Nitrate levels safe again; treatment plant lifts city water ban

Jennifer Ritzinger
The Daily Iowan

The ban on Iowa City water has been lifted.

Ed Brinton, Iowa City water superintendent, said Monday that the nitrate level in the water is safe and has been for a week.

"It's back to normal," he said, adding that infants and pregnant and nursing women can now safely drink the water.

Tuesday, the Iowa City Water Treatment Plant reported the water nitrate level at 30, well under the maximum contaminant level of 45.

At its peak, the nitrate level in Iowa City water was 48, Brinton said. Nitrate can cause problems with hemoglobin and the transfer of oxygen.

Brinton said the plant waited a week before removing the ban, to ensure consistently low nitrate levels.

"We had one week when the river levels were lower than the federal 45-milligram-per-liter limits, and the mixed water was in the low 30s. We felt comfortable with removing that ban," he said.

Brinton said an excessive nitrate level is an annual occurrence in Iowa City.

"Usually this is a once-every-spring event, and the only thing that varies from spring to spring is how high the level gets. But almost every spring it goes up and it goes down," he said.

Two UI students said they were concerned by the treatment plant's ban on the water for pregnant women and infants.

"It worries you, like maybe you shouldn't drink it too," said UI sophomore Pam Group.

Kay Bredesky, a UI freshman, said that although she was not directly affected by it, the water ban did concern her.

"If it's bad for pregnant women and children, what does it do to us?" she asked. Brinton said he was not aware of any illnesses reported due to the nitrate levels.

A treatment plant worker said it would take a baby or a nursing or pregnant woman at least 10 days to be harmed by a high level of nitrates in the water. Iowa City water had excessive levels for only two days.

There is currently no mechanism at the plant for lowering the nitrate level.

Una'bridged' adventure unsuccessfully attempted to coax others into jumping with them and proceeded with thier una'bridged' adventure.

"Physiologically, the adrenaline-based reaction to stress is referred to as 'fight or flight.'"

Students seek to cut tension for finals week

Managing stress aids health

Eric Lewis
Special to The Daily Iowan

As finals week and the end of another academic year approach, the stress levels of college students inevitably begin to rise.

Symptoms like increased heart rates, dry mouths and nervous or upset stomachs seem to be completely normal side effects of this seasonal pressure for many students.

But fortunately, the causes and cures for stress are fairly easy to identify and manage.

In the 1989 spring survey Health Interests and Health Practices — administered by Health Iowa to undergraduate UI students — stress management ranked second out of 38 health concern topics. For junior and senior UI students, stress ranked first.

Such statistics are not surprising, according to Carol Horwitz, health educator for Health Iowa. Almost no one is immune to stress inducers, which can take many forms and fall into two categories: "eustress," a good type of stress, and "distress," a bad type of stress, Horwitz said.

Eustress is commonly caused by situations such as the birth of a baby, graduation or a new relationship. Distress can be caused by a financial crisis, academic pressure or a bad roommate situation. Both types of stress manifest themselves in the body and can produce very real physiological changes that can have detrimental effects on one's health, Horwitz said.

Although stress is sometimes unavoidable, there are steps that can be taken to alleviate and regulate it.

Horwitz says people can learn to take advantage of stress and excel in spite of it by using stress as a motivational force. She encourages people to "be like a Boy Scout — be prepared."

"Physiologically, the adrenaline-based reaction to stress is referred to as 'fight or flight,'" said Sam Cochran, director of clinical services at University Counseling Service.

"We perceive situations as threatening and are either prepared to fight some threatening intruder or to (take) flight," Cochran says. "(These are) our

Investigation of train derailment begins

BATAVIA, Iowa (AP) — Crews worked to clear overturned Amtrak cars from twisted train tracks Tuesday and federal investigators began looking for clues to the cause of the derailment that injured 91 people.

Investigators said the 16-car train apparently was traveling within the speed limit when eight cars left the tracks Monday afternoon.

Only about a dozen people remained hospitalized Tuesday. There were no deaths.

Amtrak's California Zephyr with 394 passengers and a crew of 24 was headed to Chicago from the West Coast when it derailed in southeastern Iowa on track owned by the Burlington Northern Railroad.

"We will not speculate at all as to the cause."

Drucella Anderson
NTSB spokeswoman

Board officials said preliminary findings of the investigation would not be released.

"We will not speculate at all as to the cause," NTSB spokeswoman Drucella Anderson told reporters.

An eight-member team from the NTSB leads the investigation, which involves about 40 officials from the Federal Railroad Administration, the Iowa Department of Transportation, Amtrak, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Burlington Northern.

NTSB member Susan Coughlin said investigators were divided into teams that will look at "track operations, mechanical, human performance and survival factors."

She said there was no indication that the track was in bad working condition.

"We do have investigative groups looking at the tracks specifically. They will be looking at the maintenance history on this track. They will be walking the track back two or three miles, documenting what damage was evident on the track and the ties itself," she said.

Behind the investigators, crews went to work on the twisted rail and gouged right-of-way in this town of 525 people, 90 miles southeast of Des Moines. Larry Allen, assistant transportation superintendent for Amtrak's Midwest Division, said the double-track route was expected to be reopened during the night.

Damage to the train was nearly $2 million and track repairs would cost $75,000, said C. William Autro, general superintendent for the Amtrak division.

Non-smokers more courteous than their smoking friends?

CHICAGO (AP) — Common courtesy often does not exist when it comes to smoking: Half of the smokers surveyed said they light up indoors without asking if anyone minds.

And non-smokers are reluctant to ask smokers not to puff despite the habit's declining social acceptability, according to a study released Tuesday.

"The bottom line is that most non-smokers are suffering in silence," said Dr. Ronald Davis, of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. "That's why we think the results of this study argue strongly for legislation in worksite smoking policies."

The U.S. Agriculture Department reported this month that cigarette use dropped 5 percent in 1989, the largest decrease in six years. Davis said surveys have found 29 percent of Americans smoked in 1987 compared with 40 percent in 1965 and 44 percent in 1949.

A survey of 22,043 people, published in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association, found that the proportion of smokers who say they don't smoke in indoor public places rose from 5 percent in 1974 to 33

Soviets stiffen borders; Lithuanians blame U.S.

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin reinforced KGB border guards in Lithuania on Tuesday, and Lithuania's president accused the United States of selling out his rebellious Baltic republic in its confrontation with the Soviet government.

The Soviet news agency Tass reported a gunfire attack Monday night on a Soviet army barracks in Vilnius, Lithuania's capital, but said no one was hurt.

President George Bush said in Washington he will not impose sanctions on the Soviet Union at this time over its crackdown on Lithuania. He said he feared sanctions might prompt Moscow "to take action that would set back the whole case of freedom around the world."

The Soviets have cut off oil, drastically curtailed natural gas and curbed other supplies to Lithuania in trying to force the republic to halt its six-week-old drive for independence.

Earlier, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Vadim Perfiliev warned that U.S. sanctions could have "negative consequences."

Perfiliev did not state directly that the Soviet Union might retaliate

Telescope is finally in outer space

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Seven years late, the Hubble Space Telescope is where it belongs — out of this world and in search of others so distant that they may have been formed at the beginning of time.

Less than five hours after it rode into space aboard the shuttle Discovery on Tuesday, the $1.5 billion telescope sent its first test radio signal. At the sign of life, applause and cheers erupted at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Maryland where astronomers monitored their spacecraft.

"As near as we can tell, everything looks perfect," said astronaut Steve Hawley from the shuttle. Hawley's job on Wednesday will be to drop the telescope overboard for a 15-year stay in space.

Discovery, trailing an arc of white smoke into a brilliant blue sky, carried the silver-colored telescope to an orbit 380 miles above Earth — higher by 70 miles than any previous shuttle. There, the Hubble will stay to search for yet-unseen wonders of creation

After a short delay, the space shuttle Discovery blasted into space Tuesday.

Branstad strengthens regulations on smoking

DES MOINES (AP)—Gov. Terry Branstad on Tuesday signed into law new restrictions on indoor smoking that for the first time include restaurants, in addition to more than doubling the fine for lighting up in the wrong place.

Branstad, a crusading anti-smoker who has banned cigarettes from the governor's mansion and banished cigarette vending machines from state buildings, said the expansion is "a significant and positive step" that could cut health-care costs.

"It reinforces that the state of Iowa has a public policy that recognizes the health of our citizens," said Branstad.

Under the law, restaurants which seat more than 50 people must provide separate sections for smokers and non-smokers, closing a major loophole in the state's restrictions on smoking adopted several years ago.

The law also sets the fine for violators at $25, up from the current $10, but also prohibits cities from adopting their own, tougher smoking restrictions.

"This was a compromise," said Branstad. "That's the way the legislative process works. Significant progress has been made."

Branstad pointed to the stiffer fine as a major step, saying the smaller fine "has reduced its effectiveness."

"The additional penalty, I think, will make it more effective to enforce," the governor said.

Branstad conceded that many restaurants, responding to demands from the growing non-smoking majority, have already moved to provide separate sections for smokers and non-smokers. Despite that, he said, the law sends a signal that state government is moving to cut down on smoking, and that could have long-term ramifications.

"It may be one of the most significant pieces of health-care cost containment legislation that we've done," he said.

Deere CEO receives UI business award

Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

Robert Hanson, chairman of Deere and Company, accepted the 1990 Oscar C. Schmidt Iowa Business Leadership Award at a banquet at the UI Tuesday night.

Over 250 people attended the event, including UI faculty members and representatives from many Iowa businesses. In his opening remarks, UI President Hunter Rawlings thanked those who helped push financing of the new business building through the Iowa Legislature.

The award, given by the UI College of Business Administration, recognizes outstanding achievements in the Iowa business community.

Hanson was selected by a committee of UI faculty and alumni appointed by George Daly, dean of the UI College of Business Administration, based on his achievements with the Deere company.

"During a time in which many of America's major manufacturers have experienced gradual declines, Bob Hanson has guided Deere through a demanding period and emerged with a vigorous company well positioned for the challenges of the 1990s," Daly said.

"I believe that such leadership demands recognition," he added. "And leadership is what Robert Hanson's brilliant career displays." Hanson accepted the award, but recognized help he received from other members of Deere and Company.

"I feel a little like a Heisman trophy winner. That honor, like this one, goes to an individual," Hanson said. "But neither football players nor corporation chairmen win such prestigious awards on their individual merits."

Hanson, a native of East Moline, Iowa, and graduate of Augustana College in Rock Island, began his career with Deere and Company in 1950. In 1982, Hanson was named chairman and chief executive officer.

Hanson said that the corporate world has changed since he entered it 40 years ago.

"We had it made — but no longer. Today, competitive pressure comes from every point on the compass," Hanson said.

"Much of the economic progress made by other nations has come at American expense," Hanson said. "Especially at the expense of the manufacturing sector of our economy."

But evidence suggests American manufacturers have "turned the corner from a state of competitive stragglings to a state of competitive equality" with most foreign rivals, Hanson said.

Scholars discuss women in theology

Deborah Gluba
The Daily Iowan

Five international scholars addressed the way women have been envisioned in the world's theological traditions Tuesday night in Van Allen Hall.

In the Hebrew Bible, women are shown in roles ranging from a childbearer to a judge to a ruler, according to Susan Carlson, a graduate student in the UI School of Religion, who spoke Tuesday. Further, the Old Testament spans thousands of years, took possibly hundreds of years to compile, and doubtless left out many influential women, she said.

"If we truly want of clear picture of a woman's place in ancient Israelite society, we must take note of these changes and develop our theories accordingly," she said.

In another presentation, Laila Elamim said Moslem women are often misunderstood in American culture, especially those who choose to wear veils which are a sign of honor to them.

By studying Islam, people can gain insight into the important role women play in Moslem culture, she said. For example, women are the core of the family, and have all the rights that men do, she said.

Islam scripture has taught for thousand of years that women have rights to education and economic independence as well as the right to vote and hold public office, she said.

Currently, governments in Indonesia, Pakistan, and Sudan are among those across the Moslem world that have female government officials, she said.

However, the media ignore these traditions and isolate terrorists as representative of the world Moslem community — when their rebel actions are not in keeping with the scripture's teachings, she said.

"I think all of us should go to the source of the real Moslem world, the source of that, and not mix what we are seeing here as something to do with Islam because that is wrong. Sometimes individuals, though they are Moslems, have wrong behaviors," she said.

Other presenters were: Shelly Hall, "Women in the New Testament"; Lynne Lundberg, "False Eyelashes and the Word of God: Evangelical Women on the Air"; and Frederick Smith, "The Ideal Women in Ancient India."

About 50 people, many from the School of Religion and international study programs, attended the discussion.

Speakers were invited by the UI Phi Beta Delta Honor Society for International Scholars.

Avenson takes gubernatorial bid to airwaves

DES MOINES (AP)—Democratic gubernatorial candidate Don Avenson launched his first round of radio and television advertising Tuesday with a five-minute assault on state giveaways to big business and rival Tom Miller's opposition to abortion.

Avenson said the media strategy was designed to increase his name identification and define his stands for voters in the June 5 Democratic primary.

"I think I need to speak directly to Iowans," Avenson said. "I don't think they know me well enough."

"This is a way for us to build name identity," he said. "Having been speaker for eight years doesn't get through."

"He said the broadcast talk is a cheap way to build a media presence before the last two weeks of the campaign, when all of the contenders plan high-profile television campaigns.

Avenson bought five minutes of time Tuesday on radio stations in Cedar Rapids, Davenport, Dubuque, Iowa City and Sioux City, and on independent Des Moines television station KDSM. Total cost was about $2,000.

In contrast to short, slick political ads, Avenson talks for five minutes, giving a biography of himself, attacking Miller and stating his opposition to state money going to meatpacking giant IBP Inc.

Conventional wisdom generally says viewer and listener interest won't last for five minutes, but Avenson said that may not be the case with his talks.

"I think because it's new and it hasn't been done that they'll pay attention," he said.

"We're going to do this more," Avenson said. He said he plans similar talks every couple of weeks until the final blitz. The spots are also aimed at emphasizing that Lt. Gov. JoAnn Zimmerman has dropped from the race to join him on the No. 2 slot on his ticket.

That move came after the primary ballot was certified, and her name will appear.

"This is an idea for me to extend my name identity, let Iowans know more about Don Avenson than he's Speaker of the House," said Avenson. "You can't do that in 30 seconds. You can flash images at people, you can leave impressions with people, but you can't say clearly what I stand for."

Avenson said he attempted to purchase radio time in Des Moines, but stations there were reluctant to run a lengthy political ad because they are in the midst of rating "sweeps."

That doesn't concern him, Avenson said, because attention he gets during legislative sessions in Des Moines has given him high name identification in the city.

"More people turn and look at me in supermarkets in Des Moines than they do in Oelwein," Avenson said.

If his media strategy is unusual, the subject matter of the talk isn't. "If the Democratic Party nominates Tom Miller, we will have abandoned our party's long commitment to a woman's right to choose," said Avenson, in a script provided to reporters. "And the women of Iowa will be faced with no choice in November."

Avenson said the ads would begin to build a link with viewers and listeners to set the stage for later ads.

