The flooded beach at the Coralville Reservoir didn't stop people from enjoying the water Sunday as they swam in the water-filled parking lot. At right, a man helps a young boy down from the levee that people were forced to use as a beach.

Did you ever want to go jet skiing — in a parking lot?

The flooded Coralville Reservoir may have forced local beachgoers to improvise Sunday, but they were not to be driven away by the water. Rangers at the Coralville Reservoir, better known as "the Res," closed the beach Sunday, but many turned out in spite of the high waters to spend an afternoon sunning and swimming.

"We are out here swimming in the parking lot," said Rich Goodson of Iowa City. "(The rangers) were trying to tell us the beach is closed, but the parking lot is open!"

"It's really cool," said UI junior Mike Golden, who also wasn't discouraged by the flooded beach. Golden was among the many playing frisbee, floating around on air mattresses, boating and jet skiing in these unusual conditions.

And there were also those who were simply curious. "We came out to see how high the water was," said UI senior Jeff Gillitzer, "and it also beats studying."

in a flooded parking lot or simply not interested in "the Res" at all.

"The Res is just stinky," said UI senior Mary Beth Eastwood, who was spending the afternoon at the park. "The beach is slanted away from the sun and I don't dig lying upside down."

"The park is closer and it has nice little sidewalks and picnic tables and trees."

City Park Pool attracted a larger than normal crowd as well, according to pool manager Michael Herminston.

"We usually go to the Res, but we came here to lay out," said UI sophomore Jill Jones, who came to the pool with UI junior Andrea Kopaska. "But the Res is more fun."

Scientists combat AIDS with activists

By Daniel Q. Haney
The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The nation's top federal AIDS official defended scientists Sunday against "devastating and unfair" attacks by AIDS activists but said researchers can still learn from their noisiest critics.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, at the closing of the Sixth International Conference on AIDS, acknowledged that "AIDS has revolutionized the relationship between scientists and the people whose disease they are trying to conquer."

"Activists are mistaken when they assume, or at least publicly state, that scientists do not care about them," said Fauci, who heads both the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases and the Federal Office of AIDS Research.

He and other government scientists frequently have been criticized by activists for what they regard as the slowness of progress against acquired immune deficiency syndrome, especially in developing and testing new drugs.

"Activists are mistaken when they assume, or at least publicly state, that scientists do not care about them."

Dr. Anthony Fauci

"Most scientists care deeply and are employing all of their energies and talents to accomplish the same goals as the activists are trying to accomplish," he said.

During the five-day meeting, the activist group ACT UP led daily demonstrations outside the Moscone Center convention hall. Yesterday's celebration of Gay-Lesbian Freedom Day was expected to bring tens of thousands downtown.

Activists have persuaded federal regulators to allow infected people to take experimental AIDS drugs even before they are formally approved for routine use.

Fauci said the careful, deliberate methods of the scientific process that have long guided researchers are often interpreted as insensitivity to the urgency of the epidemic.

He acknowledged that people who are infected with HIV, the AIDS virus, are impatient because they cannot wait years for solutions to their medical problems, and this has led to anger on both sides.

"It is particularly devastating and unfair," he said, "when scientists of good faith and enormous talent are singled out and publicly named as scoundrels."

However, he noted that many activists are extremely well-informed about the technical details of AIDS experiments, and researchers should not dismiss them simply because they are not trained scientists.

"Activists bring a special insight into the disease that can actually be helpful in the way that we design our scientific approaches," he said. "We must join together, for together we are a formidable force with a common goal."

Fauci outlined research objectives for the decade and noted that several promising new drugs are being tested. He said scientists would like to change AIDS into a chronic, manageable disease that does not shorten people's lives.

"The goal for the 1990s is and should be a lofty one, namely the ability to completely and indefinitely suppress HIV in infected individuals," he said.

In another closing speech, Dr. Lars Kallings of Stockholm, president of the International AIDS Society, strongly attacked laws restricting travel by people infected with HIV.

He called the laws "shameful" and blamed "political bigotry" for not changing them.

Kallings did not specifically mention the United States, which has restrictions on AIDS-infected visitors. Because of those rules, the international society has threatened to cancel the next international AIDS conference planned in this country.

