginsberg Jewelers. We'll be glad to share the magic.

Shuttle to land today despite mishaps

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's astronauts Thursday jettied their flight systems for today's homecoming after taking control of their ship when a bad navigation signal from the ground sent it into a slow spin.

Commander Dan Brandenstein, roused from sleep, manually overrode the shuttle's navigation system at 10:30 p.m. until Mission Management Team control transmitted correct guidance signals.

There was no danger to the five astronauts, but "we had a little excitement tonight," said flight director Bob Castle.

The incident happened Wednesday night, about 2 1/2 hours before their scheduled wake-up. A false fire alarm also got them out of their beds Wednesday.

A third wake-up, at the planned time, was music to their ears: a rendition of Washington and Lee University's fight song. One of the astronauts, David Low, is a graduate of the school.

"Good morning, Columbia, after what must have been a restless, or restless, night," the control center radioed.

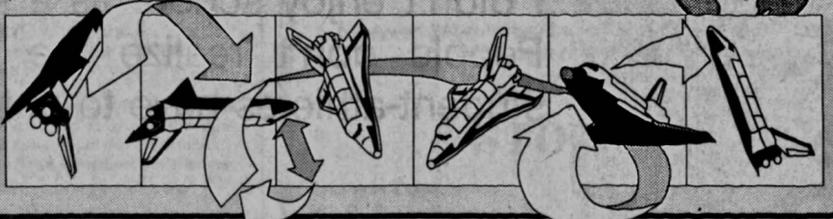

President George Bush planned to radio them later in the day.

Brandenstein and pilot Jim Wetherbee successfully tested Columbia's flight control systems to make sure they were in good shape

Shuttle Incident

Navigation problem discovered at 6:45 a.m. EST, just before a 15-minute loss of communications between Columbia and Mission Control. Columbia made rotations, for 15-20 minutes, in three different directions. At times, all the movements took place simultaneously.

- Roll: rotates nose to tail
- Yaw: rotates laterally, wing tip to wing tip
- Pitch: rotates vertically, up and down for returning home. During the 10-day mission the astronauts have deployed a Navy communications satellite and retrieved an 11-ton science laboratory that had orbited for six years.

The weather at Edwards Air Force Base was bad early today, with rain and snow flurries. But NASA said the storm would leave the region later in the day, and conditions were expected to be good today.

The landing is scheduled at 2:55 a.m. PST at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

Recent heavy rains have closed the public viewing area, and the space agency discouraged citizens from driving to the base to watch the touchdown.

While Brandenstein and Wetherbee checked the shuttle's systems, mission specialists Bonnie Dunbar, Marsha Ivins and David Low completed a series of medical and science experiments and began stowing them away.

Castle said Columbia began its slow spin after an errant navigation signal from the ground caused six small steering jets in the shuttle's nose to fire on and off, the longest for two minutes.

That sent the shuttle into an unwanted spin of about 3 degrees a second, or about one rotation every two minutes, Castle said.

He said the navigation data had suffered radio interference during the transmission, but that an operator on the ground failed to catch it.

"I'm concerned about what happened because we have to find out what happened and correct it," Castle said. "But I'm not real concerned. It was an error on the ground. Columbia did exactly what Columbia should have done."

Nagasaki mayor shot by lone gunman at City Hall

TOKYO (AP) — The mayor of Nagasaki, the target of death threats from ultra-nationalists since he said the late Emperor Hirohito bore some responsibility for World War II, was shot Thursday by a lone gunman.

The 67-year-old mayor, Hitoshi Motoshima, was rushed to surgery at Nagasaki Public Hospital after being shot outside City Hall. Doctors told Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) television that a bullet had pierced his left lung, but he was not in serious condition.

About five hours after Motoshima was shot, police said they had arrested a man who confessed to shooting the mayor.

Police identified the suspect as Kazumi Tajiri, 40, of Tokyo, and said he was arrested at a hotel in Nagasaki.

A police spokesman described Tajiri as the leader of a rightist group called Sane Thinkers' School. Earlier news reports had said police were following a lead on such a group.

Kyodo News Service said the group has an office in an apartment in the central Ginza district in Tokyo but no one was there when reporters went to the address.

City spokesman Megumi Nobeta said the mayor was shot as he was about to get into his car. NHK showed the mayor's car a few steps from the entrance to Nagasaki's City Hall, a pool of blood beside it.

The Kyodo News Service quoted witnesses as saying the gunman, a slim man wearing a dark brown suit, came out of City Hall and shot Motoshima at close range.

Chief Cabinet Secretary Mayumi Moriyama said the shooting was "an extremely cruel crime, and it will have a strong impact on society."

It was the first time a politician had been shot in Japan since World War II, National Police Agency records showed. But the records showed 25 previous attacks on key politicians by rightists using knives, swords, explosives or fists, the agency said.

Such attacks, while not common, give credence to threats by rightist groups. The most dramatic was in 1960 when a right-wing student, in an assault at a Socialist party rally that was being televised, stabbed party chairman Inejiro Asanuma to death on the stage.

Motoshima has been receiving threats from ultra-nationalists and others since December 1988, when he said at a city assembly session he believed Hirohito, then on his deathbed, "shares responsibility for the war, as well as all of us who lived in that period."

Motoshima also said Hirohito could have ended World War II sooner and perhaps spared Nagasaki from the atomic bomb. Nagasaki was hit by an atomic bomb on Aug. 9, 1945, three days after Hiroshima became the first city to be hit by a nuclear weapon.

The mayor's comments enraged fringe groups that reject any criticism of the imperial family, and Motoshima continued to receive threats even after Hirohito's death one year ago.

In December, a right-wing doctor, 62-year-old Shigeru Kajiyama, was sentenced to two years in prison for threatening to kill the mayor. Testimony at his trial said he had sent three anonymous letters containing live bullets to the mayor.

In January 1989, a rightist was arrested after breaking into City Hall with a knife, intending to force Motoshima into retracting his statement.

Early last year, rightists mobilized about 100 sound trucks to circle City Hall and blare slogans denouncing the mayor. Police at one time had about 1,200 officers deployed to prevent trouble in the city.

NHK reported that police had relaxed their special guard on Motoshima at the end of 1989 and no longer had officers following him when he was outside his office or home.

He said he had not believed his opinion on Hirohito's wartime role would cause so much trouble.

Though the rightists made a great deal of noise, supporters of the mayor's position sent him a petition with some 286,000 signatures in April calling for more freedom to express opinions, even on taboo subjects like the late emperor's war responsibility.

While many scholars believe Hirohito was a figurehead and the militarists made all important decisions during the war, the emperor was the nominal commander-in-chief and approved key decisions. Critics say Hirohito could have ended the war sooner, but during his life the late emperor never gave much detail on his role during the war.

Andre Tippett and Marv Cook

Andre Tippett roamed in Kinnick Stadium in the early 1980s and went on to play for the National Football League's New England Patriots. Now he has returned to the UI to finish his education.

The Daily Iowan/Jack Coyle

"My main concern is to finish up. I'm not here to be a football player. I'm here to have a good time, and I'm enjoying school. I didn't enjoy school as a student-athlete. People don't realize the kind of work student-athletes have to put in."

Returning to CAMPUS

Football star Tippett hits the books

Erica Weiland The Daily Iowan

"That's Andre Tippett," a voice in the back of the classroom whispered. "No, it's not," another hushed voice answered.

It was Andre Tippett, the former All-American defensive end for Iowa and current linebacker for the New England Patriots, was sitting in a UI classroom; his name was called in the role just like any normal student.

But that's why Tippett is at the UI — to be a normal student, not a Hawkeye football hero like he was almost a decade ago.

"My main concern is to finish up. I'm not here to be a football player," Tippett said. "I'm here to have a good time, and I'm enjoying school. I didn't enjoy school as a student-athlete. People don't realize the kind of work student-athletes have to put in."

Tippett, a 1979-81 Hawkeye letterman, has been in the NFL for eight years, and in that time has amassed many honors, including appearances in the Pro Bowl five out of his eight professional seasons.

But one thing he hasn't done is earn a college degree. So Tippett is back at Iowa to finish 19 remaining credit hours and graduate.

"I don't like to leave anything undone," the 6-foot-3-inch, 241-pounder said. "In athletics, I've always finished what I started. But I didn't get my degree; it's been hanging over my head for the last eight years."

The ex-Hawkeye said he hopes to receive his bachelor's degree from the College of Liberal Arts in May and is taking classroom and correspondence courses to do that.

Partly because of an injury to the pectoral muscle in his right shoulder sustained against Green Bay September 1, Tippett decided that this semester would be the best time to return to the UI. He also wanted to complete his studies before the requirements for his major changed.

"I had the opportunity to come back — more so than in the last eight years — with the injury," Tippett said. "At this time, I'm usually getting ready for the Pro Bowl or working on other endorsements. I've never had the opportunity to come back.

"And I was told by the department that they're changing the requirements, so I figured I would come on back."

He added that since he made his decision, he's had a lot of encouragement from people at the UI, especially from Associate Athletic Director Fred Mims and the Athletic Student Services office.

"It's a great thing," Mims said of Tippett's return to campus. "We have a program to try to follow former student-athletes and encourage them to come back.