"The radio buys we're doing are much cheaper than TV buys," he said.

Court dismisses civil suit against county board

Lindsay Alan Park
The Daily Iowan

A Des Moines federal court dismissed a civil lawsuit against the Johnson County Board of Supervisors Tuesday concerning restrictions on migrant labor camps.

Judge Harold Victor issued the order at 10:57 a.m., dismissing the suit on the grounds that the federal court did not have jurisdiction over cases involving parties who have pending state court cases between them, according to court officials.

The suit, which originally charged the board with civil rights violations and illegal discrimination, was filed in January by Lone Tree farmers Darrel Thomas Bell and Mary T. Bell and their Texas business associates, Constancio and Lydia Casarez.

The Bells filed the lawsuit after the board had voted down proposed amendments to a rural zoning ordinance, which would have allowed migrant labor camps to be located in Johnson County.

The suit also asked for temporary and permanent injunctions against enforcement of the existing ordinance, in order for the Bells to legally recruit laborers and set up migrant worker camps this summer.

Victor cited two federal cases, Younger v. Harris and Anderson v. Schultz, as legal precedents involving state court cases that contributed to his dismissal of the suit, according to court proceedings.

Four misdemeanor charges filed in March by the county against the Bells for an alleged violation of the zoning ordinance contributed to Victor's dismissal of the suit. A preliminary trial is scheduled for 9 a.m. June 12 in Iowa City.

Victor mandated that the county pay the court costs and attorney fees of the Bells.

Supervisor Dick Myers said he did not attend the hearing because the supervisors had not been asked to testify. He added that it is possible that the suit could be transferred to state court.

Neither Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White nor the Bells could be reached for comment Tuesday.

Students get dance lesson on obon odori

Japanese ritual inspires awe

Clare Thomas
The Daily Iowan

"Sun up, sun down. Palms, palms. Waves, waves. Push 'em back, push 'em back."

No, it's not a New Age chant, it's a group of Foreign Language House dancers teaching a classroom of seventh-graders the obon odori, a traditional Japanese dance.

One hundred noisy twelve- and thirteen-year-olds from Muscatine West and Central Middle Schools met at Muscatine West Middle School Tuesday during Earth Week 1990 for this, their own global conference.

Hand-painted flags decorated the walls, and signs with the names of countries hung from the ceiling.

On this afternoon they were focusing on Japan, where Muscatine has a sister city. To give them a first-hand taste of what Japanese culture is all about, nine students from the UI had come along to demonstrate the obon odori.

Cara Traver, a UI Japanese major, lived in Japan as a child and remembers listening in August for the drums signalling the Buddhist Obon festival to bring back the spirits of the dead.

"I have fun memories of dancing the obon odori," said Traver. "I want to share those memories with others."

Michelle Kodis, another UI Japanese major, thinks the Japanese have a beautiful culture. "We can show a bit of it in the dance," she said.

But walking down the corridors of the school, Kodis said she was a little unsure that this performance would be a success. "I think we're all nervous," she said. We don't really know if these kids want to see this."

It took a little while for the kids to settle down, and there were some giggles to begin with, perhaps at the sight of two men and seven women wearing kimonos. The dancers, looking a little nervous in front of this discriminating audience, introduced themselves.

Travers explained the meaning of the dance, but upon mentioning the spirits of the dead a silence fell over the teen-agers.

Not for long, though. The tape recorder was switched on, and the dancers began moving slowly in a circle, raising their arms to an imaginary sky and dropping back to face the dancers next to them.

And after a few minutes of watching the dance, the children's silence turned to oohs and ahs of appreciation.

Then it was time for the kids to give the obon odori a try.

Andy Wildenberg, president of the UI Foreign Language House, talks with seventh-graders from Muscatine.

With some scuffling and dragging, they cleared the room of chairs and formed into two giant concentric circles.

"Listen carefully," said Andy Wildenberg, a UI Spanish major and current president of the Foreign Language House.

At 6 feet 7 inches tall, he towered above the seventh-graders. "Listen carefully," he repeated, "because what we say will help you to do the dance properly."

And so began the strange chanting, the words illustrating the movements of the dance.

Some of the boys looked a little sheepish to begin with. They had never done anything like this before, and it took them a while to pick up the movements.

The obon odori is formal and restrained, the very opposite of what children in the USA think of as dance, one UI performer said.

"You can go into a meditative state of mind in this dance," said Karen Lunde, a UI Japanese major.

At the end, the kids cheered in applause — and the dancers breathed sighs of relief.

"They were so enthusiastic," Travers said afterward. Wildenberg agreed. "It worked better than I thought it would," he said. "It went really well."

So well that the dancers treated themselves to ice cream before returning to Iowa City.

Iowan watches son zoom to space as shuttle commander

PATON, Iowa (AP) — Iowa native Loren Shriver is becoming a space shuttle veteran, but his mother still cannot take launch day in stride.

"The more you know, the more anxious you are. Sometimes it helps to be dumb," Jessie Shriver said after watching her son ride into space Tuesday as commander of the space shuttle Discovery.

Jessie Shriver and her husband, Darrell, watched the launch at Paton Sundries, where a full house was treated to free coffee and donuts as the launch was shown on television.

"They had balloons all over," said Jessie Shriver.

Loren Shriver heads a crew of space veterans on the flight. The 45-year-old astronaut first flew into space as pilot of NASA's first secret shuttle mission for the Pentagon. That January 1985 flight lasted three days.

Shriver's parents were on hand to watch that launch in person but decided to stay at home in this central Iowa city on Tuesday.

With 31 seconds left in the countdown, a valve on the shuttle failed to close. The problem was quickly overcome and the countdown resumed after a three-minute pause.

"I thought it sounded kind of serious," said Jessie Shriver.

The shuttle finally roared into the sky at about 7:34 a.m., to cheers at the Paton coffee shop.

"It was quite a relief," she said.

Loren Shriver was born in Jefferson and grew up in Paton, where he attended high school.

He graduated from the Air Force

Academy with a bachelor's degree in aeronautical engineering. He earned a master's degree in astronautical engineering from Purdue University.

He attended the Air Force test pilot school at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., and worked on development test and evaluation of the F-15 fighter aircraft. In 1978, he was selected for astronaut training.

He and his wife, Susan, have four children.

The last time the National Aeronautics and Space Administration flew a crew of shuttle veterans was on the first post-Challenger flight, in the fall of 1988.

The excitement surrounding the long-awaited mission continued to mount as the launch day neared, Loren Shriver said in a recent interview.

"This is a major milestone," he said.

"I think they're (scientists using Hubble) going to make some discoveries and answer some questions we've got now and probably raise a lot more than we know about right now."

Camouflage jacket may link assault, robbery

Jodi M. Hamel
The Daily Iowan

Unknown assailants wearing camouflage jackets robbed a local business and accosted a woman in separate incidents Tuesday night in downtown Iowa City.

Police are unsure whether the same person committed both crimes or if the two incidents are related, according to Iowa City Detective Mike Brotherton.

In the first incident, at about 8:03 p.m., a woman reported being accosted by a 16-year-old white male near Plaza Centre One after making a cash withdrawal in the Old Capitol Center.

The victim said the boy had long, dark brown hair and was wearing a camouflage coat and dark shoes.

The assailant ran west through the pedestrian mall before discarding the camouflage jacket in a garbage can on North Capitol Street, behind the Old Capitol Center.

Ten minutes later, at 8:13 p.m., an employee of The Soap Opera, 119 East College Street, reported a robbery.

The robber was described by the employee as a white female with long dark hair and brown eyes, who was wearing an oversized camouflage jacket.

The employee indicated the robber was armed but showed no weapon, according to the police report.

The robber escaped with an undetermined amount of cash.

Both incidents are still under investigation.

evolutionary adaptive responses." Stress management begins by examining one's lifestyle, he added. In other words, no amount of exercise or abundance of relaxation techniques will cure stress if the amount of stress supersedes the normal level the average human being can handle.

Both Health Iowa, located in the Student Health Service, and University Counseling Service offer seminars and individual consultations for students interested in becoming more educated about stress management.

Horowitz recommends the following tips for effective stress management:

- Exercise regularly. Try to do something physical every day, whether it's biking, walking, running or doing aerobics.

- Get enough sleep. Try to get eight hours of sleep every night, and plan to sleep in accordance with your daily schedule.

- Eat the right foods. Avoid foods that are high in fat and sugar. Eat foods high in complex carbohydrates and fiber and avoid too much caffeine, which acts as a stressor.

- Create a safe, unchallenged environment where you can go to relax. This could be your room or apartment, a park or some other secluded area.

- Do some simple relaxation techniques daily. Deep breathing and yawning are great stress-relievers that can be done anywhere at any time.

- Learn how to say no. Not only is it empowering to the self-esteem, but saying no also prevents you from taking on too many activities or responsibilities that could add to your stress level.

Amtrak

righting the derailed cars. The damaged cars were to be taken to Fairfield, Iowa, about 15 miles east of Batavia, for inspection and repair. The three locomotives and eight other undamaged cars headed east to Chicago late Monday.

Coughlin said it appeared the Zephyr had not exceeded the 79-mph speed limit.

On-board data recorders keep track of a train's speed limit and other factors, including whether a car is dragging a foreign object along the track. Coughlin said there were three recorders, one for each of the train's three locomotives.

An initial check of the devices' tapes by Burlington Northern officials gave "no indication that there was any dragging equipment," she said.

"They are being read out on a preliminary basis now. Eventually we will take custody and take them back to Washington," Coughlin said.

Coughlin said no results were available on mandatory drug tests the crew underwent.

Amtrak and American Red Cross representatives loaded two buses with about 40 passengers who stayed overnight in Ottumwa, about 10 miles west of Batavia, and sent them to Chicago. Carol Grant, field service manager for the Red Cross, said those were the last of the passengers who were aboard the Zephyr.

At Jefferson County Hospital in Fairfield, a spokeswoman said two of the nine patients admitted overnight were released Tuesday morning. The remaining patients were all in good, stable condition.

Skip Deskin, vice president of Ottumwa Regional Medical Center, said at least three of the nine patients who stayed overnight were discharged Tuesday morning with more expected to be released soon.

Lithuania

but said "any actions taken which could pull apart the sides of the argument of course could have negative consequences, not only for the Soviet Union but for the international situation."

After Bush's announcement, President Vytautas Landsbergis of Lithuania issued an angry statement from Vilnius.

"Can the freedom of one group of people be sold for the freedom of another? What then is the idea of freedom itself?" he said.

"This is another Munich." He was referring to the 1938 Munich Pact, in which France and Britain allowed Nazi Germany to take control of Czechoslovakia. The treaty was widely viewed as caving in to Adolf Hitler. The pact became a symbol of appeasement.

Tass and Soviet TV's nightly newscast reported Bush's announcement. Tass also quoted Soviet army Maj. Alexei Kirichenko as saying a shot was fired at an open window at about 10 p.m. when soldiers were already inside the barracks. It said the bullet smashed a window on the opposite wall, and that ballistics experts believe a combat weapon, and not a hunting rifle was used.

The agency also reported from Vilnius that the Lithuanian parliament on Tuesday set up a commission to "prepare anti-blockade measures" and named Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene as commission chief.

President Mikhail Gorbachev's advisers refused on Tuesday to receive a five-member Lithuanian delegation sent to Moscow to discuss the plight of the republic after a week of enduring the Kremlin economic blockade.

Lithuania hopes to make up for some of the supplies Moscow has cut with imports from abroad. But the KGB's announcement that it was adding personnel and equipment to guard the republic's border appeared designed as a warning against such a step.

Lt. Anatoly Parakhin of the KGB, whose forces are responsible for Soviet borders, did not specify in a Moscow briefing what the secret police were looking for, but indicated weapons were on the list.

"Control has been established over possible contacts between Soviet and foreign ships in territorial waters and within the borders of the economic zone of the U.S.S.R. to avert the transfer of weapons and ammunition to Lithuania," Tass quoted Parakhin as saying.

"The movement through the border of all cargo and means of transportation is being most carefully controlled.

"All coastal fishing ships, without exception, are being inspected by border details."

He said the stepped-up control was justified by an April 12 incident in which 240,000 rounds of hunting ammunition were found aboard the Soviet ship Marat Kozlov, Tass said. It was sailing to Lithuania from West Germany.

The increased border patrols were in line with a March 21 Kremlin statement calling for increased security on the Lithuanian section of the Soviet border.

Moscow began tightening its economic vise last week after Lithuania refused to rescind laws bolstering its March 11 declaration of independence.

Prunskiene returned to Moscow from Scandinavia on Monday on a trip to seek foreign support, especially oil.

V. Mosolov, an official of the State Supplies Committee in Moscow, told the news agency that railroad tanker cars needed to transport imported oil in Lithuania belong to the Soviet Railways Ministry, and not the republic. He seemed to imply the republic would not be allowed to use ministry facilities.

Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, is facing his first re-election bid since he was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1984. Harkin, 51, was born in Cumming, Iowa, and attended Iowa State University before receiving his law degree from the Catholic University of America. He served in the House of Representatives for ten years before being elected to the Senate.

Tom Harkin

Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, is facing his first re-election bid since he was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1984. He serves on the Senate Appropriations, Agriculture, Labor and Human Resources and Small Business committees. He is being challenged by Rep. Tom Tauke, R-Iowa 2nd District.

The Daily Iowan's Ann Marie Williams interviewed Harkin Saturday while he was in Iowa City as keynote speaker for the Iowa Young Democrats Convention.

DI: Tomorrow, people worldwide will celebrate the 20th anniversary of Earth Day. President Bush has identified the environment as one of his top political priorities, but many Congressional Democrats have criticized the White House's environmental initiatives as lacking substance.

Are you satisfied with the Bush administration's effort on environmental issues, and what do you think the president should do to make his administration more responsive to environmental concerns?

Harkin: I think basically Bush has been giving lip service to the environment. We passed the Clean Air Bill in the Senate, and had several amendments to strengthen the bill in many regards, yet the Bush administration threatened to veto the bill if any of these were passed. One of them would have been very helpful to Iowa because it would have mandated the use of more ethanol in fuel. We lost it, I think, by one vote.

I also think the environment is going to be a key issue in my campaign and one of the cutting issues in the early part of the '90s. People are demanding clean air and clean water — they want recreational places. People want to make sure that we also work to stop the deforestation of the rain forests, and to pay attention to and do something with other countries addressing the issue of overpopulation. I think this is going to be a big difference in the campaign between me and my opponent. My opponent voted for all these amendments to weaken environmental legislation. As a matter of fact I just received the Sierra Club's endorsement for my campaign for re-election, and I think that's significant.

Do you think the Bush administration is more focused on the environment than the Reagan administration was?

Well, yeah, but that's not saying a heck of a lot. The Reagan administration, with James Watt, wanted to turn the clock back to the last century. But the Bush administration is not aggressively moving forward, it's just sort of at a standstill. It's a minimalist approach.

When Vice President Quayle was campaigning in Iowa recently, he said that the public should regard the highly publicized "peace dividend" as peace itself, and not expect tremendous savings from defense funds. Do you agree with the vice president, or do you expect to see immediate major defense savings because of improved relations with the Soviet Union?