Mandela's U.S. tour continues to Washington

ANC leader arrives in capital to meet with President Bush

By Joan Mower
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nelson Mandela criticized U.S. aid to non-communist guerrillas in Angola on Sunday shortly after he arrived in Washington for meetings with President George Bush and congressional leaders.

During an unusual 20-minute question-and-answer session with reporters and editors from black-owned media concerns, Mandela said the United States should not be providing assistance to Jonas Savimbi, a guerrilla fighter seeking to overthrow the Angolan government.

"The United States and South Africa are the main countries that support Savimbi," he said. "We strongly condemn that ... because the established governments of independent countries should respect the political sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola."

Although questions were limited to representatives of black-owned media, other reporters were allowed to monitor the event.

Mandela said he had not broached the subject of Angola with South Africa's white government, and he refused to divulge what he is going to tell Bush when they meet Monday.

Nevertheless, Mandela was explicit in saying "no assistance" should be given Savimbi's rebels, who have waged war for nearly 20 years against the Soviet and Cuban-backed Angolan government.

Several of the reporters who were allowed to ask questions praised Mandela and asked what they could do to help the anti-apartheid struggle.

"Apartheid is still there," Mandela said. "It is therefore necessary for you to continue to put pressure on your government and Congress" to continue sanctions.

Moreover, he said the African National Congress, with 20,000 exiles and enormous financial needs for new programs, must have money. "Take part in the campaign to raise funds for the ANC," Mandela said.

In a lighter vein, when one reporter asked about his health the 71-year-old leader said "why don't you arrange a (dance) and take me on."

Asked whether he could control militant ANC youth in South Africa, Mandela acknowledged they are militant but that they also "are highly disciplined" and take orders from their leaders.

He showed no bitterness about having spent 27 years in jail, saying he didn't want to dwell on the past. "Let bygones be bygones," he said when asked specifically about reports that the CIA had helped arrange his arrest in the early 1960s.

When one of the reporters asked Mandela whether he would help end vestiges of racism in the BOSTON — One of about 4,000 students parading on downtown Columbus Avenue here Saturday rushed over to give a "Walk for Freedom" hat to the driver of bus 39 on the corner.

The driver, who waited patiently along with the rest of the traffic on this busy street, smiled as he watched the jubilant celebration of Nelson Mandela's visit to a city that has been home to both violent racial tension and long-standing anti-apartheid activism.

The college and high-school students, marching for donations to South African youth organizations, walked several blocks from a park in one of the poor areas of Boston to the Esplanade grounds on the banks of the Charles River, where

Illinois exterminator charged in connection with IC death

By Lindsay Alan Park
The Daily Iowan

An Illinois pest extermination corporation is expected to plead guilty today to the lesser of two involuntary manslaughter counts in connection with the poisoning death of an employee of a local restaurant.

W.B. McCloud and Co. of Schaumburg, Ill., has been charged with causing death through violations of the Iowa pesticide code and with reckless disregard for human life, Assistant Johnson County Attorney Ann Lahey said Friday.

Lahey said that if McCloud and Co. pleads guilty to the second count, an aggravated misdemeanor, the State will dismiss the first count, a felony charge.

"This was basically a plea bargain," Lahey said.

"They could not have been convicted of both of them. It was an alternative charging type of situation," she added.

The manslaughter charges stem from the Oct. 6, 1988, methyl bromide poisoning of Terry Ray Schneider, 19, at the Iowa City Village Inn restaurant, 9 Sturgis Corner Drive, where he had been an assistant manager.

Co-workers discovered Schneider's

Volunteer assigned to Africa

Development/public health job first of its kind in Guinea

By Susan Stapleton
The Daily Iowan

Adam Blough is about to take on the toughest job he'll ever love.

In September, he leaves for a two-year assignment in Guinea, West Africa, with the Peace Corps, working on community development and public health.

"This assignment is the first of its kind in Guinea," the 22-year-old May UI graduate said. "It'll be exciting to make the program what it is. It'll be challenging along with all of the other challenges in the Peace Corps."

And challenging it will be. Blough will be working along with seven other volunteers to solve five to 10 villages' sanitation and primary health-care problems. Eighty-three percent of the country has no drinkable water, Blough said.

"We have to assess the main necessities at that time and try to help these people," Blough added.

