2 weeks remaining — but Hawkeyes thinking of post-season possibilities

Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

Two weeks remain in the regular college baseball season. But with the success the Iowa squad has had lately, thoughts of the College World Series are beginning to enter the picture.

The last time Hawkeye coach Duane Banks took an Iowa squad to the CWS was in 1972.

But several obstacles face the No. 13 Hawkeyes before they can count on a trip to Omaha, Neb., June 1-9. Saturday and Sunday, Iowa will travel to Indiana for a four-game series, followed by a series at Wisconsin May 10-11, the Big Ten Tournament May 17-20 and the NCAA Regional Tournaments May 23-27.

Right now, the team is centering its energies on having the best record in the Big Ten. The squad that leads in the standings at the end of the regular season will host the conference tournament.

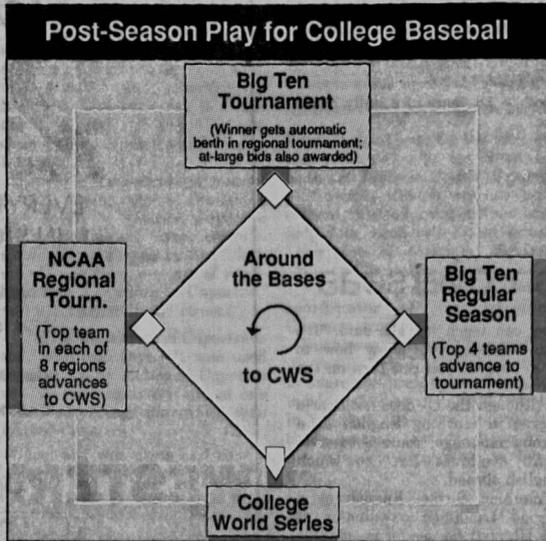

"We're going to concentrate on one step at a time," junior right fielder Chris Hatcher said. "We'd like to just wrap up the season fast and make sure the tournament is here. From there it would be kind of sour if we don't win. We want the rings."

"Then we'll just see where we go. We could be in Omaha. I believe we have the hitting and it looks as if we have the pitching (to get to the CWS). But you also have to be lucky."

"We've got to do well the next two weekends," Iowa coach Duane Banks said. "Our goal is to win enough to host the tournament. Our second goal is to win the tournament. Anything beyond that is going to be gravy... If we start looking past games, we're going to get a pounding."

Last year, the Hawkeyes got off to a good start but went into a tailspin at the end, losing 10 of their last 15 games.

Because of that dropoff, the team — which returned all nine position players from last year's squad — is looking to be successful.

"It's something more than want," senior pitcher Allen Rath said. "It's the desire. It's a part of us, and we're going to do it."

"I don't know about anybody else, but it's pretty important to me," senior center fielder Errol Shirer said. "I probably won't be playing anymore after this year, so I want to get the most out of the last month that we're playing. Losses right now are pretty hard to take because there's not much more time for winning."

The Hawkeyes are coming off a four-game sweep of Illinois, which was second in the league until playing Iowa. Those victories gave Banks' squad a firm grasp of first place in the Big Ten — 4½ games ahead of Michigan State and five up on the Illini.

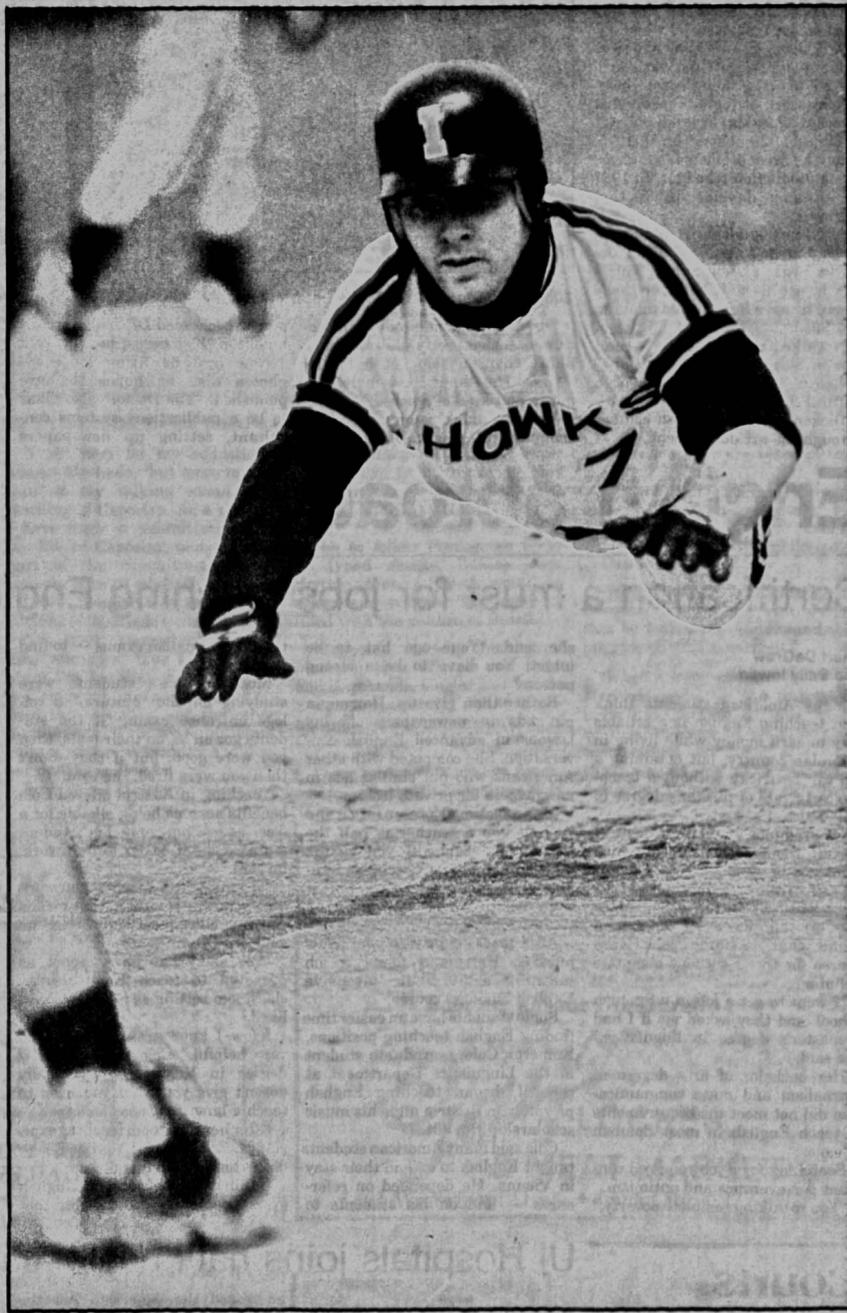

"I thought we'd be on top (at this point in the season), but we've sort of dominated so far," Rath said.

"That just shows how good we actually are."

"It's nice to have so much momentum," junior shortstop Tim Costo said. "Now we're done with school so we can just concentrate on baseball. Things are finally coming together; I think we paced ourselves by accident. And I have confidence in everyone in the lineup. We're solid all the way through."

An advantage for the Iowa squad in post-season play could be that it is a Northern team, thus an underdog. Because of the favorable weather, the Southern schools have the opportunity to begin their season earlier in the year and are generally thought to have better teams.

"If we get to Regionals, I think we're going to sneak up on people," Rath said. "Other teams might think, 'Oh Iowa, they're a Northern school.'"

UI junior Mike Bradley heads into third base during last weekend's action against Illinois at Iowa Field.

After the four-game sweep of the Illini, the Hawks are looking to host the Big Ten Tournament.

Reports reveal illegal drug use, theft in nuclear arms plants

WASHINGTON (AP)—Once-secret government reports on nuclear arms plants reveal illegal drug use, major safety lapses, theft and other security breaches within the last nine months.

The troubles are catalogued in a six-inch stack of internal documents made public by the Energy Department this week, a month after a department contractor revealed their existence by mistakenly sending copies of one report to governors' offices.

The department initially tried to keep a lid on the revelations. Failing that, Energy Secretary James Watkins announced he was making the reports publicly available "to show that I am serious about changing the way DOE does business."

The release of the papers, called daily operations reports and written from the department's regional field offices, marks a significant, if limited, opening in the wall of secrecy behind which the nuclear weapons industry has operated for nearly a half-century.

The weapons plants are owned by the Energy Department and operated by private contractors.

The reports, covering the period of Aug. 24, 1989, to present, describe problems ranging in seriousness from safety lapses at the Savannah River, S.C., nuclear reactors to worries about "media noise" over environmental problems at the Rocky Flats arms plant near Denver.

Much of the information was presented in a shorthand form with little or no detail, but it unveiled several episodes not previously acknowledged to the public.

Among the more serious cases:

■ A backup system for pumping water to cool one of the Savannah River nuclear reactors may have been unusable for the past five years because of missing wiring. Engineers discovered the problem only last December.

■ Significant uranium releases at the Hanford weapons plant in Washington state were not reported for several months. The reason: the releases occurred after the Energy Department standard for radiation protection was inadvertently canceled in January 1989, but before it was reinstated in July 1989.

■ A faulty circuit breaker started two fires in a powerhouse at Savannah River last August, forcing two nuclear materials processing operations to be shut down for several days.

Kent State anniversary sparks memories of turbulent times

Sonja West
The Daily Iowan

Twenty years ago today on May 4, 1970, 2,000 students were fired upon at Kent State University in Ohio by the Ohio National Guard at a rally to protest the invasion of Cambodia.

Students were killed as a result and nine were wounded. The deaths caused protests on campuses nationwide, including here at Kent State.

School was closed down before finals because every evening there were riots and unrest on the Pentacrest," said Bill Windauer of the Iowa Foundation.

Windauer was a UI sophomore at the time of the Kent State incident and said university officials could not keep any order on the campus.

"They shut down the school and got everybody out," Windauer said. Students at the time were highly concerned with the world events involving Vietnam and the U.S. government according to John Gerber, creator of "Pictorial History of the University of Iowa."

"There would be crowds at the Union and the Old Capitol and people making speeches. They would talk about Vietnam. They were basically against anything or any kind of authority," Gerber said. "Sometimes students would get up and walk out of class."

Today, the UI campus is by far quieter than it was in 1970, Gerber said.

Proposal to counteract Iowa graduate exodus

Lisa Swegle
The Daily Iowan

UI senior Jeff Garreans has developed a scholarship proposal to counteract the "brain drain" of students exiting Iowa after graduation.

Garreans proposed a new scholarship funded by Iowans' contributions through a tax check-off box on their state income tax return.

Scholarship recipients would be required to work in Iowa for at least one year after graduation. Graduates leaving the state would have to repay the scholarship.

Garreans has struck a nerve with his proposal: Iowa needs to attract young people to the state to counteract an aging population.

Iowa and Pennsylvania have the highest elderly population percentages in the nation, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. Almost 15 percent of Iowa's population is composed of people aged 65 and over.

Roger Hughes, past Iowa College Foundation president, said all midwestern states are facing the same problem that Garreans is trying to counteract: a large elderly percentage of the population because young people are moving out of state to accept jobs.

"Any future growth is not going to come from an aging workforce, but from the state's ability to keep its native sons and daughters in the state and also in the state's ability to attract young people," Hughes said. "One of the best ways to attract young people to come from out-of-state is the educational system we have."

Hughes developed a scholarship four years ago called the Iowa Challenge Scholarship to encourage Iowa students to stay in the state.