"... Too many people get caught up with their lives and don't come back," he said. "But we don't look at the time it takes for them to come back, we just look at it as they are coming back and getting their degree. That's the important thing."

Playing for the Patriots, it would have been simple for Tippett to complete school somewhere on the East Coast. But Tippett said he wanted to finish where he started.

"People talk about where their allegiance is," the Newark, N.J., native said. "Well, my allegiance is here. I didn't want to get my degree from somewhere else. It would have been easy to transfer to one of the colleges in Boston."

So what's it like to return to a place where you were a gridiron hero?

"A few people recognize me," Tippett said. "Some people say, 'I didn't recognize you with your glasses.' My ego isn't that big. If they recognize me, fine. If they don't, that's fine too."

According to Tippett, not very much has changed at the UI since he left in 1982.

"I'm a lot older, but (Iowa's) not a whole lot different," Tippett, who turned 30 in December, said. "Iowa City is still the same to me. There are a few new buildings, but it looks the same as when I first came here."

But even if Iowa City hasn't changed much since his college days, Tippett's life seems to have been altered quite a bit. Take, for instance, his income, which many people would like to take.

"Let's just leave it at a couple hundred thousand," Tippett said.

"... I've got some business deals with friends, and there are certain investments, like real estate," Tippett said. "When I leave the game, I shouldn't have to worry about making ends meet."

Tippett, the owner of a second degree black belt, said that when he was in his junior and senior years at Iowa, people told him that he would go in the first round of the NFL draft. That encouraged him to find out how much money he could make, and the result pushed him to work hard in football.

"You get a signing bonus, and maybe you'll get a contract for three or four years, maybe for two million over three years," Tippett said. "That's motivation for me. I was motivated by the opportunity to make that kind of money."

But, he added, it's best for athletes to concentrate on the level they're on before thinking seriously about a career in professional athletics.

And if athletes do make the pros, Tippett said, they have to keep working hard to earn their salaries.

"You've got to work, got to produce," Tippett said. "People tend to lose sight of that. Some guys are spending money before they're making it. Take care of business first ... Maintain your work ethic, and be honest with yourself."

A difficulty in making a lot of money, Tippett said, is learning how to manage it. And according to him, one almost needs to go to a special school to find out how to take care of finances.

"When you're in college, you're on your own, but at this level, you're really on your own," he said. "You're making money — you have to have the right representative, the right accountant firm with people who are good so they're not going to take advantage of you. If you don't have that, you'll end up bankrupt. It's a thinking process.

"You pick up your check every Monday. What are you going to do with it?" he said. "It's really scary. There's a lot of work, a lot of watching your back ... If you screw up, it can turn a successful career into a bad career."

After eight years in the pros, Tippett is one who knows what can ruin a career. But he has his own set of rules, and it seems to work for him.

"I do everything right," Tippett said. "I'm not into drugs ... I never burn my bridges. If I can't say nice things, I don't say anything at all.

"I love the game. Professional football becomes a business, but there is a little love there. I enjoy what I do out there ... I feel fortunate to be playing. In the past eight years, I've seen guys come and go. I've seen guys lose their careers over drugs, not play to their potentials and guys who just don't care."

Barring this past season's injury, Tippett has excelled in the NFL. But knowing that someday that career will end, he is beginning to think about his future.

According to him, people who think of professional football as lasting their whole lives are "not dealing with reality." He said that he is hoping to play for several more years, and then try to "steal" a couple more after that.

"Those of us who have been around six, seven, eight, nine, 10, 11, 12 years, that's a long time," Tippett said. "... I take one year at a time, but I tend to look ahead. If I stay away from injury, hopefully (I'll play) another four years, and then maybe I'll try to get two years after that."

And after that? "A little commenting," he said. "I saw that as something I could do and have fun doing it. I look at it the same way as I look at football — it's a challenge, but I know I have the equipment."

Tippett has appeared in the Pro Bowl five times in eight NFL seasons and has amassed many other professional honors.

"A few people recognize me. Some people say, 'I didn't recognize you with your glasses.' My ego isn't that big. If they recognize me, fine. If they don't, that's fine too."

Cook returns to UI: 'Football won't last forever'

Erica Weiland The Daily Iowan

Former Iowa football player Marv Cook might be a tight end for the New England Patriots now, but part of him will always be an Iowa boy.

"I love it here; I grew up here," the West Branch, Iowa, native said. "But being on the East Coast has been an eye-opening experience."

"It's great to be back in the Midwest, especially with all the friendly people."

Cook returned to his home state this semester to finish nine hours of classes and get his degree in business administration.

"I honestly realized the importance of a college degree once I got out," Cook said. "I knew that when I was here, but once I left I realized that football won't last forever."

Leaving the Midwest was difficult for Cook, and he found it a little hard to adjust to life on the East Coast. While he said he enjoyed the things Boston had to offer, he said it feels good to return.

"What I miss most is that all my friends are back here," Cook said. "I grew up with a lot of people, even from kindergarten, that I feel

"In college you play against good athletes; every once in a while you go up against someone who is a really good athlete. In the pros, everyday you face the greatest athletes."

Marv Cook Former Iowa tight end

I could trust with my life. To be in a situation where you don't know anybody is tough.

"New England has a lot of history, and there's a lot of hustle and bustle in a big city like Boston," Cook said. "There's a lot to do. But I didn't take advantage of all that ... I just dedicated myself to football."

And, he said, it took some adjusting to fit into the pros.

"In college you play against good athletes; every once in a while you go up against someone who is a really good athlete," Cook said. "In the pros, everyday you face the greatest athletes. With that high level of talent every day, you have to be at your best all the time."

The first time Cook played in a Patriots game, however, he didn't feel he was at his best.

"I was out for five weeks with an injured foot," Cook said. "I only practiced for two days (before the game), so I was nervous. I didn't have the confidence that practice develops."

Cook ended the season with 16 games, but no starts, under his belt, in which he caught three passes for 13 yards, forced one fumble and was the team leader in special teams tackles with 10 solos and 12 assists.

As for his job security in the future, Cook said there's no way to know.

"It's hard to say," said the 6-foot-4-inch, 234-pound tight end. "That's not for me to decide. I just have to do my best and if the Patriots think I'm good enough, great. If they don't, I'll find another job, use my college degree."

After returning to Iowa, Cook said it took about three weeks to get into a routine. But now he can compare himself to the person he was a year ago, before the NFL.

"I feel like any normal person," Cook said. "I've matured a lot, progressed. But my morals and values haven't changed. I have strong Midwestern ties, and I'll never break those."

Marv Cook was an All-American tight end at Iowa, and went on to play for the New England Patriots.

ANC may negotiate with South Africa

LUSAKA, Zambia — The African National Congress on Thursday conceded it could not step up insurgent actions inside South Africa, and said it may have to prepare for negotiations with the white-led government in Pretoria.

"The armed struggle must continue but looking at our situation realistically we must admit that we do not have the capacity within our country to intensify the struggle in any meaningful way," said ANC secretary-general Alfred Nzo.

Addressing the first session of a three-day gathering of the ANC national executive committee, Nzo said the black guerrilla group risked being "caught off balance" by political reforms introduced by President F.W. De Klerk.

South Africa's government was pushing ahead with reforms at a speed designed to outmaneuver the ANC and activists campaigning against the apartheid system of racial separation, Nzo said.

Nzo urged guerrilla leaders not to "trail behind events with our feet shackled by old perceptions and a fear to confront a new reality."

"We must break new ground and keep the initiative firmly in our hands," he said. "Unless we act quickly we will surrender the initiative to Pretoria."

The movement began a campaign of bombing and sabotage attacks in 1961.

One dead in airplane collision

ATLANTA — An Eastern Airlines jetliner landing here collided with a twin-engine aircraft that had already touched down late Thursday, killing one person and injuring another aboard the smaller plane, officials said.

The 7:10 p.m. collision between the Eastern Boeing 727 and a Beechcraft King Air 100 on a runway at Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport tore off much of the roof of the smaller plane.

Two male victims were taken to South Fulton Medical Center, one in stable condition and one dead on arrival, hospital officials said. The hospital did not have the names of the victims, officials said.

John Braden, airport spokesman, said both injuries occurred on the smaller plane, which carried no other passengers, and no injuries were reported aboard the jetliner. There were no reports of other injuries.

The collision involved Eastern Flight 111, which originated at LaGuardia Airport in New York, and a twin-engine executive-type aircraft flying from DeKalb Peachtree Airport on the edge of Atlanta to Hartsfield, said officials with the Federal Aviation Administration.

Two battleships may be mothballed

WASHINGTON — The Navy will propose that the USS Iowa and New Jersey, two of its four battleships, be mothballed as a cost-cutting maneuver in the next Pentagon budget, Defense Department sources said Thursday.

All four warships have become targets of budget cutters on Capitol Hill and elsewhere, but Navy brass — and the lawmakers from some states where the ships were to be based — have been fighting to retain the decades-old vessels.

"It's going to be proposed," one military source said Thursday. "It's going to be the Iowa and the New Jersey."

Another Pentagon official, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, said that while political pressure could result in a reversal of the decision the action "seems to be a fait accompli."

"I haven't seen the final paperwork on it, but it's as good as done," the official said.

