Ortega concedes defeat

Chamorro wins with 55 percent vote count

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega assured the world Monday the Sandinistas will accept the voters' verdict and surrender power, after more than a decade, to an opposition alliance formed only six months ago.

"We leave victorious because the Sandinistas have sacrificed, spilled blood and sweat, not to cling to government posts, but to bring Nicaragua something denied since 1821," he said in a dramatic dawn speech broadcast nationwide.

Ortega spoke hours after it was clear the electoral tide was against him and Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, publisher of the opposition newspaper La Prensa, would be the next president of this battle-scarred nation, which has in the past decade become one of the poorest in the Western Hemisphere.

"People wanted a change," she said as she headed for a victory celebration at her campaign headquarters.

With 82 percent of the precincts counted, Chamorro had 633,357 votes, or 55.2 percent, to 468,040, or 40.8 percent for Ortega, the Supreme Electoral Council said. The coalition also won a majority in the National Assembly.

Chamorro is to take office April 25 and the transition could be difficult, given the bad blood between winners and losers.

"It's going to be a bit harder than the normal transition," said Alfredo Cesar, one of Chamorro's closest advisers and a former leader of the Contra rebels. "That means the two sides ... will sit down and make sure the transition is accomplished in a peaceful manner."

There was elation at the White House. "In this year of political change, democracy won another victory," President George Bush said in a statement, and officials said lifting the U.S. economic embargo was under discussion.

Ronald Reagan, in whose administration the Contras were organized and went to war, issued a statement saying: "The people of Nicaragua and the cause of democracy have won an impressive and important victory."

Court bans gays from military

Homosexuals seek help from Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. military's general ban on homosexuals survived two Supreme Court appeals Monday.

The court rejected appeals by a woman denied re-enlistment in the Army Reserve in Wisconsin because she is a lesbian and by a California man released from active duty in the Navy because he is gay.

The court's refusal, without comment, to review the Pentagon ban leaves open the possibility the justices could agree in some future case to review a policy that says "homosexuality is incompatible with military service."

But groups seeking expanded gay rights said they have a better chance of getting help from Congress.

"There are other remedies for us to take care of this deeply irrational policy," said Peri Jude Radevic of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force. "We've had a great deal of congressional interest in this. Within the next year, you'll see some good things coming from Congress."

Nan Hunter of the American Civil Liberties Union said, "The refusal to allow lesbian and gay Americans to enlist in the military constitutes what is probably the most blatant example of official discrimination by the federal government today."

The high court rejected appeals by Miriam Ben-Shalom, 41, who has been a sergeant in the Army Reserve in Milwaukee, and James Woodward of Spring Valley, Calif., who was ousted from active duty. See Ruling, Page 5

Bush wants to eliminate trade barriers

WASHINGTON (AP) — President George Bush hailed Violeta Chamorro's upset election in Nicaragua as a "clear mandate for peace and democracy" Monday, and his spokesman said Bush wanted to lift U.S. trade sanctions that have hobbled the country's economy.

Bush said the vote to oust leftist President Daniel Ortega "moves us one step closer to the day when every nation in this hemisphere is a democracy." He called for a peaceful transfer of power from the Sandinista government that has ruled for 10 years.

who tried to overthrow the government, Bush said, "Given the clear mandate for peace and democracy, there is no reason at all for further military activity from any quarter."

There were immediate calls in Congress for aid for Chamorro's government, which is to be inaugurated April 25.

"We must provide her new government with aid, and let's not kid ourselves — it will take big bucks," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. "Nobody said democracy was cheap," said House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Dante Fascell, D-Fla.

However, others cautioned that. See Bush, Page 5

UNO's challenge: smooth transition

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Beating the Sandinista Front in general elections may have been the easiest task of the United National Opposition, a fragile coalition that managed to stick together until it achieved its goal.

UNO now faces the even tougher challenge posed by victory: how to make a smooth transition of government after 10½ years of Sandinista rule and work out a durable peace with its foe.

"This is the first time in Nicaragua's history that the opposition wins and that there will be a peaceful change of government," President-elect Violeta Barrios de Chamorro said in what amounted to an acceptance speech early Monday.

Bar owners to receive sentencing

The Daily Iowan

Former Iowa City bar owners Harry Ambrose and Larry Regennitter, convicted in December of federal drug charges, are scheduled to be sentenced this week.

Both past owners of the College St. Club, 121 E. College St., will appear in U.S. District Court in Cedar Rapids December 7 for charges of conspiracy to distribute cocaine and 10 other drug-related charges.

Ambrose will be sentenced today, and Regennitter will make his court appearance Wednesday at 9 a.m.

Ambrose could face a maximum sentence of 131 years in prison, and Regennitter could receive up to a 40-year sentence; in addition, the two may be fined a total of $6 million.

U.S. District Court Judge David Hansen will deliver the sentences.

Two hospitalized in truck accident

Jamie Butters
The Daily Iowan

Two people sustained injuries and a light pole was knocked over in a traffic accident on Riverside Drive shortly before 10 p.m. Monday night, according to eyewitnesses.

The two people were taken by ambulance to UI Hospitals and Clinics. Hospital officials would not comment on their condition.

The truck accelerated quickly while turning south from Burlington Street onto Riverside. The truck went into the right-hand lane, over to the left lane and back across the right hitting a concrete wall and the lamp post, according to Melanie DeCock, who witnessed the accident.

The truck, an old gray and red Chevrolet with a topper, came to a rest about 40 yards south of the intersection turned around almost 180 degrees.

Burned out

Appeals court upholds conviction of American flag-burning demonstrator

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A U.S. appeals court on Monday upheld the conviction of a demonstrator who burned an American flag, but the justices did not rule on the constitutionality of a new federal law outlawing flag burning.

A federal judge in Seattle the law unconstitutional and the Justice Department said Friday it would appeal directly to the Supreme Court.

The demonstrator in Monday's case, William Charles Cary Jr., was sentenced to three months in prison and fined $25 for his role in the flag-burning during a March 18, 1988, protest against U.S. involvement in Honduras.

The demonstration in Minneapolis was outside an armed services recruitment center and the blazing flag was thrown into the occupied center, the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals noted.

Cary appealed, challenging the constitutionality of the federal statute that prohibits flag burning, which was passed after the U.S. Supreme Court struck down a similar Texas flag desecration statute as unconstitutional because it suppressed free expression.

In Monday's 2-1 decision, a panel of the 8th Circuit said Cary's conviction was justified by the federal government's interest in halting and preventing further breaches of peace in front of its Armed Services Recruitment Center.

The court noted that it was not affirming the conviction on the same grounds on which the lower court based its ruling. It said the lower court appeared to have upheld the constitutionality of the flag statute based upon a government interest in protecting the flag as a national symbol.

After Cary lit the flag, he threw it into an alcove of the recruitment center.

According to the 8th Circuit opinion, written by Judge Frank Magill, the demonstration in Minneapolis attracted several hundred people opposed to the government's decision to send 3,200 troops to Honduras.

The court said the demonstration turned violent in front of the recruitment center, as protesters broke windows and shot Roman candles through them.

After Cary lit the flag, he threw it into an alcove of the recruitment center, the court said. Several other people rushed to put it out because of fears that the flames might ignite the occupied building, the court's opinion said.

"Cary's conduct demonstrated an intent to convey his disagreement with American foreign policy in Central America," the court wrote. Therefore, the court said, Cary's conduct was in the realm of free expression protected by the First Amendment.

"However, unlike (the Texas case), the government's interest in preventing breaches of the peace is implicated by the facts in this case. . . . because of the ongoing violence, there was an immediate threat that the burning would encourage the violence to continue," the court wrote.

Dentistry college fined for violations

Brian Dick
The Daily Iowan

Five months after the Iowa Occupational Safety and Health Administration ruled that the UI College of Dentistry exposed employees to an unsafe level of ethylene oxide, the agency again fined the college almost $13,000 for failing to correct the problem.

The February 19 charges follow a recent two-day investigation in which OSHA investigators found that violations identified in the College of Dentistry's sterilization room last fall had not yet been corrected.

The OSHA violations total $12,960 and must be corrected by March 25.

A former technician in the College said ethylene oxide — a chemical linked to cancer in laboratory animals and commonly used in the sterilization of laboratory instruments — was being vented into the dental clinic's immediate atmosphere in dangerous levels from sterilization equipment.

Pete Bobb said he alerted OSHA to the possible violation on July 1, 1989, after he began feeling ill after working with sterilizers and sterilized instruments at the College.

Low ratio of minorities at UI questioned

Minority recruitment and retention — a subject which has plagued colleges nationwide for over 20 years — will be the topic of discussion tonight at 7:30 in the Union Illinois Room.

Five panelists, including UI Associate Vice President for Academic Affairs Phillip Jones and UI Black Student Union President Greg Kelley, will discuss minority issues facing the UI and possible solutions at a public forum sponsored by the Liberal Arts Student Association.

LASA member Courtney Maxwell said a significantly low minority retention rate at the UI prompted the panel discussion.

"The University is doing a pretty good job at recruiting minority students, but they're not doing a very good job at keeping them," Maxwell said.

Representing the UI administration's efforts toward recruitment and retention, Jones said that minority enrollments at the UI have been increasing over the last several years, but the number of minorities taking longer than four years to graduate is also increasing.

"In general, 50 percent of all students do not graduate in eight semesters, but the number of minorities graduating in eight semesters is lower than that — under 50 percent," Jones said.

"The numbers for minority students graduating only begins to approximate the rate for the general student body when you compare five- and six-year graduation rates," he added.

This trend may indicate that more minorities are dropping out, Jones said, but added that the figures may be deceiving.

"These figures do not account for people who transfer to other schools or for people who leave and come back later," he said. "This does not mean that 50 percent dropped out because they failed."

Citing a study which showed that by the year 2000, one in every three people entering the work force will be non-white, Jones said colleges and universities need to improve the accessibility of higher education.

"Given the increase in the proportion of non-white people in the workforce, the need for increasing the educational attainment of all citizens becomes imperative for the economic stability of the country," Jones said.

"The issue is not recruitment, but graduation rates," Jones added. "Recruitment is only worthwhile when you look at graduation rates, because what we really want is to graduate more people."

Kelley said the UI has a long way to go to improve minority retention rates.

"Too many students I know personally have not stayed at the UI not only for academic reasons but because of social and cultural inequities," Kelley said. "A lack of support has made some people leave."

In addition, Kelley said the UI has fewer minority students than Iowa State University in Ames, though the UI has a larger enrollment.

"The UI is larger and ISU is further removed from a major metropolitan area," Kelley said. "There is no excuse for the lack of higher numbers of people of color on this campus."

Kelley said the UI needs to put "its money where its mouth is" in order to improve minority representation at the UI.

"The African-American cultural center draws a lot of people to the UI because they are impressed that the UI has a cultural center, but the center is seriously underfunded," Kelley said.

For example, the center needs new paint and more frequent trash collection, he said.

"I would like to see a university-wide commitment where articulate concerns for people of color on campus are represented in every department," he said. "People have been giving this a lot of lip service rather than doing anything."

Jones and Kelley will be joined on the panel by UI Student Senate President Pepe Rojas-Cardona, UI Associate Athletic Director Fred Mims and UI Associate Director of Admissions Kathryn Bassett.

Proposed budget to maintain, initiate programs

Tonya Feit
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Council plans to use the 4.8 percent increase in property taxes suggested in the proposed 1991 budget to maintain current service levels and also to initiate new programs.

"The increase will allow us to do new things such as adding staff at the library and introducing Community Service Officers, plus countless other small services," said City Manager Stephen Atkins.

Within the proposed budget, many fees and charges will also increase to meet the growing number of state and federal environmental regulations, according to Atkins.

The proposed budget will be presented to the public at a public hearing tonight.

The following are highlights of the proposed budget:

- $292,214 for economic development which includes an appropriation of $200,000 for a city-owned and-operated industrial park. This represents an increase of $209,344.

- $210,000 for finance administration. The $2,100 for a newly initiated city informational newsletter is included in this budget, which increased by $8,151.

- $2,187,952 for non-operational administration costs such as aid to human service agencies, funding for the Johnson County Council of Governments and airport levies. This year's budget included funding for the civic center remodeling project, so this budget represents a decrease of $801,697.

- $360,147 for cover engineering expenses including the salary for a new full-time landfill engineer. This is an increase of $25,121.

- $118,661 for cover remodeling expenses of the downtown plaza playground and central business district maintenance costs. This budget will increase by $15,326.

- $1,513,017 for street maintenance including brick street repair and curb ramp installation. This is an increase of $60,935.

- $3,300,545 for police services including administrative costs and community services. Two new com- munity service officer positions and installation of radar in all marked vehicles are new projects funded by this budget which will increase by $292,303.

- $2,601,715 for fire services including a new fire training/public education officer and an annual payment to the county for the area-wide hazardous materials response team. This represents a $145,552.

- $196,911 for costs associated with the first full year of operation for the Iowa City-Coralville Animal Shelter. This is an increase of $13,119.

- $2,698,234 for housing assistance including funds for 62 units of existing public housing and the voucher and certificate assistance programs. This is an increase of $118,037.

- $1,238,064 for recreation services. This represents an increase of $46,044.

- $1,652,718 for library expenses including funds for two new staff positions. This budget will increase by $139,868.

- $2,181,788 for operation of metered and ramp parking. This budget is self-funded with an increase of $61,928.