Blough will live in a small village of fewer than 10,000 people in the interior of Guinea in a cinderblock house with no running water or electricity. "I think the Peace Corps likes to prepare you for the worst, so it could be better than that."

When Blough departs in September, he'll join about 25 UI students already overseas in the Corps.

Scott McNabb, a UI professor of international education, served overseas in the Corps in Thailand from 1968-71.

McNabb taught English as a second language for three years in Bangkok, Thailand. Later he returned to finish his dissertation in Thailand and plans to return again with his family this August.

Blough's first stop on his way to Guinea is Senegal. There he'll take part in a two-month intensive language training program necessary for the country.

"Guinea is a French-speaking country, so I've been taking an intensive French class this summer to get a head start," Blough said. "The Peace Corps will work with me in Senegal, and I still have to learn the tribal language."

McNabb feels that the Peace Corps does a good job training volunteers before they enter their assigned countries. "I had a six-week intensive Thai course with the Peace Corps before I went over — and courses on Thai culture, food and customs. I felt well prepared."

"It was the reverse situation when I returned. I realized the wealth of this country," McNabb added.

Alice Atkinson, UI home economics professor and former volunteer, served with her husband in Addis Abeba, Ethiopia, in 1963. "I realized how wealthy the United States is in terms of material goods. You never question whether you have enough food or not."

Other former Peace Corps volunteers suffered culture shock on their return to the United States as well. Jim Spevak, UI Peace Corps coordinator, tells of an area volunteer who had to make time adjustments after returning from Micronesia.

"Time was determined by the tide, so depending on whether it was in or out, her students might or might not be in class. When she returned, she had to learn to live by time again instead of with time," Spevak said.

Blough began his application process last October and received his formal invitation to come to Guinea three weeks ago.

Road to Peace Corps often paved with misconceptions

By Susan Stapleton
The Daily Iowan

Joining the Peace Corps is as easy as filling out an application, says Jim Spevak, UI Peace Corps coordinator.

But that can be a lengthy process. "Usually it takes between six to nine months," he said. "Twelve months isn't out of the question."

Talking to a coordinator before you apply will help you realize what the organization is all about.

"Most people don't talk to someone before they turn in their application. They don't understand why their expectations, like a special request or specific country, aren't met," Spevak said.

Many future volunteers have misconceptions about the foreign language requirements of the Peace Corps. "A lot of people think it's better to be fluent in a language," Spevak said. "Fluency is not necessarily required, since there is a language training component."

A variety of reasons draws volunteers into the Peace Corps. "Most people have a desire to work with people and look beyond themselves," Spevak said. "Others are attracted to the adventure or the opportunity to learn by being a part of another culture."

And you don't have to have a specialized major to volunteer. "Peace Corps gives you a lot of latitude with your major," Spevak added. "Positions show up if you demonstrate experience and a level of responsibility in any area."

Spevak said, "The worst thing I (as a Peace Corps coordinator) can do is convince you to go into the Peace Corps. You'll end up in Africa wondering what you're doing there. It's better to decide on your own."

Spevak said over the past 30 years there have been 600 UI students in the Peace Corps, and 20 to 30 UI students are currently serving overseas.

Professor writes like he teaches

By Chris Swanson
Special to the Daily Iowan

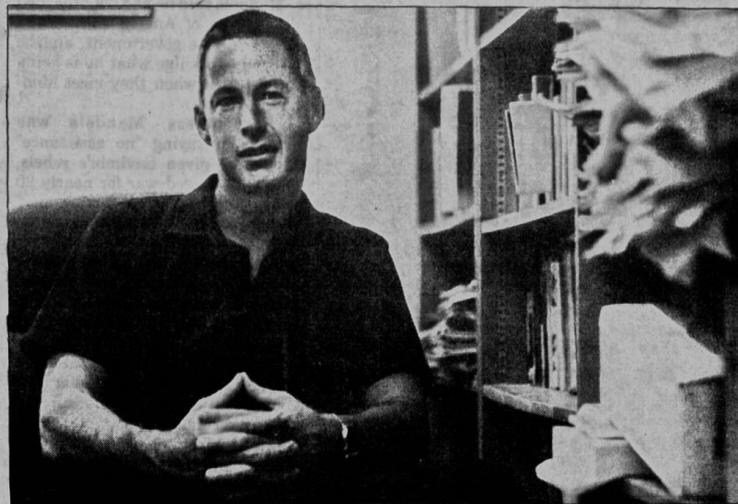

Why should I be moral? Because it'll keep me out of jail? Because the Bible tells me so? What would the neighbors think?