Israel expects U.S. aid to continue

WASHINGTON — Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin wound up talks with Bush administration officials Thursday saying he had "reason to believe" U.S. assistance to his country would hold steady at $3 billion a year through 1991.

But Rabin registered concern beyond next year, saying Israel's budget is strained by a rising influx of Soviet Jews and increased Soviet weapons shipments to Syria, Iraq and Libya.

He also indicated that Secretary of State James Baker was unable to resolve a diplomatic impasse that is delaying Mideast negotiations on the future of the Israeli-held West Bank and Gaza.

"There are still gaps that remain between the Palestinians and Israelis," Rabin told Israeli reporters.

The key question is whether the Palestine Liberation Organization will have even an indirect role in the negotiations that Baker hopes to launch.

Bulgarian leader Zhivkov put under house arrest

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — Former leader Todor Zhivkov was put under house arrest and charged with abuse of power and fomenting ethnic unrest during his 34-year reign, the government-run news agency BTA reported Thursday.

The state agency also said opposition talks with the ruling Communists broke down Thursday over access to Bulgaria's broadcasting networks.

The prosecutor general's office issued a warrant for the deposed dictator, who was toppled in a November uprising, charging Zhivkov with malfeasance in office, inciting ethnic hostility and misuse of state property.

The 78-year-old Stalinist was not jailed, according to BTA, but was instead put under guard at an undisclosed location.

That makes him the second East Bloc leader now under official investigation for abuses disclosed by the upheavals that have convulsed Eastern Europe. Former East German party leader Erich Honecker, now hospitalized, faces a charge of high treason.

The charges against Zhivkov indicate he is being personally blamed by his reformist Communist successors for the nation's severe ethnic and economic problems.

Zhivkov was the author of so-called "Bulgarianization," the persecution and forced assimilation of the nation's 1.5 million ethnic Turks and other native Bulgarian Muslims, known as Pomaks.

After his ouster, Zhivkov was accused of corruption when it was revealed he had maintained at least 30 holiday and hunting retreats throughout this poor Balkan nation.

Zhivkov's often-violent, forced assimilation policy banned Moslem religious practices and required ethnic Turks and Moslems to forsake their own names and take Bulgarian ones.

Most of Bulgaria's 9 million people belong to the Bulgarian Orthodox Church.

More than 300,000 ethnic Turks emigrated to Turkey to escape the harsh Bulgarianization campaign, but about 80,000 later returned, citing lack of jobs and housing in Turkey.

The talks with the reformist government of party chief Petar Mladenov have foundered over the government's refusal to allow the opposition to use the electronic media to spread its democratic message throughout this mostly rural nation in advance of promised national elections.

"We are left with the impression that the delegation of the official authorities has no intention to carry (out) serious negotiations," said the Union of Democratic Forces, the umbrella grouping of opposition organizations, according to a statement carried by BTA.

SUPREME COURT

Demystifying tenure

In dismantling legal protection for secrecy in the tenure decision-making process, the Supreme Court has thrown a long-awaited bone to equal rights organizations nationwide, who have seen the court gradually retreat in recent years from two decades of civil rights protection and activism.

The court's finding, which requires universities accused of discrimination to surrender heretofore confidential "peer review" data, will doubtless be unpopular with college administrators and faculty — who, it should be pointed out, already have jobs. The decision represents a substantial change in the way they, the tenured, do business. Nevertheless, the woefully small number of tenured positions taken by minorities and women at the nation's universities deserves the court's greater concern.

Those who have nothing to hide have nothing to fear in this ruling. It does not abrogate the freedom of tenured faculty to express reasonable, objective and informed opinions about those who wish to join their ranks. It merely offers protection, and due process, to those who may have been unjustly slighted by what remains a predominantly white, male hierarchy. If anything, the court's finding should elevate the discourse by which tenure decisions are made, demystify the process, and ventilate the clubbish atmosphere of college faculties with the fresh air of accountability.

HEALTH

Oat bran bunk

The American public has allowed itself to be duped again. According to a study published in yesterday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, oat bran does not play a significant role in reducing cholesterol.

Oat bran lowers cholesterol, according to the Harvard researchers who conducted the study, simply because people use it in place of high-fat, cholesterol-rich foods.

Researchers are quick to point out, though, that there are many good reasons to consume oat bran. Its high fiber content, experts say, may stave off numerous health problems. High cholesterol levels, unfortunately, are not among them.

The upshot of the oat bran ruse is that those annoying zealots who trampled toddlers en route to the cereal aisle to snatch up the few remaining boxes of life-giving oat bran products have, typically, made asses of themselves.

In a society in which all things health-related seem to be done to compulsion, this is not surprising. Just as maven of musculature learned that running, weight-lifting and aerobizing — when done to excess — are hard on joints and may actually work to break down the body's immune system, those who consumed oat bran as a cure-all find themselves left in the proverbial cold.

And perhaps that is as it should be. All things in moderation.

PRAIRIE MEADOWS BAILOUT

Skewed priorities

On Monday, state Senator Berl Priebe, an Algona Democrat and chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, proposed that the state grant a two million dollar subsidy to Prairie Meadows race track in Altoona. Such a proposal demonstrates an irresponsible set of priorities and drastically poor judgment.

It is true that Prairie Meadows, which opened last March, is in financial dire straits. Last year the track lost more than $6 million and barely avoided being shut down. Priebe argues that Prairie Meadows is a valuable industry and is worthy of state assistance. Several hundred Iowans are employed at the track, and it provides a market for hay grown by Iowa farmers.

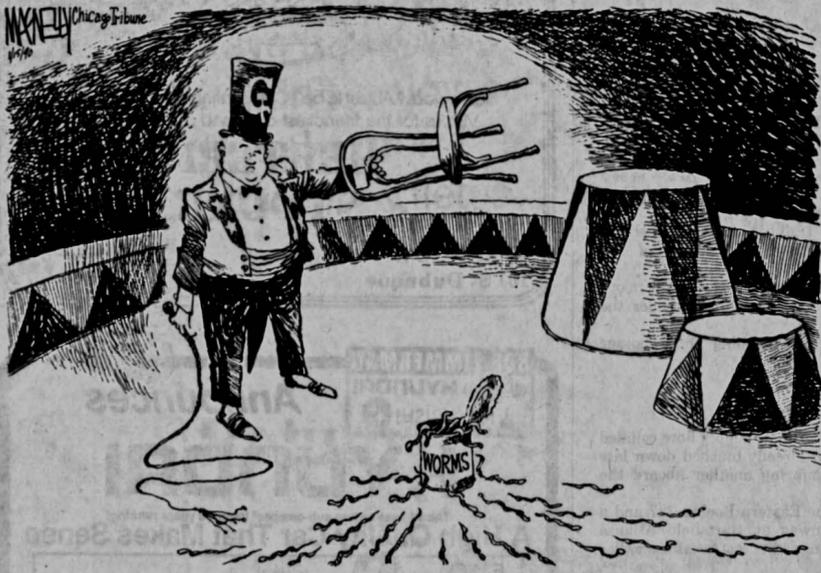

But most Iowans will not favor such a drastic bailout. Already a group of House and Senate leaders have expressed opposition to the subsidy, including Senate Minority Leader Calvin Hultman and House Speaker Don Avenson. Furthermore, subsidizing a gambling operation sets a dangerous precedent. Greyhound racing tracks are located in Council Bluffs, Dubuque, and Waterloo, and are facing stiff competition from tracks in neighboring states. In a few years they, too, may demand state assistance, followed by casino boats currently planned for operation on the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers.

But the more important issue in the bailout debate is the issue of legislative priorities. The three regent universities are currently plagued by fire-safety violations. Officials have estimated that Iowa State University will require almost nine million dollars to correct all of its safety deficiencies, while the UI needs five million. State Representative Wayne McKinney said that inadequate appropriations have left the three universities far short of what is needed for fire safety renovations. Until the violations are corrected, faculty and students will be taking their lives into their own hands every day.

Given the importance of fire safety, and the scarcity of funds in the state budget to bring university buildings up to code, how can Priebe justify spending two million on a horse track? Quite simply, he can't.

1990s to feature racial unrest, invasions, one more Kennedy

Editor's Note: Today's regular columnist is taking the day off to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of Jan. 19, 1970. In his place, his 8-year-old son "Billy" will draw some of his impressions of Winter in Iowa.

Editor's Note to the Editor's Note: The previous editor's note was not meant to be taken seriously, but was actually a reminder that the comic strip "Family Circus" still appears in several respected American newspapers. Please write your local newspaper (or if you live in Iowa City, the nearest newspaper you can find which actually publishes a Sunday edition) today and demand this strip be dropped as soon as possible. Also, turn in anyone you suspect of reading "Family Circus" to your local police — the eds.

Yes, the 1990s are here, and what a great decade it's been so far. Peace, prosperity, George Bush still alive and well and apparently not giving any important responsibilities to Dan Quayle, and no chance anybody's going to make a sequel to "Harlem Nights" anytime soon. It's almost enough to make one want to go out, buy a cup of sake and some sushi and party down.

Of course, the pessimists among us could point out several minor problems in this rosy scenario. Such as: We still have a trillion dollar deficit; Mikhail Gorbachev will be lucky to survive the year, much less the decade; half of our largest cities set records for murder rates last year; and "Doogie Howser, M.D." is currently the highest rated new show on television.