Four major Iowa corporations —

Last in a four-part series

Maytag Corporation, US West Communications, Banks of Iowa, and Hawkeye Bancorporation — have each pledged $100,000 over four years to the Iowa Challenge Scholarship.

The scholarship is one piece of a puzzle that will build up a mindset among businessmen to offer scholarships, internships and jobs to Iowa college graduates, Hughes said.

"Starting the scholarship program for Iowa students struck a nerve in small Iowa communities because a lot of people are concerned about a perceived exodus of young people from the state," said Hughes.

Jones not startled by campus report

Diana Wallace
The Daily Iowan
and the Associated Press

The findings of a recently released national report claiming the quality of life on college campuses is tarnished by crime, alcohol abuse, sexual harassment and racism didn't warrant much surprise from Philip Jones.

But when Jones, associate vice president for Student Support Services, found a piece of anonymous "hate mail" criticizing the UI's solicitation of ways to celebrate Martin Luther King Day on his desk Wednesday, his reaction was reinforced.

The 148-page report, called "Campus Life: In Search of Community," said increases in problems like crime, alcohol abuse and bigotry are breaking down the social and intellectual fabric at many college campuses.

Dieken retires from DI after 18 years

Visit from 'Gooper' a career highlight

Joe Levy
The Daily Iowan

Gene Dieken remembers when Gooper walked through the doors here at the DI.

That was in the early 1980s and George Lindsey, who played the childlike gas-station attendant on the Andy Griffith Show of the '60s, was reduced to doing promotions for the Getty Oil Co. Dieken has a picture with Gooper striking a pose with the DI staff.

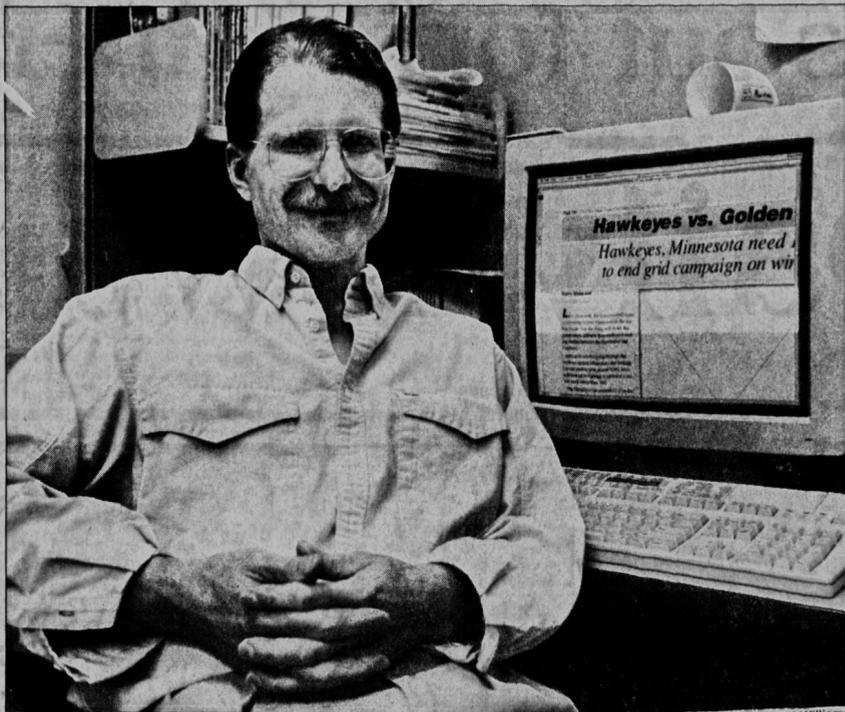

That's just one of the memories he'll take with him as he leaves 18 years of service for Iowa City's morning newspaper behind him. Dieken retires today as the DI's most senior employee.

"Dr. Geno," as he's known to most fellow staffers, got his start with the DI in 1972, doing some photography work at night. Dieken shot photomechanical transfers, or PMTs, for the paper until 1975, when he was promoted to advertising production manager. In 1987 he became dayside production manager.

A UI art student from Sidney, Iowa, Dieken's first calling in the 1970s was photography. That's how he got his start here and that's where he says he's headed again in the '90s.

"I worked at a newspaper when I was in Sidney as a photographer," he says. "It was just sort of a natural thing."

Dieken also took design courses through the art department.

The Daily Iowan's Gene Dieken has laid out his final ad, retiring after 18 years here.

"Breaking into ad production certainly seemed pretty natural, but I didn't envision being at it for 18 years. The thing I originally set out to do I kind of ignored."

What he didn't ignore is the DI's computer equipment. Dieken is the much proclaimed DI computer curmudgeon. If it beeps, he can fix it.

Now he'll be fixing landscape photos that he hopes to have published. "The Doctor" also plans to be a publications systems consultant, setting up newspapers with computer systems.

But old curmudgeons die hard, and Dieken says he'll probably miss the DI.

"It's very hard to get it out of your blood — 18 years of a daily deadline."

English abroad

Certification a must for jobs teaching English overseas

Shari DeGraw
The Daily Iowan

Many American students think that teaching English is a reliable way to earn money while living in a foreign country, but obtaining a job can be tricky without a teaching certificate or master's degree in linguistics.

UI graduate student Chris Herrmann thought teaching English would be a good way to support herself while staying abroad in Barcelona, Spain, in 1986. Once she arrived, however, Herrmann found that teaching jobs were sparse for those without adequate training.

"I went to get a job in a Spanish school, and they asked me if I had a master's degree in linguistics," she said.

Her bachelor of arts degree in journalism and mass communication did not meet the requirements to teach English in most Spanish schools.

Searching for a job required constant perseverance and optimism.

"You're talking complete poverty," she said. "Your ego has to be intact. You have to be a strong person."

Rather than give up, Herrmann put ads in newspapers offering lessons in advanced English conversation. She competed with other Americans who put similar ads in newspapers for private lessons.

"A professional presentation and looking like a teacher is half the battle," she said. "If you charge more, then you get reliable students. They expect more, but it becomes worthwhile for your time."

After teaching privately for a few months, Herrmann found a job teaching a 3½-hour, intensive English business course.

Some students have an easier time finding English teaching positions. Kameron Cole, a graduate student in the Linguistics Department at the UI, began teaching English privately in Austria after his music scholarship ran out.

Cole said many American students taught English to extend their stay in Vienna. He depended on references — and on his students to pass their English exams — to find jobs.

Most of Cole's students were studying for the "Matura," a college entrance exam. "If the students got an 'A' on their tests, then you were good, but if they didn't then you were fired," he said.

Teaching in Austria offered Cole benefits such as being eligible for a free education, and his student status made it easier to find work, he said.

"When you're a teacher, you work for the government and that means you get your education for free," he said.

Cole said that he was not as prepared to teach English in a classroom setting as he would have liked.

"Now I know training would be very helpful," Cole said. "I had a degree in English, which really doesn't give you what you need to teach a language."

After her classroom teaching experience, Herrmann realized she didn't have enough training.

"I think that just knowing English gives people the impression that they can teach it," she said. "It's like thinking you know how to cook, because you can turn on the stove."

Although the UI does not offer a degree in teaching English as a second language, courses exist to train students how to teach English abroad.

Maureen Burke, English as a Second Language coordinator at the UI, said classes focus on skills native speakers take for granted.

"You have to be able to take the language apart and explain how it works," Burke said. "There are problems (foreign speakers) have with the sound system and intonations."

Though some countries don't require teachers to have special training, Cole advises students to obtain a teaching credential.

"For 30,000 dollars a year and a nice place to live you have to be serious. You need some education," he said. "Go on an exchange program and take a few English-as-a-second-language courses. Get a teaching certificate — even if you don't think you need it, get one."

Courts

Kelly David
The Daily Iowan

An Iowa City man was charged with willful injury Wednesday after he allegedly sprayed scalding hot water on a woman's face, according to Johnson County District Court records.

The defendant, Michael J. Vogel, 29, RR 2, Box 3, also reportedly threw the victim on the floor and kicked her, according to court records.

Vogel was taken to the Johnson County Jail on $10,000 bond, according to court records.

Preliminary hearing in the matter is set for May 11, according to court records.

UI Hospitals joins nat'l health-care consortium

John Kenyon
The Daily Iowan

The UI Hospitals and Clinics has recently joined a national consortium designed to research health care procedures.

The 12-member team consists of 10 academic centers, the American Medical Association and the Rand Corporation.

The Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., and the UCLA Medical Center in Los Angeles, are among other members.

John Colloton, director of UI Hospitals, will serve on the consortium's board of directors.

The idea for such a venture was created two years ago during a speech by Colloton when he addressed the American Association of Medical Colleges as its president, Dean Borg, information director for UI Hospitals said.

"John called for research to extend beyond the lab, to analyze health care and how it was delivered," Borg said.

The consortium will study various medical procedures to determine when they are needed, and when they can be avoided.

The consortium will work under a $14 million budget. This funding was raised by the participating institution, as well as through private funding and the American Medical Association.

Among the procedures to be studied are aortic aneurysm repair, coronary artery bypass graft, and cataract removal.

The cataract removal study will be coordinated by UI, and Dr. Michael Massanari, an epidemiologist at UI Hospitals, will head the study.

"The UI was chosen based on common agreement of the other institutions," Massanari said. "We have an excellent ophthalmology department, and hope to work with them on this study."

The study will be nationwide, involving the review of data compiled by member institutions.

"This is an extension of a study done by the Rand Corp. in the early 1980s," said Massanari.

The research will be performed by current UI faculty, as well as staff from other member institutions.

Fight dancing part of new UI P.E. offerings

Students dance the Capoeira

David Tenfelder
Special The Daily Iowan

Whirlwind, near-miss kicks at the head, lunging swipes at the knees — would you care to dance?

This is the kind of dancing UI students enrolled in the physical education class Capoeira, or Brazilian fight dancing, have in mind. Not exactly the fox trot or Vienna Waltz.

To the twanging Brazilian rhythms of a string instrument called the berimbau, pairs of students flail, cast and contort their bodies in this natural acrobatic dance, which looks much like a violent attack.

In Brazil, authentic Capoeira dancers respond to a quick change in the berimbau rhythm, and the kicks and swings of the dance become quite real. Over at the UI Field House, however, students pull their punches.

The fine line between Capoeira as a dance and Capoeira as a fight is drawn in the history and culture of Brazil. Through instruction, Capoeira master Ricardo Machado hopes to pass this culture on to his students.

Machado's expertise in the fight dance has brought to Iowa City a piece of Brazilian culture — something Machado is quick to differentiate from the martial arts.

"There is nothing martial about Capoeira," he says. "It is Brazil's art of survival."

Capoeira, both as a dance and fight, came to Brazil with the West African slave trade. Capoeira was practiced by the slaves as a way to remind them of their heritage and sometimes, to defend themselves against cruel slave owners.

"There is nothing martial about Capoeira. It is Brazil's art of survival."

Ricardo Machado
Capoeira master

"The effectiveness of Capoeira was because it was a dance as well as a fight," Machado says. "Slaves could practice it on the plantations without being suspected by the slave owners."

It was the change in the berimbau rhythm that signaled the slaves to turn their deadly dance on the slave masters.

The berimbau is a single-string instrument which looks much like a bow and is played by striking it with a small reed. According to Machado, "The berimbau is a fundamental part of the Capoeira class — and a symbol of survival in Brazil."

In the decades following the end of slavery, many white Brazilians also began to practice Capoeira. Capoeira fighters were commissioned by politicians as hired killers. At one time, any act of rebellion was considered "Capoeira," and was banned in the streets.