- $5,962,322 for pollution control such as sewage treatment. This represents a decrease in funds of $679,436.

- $3,006,571 for water service and preparation of a comprehensive water resources plan to determine the need and desirability of additional well capacity. This represents an increase of $160,135.

- $2,912,387 for cover refuse collection and landfill expenses. The rates for collection will increase to $7.50 per month to cover the cost of a new program of separate yard waste pick-up. This budget includes an increase of $600,052.

- $2,136,833 for transit services. The property tax subsidy has declined to $1,068,332 due to increased state aid. The budget represents a decline of $150,195.

- $63,000 to cover the salaries and operating expenses of the mayor and city councilors. This is an increase of $1,935.

Men receive 360 days in jail for indecent contact with girl

Kelly David
The Daily Iowan

Two men accused of indecent contact with a 12-year-old girl were sentenced to 360 days in Johnson County Jail Friday.

The two men, Nam Thanh Lam, 28, and Peter Kangah Anshah, 28, were charged with third degree sexual assault last October and each later pleaded guilty to indecent contact with a child.

Lam, 409 Dakota Trail, Iowa City was charged with third-degree sexual abuse October 5 after he allegedly had sex with the girl in a trailer, according to Johnson County District Court records.

Anshah, Iowa Lodge, West Highway 6, Coralville, also allegedly had sex with the girl on another occasion after offering her a can of soda. He was charged with third-degree sexual abuse October 4, according to court records.

The men's sentences included two years probation at the Sixth Judicial District Department of Corrections where they will be required to participate in sexual abuse counseling.

Anshah was given credit for the 62 days he already served at the Johnson County Jail.

Sixty days of the each men's jail sentence was suspended, according to court records.

Both were ordered not to contact the victim.

A man and woman were charged with third-degree theft Friday after they allegedly tried to steal an answering machine and a telephone from Sears Roebuck and Co., 1600 Sycamore St., according to Johnson County District Court records.

The defendants, Teresa L. Anderson, 28, 515 N. Division St., Davenport, and Michael C.G. Nelson, 37, 811 17th Ave., Rock Island, Ill., reportedly abandoned the items in the lingerie department when they realized they were being watched by a security guard, according to court records.

The items were valued at $149.86, according to court records.

Preliminary hearing in the matter for both defendants is set for February 23, according to court records.

- A 41-year-old Iowa City man was charged with assault causing injury Sunday after he allegedly struck another man twice in the mouth, according to Johnson County District Court records.

The defendant, John G. Bowdre, 2608 Bartelt Rd., Apt. 2B, was reportedly admitted striking the other man during an argument, according to court records.

Preliminary hearing in the matter is set for March 14, according to court records.

- A Davenport man was charged with second-degree criminal mischief Sunday after he allegedly forced open an elevator door, according to Johnson County District Court records.

The defendant, Roland A. Evans, 22, 1309 Perry St., reportedly caused an estimated $600 damage to an elevator in the Downtown Iowa City Holiday Inn, 210 S. Dubuque St., according to court records.

Preliminary hearing in the matter is set for March 15, according to court records.

One-Eyed Jake's replaces Dooley's

Susan Stapleton
Special to the Daily Iowan

Once located above The Airliner, Dooley's Dancin' and Drinking used to be Iowa City's alternative dance bar. Black was the dress color of choice, and patrons danced to music from groups like Depeche Mode, Hoodu Gurus, Book of Love and The Cure.

But last December, Dooley's closed its doors and One-Eyed Jake's took over Dooley's once-familiar 1820 S. Clinton location.

Calling itself "Iowa City's only student-owned and -operated bar," the bar employs many former Dooley's employees.

UI senior Mike Porter, who is now the owner, worked at Dooley's for two years as a bartender, bouncer and management assistant before deciding to buy the bar.

"The owner of Dooley's wanted out of the bar business. He offered the place up for sale and I just kind of fell into it," Porter said.

One of the first things Porter did upon taking over the bar was close the dance floor. Extensive remodeling has kept the upstairs closed off, and Porter said it may be another month before it reopens.

This development has pleased some of the bar's patrons, who would rather do without the Dooley's regulars who used to be attracted by the progressive music. "The crowd is more pleasing. The upstairs is closed off to the artsy, black-dressing crowd," said UI senior Brian Brundige.

"There's a whole new crowd," agreed manager Eric Schweers. "There are some regulars from Dooley's, but more of a diversified crowd than before."

Porter said the dance floor has been raised and moved in front of the window, "so people walking by on the street will be able to see the dancing."

The students who run One-Eyed Jake's are also trying to attract business by catering to students on a budget, Schweers said.

"We use cheaper prices and a wide selection of alcohol to attract a bigger crowd. We want students to come in for our prices but we still want to be classy," he said.

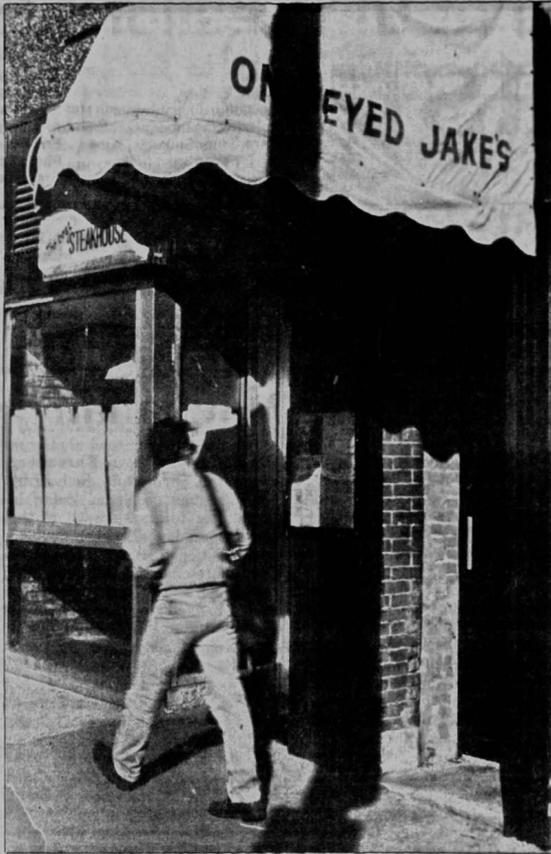

One-Eyed Jake's is targeting an older crowd, enforcing a policy of only admitting patrons who are 21 and older.

"With an older crowd you get more regulars and they come in earlier in the day," Porter said.

"Maybe after the dance floor opens, we'll let (under-aged patrons) in," he said.

Last month, comedian and piano man Darryl Lee was brought in to provide live entertainment — something Porter tried soon after opening the bar to see how the customers would react to the idea.

"Of business thus far, he said, "We're holding our own."

Iowa Senate soon to debate anti-crime bill

Ann Marie Williams
The Daily Iowan

An anti-crime bill will soon be up for debate in the Iowa Senate as part of the legislature's overall effort to combat drug abuse and address prison overcrowding in the state, according to Iowa State Senator Richard Varn, D-Iowa City.

The bill, developed in the Senate Judiciary Committee, includes these key provisions:

- longer supervision of repeat drunk drivers.
- no bail on appeal for convicted drug dealers.
- increased penalties for all drug transactions within 1000 feet of a school.
- increased penalties for selling drugs in a park.
- establish penalties for injuries caused by drunk drivers.
- parental notification when minors are found in possession of alcohol or drugs.
- closer surveillance of property offenders in the community.
- increased penalties for gang activities.

Varn said the bill targets certain crimes with harsher penalties without implementing across-the-board mandatory minimum sentencing, which contributes to overcrowding in the state's prisons.

"There is also a greater interest among constituents to do more about the drug problem in a comprehensive fashion," said Varn, who is chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee that created the legislation.

Varn added that the bill was developed in conjunction with several other spending acts that address drug education, treatment and rehabilitation.

"I think there is adequate support for passing what's in the bill," Varn said.

Varn said Iowa is currently a leader among states because of its effective corrections policies, and passage of the anti-crime statutes would keep the state in the forefront.

The bill may be brought to the Senate floor for debate later this week, Varn said. If passed, the anti-crime package will go into effect on July 1, 1990.

Senator Jean Lloyd-Jones said she strongly supports the bill.

"I think it's a good bill. It's very thoughtfully drawn up," Lloyd-Jones said.

"There's no excuse for separation." Those were the words of speaker Diane Hightower, coordinator of campus programs, who lead a discussion Monday night in Hillcrest Residence Hall in honor of Black History Month.

The program, entitled "Currents, Portraits in Black and White," showed a segment from the television show Currents that focused on racial and cross-cultural coping mechanisms of five Rutgers University students.

Shawn Shaw, the Hillcrest resident assistant who organized the program, said it is vital that we have awareness and education in our society to survive.

"It's important to remember we live in a racist society," said Shaw. One example of separation that exists on the UI campus is within the greek system, said Hightower.

There is a division between white fraternities and sororities and the black fraternities and sororities, but Hightower said the separation is not necessarily a conscious choice of the UI students.

"Sororities and fraternities are separate but not because it is a decision to do that; much of it is due to our history," Hightower said.

UI student George Stock said he attended the program because of a lack of self awareness.

"I realized there is a lot that I have overlooked," Stock said. "Just because I don't see racism doesn't mean it isn't there."

Debaters ferret out pros, cons of greek system

Laura Allen

About 200 people gathered at Shambaugh Auditorium Monday night to hear a debate on whether or not the greek system should be abolished.

"Based on the first amendment, Americans have the freedom of association," said UI senior Cary Stamp, arguing for keeping the greek system. "(This) means we can form groups with people who have the same values, beliefs and ideas, with people we have a common bond with."

The debate was inspired by a Spike Lee speech two weeks ago at the UI, according to organizer Ben Attias. In his speech, Lee advocated abolishing the greek system.

Although some of Monday's debaters are members of the greek system at the UI, they advocated their positions only for the purpose of debate.

"Various fraternities and sororities are implicated in dangerous and juvenile hazing incidents resulting in many injuries and deaths," said UI junior Tom Prichett, arguing against the system.

Prichett said the greek system promotes racism and sexism. In addition, he said over 60 percent of date rapes occur in fraternity houses.

"At the University of Mississippi a fraternity stripped their pledges, wrote KKK on their bodies, and dropped them off on an all-black campus," Prichett said. "At another university a fraternity had their pledges paint themselves black, wear black masks and sing Jackson Five songs. These are clear reasons why we should abolish the greek system."

"Sororities and fraternities are a necessary function on a college campus," panelist Paul Kenney said. "The friendships and social events are an important part of college life."

"There are four reasons why the greek system should not be abolished," Kenney added. "These are: philanthropies — an unselfish contribution to society, leadership, responsibility and social interaction."

Kenney said his own experience with the greek system was positive. He said the main benefit was the brotherhood he has experienced.

Mary Peterson, UI Coordinator of Campus Programs, acts as a UI adviser for greek organizations. In an interview Monday, she defended the greek system.

"Obviously, I do not think the greek system should be abolished," Peterson said. "One of the reasons is that those kids are students first, and being greek is just one of the things they chose to be involved with on campus."

NICARAGUAN ELECTION

You don't say

Who woulda thunk it?
Sunday's election victory for Violeta Chamorro and the UNO coalition is indeed surprising, almost as surprising as her 3-2 margin of victory over President Daniel Ortega. And altogether, the victory package gives nearly ironclad proof that the balloting was free and fair. Would the Sandinistas fix an election and lose?

Daniel Ortega and the Sandinistas may have lost this election, but the fairness of the process that unseated them is their victory. Ortega may be no saint, but assuming an orderly transfer of power, history may remember him with kinder thoughts than had he won.

As for George Bush, Chamorro's victory is yet another political jackpot for his resume; one more triumph for self-rule to which he contributed not one iota, specious claims of Contra aid and embargo pressure notwithstanding. A lucky thing, too. With the Panama invasion, Bush squandered virtually all of his available moral capital in Central America.

One thing Bush is sure to learn: Foreign aid to rebuild a nation is less expensive, in real dollars and sleeplessness, than trying to overthrow it. A foreign aid package for a UNO-led Nicaragua, a fledgling democracy in our own hemisphere, deserves sober and immediate discussion.

To the disinterested observer, the history of American involvement in Latin America is a history of exporting chaos to an already chaotic land.

For today, the people of Nicaragua have triumphed over chaos in all its forms, foreign and domestic.

NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION

Lingering threat

Easing tensions between the Soviet Union and the United States have moved the threat of nuclear war from a first concern on the international agenda to somewhere far down the list.

But there is still a very real possibility of a regional nuclear conflict, one which does not directly involve the superpowers — and France's sale of a nuclear reactor to Pakistan last week certainly won't help.

Pakistan for years has tried to develop a nuclear capability to keep up with its sometimes-hostile neighbor, India. Pakistan is currently ill-equipped to develop such a weapon, but a nuclear reactor will provide them with the trained personnel, materials and tools necessary to begin research and development.

France's actions demonstrate a marked lack of vigilance on behalf of a Western democracy to keep nuclear weapons from proliferating. For years nuclear powers have agreed to keep weapons-grade fissionable materials, and the facilities to make them, out of non-nuclear countries. France has made a troubling departure from the conventional wisdom.

With tensions rising in the Middle East and Southeast Asia, the threat of a regional nuclear conflict is still very real, despite easing superpower tensions. Placed in the wrong hands, nuclear weapons lose their deterrent effects and lead to instability. Nuclear powers around the world must continue to act responsibly, especially by refusing to directly or indirectly aid the development of nuclear weapons in volatile parts of the world.