It's hard to predict what the next decade will bring. But if the Weekly World News can do it ("Scientists Predict Humans Will Begin Growing Extra Limbs in the '90s!"), we can, too. Here, then, are a couple of thoughts on what to look forward to in the next decade.

THE COMPLETE COLLAPSE OF THE AMERICAN ECONOMY. Everyone was predicting this would happen in the previous decade. But it didn't, largely because Ronald Reagan never seemed to care if it did or not, so eventually no one else worried either — and the American economy is a state of mind.

But George Bush is a hands-on president. When the stock market falls 1,000 points in a day, he'll become concerned. He'll form committees to study the problem, contact Congressional leaders to discuss the situation, go on T.V. to reassure the American public. This, in turn, will make everybody think the American economy really is about to collapse, which will spark a panic and cause investors to pull their money out of the market and put it into safe investments like gold and Phil Collins records. Consequently, the country will tumble into deep depression, leading to:

It's hard to predict what the next decade will bring. But if the Weekly World News can do it, we can, too.

MORE INVASIONS OF SMALL LATIN AMERICAN AND MIDEAST NATIONS. The Reagan-Bush doctrine of foreign policy intervention is based on the premise that the U.S. will use military force against any country which we can beat the hell out of and withdraw our forces within a couple of months. With the economy collapsing, the Bush administration will need to provide some distraction. Consequently, look for invasions of countries such as Nicaragua, North Yemen, and Belize in this decade.

INCREASES IN RACIAL VIO-

LENCE. A depressed economy will inevitably lead to more clashes between blacks and whites as they compete for scarce jobs. Look for more race rioting and violence, with the climax to come when a promoter holding a benefit for the millions of new homeless Americans mistakenly asks Guns N'Roses and Public Enemy to share the same bill.

EIGHTIES NOSTALGIA WILL BECOME HIP. With the economy in ruins, people will want reminders of the way things used to be. Nostalgia for the 1980s should begin about mid-decade, after '70s nostalgia (wide ties, Marie Osmond's comeback) has run its course. Eighties icons such as Donald Trump and Oliver North will be widely quoted in PBS retrospective series, and "Hill Street Blues — The Next Generation" will begin shooting.

Interest in the Cold War and the Soviet Union will also revive in the decade, as millions reminisce about "The Evil Empire" in the days before its collapse into perpetual civil war. Travel will increase to the new sovereign states of Lithuania, Georgia, and the popular new tourist haven of Turkmenistan. Travel to Russia proper, however, will be curtailed by the constant threat of Ukrainian terrorist bombings.

Back home, look for oldies stations to dominate the airwaves and more comeback tours by old rock bands such as Styx, Journey and Toto. Also, look for the return of oat bran.

A NEW STABILITY TOWARD THE END OF THE DECADE. Eventually, under the leadership of President Kennedy (Joe), America's economy will recover — thanks to the influx of cash from such newly-prosperous nations as Thailand, Czechoslovakia and Anzania (formerly South Africa). People will look at the 21st century with a new optimism and hope.

Then the ozone will collapse, and every life form on the planet will perish in a weekend.

Have a happy decade!

Remembering IMU, the way it used to

Upon the recent renovation of the Iowa Memorial Union, perhaps the ladies and gentlemen of the board should have chosen another name to match the bold, new decor — the Iowa Memorial Marriott, or perhaps the Iowa Synthetic Union. Either would be an appropriate homage to the plexiglass pylons and terra cotta columns which now flank the insides of what has been affectionately called "the heart of campus life."

I am not going to argue in defense of the old IMU. It reeked of everything and anything circa 1958-1962: a nauseating accumulation of things orange, brown and olive green. The carpeting (60 percent rug, 40 percent cigarette burns) was held together by duct tape, as was the furniture.

Still, there was a spirit to this old hub. Something collegiate. Something that resembled the dorms we lived in. Something funny and comfortable and ours.

Now I walk into the Iowa Memorial Union and immediately I think of internships, convention centers and Metropolitan Home. A squiggly line of neon pink leads to the entrance of the Bijou. Why is there a squiggly line of neon pink leading to the entrance of the Bijou? Is this a comment of film and/or mixed media? Is this a comment on contemporary interior design? Or is this an extra bit of neon left over from the Union Station sign downstairs?

The Bijou used to be located in what felt like an old junior high school auditorium. This was the flavor of the old IMU — delapidating, though not without character. Now students flit through the Union to charge a cup of java (that's espresso, not express) or a $15 "Mom-will-pick-it-up" lunch at the State Room.

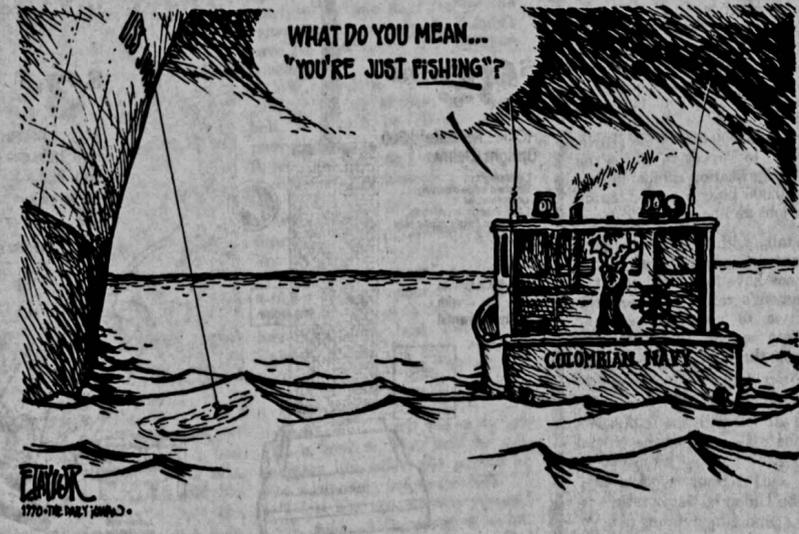

The State Room, by the way, hasn't always been so haute couture. In the past it was a glorified River Room, with student waiters the only difference. But, throw in some dried flowers, funky lighting, an overstuffed couch; throw in a French chef who serves pieces of chicken the size of one's big toe, spruced up with herbes de provence you could buy yourself at the New Pioneer Food Co-op, and voilà! You've got an exclusive restaurant fit for any student's U-bill.

Is this what our parents want? We may not do so well in, say, astronomy, but we can take on any artsy Manhattan cafe roped and gagged. Maybe they should put in a Crabtree and Evelyn next door.

If anything, our new Memorial Union is simply a memorial to a fleeting era. The high-tech, pseudo-art-deco design may well be scoffed at by the end of this decade.

I am not opposed to change; I only want to know who is doing the changing. I look at our fancy, aesthetically pleasing Union and cannot conceive of studying or relaxing there. I look into the "heart of campus life" and see administration. A shopping center. A building that should be connected to all others by catwalks. I see a heart that is beating too fast.

Attorney Jean Gits, center, has a smile on his face as McMartin preschool molestation case defendants, Peggy McMartin Buckey and her son, Raymond, right, are acquitted Thursday.

Mistrial declared in McMartin molestation case

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Preschool operators Raymond Buckey and his mother were acquitted Thursday of 52 child molestation charges in the nation's longest and costliest criminal trial, inciting outrage among parents of youngsters in the case.

Jurors deadlocked on 12 sex-abuse counts against Buckey and a single conspiracy count against him and his 63-year-old mother, Peggy McMartin Buckey. Superior Court Judge William Pounders declared a mistrial on those counts and dismissed the deadlocked conspiracy charge against McMartin. He set a January 31 hearing to determine whether the 13 unresolved counts will be dismissed against Buckey.

Announcement of the innocent verdicts brought gasps and sobs in the packed courtroom.

Buckey, 31, who spent nearly five years in jail because of the charges, and his mother, who was jailed for almost two years, cried as the verdicts were read.

"I've gone through hell and now we've lost everything," McMartin said outside court. "My concern was for my son and what they've done to him... because my son would never harm a child."

"I feel wonderful," said Charles Buckey, father of Raymond and husband of Peggy. Raymond Buckey avoided reporters and slipped out of the courthouse with his lawyer.

About an hour after the verdicts were announced, parent Jackie McGauley said: "I'm still in shock."

Parent Mary Mae Cioffi added: "I am really disappointed. The anger is beginning to rise. We have programs all over the country that tell children to run and tell when somebody hurts them, and our children told. Some of them spent 35 days on the stand and they get a 'not guilty.' It shows that our justice system needs a revamp for kids."

"I know my children were molested. I had my daughter sleep between my husband and I for a whole year because she was so afraid somebody would come and get her, that they would kill her, because she told," she said.

Currently Donatable Organs and Parts

Source: The National Organ Procurement and Transplantation Network AP/Karl Tate

Breakthrough may solve transplant organ rejection

SAN ANTONIO (AP)—Researchers have prevented the rejection of transplanted organs by altering the immune system so that the organs don't appear to be foreign, according to a new study.

The technique has been used only in laboratory animals so far, but it promises to be a vast improvement over current methods of preventing organ rejection in humans, says one of the study's researchers, Dr. C. Garrison Fathman of Stanford University in California.