"Part of the history of Capoeira is sad," Machado says. "It was used to kill on many occasions. Capoeira was viewed negatively and at one time, anything marginal was labeled Capoeira."

Machado, who owns and runs a 500-student Capoeira school in Brazilian Fight Dancing, not exactly the fox trot or the Vienna Waltz, is taught here at the UI.

The Daily Iowan/Michael Williams

Brazil, helped push for the recognition of Capoeira by the Brazilian National Athletic Sports Council. Full contact contests are now considered cultural competitions and judged on such criteria as grace, knowledge of tradition, fighting skills and berimbau playing.

Machado himself has been named coordinator of the national Capoeira program.

But however great his responsibility was in Brazil, Machado wanted to share the tradition of Capoeira, in addition to earning his doctorate in physical education. It was for these reasons that Machado and his wife, Virginia, came to Iowa City.

"I am here for my education," admits Machado, "but more important is my talking about and teaching of Capoeira. As a master, I have made a commitment with my life to Capoeira, and a major part of the commitment is to transfer it on to others."

Leslie Dengler is a second-time student in Machado's class.

"It's great exercise and a lot of fun," she says. "I've also learned about the Brazilian way of life. It's not only fighting and dancing — with the berimbau and the other instruments, it's a whole different culture, different traditions, different understanding."

In a typical Capoeira class, some students practice the dance, while others learn from Virginia to play the berimbau, atabaque drums and various other percussion instruments. Some students sing along trying to follow Portuguese lyrics on typed sheets. Bodies leap, rhythm pounds, voices sound in songs and shouts. The room is filled with the culture of Brazil.

"Capoeira is very inclusive," Machado says. "People can come and clap hands, sing or just watch. Everyone celebrates while developing the movements of Capoeira."

These movements are the fundamentals which Machado turns to in his own life to make sense of the world.

"Capoeira is what gives me self-esteem and makes me proud," he says. "I am free to better understand life through the philosophy of Capoeira."

"When Ricardo is teaching," says Dengler, "it is so important to him that he makes you understand the purpose of each movement."

"What I hope to leave behind," Machado adds, "is the feeling of pride that Capoeira can give. What we need to know in life is how to treat others, be proud of things that we do — through self-discipline, Capoeira teaches that."

They're our allies

To the Editor:
 I am writing with regard to Jay Casini's column ["What's going on?" The Daily Iowan, April 27].
 First of all, I take it as a personal insult that Mr. Casini did not give me the common courtesy of spelling my name correctly. I would think that one would at least know how to spell the person's name correctly if they are going to devote almost an entire column to them.
 Secondly, the column is full of outright lies. In the rally on the Pentacrest that Mr. Casini wrote of, I made no mention of the recent student senate elections. Mr. Casini gave the impression that my entire speech was about the elections. This is untrue. I would urge Mr. Casini to stick to the facts in the future, if he is interested in a journalism career.

I was greatly offended by the paternalistic tone of the entire column. I take it as a personal affront to every member of the Black Student Union when Mr. Casini criticizes us for affiliating with whomever we like to. My question is: Who is Jay Casini, and who gave him the right to choose our allies for us?

Further, what has Jay Casini done to help race relations? Groups such as New Wave and the Central America Solidarity Committee have been some of our staunchest supporters. We will continue to work with them, regardless of what Jay Casini says. Mr. Casini also referred to these groups as "...sects that are either mocked or ignored by most members of the UI Community..." Well, black students in general, and BSU in particular, are already used to that. So it feels good to have company.

Aside from my personal gripes with the column, the biggest problem was the fact that Mr. Casini made no mention of the problems of racism that are increasing on this campus, and nationwide. He did not find it necessary to mention any of the problems of verbal and physical abuse that I, and other people of color on this campus have had to endure.

This was not important to Mr. Casini. He obviously felt it more important to lambaste me and BSU for working with people who are truly concerned with the oppression of people, not only in this country, but globally.

And finally, I was not and am not the heir to anyone. Again, your true racist colors have come to light. Believe it or not, Mr. Casini, Black people can speak for themselves, act for themselves, and choose who we would like to associate with, even if the majority of white people may not like those people. We are concerned about the liberation of our people, and that's "what's going on," Mr. Casini.

Disappointed

To the Editor:
 Perhaps Jay Casini should take his own advice. While Jay loudly protests that he is an "objective," "professional" journalist, his own newspaper suggests something different. Thursday's lead (and only) editorial was Casini's plea to "Stop the Wave." [The DI, April 26] How ironic that it ran on the leftmost portion of the page.

And Jay is present as a rebuttal witness throughout Deborah Gluba's story. How strange that a person so obviously sensitive to BSU's "mistakes" cannot see the implied defensive posture of his own newspaper's layout. But I guess the editor is entitled to as many column inches as his wounded pride demands.

On a completely different note, I'm very disappointed in Pepe Rojas-Cardona's taste in vehicles. If he wanted to steal from the students of this university, he could have at least rented something more interesting (and fuel-efficient) than a Cadillac Fleetwood. Given the Caddy's infamous yacht-like ride and handling, I wonder if UI funds were also used to pay for the Dramamine Cardona would have needed.

Crying "Casini"

To the Editor:
 At last we know the true identity of the omniscient narrator of the "Boy Who Cried Wolf" story. It seems that it is Jay Casini ["What's going on?" The DI, April 27] who has the authority to tell us when racism is "real" or not, and to decide whether minorities "mistakenly believe they are being uniformly persecuted."

Casini's "crying wolf" allegation is representative of an unfortunate trend, embraced by those who feel threatened by any analysis of racism that might reveal them as complicit.

One of the main characteristics of this trend is the attempt to seek high moral ground by claiming the power to distinguish between real and imagined discrimination. But I do not trust the thief to tell me the value of the thing stolen from me; nor do I expect Casini and others in positions like his to be able to accurately assess the impact of attitudes and actions — public and private — upon members of oppressed groups.

There is no reason that the claims of racism Casini finds suspect should damage the credibility of groups and individuals working towards racial equity. That anyone should think so indicates a self-serving desire to find an excuse to discredit a movement that demands accountability — an accountability that people who fear being labeled a racist fear more than they fear being one seek to avoid. Such avoidance tactics — the pretense of objectivity, righteousness, and authority — demonstrate the ongoing interest many have in retaining the power and privileges they have derived from subjugating others.

You have failed

To the Editor:
 Speaking from your bully pulpit there at the DI, Mr. Casini, you have given the UI the classic example of why the word "Conservative" is equivalent to "dimwit."

During your term as editor of the DI, you have shown us how your conservatism translates into an editorial policy unencumbered by objectivity. You and your cronies have transformed the DI into a propaganda tool for the Right Wing, and your petty projects.

As a Conservative, you have toed the line with the Bush administration on every issue. Your views never diverge from the party line. Bush is your president, so in your editorial eyes he can do no wrong. An editor should probe the issues, Mr. Casini, but your column-long windbag editorials never fail to worship King George and kick the vassal democrats. This makes you, as editor, ludicrous. When you should be asking questions, you're too busy adoring Ronny and anything Republican.

If your defects as editor were limited to your love affair with Bush, one could stomach it. But your virulent and obvious attacks on Democrats, like a little terrier dog ripping up an old rug, make you ridiculous.

You have the audacity to cover a visit by a Republican's dog, while the amount of news space devoted to Democrat Senators is zilch.

Likewise, as a fraternity member, you have larded in doses of Greek system news, which is irrelevant to two-thirds of your readership. By this propaganda, you promote the ideal, instead of the drunken, bigoted, sexist reality of living in a frat house.

Finally, your tendency to ridicule minority groups has shown you are insensitive and immature. Every group, be it Latin Americans, African-Americans, Gays and splinter political groups — gets bashed by Jay Casini. Who said Jay Casini knows the only right way?

Your consistent tendency to be unfair has shown you are unreliable and have failed at the DI. You are no journalist, Mr. Casini, unless it is on yellow paper.

Tom Hunter

You have succeeded

To the Editor:
 First, I would like to commend the Daily Iowan and staff for their accuracy and fairness in reporting the happenings here in Iowa City as well as across the country. For most students here at the UI, the DI is the first and only news source that may be tapped into.

It saddens me to see student-funded groups discrediting such a useful resource as the DI. Even the Intifada U.S.A. protest on the Pentacrest was advertised in the DI. Many students would have known nothing about the rally without the DI.

I hope the UI Student Senate will see fit to take all student funds away from such politically motivated groups as New Wave. It was obvious to all present on the Pentacrest that the protest against the DI was politically slanted. No longer does the DI lean to the left of Teddy Kennedy, Tom Harkin and even New Wave. It now tries to reflect the mainstream of Iowa students. Sorry, New Wave, as the lack of support for your rally shows, students here at the UI are sick and tired of your liberal paranoia.

Let the members of New Wave continue to speak out since it is their Constitutional right, but let them pay for it themselves. Hopefully, our new, democratically elected student senate will agree — and New Wave will drift back out to sea and be no more.

Three wishes

To the Editor:
 In Ntozake Shange's play "Spell No. 7" the black magician says he is "doing black magic" and three wishes is all we get! He says this as the final curtain falls on the UI's first African-American Theatre Festival of four productions directed by Tish Jones, Michael Kachingwe, Charles White and James Lincoln — all students or graduates of the UI's master of fine arts program. Three wishes is all we get! That means ME!

I wish that the audience had been filled by more people of color. African-Americans, Latinos, Asians, Native Americans and all other non-white identified peoples of Iowa City community — where were you? I know you are out there. I have seen you at the Hawkeye games, music concerts, sorority and fraternity events, ethnic and feminist conferences and at protest meetings.

But I didn't see you at the theater. Why? What is your excuse? "I'm oppressed, I don't have time for theater!" I have heard that just once too often. It is a tired excuse for your personal and political priorities that don't support the art form that reflects the diversity in American culture. You need to "fess up" to your excuses. Apologies are required here.

I wish that out of the 21 performances of the festival the chief educational leader (role model) of the institution would have attended. That's right, I mean President Hunter Rawlings. Where were you? I know you knew. You could have seen one performance. Maybe, just maybe, other people would have copied you. There I go again, attacking white men in authority. Will I ever learn? Will there ever be a time when I won't have to? I know — your schedule was too busy. I accept that excuse. I am a distant admirer of your direct actions and monumental efforts to increase the minority presence at Iowa. Bravo. Gracious. Yo bro, you doin' it. But your tall presence would have made a big statement. Corrections in the future are required here.

Finally, I wish the theater department would hire James Lincoln, Tish Jones or in the future, commit to hiring Michael Kachingwe, Luis Sierra, Charles White and other non-white students of the UI Theatre Department. I am a silly girl! One full-time faculty of color. Not a one-year appointment or visiting scholar of color. Not a visiting director who drove 138 miles, 37 times (mostly at night) to participate in the festival. Just one person to add color to a department which has sincerely stretched itself to the multicultural frontiers of the theatre. Wow! What a dream. I know those mentioned above are waiting to "use their black magic" on this community as they are shonenough "colored and loving it."

What a déjà vu. I think, I wrote a letter like this in 1986. No more letters, silly girl. One woman's request. No departmental excuses. Hire a person of color in the theater department and have a festival every year. Actions now are required here.

Three wishes is all I get.

Alive and kicking

To the Editor:
 The American Indian Student Association announces that American Indians are alive and well at the UI. The need to make such an announcement was prompted by a remark made to an AISA member during Riverfest. The American Indian students sold native fry bread, at a table under a prominent banner proclaiming the American Indian Student Association. A customer asked if the AISA members were actually Indians. When we responded that we were, the customer said, "but I thought you were all dead."