NEGATIVE CAMPAIGNING

Wrong way, Ron

If Democratic National Charirman Ron Brown isn't careful, his party will turn into a little brother of Lee Atwater's GOP. Brown's defense of a Florida gubernatorial candidate who pledged to turn a recent murder case into "Willie Horton — only worse" is tasteless . . . and stupid.

On February 14, state representative Bill Nelson attacked Gov. Bob Martinez and the state's early prison release program, citing the recent murder of two Dade County police officers. A parolee with a 20-page police record, who was released in the governor's program to ease prison overcrowding, is the chief suspect in the shooting.

The judge in the case scolded Nelson for endangering the defendant's right to a fair trial, and Nelson has since withdrawn the Street-Horton comparison. Nevertheless, he says he will continue to question Martinez's early-release program in his campaign to unseat the incumbent.

Many Democrats criticized Bush's Willie Horton ad campaign, saying it was racist — and it was. It also worked, and for that reason, will continue to tempt many politicians.

What's most disappointing is Brown's cavalier explanation that sometimes one must fight fire with fire. Is this really the leader of the party of George McGovern and Jimmy Carter?

Brown should respect his party's history of competing with honor — and leave racist psychological terrorism to the Lee Atwaters of the world.

Let's not lose the peace again

Patrick Buchanan

From The New York Times to the Polish foreign ministry, from The Economist to Moscow, come new demands that Germany, before unification, renounce all claims to her lost eastern territory.

This will be the first issue in the Four Power meeting on the future of Germany. For once, America should not permit herself to be used, either by envious and fearful allies, or by Russians with a bad conscience and a bloody history.

To understand what is at issue, President George Bush should spend a few hours with "Nemesis at Potsdam," by Alfred de Zayas (University of Nebraska Press), the story of what happened in the East.

The story begins in the fall of 1944, in a village of East Prussia called Nemmersdorf, overrun by the Red Army in its first thrust into German territory. When the Wehrmacht drove the Reds out after 48 hours, what they found prepared them for what was to come.

The Russians had gone berserk. German women were crucified on the sides of barns. French prisoners of war had been murdered. Refugees had been run over by tanks. Not a single civilian was found alive. Every German girl over 8 and every woman had been raped. What Katyn means to Poles, Nemmersdorf means to Germans.

Soviet Army Capt. Alexander Solzhenitsyn, whose unit struck East Prussia in January of '45, wrote, "All of us knew very well that if the girls were German they could be raped and then shot." The blood lust of Pravda's crazed German-hater Ilya Ehrenberg ringing in their ears, Red Army troops re-enacted Nemmersdorf in town after town. As word of the terror spread, millions of German civilians fled to Baltic ports, in a German re-enactment of Dunkirk.

Between 20,000 and 25,000 refugees drowned in the Baltic, as Soviet planes and submarines attacked refugee ships. On April 14, 1945, the Goya went down with 7,000 people crammed on its decks, the greatest sea disaster in history.

Yet, at war's end, in East Europe, in the German provinces of East Prussia, Eastern Pomerania, Danzig, East Brandenburg, Silesia, and in the Sudetenland, more than 16 million Germans remained.

At Potsdam, Truman and Churchill, faithful to the evil bargain at Yalta, agreed to the removal of several million from territories ceded to Stalin. But Moscow, its puppet Warsaw regime, and Prague began mass deportation of all Germans from all lands east of the line formed by the Oder and western Neisse rivers.

Whole villages and towns were given hours to pack, then shoved on the roads and driven westward. Cattle trucks and trains arriving in Berlin off-loaded cargos of dead children, of girls and women robbed, beaten and raped. From the Sudetenland, Czech authorities forced out 3 million Germans, shoving them into the Russian and American zones. In Lamsdorf camp in Upper Silesia, of 8,064 German prisoners, 6,488 died, including 628 children.

The courageous British journalist Victor Gollancz (to whom de Zayas dedicates his book), himself a Jew, protested that the Allies were treating German civilians as Himmler had treated the Jews. Bertrand Russell called it extermination, describing the scene in the Berlin railway station as another Belsen. "No one seeing its horrors firsthand," wrote Anne O'hare McCormick in The New York Times, "can doubt that it is a crime against humanity."

F.W. Voigt on the Manchester Guardian wrote of one incident in July, 1945, when a factory explosion set off a Czech pogrom in which German women and children were hurled from bridges, and 2,000 to 3,000 massacred. When all the atrocities ended, 2 million were dead, and the greatest exodus in history had driven 14 million Germans out of lands their ancestors had inhabited for centuries.

With pathetic protest from Washington and London, one-fourth of Germany was amputated. Allies who had fought the war under the banner of the Atlantic Charter saw it spat upon, just as Wilson's 14 points had been spat upon by the vindictive victors of Versailles.

Which brings us to the Four Powers talks on Germany.

Versailles in 1919 led directly to Munich. Tehran in '43, and Yalta and Potsdam in '45, led to 45 years of Cold War. This time, America must not lose the peace. This time, we must not listen to the German-haters. This time, peace must reflect our values and our interests, first and foremost. After all, we won the Cold War.

How should we then conduct ourselves in the Four Power talks? The answer is to take a stance, independent of the frightened British and French who seek to keep Germany down, independent of Moscow with its selfish interest in not seeing its crimes exposed.

The world knows all about what was done by the Germans; it knows nothing of what was done to the Germans. Yet, those crimes live in the hearts of that people, as Pearl Harbor and Bataan live in ours. When the border issue is raised, the U.S. should commit itself to peaceful resolution of the question, and permit the German people a worldwide hearing for their case. No cause of ours is served by a midnight KGB-style burial of the crimes in the East. If we cannot undo history, if we cannot repeal the crimes of '45 and '46, we can see to it that they are not forever erased from the memory of man.

A strong, united, free Germany in the heart of Europe will be as great a triumph for America as a strong, free Japan in the Far East. It will enable us to declare victory in the Cold War, and come home. Let magnanimity, not vindictiveness, be our guide. Standing up for German's legitimate interests in these Four Power talks is really standing up for our own.

You can go home again, if it's still there

The other day, my roommate was feeling lousy and said she wanted to go home. Home for her is a big city in South America. She has squadrons of relatives there, an army of friends. The food tastes better, the air smells sweeter (well, this is Iowa, and you know what THAT smells like), the people are friendlier and the coffee is so superior that it's a different substance. (And she's dead right about that. I'd like her to go home if for no other reason than to bring back more coffee.)

I listened to her with a sinking feeling. I'd like to go home, too. But there's one small problem: it doesn't exist anymore.

Oh, the town's still there — in North Dakota — and by all accounts, it's still the same place: a snotty town with some of the crappiest weather in the Northern Hemisphere. Some friends moved there last year, and the day they arrived, there was a 22-inch snowfall, followed by days of sub-zero temperatures. My friends said that the people are still clique-ish. They no longer draw the battlelines between Catholic and Lutheran, as they did when I was a kid there, but it still matters a lot what side of town you live on.

Her Perspective

Living there gave me my first schooling in being in a despised minority. I didn't know what the neighbor kids meant when they called me a "dirty Cat-licker" and a "mackerel snapper." I went home and asked my mother, and she told me they didn't like Catholics, which is what we were. I also told her the kids across the street (from the picture-perfect TV family to come: Mother, Dad, Buddy and Sis) said she, my mother, was "crazy to have five kids." My mother roused herself from her ongoing, North Dakota-induced depression long enough to say, "Tell them their mother was crazy to have two."

But, of course, home is where the heart is, eh? It's the people that count, etc., etc. Relatives, old friends. Mom and Dad. Mom and Dad died a long time ago — but not before they got the heck out of there. They sold the house I remember the most clearly, the one we lived in from the time I was four until I left home for good at age 17. I remember it as a small place, so quiet that you could hear a pin drop (seldom), or my mother sighing softly on the edge of the couch, where she sat every afternoon in silence and watched the sunset without turning on the lights. It was also chilly. My dad set the thermostat at 65 during the day and 60 at night. The wind made the copper weather-stripping howl like a kazoo from hell, and you couldn't see out of the windows for thick frost from November until the end of March.

After I got married and was moving back to North Dakota with my husband and new baby, we drove past my old house on our way through the state. It looked like a dump. A tornado had taken all the big trees a few years before, and the place needed painting. Somebody had driven a rusty pickup camper onto the lawn, and there were a couple of broken lawnchairs tipped over on what was left of the genuine Kentucky bluegrass I'd had to mow and water and clip every week. All it lacked was some scrawny chickens and a pig to scratch and snuffle in the dust by the front steps.

None of my family lives within hundreds of miles of the place. In fact, except for my second oldest brother and me, everyone lives as far away as you can get and still be in the continental United States. The neighbors are all dead or moved away. Gone, too, are the old couple who sold candy door-to-door in the summer evenings. Gone is the ice truck and the icemen with their big black rubber aprons. Gone are the popcorn stand by the railroad tracks and the orphanage and the pest house.

My old friends are gone, too, and not just to their final rewards in California. Two of my old playmates from the Minnesota lake where we spent summer weekends came to Iowa City last year and stopped to say hello. I've kept up with Marcia and gotten photographs of her and her family all along, so I was prepared for the middle-aged matron, but I hadn't seen her brother Mike since just before we both embarked on our adult lives. The kid I remembered, the one I speared fish and trapped chipmunks and smoked Bull Durham and picked woodticks and tipped over outhouses with, had hair that stood straight out from his head in all directions. His glasses were usually cracked and taped and always dirty, and he'd have a summer's worth of topsoil under his nails from his booming nightcrawler business. He rode around on what appeared to be one of the first Schwinn bikes in Minnesota, and his pants, by the end of the school year, were always a couple of inches too short.

The distinguished guy that got out of the big, fancy car had silver blow-dried hair and the polished ease of an executive, which he is. He wouldn't have recognized him. He said he wouldn't have recognized me either, which is what you say, I guess, when you don't want to say, "My God, what happened to you? You're old!"

They say you can't go home again, but my roommate hasn't heard that. She is busy dreaming of her next visit, planning what she will see where she will go, what she will wear and eat and drink. So I guess you can: You can go home again — if you can find it.

OSHA

"I was getting headaches and things of that nature when the gas was being vented into the room," Bobb said. "We had several emergencies there, and a typical response when the gas starts filling up the room was to throw the doors open so all the patients can breathe it out."

Exposure to ethylene oxide leads to damaged DNA in humans, stomach and brain cancer, as well as an increase in the incidence of leukemia in animals.

One of OSHA's follow-up citations revealed that an employee working in the Central Sterilization Room was exposed to 10.7 parts per million of ethylene oxide over a 15-minute period.

According to the citation, this was a little more than twice the established limit.

OSHA investigators determined that the College did not implement controls and practices that would reduce employee exposure to ethylene oxide, nor did it provide respirators to protect employee health.

Further, OSHA charged that the College's ethylene oxide emergency plan did not allow employees proper equipment for respiration when dealing with emergency situations.

Thomas Gardner, UI College of Dentistry associate dean of clinical affairs, said the College has already initiated corrective measures.

Even though, the OSHA warning repeats last year's violations, Gardner said the UI and the College are working to rectify the ventilation problems and reduce ethylene oxide exposure.

"We've gotten another citation... and officially we're doing all we can to get it straightened out," Gardner said. "I think it's already straightened out."

Gardner said the College has spent a considerable sum to correct the problems but will continue to make improvements until code is met.

"We've believed all along that if there is a problem we should take of it. We're trying very hard to get it done," Gardner said.

One of the corrective measures implemented last fall was to lower the fume-collection hood over the sterilization aerator in order to keep residual gas from escaping into the atmosphere, Gardner said.

But additional corrections need to be made before the sterilization room will again be safe for work, Bobb said.

"The best possible thing would be to... improve the ventilation in the area so that when gas goes into the work area, it's not the employees' lungs that are filtering it out," he said.

Transition

democratic ideals as for her political naiveté, was being a bit too optimistic.

President Daniel Ortega, whose term ends with Chamorro's inauguration April 25, said Monday he would accept the Nicaraguan people's verdict.

That doesn't mean Ortega and the Sandinista leadership won't try to extract concessions from UNO in exchange for vacating the government premises without making a fuss.

The Sandinista Front remains the single most powerful political contender, the force to reckon with at the National Assembly. Without their cooperation, Chamorro may find power to be restricted.

But she won't have to deal directly with the politically savvy Sandinistas.

In one of her most astute moves, Chamorro surrounded herself with a shadow Cabinet of strong, experienced advisers.

That eight-member cabinet, from which surely will come many of the key nominations in the UNO government, is the one that will tangle with the Sandinistas on such vital issues as the fate of the mighty military machine and peaceful relations with labor.

Establishing the rules of the game on those two fields will give Chamorro's government breathing space and time to establish itself.

That doesn't mean Ortega, the tough guerrilla leader who was just starting to feel comfortable with the mantle of statesman, will make it easy for UNO.

The outgoing president; his brother, Humberto; the defense minister; and Interior Minister Tomas Borge said last year the Sandinistas could conceivably imagine themselves handing over the government, but not complete power. The statements were taken to mean that the army and police could remain under Sandinista command.

With a heavy influence on many labor unions, Sandinista-inspired strikes could pre-empt any economic programs by the new government.