In fact, "Why should I be moral?" is one of the main questions Richard Fumerton, UI philosophy professor, confronts in his latest book, "Reason and Morality: A Defense of the Egocentric Perspective," published this year by the Cornell University Press.

In a recent interview, Fumerton described his motives for writing the book.

"In fact, one of my primary reasons for writing this book is my concern that philosophers too often stray from the most obvious approach to understanding the concepts of morality and rationality," he said.

"The view I defend is a version of act consequentialism," Fumerton continued. "In calculating what is rational or moral for me to do, I worry about the effects of my particular action. I don't concern myself with rules or hypothetical questions about what would happen if other people acted in a similar way."

UI Philosophy professor Richard Fumerton, who just published a book on act-consequentialism, teaches one of the UI's most popular courses, Philosophy and Human Nature.

This perspective should sound familiar to anyone who's had Fumerton for a philosophy class. In fact, this is a fundamental question addressed in Philosophy and Human Nature, the popular General Education Requirement course Fumerton teaches each spring to a full crowd in Macbride Auditorium.

And Fumerton's philosophy of teaching, he said, also shows in the way he wrote his book — specifically, that he didn't want to simplify his writing to tailor to the entry-level student.

"If you are interested in solving a problem, which for me is the most fun in writing, you have to do it at a very sophisticated level," he said. "I think it's more rewarding to the student if we go to the primary source: Plato's 'Republic' and Hobbes' 'Leviathan.' My job as a teacher is to explain those sources."

"I get a kind of satisfaction from teaching undergraduates," he added. "There are questions undergraduates ask — innocent questions that get to the very heart of philosophical controversy and make you think about it in ways that perhaps you never thought about. . . . I do think you learn a great deal from teaching.

At the same time, though, Fumerton said he's frustrated that this may be the age of the "practical student" whose priorities are mainly to enter into a high-paying career field.

"It may be a mistake in terms of goals for those students who are geared only toward a practical education," he said. "I've heard that more and more businesses, for example, are taking seriously the value of a good, solid liberal arts education. They are finding business students who can't write a report or give a presentation."

Gay and Lesbian Pride Week included a rally Saturday on the Pentacrest.

The Daily Iowan/Randy Bardy

300 demonstrate pride, unity in annual gay rights parade

By Ann Marie Williams
The Daily Iowan

More than 300 people rallied and marched Saturday in Iowa City to celebrate Gay and Lesbian Pride Week and demonstrate unity and support for the gay and lesbian civil rights movement.

Peter Nathan, UI vice president for academic affairs, spoke at the rally in a show of administrative support for the gay and lesbian community, marking the first time a UI official has spoken at a pride week rally.

"Personally and professionally I want to do everything I can to help bring your community into a full and productive role within the university," Nathan said. "The bottom line is that the university community will be the richer when you join us as fully active colleagues, friends and co-workers."

Nathan added that the UI administration is aware of the financial and discriminatory problems that face the gay and lesbian community and is working hard to help solve these problems.

The vocal and enthusiastic crowd gathered at the Pentacrest and then marched through downtown Iowa City. Many participants wore T-shirts and buttons bearing slogans of the gay and lesbian movement, including the pink triangle used by the Nazis during World War II to label homosexual prisoners.

Among the several speakers at the rally was Michael Current, co-chairman of the Iowa Gay and Lesbian Political Caucus, who outlined the accomplishments of the gay and lesbian community in Iowa this past year.

"This is a victory speech," Current said. "Lesbian and gay Iowans are winning and winning big."

The Iowa hate crimes bill that was signed into law this spring is one reason for celebration, Current said, but the challenge to obtain civil rights for gays and lesbians still lies ahead.

"We will not rest until full freedom and equality for lesbian and gay people is the law of the land here in Iowa," he said.

"We will not rest until full freedom and equality for lesbian and gay people is the law of the land here in Iowa."