The success of heart, kidney and liver transplants is limited by the ability of researchers to suppress the body's defenses — so they don't reject the organ — while leaving enough of those defenses intact to prevent infections and cancer.

"It's trading one disease for another," Fathman said Wednesday at the American Heart Association's annual science writers' forum.

A heart transplant, for example, cures heart disease, but the immune system suppression leads to infections that often require hospitalization, Fathman said. Sometimes the organ is rejected despite efforts to suppress the immune system.

In the new technique, treatment is given before the transplant, rather than after.

A specially developed antibody is used to wipe out the white blood cells called "helper T" cells. These are the master control cells of the immune system. (They are also the cells attacked by the AIDS virus.)

The organ transplant surgery is then performed. In the ensuing weeks and months, the helper T cells return, but in the course of their return they are "educated" not to destroy any of the body's own tissue.

In the course of that "education," the cells learn to recognize the newly transplanted organ as the body's own tissue, not as foreign tissue.

Otherwise, the immune system is perfectly normal and can protect against infections as well as it could before the transplant. The immune system is not suppressed.

One of the technique's peculiar advantages is that even though the new cells are changed to recognize the transplanted organ as the body's own, they retain the ability to protect against infections that they have already fought off.

The technique would not, for example, destroy the lifelong immunity to childhood diseases such as measles or chicken pox, Fathman said.

He and his Stanford colleagues have done heart transplants on 25 rats and only two have rejected the transplants, he said.

Research is under way to find human versions of the antibodies so that trials of the technique can begin in humans, Fathman said.

So far, none of the antibodies tested has shown the same effects on human cells, but the researchers are confident that effective human antibodies will be found, he said.

Bush to address nation's need for more education programs

WASHINGTON (AP) — President George Bush, in his State of the Union address, will call for national education goals guaranteeing pre-school programs for disadvantaged 4-year-olds and requiring states to halve dropout rates by the end of the decade, according to draft documents.

Bush and the nation's governors, who will join him in promoting the goals, agreed in September at the conclusion of the education summit in Charlottesville, Va., to establish specific guidelines, with timetables, to improve learning in the nation's schools.

They have been hurriedly working on a consensus in preparation for both Bush's State of the Union on January 31 and the National Governors' Association meeting in February.

In a memo obtained Thursday by The Associated Press, Bush's domestic policy adviser, Roger Porter, said specific objectives backing up the goals will be announced and approved during the February 25-27 NGA convention.

"I believe that we have satisfied the criteria we set for ourselves of producing goals that are limited in number (5-6), memorable, measurable, ambitious, and yet realistic," Porter told Govs. Bill Clinton of Arkansas and Carroll Campbell of South Carolina in his memo.

"These goals are ambitious, yet they can and must be achieved," said the draft memo. "However, they cannot be achieved by our education system as presently constituted. Substantial, even radical changes will have to be made."

According to the documents, the national goals will focus on six key areas, all targeting measurable progress to the year 2000. The areas are: school readiness, student achievement, international performance, high-school completion/dropouts, adult literacy and lifelong learning, and safe, disciplined and drug-free schools.

Specifics of the goals include:

- Making sure that all disadvantaged 4-year-olds have access to preschool programs that help prepare them for school and that they have the nutrition and health care needed to arrive at school with healthy minds and bodies.
- Requiring each state to reduce its dropout rate by at least half, on average, and making sure that 75 percent of those students who drop out of school will successfully complete a high-school degree or its equivalent.
- Decreasing by at least half the gap in high-school graduation rates between American students from minority backgrounds and their non-minority counterparts.
- Tripling the percentage of high-school students who complete a rigorous curriculum including proficiency in English, mathematics, science, history, geography, foreign languages, and computer sciences.

Indiana holds off Hawkeyes, 83-79

Fifth loss is latest chapter

Bryce Miller
 The Daily Iowan

Writers are running out of ways to describe it. Slipped away. So close. Heart-breaker. They all seem on the mark, but basically, No. 14 Indiana's 83-79 win over Iowa Thursday night at Carver-Hawkeye Arena was chapter five in the Hawkeye book of getting close and coming away empty.

Coach Tom Davis' club is winless in the last five games, including the first four games of the Big Ten. Iowa dipped to 8-6 overall, while the Hoosiers became 13-2, and 3-2 in the league.

"We could use a couple of easy games," Davis said, "to try to get a little confidence for the ball club and get them on track, because they're doing a lot of good things."

Iowa-ISU to clash for third time

Hawks try for 3-0 mark against rival 'Clones

Kerry Anderson
 The Daily Iowan

It won't be just another college wrestling meet when Iowa State comes to town to tangle with the No. 3-ranked Iowa Hawkeyes Saturday ... of course, it usually never is.

But when the seventh-ranked Cyclones invade Carver-Hawkeye Arena at 1:30 p.m., they will have to face an Iowa squad that has already beaten them twice this season.

In fact, both Hawkeye victories came within 24 hours of each other at the National Dual Meet Championships held in Hampton, Va., last weekend.

Talk about your mental roadblocks.

Iowa first met Iowa State in the quarterfinals, where they handed the Cyclones their worst dual meet defeat in 39 years, 32-2. It was the lowest output of points registered by an Iowa State wrestler team since being shut out by Oklahoma State on Feb. 27, 1951.

The Hawkeyes won nine of those 10 matches, giving up the two points when Mark Reiland battled to a 1-1 draw with the Cyclones' highest ranked wrestler, second-ranked Steve Hamilton at 158 pounds.

The Hawkeyes were pitted against their intrastate rivals again in the consolation round at Hampton, and managed to churn out another win 24-13. The outcome wasn't as dominating as the previous matchup, but it was the second victory over a ranked team by Iowa in a 24-hour span.

After the second loss, ISU coach Jim Gibbons was naturally upset, but somehow managed to make light of Iowa's superiority throughout the tournament.

"We might as well just invite them into our practice room and workout for a week," he said.

Maybe. With the two wins under their belt, Iowa seems to have little to worry about come Saturday. But, as any fan that has followed the often heart-stopping Iowa-ISU wrestling tradition can attest, any-

Iowa's Hamel takes time off to play in European professional league

Erica Welland
 The Daily Iowan

Kari Hamel is about to do something that no other Iowa volleyball player has done — play professionally in Europe.

"She is the first Iowa player ever to play abroad, and I think only the second player ever to play abroad from the state of Iowa," Iowa volleyball coach Ruth Nelson said. "I think it's the most positive thing for Kari, and it's an opportunity for her to relate what she's learned this season."

"I'm really excited," Hamel said. "It will be a great experience ... I didn't know if it was in the cards or not."

Hamel, a graduate student in the School of Journalism and the 1989 Hawkeyes' lone senior, will be leaving Saturday to play for a team in Belgium.

Although she is looking forward to the experience, there is one small adjustment Hamel will have to make — her teammates will be speaking French.

"I took (French) all through high school and a little bit at Iowa," Hamel said. "But I don't speak it very well ... I'm a little uncertain because I don't speak the language fluently."

She was contacted by the team around the time the second semester began, after being recommended for the position by a Big Ten coach. Hamel couldn't say which school the coach was from, except that it wasn't Nelson.

The Dubuque native will return to the U.S. in May and plans to complete her studies at Iowa.

"I got a leave of absence for a semester," Hamel said. "I don't like leaving school, but I consider this a life experience. I'll have a better insight about a whole different part of the world. Then I'll return and pick up with my career aspirations because my career is very important to me."

"It will be four months in the heart of Western Europe. That's not too long, but not too short. And I plan to spend many, many, many hours in museums. I'll probably stay more in shape from walking around museums than from working out."

Headin' north

Stringer's Hawks looking for solid road win

Rita Helmes
 The Daily Iowan

After a brief, two-game stint at home, the Iowa women's basketball team is on the road again, traveling north to Minnesota for an evening game tonight.

The Hawkeyes, 10-4, are looking to boost their sagging conference record, which stands at 2-2 after losses to Michigan State Jan. 5 and to No. 7 Purdue last Sunday. The latter defeat dropped Iowa from 10th to 13th in national rankings.

Minnesota was predicted to finish last in the conference by a preseason poll of the Big Ten coaches. Currently 6-8 overall and 1-3 in league matchups, the Gophers are out of the cellar and tied for seventh with Michigan.

With no single superstar to speak of, Minnesota is a balanced and experienced team, sporting three starters with double-figure scoring averages and six seniors on the roster.

Iowa coach C. Vivian Stringer called the Gophers "big and physical" and said her Hawkeyes will have to be careful and take them seriously.

"I don't want Minnesota to prove what I know, at our expense," Stringer said. "That is, that they're a very fine team, capable of upsetting anyone."

Leading the Gophers is 5-foot-9 guard Jodi Olson, who is averaging 14.7 points per game. Olson is hitting 42 percent of her shot attempts from beyond the three-point line, and making 94 percent of her free throws.

Also contributing to the Minnesota scoring attack are forwards Jennifer Hall and Ellen Kramer. Hall, a 5-foot-10 senior, averages 14.3 points per contest, while the 6-foot Kramer contributes 13.5 points.