American Indians at the UI sometimes feel as if we were dead. We are the invisible minority. With a sad number of 18 students out of the entire student body, our visibility is severely curtailed. Added to this small number is the fact that some of us are of mixed heritage, so we are not dark featured with high cheekbones. Another factor to our invisibility is the fact that we live in houses or apartments instead of tepees, and we do not wear buckskins, glass beads and Sioux war bonnets. In other words, we live in a modern world, instead of being frozen in time a hundred years ago, according to the popular misperception.

Yet being a dead Indian has its advantages at the UI. The university-funded state archeology building has 40 remains of dead Indians awaiting reburial. The UI allocates $71,000 per year to store, catalog, analyze and rebury these remains. Compared to the 18 living students, the UI is more successful at recruiting dead Indians to this campus than live American Indians.

From 1976 to present, fragments of skeletal remains of 414 American Indians have passed through the basement of Eastlawn. Though AISA does not have the exact figures of the living Indian students enrolled at the UI for the same time period, we feel confident that the number is drastically smaller than 414. These figures bring new meaning to the old Army war cry "The only good Indian is a dead Indian."

AISA commends the UI and the State of Iowa for leading the states in the issue of reburial of American Indians. Yet, how can a university justify spending more time and resources on dead Indians when the living Indian students are so underrepresented and events aimed at keeping a culture alive are so underfunded? How can the UI hold itself up as a leader in minority recruitment when the dead American Indians outnumber the living? These are hard questions the 18 American Indian students that are alive and well would like to have answered.

Bissinger is no Kissinger

To the Editor:
 It seems as if only history will be allowed to pass sentence on the Iran-Contra criminals — at least if David Bissinger has his way ["Beggaring his pardon," The DI, April 25]. Nevertheless Bissinger is wrong if he thinks, "...the publicity of scandal and subsequent Congressional hearings have been sufficient deterrents to future criminal activity of the same nature." Exposure is inconvenient for these people but hardly a deterrent; especially if nothing comes of it except a slap on the wrist or less (a pardon).

Who is Bissinger trying to kid? Nicaragua won its case against the United States in the World Court. The trials (which Bissinger moans are costing the taxpayers so much) point to the individuals responsible for the policies which led Nicaragua to bring charges against this country — charges of war and terrorism. So what if the trials cost millions of dollars? Taxpayers deserve to be screwed, some more than others, because the pain and suffering inflicted on Nicaragua was carried out in their names. Now let them pay for the mock trials of aggrieved liberal capitalist politicians.

If Bissinger is interested in justice and saving money, then let him openly endorse a political program which offers a real alternative to the two-party shell game. If not, then maybe he only cares for bourgeois public opinion; in which case it seems as if only history will be allowed to pass sentence on him.

Thank you, kindly

To the Editor:
 On behalf of the DI and Iowa State Bank & Trust Co., I would like to thank participant volunteers and spectators that helped make the 13th Annual Old Capitol Criterium such a great success. I would like to express the greatest of thanks to the Bicyclists of Iowa City for promoting the race, for providing corner marshals and volunteers as well as many of the Old Capitol Criterium steering committee members.

This year's race was one of the largest Old Capitol Criteriums ever held and with the support of these fine individuals and organizations, it will continue to grow. Thank you to everyone again.

Spring rains drench Texas

Storms, tornadoes claim lives; worst rains since 1922

DALLAS (AP)—The worst rain in decades drenched Texas on Thursday, chasing hundreds from flooded homes around Dallas and Fort Worth, closing highways and sending lakes surging over their dams.

Eight people were injured when a tornado raged through Paris in northeast Texas, demolishing a nightclub, flipping vehicles, uprooting trees and tearing up roofs.

Flooding also was widespread in Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Three people have been killed by rains that have lashed Texas since Tuesday. The recent storms added to woes that have been mounting for weeks as Texans sloped through the wettest spring since 1922.

The rain eased a bit Thursday, but forecasters warned the worst was still ahead as rivers swelled, dams spilled over and rising floodwaters threatened more property damage.

Vice President Dan Quayle, in town to stump for Republican state candidates, toured a hard-hit neighborhood in south Dallas and promised distraught residents that federal aid would be expedited.

"I've come by to say hello and let you know that we're trying to pull everything together, to cope with it as best we can," Quayle told residents who sought refuge at the Rhoads Terrace Recreation Center. "It's tough. We're all sad."

Water covered roads in almost every county in the path of the storm Thursday, including U.S. 175, a major Dallas freeway, which was closed during the morning rush-hour.

The west fork of the Trinity River, which flows through Fort Worth and Dallas, remained more than six feet over flood stage and rising in the late afternoon.

Floodwaters drove scores from Stranded motorists wait to be pulled from floodwaters in Wichita Falls, Texas, Wednesday evening. More than three inches of rain fell here Wednesday, causing widespread flooding.

their homes in the Trinity River drainage between south Dallas to Grand Prairie, and some had to be rescued by boat and helicopter. Thirty families were left temporarily homeless in Grand Prairie, where water was up to the roofs of houses.

"Right now, we're getting people off of rooftops and people who refused to leave earlier," said Dallas Fire Department spokeswoman Carolyn Garcia. Some neighborhoods were awash in up to six feet of water, she said.

North-central Texas was drenched with 22.06 inches of rain in the first four months of this year, the worst since the 22.84 inches recorded in 1922, said Ed Delgado of the National Weather Service. Up to seven inches of rain fell in the first few days of May in some spots.

Texoma Lake on the Texas-Oklahoma border north of Dallas overflowed its emergency spillway late Wednesday for the first time since 1957 and remained a foot above the spillway level Thursday.

At least 100 people on the Oklahoma side of the state line fled their homes, and 200 were evacuated from below Comanche Dam in Stephens County in south-central Oklahoma.

In northwest Arkansas, flood warnings were posted in 10 counties and some people left their homes for high ground.

Passenger train collision injures 29

DURANT, Miss. (AP)—A passenger train crashed into a truck, injuring 29 people Thursday, less than 24 hours after another Amtrak train smashed into a row of freight cars in Indiana in an accident that injured 26.

The latest accident occurred about 9:30 a.m. when the train, City of New Orleans, en route from Chicago to New Orleans, struck a log truck at a private railroad crossing near the Memphis Hardwood Co., a lumberyard in Durant.

Authorities said no flashing lights or signs marked the crossing.

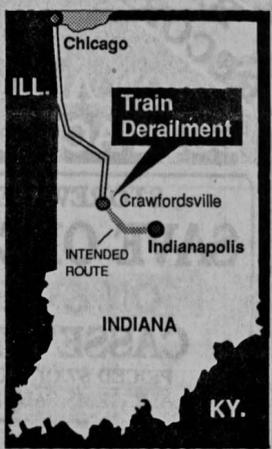

"It looked like a dynamite explosion," said state Trooper Jimmie Thomas, who witnessed the accident. "When it hit, it scattered lumber all over creation, and the truck was dragged down the track."

"It was a big jolt," said passenger Melissa Mitchell. "Everybody woke up... We got outside and saw that we were majorly off the track, but upright."

Officials said 160 to 170 people, including crew, were on the train. At least two crew members were among those injured.

It was the second Amtrak crash in two days and the third in two weeks.

Authorities said an incorrectly set switch sent a Chicago-to-Indianapolis train crashing into freight cars Wednesday night near Crawfordsville, Ind. On April 22, at least 91 people were reported hurt, three seriously, when the national passenger rail line's California Zephyr derailed in Iowa en route from California to Chicago.

The southbound Hoosier State with 30 to 35 people aboard derailed Wednesday night after striking five freight cars parked on an outside track 40 miles northwest of Indianapolis.

A passenger and the train's engineer and assistant engineer remained hospitalized Thursday with minor injuries. The others were treated.

"Thank God we were only going 25 (mph), or him and I would be history," said assistant engineer

James Neff, 42, referring to himself and Amtrak employee James Ullery, 40.

Ullery said that by the time he noticed the train was on the wrong track, it was too late.

Officials from Amtrak, Conrail, the National Transportation Safety Board and the Federal Railroad Administration were investigating the cause of the crash, but released no preliminary results. Conrail owns the track where the accident occurred.

In the accident at Durant, District Two Community Hospital reported at least 25 people were brought from the scene. A spokeswoman said that except for the truck driver, most of the people were treated for bumps and bruises.

The truck driver, Andrew Wilbur Boren, 69, an employee of Memphis Hardwood, was transferred by helicopter to Mississippi Baptist Medical Center in Jackson, 45 miles south of Durant. He was in stable condition.

"I was sound asleep when the train hit, and it was a rather rude and abrupt alarm clock, I thought," Mitchell said.

Boren was trapped more than two hours after the accident. The log truck had left a nearby lumberyard shortly before the crash occurred.

Amtrak officials said the remaining passengers were loaded on school buses and driven to Jackson where they would catch chartered buses to New Orleans.

Bush vows to help Iran in hostage search

WASHINGTON (AP)—President George Bush on Thursday promised to help Iran get details on the fate of four kidnapped diplomats, calling it a goodwill gesture and not an attempt to bargain for U.S. hostages.

"This is something they feel very strongly about," Bush told a news conference. "They've mentioned it to us several different times."

In his most conciliatory remarks toward Iran to date, Bush said: "It's something I'd like to do. And I think they would consider this a gesture of goodwill."

Bush said that "the best information we have" is that the Iranians, kidnapped in Beirut in 1982, are dead.

But, he added, "If there's some way that we can go back and get any information that would relieve the anxiety of the loved ones of those four people, we ought to do that."

At the same time, Bush insisted that the United States would do nothing that would entail bargaining for the release of the remaining six American hostages in Lebanon.

He said that while he welcomed the release of Robert Polhill and Frank Reed, "I can't rejoice and say that my heart is full of great goodwill as long as six others are held hostage."

Iran's charge d'affaires, Mohsen Muscavi, and three aides have been missing from Iran's embassy in Beirut since the early days of the 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon.

Bush cited the case when he was asked if he were prepared to make any goodwill gestures toward Iran for its help in obtaining the release of Polhill and Reed.

"I would have in mind any gesture that wouldn't be perceived as negotiating for the release of hostages," Bush said.

"Let me give you an example," Bush continued. "One of the things the Iranians are interested in is the fate of" the four diplomats.

Just as the United States wants to learn more about the fate of Marine Col. William Higgins, presumed to be dead, "I can understand the Iranians wanting a full accounting" of their diplomats, Bush said.

He said he was not suggesting that Iran believes the United States had anything to do with the seizure. "So here's an area where they have said they'd like some information, and if we can get it, I think we ought to get it," Bush said. "And we're trying. So if that is goodwill, so be it. I hope it is."

Bush also said that there might be other things that the United States could do along the same lines.

However, he sidestepped taking a position on one Iranian demand — that the United States pressure Israel for the release of 400 Moslem Shiites held in Israel, including cleric leader Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid.

"I want to see all hostages released," Bush said. But he said there were "definitional problems" in relation to the issue of hostages held in Israel.

Asked to elaborate, Bush said: "Because some people view people that they hold as having broken their laws, and some don't. And it's not for the U.S. to make these determinations."

The president, who previously has thanked both Iran and Syria for helping to free the two U.S. hostages, said he didn't think anything the United States done had any bearing on the two releases.

Meanwhile, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., urged U.S. officials to press for more information about Higgins, whose captors in Lebanon said last October that they had executed him.

Kent State

"You'd have trouble getting students in an uproar over anything," Gerber said. "A lot of the students then felt very deeply about Vietnam — the whole country did."