Sandinista leaders know they won't have to deal with the 14 parties and one native Indian organization that make up UNO but with the members of that shadow Cabinet.

Notable among the probable ministers is Alfredo Cesar, an ambitious, capable politician who has his sights set on the 1996 elections.

It is to Cesar, not Chamorro, that journalists flock when they want the bottom line on UNO policy.

Cesar, who has never actually said whether he quit his membership in the directorate of the U.S.-backed Contra rebels, already has worked out how to avoid one of the thorns in UNO's path to government: Humberto Ortega.

Ortega might be allowed to remain in charge of the armed forces, but only under a civilian defense minister. Cesar has hinted at this arrangement publicly and a close aide confirmed it privately.

The other big problem UNO must tackle in the next two months is what to do with Borge, the sole surviving founder of the Sandinista National Liberation Front and as tough and hardline a customer as they come.

"If we solve that, we solve the problem of national reconciliation," Cesar said.

Healing the nation, split by years of war and bitter political differences, is another task the Chamorro government faces.

The president-elect, who is the widow of Nicaragua's most revered civic leader, recognizes the nature of her work.

"Violeta Presidente — of ALL Nicaraguans," read the headline in Monday's extra edition of Chamorro's family newspaper, La Prensa.

Ruling

answered "yes" to a questionnaire that asked whether he was sexually attracted to men or desired sex with men. Woodward answered "no" to a question that asked whether he had ever engaged in homosexual conduct.

The Navy has allowed some homosexuals to serve despite its general policy.

Ensign Woodward was serving in an air squadron stationed in the Philippines when in 1974 he was seen in the Subic Bay Officers' Club sitting with a sailor who was to be discharged for homosexual conduct.

When questioned by his commanding officer, Woodward acknowledged his homosexual tendencies. He was then recommended for discharge.

In a letter, Woodward said, "For the good of both the Navy and myself, I respectfully request the chance to contribute to the defense of the United States as an honest, open, 'gay' officer."

The Navy released him from active duty and assigned him to the Naval Air Reserve staff in San Diego, where he served until his discharge in 1978.

Army spokesman Joe Padilla said the service was "pleased that this longstanding litigation... is finally terminated and that our position has been upheld."

Woodward was allowed to enlist in 1972 for a six-year hitch in the Naval Flight Officer Candidate Program even though he had Ben-Shalom joined the Army Reserve in 1974 but was discharged in 1976 because she is an acknowledged lesbian.

A federal judge ordered her reinstated, and she served out an enlistment that ended in August 1988.

The Army policy says, "Homosexuality is incompatible with military service," and bars "persons who engage in homosexual conduct or who by their statements demonstrate a propensity to engage in homosexual conduct."

The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last August upheld the revised policy.

The appeals court, while noting there never had been a complaint about Ben-Shalom's performance of her military duties, said the Army acted to protect "morale, discipline and the effectiveness of our fighting forces."

Ben-Shalom said after the court's announcement that she was considering leaving the United States.

"I guess if there's another country that wants me, I may end up leaving the country. I've considered Holland because they consider people like me as legitimate political refugees."

Woodward sued for back pay and reinstatement.

The U.S. Claims Court dismissed Woodward's suit, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit upheld the dismissal last March 29.

In other actions, the Supreme Court:

- heard arguments over a federal regulation putting Postal Service property off-limits to solicitors of contributions. A ruling is expected by July.
- said it will decide in a case from West Virginia whether a federal law that requires some losers of lawsuits to pay the winners' lawyer fees also covers fees for expert witnesses.
- refused to force the CIA to release documents on the 1985 sinking of the Greenpeace ship Rainbow Warrior by French government agents.
- let stand a 15-year prison sentence and a $6.6 million fine imposed on a California businessman, Edward Elkins of Santa Maria, for selling two airplanes with a potential military use to Libya.

Upset

and democratization in the Soviet Union itself.

Both Ortega and Chamorro presented themselves as candidates of national reconciliation and economic recovery. Ortega because he believed the United States would recognize his victory and Chamorro because she had Washington's support.

She promised economic recovery to a nation that suffered from a decade of war, U.S. economic embargo and poor management.

Ortega and the Sandinistas mounted a carefully orchestrated campaign that ended with a rally attended by an estimated 300,000 people. The man who marched into Managua as a victorious young revolutionary in July 1979 had not expected to lose, and the first hours of the stunning upset were tense.

Former President Jimmy Carter was among thousands of international election observers who monitored the voting.

Defense Minister Humberto Ortega, the president's brother, and Interior Minister Tomas Borge, who controls the police, had suggested they might not give an opposition government control of those forces.

Daniel Ortega said he spoke for his party and government, however, in promising to honor the results of Sunday's election.

"I want to tell all Nicaraguans and all the nations of the world that the president of Nicaragua and the government will respect and submit itself to the popular mandate," he said.

Cesar, one of Chamorro's closest advisers and a former Contra leader, said the new government's "most important problem is the role of the armed forces."

In her campaign, Chamorro advocated reducing the size of the powerful military machine the Sandinistas built with Soviet support.

Most polls had shown Ortega ahead, but the results always were in question.

Paul Reichler, an American lawyer and one of Ortega's close advisers, said: "I think that, when people went to vote, they voted with their stomachs, and I think they thought about the empty stomachs of their children."

"I think when it came right down to it, Nicaraguans has just suffered enough. They had suffered too much."

In opposition, the Sandinistas will be the largest and best-organized party in Nicaragua.

"It's a hell of an opposition force in any democracy," said Cesar. "They are going to have their own rights, their own space. Ortega will be treated as a former president, with all the dignity that entails."

Ortega said the Sandinistas had created "an independent, dignified and sovereign Nicaragua with economic and social development and with complete democracy."

Many supporters wept as he stood, arms raised, while people sang the Sandinista party anthem.

Throughout the campaign, Ortega equated the opposition United National Opposition, known as UNO, with the Somoza dictatorship the Sandinistas overthrew.

Bush

with a growing line of potential new foreign aid recipients — Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Panama and others — it would be difficult to promise any quick, major grants.

Chamorro's election was a sweet victory for the U.S. government, which had spent hundreds of millions of dollars in military and other assistance to arm the Contras and keep them going, and had also clamped economic sanctions on Nicaragua.

Ortega was a major irritant to the White House, and a frequent target of derision from presidents Reagan and Bush. As recently as October, Bush ridiculed Ortega at a summit of Latin leaders in Costa Rica as "this little man" and as "that unwanted animal at a garden party."

Change in tune, Bush publicly congratulated Ortega Monday for allowing a free and fair election and pledging to abide by its results. Moreover, Bush said there is "space in a democratic Nicaragua for all political points of view."

Reagan, whose administration played a major role in arming the Contras, said that "the people of Nicaragua and the cause of democracy have won an impressive and important victory," and that "now is the time for all parties to put down their weapons and join in a common pursuit of what is in the best interests of the Nicaraguan people."

Secretary of State James Baker pointedly said the international community "will insist that the decision of the Nicaraguan people be respected and that full civil and military power be transferred to the newly elected government."

Bush said, "We hope that all sides in this hotly fought contest will extend the hand of reconciliation and cooperate together in rebuilding their country for the good of all Nicaraguans."

He said he had talked with Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez about "appropriate trade and economic measures that we can take to support the new government of Nicaragua."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush wanted the lift U.S. sanctions "as soon as it is feasible." He said he expected there would be a decision fairly soon.

"We certainly feel a special responsibility for the people of Nicaragua and the courageous actions that they have taken to bring these elections about," Fitzwater said.

He also suggested the White House will seek more humanitarian aid for the Hondurans, many of whom are camped just outside Nicaragua in Honduras, after their U.S. funds run out this week.

ests of the Nicaraguan people."

Secretary of State James Baker pointedly said the international community "will insist that the decision of the Nicaraguan people be respected and that full civil and military power be transferred to the newly elected government."

Bush said, "We hope that all sides in this hotly fought contest will extend the hand of reconciliation and cooperate together in rebuilding their country for the good of all Nicaraguans."

He said he had talked with Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez about "appropriate trade and economic measures that we can take to support the new government of Nicaragua."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush wanted the lift U.S. sanctions "as soon as it is feasible." He said he expected there would be a decision fairly soon.

"We certainly feel a special responsibility for the people of Nicaragua and the courageous actions that they have taken to bring these elections about," Fitzwater said.

He also suggested the White House will seek more humanitarian aid for the Hondurans, many of whom are camped just outside Nicaragua in Honduras, after their U.S. funds run out this week.

22 years later, Soviets leave Czechoslovakia

FRENSTAT, Czechoslovakia (AP) — A brass band struck up the "Internationale" on Monday as the Red Army began leaving Czechoslovakia 22 years after it arrived to crush a reform movement.

Karel Micek of the Civic Forum said the presence of Soviet troops had meant "empty shelves in stores, polluted water, an occasional fight in the pub and a reminder that we are not a free country."

"Their main problem was that they were here," said Micek, whose group played a central role in the peaceful revolution that ousted the Communist Party from exclusive power in November.

Twenty-two Soviet T-62 tanks loaded on flatcars left the northern town of Frenstat, beginning a negotiated, three-stage pullout of the 73,500 Soviet military personnel, scheduled for completion next year.

A second train, laden with 33 armored vehicles, left a few hours later from the Domasov nad Bystrici station near a Red Army base at Libava in eastern Czechoslovakia.

It is the first time the Kremlin has removed its soldiers from the territory of a Warsaw Pact ally.

Hungary is near agreement with the Soviets on a similar accord, but no deals have been struck with Poland and East Germany, the other Soviet allies in Europe that are hosts to Red Army troops.

Soviet soldiers remained in Czechoslovakia after a Warsaw Pact invasion crushed the reformist "Prague Spring" of 1968. They entered Hungary in 1956 to put down an anti-Stalinist uprising.

Before the withdrawal began, the Soviet Union had 1,220 tanks, 2,505 armored vehicles, 77 combat aircraft and 146 helicopters in Czechoslovakia, in addition to the 73,500 soldiers.

Soon after the first train rolled toward the border, the official news agency CTK reported that Soviet-Czechoslovak military maneuvers would be held next month.

"The Czechoslovak People's Army and the Central Group of Troops of the Soviet Army will be held" March 1-4 in western and northern Bohemia, it said, quoting the Defense Ministry.

It was not clear whether the announcement's timing was a coincidence or meant as a signal that Czechoslovakia remains a dependable Soviet ally despite the withdrawal and a government dominated by non-Communists.

Another CTK dispatch quoted Deputy Foreign Minister Evzen Vacek as telling a parliamentary committee the pullout would be completed by June 30, 1991. No specific date had been mentioned previously.

Ceremonies at Frenstat were simple and brief. The departure from the base 110 miles southeast of Prague is to be completed March 13 and Red Army troops are to be gone from Libava, 180 miles east of the capital, by March 25.

The withdrawal agreement was initiated February 22 in Prague and is to be signed in Moscow this week by Presidents Vaclav Havel and Mikhail Gorbachev.

Havel flew to the Soviet capital Monday, three days after returning from the United States and talks with President George Bush.

Under the withdrawal agreement, a "decisive part" of the Soviet force is to be out by the end of May, a month before the first free elections in Czechoslovakia since the Communists consolidated power in 1948.

"This is our new peace policy in practice... a retreat from the policy of confrontation," Gen. Vladimir Malyshevskiy, deputy chief of Soviet forces in Czechoslovakia, said during the Frenstat ceremonies. "It is only proper this process starts in the center of Europe and on the day of the official visit of President Havel."

Baltic legislators vote to decrease interference from Kremlin

MOSCOW (AP) — Legislators from the Baltics and other independent-minded republics denounced a draft law Monday that would let the Kremlin take over their governments by declaring a state of emergency.

Several deputies said the proposal is even more dangerous because another bill on strengthening the presidency would permit the nation's leader to declare a state of emergency on his own.

President Mikhail Gorbachev wants the legal authority to push through his program and halt the riots and ethnic strife that threaten his reforms.

Some legislators said such laws must be drawn carefully to prevent "a repetition of totalitarianism," as legislator Yuri Afanasiev put it during Sunday's huge pro-democracy demonstration in Moscow.

The emergency bill is among dozens proposed in the current two-month session. Legislators said they have no legal guarantee, only

Mikhail Gorbachev

Gorbachev's word, that peaceful demands for reform will not be crushed.

Under the proposed law, the Presidium, of which Gorbachev is chairman, could suspend republican parliaments and city councils, cancel decisions of local governments and take over an area in cases of mass disorder.

Tass said legislators were expected to consider on Tuesday the bill to expand presidential powers.

Interfax, a news service of Moscow radio, said a draft calling for election of a president by universal, direct and equal suffrage had been submitted to the legislature.

Aides to Gorbachev had said earlier the first election would be held in the Congress of People's Deputies at a meeting scheduled to start on Tuesday. The session has been postponed indefinitely.

Interfax said a candidate would need a majority of the popular vote to win, and the term would be five years. The president would have broad powers, including the right to declare war.

Legislators said the emergency legislation, presented by the Council of Ministers on Monday, was too broad.

"A mechanism for preventing any groundless declaration of a state of emergency and abuse of power" must be added, said Estonian legislator Marju Lauristin, according to a Tass report on the session in the Council of the Union, one of two houses of the Supreme Soviet legislature.