I disagree totally with Mr. Quayle. Right now we are spending as much on defense as we spent at the height of the Vietnam War, when you adjust for inflation in real dollars. We're spending as much to defend Europe — this year — from an invasion by the Soviet Union, than before the Berlin Wall came down, before the changes in the Soviet Union. One hundred and eighty billion dollars is what we're spending this year (to defend Europe from a Soviet invasion). It doesn't make sense.

Yes, there should be a peace dividend. I have called for a 10 percent cut in budget authority for the military this year, with further reductions by 1995, and by the end of this decade a 50 percent cut in defense spending, from the $300 billion level down to about $150 billion, and to use that peace dividend for much-needed investment in our own economy — to use a lot of it to reduce the deficit, and to use a lot of it to invest in education, biomedical research, rebuilding our infrastructure of roads and bridges, and sewer systems, and also to help clean up the environment. I think the money would be much better spent there.

While there may not be an immediate peace dividend this year, if we don't start cutting the budget authority of the Department of Defense this year, we won't even have a peace dividend in the mid-'90s. Under the proposal that I have advocated, in the next decade we would have something close to a trillion dollars that would be available for deficit reduction, spending on education, health care, environment, and infrastructure rebuilding. Otherwise, we will not have it.

It's obvious that Vice President Quayle just wants to put money in the military; that's all he's ever wanted.

So far, the Bush administration has been unwilling to make a firm commitment to the Lithuanian independence movement. Do you believe that maintaining the current state of relations between the U.S. and the Soviet Union should be a higher priority than backing Lithuania? Are you satisfied with the Bush administration's handling of the Lithuania situation so far?

Basically, I have been satisfied with Bush's handling of the Lithuanian situation. I do not believe we should back down from our long-stated position we've always had of never recognizing the Soviet Union's annexation of the Baltic nations — Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia. However, we must recognize that the new dynamics of the Soviet Union, what's happening in Eastern Europe, and we should work cautiously and carefully towards what I would call an eventual commonwealth status for Lithuania, much like Canada has with Great Britain today.

Gorbachev is now attempting to isolate the Lithuanian government with an economic blockade. At what point, if any, do you believe it would be appropriate for the U.S. to intervene in the dispute, and what should the intervention entail?

I still want to proceed very cautiously, very carefully in this whole Lithuanian situation. I believe we should try to help mitigate this, to help in a transition period for the Lithuanians. That's what we should be doing, not trying to fan the fires, not trying to take one side over the other, but to try to bring the sides together in recognition of their mutual interests.

Responding to President Bush's address on education earlier this year, you said improving the American education system would require an ambitious "moon-shot" initiative, but you said the American public would be willing to pay higher taxes to fund that kind of program. Days after Iowa newspapers reported that you supported a tax increase for education, you said people had misunderstood your comments and that the money for the program would come from existing revenues.

Do you believe higher taxes are the answer to the American educational dilemma, and do you believe that the American people would be willing to pay them?

Last summer, and last year, I had been talking about the need to get more resources into education. I said at the time that any time I asked Iowans, they said they would be willing to pay for it if they knew the money would be going to education. I talked this spring about a dedicated source of revenue for education.

There have been a lot of changes since last year — the Berlin Wall going down, the breaking down of the Iron Curtain, the whole reduction in tensions. Now we can reduce military spending a lot. We can use that money to put into education. I think first we should reduce military spending, shift some of that into education. That's why I no longer see that need for asking people to pay more for education, because I believe we can get it out of our savings or peace dividend.

"I'm in a very solid position, a very solid base of 51 to 52 percent."

I still want to explore the possibility of putting dedicated revenues into education.

In Senate hearings earlier this year, Sen. Edward Kennedy challenged National Drug Policy Director William Bennett's assertion that, given the choice between strengthening law enforcement or improving education, Bennett would choose tougher law enforcement in order to eradicate America's drug problem. What do you believe should be the appropriate balance between enforcement and education in America's drug policy?

I believe there should be a balance. We passed a law in Congress saying that it should be 50/50 — 50 percent of the funds we provide should go for education, treatment (and) rehabilitation, and 50 percent should go to interdiction and law enforcement. The Bush administration has not been doing that, and we've had to fight to get more money into treatment and education.

How do you evaluate the effectiveness of Bennett's policy so far? In what areas should more emphasis be placed?

More emphasis must be placed on education — early childhood education, especially among high-risk students who are in those situations where they'd be more susceptible to drugs. We've got to put it into early childhood education, treatment on demand, and rehabilitation.

President Bush backs the death penalty for convicted drug kingpins. Do you support the president on this issue, and do you advocate the death penalty under any circumstances?

No, I've never advocated the death penalty. I am opposed to the death penalty. This is all much ado about nothing. Drug kingpins don't get the death penalty. I think we spend so much time and so much money to get a penalty of capital punishment — it requires a huge investment in resources of money and time. The best thing is to go after education, treatment and rehabilitation. And we're going to lock them up — put them away for a long time, put them away for life.

Abortion has emerged as an important political issue on the state level. You have been labeled as a "pro-choice" candidate, while Tom Tauke has been labeled "pro-life." Do you think those labels adequately encompass the abortion issue, and do you feel your views reflect the views of most Iowans?

The labels do not reflect the positions. The best labels are that I'm pro-choice and he's anti-choice, because I am also pro-life. But the issue of choice is not how you feel about abortion, but who decides. And my opponent believes the government should decide. I trust the women of Iowa and the nation to make that decision.

To what extent do you support a woman's right of choice?

I support the provisions of Roe v. Wade, and making sure we have no erosion of those provisions.

Do you support any restrictions on abortion?

Roe v. Wade has restrictions on abortion. Roe v. Wade says the state may implement laws that restrict abortions in the third trimester. There are already those kinds of restrictions.

What do you think is the appropriate role of a U.S. Senator on the abortion issues? Should they vote based on their conscience and their personal beliefs or based on the attitude of their constituency?

Like anything else, it's a mixture of both — it's what you believe and how your constituents feel. That's always a judgmental call for any elected official. You have to balance those. You can't go against your own conscience, but you've got to think about what your constituents want.

In February, you corresponded with Tom Tauke to plan seven debates in order to provide Iowans with a fact-based, issue-oriented campaign. Yet, both campaigns have been accused by the other of negative campaigning tactics. Do you think the Harkin-Tauke race has turned negative? Will it? What is the status of the seven debates?

The Des Moines Register carried an editorial saying the GOP was slinging the first mud in my campaign. My opponent listened to his people. Every time he talks he's always going after my character, and I was hoping it would stay on a high plane. I still hope that it will. And, yes, there will be debates.

Recently, you were listed by The New York Times as the third-ranking senator in terms of the percentage of campaign donations raised from out-of-state contributors. The Times reported that over 90 percent of the money you raised last year came from out of state. Why do you raise such a high percentage of your contributions from out of state? Do you believe that those numbers indicate that you are in any way out of touch with your constituency?

Your question is wrong. Your question is faulty. The Times did not say that. What The New York Times said was that 90 percent of the contributions I received in denominations of $200 or more came from out of state. That fact is 1/3 of my contributions come from individuals in the state of Iowa, 1/3 come from individuals outside of Iowa, 1/3 comes from PACs, and many of those PACs represent people in the state of Iowa.

The Harkin-Tauke race has been tabbed as one of the hottest senate campaigns in the country this year. It has been decades since a Democratic senator from Iowa has won a second term, yet you still lead Tom Tauke by 10 to 11 points. At this point in the race how do you assess your re-election chances?

I believe I'm in a very solid position, a very solid base of 51 to 52 percent. I think for a Democrat in Iowa that's very good. I feel good about my position. The last poll had me (with) 51, my opponent (with) 40, with 9 percent undecided. I think that's a good strong position for me to be in, and I believe I will be re-elected. I'll take my case to the people of Iowa. It's going to be a tough campaign. I take nothing for granted, and I'm going to go out and campaign hard.

What makes you a more attractive political commodity to the people of Iowa than Tom Tauke?

I believe that the things that I have fought for, the policies and programs, my position in the Senate — where I can really help the state of Iowa — are reasons why I believe I'm going to be re-elected.

Rep. Tom Tauke, R-Iowa, is challenging Sen. Tom Harkin for his U.S. Senate seat. Tauke has served as Iowa's 2nd District representative since he was first elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1978. Tauke, 40, is a native of Dubuque, Iowa, and attended Loras College before receiving his law degree from the UI.

Rep. Tom Tauke, R-Iowa, is challenging Sen. Tom Harkin for one of Iowa's U.S. Senate seats. He has served as Iowa's 2nd District Representative since 1978. Tauke serves on the House Energy and Commerce, Education and Labor, and Select Aging committees.

Daily Iowan editor Jay Casini interviewed Tauke Friday from Washington. DI: On Sunday, the 20th Anniversary of Earth Day will be celebrated worldwide. President Bush has identified the environment as one of his top priorities, but many Congressional Democrats have criticized his initiatives as lacking substance. What would the president do to make his administration more responsive to environmental concerns?

Tauke: I don't think that the criticism is really warranted. The president has moved on a number of environmental issues, most specifically the major environmental issue of the decade — clean air. The reason that we are succeeding this year is because the president put a package on the table and has pushed Congress to enact clean air legislation. I think that initiative alone justifies a substantial amount of credit to the president for his environmental record.

Now that doesn't mean that I think they are doing everything right. For example, I would like to see the president be more forthcoming on the global warming issue.

I don't think that you can expect that in 16 months in office, they are going to solve all of the problems of the world, but if you look at where we are today versus where we were 16 months ago, we've made considerable progress.

So you believe the Bush administration is more focused on environmental issues than the Reagan administration?

Absolutely. I think it's the difference between night and day. When Vice President Quayle was in Iowa campaigning for you recently, he said the public should regard the "peace dividend" as simply peace itself, and not expect tremendous savings from defense funds. Do you expect improved relations with the Soviet Union to allow for significantly decreased defense spending?

We are already seeing some reductions on defense. If you look at what we're spending on defense now, in comparison to what was projected for (defense) expenditures in 1985 for 1990, we have reduced substantially the commitment to defense. And that is the "peace dividend" that we are already experiencing. Over the next several years the nation's defense commitment will continue to decline, and as a result we will have some amount of peace dividend.

The only problem is that we never could afford the amount we were spending on defense in the early '80s and mid-'80s, and so as a result, the amount of what will be savings I don't think one can assume will be extra money laying around. It is money that shouldn't have been spent in the first place.

Where should that money be reallocated?

My judgment is that our first priority is to get our fiscal house in order and take care of the deficit.

So far, the Bush administration seems unwilling to make a firm commitment to the independence movement in Lithuania. Do you believe maintaining good relations with the Soviet Union should be a higher priority than backing Lithuania?

I don't think it's an either-or situation. Understand that right now the Soviets are in desperate shape domestically. The economy of the Soviet Union is in shambles, and Gorbachev's hope for survival, as well as his hope for avoiding even further economic problems on the homefront, is to open up new relationships with the U.S. and the West. He is doing it not because he is a candidate for sainthood, but because it is a practical requirement of the situation he faces.

Recognizing that he needs us right now more than we need him, we need to understand that in order for us to provide him the assistance he needs — and I'm talking about trade and other openings to the West — we should have certain standards. One should be that he does not oppress the people of Lithuania and others within the Soviet Union who are trying to exercise legitimate human rights.

We should not send the message that we are willing to sacrifice our principles in order to maintain a good relationship with him. So, yes, I think the Bush administration should be firmer in its commitment to the Lithuanian movement, and I hope that they are being firmer in the private discussions while maybe not trying to embarrass Gorbachev in public.

Gorbachev is now attempting to pressure the Lithuanian government with an economic blockade.

At what point, if any, do you believe it would be appropriate for the U.S. to intervene in the dispute, and what should that intervention entail?

I don't think that the U.S. should intervene directly at this juncture. First of all, simply from a logistical standpoint, it's very difficult for the U.S. to do that. I think what we should be attempting to do is work with countries like Norway to ease the economic blockage that the U.S. has put on the government of Lithuania. Norway has expressed an interest in helping Lithuania with fuel, oil and gas supply. I think it would be enormously helpful to the Lithuanian people if we can be instrumental in assisting Norway in delivering that help.

Would that type of indirect interference risk our relationship with Gorbachev?

If we caved in to everything the Soviets wanted, we could have a great relationship, but what kind of relationship is that over the long term? We want a relationship that is built on a foundation that is firm and strong, insuring that there is responsible behavior on the part of the Soviet Union. If we cave in on Lithuania, there will be other problems to follow.

Responding to President Bush's message on education earlier this year, Tom Harkin said improving the American educational system would require an ambitious "moon-shot" initiative, but he said Americans would be willing to pay higher taxes to fund that type of program. Do you think that higher taxes are the answer to America's educational dilemma, and do you believe the American people would be willing to pay them?

First, I do not believe that higher taxes would be an appropriate response.

The education system generally in the major cities of the country is considered to be in a state of disarray and collapse. Putting money in was not the answer. I think it is fair to assert that during the 1970s and 1980s across the nation that we've seen a substantial growth in our financial commitment to education that has resulted in very little improvement in the quality of education being imparted on our students, particularly on the elementary and secondary levels.

So I think that before we begin to suggest that the answer is additional funds, we have to look beyond that to what that money should be directed toward. First, I believe you have to have some standards. Part of the problem is that you can move from grade to grade without meeting standards, so you have people getting their high-school diplomas who are unable to read them. That is a sad commentary on the educational system's standards. Second, we should attempt where possible to give parents some choice as to where they send their children to school. And third, I think that we should recognize that we have a lot of children who don't have a family support system, and there we do have a special obligation.

Abortion has emerged as an important political issue on the state level. You have been labeled as a "pro-life" candidate, while Tom Harkin has been labeled "pro-choice." In a state where polls indicate that the majority of voters regard themselves as "pro-choice," do you feel out of sync with Iowans on this issue?

I don't feel out of sync. I think the polls also indicate that the vast majority of Iowans agree with me on the specifics of the abortion issue, even though they may label themselves as "pro-choice." Every poll I have seen suggests that Iowans do not believe that abortions should be performed in the third trimester. Iowans do not believe that birth control should be permitted for the purpose of sex selection or birth control. Iowans do not believe that the federal government should use their tax dollars to pay for abortions.

So you do not advocate a total ban on abortion?

I think that you have got to look at the abortion issue as the major human rights issue of our time, and the key question is — "is the unborn child a human being, and should that human being be extended the rights of a person under the Constitution? I believe the scientific evidence is overwhelming that the unborn child is a person, and therefore I think the issue has to be considered as a conflict of rights between two individuals: in this case, the mother and the child.

The rights of the mother ought to be protected to the maximum extent possible, as should the rights of the child. What makes it difficult, of course, is that those rights come into conflict in a very intimate way in the abortion issue, and my judgment is that in most instances the rights of the child are going to prevail. But that right is not going to be absolute when it is in conflict with the mother's rights, so there are instances — such as when the life of the mother is in danger — when the mother's rights should prevail.

What about in the cases of rape or incest?