Michael Current
Iowa City Gay and Lesbian Caucus

The Iowa hate crimes bill states that "persons within the state of Iowa have the right to be free from any violence or intimidation by threat of violence committed against their persons or property because of their sexual orientation" and increases penalties for those who commit crimes motivated by hate.

"Anyone — who like me has experienced first-hand the force of anti-gay hatred in the form of blows and kicks and broken bones — knows how truly important this (bill) is," Current said.

Sue Hyde, member of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, said the Iowa bill is better than the federal hate crimes bill.

"Here in Iowa, your bill mandates that statistics be kept on crime motivated by hate," she said. "It mandates that people can seek civil and injunctive relief if they're victims of a hate crime."

Hyde said the federal hate crimes bill requires only that statistics be kept on hate crimes but includes no provision for increased penalties for offenders.

State Rep. Robert Dvorsky, D-Coralville, who co-sponsored the Iowa hate crimes bill, also attended the rally.

"The Democratic party is supportive of equal rights for all, and of course that includes gay and lesbian citizens," Dvorsky said.

Iowa is currently one of eight states in the country that appropriates no state money for the research or treatment of AIDS, Current said, and next year's priorities will include working for adequate funding for AIDS treatment and services and safer-sex education for gay and bisexual people as well as a comprehensive gay and lesbian civil rights bill.

"It will take all of you, doing all that you can, to ensure that the gains we made this year are maintained and extended until we can truly say that lesbian and gay Iowans have equal justice under law," Current said.

Iowa City's non-discriminatory civil rights policy, which has been in place since 1976, is a step toward statewide equality for gays and lesbians, said Linda Yanney, also co-chairwoman of the caucus.

"Iowa City has a history and tradition of encouraging diversity and freedom of expression, a sort of live-and-let-live attitude," Yanney said.

Job search

Employment opportunities, offers plummet nationwide for graduating college seniors

By Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

Forget the papers. Forget the tests. If you thought that was the difficult part of college, you were wrong.

The hard part is finding a job after graduation.

Offers of employment to graduating seniors are down 13.3 percent nationwide, according to an annual study conducted at Michigan State University.

A pre-graduation survey conducted at the UI in May, with 58 percent of the class responding — revealed 36 percent had accepted job offers — while 5 percent had opted for graduate school.

Last year's pre-graduation survey showed that 60 percent of the class had found employment.

"If you compare last year's 60 percent to 36 percent this year, we're definitely following national trends," said Nancy Noth, director of the Business and Liberal Arts Placement Office.

Noth said her office would be conducting a three-month "follow-up" to see how many graduates found work.

"We'll know better in September how everyone fared," she said. "But we do know that the offers for jobs are slower coming in, and there are not as many multiple offers as there have been in the past," she added.

Noth said the number of companies interviewing on campus had increased but not the number of job offers.

THE INCREDIBLE SHRINKING JOB MARKET

Results of a Michigan State University study show:

- Job offers for graduating seniors across America are down 13.3 percent this year.
- That compares to only 36 percent of graduating seniors at the UI who responded to a job-offer survey in May who actually had accepted jobs. That's down from 60 percent who had secured employment in last year's survey.

"But those who receive job offers are getting good offers," Noth said. "There has been an 8-10 percent increase in salaries."

"Salaries are up for most business majors," she added.

According to the job market report, hiring is being restricted due to a "decline in general economic conditions, limited growth of new businesses and a slow turnover among current employees."

The study found that many large corporations — such as the International Business Machines Corporation, General Motors Corporation and Eastman Kodak Company — have cut down in their recruiting efforts.

Noth agreed that the cause for the decrease in offers may be the trend many large companies are following to downsize their staffs.

"Many of the big companies that used to hire a lot of people now are conservative in their hiring," she said.

But some large companies — such as Maytag — are not cutting back in their college recruitment efforts and are looking ahead to a drop of college graduates in the mid-'90s.

"We visit 29 major campuses across the country and we have not downsized our employees," said Al Heryford, manager of staffing for Maytag in Newton, Iowa.

Heryford said he has seen an increase in the number of companies recruiting on campuses, but those recruiters are being more particular in selecting their employees.

"If they have cut down, the result is a very competitive market for employers seeking strong students for their companies," Heryford said.