Vaidotas Antanaitis, a legislator from Lithuania, said such powers conflict with Kremlin promises to give more autonomy to the republics, and he demanded the draft be changed to say that their governments must agree with the imposition of a state of emergency.

Reporters see more surveillance in China

BEIJING (AP) — Police have sharply increased surveillance of foreign journalists since lifting martial law in Beijing last month, reporters said Monday.

Correspondents from nearly a dozen news organizations, including those from the United States, Soviet Union and Europe, said they have been tailed at least once by plainclothes police in recent weeks, some even while jogging or shopping.

"Several (Chinese) contacts have been hauled before the leaders in their (work) units and told, 'We know you had contact with a foreign journalist and this must stop,'" said a British reporter. Like the other journalists, he spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of provoking official retaliation against his Chinese friends.

The British reporter said he had been tailed each of the past three days, and that on one occasion plainclothes police tried to photograph him meeting a Chinese friend in a park.

The next day, police followed him to a hotel where he met a Chinese acquaintance, and three motorcycles and a van followed his car from the hotel, keeping pace when he accelerated and drove in circles. After he dropped off the Chinese man, police pursued the man on foot, the reporter said.

An American reporter who noticed she was being tailed by a man on a bicycle said it made her decide not to visit Chinese friends, "so I guess it's working."

She and several other reporters believe the surveillance, which in many cases has been obvious, is intended to discourage them from normal contacts with Chinese friends or news sources.

"What we're all terribly concerned about is getting a Chinese in trouble," said another American reporter who said he and his wife were followed even when they went jogging.

In the past, Chinese have been accused of giving state secrets to foreigners with whom they were friendly, and in some instances have been jailed.

Others have been denied promotions or the chance to study abroad because of friendship with a foreigner.

Without Chinese friends, however, foreigners find themselves cut off entirely from Chinese society, isolated in their separate apartment compounds and with little access to officials.

Ceausescu's wire taps dismantled in Romania

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Military officers showed Monday how they had begun dismantling the telephone-tapping centers of Nicolae Ceausescu's secret police and said their work was proof of the widespread eavesdropping was ended.

"Observe, please, that all the power boxes have been removed," said Maj. Gen. Nicolae Cerbu, deputy of the army Signal Corps, gesturing at a bank of cassette players in a listening center in Bucharest.

Ceausescu's dreaded secret police, the Securitate, tapped tens of thousands of telephones as part of its vast domestic spying apparatus. The Securitate was officially disbanded after the December revolution that ended the Communist dictator's 24-year reign and led to his execution.

The military organized a tour of the listening centers for reporters in an apparent effort to counter widespread criticism that authorities had done too little to dismantle the Securitate structures.

"This is the proof that it (bugging) doesn't happen now," said Col. Mihai Alexuta, another Signal Corps officer.

Military officers said that in Bucharest, the Securitate maintained interception equipment at all 30 telephone exchanges, as well as in factories, hotels and military offices. The signals were sent to two secret recording studios where the conversations were monitored and transcribed, they said. "The first people to be targeted with these listening devices were (in) the army," said Cerbu, who added that people generally were repulsed by this kind of activity.

The officers said they believed they had found all the bugging centers in Romania but they declined to say how many there were. All the eavesdropping had been stopped, they said.

The equipment will be dismantled and the parts inventoried and then given to different ministries or military departments for their use, Cerbu said.

"It's a pity to destroy these things, because they are expensive," he said. "An amplifier could be well used in a small village where a ministry wants to set up telephones for people who don't have them."

In one of the interception centers were circuit boards covered with transistors.

The equipment was capable of intercepting 36 telephone calls at one time, and could be used for 18,000 different phones, Cerbu said.

In a nearby concrete building with bars on the windows, which the officers said was a former Securitate headquarters, reporters were led up a narrow staircase to rooms filled with a series of cabinets, each containing 12 small built-in cassette players. In front were desks with switchboards.

35 dead as high winds hit Europe

LONDON — Gale-force winds struck Europe on Monday, tearing down roofs and power lines, disrupting transportation on land, sea and air, and killing at least 35 people.

Winds were clocked at 100 mph at Aberporth along the Scottish border, while Leeds in central England reported winds up to 98 mph.

It was the second major storm to hit Europe since January 25, when 95 people were killed in winds that gusted up to 106 mph. Wind speeds in late January and February were the strongest in 18 years, averaging 15 mph the last two weeks at Heathrow Airport, the London Weather Center said.

Flood warnings were posted on the north coast of West Germany and parts of Denmark. Fishing boats were kept in port on France's west coast.

Twelve deaths were reported in Britain, seven in West Germany and two in East Germany, five in Belgium, seven in France, and one each in Ireland and the Netherlands.

The dead included a driver whose double-decker bus hit a fallen tree, an elderly man killed by a falling chimney and an elderly woman struck by a slate blown from a roof, police and rescue workers said.

Family bids private farewell to Forbes

BERNARDSVILLE, N.J. — A bagpiper played "Scotland the Brave" at a private funeral Monday for Malcolm Forbes, the multi-millionaire publisher known for selling the joy of capitalism.

The service for Forbes, who has been mourned by business leaders and socialites worldwide, was attended only by immediate family at The Church of St. John on the Mountain in this rustic borough 50 miles west of New York, where Forbes Inc. is headquartered.

Forbes, the son of a poor Scottish family who emigrated to the United States and worked his way to affluence on Wall Street, died of a heart attack in his sleep Saturday at his 40-acre estate in nearby Far Hills. He was 70.

His son Malcolm Jr. or "Steve," who will succeed him as head of the publishing empire, delivered the eulogy, the Rev. Alfred Niese, pastor of the episcopal church, told The Courier-News of Bridgewater.

Niese, who presided over services, would not give details about the ceremony.

Niese said family members have attended the church since the late 1950s. Present at the funeral were Forbes' former wife Roberta; daughter Moira Mumma; four sons, Steve, Robert, Christopher and Timothy; and eight grandchildren.

Space shuttle delayed by weather

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA will wait until Wednesday for the sixth attempt to launch shuttle Atlantis on an undercover military mission, but weather may again interfere.

Forecasters said there was only a 40 percent chance the weather would be favorable at launch time, expected about 12:45 a.m.

The problem, they said, would be high winds and clouds, the forces that combined early Monday to halt the latest effort to put what sources said was a $500 million spy satellite in orbit.

The outlook remains the same on Thursday.

After Monday's scrub, the fifth in five days, shuttle managers decided to wait two days so that the five military astronauts and launch team could rest.

"We've got a 48-hour turnaround, and it's going to give us all a chance to get some rest," said NASA spokesman Bruce Buckingham.

The astronauts were making use of the break to fly back to Houston to use training facilities at the Johnson Space Center. They were due back by noon Tuesday.

Jackson won't run in D.C. mayoral race

Speculators predict 3rd bid for presidency

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jesse Jackson announced Monday he will not run for mayor of the "dispirited" nation's capital, but he refused to rule out a third bid for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1992.

"I want to continue to serve, but not as mayor," Jackson said. "At present, I believe that I may best serve by continuing work at a national level to change the direction of this country."

"You have to almost predict a rerun of '88," said John White, a former national party chairman who advised Jackson in the late stages of his 1988 presidential bid.

Jackson's political plans have been the subject of much conjecture since he moved to the District of Columbia last April. Speculation about a Jackson mayoral candidacy increased after Mayor Marion Barry's arrest last month on a cocaine possession charge and subsequent enrollment in a substance abuse treatment program.

Jackson said he would continue to support the district's efforts to become a state, but he also said his Rainbow Coalition would press for action on issues at the national level, including changes in federal tax law, increased voter registration and expanding the federal government's housing programs.

Jesse Jackson holds a news conference Monday in Washington, where he announced he will not run for mayor of the nation's capitol in this fall's election. Jackson's wife Jackie listens at left.

Jackson did not rule out another bid for the White House in 1992.

"It's premature," said the civil rights leader. "We won't rule it in, but it's not the season for it."

A top Jackson aide, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, suggested Jackson's current plans could provide a springboard for another presidential effort.

"It's too early to tell, too early to tell," the aide said. "But if we pull statehood, these other things together, it gives us a lot of ways to jump, and another national campaign is certainly one."

Jackson said his decision not to run was made difficult by "the respect we have . . . for the many people who have encouraged us to run."

"The district is divided and dispirited," Jackson said. "I want to be a part of the healing process. My desire is to serve and uplift."

One local supporter said the two-time Democratic presidential hopeful became convinced that a Jackson mayoral campaign might not have widespread voter support.

"Jesse wasn't convinced that there was a unanimity of support for him, a groundswell," the supporter said. "He became aware that more and more people were thinking of him as something of an interloper."

A Washington Post poll released last week found Barry was preferred by 25 percent of those surveyed, while 19 percent said they would vote for Jackson.

If Barry were not in the race, Jackson would receive support from 26 percent of those questioned, compared with 19 percent for city councilman John Ray. The poll, based on interviews with 800 registered voters, had a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

Ray, a leading contender for the job, said Jackson's announcement "takes a major player out of the race."

Barry's re-election plans remain on hold as the mayor battles an eight-count indictment on cocaine possession and perjury charges filed against him earlier this month.

Walter Fauntroy, the district's Democratic non-voting delegate to Congress, has said he will announce Saturday whether to enter the mayoral race.

Clean air bill: Private talks end; senate debates this week

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate leaders pressed ahead Monday with final private talks with the White House over the clean air bill but said the measure will go to the Senate floor for debate this week — with or without an agreement.

The closed-door negotiations between senators and key Bush administration officials on a compromise air pollution control package went late into the night with no firm word on whether an agreement was likely.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, told the participants at one point he was prepared to stay until dawn to work out a compromise, according to several participants. But they said key differences remained on how to curb pollution from automobiles as well as over acid rain.

Sources close to the talks said the two sides were close to agreement on how to curtail toxic and smog-producing industrial chemicals but that the prospects of a consensus was uncertain on acid rain curbs and automobile pollution controls.

"We are making progress," Mitchell said earlier in the day. But he acknowledged that he may have to bring the bill to the Senate floor without the administration support he has sought through the bargaining.

Mitchell said if a compromise package cannot be worked out early this week he would terminate the discussions with the administration and take his chance on a bill emerging through Senate floor debate, beginning Thursday.

"We started the (private) talks three weeks ago, and at some point we need to reach a conclusion," said Mitchell.

Sununu said after the meeting that the two sides are "getting closer and closer" toward working out a compromise bill aimed at cleaning up the nation's air by the end of the decade. But Sununu, alluding to Mitchell's threat to end the discussions, criticized having to work under "the deadline of a clock."

Tokyo Stock Exchange index shows comeback

TOKYO (AP) — The Tokyo Stock Exchange's key index staged a comeback today, a day after its second-largest tumble ever, while the U.S. dollar opened slightly lower against the Japanese yen.

The dollar began trading at 148.30 yen this morning, down 0.35 yen from Monday's close at 148.65 yen.

The 225-issue Nikkei Stock Average regained 346.43 points, or 1.04 percent, to 33,668.30 shortly after 10:00 a.m. (8 p.m. EST). The average briefly passed the 34,000 mark before retreating.

On Monday, the index fell 1,569.10 points, or 4.5 percent, to close at 33,321.87. The loss was second only to the 3,836.48 plunge of Oct. 20, 1987, after Wall Street's "Black Monday." That fall of 14.9 percent, however, was less than New York's Black Monday plunge of 22.6 percent.

Dealers attributed the Nikkei's recovery to market players' optimistic prospects that the index had hit bottom, as well as an overnight rise of 38 points in New York's Dow Jones industrial average.

"Market players are still a little bit cautious, but they started picking up issues that had fallen, and I think the plunge more or less stopped, at least just for now," said Masahiro Umemori, an analyst with Nomura Securities, Co.

He said the market's recovery was in part encouraged by investors' expectations that the Bank of Japan would not raise its official discount rate.

It is considered unwise for the central bank to raise its discount rate when the stock market has been deteriorating, analysts said.

Higher interest rates discourage stock investment.

On the currency market, the dollar was slightly lower following its slip on overseas markets, traders said.

The U.S. central bank sold dollars to stop its excessive rise against the yen.

"The yen is recovering in Tokyo, in addition to the stock market rebounding," said Masato Hayashi, a trader with the Bank of Tokyo.

"Market players are now making position adjustments and selling some dollars which they had overbought the previous day," he said.

But he added that the yen remains weak.

Voters 'dump' Ortega, his party

'They voted with their stomachs'

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Fed up with war and poverty and liberated by a secret ballot, Nicaraguans ceremoniously dumped the ruling Sandinista party as soon as they had the chance.

The Sandinistas lost, and lost big, despite their tight organization and militant workers; despite plastering Managua and the country with "Daniel Presidente" T-shirts, baseball caps and posters; despite a campaign that spent $7 million in a media-poor country, despite polls that showed 15-point leads.

"I think when people went to the polls, they voted with their stomachs. And I think they thought about the empty stomachs of their children," said Paul Reichler, an American lawyer and close adviser to President Daniel Ortega.

The Sandinistas blamed their economic problems largely on the United States, and the United States certainly did its worst: it sponsored a guerrilla war and imposed an economic embargo.

But in the end, the excuses didn't matter: people wanted a change.

"They had 10 years and could not do it," was the slogan of the jury-rigged opposition coalition led by newspaper publisher Violeta Barrios de Chamorro.

She hammered away at the Sandinistas for their dogmatic, Marxist-oriented policies and state-controlled economy.