These are the most difficult issues. First, I believe that any woman who is the victim of that type of crime should be given aggressive medical treatment immediately in order to prevent a pregnancy. I don't believe, however, that if that pregnancy has been allowed to exist for three or four months, that it would be appropriate to abort unless there are some other compelling reasons.

What do you think is the appropriate role of a member of Congress on the abortion issue? Should they vote based on their conscience or on the attitudes of their constituents?

When I take the oath of office, I take an oath to uphold the constitution, and if I believe that the Constitution protects the rights of individuals, then I have a solemn obligation to make certain that those rights are protected.

In Senate hearings earlier this year, Sen. Edward Kennedy challenged National Drug Policy Director William Bennett's assertion that, given the choice between education and enforcement, Bennett would choose tougher enforcement to eradicate America's drug problem. What do you believe should be the appropriate balance between enforcement and education?

First, I don't think it is a matter of choosing between the two. We have to have both education and enforcement, and I would underscore that education does work. We have reduced the number of casual drug users in this country by about half over the last four of five years and that is the result of education.

At the same time you have to have tough law enforcement, and I believe the balance we have struck last year in the Congress is very good. Where we have a problem yet is in the third stage, and that is rehabilitation. When we better know how to rehabilitate those who use drugs, we will need to make a much larger commitment to rehabilitation as well.

President Bush supports the death penalty for convicted drug kingpins. Do you support the president on this issue, and do you advocate the death penalty in any situation?

No. I don't favor the death penalty under any circumstances.

In February, you corresponded with Senator Harkin to plan seven debates in order to give Iowans a "fact-based and issue-oriented campaign." Yet, both campaigns have already been accused of using negative campaigning tactics. Do you think the Harkin-Tauke campaign race has turned negative? Will it? And what is the status of the seven debates?

I don't think the race has turned negative. There have been a few shots off the bow here and there, but I don't think that the race is a negative race at this point.

So what is the status of the seven debates now?

Unfortunately, I can't discuss that with you. I'd like to, but the first agreement that we made when we opened negotiations on debates is that we would not discuss what was happening in those negotiations until they were concluded.

The Harkin-Tauke race has been tabbed as one of the hottest senate campaigns in the country this year. Iowa polls have shown you narrowly leading Senator Harkin's lead in the last several months, but recent polls still have you trailing by nine to 11 points. At this point in the race, how do you assess your chances to unseat Harkin?

I always suggest that the candidates are probably the least reliable sources in handicapping the race. Nevertheless, I'll rely on a few observations that refer on the assessments of others.

As far as I know, every political analyst in the country has labeled our race a toss-up. The reason for that assessment is that Senator Harkin has been hovering at the 50 percent level in the polls, and the rule of thumb in the political arena is that if an incumbent has 60 percent or more, they are probably pretty safe. If they have 55 to 60 percent, they probably have some work to do. If they have in the 50 to 55 percent area, they are in serious trouble, and if they have below 50 percent they'd better start looking for new employment, and that's regardless of what the challenger has.

If we can be in a position by Labor Day where we are within 10 to 12 points, I think we will win.

What makes you a more attractive political commodity than Tom Harkin to the people of Iowa?

I better represent the views and values of the people of this state and I think I can do a better job of representing those interests and concerns.

Romanians continue to taunt Ilescu

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Thousands of anti-Communist demonstrators regrouped in a main Bucharest square hours after being dispersed by riot police Tuesday to demand the resignation of Interim President Ion Ilescu.

About 3,500 demonstrators waved their fists and cheered as one speaker equated the National Salvation Front — Ilescu's party — with the Soviet KGB. Many shouted, "Down With Communism!"

It was the third day of nearly constant protest against Ilescu and the Front, which are linked in the minds of many Romanians with past Communist excesses.

Ilescu was appointed interim president in the wake of the bloody December revolution that overthrew dictator Nicolae Ceausescu. He served under Ceausescu but fell out of favor and was demoted to lesser jobs in the Communist Party.

His Communist past and that of other Front officials makes them suspect in the eyes of those Romanians who claim the Front has been infiltrated by Marxists paying only lip service to democracy.

In a morning session of parliament, Nica Leon, president of the Liberal Democratic Party and a member of the governing Council of National Unity, said the protesters rejected what they considered the Communist elite still leading the country.

"Those people want the (former) Communists toppled from the leadership," he told the Council. The Council, in which the Front shares power with opposition groups, is acting as a makeshift parliament until elections scheduled for May 20.

Ilescu described the protesters as "thugs." That drew protests from opposing legislators who noted that Anti-communist demonstrators break through police lines during continuing demonstrations in Bucharest, Romania. The protesters are demanding the resignation of President Ion Ilescu.

Ceausescu used such language to label his political opponents.

The demonstrations at University Square began Sunday and lasted uninterrupted until Tuesday at dawn, when club-wielding, helmeted riot police forcibly dispersed about 200 protesters who had remained in the square.

Protesters began reassembling during the morning and continued their rally into Tuesday evening.

It was the first time since Ceausescu's overthrow that police force was used to break up an anti-Communist street protest.

The demonstration was the chief topic during a session of the interim parliament that continued into the evening and was broadcast live by state television.

The inspector general of police, identified only as Gen. Diamandescu, said nobody was beaten during Tuesday's police intervention, but three policemen were hospitalized after being injured by demonstrators.

That assertion was disputed both by legislators and by demonstrators who said in interviews that they had been beaten.

"This morning the policemen came and clubbed us into the ground," Silviu Galniceanu, a 23-year-old photographer told The Associated Press. In a related development, Ion Ratiu, the presidential candidate of the National Peasants Party in the May 20 elections, said his life had been threatened by a mob instigated by the Front.

Ratiu, a Romanian millionaire who returned from decades of British self-exile this year, said he had to be spirited out of a police station in Buzau, about 120 miles northeast of Bucharest, in a milk van after an angry crowd threatened to storm the station.

"I thought, 'We'll be lucky if we get away with our lives,'" said Ratiu, 72.

Islamic group sends threat of terrorism

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A group calling itself Islamic Jihad Movement-Jerusalem said Tuesday it would launch attacks against Americans unless the U.S. Senate reverses a motion endorsing a united Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

The group made the threat in an Arabic-language typewritten statement delivered to Beirut's An-Nahar newspaper.

"The American Senate should reverse its decision in 10 days, or else every American inside and outside Moslem countries will be a target of terrorism and revenge," said the statement.

The U.S. Senate, on a voice vote, passed a motion March 22 endorsing a united Jerusalem as the capital of Israel.

The motion is non-binding and is opposed by the Bush administration, which does not recognize Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

The communiqué said the U.S. move has "encouraged the Zionists and made them capture... a building belonging to Greek Orthodox Palestinians... as a step which will be followed by others."

Some 150 Jews occupied a 72-room building complex in the heart of the Arab Christian quarter of old Jerusalem earlier this month.

The Greek Orthodox church has filed a lawsuit against the new settlement, claiming the four buildings it occupies are owned by the church and were illegally sold by a former tenant.

The United States has denounced the settlement as well as the use of U.S. aid money to finance it.

A group calling itself Islamic Jihad-Beit al-Maqdis, or Islamic Holy War-Jerusalem, claimed responsibility for a bus attack in Egypt in February that killed nine Israelis.

Bush to send Nicaragua medical aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President George Bush will invoke emergency authority to send $2.6 million in medical aid to Nicaragua in time for the presidential inauguration today of Violeta Chamorro, congressional and administration sources said.

The move was timed to give Vice President Dan Quayle the chance to deliver good news when he represents Bush at the swearing-in ceremony in Managua, the sources said. Quayle also will report progress toward sending previously promised food and other aid for the new government, the sources said.

Bush's request for $300 million to begin economic recovery in Nicaragua, part of an $870 million aid request that also includes Panama, had been stalled on Capitol Hill by a dispute over unrelated legislation. That snarl was resolved late Tuesday, but it remained unlikely the full aid package would be approved immediately.

Failure to approve the full aid package by Chamorro's inauguration should not be seen as an embarrassment, said House

Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash. "It is a matter of procedures here," he told reporters. "We have procedures that obviously have to go forward, and I think eventually that aid package will be voted."

The administration aid request for Nicaragua is designed to help that country — now among the poorest in the hemisphere — recover from a decade of civil war and U.S. trade sanctions. It includes money to meet immediate needs for planting of crops and for fuel.

Officials of the new government acknowledge they face a thorny challenge in meeting the expectations of the electorate for a better standard of living.

Chamorro was elected overwhelmingly in February elections to replace President Daniel Ortega of the leftist Sandinista party.

The medical assistance would be the first direct U.S. aid to the Central American country in nine years, since President Ronald Reagan cut off aid shortly after taking office in 1981.

Bush is seeking $300 million as a first installment of aid for the country, along with $500 million for Panama. But the aid package, a version of which has been passed by the House, had been held up in the Senate by a dispute over child-care legislation.

The dispute was settled late Tuesday, and the Senate Appropriations Committee planned to meet on the Central America aid bill late in the day. Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said he expected the measure to be on the Senate floor Wednesday.

Bush made the urgency of the supplemental money bill the top item on his agenda when he met with congressional leaders at the White House on Tuesday, participants said. House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., said Bush sought to "turn up the heat" on Mitchell to schedule action on the measure.

Later, speaking to a group visiting the White House, Bush asked: "If you have any spare time, please call your friendly senator and tell them to get going and get this legislation passed."

Germanys set July 2 as reunification date

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Kohl and East German Prime Minister Lothar de Maiziere on Tuesday named July 2 as the day for economic and social union of the two Germanys, a West German spokesman said.

Union in those areas will bring the divided nation a long way toward full unification after more than four decades of separation following the horror of the Nazi dictatorship and defeat in World War II.

The issue of political union, or holding an election to form a single government, remains to be worked out.

Secretary of State James Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, joined by their colleagues from Britain, France and the two German states, are scheduled to meet in Bonn on May 5.

There, they will try to resolve difficult international aspects of unification, including Germany's future military stance.

While early July has frequently been mentioned as a goal for economic, monetary and social union — meaning the coordination of social benefits, such as unemployment and old age pensions — Tuesday's statement was the first confirmation of a specific target date.

Delegations from both Germanys are to meet in East Berlin on Wednesday to negotiate over how to best introduce the powerhouse West German mark into East Germany's battered economy.

The basis of the talks will be Bonn's proposal for monetary union, which calls for a basic 1-1 exchange rate of East German marks for West marks for wages, salaries and pensions in East Germany.

The announcements, made by West German government spokesman Dieter Vogel, followed three hours of private talks between Kohl and de Maiziere.

Vogel said Kohl and de Maiziere spoke in a friendly atmosphere.

De Maiziere, talking to reporters after the meeting, was asked whether he had accepted the West German government's latest proposal for monetary union.

"There was nothing for me to accept. The chancellor presented the government's suggestions, and we'll negotiate about them," de Maiziere said.

He said hammering out a monetary union would require "many talks and negotiations."

The West German monetary union proposal, announced Monday, represented a surprising concession to East German demands.

CHICAGO (AP) — Despite efforts to discourage them, drug abusers who are infected with the AIDS virus are still selling blood plasma to commercial collection centers, and more needs to be done to stop them, a study says.

But a spokesman for plasma collection centers says they are doing a good job of excluding such donors and keeping the AIDS infection out of blood products. These include clotting factor used by hemophiliacs and immune globulin taken by people who need protection against hepatitis.

"The current products that are out there are considered to be 100 percent safe," said James Reilly, spokesman for the American Blood Resources Association, the trade group representing the approximately 400 U.S. for-profit plasma-collection centers.

"There are no known cases of (AIDS) transmission from products currently on the market," he said in a telephone interview from Annapolis, Md.

The study found that more than 23 percent of 2,921 intravenous drug abusers contacted in the Baltimore area in 1988 and 1989 said they had sold plasma or donated blood after they began injecting illegal drugs.

Tests revealed 24.1 percent of those contacted were infected with HIV, the AIDS virus, said researchers at Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health in Baltimore. They reported their findings in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control says 126,127 adult AIDS cases had been reported as of March 31, including 26,883 cases among IV drug users and 8,711 cases among homosexual IV drug users. Transfusion associated AIDS cases total 3,040.

Since March 1985, all U.S. blood and blood components have been screened to detect the presence of AIDS virus, the researchers noted. In addition, plasma from commercial centers is subjected to processing designed to kill the AIDS virus, but in isolated cases in other countries, the virus has survived in treated plasma products, said Dr. Kenrad Nelson, lead researcher.

"This does not mean the (U.S.) blood supply is unsafe," Nelson said in a telephone interview. "But the fact is that there have been cases where hemophiliacs have gotten infected despite screening and heat treatment. I think donor exclusion is vital."

Efforts so far have paid off, the study found. While 24.1 percent of the study subjects were infected overall, the prevalence of infections among blood or plasma donors fell from 17.1 percent in 1985 to 3.6 percent in 1988-89.

Most of the subjects said they were paid $10 to $15 for giving plasma at commercial centers, and about 10 percent said they had donated blood at non-profit blood banks.

But the American Association of Blood Banks said in a statement "it is typical for people who donate plasma to confuse blood banks with plasma centers. Hence, any conclusions drawn from the study must be restricted to plasma donors receiving payment for their donation."

Plasma centers are typically free-standing, storefront operations that pay people for giving plasma in a two-hour process that separates the liquid part of the blood from the cells and returns the cells to the body.

Nelson said Tuesday that although blood and plasma donations by intravenous drug users have declined in recent years, commercial plasma centers should consider a plan to stop paying donors in order to further protect the U.S. blood supply.

The approximately 2,400 U.S. non-profit blood banks, including those run by the American Red Cross, primarily draw whole blood and rely entirely on unpaid donors.

IRAN-CONTRA

Begging their pardon

As federal prosecutors continue to pursue the rapidly aging Iran-Contra scandal, an increasing number of observers on both ends of the political spectrum have called for the president to pardon former national security officials Oliver North and John Poindexter, and all those affected by related charges. At first glance, such a pardon seems to be an underhanded presidential maneuver to free a group of corrupt administration officials. But a pardon would actually free the judiciary from an undertaking that no longer has any real value.

Those indicted in the sale of arms to Iran and the diversion of the profits to the Contras no longer pose any threat to the administration of national security. Moreover, the publicity of the scandal and subsequent Congressional hearings have been sufficient deterrents to future criminal activity of the same nature. A pardon will acknowledge some misconduct, and more guilty verdicts or sentencing of any of the participants will have no further effect on the preservation of propriety in this or any other administration.

It is also hard to see why anyone would be politically motivated to continue the trial. Liberals have been long convinced of the guilt of the defendants, while conservatives have been equally steadfast in their belief that North and all the rest were acting in the best interests of the American people. Since the prospects of legal action against presidents George Bush or Ronald Reagan are highly unlikely, the political value of Iran-Contra has, for all practical purposes, run its course.

But future trials will not be merely ineffective; they will be costly. The investigation has already cost taxpayers $20 million, and the appeals process, which could take years to complete, will be a burden of time as well as money. The dockets of the federal courts are perpetually bursting with important cases; the American people would be better off if there were more room for them.

Iran-Contra no longer has any legal, political or economic value. For the benefit of all, Bush should pardon North, Poindexter and all the rest.