Iowa will need to see accurate shooting by its perimeter players, guards Jollette Law and Stephanie Schueler, and forward Franthea Price. The Hawkeyes shot a cool 33 percent from the field in their matchup with Purdue, a statistic which cost them the game.

"It's like we all of a sudden got tight and hesitant," Stringer explained. "We've got to let it flow, run and be free ..."

The Gophers will be playing their first game after the announcement Monday that Minnesota head coach LaRue Fields is resigning.

In her three years at Minnesota, Fields has compiled an overall record of 22-47, and is 10-30 against Big Ten opponents. Her resignation is effective June 30.

Macklin verbally commits to Stringer's hoops squad

Rita Helmes
 The Daily Iowan

Iowa's sixth and final scholarship for the 1990-91 women's basketball season will likely go to Antonia Macklin, one of the nation's top five recruits.

Macklin, who was named a first team all-American at Boston English High School, verbally committed Monday to play for the Hawkeyes next year, according to Alfreda Harris, Macklin's AAU basketball coach and mentor.

The 5-foot-9 forward/guard is, in Harris' words, "lightning quick," with strong leaping ability. Macklin currently averages 23.5 points, nine rebounds and six assists per game for her Boston team.

"She's very quick," Harris said. "She can shoot outside and take it in on you."

Harris was also the coach of former Iowa players Michelle "Ice" Edwards and Robin Christian, and she compared Macklin to Edwards in speed and leaping strength.

Since Iowa has only received a verbal commitment from Macklin, coach C. Vivian Stringer was unable to comment on the player.

According to Harris, Macklin was also sought by such schools as Texas, Rutgers, Penn St., Florida A & L, and Minnesota. But, Harris said, Macklin "definitely will be coming" to Iowa.

Swimmers, divers display positive side of academia

Erica Welland
 The Daily Iowan

With all the recent media attention given to athletes who fail at academics, the Iowa women's swimming and diving team is proof that at least some student-athletes are still students first.

Led by senior sprinter Becky Anderson and her fall semester grade point average of 4.15, the team (5-3 overall and 1-2 in the Big Ten) is represented on the Dean's List by seven athletes. Each athlete needed a grade point average of 3.5 to receive that honor.

According to Iowa Women's Sports Information, Anderson carries a 3.96 cumulative GPA in electrical engineering, followed closely by sophomore diver Katy Ketoff at 3.94 in pre-medicine. Their other academic statistics include:

■ Seven team members who have a cumulative GPA of 3.5 or better.

■ Fifteen Hawkeyes with a cumulative grade point average of 3.0 or higher.

■ Twenty-four of the 31 women with cumulative GPAs of 2.7 or higher.

"The kids did a good job; we don't have anyone ineligible," Hawkeye coach Pete Kennedy said. "We try to (encourage them), but you have to have kids who can do it."

"If your time is organized reasonably, you soon find that your whole life becomes orderly," Kennedy continued. "When I swam, my grade point was always higher when I was competing because I learned to budget time ... I think the kids have developed that."

Women to show tans, training in semester's first dual meets

Erica Welland
 The Daily Iowan

The test for the Iowa women's swimming and diving team members this weekend: Did they gain more than just tans spending their winter breaks in Hawaii and Florida?

Tonight when the Hawkeyes travel to Wisconsin and Saturday when they host Northern Illinois at 1:30 p.m. in the Field House Pool will be the first tests for the team after the winter training trips.

The coaches of the team seem to think the Hawkeyes are prepared. But, they say they're not too concerned with the outcome of this weekend's meets.

"We're concentrating on nothing but Big Tens," coach Pete Kennedy said. "That's our main goal right now; we'll just use these meets as guidelines ... The kids are looking good. We're ready for a meet; we need one as a guide to where we are."

According to Kennedy, Wisconsin's performance may be affected by a couple of unknowns: three Badger performers will be returning after sitting out for the first semester; Wisconsin is coming off their winter training session in Colorado, where they "swam good times for being in altitude," Kennedy said.

The Hawkeyes have their own unknowns in the injury situation. Senior sprinter Becky Anderson and freshman distance freestyler Angi Todt may or may not be competing this weekend. Anderson suffered a shoulder injury during the Hawaii trip and Todt came down with mononucleosis last semester and is still getting back into shape.

"Wisconsin is stronger this semester," Kennedy said. "Right now it looks like a highly-competitive meet ... On paper, it could be a close one."

As for the Northern Illinois contest Saturday, Kennedy said he doesn't expect a tough battle and might

Northwestern suspends three hoopsters

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Three Northwestern basketball players, including starter Brian Schwabe, were suspended for the Wildcats' Big Ten game at Minnesota Thursday night, Coach Bill Foster said.

Schwabe, Rob Ross and Don Brotz were suspended for one game following their involvement in an on-court incident during Tuesday's practice, Foster said. He would not provide details of the incident.

All three will rejoin the squad Friday in East Lansing, Mich., where Northwestern will play Michigan State on Saturday.

Schwabe, a 6-foot-9 center from Mercer Island, Wash., is Northwestern's third-leading scorer with a 10-point average per game. He was replaced in the starting lineup Thursday night by 6-8 sophomore Kevin Nixon.

Indiana swim coach calls it quits

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — James "Doc" Councilman is retiring as Indiana University's swimming coach, the school announced Thursday, ending a 33-year career in which he became the sport's most renowned coach.

Councilman's teams won six straight national titles and ran a string of 20 consecutive Big Ten championships, winning 23 conference titles in all.

A former captain and Big Ten champion at Ohio State, Councilman arrived at Indiana in 1957 from Cortland State Teachers College in New York. The Hoosiers captured the first 20 straight Big Ten titles and later won three consecutive titles starting in 1983. In 1968, the Hoosiers began a string of six national titles.

Sugar Ray relinquishes WBC title

NEW YORK (AP) — If Sugar Ray Leonard fights again, it won't be as a champion.

The 33-year-old Leonard has relinquished the World Boxing Council super middleweight title, which he defended with a 12-round unanimous decision over Roberto Duran on Dec. 7 at Las Vegas.

Mike Trainer, Leonard's attorney, told The Associated Press from his Bethesda, Md., office Thursday that he had informed Jose Sulaiman, WBC president, of his decision.

NCAA revamps college football rules

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The NCAA Football Rules Committee has voted to reduce the width of goal-post uprights from 23 feet 4 inches to 18 feet 6 inches and to allow the defense to advance a fumble that happens in or beyond the neutral zone.

The committee, which met this week in Kansas City, decided to reduce the goal-post widths due to the increased accuracy of kickers on field goals and extra-point attempts, and to provide more balance between the offense and the defense.

Other changes included:

- Penalizing teams five yards for not being in the team area or beyond nine yards of the participants in the coin toss.
- Prohibiting markings on towels on the front of players' pants.
- Shutting off the 25-second clock during the last 25 seconds of each quarter.
- Requiring forward passes to be immediately released in order to conserve time.
- Approving a 15-yard penalty and disqualification for persons subject to the rules who intentionally contact an official during a live or dead ball.
- Deleting the exception that allowed defensive players to pull or grasp offensive players in order to let teammates block a kick or reach a runner.
- Prohibiting commercial advertising on footballs.
- Permitting arrows to indicate the direction of opponents' goal lines next to field numbers.
- Establishing the length of inbound lines at 24 inches.

"I'm not really worried about Saturday," he said. "At a meet we saw them in, they weren't swimming very good."

Assistant coach Jim Sheridan said he feels that the team is ready by the way the women responded to their training in Hawaii and the increase in their levels of confidence.

"They're not under and upper classmen now; they're a team," Sheridan said. "They're helping each other in training. If someone is off, someone else is there to pick them up. The rest of us have to pick up the slack. That's the kind of confidence they had in themselves."

thing can happen when these teams square off on the mat.

"We usually match up pretty close to Iowa State," Iowa coach Dan Gable said. "But in Virginia, we didn't need to get fired up to win the close ones. I guess that shows how good my people are. I think that was the difference when we wrestled them."

"The Cyclones came back and made it a much closer match in the consolation round, and that is something that concerns Gable going into Saturday's dual.

"I've got a lot more work to do than I thought," Gable said. "But it's more mental work than physical."

"You go out there and put them on their back as often as possible.

and Greg Graham each hit two of two free throws from the line to seal the win.

Anderson led Indiana with 18 points, while Iowa center Les Jepsen was the game's high scorer with 21 on nine of 12 shooting, in addition to a game-high 10 rebounds.

"Les was just outstanding," Davis said. "He just did everything he could to keep us in the ballgame."

Indiana got a scare when Anderson recorded his fourth personal foul with 14:22 left, but the Hoosiers survived without him for nearly 10 minutes.

"We played really well without Anderson in the ballgame," Indiana coach Bobby Knight said.

"We got more time than I thought we'd ever be able to get with Anderson with four fouls."

"They did a great job," Anderson said of his teammates. "It didn't seem like they missed me too much."

A career-high 13 points by point guard Troy Skinner, including a 3-point shot with :02 left got Iowa to 81-79, but Graham drained the free throws.

"This is probably Troy's best game as a point guard," Davis said.

After starting the season 8-1, Iowa players are getting tired of hearing the words "close" and "improvement."

"We lost," said Iowa forward

Ford leaves Tigers; settles for $1 mil.