"We're concerned about the availability of students in the mid-1990s," Heryford said. "Employers have a serious fear of a lack of graduating students."

Heryford said students who had work experience had an edge on their competition.

"You will find students with co-op education and internships in great demand (who) will have more opportunity in the '90s," he said.

He added, "Everyone — students and employers — is trying to get the jump on their competition."

GOLF TOURNAMENT

PGA faux pas

The Professional Golfers' Association is under fire this week for scheduling the PGA tournament at Shoal Creek Country Club in Birmingham, Alabama. Shoal Creek excludes blacks from membership. This exposure is most unwelcome to the PGA, but it presents an opportunity for the association to establish itself as an agent for social change. Unfortunately, nothing appears to be happening.

The controversy began when Birmingham city council members took exception to the provision of advertising money by local government and community service agencies to the tournament. City code prohibits the dispersion of funds to discriminatory organizations. The funds were directed at the PGA, but when council members determined that Shoal Creek would benefit, they balked.

Sadly, the PGA is waiting on the court system to further define discrimination rather than prudently pulling its weight about.

Equal protection is guaranteed under the U.S. Constitution. The Civil Rights Act provides further protection against discrimination. And most state laws specifically proscribe discrimination in "public accommodations," where goods and services are offered to the public for a fee. But fraternal organizations are exempted from these restrictions. Blanket discrimination is allowed.

So Shoal Creek is exercising a legal right in denying membership to blacks.

But in the same vein, so is the PGA within its rights in choosing which clubs to include in its selective tour schedule. Ostensibly, it exercises this right. Patrick Reilly of the PGA said the bylaws of Shoal Creek were examined for discrimination and were determined to be sound. But the club has no black members. Club spokesman Hall Thompson said, "that just isn't done in Birmingham."

Sadly, the PGA is waiting on the court system to further define discrimination rather than prudently pulling its weight about. Pressure on Shoal Creek would surely increase if the expected $30 million boost to the local economy were delivered elsewhere.

Not that Shoal Creek stands alone. Other clubs on the PGA schedule exclude membership to certain groups. Some country clubs in Iowa have a history of discrimination against blacks, Jews and women. Progress has been made against racial discrimination only recently, and overt sexual discrimination remains intact.

The PGA must take every measure to ensure racial equity in a sport so disproportionately white. Certainly this includes careful selection of tournament sites. And golf fans should avoid tuning in to the PGA tournament at Shoal Creek.

Visceral policies misguided

For over 200 years, Americans have benefitted from living a political miracle. Then came the flag protectionists. Last week Congress voted not to desecrate the Bill of Rights despite some of the most inflammatory domestic jingoism heard since George Wallace's legs worked. The vote may keep us free for another 200, but I'm not convinced.

Last year President George Bush opened the controversy with his trademark karate hand gestures and the words, "I'm sorry, but I have a visceral response to this thing." In the next breath he declared his desire to see a constitutional amendment to protect the flag. Visceral response would thus override the careful (and in this case, for some justices, agonizing) legal reasoning of the Supreme Court.

What does Joe Blow think of this? He loves it, of course. Eats it up like eggs and 'cakes on a January morning. Joe, after all, has never stood a snowball's chance in hell against the Supreme Court. Now the president has dealt a blow on behalf of Everyman — the good old visceral, beer-drinking folk who don't know constitutional law but do know what they like. And it ain't free speech.

Everyone seems to be forgetting the obvious. This should be no surprise — obvious truth is the first thing crushed underfoot when any country gets caught up in the emotional St. Vitus' dance of visceral response. America was founded on a set of principles that expressly provides protection from other citizens' visceral responses. Our founding fathers, of whom we speak so often and so speciously these days, recognized at the outset that democratic government has to be non-visceral, even anti-visceral. If the general populace must endure occasional outrage for the sake of individual freedom of expression, it's pocket change to pay for the overall principle. Altering this precept alters the country. It would no longer be the United States of America, and I wait with bated breath for the Constitution desecrators to propose an amendment to change the name of the country they wish to alter beyond recognition.