But the UI students were concerned, like the students at Kent State, about the U.S. invasion of Cambodia.

"The thing I remember about that day was going back to my dorm room and hearing Paul Harvey, of all people, announcing that we had invaded Cambodia," said former UI student Susan Shullaw. "Even Paul Harvey, as conservative as he is, said 'This time Mr. Nixon, you've gone too far.'"

"It was very exciting and very scary. There was this serious thing going on at the other side of the world and here at home," she added.

The time was a very active one bringing out strong feelings and actions from students, Windauer said. During the day there were speeches and silent protest with signs on the Pentacrest, and in the evening Clinton Street became a battle zone.

"No traffic could get through. Students on occasion took over the Administration Building," Windauer said. "In the dorms there were confrontations with the law. At Hillcrest students would drop bricks onto the traffic. It was a nasty scene."

The block of Clinton Street was a popular place for protesting. After the Kent State shootings, the entire block was boarded up, Windauer said. Remnants of the protesting can still be seen on Clinton Street where students reacted to what they called "extravagant" text book prices, Gerber said.

"They threw rocks on Clinton Street at Iowa Book and Supply," Gerber said. "They had to put in the small windows they have now because they couldn't keep replacing the big ones they had before."

Students also protested the UI in other ways, like when they took over the Old Capitol and refused to move, Shullaw said.

"They also burned down the Old Army Temporary that used to be across from EPB. It was a Navy barracks building that was used for Rhetoric offices. They were warned it was going to be burned down and it was, but the fire marshal said it was due to faulty wiring so I guess you can take your choice about what happened," Gerber said.

Twenty years after Kent State, it's hard for students to comprehend the attitudes of the times, Windauer said.

"I think one of the reasons that there appeared to be so much more interest in things was that our generation was dying in a war and frankly our generation is still dying because of that war," Shullaw said. "The fact that our brothers and girlfriends were being sent to this hell-hole is bad enough, but it was for a cause that none of us could understand."

"The key is the personal tie to life and death that makes you take stake in what your country is doing," she added.

Students 20 years ago were pulled in many different political directions, Windauer said.

"Personally it was the draft that affected me," Windauer said. "I had friends going away who didn't come back, and if they did it was in a box. I was number seven in the draft and knew I could get a call at any time."

"On campus there were a lot of concerned student groups and faculty who were opposed to what was happening in the war. There were bricks and rocks flying around; it was very confusing," Windauer added.

The spring of 1970 on the UI campus was an interesting time to witness as well as in which to participate. Students today won't have the same experience, Windauer said.

"It was interesting in a way that students stood up for their rights. It's kind of calm these days," he said.

Exodus Campus

Dennis Linderbaum, president of the Iowa College Foundation, said the scholarship encourages, but does not require, recipients to stay in the state after graduation.

"We think this is a help to encourage Iowa high-school students to stay here and go to school because we think financial need is one of the biggest needs of Iowa kids," Linderbaum said.

John Hartung, president of the Iowa Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, said college scholarships fulfill a dual purpose by keeping dollars in the state now and in the future: while students attend college and after graduation, if they decide to stay in the state.

John Heisner, director of program administration at the Iowa College Aid Foundation, said Iowa has offered forgivable loan programs for several years in areas where the state is short of workers. Selected graduates who stay and work in Iowa have their loans forgiven by the state.

"The idyllic vision so routinely portrayed in college promotional materials often masks disturbing realities of student life," concluded the report.

The study was a joint project of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching in Princeton, N.J., and the American Council on Education, a Washington, D.C.-based higher education lobbying group.

Among the survey's findings are:
 ■ Two-thirds of college presidents considered alcohol abuse a "moderate" or "major" problem on their campuses.
 ■ Forty-three percent said campus crime had increased over the past five years.

■ One of four college presidents said racial tension was a problem on their campuses.

■ Sixty-two percent said sexual harassment was a "moderate" or "major" problem, and 48 percent said the same of racial harassment.

Baker announces plans for troop-cutting treaty

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Spurred by the historic changes sweeping Europe, the United States and its 15 Western allies agreed Thursday to hold NATO and East-West summits this year to reach a treaty reducing troops and non-nuclear arms.

The decision was announced after Secretary of State James Baker briefed NATO foreign ministers on a new U.S. nuclear missile cutback and on the need to adapt the alliance to a lessened Soviet military threat.

NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner reported the alliance's consensus to have a summit in London in early summer and an East-West summit in Paris by year's end.

"NATO is preparing for the future," he said. "The Atlantic alliance is taking advantage of the historic opportunity to move from confrontation to cooperation."

The sole sour note was an accusation by Woerner, the former West German defense minister, that the Soviets were "foot-dragging" in negotiations to reduce troops, tanks, artillery and other non-nuclear forces.

Baker stressed that holding the 35-nation summit depends on completing the Conventional Forces in Europe (CFE) treaty.

"Unless we conclude a CFE agreement we should postpone a CSCE summit," he told reporters.

The CSCE, or Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, is comprised of all the nations of Europe except Albania, along with the United States and Canada.

Baker said the negotiations to limit Soviet troops in Europe to 195,000 and U.S. forces to 225,000 "have not proceeded as rapidly as we would have thought."

He said he would have a better grasp of the situation after meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in Bonn Friday and Saturday.

He also announced, as President George Bush did in Washington, that the United States would shelve plans to deploy more powerful Lance short-range nuclear missiles in West Germany and would not upgrade nuclear artillery shells in Europe.

In addition, he offered to accelerate negotiations with the Soviets to make cuts in the current stockpile of 1,600 missiles with ranges of up to 300 miles once the CFE treaty is wrapped up.

The decision to shelve development of a new Lance missile underscores the rapid pace of change in East-West relations.

West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher welcomed the decision, saying it shows NATO knows how to change with the times.

In May 1989, the NATO allies agreed to upgrade the aging Lance missiles. With those plans now canceled, the Lance will become obsolete by 1995.

U.N. expresses concern over lack of Contra demobilization

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar expressed grave concern Thursday that Nicaraguan rebels had not begun to demobilize as promised.

In Managua, the capital of Nicaragua, presidential representative Roberto Ferrey said that rebel military chief Israel Galeano and five regional rebel leaders had left the northern mountains and would meet President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro on the disarmament issue in Managua on Friday.

The Security Council, which called for U.N. observers to disarm the rebels, known as Contras, also will meet Friday to discuss the demobilization problem.

Perez de Cuellar said in a report, "It is a matter of grave concern that the demobilization of the members of the Nicaraguan resistance did not begin in the afternoon of April 25, as stipulated in the agreements signed at Managua on April 18-19."

The U.S.-supported rebels signed an agreement then with the Sandinista government and the government-elect of Nicaragua to begin disarming and demobilization to be completed by June 10.

But some rebels said later they would refuse to disarm until the Nicaraguan defense forces halt military operations.

"Serious efforts must now be made by all concerned in order to get the demobilization process quickly back on track," Perez de Cuellar said in the report. "This can only be done if the solemn commitments contained in the Managua agreements are scrupulously honored."

He earlier asked the Security Council, which created the U.N. Observer Group in Central America, to expand its mandate to cover demobilization of the rebels and monitoring of a cease-fire.

On the U.N. chief's recommendation, 586 military observers from a Venezuelan battalion and 54 U.N. military observers were deployed in five "security zones" in Nicaragua.

Lithuanian leader asks
Bush to recognize state

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lithuanian Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene appealed to President George Bush on Thursday to formally recognize her government's independence from Moscow.
"I think he's going to see how events unfold there and he's going to take decisions which are compatible with U.S., Soviet and Lithuanian interests," she said.
Bush said at a news conference shortly before the 45-minute Oval Office meeting that he sees no role for the United States as a mediator between Lithuania and Moscow.
"I don't think that the president has made a final decision as to what his positions are going to be on Lithuania," Prunskiene said.
White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush told Prunskiene to take back to Lithuania this message:
"I am personally, and the United States government is, committed to the self-determination of the people of Lithuania."
The White House has said Prunskiene's visit was unofficial, but Fitzwater said Bush was pleased to get a first-hand account of the conditions in Lithuania.

Bush, Fitzwater said, repeated the 50-year U.S. policy "of refusing to recognize the forcible incorporation of the Baltic states into the U.S.S.R."
"He urged all parties to enter into a good-faith dialogue. He stressed our desire to see the situation in Lithuania resolved peacefully and without intimidation. He emphasized the deep commitment of the American people to freedom and democracy around the world and the further progress of reform in the Soviet Union."
Prunskiene was asked if she endorsed a comment by Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis that Bush's refusal to impose sanctions against the Soviet Union was tantamount to "another Munich."
Landsbergis said it reminded him of the 1938 meeting in Munich at which Neville Chamberlain, the British prime minister, met with Adolf Hitler and agreed to let Hitler take over Czechoslovakia in the interest of "peace in our time."
Munich has been a symbol of sellout ever since.
"I don't think that comparing it with Munich was the best choice of words," she said, but added:

President George Bush meets with Lithuanian Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene in the Oval Office of the White House Thursday. Prunskiene urged the world's nations to legally guarantee the republic's declaration of independence.

"One must understand that what he said was said because Lithuania has a great desire for independence and hopes that the West will support the drive to reach that independence."
Earlier, Prunskiene said the upcoming summit between Bush and Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev could be a crucial turning point.
"Fate is giving them the chance to make an admirable mark on history," she said.

Latvian legislature debates
seceding from Soviet Union

RIGA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Latvia's legislature on Thursday began debating whether to declare independence from the Soviet Union, exhorted by Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis to "be strong and have courage."
Landsbergis said he came to the neighboring Baltic republic "to be with my brothers." He said Latvians, if they moved more slowly than Lithuania on the path to secession, would be "trudging through a jungle."
"I see and feel that Latvia won't retreat from the principle of independence," Landsbergis said in separate remarks to Latvian Radio.
Pro- and anti-independence protesters surrounded the Latvian deputies as they entered the parliament building.
About 50 Soviet Army officers who live in Latvia gathered with signs proclaiming, "The People and the Army are United," and "We Won't Go the Way of Lithuania."
A few steps away, pro-independence protesters carried banners saying, "The Soviet Army Must Go Home," and "Independence for Latvia." Protesters carried Soviet flags or the red-and-white Latvian flag.

The Latvian Supreme Soviet, or legislature, debated procedural questions. A vote on independence was likely Friday. Lawmakers from the separatist People's Front predicted they could muster the two-thirds majority needed.
The Soviet news agency Tass said the People's Front and its supporters controlled 131 of 201 seats in the Latvian Supreme Soviet. A two-thirds majority would be 135 votes.
Anatoly Gorbunov, who was re-elected president of Latvia at the session, backed independence in a nomination speech.
"I believe that the renewal of a legally sovereign nation must be accomplished," he said, declaring it a "normal way of life for all the residents of Latvia."

Tex-Mex accordion player, Villareal, an artist to watch

Dave Moore
The Daily Iowan

In one of the more unique musical bookings of the year, The Mill Restaurant, 120 E. Burlington St., will present Tex-Mex accordion wiz Nick Villareal and his band next Thursday, May 10. The show starts at 7:30 p.m. and is $6 at the door.

It should be an evening to relish for fans of rocking roots music. Tex-Mex, or Conjunto music, evolved when the songs of Mexico mixed with the accordion music of German settlers in Texas. Like its Louisiana cousin Zydeco, Conjunto music has begun to spread from its regional origins toward national audiences.

Villareal's insightful and often hilarious lyrics, coupled with his wild and bluesy accordion playing, have made him one of the best-selling Conjunto artists.