PERESTROIKA

Too late for Muslims

Gorbachev's gesture to Soviet Muslims in providing Aeroflot charter flights to Mecca should be welcomed, though it is probably too late to pacify the Muslims' disenchantment.

The Soviet Union and Saudi Arabia have practically had no diplomatic relations for 60 years. This means that the Soviet pilgrims have immigration hassles piled upon other difficulties such as raising money for the trip. Unfazed, Moscow is doing what it can to help out with both visa arrangements and finance.

From a total crackdown on religion, Moscow gradually eased some restrictions on the churches over the last few years. It offered no concessions to Muslims, fearing that this would lead to increased demands from the more militant ones. So it did nothing, and let the resentment simmer, much the same way as nationalistic sentiments were ignored, if not suppressed, in the non-Russian republics.

Now Gorbachev's plight in trying to hold the country together is aptly demonstrated by his cutting off fuel supply to Lithuania on the one hand as he tries to oblige Soviet Muslims on the other. If only the previous leaders had been more sensitive to the needs of the various segments of their populations, a reform-oriented leader like Gorbachev would have been in a stronger position today.

Perhaps then he could accommodate the thousands of Soviet Muslims who long for pilgrimage. Unfortunately, the current loosening of restrictions is the best he can do.

Letters

Motivated by Earth Day

To the Editor:

I would like to commend the media of eastern Iowa for their campaign to promote the 20th anniversary of Earth Day. I must admit that I initially viewed the continual push for the environment as an intrusion on my rare free moments during this end-of-the-year crunch. But this holiday has succeeded in raising in me an awareness in the necessity of dealing with this situation. It is good to see that that self-purging inherent in the body culture will evolve into a group awareness of the need to become responsible for what one's life style resigns the rest of the living things of the world to deal with.

It is said that every few decades the youth rebel against the injustice and stupidity of war. This time another set of values has to be confronted. People must be scrutinized within the scope of the future of the planet. The death of an entire species of salamanders seems to pale in comparison to the purchase of a new Jaguar, but I believe selfishness has run rampant long enough. The eighties were populated with self-betterment and greed. I believe it is time that we, not as a nation but as a species, take responsibility for our actions. I don't want the awkward sounding "Earth Day" to become a convenient time to schedule agricultural conventions. I want it to become a serious motivating force in the future of at least this nation, before the first robin of spring becomes the martyr, instead of the indication, of the season.

Mandela is underestimated

Much has been recently written questioning the leadership abilities of African National Congress Deputy President Nelson Mandela. Articles have described him as an elderly statesman no longer in touch with the times and unable to move his organization forward. This is not the Nelson Mandela that I have talked with and observed over the past few months.

Standing in the damp and cool spring air in Wembley Stadium in London recently, I witnessed a South African who represents more people than the president of South Africa and has more credibility in the world than that government. Yet he does not have the voting rights of a 21-year-old white person without distinction.

For 20 minutes this towering figure — who through unselfish suffering has emerged as the pre-eminent moral authority of our day — held spellbound some 72,000 people in the stadium and some one billion others viewing this televised international tribute in 60 countries throughout the world.

The U.S. networks did a disservice in deciding not to broadcast the mega-concert, deeming it too political. A few years ago the American news media said they could not adequately cover the situation in South Africa because of the imposed state of emergency restrictions. What was the excuse this time for denying the American public access to this world event?

Jesse Jackson

After a thunderous five-minute ovation, Mandela thanked the rock artists and the cultural community and the millions of others who by protest and pressure on the government aided his release from prison after 27 years. He then implored that economic pressure be maintained: "The apartheid crime against humanity remains in place," Mandela said. "It continues to kill and maim, to oppress and exploit. Its bloodstained offspring continue to rain death and destruction on the peoples of Mozambique and Angola. Every day it produces orphans throughout southern Africa."

It is unfair, as the media suggest, that Mandela should bear the burden of ending apartheid. That burden clearly rests with the South African government and President F.W. de Klerk. The oppressed have the burden of resisting. Millions have fought and thousands have died in that resistance. Those who instituted, benefited and profited from apartheid must end it without delay. The day before the concert, Mandela addressed supporters and journalists. He gave a masterful analysis on ANC leaders' positions as they prepare to meet with the South African government early next month. He never once Mandela never once sounded like someone out of touch, but rather like a clear-thinking, focused individual.

I saw in him a man who spoke about negotiation instead of confrontation and one who espouses a commitment to a new constitution that calls for equal protection for all in a non-racial, free, fair and democratic South Africa. He envisions a possibility for everyone. But in this pep rally environment filled with talks of hopes and dreams, a silence fell over the room when he said: "When I was sent to prison 27 years ago, I had no vote. Twenty-seven years thereafter, I have come out and I still have no vote."

There is a profound challenge before us. Justice delayed is justice denied. These upcoming talks will be crucial. It is my hope that a workable timetable will emerge setting in motion the total dismantling of apartheid. I am optimistic, but cautious. De Klerk in a recent speech said that though he remains in favor of power sharing, black majority rule is unacceptable. I am hopeful that de Klerk's regressive position will not deteriorate the emerging hope in South Africa.

This also is an opportunity and a challenge to President George Bush, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and other Western leaders to help forge a visionary agenda for the entire southern African region. The region needs assistance, for example, in rebuilding the Beira corridor in Mozambique and the Benguela railroad in Angola, with a commitment to assure safe passage for trade on these routes.

These and other major trade routes have been destroyed by the United States, supported Angolan guerilla leader Joseph Savimbi as well as by South Africa and its agents, thus making the region totally dependent on South African-controlled trade routes. A multilateral commitment needs to be established for southern Africa, much in the same way that one was set up to rebuild Eastern and Western Europe.

No one person or organization should have to bear the burden of bringing about social, political and economic change in South Africa. The world must heed the call and help. Nelson Mandela represents a bright ray of hope. But he should not have to stand alone. The people of South Africa deserve hope and healing, not more platitudes and promises.

 THE GRAND SENTINEL

Khrushchev buried Berlin in concrete

The past greatness of Berlin is evident today not in what you can see, but in what is no longer there.

This is perhaps most evident in East Berlin. There, vast acres of tacky, Soviet-style architecture testify that a capital city was destroyed: reduced to rubble, carried away and asphalted over. The immense emptiness of the Alexanderplatz, the most unlovely site of all Berlin, is presided over by a TV tower and a hard-currency hotel. It is the dead heart of the former capital.

"We will bury you," barked Nikita Khrushchev in a Cold War TV classic. He was threatening the United States, of course, but here in Berlin, the Soviet Union had a chance to put such a threat into action. Standing in the desolate Alexanderplatz gives one quite a different perspective on the war that in one form or another has dragged on through the entire 20th century. We in the United States tend to put ourselves in the center of any account of this protracted conflict. It's true that over the last several decades, America has been on the outs with the Germans and the Soviets in turn. And we like to think of ourselves as the Salvation Army.

But standing in the Alexanderplatz, America seems like a mere nuisance. The truly ferocious hatred was that between the Germans and our former allies — the Russians.

When Rome defeated Carthage, the victors sowed the fields surrounding the defeated city with salt. What was once done with salt can also be accomplished with concrete. Now I see that a threat like Khrushchev's can be carried out quite literally: We will level your capital, and pour concrete over the ground.

This is no city to come back to. The Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church stands ruined on the Kurfürstendamm. It is now a memorial, not to Kaiser Wilhelm, but to ruin itself.

Photographs inside the remains of the church show the surrounding neighborhood just after the bombing. Every building is a shell: two, three walls standing, and the rest just a pile on the street. You can see into each house from above, as if each building were a strange kind of stage.

The golden mosaics from the time of Kaiser Wilhelm look down like bourgeois versions of Byzantine saints. In a marble relief on the wall, carved ministers of state still sign some document that brings us one step closer to the photograph.

Turn-of-the-century angels unfurl a banner over the door. One looks straight at the spectator. Angels never flinch: they just deliver the message. They deliver it now to a gaping hole on the facing wall.

But we had to, didn't we? We Americans, and our friends, the Soviets, the British and the French, we had to bomb this city. Berlin was the capital of the Third Reich, the original Evil Empire. And the evidence everywhere is that the German army was a formidable opponent.

And look what America did afterward to help. We poured money into this city. The holes in the Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church were plugged up with glass, and the remaining walls will hold now. And the whole thing is a kind of toy ruin.

Like Berlin is a kind of toy city. Millions of German marks are pumped out every year by the Federal Republic of Germany, to maintain this freakish outpost of the western government.

American dollars, too, maintained the flow of supplies into the beleaguered city. President John F. Kennedy performed a model act of identification with Berlin, claiming "Ich bin ein Berliner" — and ever since, the former capital of our former enemy has been billed as an outpost of democracy, an island in a sea of communist oppression.

But might it not also persist as a memorial to a different German dream? After all, Berlin was the capital of Germany during a very specific, and very dark, period: from 1881 to 1945. How can we separate our hopefulness for a united German nation from the ignominious past of Berlin?

Rather than create a strongly centralized government in Berlin, the Germans would do well to promote a form of political organization at which they have historically excelled: local governance. Besides, it would be so postmodern.

Gunman opens fire in mall, kills one

ATLANTA — A smiling gunman in a business suit opened fire in the food court of a shopping mall Tuesday, killing one man and wounding four other people before calmly walking out and surrendering.

The man surrendered to DeKalb County police outside the mall just after the 11:35 a.m. shootings, said police spokesman Chuck Johnson.

"He held up his hands and said, 'I'm the one you're looking for,'" said police Col. M.F. Ferguson.

The gunman, who gave his name as James Calvin Brady, 31, of Atlanta, will be charged with one count of murder and four counts of aggravated assault, Johnson said.

"He looked like a businessman with his left hand in his pants pocket," said Carol Gravidahl, manager of Sweaters Etc. at Perimeter Mall, a few miles north of the city. "His right arm was straight out with a pistol, shooting it off randomly. He was coming around with it until I guess he emptied it — and he was smiling."

"He just walked in and started shooting," she said. "He was very casual."

Anti-billboard legislation introduced

WASHINGTON — Legislation to ban new billboards along federal highways and to empower localities to remove existing signs was introduced in the Senate on Tuesday.

The "Visual Pollution Control Act of 1990" would place a moratorium on construction of new billboards on interstate and federal primary highways, would call for an accurate count of existing billboards, and would allow states, cities and towns to decide whether to remove existing roadway advertising along those highways.

"Billboards all too frequently constitute a blight on a community," said Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., author of the "Visual Pollution Control Act of 1990." He said they have "a tremendous impact on neighborhoods and therefore neighborhoods should have the ability to regulate them."

The legislation, co-sponsored by Sens. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., Lloyd Bentson, D-Texas, and Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., among others, would amend the 1965 Highway Beautification Act. Although that law was originally designed to control billboards, Chafee said it "has become so watered-down that the only people who support it are the billboard industry."

Opposition party ban lifted in Zaire

KINSHASA, Zaire — Bowing to weeks of pressure, President Mobutu Sese Seko said Tuesday he had lifted a 20-year ban on opposition parties and would let a multiparty government replace his in a year.

Thousands of Zaireans chanting, singing and waving branches poured into downtown Kinshasa, the capital, and blocked the streets to cheer the president's decision.

Mobutu, absolute ruler since taking power Nov. 24, 1965, announced in a nationally broadcast speech that he was setting up a transitional government to rule until free elections could be held. No election date was set.

"I am taking leave of the Popular Movement for the Revolution (MPR)," said Mobutu, 59. He said he would no longer be head of the party that supplanted the government in 1970, but would remain as president "at the request of the people of Zaire."

Mobutu said three parties will be allowed at first. His Popular Movement for the Revolution, which under Zaire's law was the country's government, no longer will hold any special status.

Police find body of Colombian priest

BOGOTA, Colombia — The mutilated body of a Catholic priest kidnapped a week ago was found Tuesday near the western town of Roldanillo, police said.

The priest, Tiberio Fernandez, was kidnapped Thursday along with three other people traveling with him in a car near the town of Trujillo, 185 miles west of Bogota.

He was in charge of the parish in Trujillo, a town of 23,000 people. Police said the body of the 53-year-old priest was "totally mutilated."

Authorities have neither identified the kidnapers nor discovered any motive for the crime. Right-wing death squads backed by drug traffickers and leftist guerrillas are active in the area of the crime, and both groups have been known to kidnap priests.

Bush: Sanctions remain despite hostage release

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though Syria evidently helped liberate American hostage Robert Polhill, and Iran may have played a role as well, the Bush administration on Tuesday ruled out any immediate improvement in relations.

The basic message passed to Iran, through Switzerland, Algeria, Japan and other intermediaries, was that all seven Americans who remain captive in southern Lebanon must be freed first, U.S. officials said.

Six are being held by pro-Iranian segments of the militant Islamic group Hezbollah and the seventh by a pro-Libyan group with ties to Hezbollah.

The word was given to Syria publicly Tuesday by Margaret Tutwiler, the State Department spokeswoman. "While Syria has taken certain positive steps since 1986 to combat terrorism, including its role in the release of Mr. Polhill, we continue to be very concerned about the presence in Syria and Syria-controlled areas of terrorist groups," she said.

The groups include Ahmed Jabril's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine — General Command, suspected in the bombing of Pan Am flight 103, the Japanese Red Army and the Abu Nidal organization, Tutwiler said. The first has its headquarters in Damascus, the second two are in the Bekka Valley of Lebanon.

"Syria's current relations with these groups is an impediment to better U.S.-Syrian relations," she said.

President George Bush telephoned President Hafez Assad on Monday to express appreciation for Syria's role in the release of Polhill on Sunday after 39 months in captivity.

Evidently, that personal gesture was the extent of any U.S. move toward Damascus, although Tutwiler said economic sanctions imposed by the Reagan administration in 1986 were "under continuing review."

The sanctions include a ban on certain bank credits, a suspension of commercial flights between the two countries, and a travel advisory cautioning Americans against going to the Middle Eastern country.

According to White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, Bush told Congressional leaders that "he believes Syria had more than a passing role in the hostage release."

Meeting with the leaders in the Cabinet room, mostly to discuss Lithuania, the president reiterated that "goodwill begets goodwill," Fitzwater said. "But, he added: We cannot chip away at this problem on an incremental basis. We want the release of all hostages," Fitzwater said.

Similarly, the White House spokesman quoted Bush as saying he thought Iran understood "our gratitude for any help they may have provided in the hostage release, but they also know that the process of normalization cannot occur until all hostages are released."

Other U.S. officials told The Associated Press on Monday that Iran and Syria would remain on the State Department's list of countries that sponsor terrorism.

That means they will continue to be denied sophisticated American technology.

The department's annual terrorism report is due to be released next Monday.

Court ruling allows execution with no death sentence review

WASHINGTON (AP) — Condemned murderers who waive their right to appeal and say they want to die may be executed even if no appeals court reviews their cases, the Supreme Court ruled Tuesday.

The decision will let Arkansas authorities execute a man who killed 16 relatives and acquaintances during a 1987 rampage. No state appeals court has reviewed the validity of his convictions or sentence.

By a 7-2 vote, the justices ruled that only convicted mass murderer R. Gene Simmons — and not fellow death row inmate Jonas Whitmore — has the legal standing to challenge Simmons' death sentence.