If America is moving to governance by visceral response, I shudder to think where we'll end up. Possibly dead in a ditch like Chaney, Schwerner and Goodman. After all, Mississippi folks had a distinctly visceral response to meddling Yankees, white and black. They felt their local autonomy was as sacred from interference as some feel the flag is. Yet our judicial system had the impertinence to meddle, to declare long-held traditions and beliefs illegal. Do you think those people weren't outraged? Do you think they didn't feel violated? They were so infuriated they committed murder.

Imagine the reaction had they pleaded before a judge, "Sorry, Your Honor. I just had me a little visceral response and stuffed them fellas into a ditch and poured cement over 'em. Didn't mean no harm. I was mad when you said I had to treat these people decent. My daddy taught me right on his knee, Your Honor, that they was different than you and me. Didn't have nor need no rights. Now you tell me to treat 'em like kin? Watch it, Your Honor, or I'll be stuffin' you in a ditch."

All Americans being equally good at heart, there is now a movement afoot to make assaulting flag desecrators a simple misdemeanor carrying a token fine. Our nation is putting in a cloak of righteous indignation like a spoiled girl in her prom gown who's been handed a curfew she doesn't like.

People are mad about a lot right now: art, affirmative action, the books their kids read in school, condom advertisements. What makes you mad? What visceral responses do you want to see carved into our laws? Think what kind of laws we would have if they were. Last time Joe Blow's pet peeves had that much to do with government, Germany gave birth to the Third Reich.

The bottom line, folks, is this: We live in America. It is not now, nor has it ever been, nor God willing shall it ever be, a country for those who would be prima donnas about freedom. We do not get to choose what speech is free, nor which speakers can be assaulted for a nominal fee and a slap on the wrist. Some countries do practice selective freedom of speech. We have never looked to them as the bright spots of the earth before.

To all politicians who have ignored toiling over the nation's balance sheet for more than a year now in favor of the easy exercise of flag-waving: Shame on you. If you had the nerve to stop being such hypocrites, you'd head for Tiananmen Square and a visit with your buddy, Li Peng. Go ahead. Sip on a frosty Tsing Tao while you discuss the fine points of free speech. Perhaps the overall tenor of that country will be more agreeable to your fragile sense of national pride. Leave those who know how to be Americans — in a great and demanding tradition of freedom — alone to solve the many critical problems the nation must overcome.

Letters

Poor editing

To the Editor:

I must object to the way you abridged my letter to the editor ["Performers deserve reviews," June 15, The Daily Iowan]. You changed words to alter meanings and enervate my writing style. To see my name at the end of the letter was dismaying.

You printed, for example, that Professor Glass can translate languages fluently, but I wrote that he "prepares all his own translations," which means that every translation used by the UI's opera department is his. I named several languages Glass speaks fluently and explained that he taught "every operatic acting style." But by deleting words like "every," you change the tone of my letter.

When I pointed out that Julian received his doctorate in May, I wished to tell readers that he was not a ringer from outside the university. To leave out such a detail distorts what follows in the same paragraph.

Worst of all, you deleted the long paragraph in which I mentioned the reviews of Judith Green a decade ago, referred to the dialogues penned by Jennifer Weglarz and Steve Donoghue (last September 15 and 22) and recommended that undergraduates and others be invited to supply reviews for certain types of student concerts on campus. I felt I made positive recommendations.

Now I suggest that you inform readers when letters are cut or reworded. Alert readers or withhold the names of the authors of heavily-edited letters. There is a trusting public here, which is to say, you can't have things just any old way.

Misinformed letter

To the Editor:

David Tingwald declared "It's stupid to say people have died for the flag," and that "Americans fight and die in wars because they believe they are protecting the people, freedoms and democratic institutions in the United States." ["Stupid" flag burners," June 18, The Daily Iowan].

This is essentially an uninformed, neophytic viewpoint. Those may be the initial reasons people join the military. But as armed soldiers in battle, believe me, those thoughts are long forgotten. When enemy hordes advance on your position with fixed bayonets, you think, "kill or be killed" and how to kill, whatever the means.

At that point, typically, the flag was carried as a rally symbol, a military tactic dating from antiquity. Your squad or company then countered, each person to live or die under the flag as you collectively met the onslaught or pressed an offensive attack. This is one important fact in the history of our flag and part of the reason we walk free.

You can't think of "the people, institutions and freedoms" at this stage of the meat-grinding. Your do-or-die motivation under the flag is focused and one-pointed in every skirmish. A great many died for the flag in that sense.