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Clemson's Danny Ford, armed with a $1 million settlement, resigned Thursday and ended an 11-year coaching tenure that brought the Tigers national prominence and NCAA penalties.

Ford's resignation comes less than two weeks after the NCAA informed Clemson, the top football power in the Atlantic Coast Conference, of 14 alleged rule violations committed between 1984 and 1988 by the football program.

The 41-year-old Ford said he would "cooperate and participate with Clemson" in responding to the NCAA inquiry, which must be completed by March 12.

"I deny any wrongdoing on my part," Ford said Thursday. "And I am confident that an impartial review of the facts will so prove."

In his 11 years as coach, Ford had the third best winning percentage among active coaches, having led the Tigers to a 96-29-4 record, including a 6-2 mark in bowl games, and the 1981 national championship.

In agreeing to leave Clemson, where he spent 13 seasons as a head coach and assistant, Ford will receive $190,000 a year for the next three — and possibly five — years and $100,000 to pay off the mortgage on his farm.

The school did not immediately name a replacement for Ford, and an athletic department source said it may be a week before a new head coach is named.

The also said Ford may have been forced to resign, pointing to comments made by one recruit who said Ford told him "the only way he'd get away from Clemson is if they fired him."

Athletic Director Bobby Robinson praised Ford for his accomplishments but said there had been some conflicts between the two men.

"We have honest differences of opinion on certain basic aspects of the football program," Robinson said. "A separation under any terms would be difficult. An amicable parting is certainly less painful for all involved."

"That is why we felt it was in the university's best interests to agree to a fair settlement under the terms of Ford's contract and bring the matter to a close."

Neither Ford nor Robinson would be available to comment further, a school spokesman said. Attempts to reach Ford at his home were unsuccessful.

Ford's resignation had been rumored since the NCAA outlined the specific rules allegations facing Clemson on Jan. 5. The NCAA has said one Clemson coach gave a player up to $150 on at least two occasions and told him to distribute the money to "selected" players. At least six coaches also are charged with a variety of recruiting violations.

Clemson officials have refused to say how many of the coaches named in the 15-page NCAA report are still on the staff.

This is not the first time the NCAA has investigated Clemson. In 1982, the program was placed on two years' probation after the NCAA uncovered 70 rules violations that occurred between the 1976 and 1982.

Charley Pell was the Clemson coach until the end of the 1978 season, when Ford took over.

Gymnasts to face tough competition

Pat Axmear
The Daily Iowan

It might be early in the season but the Iowa men's gymnastics team will already be facing some strong competition, including all the Big Ten teams, at the Windy City Invitational at Chicago, Ill., today and Saturday.

"We're not putting a lot of pressure on the guys for this meet," assistant coach Mike Burns said. "It's still early in the season. This should be a good meet to get the ball rolling."

"It's run similar to NCAA meets. This is the last time we will compete in compulsories until the Big Tens."

Also competing in the meet will be Northern Illinois, Illinois-Chicago, Kansas State, Iowa State and Western Michigan.

Iowa's toughest competition should come from Minnesota and Ohio State. Both teams scored 274 points in their last meets to Iowa's 272. Although it does give them a slight advantage over the Hawkeyes, the variation in judging in the two meets should take away from the difference in the scoring.

"A gymnastics meet is not all that physically hard, it's really the mental attitude that's tough," Burns said. "We've pushed them hard all week. Since we got back from the San Jose meet, the guys haven't had a day off."

Hawkeye senior Jeff Dow is the defending champion of this meet.

Tennis team starts spring season

Jim Kearney
The Daily Iowan

After completing a successful fall season, Iowa women's tennis coach Micki Schillig has high hopes for her team this spring.

The team's first test of the season will be today through Sunday at the Gopher Doubles Invitational in Minneapolis.

The three-day meet will be a round-robin doubles tournament that will not count on the teams' win-loss records. The coaches will instead use the meet to evaluate different combinations of doubles teams.

Team point totals will be kept, but they won't be critical, according to Schillig, since doubles teams can be switched around each day.

"Scoring is really not the important thing since, at times, we may not have our top players playing together," she said.

The team will take nine players to the meet, including senior Liz Canzoneri who garnered 14 doubles wins last year, and Madeleine Koorman, a newcomer to the Hawkeye squad, who is considered one of Holland's top-ranked players.

Canzoneri had an 8-2 doubles record during the fall season, while Koorman posted a 5-3 mark.

Minnesota, Nebraska, Northwestern, Marquette, and Drake will also participate in the meet.

Sophomore Tracey Donnelly, another youngster on the Hawkeyes' early roster, thinks the Iowa team will put together a good showing in its spring season opener.

"We've got some good doubles combinations and getting Catherine Wilson back will be a big addition," Donnelly said.

Wilson, a sophomore from Abilene, Texas, sat out the 1988-89 season with a knee injury after posting a 22-12 doubles record as a freshman.

Another returning player who sat out a majority of the 1988-89 season due to a wrist injury is Susan Evans. The junior won seven doubles matches as a sophomore, and has won four matches already this year.

The spring season consists of the Big Ten meets and more dual matches than the fall, which was mostly a tournament season.

The Hawkeyes are picked fifth in the Big Ten coaches poll.

Women kick off indoor season at Purdue

Pat Axmeer
The Daily Iowan

With cross country season long over, the Iowa women's track team is now prepared to get the indoor season started with the Purdue Invitational in West Lafayette, Ind., today.

"It seems like days and days have gone by since we've been at a meet," Iowa coach Jerry Hassard said. "I'm real excited about this meet. We're a little in the dark on how strong we really are. This meet should show us."

The Hawkeyes will face Big Ten rivals Purdue and Michigan State to give them somewhat of a preview of the conference teams. Although this is supposed to be a low-level meet, the teams might be tougher than Iowa expects.

"This may be a stronger meet than I anticipated," Hassard said. "The purpose of the meet is to see more Big Ten schools and see more of that kind of competition."

"We're going to test ourselves to see how well we can race. This competition will give the athletes a chance to push themselves."

Depth isn't a problem when it comes to Iowa's middle and distance runners, who include members of the cross country team which finished second at the Big Ten Championships. But on the other side of the coin, the sprinters and hurdlers now feel it's their turn to prove themselves.

"Competing for the first time this year) is tougher, but it's also better in a way; our adrenaline is really flowing," sprinter Amy McReil said. "(Assistant) coach (Jim) Grant brought back new training ideas from a conference that are helping our performances. That, plus our added enthusiasm, should really make the difference."

"This meet will be a place to start so I know where I'm at and I can plan my way for the rest of the season," McReil continued. "There will be pretty good competition. We're looking for a good place to start the season... hopefully we'll do well."

LSU coach hypes game to benefit the homeless

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Dale Brown is trying to out-hype the Super Bowl. And for a good cause, too.

The Louisiana State basketball coach, who never met a superlative he didn't like, is working overtime to sell out the Superdome for Saturday's meeting between his 13th-ranked Tigers and Notre Dame.

Brown doesn't want a full house simply to root on his Tigers. He's worked out an arrangement where the proceeds from ticket sales will be turned over to Comic Relief to help the homeless.

With the Super Bowl coming to town next week, Brown is pulling out all stops in his effort to pack the Superdome.

"This is going to be one of the greatest events in the history of college basketball," Brown said. "Notre Dame isn't having its normal season but you can bet they'll be primed for this one. It's not only going to be terrific basketball, it's going to be a major happening. This is history in the making."

Called "Superdome II: Hoops to Help," the game is expected to break the regular-season attendance record of 54,312 set last year when LSU upset Georgetown 82-80 at the Superdome. Brown also hopes to break the overall record crowd of 64,959 set in the 1987 NCAA championship game between Indiana and Syracuse, also at the Superdome.

Thursday Iowa Notebook

Absent-minded:
When the Iowa women's basketball team returned to Carver-Hawkeye Arena last weekend after five games on the road, the Hawkeyes not only lost their game to Purdue, coach C. Vivian Stringer suffered a temporary memory loss. Trying to get into the team's locker room, Stringer forgot the combination and had to have an assistant coach open the door... In other women's basketball news, Molly Tideback, a 6-foot-3 sophomore center from UCLA has begun attending to Iowa and is expected to play for the Hawkeyes second semester next year.

'Nervousness' a wealth of ideas

Jim Bernard
The Daily Iowan

"This is always finished," announced a rather plain sign on The Drawing Legion's set for their current show "American Nervousness." It was an ominous statement for a play/performance art/multi-media event that hadn't even begun. Then, a deep voice posed questions to the empty stage, perhaps beginning the performance. But then an actor appeared and answered the queries. People kept filing into the theater. The house lights were still up. I began to wonder if this show might keep beginning for an hour and a half.

The lights finally went down and the show was clearly in progress. "American Nervousness" is a very difficult show to classify. It is bizarre enough to be thought of as avant-garde. The show stretches the dimensions of theater, painting, sculpture, and technology. But even though it pushes those limits, "American Nervousness" doesn't alienate its audience. It refused to become a chaos of new toys and gadgets by complementing its quirky aspects with substantial thought that was accessible even through an unfamiliar medium. It was weird but not nearly incomprehensible.