After working as a sideman for musicians such as Flaco Jimenez, Villareal began his own band in 1975. He's been busy ever since, working out of San Antonio, Texas. His song "La I Gotta Go" made Billboard's Latin music charts, and he was nominated for a 1988 Tejano Music Award as "Male Entertainer of the Year."

The San Antonio magazine Tonantzin says, "National agents are keeping a close eye on him; they see his talent for reaching different audiences. His cross-over potential might take him — and Conjunto music — to the top. Remember him for your grandchildren."

Dance department boots made for walking

The Daily Iowan

The UI Dance Department invites the public to participate in a "10-mile Walkathon to Hong Kong" at 9 a.m. May 4.

The walkathon will raise funds to help an ensemble of UI dancers perform this summer at the Hong Kong International Dance Festival.

When the walkers depart at 9 p.m. from Halsey Hall on the UI campus their destination will be the park at the Herbert Hoover National Historical Site in West Branch. The walkathon route will take them through Iowa City on Jefferson and Rochester streets and down the Herbert Hoover Highway between Iowa City and West Branch.

A picnic will be provided in West Branch for everyone who completes the walk. The walkers will solicit pledges of $1 or more per mile.

The Hong Kong International Dance Festival invited the UI

Dance Department to send a company of student dancers after festival officials viewed videotapes of UI performances and visited the Dance Department. The annual festival, hosted by the Hong Kong Academy for Performing Arts, attracts dance companies, teachers and critics from throughout Asia, Europe, Australia and North America. The UI Dance Department is one of only a handful of the top U.S. dance schools ever invited to perform at the festival.

New managerial committee includes resignation of Joffrey Ballet director

NEW YORK (AP) — The artistic director of the Joffrey Ballet has quit and withdrawn his works and those of Robert Joffrey from the company's repertory.

Gerald Arpino resigned Tuesday after the Joffrey board of directors voted to set up an operating committee that would run the company in place of both Arpino and the 55-member board, The New York Times reported today.

Ten board members resigned in protest at what one called a takeover by businessmen ignorant of artistic matters.

Arpino, a leading dancer and choreographer with the critically acclaimed modern dance company since its early days in the mid-1950s, became artistic director in 1988 after the death of founder Robert Joffrey.

"I refuse to participate in an organization which I believe has lost its moral and ethical foundation," Arpino said in a statement. He said the Joffrey may no longer use works that belong to him or to Robert Joffrey's estate.

The Joffrey, based in New York and Los Angeles, faces a deficit of about $2 million.

David Murdock, co-chairman of the Joffrey with Anthony Bliss, has agreed to close the deficit with gifts, loans and fund-raising over three years, the Times said. The board believed his assistance was conditioned on the new operating committee being established, a board member told the newspaper.

Ruth Houghton, a board member for 23 years, was among those who quit in protest.

"These are businessmen who don't know about artistic things," she said. "The thing they don't realize is that with Jerry gone, all the major, big, heavy contributors who kept the company going for years are gone."

Bliss defended the move, saying the large board paralyzed the company as it grappled with a financial crisis. "Right now, we've got an emergency, and we've got to put this through to save the company," he said.

Jim Kearney
The Daily Iowan

The Big Ten tournament directors must have seen Iowa upset then 17th-ranked Ohio State last Saturday, because the two teams are pitted against each other again today in the quarterfinal round of the Big Ten Championships.

Last weekend's match between the schools surprised a lot of people who expected the Buckeyes to run away from Iowa.

The scenario proved just the opposite.

Iowa jumped out to an early 4-0 lead before holding on for a 5-3 victory. The win provided the Hawkeyes with a 13-14 overall record for the season, 4-5 in the Big Ten.

Ohio State drew the third seed in the tourney, while the Hawkeyes are seeded sixth. Northwestern earned the top seed after compiling an unblemished 9-0 conference mark.

Iowa coach Steve Houghton thinks his team will have to improve on some things they did in last weekends win if they expect to be successful.

"We've got to play better than we did last time," Houghton said. "The win we had last weekend gave us a lot of confidence, but we're still going to have to play our best to win."

Houghton thinks the Buckeyes may be playing with different personnel this time around.

"They didn't have (Ty) Tucker playing singles for them last weekend, so they may have a completely different lineup today," the Iowa coach said.

Tucker is normally Ohio State's No. 1 singles player, but was relegated to playing only doubles last weekend because of an injury.

Senior Jay Maltby doesn't think it matters if Tucker plays or not.

"We know we can beat them now," Maltby said. "Although they're favored again, we've instilled some fear in them."

The highest a Houghton-coached Iowa team has finished in the conference tournament is fourth in 1984. That also marked the last time the Hawkeyes finished in the

Steve Houghton

Only two players on the Iowa squad finished the regular season with above .500 records in singles. Maltby finished at 14-12 playing in the No. 2 position for most of the year, while junior Tommy Heiting posted a 14-10 mark in the No. 6 position.

In doubles, seniors Dave Novak and Paul Buckingham were 17-3. anxious to play them and see what they've got."

Pitching and defense appear to be the Buckeye strengths, as the team ranks first in the league defensively and is third in team ERA.

"(Ohio State's) hitting is way below most of the teams in the conference," Blevins said. "They must be playing extremely well defensively and somehow coming up with the clutch hits."

Clutch hitting, or the lack of it, has been an Iowa weakness throughout the season, Blevins noted. The Hawkeyes scored only five runs in the Minnesota series.

"(Ohio State) is winning the low-scoring games," the Iowa coach said. "To be a conference champion, you have to be able to win more of those than you lose. We lost those kind of games last weekend."

According to Blevins, a strong performance in the final two weekends is vital if the Hawkeyes have any hopes of competing in the NCAA regional tournament and the Women's College World Series.

"If we don't win the conference, I don't feel we will advance (to regionals)," Blevins said. "Our chances of postseason hinge on winning Big Tens."

The May 12 doubleheader will also be the final home appearance for four Iowa seniors. Wick, Kristen Rhoades, Lori DeSmyter and Carrie Harbach will wrap up their Hawkeye careers against the Buckeyes.

"You always want to go out the best way you can," Wick said, referring to her final games. "You want to have good memories of your last year."

"It's going to be an emotional game," Rhoades said, "not just because it's my last game but, hopefully, it will be working toward the Big Ten championship."

Both seniors are optimistic about Iowa's title chances.

"The way the Big Ten is, you always have a shot," Wick said. "If we have a good weekend against Michigan, it will come down to the last series with Ohio State."

"We want to keep the title," she added. "That's what it's all about."

"Last year, it came down to the last series," Rhoades said. "We've already been there. We can do it again."

sion I conferences' reform package on athletic time demands will be presented to the President's Commission, a panel of 44 university presidents.

After all the proposals are considered, they will be made known later this month. Over the summer, presidents, coaches and athletic directors will contemplate the reforms and come up with amendment ideas by August.

The amendments will be formally proposed before the January, 1991 NCAA council. This is to ensure, Grant says, that everyone has adequate time to think through the proposals' ramifications and "see the big picture."

Glenn Patton, Iowa men's swim coach and president of the College Swimming Coaches Association, said his group has made proposals of its own on time reductions. These have been submitted to the President's Commission.

The two-fold proposal suggests a reduction in the number of days of athletic competition allowed from 24 days to 20 days. Also, all teams would be required to have one full day off per week without practice, travel, competition or anything related to the sport.

Grant was excited with what she called the most receptive climate for reform in college athletics she had ever seen. It stems, in part, from the public uproar over freshmen ineligibility and the questions raised because of the issue's wide publicity.

"The interest in freshmen ineligibility will provide a prod to those of us in athletics to get our act in order," she said. "And if we don't want freshmen ineligibility, then we'll have to come up with other measures that achieve the same end."

Grant feels the reforms are well on their way to becoming a reality, though it may take time for all universities to agree to make a giant move together.

"The climate in the last few years has spurred us to action," Grant said. "The public perception of athletics is poor right now. Presidents are angry with that perception. We in athletics know we must change."

best overall player instead of trying to fill a certain position.

"I don't get involved in that," Mullen said. "Our scouting director (Paul Snyder) is out looking right now. When you have No. 1, you want the player generally considered best in the country, regardless of position. We're kind of under glass. We don't want to make a wrong choice."

Other than Costo and Hatcher, Banks said he expects five other Hawkeyes — pitchers Allen Rath and John DeJarld, infielders Keith Noreen and Chris Malinoski and outfielder Errol Shirer — to get looks from the scouts.

■ Tim Costo, jr., sr., 6-5, 220 — Costo is currently hitting .382 with 42 RBIs and has ripped 10 homers this season. "Being drafted) would be a dream come true," he said. "Sometimes I think, 'Why would they want to pick me?'"

But, he said, for him to turn pro after his junior year would take a good offer from a team.

Costo could be moved from shortstop to first or third base next year, but says he won't mind.

"I'd like to play shortstop," he said. "But if they want me to move, I'll move."

■ John DeJarld, sr., p, 5-11, 175 — DeJarld has 23 career wins so far this year and is only one away from tying the school record. His 2.54 ERA leads the team and he stands at 9-1.

The pitcher from Joliet, Ill., holds the Iowa record for career saves with eight and has pitched two shutouts and struck out 60 this season.

■ Chris Hatcher, jr., rf, 6-4, 220 — Hatcher is batting .383 and has recorded 40 RBIs this year. Although only a junior, the rightfielder from Carter Lake, Iowa says he will seriously consider turning pro.

"I'm not worrying about it right now," said Hatcher, who was Big Ten Player of the Week last week. "If it's a good opportunity, I have to look at all my options. I wouldn't mind starting my pro career now."

■ Chris Malinoski, sr., 2B, 5-8, 180 — Malinoski, who was a second-team all-Big Ten choice last season, is currently hitting .248 for the Hawkeyes with 17 RBIs.

■ Keith Noreen, sr., 3B, 6-0, 185 — Noreen is a two-time all-Big Ten pick who leads the team with a .415 batting average. He has also recorded 37 RBIs and was the Big Ten Player of the Week two weeks ago.

■ Allen Rath, sr., p, 6-4, 220 — Rath owns the school record for career strikeouts with 238 and has pitched the most innings (290) than any other Hawkeye hurler. The Riverside, Iowa, native is also just one win away from becoming the school's all-time win leader, as he is now tied with Bill Drambel (1979-82) with 24.

Rath has been drafted twice — by the Cincinnati Reds out of high school and last year by the California Angels. He said he stayed in school last year to fix some problems with his fast ball, but feels he is improving with every game.

"Now I'm starting to throw harder and harder each time I go out," Rath said. "The (draft) is always in my mind. I don't know what the scouts are thinking, but I want a chance to play. As long as I get a chance, I think I could really go somewhere."

■ Errol Shirer, sr., cf, 6-0, 160 — The lead-off man in the batting order, Shirer is hitting .342 and has recorded 21 RBIs this season. He is also second on the team in steals with 13 and led the team last year in that category with 17.

shot a 72-hole 1181 under former Hawkeye coach Chuck Zwiener.

The Hawkeyes' highest individual place finisher in the 1989 tournament was St. Paul, Minn., native Jeff Schmid. As a junior, Schmid was the sixth-place finisher individually and was named all-Big Ten for his efforts.

Schmid was also Iowa's highest finisher in last weekend's Drake Relays Open. The senior took home his second trophy of the season, tying two other individuals for medalist honors with a 72-72-75-219.

Iowa shot a 908 at Des Moines' Echo Valley Country Club to finish third in the two-day tournament. The 54-hole total was the Hawkeyes' lowest three-round team score of the season.