It was a shocking fall for the young revolutionaries who entered Managua as heroes on July 19, 1979, after toppling the 45-year Somoza dynasty.

But then they began to antagonize the church, restrict civil liberties, muzzle news media and install a generally repressive regime that critics said was a copy of the Cuban system. Nicaraguans fled their country by the hundreds of thousands.

Some compared Sandinista experiments to those of children who just got a set of toy trains for Christmas.

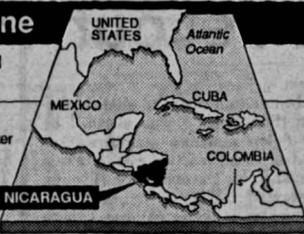

The Sandinistas eventually tried to change, admitting errors, promising a new mixed-market economic system, freeing the press and making possible the freest election in Nicaraguan history.

But with an economy in shambles, a costly war that killed more than 60,000 people and the prospect of more poverty as its Eastern European allies crumbled, the Sandinistas were left vulnerable to an electorate that "lost its fear," in the words of a Sandinista journalist.

Nicaragua Timeline

Events leading to Presidential elections held Sunday

The Sandinista National Liberation Front took power on July 19, 1979 after a popular uprising drove out Pres. Anastasio Somoza and ended 40 years of pro-U.S. Somoza family rule. The United States initially supported the revolution. But differences intensified, with Reagan accusing Nicaragua of arming Salvadoran rebels. On April 1, 1981, Reagan cut off U.S. economic aid. He later began covert aid to the anti-communist Contra rebels and imposed a trade embargo.

1988

- Feb. 3 U.S. military aid to the Contras runs out; Sandinistas grapple with the worst economic crisis since revolution.
- March 21 Contras and Sandinistas signing an accord in the Nicaraguan border outpost of Sapoa, agreeing to a 60-day truce and further talks. An unofficial truce goes into effect April 1.
- July 1 Nicaragua unilaterally renews the truce for 30 days, setting a pattern that holds until Nov. 1, 1989, despite scattered clashes. Contra leaders say they consider the truce indefinite in any case.
- Sept. Talks to turn the Sapoa agreement into a lasting peace collapse. With U.S. non-lethal aid continuing 12,000 Contra troops move out of Nicaragua into Honduran camps.

1989

- Feb. 14 Ortega and the other Central American presidents agree at a summit in El Salvador to devise a plan for disbanding the rebels holed up in Honduran base camps. Contras not present at summit. In exchange, Nicaragua promises free and fair elections in 1990.
- April 18 Bush signs a 49-million-dollar non-lethal aid package for Contras that runs through February 1990. Declines to renew military aid.
- Aug. 7 Agreement to disband and relocate the Contras by Dec. 8 is signed at a summit in Tela, Honduras. Contras not present. U.S. officials note disbandment is voluntary and say Contras should be kept in place as a guarantee of fair elections.
- Aug. 26 Contra army commander Israel Galeano says his men will ignore both the Tela accords and U.S. advice, moving their troops back into Nicaragua to await the elections.
- Oct. 22 Nicaragua accuses Contras of killing 18 peasants who were returning from military training. Contras say they are not launching attacks, only defending themselves. Five days later, Ortega announces the cease-fire will end. The next day he backs off under fire from other leaders.
- Oct. 30 Nicaragua blames Contras for another attack that kills four civilians.
- Nov. 1 Ortega ends the 19-month-old truce, citing continued rebel attacks.

1990

- Feb. 25 Violeta Barrios de Chamorro defeats President Daniel Ortega in national elections.

AP/T. Dean Caple

"It is to their credit that they created the atmosphere for a clean election," said truck driver Ramon Mendoza as he came out of a polling booth where there were no soldiers or other symbols of intimidation.

"But I could not vote for the Frente (the Sandinistas). A vote for the Sandinistas would mean that I am voting for higher inflation, for things to be more expensive every day, for my children to be drafted into the army and sent to war."

"We did not vote for Violeta," he added, referring also to his wife's vote. "We voted for a change."

"We did not have the best candidate and we did not run the best campaign," said a close adviser to Chamorro, the newspaper publisher who was a symbol more than a leader of an opposition coalition that included parties from the extreme right to the extreme left.

"I think they overestimated themselves," said Luis Guzman, leader of a Social Christian faction in the opposition coalition.

"They thought they could go for a plebiscite and win; Pinochet made the same mistake. They decided to run the risk. Now their only option is to accept what happened."

The reference was to lame-duck President Augusto Pinochet of Chile.

The Sandinistas, in another example of growing maturity as a party, appear to have accepted their fate.

Some of their own foes thought it was sad the Sandinistas got the boot from an irate populace "with short memory" of the contributions the Sandinistas made in getting rid of dictator Anastasio Somoza and in the areas of health and education.

"We thought it would have been better to try to change the Sandinistas from within," said Mauricio Diaz, vice president of the Social Christian Party.

"People identified the problems with the Sandinistas. They do not think that part of the problem was caused by the United States."

The Sandinistas remain the largest single party in the National Assembly and still control many labor unions, making them an important political force.

Noriega may testify against del Cid

MIAMI (AP) — A key co-defendant of Manuel Noriega is negotiating a plea bargain that could put him on the stand against his former boss, a defense attorney said Monday.

"The discussions are making good progress," said Samuel Burstyn, attorney for former Panamanian army Lt. Col. Luis del Cid.

"At some point, the lieutenant colonel may be confronted with an option he can't refuse."

Burstyn refused to reveal details, except to say the proposed sentence would be far less than the 40 years del Cid was offered when taken into custody on drug-trafficking charges. And he added that the deal had not yet been signed.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Sullivan refused to comment on the possibility of a plea bargain.

Noriega attorney Steven Kollin said the plea bargaining caught his defense team by surprise, and refused immediate comment.

"When he gets the plea, then we'll worry about it," said another Noriega attorney, David Lewis.

A source involved in the case who spoke on condition of anonymity said one proposal would have del Cid serving as little as two to four years in prison in return for cooperation against the ousted Panamanian dictator.

If convicted of all charges in the February 1988 indictment, del Cid could be sentenced to 70 years in prison.

After his surrender in the wake of the December invasion of Panama, del Cid was identified by the U.S. government as one of Noriega's right-hand men.

Burstyn would not confirm that del Cid would take the stand against his former boss.

The indictment against Noriega accuses del Cid of accepting $200,000 in drug payoff money from the government's star witness, pilot Floyd Carlton Caceres. The payoff came shortly after Carlton and Noriega fixed the price of a cocaine shipment they were making on behalf of the Medellin cocaine cartel, authorities said.

Del Cid also appeared in a photograph at the side of Fidel Castro and Noriega in Cuba — a meeting prosecutors claim was to smooth relations between the Panamanian leader and the Colombian cartel after one of its laboratories was raided in Panama.

Confirmation of del Cid's plea negotiations came outside a hearing on the Noriega case before U.S. District Judge William Hoeweler. The attorneys were trying to devise a way to handle classified documents expected to be at the heart of Noriega's defense.

Lewis, a New York-based expert on the Classified Information Protection Act, said the government's tough rules would classify material even when already printed in a book, as in the case of the just-published "Our Man in Panama" by John Dinges.

Father finds daughter, claims rescue

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — The father of seven-year-old Hilary Foretich said Monday that he had come to rescue his daughter. Hilary's mother, Dr. Jean Elizabeth Morgan, went to jail for 25 months rather than disclose her daughters' whereabouts.

"My daughter deserves to come back and have a normal life," said Dr. Eric Foretich, 45, as he arrived in Auckland.

The mother, who claims her ex-husband sexually abused the child, accused him of hunting down their daughter like "an animal."

Foretich denies he abused the child. Last week, the Falls Church, Va., dental surgeon traced his daughter to New Zealand, where she has been living with her maternal grandparents.

Hilary reportedly hasn't seen either of her parents in two years.

"Certainly we're going to do what we need to do to rescue my daughter," Foretich said. He met with his New Zealand lawyers immediately upon his arrival.

Morgan was released from jail in September after Congress passed a law tailored for her that limited civil contempt imprisonment in Washington, D.C., to a year.

Aided by private investigators, Foretich found that Hilary was living in the South Island town of Christchurch, 190 miles southwest of Wellington.

The Family Court in Christchurch granted an interim order Friday giving the grandparents custody of the girl, and on Monday, William Morgan, the child's grandfather, vowed to call police if the father approached the girl.

Hilary spoke to her mother for the first time in two years Sunday and cried, said Antonia Morgan, her maternal grandmother.

Dr. Morgan, a 42-year-old plastic surgeon in Washington, was jailed in August 1987 for refusing to say where her daughter was despite a U.S. judge's ruling for the former husband's unsupervised access.

In an interview from the United States, Morgan accused her ex-husband of seeking publicity and said: "He has hunted her down like an animal. She does not want to see him, and he knows that."

Morgan's attorney, Stephen Sachs, filed papers in Washington Monday asking a superior court judge to return her passport so she can travel to New Zealand. She was forced to hand over the passport during the custody battle. A hearing was to be held Tuesday.

Prime Minister Geoffrey Palmer, noting intense U.S. media interest in the case, said it was for the family court in Christchurch, not his Labor government, to rule on the matter.

"The paramount consideration in those cases is one issue: the welfare of the child," Palmer said.

British Moslems: Try Rushdie for blasphemy

LONDON (AP) — British Moslems appealed to the High Court Monday to overrule a lower court and bring author Salman Rushdie and the publishers of his novel "The Satanic Verses" to trial under British blasphemy law.

Ali A., representing the British Moslem Action Front, argued before a three-judge panel that the blasphemy law protecting Christianity should be extended to protect Islam.

He told the court that "The Satanic Verses" contained many four-letter words and was abusive and insulting not only to Islam but also to Christianity and Judaism.

"The Holy Koran (Moslem book) deserves protection," he said.

The British Moslem Action Front is seeking a judicial review of a March 1989 refusal by the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Sir David Hopkin, to prosecute Rushdie and publishers Viking Penguin for "blasphemous libel and seditious libel under common law."

Hopkin had refused the plea on the grounds that the blasphemy laws applied only to the Christian religion. High Court Judge Sir Michael Nolan said it was necessary to hear legal arguments and granted the right to challenge the decision in June.

Extra police and security guards were on duty Monday at the Law Courts although lawyers in the case said there was no need for Rushdie, who has been in hiding for more than a year, to appear in court.

The 42-year-old British author was forced into hiding in February 1989 when Iran's late spiritual leader, the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, denounced "The Satanic Verses" as an insult to Islam and told Moslems to execute the author. Other Iranian religious leaders later offered reward money totaling $5.2 million for Rushdie's death. Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, who succeeded Khomeini as the spiritual leader of Iran, reaffirmed the death sentence February 9 in Tehran.

Even before the death sentence, Rushdie's novel and his effigy had been burned in the streets of Bradford, a northern England city with a large Moslem community.

'RSA' a powerfully performed sellout

Jacqueline Comito
The Daily Iowan

Last weekend University Theatres continued its celebration of Black History Month with "Born in the RSA." The four-day run was almost completely sold out. It was a powerful performance, but I doubt its integrity as art.

"Born in the RSA" — Republic of South Africa — is the result of a collaborative effort of the play's original cast at Barney Simon's Market Theatre Company of South Africa, an interracial group that has been working together since 1974. This group first presented their work in the US at Lincoln Center in 1986 with "Woza Africa!", a series of South African productions.

University Theatres' production, directed by graduate student Michael Tawona Kachingwe, is one of the few productions the play has received in the United States divorced from the initial creators.

The event began with an explosion of rhythmic music as the ensemble — three black actors and four white — danced on the stage with different percussion instruments. The theater went black. One by one the characters introduced themselves, beginning their monologues. Each story is told independently and when combined reveal a political atrocity associated with victims of a police state.

All of the white actors began from places in the audience and the black actors came from backstage, implying the various complexities of the audience's roles in the situation — complexities that do not exist. The audience, in its attendance, confirmed its disgust of the political crimes in South Africa. Like University Theatres' earlier Black Theatre production "The Escape," they are preaching to the converted. They are reaffirming the righteousness of the audience's support. This play is effective campaigning, but does it create legitimate theater?

The individual stories of "Born in the RSA" focus on the character's role in the imprisonment of two female activists — Susan, a white liberal art instructor; and Thenjiwe, activist and trade union leader. The other characters are there because of their association with the two women — Glen, Susan's lover and police informer; Mia, the white liberal lawyer; Glen's estranged wife; Thenjiwe's sister; and Zach, Thenjiwe's brother.

The majority of the piece is concerned with the injustices inflicted upon the women in prison. Although both women suffer police brutality, attempted rape and harsh interrogation, the play suggests that Thenjiwe's pain is greater, her treatment is more inhumane. In University Theatres, anger built in both the characters and the audience. The continual offstage drumming represented racism's subversive control of them and their country. The ensemble burst into songs when words could no longer state their fury, affliction and hopes of justice and liberation.

It is the crimes against the children that South Africa is mostly indicted for in this play. Thenjiwe's 10-year old nephew and hundreds of other youths are wrongly arrested, beaten and sodomized. It is strongly stated that the government fears defeat at the hand of the children. In the end, Zach, an accidental revolutionary, observes white schoolchildren at play. He describes rushing onto their playground and cracking their skulls and bodies, sending teeth flying and arms, legs and spines splintering. This is a hallucination, a desire. He watches the children return to their classroom, yelling, "F--- you for what you're doing to our children, and f--- you for what you're doing to me."