Whitmore mounted his challenge even though Simmons prefers death to end "the torture and suffering in me." Whitmore had asked the justices to rule that state appeals courts must review all death sentences — even when not asked to do so by the condemned murderer.

In fact, many states provide automatic appellate review in capital cases, regardless of the defendant's wishes. But Whitmore, trying to stand in for Simmons, had argued that such review is constitutionally required.

The court did not address the constitutional issue, ruling instead that Whitmore cannot make such an argument in Simmons' behalf.

"Whitmore, having failed to establish that Simmons is (mentally) unable to proceed on his own behalf, does not have the legal standing to proceed," Chief Justice William Rehnquist wrote for the court.

The decision in the death penalty case lifted a stay the justices had imposed on the eve of Simmons' scheduled execution last year. Arkansas officials will be free to schedule a new execution date as soon as they officially receive word of the court's ruling, 25 days from Tuesday.

Justices Thurgood Marshall and William Brennan, who oppose capital punishment in all circumstances, dissented from Tuesday's ruling.

"The court needlessly abdicates its grave responsibility to ensure that no person is wrongly executed," Marshall wrote for the two.

Simmons, 49, killed his wife, three sons, four daughters, a son-in-law, a daughter-in-law and four grandchildren at his home near Dover, Ark. He killed two acquaintances in the nearby town of Russellville. The victims, all slain in the days surrounding Christmas 1987, were shot or strangled.

Milken guilty of stock crimes

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Milken, the billionaire financier who reshaped Wall Street in the 1980s but fell in its biggest scandal, tearfully pleaded guilty Tuesday to breaking federal securities and tax laws. He agreed to pay a record $600 million in penalties.

Milken, 43, broke down before the packed Manhattan courtroom as he finished a lengthy statement outlining his crimes, which included illegal trading with stock speculator Ivan Boesky and others from 1984-86.

"I realize by my acts I have hurt those who are closest to me. I am truly sorry," Milken said. He had to be supported by his attorney and his voice cracked when he pleaded, "Guilty, your honor."

Milken faces a maximum 28 years in prison at his scheduled October 1 sentencing before U.S. District Judge Kimba Wood, although legal experts expect a term of around five years.

The plea marked a stunning victory in the government's crack-down on Wall Street crime that already included more than 30 convictions and targeted Milken and his former employer, Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., from its outset in 1986.

Milken was widely regarded as the most important American financier since J.P. Morgan Jr. in the early 1900s. His personal fortune is said to exceed $1 billion, and he came to symbolize the bounty and excesses of a booming Wall Street.

Milken pioneered the use of high-yield, high-risk debt securities known as junk bonds that gave small companies access to billions of dollars and made possible the wave of hostile corporate takeovers that characterized the dog-eat-dog 1980s.

His downfall began after he was linked to an insider trading network by Boesky, who received a three-year prison term and was fined $100 million in 1986 to settle his own case.

Milken was indicted on 98 counts of fraud and racketeering in March 1989, but vigorously maintained his innocence. He reversed course last week and agreed to the plea bargain, avoiding a long, costly trial and the prospect of a much stiffer prison term.

Richard Breeden, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, said in Washington that Milken's admissions "demonstrate that he stood at the center of a network of manipulation, fraud and deceit." Milken pleaded guilty to conspiracy, securities fraud, mail fraud, helping others violate federal securities regulations and assisting in the filing of a false tax return.

Far less severe than the original indictment, the counts do not involve racketeering or unlawful securities trading based on inside information. The racketeering charge carried a minimum 20-year prison term and possible forfeiture of Milken's wealth.

"The charges are a far cry from the lurid, irresponsible and prejudicial accusations against Michael that have been made by anonymous sources to the press for the past 3½ years," Milken attorney Arthur Liman said after the plea.

"It is Michael's hope that ... history will see his violations in context and judge him not just on the basis of his lapses but on the basis of the contributions that he made to the economy and to the American people."

Wage rise dubbed 'a big negative'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' pay and benefits shot up 5.5 percent over the last 12 months, the largest jump in six years, the government said Tuesday.

Health insurance costs alone rose 12.1 percent. One economist called the continued surge in wages and medical care costs "a big negative on the inflation outlook." Others agreed, saying inflationary problems can't be explained away by citing temporary factors, such as December's frigid temperatures.

The acceleration in the Labor Department's Employment Cost Index "has got to make them worry that the economy is too strong for its own good," said David Wyss, chief economist at DRI-McGraw Hill. "It may be time for them to hit the brakes. I don't think they have enough evidence yet, but a couple more months of this and they will."

Allen Sinai, chief economist at the Boston Co., said the report was "a big negative on the inflation outlook."

"It shows that we have a rock-hard, high employment cost lump facing American business that is being passed on at the retail level."

Consumer prices this year have been rising at an annual rate of 8.5 percent, the highest in eight years.

Michael Evans, who heads his own economic consulting firm in Washington, added: "People sort of shrugged and said, 'Ho hum, it must be due to special factors.' Now, sure enough, along comes evidence that labor costs are rising at a faster rate than before."

The rising cost of wages, salaries and benefits may increase pressure on Federal Reserve policy makers to push interest rates higher in an effort to slow the economy and lower the inflation rate, analysts said.

The 5.5 percent rise in overall employment costs was the largest 12-month advance since the 12 months ending with March 1984, when wages, salaries and benefits increased by 5.9 percent, the government said. Employment costs had risen 4.8 percent for the 12 months ending with March 1989.

Tight labor markets take much of the blame for pushing employment costs higher. Last month, the nation's already low unemployment rate fell 0.1 percentage point to 5.2 percent.

Two other factors pushing employment costs up have been rising health insurance premiums and a jump in required Social Security contributions.

Health insurance expenses rose 12.1 percent over the last year, following a 13.4 percent increase over the previous 12 months.

Social Security contributions paid by workers and employers rose in January from 7.51 percent to 7.65 percent on the first $51,300 in annual income.

Hawkeyes drop 2 to Cyclones

Erica Weiland

A grand slam homer by Tim Costo in the third inning and a seven-run fourth inning boosted the Iowa baseball team to within three runs of Iowa State in Tuesday's nightcap at Iowa Field.

But the No. 17 Hawkeyes couldn't pull out the win, getting swept in a doubleheader for only the second time this season.

The Cyclones took that game 18-15 and the opener 12-5 as the teams racked up a total of 50 runs and 55 hits.

"I don't know if we won the second one or not," Iowa State coach Bob Randall said. "It wasn't pretty."

"Neither team played well," Hawkeye coach Duane Banks said. "We knew that was going to happen. I told the kids we would have to score a lot of runs. We just didn't Sophomore pitcher Tom Anderson takes a long, lonely stroll from the mound Tuesday as he was relieved in the sixth inning of the Hawkeyes' first game with Iowa State at Iowa Field. Anderson had his troubles, as did the squad, dropping the opener 12-5 and the nightcap, 18-15.

The Cyclones jumped out to 9-0 lead until the bottom of the third when singles put Errol Shirer and Chris Malinoski on base and Keith Noreen was walked. That set up Costo's rip over the left field wall, upping the score to 9-4.

In the next inning, Shirer and Malinoski both walked with one out when Noreen launched his fifth home run of the season over the centerfield wall, improving the Hawkeyes' run total to seven.

After another out, junior Chris Hatcher and senior Brian Wujcik walked and then scored on a Tom Anderson homer. When the inning finally ended, the score stood at 14-11 in the Cyclones' favor.

Iowa State added another run in the top of the fifth but Iowa reciprocated in the bottom of that inning.

A bases-loaded walk to sophomore Ken Burgess brought Hatcher across the plate. Shirer then drilled a double into center field to score Wujcik and Anderson, putting the Hawkeyes within one run.

Banks' squad tied up the game in the sixth when Noreen cracked a solo homer over the left field fence.

But the Hawkeyes couldn't complete the rally, and the Cyclones scored three more runs in the seventh, winning 18-15.

Iowa can't shake Wildcats in finale

Brian Gaul
The Daily Iowan

It was a case of déjà vu for the Iowa softball team Tuesday.

Last year, the Hawkeyes won their first three games in the season series with Northwestern before losing an extra-inning heart-breaker in the finale.

Tuesday, Iowa took their third straight game from the Wildcats this season with a 4-0 win in the first game of a twinbill in Evanston, Ill.

But the Wildcats grabbed another extra-inning upset in the nightcap, defeating the Hawkeyes 4-3 in eight innings.

The split gave Iowa a 35-22 record and 10-2 mark in conference play. Northwestern is now 11-24 overall, 3-13 in the league.

"I'm real disappointed in (the second game) loss," Iowa coach Gayle Blevins said. "We kept opening doors for them and they took advantage."

Northwestern's Chinazo Opia and Kelli Horton were the Wildcat catalysts in the nightcap. Both players finished the game with three hits and one RBI.

"Horton and Opia really hurt in the second game," Blevins said.

Horton's biggest hit was her final one. The junior from Manteca, Calif., lined an 0-2 offering from McFarland for a single with one out in the bottom of the eighth.

Wildcat outfielder Kim Medcalf followed with the game-winner — a double to the left center field gap. Horton scored from first base on the play.

The lead see-sawed throughout the early innings. Iowa was ahead 1-0 in the second inning after an RBI single by sophomore Amy Hartscock scored junior Amy Johnson, who had also singled.

Northwestern responded with two in the third on run-scoring hits from pitcher Amy Redmer and Opia.

The Hawkeyes regained the lead in the fourth, plating two runs on a triple by freshman Christa Davis and a sacrifice fly from Hartscock.

The Wildcats tied it one inning later on a single by Horton, scoring Opia. That set the stage for Med-

For the second time this season, a player on the Iowa softball team has been named Big Ten Player of the Week.

Sophomore Terri McFarland received the league honor after posting a 3-0 record and 0.28 ERA in Big Ten games with Northwestern and No. 12 Indiana.

The sophomore also saved two games in that six-game span and owns either a win or a save in all ten of the Hawkeyes' league victories. The Sacramento, Calif., native is 22-13 overall and 7-1 in conference games.

In addition, McFarland recorded her 22nd win of the year in Tuesday's twinbill against Northwestern, tying a school record she set last year.

The hurler also matched her 1989 record for innings pitched in a single season.

BICOA sets athletic schedules for teams

Jay Nanda
The Daily Iowan

The 1990-91 men's basketball schedule is only tentative at this point, but if it becomes approved, the season could prove to be one of the most interesting, and exciting, for the Hawkeyes and their fans.

Iowa is already slated to host a first-round game against Temple in the preseason National Invitational Tournament, but the rest of the tentative games include seven straight home outings, beginning with the Amana-Hawkeye Classic on Nov. 30 and Dec. 1.

In addition to the regular series of games with Big Ten opponents, Tom Davis' club is also expected to play host to UNI on Dec. 4, Iowa State on Dec. 8 and UCLA on Dec. 22.

After the contest with the Bruins, the Hawkeyes are scheduled to spend the winter holidays at the Chaminade Classic in Hawaii on Dec. 28-30.

Next year's schedules for men's basketball, field hockey, and volleyball were among the announcements made at Tuesday's Board in Control of Athletics meeting at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Even though the basketball schedule is not yet finalized, the volleyball and field hockey seasons are.

After a couple of preseason scrimmages, coach Ruth Nelson's volleyball squad will look to improve on last year's finish, in which they made their first-ever appearance in the NCAA tournament, by traveling to

Cavs earn respect from outside

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP)—Injuries to Brad Daugherty and Larry Nance and the trade of Ron Harper nearly doomed the Cleveland Cavaliers early this season.

Then Coach Lenny Wilkens discovered he had the best 3-point team in NBA history.

"When I saw that we shot it real well, I wanted to spread the floor and really pass the ball around," Wilkens said Tuesday as the Cavaliers prepared for Thursday's first-round playoff game against the Philadelphia 76ers. "If I put Craig Ehlo, Mark Price and Steve Kerr out there at the same time, and if the other team double-teams us inside, we can make them pay."

Entering the season, Price was the only proven 3-point threat on the Cavaliers. He had made 43.8 percent of his career 3-pointers, best in the league.

Ehlo had been erratic from long distance (33.7 percent), but he spent the summer studying Price's technique. Kerr, a good outside shooter at Arizona, had played so sparingly as a rookie for Phoenix last year that he was an unknown quantity when the Cavs acquired him in a trade.

All three, it turned out, can hit the bomb. Kerr led the league at 50.7 percent, second in NBA history only to Jon Sundvold's 52.2 percent for Miami last season. Ehlo hit 41.9 percent and Price 40.6 percent.

As a team, the Cavaliers made 40.7 percent of their 3-pointers, best since the NBA installed the shot in 1979-80.

The notion of using three guards to offset the lack of power inside didn't come to Wilkens immediately. When Daugherty began the season on the injured list because of foot surgery and Nance was out because of ankle surgery, Wilkens tried to compensate by making forward John Williams the focus of his offense.

When opponents quickly sent two or three defenders at Williams, Ehlo and Kerr found themselves open at the 3-point arc.

Lakers fined $25,000 for missing players

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP)—The Los Angeles Lakers were fined $25,000 Tuesday because Magic Johnson and James Worthy didn't play in the team's regular-season finale Sunday night at Portland.

Johnson and Worthy went through pregame warmups as did Mychal Thompson, another starter, but all three sat out and the result was predictable — a 130-88 victory by the Trail Blazers, the most one-sided defeat in Lakers' history.

A statement issued in New York by NBA Commissioner David Stern said the Lakers were being fined "for failing to play two healthy players who are normally starters" in the game.

Thompson, the Lakers starting center who was not mentioned in the statement, had missed four games earlier this month because of a knee injury. He did play 23 minutes during the Lakers' 125-115 victory over the Clippers Saturday night.

"I think it was a very appropriate action for the commissioner to take," Trail Blazers president Harry Glickman said. "I hope that it sends a message to the Lakers and to all of us that you don't do those kinds of things."

Lakers coach Pat Riley said afterwards he rested the players because he didn't want to risk an injury to a significant player before Friday night's first-round playoff opener against the Houston Rockets.

"I think (Riley) cheated the fans," Glickman said. "I felt all along the commissioner would take some kind of action."

Byron Scott, another Lakers starter, didn't make the trip to Portland because he suffered a sprained left ankle last Thursday.

In response to the league's action, the Lakers issued a statement saying that in addition to paying the fine, team owner Jerry Buss wished to apologize to Trail Blazers fans.

Janvrin leads decathlon, again

DES MOINES (AP)—Kip Janvrin found himself in a familiar position Tuesday — in the lead at the halfway point of the Drake Relays decathlon.

Janvrin, seeking his fourth consecutive Drake championship, compiled 4,042 points through five events for his second-highest first-day total ever. He reached that figure even though his training has been limited because of graduate school and coaching duties.

Two-time champion Cathy Tyree, who hasn't competed at Drake since 1987, led the heptathlon with 3,365 points — 120 ahead of Teri LeBlanc. Both are members of the Nike Coast Track Club, although Tyree trains in Pasadena, Calif., and LeBlanc in Denver.