This is due in part to the wealth of ideas and stories that "American Nervousness" is all about. It explores the lives of three midwestern artists, Effie Cherry, Winsor McCay and Thomas Hart Benton. Background is almost all that the artists share; each one is very different. In tracing their lives, the show touches on art history, morality, and aesthetics. The three different ideas of what makes "good art" are skillfully transposed by the action of the show and the constantly changing set.

And what a set it is! The set did marvelous things all night long. It became alive, changing at will and dictating the action as well as responding to it. The Drawing Legion used the set and used it and used it some more until there was nothing more that the set could do. But of course there was more.

The only on-stage actor is Mel Andringa, who plays an artist who is suffering from some sort of psychological problem. Andringa is terrific as the bewildered artist who takes on the persona of the historical characters Cherry, McCay and Benton. In these roles, Andringa paints, draws, sings, plays the harmonica and perfects a confused look toward the absent psychiatrist (F. John Herbert) who diagnoses Andringa as having a case of American Nervousness.

The disease, American Nervousness, results from good ol' modern American progress. Herbert points out that it is spreading with the possibility of affecting everyone, even Europe. The only way to get rid of American Nervousness is to get rid of America, it seems. It's a curious disease that propagates itself and contaminates everything. The rigorous attempts to rid Andringa of the affliction are comical, but in his own words, "it's just not working."

The idea that modern culture has created its own disease is tremendously satisfying. We are a nation built on hamburgers and linoleum, both of which cause some sort of sickness. We can not separate ourselves from the culture trap that has made us what we are, which the doctor obviously wants Andringa to do.

"American Nervousness" doesn't make an obvious claim about how the disease affects the artistic side of the union. It resists the temptation to take a conventional way out and end on a moment of theatrical importance. Instead it keeps the form of the show consistent from beginning to end. It finishes in a manner as unusual as it began.

Parsons' performance: 'dynamism, fireworks'

Kathleen Hurley
The Daily Iowan

If you only attend one cultural event of the year at the UI, buy your tickets to the David Parsons Dance Company — the "must attend" performance of the year. Dynamism born from fireworks can only describe the feeling of the upcoming Hancher Auditorium performance Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. David Parsons, the Zeus of modern dance, presents life, not just physical art.

"My inspiration for choreography comes from the media, TV and mostly daily life," Parsons commented. "Lots of people really like my stuff because they can directly relate to many aspects." "Envelope," for example, always an audience favorite, is a comical piece of an envelope refusing to be discarded. "A lot of people are 'pushing paper' all day, and 'Envelope' really strikes them in a quirky way. My choreography connects with the masses. I get a lot of slack for that sometimes, but —" Parsons shrugged.

The big hubbub of this weekend in particular is "Simply So," a world premiere of the Parsons Company. Commissioned by Hancher Auditorium, the work plays with gestural movements such as saying "yes" and "no" or shaking hands in greeting. Parsons described "Simply So" as "very abstract but using pedestrian gestures as a common conceptual basis. The movement grew from the rituals of life such as eating lunch, talking to friends, or dealing with children." While creating the piece, Parsons comically experimented with the concept of how creatures from another planet would execute the same movements.

"The piece shows not 'normal' dance as audiences expect, but rather makes use of particular shapes and ideas," said company member Jamie Martinez.

Costumed by modern painter Alex Katz and set to music by Leslie Stuck, "Simply So" promises to be a highly entertaining and memorable part of the evening. Other featured works will include "Caught," in which Parsons defies gravity with leaps leaving no inch of the stage virgin, and "Scrutiny," a piece relating to the paranoia of being watched.

Parsons and his six dancers are known for extremeness of vitality and connection with the audience. Quickly gaining renown while still in the Paul Taylor Dance Company, Parsons now can brag of attracting the national spotlight of fame for choreography not only for his own company, but also for other artists such as Mikhail

Dance

Baryshnikov and Rudolf Nureyev. The enthusiastic response from Parsons' appearance in the UI Dance Gala '88 generated the Hancher commission instigated by Hancher Director Wallace Chapel.

"We'd really like to thank Hancher for the commission," Parsons asserted — art does not grow from air, as any New York artist can affirm.

It would be easy enough to label Parsons as another glowing contemporary artist and easy enough to label the show a "must attend" performance, but the difference lies in the actual humanness in Parsons' dance. In a pre-performance rehearsal held at Halsey Gymnasium at the UI, not only were the dancers rehearsing counts and spacing — but they were practicing to make you remember why you enjoy art in the first place, practicing to make you feel the thud inside your chest and practicing to wake you up to the world. Here lies the profoundness of dance: with not a word spoken, the Parsons Company speaks of life, sometimes comically sometimes intellectually, but always real "you and me" life.

Tickets for the Friday and Saturday performances of the David Parsons Dance Company at 8 p.m. are $20 and $18 for general audiences, $16 and $14.40 for UI students and senior citizens, and $10 and $9 for young people 18 and under and are available at the Hancher Box Office.

Eckert ready for heck of a 'Nacht'

Martina Brockway
The Daily Iowan

Tenor Rob Eckert, a former student of the UI School of Music, wants people to realize that they continue to be in a moment. This ambiguous comment perhaps best represents Eckert's ideas behind his creation of "Diese Nacht Ist" ("This Night Is"), a guest recital that will be held Sunday at 8 p.m. in Harper Hall in the Music Building. Eckert wrote and directed "Diese Nacht Ist," which incorporates six works including Eckert's own creations and some traditional musical repertoire. Eckert hopes the audience will be pleasantly surprised by this presentation, which can best be described as performance art.

"It sort of rides the lines between recital/concert and theater, and it never quite decides what it is," says Eckert.

Eckert, a classically trained tenor who also plays the violin and electric guitar, was last heard on the UI campus in Verdi's "La Traviata" and Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Pirates of Penzance" in the summer and fall of 1987. He has studied and performed in New York and currently lives in Seattle where he is active in opera, theater and various new music scenes. He has performed with the Pacific Lyric Opera, the Seattle Pro Musica and the Bellevue Repertory Theater. Eckert credits Seattle as having the ideal creative atmosphere for him to work on songs, poetry, and the novel he has been writing.

Eckert is the son of Robert Eckert, UI professor of voice, and the brother of Rinde Eckert, who recently appeared in Paul Dresher's "Power Failure" at Hancher Auditorium.

The six works presented in "Diese Nacht Ist" will include "Dichterliebe," a song cycle by Robert Schumann, accompanied by pianist William Palik; "I Tré Tenori" ("The Three Tenors"), an operatic scene written and accompanied by Eckert, who will play the Concerto in A minor for violin by J.S. Bach; "Raga for the Defenseless," an East Indian-influenced creation; "Three Songs," a combination of songs by Italian opera composer Vincenzo Bellini and Eckert; and "John and Betty," a dramatic scene written by Eckert.

UI music and theater students Eric Jones, Joseph Spann, Michael Rulli, Dawn Bach and percussionist Rodney Hanson will collaborate with Eckert in this performance. The evening will be hosted by Mr. Contracting Universe, played by Jones. He represents yet another abstraction in Eckert's creation.

Champ challenges city to promote 'Chess'

The Daily Iowan

In anticipation of the performances of the rock musical "Chess," January 25-27 in the UI Hancher Auditorium, two-time Iowa collegiate chess champion Jonathan Kolber will challenge all comers in a simultaneous chess playing exhibition, 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, January 20, in the Old Capitol Center in downtown Iowa City.

Chess players of all levels of ability are invited. Participation is free, and Kolber's opponents are required only to bring their own chessboards.

Puppet theatre brings 'Rabbit Tales' to town

Jacqueline Comito
The Daily Iowan

Puppets and marionettes go back to earliest times providing popular folk entertainment since the dawn of drama. They were usually seen in traveling shows presented in temporary open-theaters. Eulenspiegel Puppet Theatre, founded in 1974, is an Iowa City continuation of this prevalent art form.

Tonight and tomorrow, the two-woman troupe will present "Rabbit Tales." The show, taken from two of the rabbit trickster tales common in world folklore, will be enhanced with musical interludes by Stuyvie Eagle. The first, "The Lion in the Well," is adapted from an African-American tale and will be performed with rod marionettes. The second, "The Adventures of Great Rabbit," comes from a Native American tale using a combination of hand and shadow puppets.

Although the technique of shadow puppetry has been around for centuries, this is the first time puppeteers Teri Breitbach and Monica Leo are adding the skill to their repertoire. Flat cutout characters are backlit behind a finely woven screen. Barely visible rods attached to an arm and a leg bring the figures to life.

The combination of puppets and folktales speaks to something that is very deep in the human psyche. "If they didn't, they wouldn't have been around as long as they have," Leo stressed. "They wouldn't continue to stay."

Staying true to the tradition of their art, the collaborative team takes their show on the road. The ideal audience, according to Leo, is a combination of elementary students to adults. The Midwest and western audiences usually have such a gathering, whereas the West Coast age groups are usually too young for the material.

Eulenspiegel Puppet Theatre is trying to build a season to take them off the touring circuit and place them in Iowa City to stay. "Rabbit Tales" is the second show in their 1989-90 program. Performances are tonight at 7 p.m. and Saturday at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. in Old Brick, 26 E. Market St. Admission is $3 at the door. The event is sponsored in part by a grant from the Iowa Arts Council and the Iowa Department of Cultural Affairs.