Three of Iowa's five starters at Michigan State will be underclassmen, according to Blevins. Freshmen John Frommelt and Brian Wilson and sophomore Carl Odendahl join Schmid and junior Ed Lewis in Blevins' starting five.

The Iowa coach said he is seeing some improvement in that group. "They're becoming a little more patient," Blevins said. "Now it's time for them to be more confident."

Brian Gaul
 The Daily Iowan

It's "buckling down" time for the Iowa men's golf team.

"We're telling the guys, 'Let's make a special effort to see what we can do,'" Iowa coach Lynn Blevins said. "It's time to start buckling down with Big Tens coming up."

The Hawkeyes have one final tune-up before competing in the Big Ten meet in Minneapolis, May 18-20. Iowa will join 18 other schools at the Spartan Invitational in East Lansing, Mich., May 11-13.

Men's Golf

Iowa will then join the nine other conference squads for the league tournament at Minnesota's Boldstad Golf Course. According to Blevins, the Hawkeyes are looking for an upper division finish at the Big Ten Meet.

"We'd like to keep improving as much as anything," Blevins said. "I'd like to shoot for a top five finish."

Last year, Iowa finished third at the conference tournament in Madison, Wis. The Hawkeyes Hawkeyes are expecting to score in more events as they move outdoors.

"There has been an improvement for a number of athletes since the indoor season," Hassard said. "The most improved performances will come from the freshmen and sophomores."

"(Kansas Relays and Drake Relays) have really helped them. If they can do well in the bigger meets they should well in a Big Ten setting."

According to Hassard, Iowa has a chance to place in the top six in almost all of the events. Possible top three finishers are: Karen Layne, Beverly Powell and Amy McRell in the 400 meter open;

Rachelle Roberts in the 1,500; Jennifer Brower in the 10,000; Laura Kriener and Lisa Van Steenwyk in the shot-put; Shani Renning in the javelin; Jodi Peterson in the discus; Nancy Tessmer in the high jump; Angela Chadwick in the heptathlon; and the 4x400 meter relay team.

The outdoor season ends with the NCAA Championships in Durham, N.C., May 30-June 2. No one on the team has met the qualification standards yet, but Big Tens should provide the level of competition to spark top performances.

"Roberts has the best chance (to qualify) in the 1,500," Hassard said. "Kriener and Brower both are long shots to qualify provisionally."

So far the outdoor season of the Iowa women's track and field team has been marked with great team and personal successes. But it isn't over.

With Big Tens and NCAAAs yet to come the team is looking toward more victories.

"It seems like we have more depth than in previous seasons," Iowa coach Jerry Hassard said. "We are balanced across the board; it shows good achievement in all areas."

Before the Hawkeyes get to the "big meets," they head to Minneapolis, Minn., this weekend for the Minnesota Invitational.

W. Track

"We're going to Minnesota to keep people in shape," Hassard said. "By having a meet before Big Tens and NCAAAs our runners can stay active and competitive."

"We are leaving the people that competed in the bigger meets at home because they've already have adequate competition. We feel that would benefit more from training."

Next on the agenda is Big Ten Championships, to be held in Champaign, Ill., May 19-20. Iowa finished eighth in the indoor conference championships but the Hawkeyes are expecting to score in more events as they move outdoors.

Golfers seek top at Big Tens

Rita Heimes
The Daily Iowan

For the first time in her fifteen years as the Iowa women's golf coach, Diane Thomason said her team has a chance to win the Big Ten championship.

"I'm scared to death," Thomason said. "I'm anxious because I want to see the kids do well."

This may be the year for the Hawkeyes, who have taken second place in five tournaments this season, and have had three individual champions in the spring and fall seasons.

Two of those second place finishes, however, have come behind Indiana, the conference leaders and the No. 12 team in the nation. It is the Hoosiers who will present the greatest challenge to the Hawkeyes at this week's Big Ten championship in Minneapolis, Minn.

The tournament begins with two 18-hole rounds today, and continues with rounds three and four Saturday and Sunday. A 72-hole tournament is one round longer than Iowa is used to playing, and senior Kelley Brooke said fatigue could be a factor.

"It's going to have a huge effect the last day, when people will be tired," Brooke said. "The team that is the most physically fit is going to succeed, and I think we're really fit."

Thomason expressed similar confidence in her team, which sports the No. 3-ranked player in the conference with junior Stacey Arnold and the No.

5-ranked golfer in Brooke.

But the Iowa coach said the performances of the other four team members will be key to a Hawkeye victory.

"If we can get each individual to get into their groove and do their thing well, then obviously the whole team will do well," Thomason said.

As for Indiana, Thomason said her players will have to concentrate on their own play, and not worry about the opposition. Iowa lost to Indiana by eight strokes at the fall Big Ten meet, and by 33, 9, and 34 in consecutive tournaments this spring.

"There's a lot of pressure on Indiana to win, and not much pressure on us because we're the underdogs," Brooke said. "I hope our team just sits back and lets everyone else choke."

No matter what the outcome of the Big Ten tournament, Thomason and Brooke said the Hawkeyes should be pleased with the outcome of "a great year."

"There's a lot of prestige that goes with this tournament," said Brooke, who finishes her career at Iowa along with seniors Sarah Ward and Kris Heatherly. "But I think we had a great season up until this point. We have to look back and be happy with what we've done."

This is not to say that the Hawkeyes aren't geared up for the championships. Thomason certainly is.

"I'd love to win it," she said. "I've never won a championship, and I think this is the group to do it."

Hawks face key meet at Indiana

Jay Nanda
The Daily Iowan

The city of Indianapolis has been host to the 1987 men's basketball Final Four, the 1988 Olympic Trials, and the 1989 NCAA men's track indoor championships.

But although this weekend's Indiana Outdoor Invitational may not be as prestigious, it may be just as important for the Iowa track team.

Saturday's invitational marks yet another chance for coach Ted Wheeler's squad to qualify for the NCAA championships, which will be held in Durham, N.C., May 30-June 2.

And with the Big Ten Meet in Champaign, Ill., only two weeks away, the meet becomes especially crucial. Only half of the team will be there; but that's the way Wheeler planned it.

Part of the team is going to Indiana, and part is going to the Central Collegiate (in three weeks at Notre Dame)," he said.

Saturday may be especially important for senior Paul Jones, who took fifth in the long jump last week at the Drake Relays, and junior middle distance D'Juan Strozier. Both have yet to qualify for the NCAA's.

As for others that will be making the trip to Indianapolis, Wheeler said junior Paul Bouska will accompany Strozier in the 800-meters, sophomore Gary Falls will compete in the intermediate hurdles, junior Mike Gorsline will run in the 100 and one of the relays, and freshman Brad McCorkle will run in the 200 and two relays.

Ted Wheeler

Strozier will also run in one of the relays, and Jones will compete in the 100 and a relay, in addition to the long jump.

"At Indianapolis, we have a set format that we need to establish in the sense of qualifying," Wheeler said. "It's not always a pleasure to talk about people who haven't qualified, but it's a factor."

The head coach also said that at the Central Collegiate, L.J. Albrecht, David Brown, and Kevin Herd will run in the 5000, Bob Cook in the 800, and sophomore David White in the 3000-meter steeplechase.

"We've had qualifiers at Indianapolis," Wheeler said, "but we haven't been to Notre Dame before."

Meanwhile, injuries are still plaguing several of the team members.

Wheeler said that senior James Armstrong won't be back this year, and neither will freshman Antuan Maybank, who reinjured his foot in the qualifying heat of the 4 x 400-meter relay last week at Drake.

"We're leaning towards redshirting him for outdoors," Wheeler said.

NANCY JOHNSON SOAP OPERA REVIEW

Viki wins the mayoral election on OLTL

By Nancy Johnson

ALL MY CHILDREN: Donna kept staring at the gun she bought after insisting to Emily Ann that there is no trouble between her and John Henry (Billy). Dixie saw Tad with another woman.

ANOTHER WORLD: Sam opened a drawer that contained a gun. John came looking for Grant, unaware of the fact that Shariene was with Grant in his hotel suite. Jamie punched out Evan.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Bob remembered some loving moments he and Kim have shared, but he also remembered the recent night that he slept with Susan. Paul took over Barbara's business.

THE BOLD AND THE BEAUTIFUL: Brooke told Storm that she is going to have her baby, and she is going to marry the baby's father. Stephanie signed Eric's divorce papers.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Patch learned that Stephanie has a heart murmur. Giuseppe's boss is Isabella's father, Ernesto, whom everyone thought was dead. Ernesto is out to get Victor.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Frisco and Casey managed to steal the section of the crystal that Cesar has been hoarding. Simone agreed to have Tom Jr. undergo a paternity test.

GENERATIONS: Daniel received a bad cut when he jumped into a pile of trash while running away from Rob. Adam and Maya are worried about Daniel, who sought refuge at Doreen's place.

GUIDING LIGHT: Neil was shocked and upset when Beth told him that the baby she is carrying is Phillip's and not his. Reva was upset when Dylan and Samantha's elopement was foiled.

LOVING: Clay and Gwyneth made love after she confronted him for getting her fired from her waitress job. Cabot told Isabelle he is not having an affair with Ava.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Dan tried to rescue a drugged Brenda from Michael's mansion, promising to go back for baby Steven. Michael has a loaded gun. Viki won the mayoral election.

SANTA BARBARA: Mason and Julia learned Sasha's sister, Sydney, arranged for Julia to see Sasha's "ghost." Mason and Julia were locked in a room with Sasha's body.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Nina decided to make an offer for the Chancellor mansion after learning Kay (Marge) has it for sale. Nina was puzzled when Kay (Marge) didn't recognize her.

Athletic and academic leaders move toward reform

Rita Helmes
The Daily Iowan

The academic failure of a few student-athletes may have condemned many.

A year ago, the testimonies of former Hawkeye football players Ronnie Harmon and Devon Mitchell revealed that they had taken such courses as water-color painting, slowpitch softball and billiards just to remain eligible for athletics at Iowa.

In response to the public embarrassment immediately felt by the university, President Hunter Rawlings announced plans to declare freshmen ineligible to compete in athletics at Iowa.

The purpose of the measure was to allow young student-athletes time to adjust to college life and establish their patterns of study.

But proponents and opponents of freshmen ineligibility alike wondered whether the proposal was enough to clean up the problems inherent in athletics, and posed other questions about the reform idea.

Would it help at all to have first-year student-athletes cut back on their involvement in sports for the sake of studies? Or would the free time be used for something else, like socializing or practicing independently?

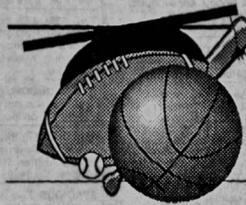

Most coaches and athletes say that students who want to study will and those who don't won't.

"When I have practice in the afternoon, I just go home and do homework (afterward)," said Jason Palmer, a freshman on the Iowa tennis team. "If I didn't have practice, I'd have the afternoon to goof off, and I'd just continue to goof off through the night time."

Many student-athletes claim they actually do better in their school work during the season of competition since their lives become highly structured and they are forced to be organized and productive.

But Artur Wodjat, a sophomore swimmer at Iowa, said he gets more done in the off-season. Swim practices are among the most time-consuming of any college sport, often with two three-hour sessions each day.

"During the swim season, I only have a chance to work in the evenings," Wodjat said. "Even if we have our meets on Saturday, then all of Sunday is spent on the bus. There's no way any of us study on the bus."

The realization that athletes at every level of their college career are under tremendous time constraints because of practice, competitions and travelling, has caused academic and athletic leaders to look beyond freshmen ineligibility to other reforms.