Zach is saying that, because his violence remains only as thoughts, he is superior to the police and government. University Theatres' audience shared Zach's feeling of superiority. Is Zach better than his opposition? Is he the same? Can violence ever be justified?

The play ends with Thenjiwe leading the cast in a song of uprising and change — confrontation. The Friday night audience was enthusiastic in their applause. I shared the excitement for the performances. They are an extremely talented group of performers, deserving recognition — Reva Fox, Jeri Lynn Schulke, Erin Quinn Purcell, Stanton Dossett, Patrick Rashed, Egyriba High and Tammy Terrell Clayburn. However, I didn't extend my exuberance to the text.

I left the theater confused and slightly disheartened. In the lounge, I was alarmed by comments of fellow audience members. One girl said that her initial reaction was to take a gun and begin shooting the oppressor. A young man said he wanted to cheer as he heard Zach tell of his slaughter of white children. Those reactions frightened me. I felt exploited by the play's indoctrinations.

Should I take a gun to my head? Like Glen's wife, am I racist who allows the continuation of a police state by my inactivity?

No. I can agree with their positions without picking up my gun. Violence is never justified. Even though Zach's killings are only in fantasy, they make him the same as his oppressors. His and Glen's acknowledgement of their degradation do not make it right. History has proven that thoughts are the first step to action. I accept the simple premise: "If you agree with our cause, you must agree with our retaliation."

Glen justifies the brutality to the black children by stating that racism is primal. "Born in the RSA" justifies its existence in being a well-purposed crusade. It is politics, not theater. Even its form of continual speeches summarizing past events serves its political function while crippling its art. Even German playwright Bertolt Brecht's commitment to politics did not allow him to harrange his audience to action but rather show the human experiences provoking thought and awareness. Despite himself, Brecht was a better dramatist than activist.

"Born in the RSA" will never be able to transcend its original conception and performance by Simon's Market Theatre. University Theatres' production of American students is proof of its well-meaning but simplistic interpretation outside the intensity of its revolution in South Africa. Current events in South Africa hopefully will make this play outdated and stale. If it truly revealed human understanding, it would be vital despite changes in the initial situation.

"Born in the RSA" does show that racism and oppression damage and corrupt every person and everything it touches, including theater.

UI Symphony plays popular 'Pathetique' by Tchaikovsky

The Daily Iowan

Seven faculty members from the UI School of Music will appear as soloists with the University Symphony and its director, James Dixon, in their concert at 8 p.m. Wednesday, February 28, in Hancher Auditorium.

The seven faculty — Betty Bang Mather, flute; Mark Weiger, oboe; Maurita Murphy Mead, clarinet; Ronald Tyree, bassoon; Kristin Thelander, horn; David Greenhoe, trumpet; and George Krem, trombone — will perform together in the Concerto for Seven Wind Instruments and String Orchestra by Swiss composer Frank Martin.

If the concerto represents the more esoteric half of the program, the familiar half will be filled by Tchaikovsky's ever-popular Symphony No. 6 in B minor, known as the "Pathetique."

Tchaikovsky composed his Sixth Symphony between April and August of 1893, the last year of his life. He conducted the first performance in St. Petersburg to a lukewarm reception. He had originally suggested calling the work "A Program Symphony (No. 6)," but dropped that title before the premiere. The title by which it is known today, "Symphonie Pathetique," was suggested by the composer's brother after the first performance, based on the obvious emotional content of the work. The composer's untimely and suspicious death nine days after the premiere has fueled an almost morbid fascination with the symphony ever since.

A great deal of speculation has centered on the possible hidden meaning, or program, that was implied by the original title of the work.

Martin's concerto is the second work featuring a large group of faculty soloists to be programmed by the University Symphony this year. Coming after Benjamin Lee's little-known Concerto for String Quartet and Orchestra, performed with the UI Stradivari Quartet at the last orchestra concert on January 31, it is also the second rarely played gem to find its way onto the orchestra's program this semester.

Lawyer paid with goat meat, haircuts

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Everybody's heard of the country doctor being paid with chickens, but how about the lawyer who's paid with goat meat?

While many attorneys are wary of accepting merchandise for their services, some say they sometimes find themselves stuck between accepting items other than cash — or getting nothing at all.

Helena attorney Nick Jacques said he has received a few haircuts, and once "a guy gave me some goat meat."

Das Damen play 'Mousetrap' tune to play at Gabe's

Das Damen, New York's reigning pop/punk, psychedelic, noise/hair kings let loose tonight at Gabe's Oasis, 330 E. Washington St., supporting its third album, titled "Mousetrap," out on the Twin/Tone Records.

One of the opening acts, Flesh Dig, is getting a lot of attention. They, too, mix genres to produce a metal, heavy blues, funky soup that have the locals in a feeding frenzy. The other opening act, 100 and None Delinquents, has also raised eyebrows with their early punk, hard-rock sound bomb.

Nelson breaks recruiting ice

Iowa volleyball coach Ruth Nelson and the Hawkeyes have signed their first recruit in Laguna Niguel, Calif., native Courtney Gillis. The 6-footer from Dana Hills High was part of a second-place team in the 1988 Junior Olympics and was the captain of her high school volleyball team during the 1989 season. Nelson has three scholarships remaining for the 1990 season.

Jordan doesn't fly

Former Iowa football player J.C. Love Jordan was a participant on American Gladiators this week. The Sunday late-night television show features two players who go take part in a range of physical events against "Gladiators." Jordan was a running back for the Hawkeyes in 1980 and 1981. He was considered one of the best prep backs in the nation out of Robbins, Ill., and was a high school all-American. By the way, Jordan lost.

George nears decision

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Illinois quarterback Jeff George says he's close to deciding whether to turn professional or stay for his senior year. "I'm probably leaning more one way than the other," the 6-foot-4, 220-pound George said recently. "But I won't make my thoughts known until March 12," he said. "That gives me more time to think about it." George recently consulted with Coach John Mackovic about his chances in the April 22-23 draft. George dismissed a report that the New England Patriots are eyeing him. "I've heard some clubs might be interested in me, but New England wasn't one of them," he said. Offensive coordinator Gene Dahlquist is considering three possible replacements if George turns pro — Jason Verduzco, Forry Wells and Duke Tobin.

FBI nabs suspect in horse case

MIAMI (AP) — A Kentucky dentist allegedly hired himself out to kill thoroughbred racehorses so owners could collect insurance money, the FBI said Monday. Dr. Joseph James Brown, of Shelbyville, Ky., was arrested for wire fraud Feb. 17 at Calder Race Course following an investigation by the FBI and the New York-based Thoroughbred Racing Protective Board. "Brown was arrested by FBI agents as he was about to administer a lethal injection to a thoroughbred race horse," FBI spokesman Paul Miller said. The dentist allegedly said he would charge $15,000 to kill one horse — $2,500 down and the rest upon settlement of the insurance claim, according to the FBI.

Drake records win

DES MOINES (AP) — Paul Weakley scored a career-high 20 points to lift Drake to a 73-64 win over Indiana State in Missouri Valley Conference basketball Monday night. The Bulldogs (5-9 in the Valley and 13-17 overall) ended their regular season with the victory, handing Indiana State its 38th straight loss in a conference road game. The Sycamores, who are last in the league, fell to 2-12 and 8-19. Drake shot off to a 10-4 lead with 16:58 to go in the first half when Sam Powell made a slam dunk off a pass from Rodney Chamble. The Sycamores never threatened after that, allowing Drake to build a 40-29 lead by the half — mainly on the shooting of Weakley, who was seven of eight from the field. Travis Inman led all scorers with 22 points for Indiana State, while Dewayne Brown added 21 points and 7 rebounds. Kaylon Green had 13 points and Alessandro Donaldson had 12 for Drake.

and second-year players. But I didn't complain after two years. "I have mixed emotions," pitcher Neal Heaton said. "Basically, it's for the younger players. I'm kind of leaning toward, 'Let's sign.' This is getting ridiculous. I'm ready to go." "I'm 20 days short of having two years in, so it would benefit me," shortstop Jay Bell said. "But if that's the only holdup, if that's the only issue we're squabbling over, I don't think it's that big an issue. Let's keep it at three years. It's not that big a deal. We've gone four years with it at three years, and it's worked out well. If we're good enough to stick around for three years, we're going to get paid. We're ready to get started to get ready to play." Fehr said he spoke on the telephone Sunday with Commissioner Fay Vincent and Chuck O'Connor, management's chief negotiator, but said it was "nothing much." "Some 'How you doings?' 'Got any ideas?' 'Nope.' 'None.' 'stuff,' Fehr said. "Somebody called me this morning and asked if I had any bright ideas," Fehr said earlier, without identifying the caller. "I said, 'No.'"

Basketball

has brought more and more NBA notice. The 7-foot center is averaging 15 points and over 10 rebounds a game. "It's the last game for our seniors, and we want to help them go out strong," teammate James Moses said. "Les is working so hard, and he deserves all the credit he's getting. "Matt and Michael have motivated us all year long. We need to have a good game for those guys." The Purdue game, originally slated for Thursday, March 1, was moved to accommodate an Indiana

Women continue ascent in rankings

(AP)—The Iowa women's basketball team moved up to No. 11 from No. 13 in Monday's Associated Press women's college basketball poll. The Hawkeyes' movement was due to their blowout victories over Indiana and Ohio State over the weekend. Unbeaten Louisiana Tech garnered 62 first-place votes and remained No. 1 in the poll. Leonard Moore, the coach of the top-ranked Techsters (26-0), gave his vote to second-ranked Stanford. "I've been voting for Stanford most of the season because I don't think we've been playing like a No. 1 team," Barnore said. "We went through a two-week period recently where we stunk out the place. But I will say in the last week we've been coming closer to what a No. 1 team should be." Chris Gobrecht of fourth-ranked Washington is the other voter who cast a first-place ballot in favor of Stanford. "Stanford's a scoring machine," she said. "As one who preaches defense, I have to concede that Stanford can get the job done with offense, alone. The only difference between them and Tech is that Tech is more experienced at being ranked so high. Also, I think I owe Stanford a little loyalty from the league." The Cardinal (24-1) moved back into the No. 2 position with the two first-place votes and 1,487 points. Tennessee (23-4) moved up a step to No. 3 after wins over Vanderbilt and Alabama to finish first in the regular-season Southeastern Conference competition. The Vols, who are the defending NCAA champions, will head to the league playoffs at Albany, Ga., this weekend where they will meet Kentucky or Florida in a quarterfinal game on Saturday. Should they win, they'll face either No. 6 Georgia or Vanderbilt on Sunday. Tennessee will play host to the NCAA Women's Final Four next month and has already sold a tournament-record 16,000 seats.

Women's Hoops

Meanwhile, Washington (22-2) reached an all-time high by moving up to fourth with 1,328 points. Nevada-Las Vegas (25-2), which had an excellent chance to be a NCAA top four seed, fell from No. 2 to fifth after being upset at unranked Big West rival Fresno State, 73-65, last Saturday. The Rebels received 1,159 points. Georgia (24-3), which finished fourth in the SEC, moved up a step to sixth with 1,259 points after wins over Florida State and Louisiana State. Stephen F. Austin (24-2), which has already clinched the regular season Southland title, moved up a spot to seventh with 1,159 points. Texas (20-4) fell from sixth to eighth with 1,096 points after being upset by then-No. 25 Arkansas, 82-77, at home last Friday. The defeat ended a perfect streak runner for Big Ten MVP, the state of Indiana wants to keep an eye on coach Gene Keady's club. "Scheffler is so strong and experienced," Jepsen said. "He's hard to match up with because of his size and he never takes a bad shot."

Cousy era ends for NBA Hall

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)—Bob Cousy quit as president of the Basketball Hall of Fame on Monday.

Cousy could not be immediately reached for comment, but in a brief statement issued by the Hall of Fame, he cited the pressures of a heavy personal schedule and other considerations for his resignation.

The Boston Celtic great, who now serves a television commentator on Celtic games, was elected president of the Hall of Fame in July. He was the first Hall of Famer to serve as president.

"The Basketball Hall of Fame is truly indebted to Bob for his efforts on our behalf," Joe O'Brien, executive director of the Hall of Fame, said. "There could never be a better spokesman for this museum."

O'Brien said Cousy had been talking about giving up the job for quite a while.

"He called me Friday and again today," said O'Brien, a longtime friend. "I tried to discourage him, but he decided it was the right thing for him to do."

"The presidency may sound like a public relations job when you first take it, but there is really quite a bit of time involved. Whenever there was an announcement to be made, people didn't want to hear it from Joe O'Brien, they wanted to hear it from Bob Cousy."

Boxing deaths mar start of U.S. Championships

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP)—The deaths of two boxers while training clouded the opening Monday of the U.S. Amateur Boxing Championships, which usually are conducted with all the hustle-bustle of a three-ring circus.

Sean Lee, 18, of Baton Rouge, La., suffered a heart attack while running Sunday, while three days earlier, Tyrone Smith of the U.S. Navy, suffered a fatal fall from a ring apron as he was having his gloves removed.

"To have had two such freakish incidents happen to two boxers both in good condition is as unbelievable as it is tragic," said Dr. Robert Voy, chairman of the sports medicine committee of the USA-Amateur Boxing Association.