Fortunately for Janvrin and Tyree, the scores of two Soviet athletes in the meet aren't being counted in the official standings. Both had more points than the two leaders.

Roman Terekhov, who was the ninth-ranked decathlete in the world last year, had 4,242 points — 200 more than Janvrin. Tatyana Zhuravlova, who was ranked 22nd in the world in the heptathlon last year, was 166 points ahead of Tyree with 3,531.

Both Soviet athletes are part of a delegation from the Stavropol region that is competing in the Drake Relays this year. Stavropol is one of Iowa's sister states.

Janvrin was a model of consistency in taking the decathlon lead, finishing second in all five events. Alabama's Richard Beattie was second with 3,891 points, followed by Jay Thorson of South Pasadena, Calif., with 3,820 and Mark Spitzer of Grove City, Ohio, with 3,783.

Competing in windy, 85-degree weather, Janvrin best 30 points short of his first-day best of 4,072. His effort included a personal

No TV for Iowa-ISU

IOWA CITY (AP) — Iowa-Iowa State football rivalry will not be telecast live this year for the first time since 1984 due to conflicts with other games set to be aired by ABC-TV.

ABC has a contract to carry Big Ten games and said it would televise the Sept. 22 intrastate rivalry only if it were rescheduled and played at night.

Iowa officials rejected the offer, saying the cost would be prohibitive. The game will be shown on a delayed basis by the Iowa Sports Network.

"It's wrong for the fans," said Bob Helmers, general manager of ABC affiliate WOI in Ames.

"But I'm willing to do whatever I can to get the game on TV," said Helmers. He said he tried to arrange regional coverage but nothing worked out.

"It's getting late to get anything changed now, and that's too bad. Iowans deserve to be able to see the game."

Larry Bruner, Iowa's associate athletic director, said ABC's contract prohibits local telecasts if the network is showing another game to the rest of the country.

ABC is already televising the UCLA-Michigan game at 11 a.m. that day and the Notre Dame-Michigan State game at 2:30.

The network said it would televise the Iowa-Iowa State game if it were played at night, but Bruner said that would cost too much. It cost Iowa State $40,000 to bring in portable lights for the season opener against Ohio University.

Ginsberg awards given

Four Iowa women's athletes were recognized with the Lou Ginsberg Humanitarian Award this week at the Iowa Women's Intercollegiate Athletics awards banquet.

Those honored include: softball player Kristen Rhoades of Iowa City; basketball player Felicia Hall of Shreveport, La.; gymnast Marite Janovich of Brantford, Ontario; and field hockey player Jibs Thorsen of Pataskala, Ohio.

The award is given to student-athletes who display genuine concern for the welfare of others.

Women receive team honors

Members of eight of Iowa's 10 women's athletic teams announced the All-Around Team Member awards for their respective sports this week at the Iowa Women's Intercollegiate Athletic awards banquet.

They include: basketball — Franthea Price, River Rouge, Mich.; field hockey — Erin Walsh, Virginia Beach, Va.; gymnastics — Tracy Junker, Wheat Ridge, Colo.; swimming and diving — Becky Anderson, Laramie, Wyo., and Chrissy Eck, LaGrange, Ill.; track and field — Angela Chadwick, Bramalea, Ontario; volleyball — Barb Willis, Camanche, Iowa, Janet Moylan, Chicago, and Kari Hamel, Dubuque, Iowa; cross country — Jeanne Kruckeberg, Claremont, Minn.; and golf — Kelley Brooke, Bettendorf, Iowa, and Stacey Arnold, Glen Ellyn, Ill.

"(Iowa State is) a fine hitting club," Banks said. "It's no big disgrace to get beat. We just wanted our guys to go out and swing the bats. And we did that. They were a much better ball club than we were."

In the first game, the Cyclones carried a 5-0 lead into the bottom of the fifth until a solo homer by Wujcik put Iowa on the scoreboard.

The Hawkeyes' big inning was the sixth, when Noreen led off with a solo blast. Two doubles and a single later, Costo and Hatcher had crossed the plate.

But Iowa State scored two runs in the sixth and three in the seventh to put the score at 12-4 when the Hawkeyes batted next. A run by Shirer in the bottom of the last inning wasn't enough to compensate, as the Cyclones won the game 12-5.

"It's always disappointing to lose," sophomore Matt Johnson said. "But we just didn't have the same feeling as in Big Ten games."

The Cyclones were led in part by senior Mike Busch, who was drafted Monday to play professional football for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

The football and baseball All-American was 3-for-7 in the two games, including one home run — his 13th on the season and 27th in his career. He is just one homer short of the Cyclone records for season and career home runs.

"Mike's a big part of our ball club," Randall said. "He adds power, a dimension we need. And he's probably the best clutch hitter Iowa State has had."

The Hawkeyes will travel to Galesburg, Ill., today for a nine-inning game with Bradley.

According to Banks, the weekday games are used in part to prepare for the series with the No. 12 Illini this Friday and Saturday at Iowa Field.

"I hope we're not in this bad of a situation (against Bradley)," Banks said. "But we could be. The conference is what it's about and we aren't going to throw our best pitchers in mid-week games unless they're Big Ten games. We just want to use these to build for the weekend."

"It's another game (today)," Johnson said. "We're making the trip down there, so we might as well win it."

Softball

Wildcats, 1-0 and 2-0, last week.

Chown started and allowed only two hits and two walks in four innings of work. McFarland came on in relief, limiting the Wildcats to one hit over the final three innings to pick up the victory.

Wildcat starter Karol Dodd was equally effective, quieting the Hawkeye bats throughout the first five innings.

Iowa finally broke through in the sixth. Johnson scored from third when a grounder to second base by Hartssock was booted by the Wildcat infielder.

The Hawkeyes added three more runs in the seventh with the help of two Wildcat errors. Senior Kristen Rhoades started the big inning with a ground ball which was misplayed by the Wildcat shortstop. Diane Pohl followed with a single, putting runners at first and third.

The second Northwestern miscue, a bobbled slap bunt by Shelly Fowler, scored Rhoades. Junior

McCants' knee finds operating room

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Keith McCants underwent arthroscopic knee surgery Tuesday and Tampa Bay coach Ray Perkins said the procedure reassured him it wasn't a risk to take the linebacker with the fourth pick in the NFL draft.

"I didn't expect it to come out any other way," Perkins said after receiving word from Dr. William Carson that the surgery, performed at Memorial Hospital, was successful.

"It wasn't quite as bad as we thought it was to start with. It was just a minor deal," Perkins said. "At worst case, I knew it wasn't bad. If I had any thought that it was, or had fears that it was, I wouldn't have drafted him. That would have been pretty dumb on our part."

Perkins said Carson, the team's orthopaedic consultant, removed "a couple of bone chips" from McCants' right knee but found no cartilage or ligament damage.

"It was a minor cleanout ... The knee is solid," he said.

McCants, one of 38 underclassmen who applied for early entry to the NFL, was considered the top prospect in the draft before reports surfaced this month questioning the state of his knee.

The former Alabama star said he had similar surgery as a junior in high school and played with pain throughout his college career but never had to leave a game because of his knee. "If my knee was giving me so much trouble, why didn't it prevent me from running down those running backs and wide receivers with 4.4 speed?" the 6-foot-2½, 259-pound linebacker said Monday.

Perkins, who recruited McCants to Alabama before becoming coach of the Buccaneers, urged him to have surgery right away and clear up any doubts. McCants will begin rehabilitation right away, and should resume his regular running and conditioning program in about two weeks, according to Perkins.

MLB ump charged with theft

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. (AP) — National League umpire Bob Engel has been charged with stealing 4,180 baseball cards from a retail store, authorities said.

Engel, 56, was released on $5,000 bail from Kern County Jail Saturday and is scheduled to be arraigned May 2 on misdemeanor counts of commercial burglary and petty theft, police said Tuesday.

A security officer at the store told police that Engel put seven boxes of Score baseball cards, valued at $143.98, into a brown paper bag he pulled from the waistband of his pants.

He allegedly removed the cards from a display, walked to a corner of the store and placed them in the paper bag.

Engel was detained as he walked out of the store with the bag on Saturday, police said.

Engel, who completed his first full year in the major leagues in 1966, was back at the ballpark on Sunday when he worked the Los Angeles Dodgers game from first base.

When Bakersfield police asked why he took the cards, Engel reportedly replied "to collect and trade."

Engel, who resides in Bakersfield, is a crew chief.

The owners held a joint conference call Monday to ratify the four-year deal, which runs through Dec. 31,

Arkansas State basketball falls under investigation

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — A three-member internal committee has begun investigating several incidents of alleged NCAA rules infractions in the Arkansas State men's basketball program, ASU president Eugene W. Smith said Tuesday.

Smith issued a seven-paragraph statement, but said ASU would have no further comment until the investigation is completed and reviewed. The statement did not specify the nature of the possible infractions. The statement said on April 13, ASU athletic director Charles Thornton "reviewed with me several incidents of alleged NCAA rules infractions which had been brought to his attention."

Smith said Thornton asked that a committee be formed "from individuals outside the athletic interests of the university to investigate these allegations."

Smith said that on April 17, he advised David Berst, assistant executive director for enforcement of the NCAA, and Craig Thompson, commissioner of the American South Conference, that the committee would be formed and a voluntary investigation would be conducted.

Smith said the committee began reviewing the allegations last week. The team is coached by Nelson Catalina, who took the job in 1984 after being an assistant at the school for five years.

Becker gets scare from 167th player in world at Monte Carlo

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Three-time Wimbledon champion Boris Becker, in his first singles match this month, struggled to beat a French qualifier Tuesday in the $1-million Monte Carlo Open.

Becker, the No. 2 seed, downed Cedric Pioline, rated 167th in the world, 7-5, 6-4, in the second round after receiving a first-round bye.

Top-seeded Stefan Edberg of Sweden, also recipient of a bye, starts play Wednesday.

Two seeded Americans lost second-round matches. Jordi Arrese of Spain beat No. 4 Aaron Krickstein 7-5, 6-2, and Jaime Yzaga of Peru beat No. 5 Jay Berger 1-6, 6-4, 6-1.

Becker had not played singles since losing to another Frenchman, Jean-Philippe Fleurian, in the third round of the Players International at Key Biscayne, Fla., in March. Becker had to bow out of the Barcelona tournament two weeks ago because of tendinitis, then came back to play doubles last week in Nice.

"It's not easy to start again after being off almost five weeks," the West German said. "It's different from practice because of the spectators, the second serves, the break points."

Pioline, 19, stayed even with Becker until 5-5 in the first set, then lost his serve. Becker held to win the set.

In the second set, Becker jumped to a 5-2 lead and advanced after Pioline closed to 5-4.

"I was quite pleased with the way I played overall," Becker said. "At the beginning I didn't play well but as the match went on I was more comfortable."

Alberto Mancini of Argentina, who beat Becker for the Monte Carlo title last year, opened with a 6-2, 6-4 victory over Christo Van Rensburg of South Africa.

Jim Courier of the United States, seeded ninth, eliminated Michael Stich of West Germany 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

In other first round matches, Juan Aguilera of Spain, last Sunday's winner in Nice, whipped Diego Nargiso of Italy 6-1, 6-3. American Jimmy Arias had the same score over South African Gary Muller.

Three unseeded French players had mixed fortunes in the first round.

Henri Leconte wasted seven match points before beating American Todd Witsken 6-1, 6-4, and Guy Forget ousted Dutch player Paul Haarhuis 6-3, 7-5.

Tudor regains old form with successful return

ST. LOUIS (AP) — John Tudor is back in St. Louis and he's pitching like the John Tudor of old.

Tudor, who worked just 14 innings for the Los Angeles Dodgers last year because of a variety of injuries, is 3-0, owns a 1.29 earned run average and has become the Cardinals stopper.

His latest effort came in a 7-4 victory Monday over the Pittsburgh Pirates when the 36-year-old left-hander allowed three runs and five hits over eight innings.

"His 3-0 looks pretty good when you're 6-8," Cardinals manager Whitey Herzog said. "He's already snapped three losing streaks, and we've only played two weeks."

Tudor pitched six shutout innings on April 13 against Philadelphia and seven scoreless innings on April 18 against Pittsburgh before Monday's effort.

"I'm sure they're sitting over there kicking themselves and wondering how they didn't score more runs than they did," Tudor said. "I was behind all night long. The truth of the matter is I made a lot of bad pitches."

Tudor, who has the best winning percentage in Cardinals history, has allowed only 14 hits and three runs in 21 innings. He returned to St. Louis as a free agent last Dec. 14, signing for $350,000 guaranteed with the opportunity to make another $950,000 in bonuses.

Tudor's record may be healthy, but his body is a little battered. He's had elbow, knee and shoulder surgery and was acquired by the Dodgers on Aug. 17, 1988 for first baseman Pedro Guerrero.

Tudor's best success has come in St. Louis. He's 32-8 at Busch Stadium and is 53-22 lifetime with the Cardinals. St. Louis got Tudor from Pittsburgh in December 1984; since then he's 9-1 against the Pirates.

Pittsburgh took a 2-0 lead in the first inning Monday and then stalled.

"We had a chance to blow it open in the first couple of innings and didn't," Pittsburgh manager Jim Leyland said. "We had Tudor on he ropes but couldn't knock him out."

Guerrero's two-run homer put St. Louis ahead 3-2 in the third and Tudor allowed one run after that.

"I tried to bear down all the time," Tudor said. "I just didn't make my pitches. I made some good pitches in those middle innings and then got tired again later, but Pedro's home run definitely was a lift."

Already, Cardinals rookie catcher Todd Zeile has become an admirer.

"He's definitely not a guy that you scout through the minor leagues and say this guy's going to win big in the big leagues because he throws 95 and has a great curveball," Zeile said.

ABC rules awards for T.V. sports

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC collected 15 of the 27 awards presented during the 11th annual Sports Emmy Awards ceremonies, and ABC's Jim McKay received the first Lifetime Sports Achievement Award.

ABC won for such events as the Indianapolis 500, NFL Monday night football, the New York City Marathon and the World Series, as well as for the Trans-Antarctica Expedition and the Iditarod sled dog race.

Al Michaels of ABC was selected outstanding play-by-play broadcaster and John Madden, CBS commentator for NFL football, was selected as top analyst.

CBS won five awards and ESPN three, with one each going to NBC, NFL Films, Insport and Cappy Productions.

ABC's coverage of the Indianapolis 500 was judged outstanding live sports special, and ESPN's "Speedworld" coverage of auto racing tied with Monday night football as outstanding live sports series.

The award for sports journalism went to ABC for its coverage of the earthquake that devastated the Bay area just as the network was preparing to show Game 3 of the World Series.

CBS was feted for its pregame program, "The NFL Today," as well for the Western Open golf tournament and the Dream Season. ESPN was cited for "Speedworld" and "Sportscenter."

NHL curbs fighting during playoffs

Officials snub brawling with watchful eye

The Associated Press

The NHL is taking a lot of the fight out of this year's playoffs. In contrast to the last few years, when some teams tried to brawl their way to the Stanley Cup, this year's playoffs have been remarkably tame.

That's not to say they haven't been physical. Aside from a game-ending brawl in the opener of the New York Islanders-New York Rangers series, there has been little fighting.