One of the most popular proposals is a cutback on the number of "contact" hours an athlete may spend with a sport.

"A cutback on the number of competitions would directly address the root of the problem," said Christine Grant, director of women's athletics at Iowa. "I don't think (the problem) is participation in athletics, I think it's obsessive participation in athletics."

Currently there is a national movement for reform in college athletics as proposals come under the scrutiny of newly-formed athletic and academic councils.

This month, a cost-reductions committee will be making reports to the NCAA council, and the Division I

Iowa offers pros solid player pool

Erica Welland

The success of the No. 13 Iowa baseball team this season has brought major league scouts to Iowa Field in droves. And that could bring dividends to quite a few of the Hawkeyes when the draft opens in the beginning of June.

Perhaps the biggest prospect for Iowa is junior shortstop Tim Costo. The 6-foot-5, 220-pound Glen Ellyn, Ill., native has been projected to be the No. 1 pick overall, which would put him in the Atlanta Braves organization.

According to Baseball America, Costo is regarded as the top shortstop

"I try to block it out. But a day doesn't go by that someone doesn't ask me about it or tease me about it. I try to keep it in perspective. Nothing's guaranteed."

Tim Costo

in the country, but ESPN baseball analyst Peter Gammons went so far as to say Costo is the top hitter in the draft.

"I'm sure Costo will be a first-rounder and we expect (junior Chris) Hatcher to go in the second or third but who knows," Iowa coach Duane Banks said. "That changes at the last minute. That draft is so funny. But we're not concerned with it. That will take care of itself."

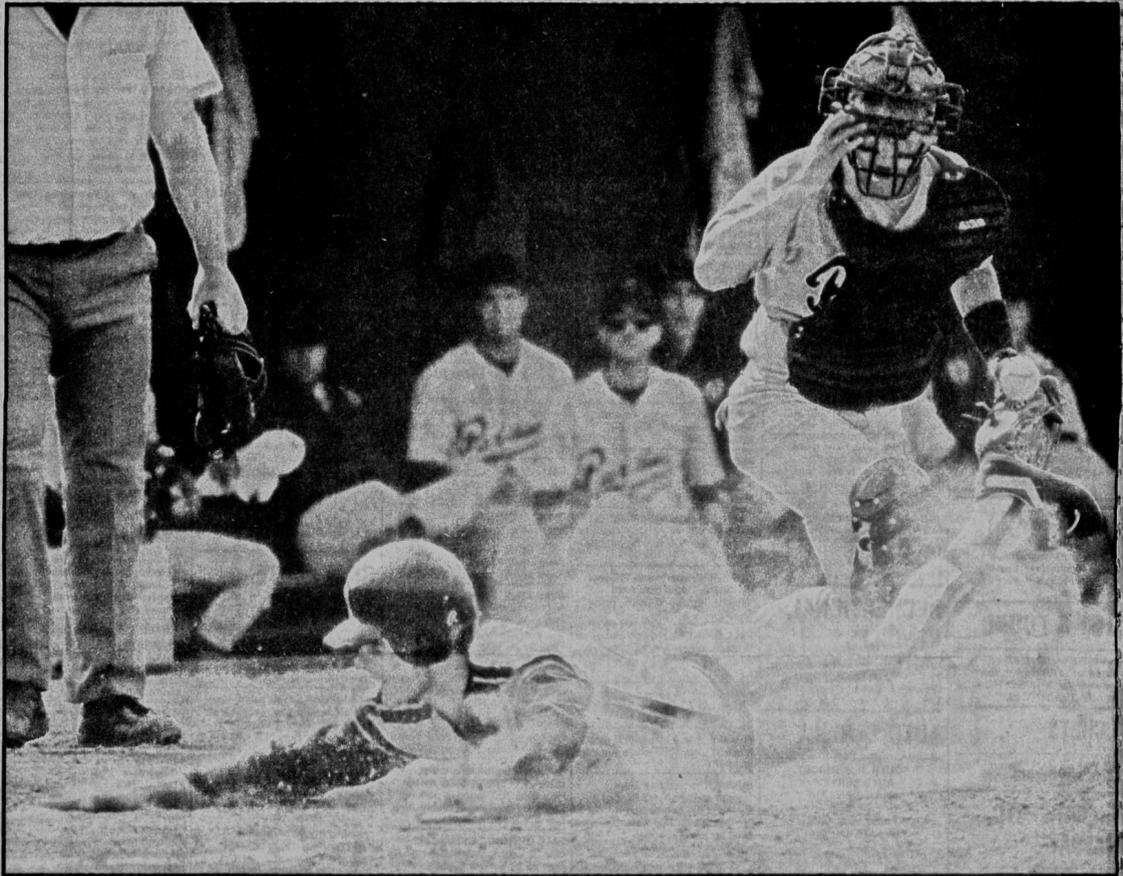

Costo said he just tries not to think about it.

"I try to block it out," Costo said. "But a day doesn't go by that someone doesn't ask me about it or tease me about it. I try to keep it in perspective. Nothing's guaranteed."

"If I'm No. 1, the only reason would be that Atlanta needs an infielder. If they need a position player with power, I'd be happy to play there."

John Mullen, the vice president and assistant general manager of the Atlanta Braves, said he doesn't know who the Braves are looking at. But since they have the first pick, Mullen said they are looking for the

Hawks need Big showing to retake league crown

Brian Saul
The Daily Iowan

The Buckeyes have taken the Big Ten lead, and the Hawkeyes want to get it back.

Until last weekend, the Iowa softball team had either owned or shared first place in the league since the opening of the 1989 conference season. The Hawkeyes took a two-game cushion over Indiana and Ohio State into a series with Minnesota in Minneapolis last weekend.

But the Gophers took three of four games in that series, dropping the Hawkeyes one game behind the Hoosiers and Buckeyes in the conference standings.

In search of their second straight

Big Ten championship, Iowa will be looking to regain the league's top position in their final two conference series against Michigan and Ohio State.

"We're in a real tough spot right now," Iowa coach Gayle Blevins said. "We're going to have to put together two of our best weekends this year (to win the Big Ten title)."

"The team in the driver's seat is Ohio State. Michigan, Iowa, and Indiana all have an outside shot at the title."

The Hawkeyes and Buckeyes will meet on Iowa's home diamond May 11-12 in a four-game showdown that may decide the conference championship.

But for that series to have any meaning, the Hawkeyes will have to take care of some other business first.

Iowa will entertain fourth-place Michigan in two 1 p.m. double-headers this Saturday and Sunday at the Iowa Softball Complex. The Hawkeyes will also play a non-conference twinbill against Drake May 8 in Des Moines.

"We would have at least liked to go 2-2 (against Minnesota) to give us some breathing room in the Michigan series," Blevins said. "Now, we must come out 3-1 (against the Wolverines). That's a tough chore."

The Wolverines, 24-20 overall and 7-5 in conference play, were a preseason pick to contend for the league title, according to Blevins.

But the Ann Arbor, Mich., team faltered early in the conference season, losing five of its first eight Big Ten contests.

"Michigan has been a mystery in terms of why they have struggled so much," Blevins said. "The timing is such that they could be coming out of it now."

Ohio State has been an even bigger mystery, according to Blevins. After finishing in the conference cellar last season, the Buckeyes have risen to the top of the league standings.

That turnaround has made at least one member of the Iowa squad curious.

"They've come from the bottom of the Big Ten to the top," senior co-captain Karen Wick said. "I'm

Major League baseball will look into Engel situation

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. (AP) — Major League baseball apparently has launched an independent probe into charges that National League umpire Bob Engel shoplifted baseball cards, according to a published report.

Frank E. Clatanoff, a private investigator who said he represented baseball, on Wednesday made photocopies of court documents and interviewed an acquaintance of Engel's, the Bakersfield Californian reported.

Engel, 56, has denied misdemeanor counts of shoplifting 4,180 Score baseball cards worth $143.98 from a Target store on April 21 and attempting to steal 50 packs of baseball cards from a Costco Warehouse in January.

Clatanoff, who works for Business Risks International of Newport Beach, declined to answer questions about the investigation.

Spokespersons for Major League Baseball and the National League denied that a separate investigation was under way.

"We're not investigating. We're monitoring it," said Rich Levin, a spokesman for Major League Baseball. "We're keeping an eye on what's happening." But he would not say whether a private investigator was hired to do the monitoring.

"All I can tell you is we are monitoring the situation," said Katy Feeney, a National League spokeswoman.

The Californian said Clatanoff also questioned Ken Gladden, a baseball card store owner who said he sometimes asked Engel to get players to autograph their cards.

Chicago tramples Milwaukee, will advance to semifinal round

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 25 points and the Chicago Bulls used an aggressive body-checking defense and a decisive second-quarter run Thursday night to rout the Milwaukee Bucks 110-86 and clinch their opening-round playoff series.

Chicago, which won the best-of-5 series in four games, will face the winner of Saturday's Cleveland-Philadelphia game in the Eastern Conference semifinals.

The Bulls, promising to be more physical to reciprocate for what they felt was rough play and hard fouls from the Bucks in the first three games, got tough on defense in the final seven minutes of the second quarter.

Chicago, led by 11 points from Jordan, outscored the Bucks 22-5 in those seven minutes, taking a 56-39 halftime lead.

Milwaukee managed only one field goal in the final 7:37 of the first half, that a 3-pointer by Brad Lohaus with 56 seconds to go. Chicago then held the Bucks to only two third-quarter field goals, pulling ahead 84-60 going into the fourth quarter.

Scottie Pippen added 20 points for Chicago, which has beaten the Bucks 20 times in 23 games.

Alvin Robertson led Milwaukee with 20 points and Ricky Pierce had 19.

Cavaliers 108, 76ers 96

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP) — Brad Daugherty hit 10 of his first 11 shots from the field and scored a team playoff record 34 points Thursday night as the Cleveland Cavaliers beat the Philadelphia 76ers 108-96 to even their Eastern Conference quarterfinal series 2-2.

The two teams split their four regular-season games, with each winning once at home and once on the road. Each has won its two home games in the playoffs.

The fifth and deciding game will be Saturday in Philadelphia.

Lakers 109, Rockets 88

HOUSTON (AP) — James Worthy scored 10 of his 20 points in the final 7:37 on Thursday night to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to a 109-88 victory that eliminated the Houston Rockets from the NBA playoffs.

The Lakers, who snapped a four-game losing streak in The Summit, won the best-of-5 series 3-1 and will play the winner of the Utah-Phoenix first-round series in the Western Conference semifinals. Phoenix leads the series 2-1 with Game 4 in Phoenix on Friday night.

Iowa teams ready for trips abroad

Iowa teams are ready for trips abroad.

Rita Helmes
The Daily Iowan

Searching for new competition and exploring new lands, the Iowa women's basketball and golf teams will embark on overseas tours this summer to Japan and Scotland, respectively.

A joint venture between the university and Japan Airlines (JAL) has arranged for the women's basketball team, area businesses and fans, and university officials to take a two-week Japan tour May 16-30.

The team is scheduled to play six games in Japan, one against the JAL team, two against the Japan "B" team, and three against the national team.

"We've had meetings to learn about their customs, how to act while we're there, and what we should expect from the Japanese people," Iowa assistant basketball coach Marianna Freeman said. "I'm excited to go."

After national competition in late May, the Iowa women's golf team will get ready for a June 1-15 trip to Scotland's highland greens.

Although the Hawkeyes will not be competing in any organized tournaments, the trip will give the team a chance to just "go and play the courses," Iowa coach Diane Thomason said.