"This will certainly put a damper on this competition," said Voy. "I cannot emphasize enough that these two incidents are not related to boxing, but represent the risks that each of us face each day."

Lee, who boxed in the 139-pound class, dropped dead while running with Region 4 teammate Kenneth Pratt on Sunday evening on the outdoor track at the Olympic Training Center.

Lee, who had passed a preliminary physical examination earlier in the day, was given "CPR at the track and at the hospital to no avail," Voy said.

An autopsy was performed Monday and the coroner's report showed Lee suffered a coronary insufficiency. The report called it a congenital anomaly and stated "the coronary arteries were abnormally attached to the heart."

"The cause and effect here is a heart attack, just like anyone else who has a blockage of the arteries supplying the heart," Voy said. "This is one of the known causes of sudden death in athletes."

On Thursday, the 147-pound Smith, was fatally injured while training at the nearby Ft. Carson Army installation gym.

Smith was sitting on the apron having his left glove removed when he lost his balance and fell, striking his head on the floor, said Jim Fox, executive director of the USA-ABF.

Smith died following surgery for removal of a blood clot. The coroner ruled Smith was killed by the fall.

Lee complained to Pratt, a close friend, of a chest pain after running one lap, then collapsed three-quarters of the way through a second lap. "This is a condition he had had since birth, and it could have shown up at anytime," Voy said.

Voy said the condition would not show up in a physical examination. "Unless a person complains of pain there is no way of knowing if an anomaly had occurred. If Lee had stopped running after complaining of chest pains the pain probably would have gone away with no way of knowing. It could have been considered 'heartburn,'" Voy said.

The 165-pound Pratt, also of Baton Rouge, withdrew from the competition as a medical walkover.

"He's not mentally prepared to box," Fox said.

The other nine members of the Region 4 (Louisiana, Mississippi and Tennessee) were scheduled to compete in the tournament, which will crown champions in 12 weight classes Saturday night. The region had no super heavyweight.

Patriots give Berry the ax, assistant waits in shadows

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)—Raymond Berry was fired Monday as coach of the New England Patriots in a power struggle with General Manager Pat Sullivan. Pittsburgh defensive coordinator Rod Rust, a former Patriots' assistant, reportedly was the top candidate to succeed Berry.

The firing came one day before Berry's 57th birthday and after 5½ seasons on the job. He had one season left on his five-year contract.

Sullivan had no comment on the firing, but said he would meet with reporters Tuesday. The team released a statement saying simply that Berry had been relieved of his duties.

The Steelers said they had given Rust permission to talk with the Patriots.

The Patriots were 5-11 last season and missed the NFL playoffs for the third consecutive year.

Berry, who had worked without offensive and defensive coordinators in 1989, was pressured by Sullivan to add those positions.

But while Sullivan reportedly preferred outsiders, Berry wanted to fill those spots from his current staff.

Last December, shortly after the season, Patriots owner Victor Kiam reportedly offered former San Francisco coach Bill Walsh the job of club president and the power to hire a coach or take the job himself.

When Walsh declined, Berry appeared to be on firmer ground entering the final year of his contract, which reportedly gave him control over team personnel.

But after Berry is said to have told Sullivan he planned to split the offensive coordinator's job between running back coach Bobby Griener and quarterback coach Richard Wood, Sullivan went to Kiam.

The owner gave Sullivan permission to find a new coach.

The Patriots were 48-39 under Berry.

If Rust, 61, is hired, it would be his first NFL head coaching job. An assistant with for pro teams the last 14 years, Rust was Berry's defensive coordinator for 3½ seasons before filling that position with Kansas City in 1988 and the Steelers in 1989.

Fehr: no talks until new offers come in

NEW YORK (AP)—Baseball talks broke off today when union chief Donald Fehr left town and said the players' side would not return to the bargaining table until the clubs make new proposals.

Fehr was to travel to Phoenix for a meeting of the union's executive board on Tuesday. He said it was likely that he would meet with players in as many as three other cities before returning to New York.

The sides were scheduled to meet today, the 12th day of the spring training lockout. Although there was no session, Fehr said, "There have been a bunch of telephone conversations."

The talks between the union and owners have stalemated over the issue of salary arbitration eligibility. The union wants players again to be eligible for arbitration after two years, as they were before the 1985 agreement increased the requirement three years.

When asked what it would take for the union to return to negotiations, Fehr said, "It has to take an indication from the clubs that there's something meaningful to talk about.

"We have not broken through the logjam of the three-year salary arbitration problem. There have been no new proposals on the benefit plan, no new proposals on the minimum salary, no new proposals on roster size."

Both sides say a minimum of three weeks of spring training is needed plus several days for players to travel to camps. Fehr said the timing threatens the scheduled start of the season on April 2.

"I think it's been in jeopardy for some days now," he said. "I don't know if it's gone, but it's in some jeopardy."

Fehr has said for some time that he needs to update players on the situation.

"My expectation is that after the Phoenix meeting the great likelihood is that I will see players in two or three other places before coming back to New York."

Fehr said he had not heard any criticism from players about the union's stand on the arbitration eligibility issue.

"I have yet to have a player call me up and tell me we should be doing anything differently from the way we are," he said.

The first signs of a split among the players appeared today, when several Pittsburgh Pirates were quoted as saying they differed from the union leadership.

"We feel it's going to be awful tough for the owners to give back that year, so if it's the only thing holding this back, why not go ahead and agree?" pitcher Bob Kipper was quoted as saying in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. "Who's complaining? Probably the first-

Former Hawkeye football player Mark Bortz, now a guard with the Chicago Bears, signs autographs Monday for kids during halftime of the Bears' basketball game with former Iowa football players Monday night at West High School to raise money to fight substance abuse.

Bears, Hawks play for fun and charity

Pat Axmeier

It might not have been pretty but it was for a good cause: the fight against substance abuse.

Monday night's game which pitted the Good News Bears (members of the Chicago Bears football team) against Athletes Fighting Substance Abuse (former Hawkeye athletes) wasn't the level of competition most of players are used to.

"It's hard to play at half speed," Iowa football player Travis Watkins said. "We are all athletes and are used to competing at our best ... but it is fun to come out and play."

The Bears defeated A.F.S.A 75-69 in the charity game at Iowa City West High School.

Watkins was the evening's high scorer with 20 points, including two 3-pointers, leaving fans to question, "Why isn't he playing on the basketball team?"

But some of the football players were having a difficult time adjusting to the round ball.

"My playing needs a lot of work," Bears' guard and former Hawkeye player Mark Bortz said. "I'm not a professional basketball player, I'm not even a basketball player. It's a good way to have some camaraderie with your teammates. It's also a good way to keep in shape in the off-season."

Former Iowa offensive lineman George Hawthorne was also having problems when he almost tackled Bortz for a rebound. Iowa's Jeff Koepfel missed his first 3-point attempt by five feet while the only real basketball player, former Hawkeye Todd Berkenpas, hit the side of the backboard on his first attempt.

"This is a little different from a few years ago," Berkenpas said. "It's a lot of fun, it gives you a chance to come back and see a lot of guys you haven't seen in a while. I drove three hours to make it to this game. I don't think I've ever turned something down like this."

Although the athletes had fun, they were also concerned with the cause they were supporting.

"This cause is very important to me," Watkins said. "I think if the US is to survive and become a strong state once again and have the economic power they had in World War I and II, they have to get rid of some of the problems they are encountering."

Drake begins search for hoops coach

DES MOINES (AP) — Drake President Michael Ferrari has formed a 10-member committee to help him find a new basketball coach, the university announced Monday.

Athletic Director Curt Blake will chair the committee, which includes a member of the women's basketball team but no one from the men's team. Blake said the committee will interview applicants and recommend at least one to Ferrari.

The university is seeking a successor to Tom Abatemarco, who resigned Feb. 20 after less than two years as the Bulldogs' coach. Abatemarco stepped down after a university investigation concluded that he had demeaned his players and that NCAA rules were broken.

Two weeks earlier, the Drake players had boycotted practice and threatened to quit unless Abatemarco was removed. The university responded by reassigning Abatemarco to other duties in the athletic department.

Ferrari said in a prepared statement the committee would conduct an aggressive, nationwide search for a new coach.

"We will not wait for outstanding people to come to us," Ferrari said. "Rather, we will seek them out and interest them in the special opportunities at Drake."

Ferrari said that despite the turmoil of the past month, he was confident the university would find someone who had the "necessary coaching competence, genuine appreciation for Drake's academic values and long-term commitment to the building of a solid men's basketball program."

Jan Jensen, a member of the Drake women's basketball team, was among those appointed.

Ferrari said he has not given the committee a deadline for making a recommendation.

Jayhawks regain the top spot — again

(AP)—Another week and another trek across the Missouri-Kansas border for the No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press poll.

The Jayhawks, who have beaten everybody on their schedule but Missouri, grabbed the top spot back from their Big Eight Conference rivals Monday a few hours after Missouri's 107-90 loss at Oklahoma. The Sooners moved up from 11th to a tie for fifth, giving the Big Eight three teams in the top five, with Missouri settling in at No. 3 behind UNLV.

For eight weeks, it's been either Kansas or Missouri at No. 1, but Jayhawks coach Roy Williams, facing a date Tuesday at Oklahoma, refuses to worry about a No. 1 jinx.

"Everybody says No. 1 is a jinx, but not nearly as much as playing at Oklahoma," Williams said. "If we were getting ready to play Elizabeth City State, I don't think people would be talking about is No. 1 a jinx. I happen to think playing in Norman is much tougher than the jinx of being ranked No. 1 in the country."

The Jayhawks (27-2) moved into the No. 1 spot for the third time this season with 41 first-place votes and 1,570 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

Kansas, which had both its previous stays at the top ended by Missouri, will be on the same court where the Tigers (25-3) were knocked from the No. 1 spot after becoming Oklahoma's 44th straight victim at home.

Kansas and Missouri have kept the top ranking a Big Eight matter for the past eight weeks after Syracuse of the Big East held it for the first six weeks of the regular season.

UNLV (24-4) moved from fourth to second with 14 first-place votes and 1,492 points, 44 more than Missouri, which held the top spot for three weeks in two stints.

Connecticut, which set a school record for victories with its 24th against four losses, moved from sixth to fourth. The Huskies were

No celebrations anticipated for seniors' final home game

Bryce Miller
The Daily Iowan

Iowa basketball isn't finding much to get excited about these days, and it sounds as though a last incentive isn't doing the trick either.

Three Hawkeye seniors — Matt Bullard, Les Jepsen and Michael Ingram — will play their final games in Carver-Hawkeye Arena Wednesday when league-leading Purdue makes a visit.

But the day doesn't look to be as special as was intended.

"It's the last home game, but it's not sentimental by any means," Jepsen said. "It's not like I've started for five years or anything. It's just like any other game."

Lately, that's meant being beaten — six straight — and badly, by an average of 18.6 points through that stretch. And with the ninth-ranked Boilermakers at home, while No. 18 Illinois and No. 8 Michigan wait to round out the schedule, it's hard to argue that the trend will stop, or even slow down.

So senior day remains, but Ingram won't focus on the event for a different reason.

"I'm trying not to think about it. It may lead to having a bad game," the second year transfer from Missouri said. For both seasons, a knee has stopped Ingram from offering more than peripheral help.

"I know the injuries have set me back," he continued. "But I'm glad I had the chance to be a Hawkeye."

Iowa coach Tom Davis is trying to emphasize the contributions the three have made, despite their 11-14 swan song. In the Big Ten, the Hawkeyes are sitting at 3-12.

"The thing that bothers me most is that here we have these three seniors finishing up their careers in something less than terrific fashion as far as the team goes," Davis said.

"I feel badly for them for that because Michael and Matt's problems are out of their hands to a large degree," the Iowa coach said. "And how could Les do any more than what he's doing?"

Bullard, considered a definite NBA pick at the beginning of the season, sat on the sidelines after a knee injury put him out before the season opener.

After returning strong in his first couple of games back, the West Des Moines native has struggled offensively, much the same as the Iowa team.

But Jepsen is filling in the end of his college career with play that

Buckeyes stop Illini charge, Jackson fuels home upset

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Jim Jackson matched his career high with 28 points and Perry Carter scored 14 of his 18 in the second half as Ohio State defeated No. 18 Illinois 86-80 Monday night in the Big Ten Conference.

Kendall Liberty scored 23 points, Marcus Gilbert and Steve Bardo had 17 apiece and Andy Kaufmann 11 for the Illini (19-7 overall and 9-7 in the Big Ten).

The game was marked by wild turnovers. Ohio State (14-11 and 8-7) led by as many as 19 points in the first half.

But Illinois outscored the Buckeyes 23-2 over a 6½-minute stretch to take a 45-43 lead early in the second half.

Ohio State, which ran its record to 11-2 at St. John Arena this season, came back to take the lead for good at 58-56 on a 3-point basket by freshman Alex Davis with 10:29 left.

Illinois trailed 77-76 after Bardo scored on a driving layup with 2:07 left, but Carter scored on a shot inside with 1:47 left and added two free throws with 1:28 remaining to put the Buckeyes ahead 81-76.

Two free throws by Ervin Small cut it to 81-78, but Mark Baker, who chipped in with 13 points, hit two free throws and Carter hit two more to put the game out of reach.

Jackson made 12 of 16 shots three of three from the foul line. He also had three rebounds and three assists.

Carter had a game-high 13 rebounds for the Buckeyes, but the Illini held a 37-33 advantage in rebounding.