Some fist-throwing, stick-swinging and shoving, but not much fighting.

NHL executive vice president Brian O'Neill, the man in charge of discipline, said the drop in fighting is due to closer supervision by officials and an effort to cut down on pileups in front of the net that often lead to brawls.

"We've instructed our officials to move in a little quicker to break up the scrums in front of the net," he said. "Each playoff series has a supervisor who meets with the officials the day of the game, just as kind of a refresher.

"We're trying to have the officials get in quickly to break up the scrums. We know we can prevent a lot of fights by getting in to stop them."

The contrast has been startling. Two years ago, there were 105 fighting majors in the first round alone. Last year, that number dropped to 61 and this year, it was 24 — six of which took place in the Islanders-Rangers fight after Game 1. The NHL suspended Islanders winger Mick Vukota for 10 games and defenseman Ken Baumgartner for one for their roles in starting the brawl.

There were no other fights in that series. Two other first-round series — Buffalo-Montreal and Los Angeles-California — also were played without a fight.

Through three games in each of the four second-round series, there were 15 fighting majors, one less than last year. Eight of the 15 came in Monday night's Capitals-Rangers game. There have been none in the Boston-Montreal series and only two each in the St. Louis-Chicago and Los Angeles-Edmonton series.

Another reason for the drop in fights is that officials have been more liberal in handing out misconduct penalties. Misconducts in the first round were up from 56 to 86 — nearly mirroring the drop in fights, and are up from eight to 11 in the second round. In Game 5 of the Toronto-St. Louis series, referee Andy vanHellemond handed out 10 misconducts after one second-period incident, banishing every skater on the ice.

"We've instructed our officials to break up the scrums and caution the clubs that if the players refuse to break apart, we'll resort to misconducts to keep things under control," O'Neill said. "There's no point to all that pushing and shoving. If they feel they have to push and shove, they know what they'll face if they keep it up."

The lack of fighting doesn't mean that there's any less hitting.

"The games are very physical," O'Neill said. "But with so much at stake, the players have to learn not to retaliate when they're hit. The game is so close, no one wants to be the one to wear the goat horns."

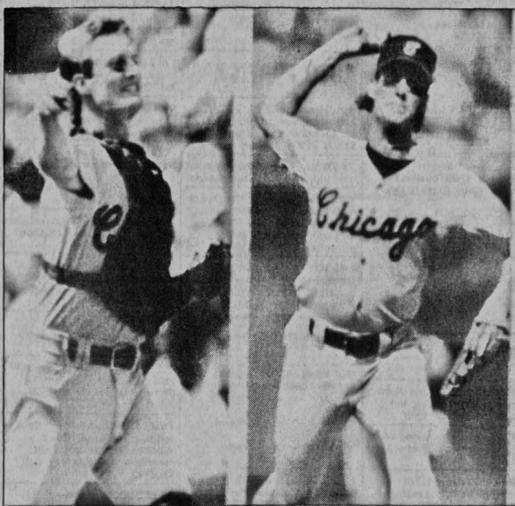

In past years, many of the fights came early in the series as a form of posturing — trying to intimidate an opponent. Now, many see fighting as a liability.

"It's something I don't really think is going to win hockey games," said Boston's Cam Neely, the Bruins' top scorer with 55 goals. "If it's a tactic, I don't think it's going to work. No one's really going to be intimidated in the playoffs. This is crunch time. This is what we play the game for."

Rangers coach Roger Neilson also downplayed fighting in the playoffs.

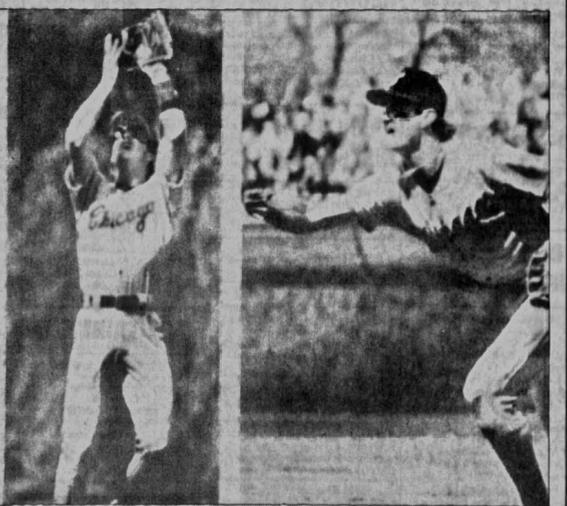

"There's a lot of hitting, a lot of physical play," he said. "It's so intense, especially in the first round. You get a lot of tough play, but it's restrained."

"Maybe fighters are players now," agreed the Rangers' Kris King, one of New York's busiest fighters in the regular season.

Steve of all trades

Chicago White Sox player Steve Lyons played all nine positions Monday in the game with the Chicago Cubs at Wrigley Field. The White Sox won the annual one-game Windy City Classic over the Cubs 6-5.

Timberwolves earn small 1st-year profit

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Despite leading the NBA in home attendance and enjoying a relatively meager basketball payroll, the Minnesota Timberwolves netted only a modest profit in their maiden season, team officials say.

A backlog of administrative expenses from 2½ years of organizing the team and indulgences for the sake of fans soaked up cash that would have otherwise found its way to the bottom line, said Tim Leiweke, vice president for marketing and sales.

"Yes we operated in the black, but the profit was not fantastic," Leiweke said. "We're not in the top 10, I know that for a fact. We're in the lower part of the league for profit."

Other revenues included about $3 million from the NBA's network television agreements and undisclosed sums from souvenirs and local TV and radio contracts, Leiweke said.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals traded right-handed relief pitcher John Costello on Monday to the Montreal Expos for infielder Rex Hudler.

Costello, 29, has pitched in four games this spring after beginning the season on the disabled list with a sore shoulder. Hudler, also 29, had played in four Montreal games and had one hit in three at-bats.

"Although we hated to give up John Costello, Hudler is an excellent role player who gives us some needed depth," St. Louis general manager Dal Maxvill said.

Costello is 0-0 with a 6.32 earned-run average in 4 2-3 innings. He pitched 112 innings in 1988 and 1989 for the Cardinals, compiling a 10-6 record and totaling four saves in 112 innings.

St. Louis' need for an extra backup middle infielder became obvious last week when All-Star shortstop Ozzie Smith was sidelined five games by a strained groin.

Tim Jones has been Smith's lone backup. Hudler batted .245 last year for the Expos in 92 games and had six home runs and 15 stolen bases.

The Cardinals also announced the purchase of right-handed relief pitcher Tom Niedenfuer from their Triple-A Louisville affiliate, where Niedenfuer had two saves in five appearances.

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Knicks added forward Charles Oakley to their eligible list for the playoffs and deactivated backup center Greg Butler on Monday.

Oakley, the Knicks' top rebounder, has been out since mid-March with a broken bone in his left hand. The Knicks said x-rays of the hand show the break has healed.

Oakley practiced on his own last week and will work out with the team Tuesday and Wednesday. Knicks spokesman John Cirillo said Oakley might be able to play in New York's playoff opener against Boston on Thursday night.

"Yes we operated in the black, but the profit was not fantastic. We're not in the top 10, I know that for a fact. We're in the lower part of the league for profit."

Tim Leiweke
Vice President, marketing and sales

By contrast, the Minnesota North Stars lost about $16 million over the past three years, the NHL team's owners have said.

The Timberwolves haven't disclosed their revenues. But an NBA record home attendance of 1,072,572, at an average ticket price of $10.50, amounts to about $11.26 million at the gate — a figure Leiweke said was close to the actual amount.

Their basketball payroll was between $5.28 million and $6.25 million, the minimum and maximum set under the salary-cap provision of the NBA collective bargaining agreement. Those figures are two-thirds the amounts set for non-expansion teams and will increase next year to three-fourths of the amounts.

Space/Place not limited to a single dance form

Kathleen Hurley
The Daily Iowan

Attention: This is your last chance to see the last brilliant dance event of this season.

The spring Space/Place Concert, in North Hall April 26 and 27 at 8 p.m., features choreography of both faculty and students. Admission is $3 for adults and free for children.

The various pieces are as contrasting as the seasons of the year, with classical ballet, ethnic, jazz, and modern dance. The opening piece, "A Guitar, a Man and a Woman," is an honest and original dance. The combination of live music played by Tom Nothnagle and active choreography by Dalienne Majors brings a most human and touching relationship to the stage. The viewer questions the line between art and reality with the distinctive acting and dancing by Susan Rieger and Juan Carlos Tud.

"Guedra," a traditional Moroccan dance performed by Marie Wilkes, uses enchanting movement with haunting results.

"The piece was originally used to induce a trance within the religious connotations," explained Wilkes. "This was during the time when women were powerful shamans... and symbolized a sacred vessel in the act of blessing the Earth. Finally she passes out after a bizarre and intense trance. Now the dance is performed just for fun," she added.

"The Nature of Layers," is a performance art piece created by faculty member Susan Dickson. The original music is written by Kirk Corey, who is also a dancer in the piece. The dancers use props and costumes to symbolize robes of office and figurative barriers to human interaction.

"The work addresses the strategic planning of the UI, but can point universally to any institution that confers power and needs a hierarchical structure," said Dickson.

Among other pieces in the concert is "Something Dumb," a lively rap duet performed by Lulu Drummond and Andrea Geer. "Sylvia," a classical ballet pas de deux performed by Clifton Keefer Brown and Beth Wunluck, was coached by visiting guest artists Eddie Shellman from the Dance Theatre of Harlem and Rebecca Wright of the Joffrey Ballet.

Accordion named official instrument of San Francisco

Jacqueline Comito
The Daily Iowan

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The much-maligned accordion is the official instrument of San Francisco.

The Board of Supervisors voted 6-4 Monday in favor of the raspy squeezebox despite a last-minute bid by violin fanciers.

The instrument plummeted in popularity with the advent of rock 'n' roll but is now making a comeback, said Tom Torriglia, who plays with the local group Those Darn Accordionists! He noted that the group Aerosmith features an accordion in a new song.

"With all due respect to the accordion and to all my ancestors who came here with the accordion, we also are the home of the oldest violin factory in the United States," said supervisor Angela Alioto, who voted against the resolution.

The resolution needs Mayor Art Agnos' signature to become official, but press secretary Scott Shafer said, "How could he object to the accordion?"

'The Translator' explores cultural mishaps of an American woman working in Europe

Jacqueline Comito
The Daily Iowan

Judy GeBauer's play "The Translator" goes up this evening as the third production of the Iowa Playwrights Festival.

The story is of an American girl who lands a nice job as a translator in a major European capital. The girl's set of values and view of the world are torn apart as she experiences a cultural collision with the other characters in the script.

"The play explores different ways people communicate. It is the collision between extremities: old — new; words — emotion; order — chaos," director Marci Glotzer said. "What attracted me to this play is the atmosphere Judy created in her dialogue. The world of the play is so charged; so full of energy."

GeBauer, a third-year workshop playwright with a long list of credits, stated that she and Glotzer have formed a "really positive marriage. I feel I have been taught about the play. The play has been sharpened. We have found a coherent way to express the ideas of the play."

The performance time for "The Translator" is an hour. Glotzer, a master of fine arts candidate, described the play as short, but with a lot going on. It's "short, sweet and to the point," she said.

"Well, not so sweet," GeBauer added.

The set design is by R. Dean Packard and the costumes are by Jacqueline Rangel-Rojas. Lighting design is by Kris Brodersen; Mark Bruckner is the sound designer. The stage manager is Stephanie Miller-Lamb.

Cast for "The Translator" includes: Nancy — Elizabeth Simeon; Simone — Elizabeth Widmer; Patrick — Michael Moran; Vincent — Gregory Giles; Georgie — James Paul Snodgrass.

Performances for "The Translator" are this evening at 6:30 and 9 p.m. in Theatre A. Admission is $6; $5 for students and senior citizens.

St. Paul Chamber Orchestra performs Thursday at Hancher

The Daily Iowan

The St. Paul Chamber Orchestra will be conducted by its creative chairman, composer John Adams, in the world premiere of "Cornucopia" by Paul Drescher at 8 p.m. on Thursday, April 26, in Hancher Auditorium.

Other works in the all-contemporary concert will include "Eight Lines" by Steve Reich, who won the 1990 Grammy Award for classical composition, and "Tabula Rasa" by Estonian composer Arvo Part. Soprano soloist Dora Ohrenstein from the Philip Glass Ensemble will be featured in performances of "Calamity Jane to Her Daughter" by Ben Johnston and "NYC," a new work by Scott Johnson.

John Adams, best known for his opera "Nixon in China," is one-third of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra's leadership triumvirate, the Artistic Commission, which he shares with Director of Music Christopher Hogwood and Principal Conductor Hugh Wolff. Adams' orchestral compositions, including "Harmonium," "Grand Pianola Music," "Shaker Loops," "Harmonielehre," "Fearful Symmetries" and "The Wound-Dresser," are some of the most respected and frequently performed works of contemporary American music.

Tickets for the April 26 concert are $20 and $18 (UI students receive a 20 percent discount) from the Hancher Box Office.

Miller-Lamb does juggling act as stage manager for festival

Jacqueline Comito
The Daily Iowan

One of the unsung heroes of the 1990 Iowa Playwrights Festival is Stephanie Miller-Lamb, the production stage manager.

Trying to stage six shows in one week is no easy feat; Miller-Lamb finds herself performing a juggling act of time, space and people. Beyond scheduling the theaters for rehearsal space this week, Miller-Lamb's job is to assist, supervise, inform and handle the production problems of the undergraduate stage manager. She also coordinates the production needs of each show within the rules and regulations of the buildings.

Miller-Lamb graduates this year from the UI with a master of fine arts degree in stage management.

"It's weird because most people won't do stage management because there is so much involved," Miller-Lamb says. "You need good organizational skills, low blood pressure and good communication."

Many of the problems that arise from the pressure-filled festival week are related to poor time management and emotional flare-ups. All of the people involved in the festival are playing more than one role. A stage manager's job is to organize their time efficiently and diffuse the emotional conflicts.

"I don't let things bother me. You deal with them and then let them go," Miller-Lamb said. "Stage management is a service position, not an authoritative position. Knowing this makes it work. Once you get over the fear of not knowing what you're doing, it's a lot of fun."

UI bands play final spring concert

The Daily Iowan

The Concert and University Bands of the UI School of Music will perform in a joint concert at 8 tonight in Clapp Recital Hall.

The Concert Band, directed by associate professor Morgan Jones, will perform works by Vaughan Williams, Morton Gould, Clifton Williams and Shostakovich, and a virtuoso solo euphonium arrangement by Simone Mantia.

The University Band, directed by doctoral student John Bell, will perform works by Shostakovich, Verdi, R.B. Hall, Alfred Reed and Elliot Del Borgo.

The concert, which is the last of the academic year for both bands, is free and open to the public.

The euphonium is featured in Mantia's arrangement of "All Those Endearing Young Charms," with UI graduate David Lang as soloist. "I included it because David Lang is truly a one-of-a-kind virtuoso player. He has what we call unbelievable fingers," Jones said.