So that flag itself — emblem of coherence and resolve in uncounted battles, national banner of identity and honor, unity and citizen pride — warrants some protection from the desecrators for practical reasons, in the patriotic interest of the vast majority of people.

Pleasing all the people all the time

President George Bush has had all the best of it through his first 18 months in the Oval Office. He has been breezing along on a smile and a shoeshine, managing to avoid or delay the kinds of decisions that polarize the voters — or, at least, antagonize or alienate some substantial bloc of the electorate.

Bush has proved to be an excellent good-times politician, beguiling both the public and the press with a manner that seems both relaxed and reassuring. He's shown himself for the flag and against Manuel Noriega. The result has been approval ratings that have been consistently stratospheric, even higher than those achieved by his predecessor Ronald Reagan at the same early stage of his stewardship. The president has been, in effect, pleasing all the people all the time.

But Bush is now reaching the point at which he will be forced to make the kind of calls that inevitably will divide his constituents. There is no better example than his decision to veto the family leave bill Congress approved last week.

The measure, passed with broad bipartisan support, is modest enough in its terms. It would require companies with more than 50 employees to grant 12 weeks of unpaid leave to workers who have a baby or must deal with a medical emergency involving an immediate family member. As its sponsors point out, it is a piece of legislation that recognizes the most significant change in the work force in the last generation, the growing proportion of women holding full-time jobs; and the most significant change in the population, the growing proportion of elderly who may need their children's care.

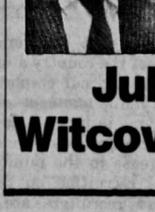

During the 1988 campaign, Bush seemed to recognize the validity of the family leave concept, at least as applied to children. Speaking to a Republican women's meeting in Rockford, Ill., he said, "We also need to assure that women don't have to worry about getting their jobs back after having a child or caring for a child during serious illness."

But the post-election story is different. Bush, according to a White House spokesman, "has always been opposed to the federal government mandating what every business in the country should do. This particular bill would badly impact a lot of companies."

It is an argument patently full of holes. For one thing, the legislation

Jack Germond

would apply only to companies with enough workers so that there might be a reasonable expectation of enough turnover to accommodate an employee returning from leave without adding a significant burden to its costs. The idea that some struggling young entrepreneur is likely to be bankrupt by employees who become pregnant or who must care for a parent with a terminal illness is nonsense.

The same is true of the suggestion that the requirements would put American business at some competitive disadvantage. Many enlightened companies are already following such policies or have agreed to incorporate them in union contracts. And most of the other Western industrial powers with whom U.S. business must compete already have requirements much more liberal — leave periods of up to a full year, for example, with provision for part of full pay during the leave. All this bill requires is that the job be available.

The Bush argument on family leave is very much like the one he made in 1988 against the proposal by Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis to require American business to provide health insurance for many of the 37 million not now covered. In that case, too, candidate Bush objected to the mandatory nature of the plan on the ground that it would put employers at a comparative disadvantage. In fact, that it would have done is remove the competitive disadvantage suffered by those businesses who already provide such coverage but are forced to pay higher premiums to meet the costs of the uncovered.

The speciousness of Bush's argument on family leave doesn't mean, by any stretch of the imagination, that vetoing the bill will have any significant — or even instantly measurable — effect on his popularity.

But the family leave issue — like the abortion question and the pending civil rights bill — is one of obvious and direct interest to some impossible-to-quantify minority of Americans. And it is one that may remind the president that you cannot please all of the people all of the time.

American Heart Association elects Abboud as president

The Daily Iowan and The Associated Press

Dr. Francois Abboud, a professor in the UI College of Medicine, was elected president of the American Heart Association Sunday at the organization's annual delegate assembly in Denver.

Abboud is a professor of medicine, physiology and biophysics, director of the UI Cardiovascular Center, head of the Department of Internal Medicine and Edith King Professor of Cardiovascular Research at the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

The AHA, with thousands of scientists and researchers and more than 2.5 million volunteers, is the nation's largest voluntary health organization dedicated to the prevention of disability and death from cardiovascular diseases and strokes.

As chief scientist and medical officer, Abboud will be responsible for all medical, scientific and public health matters. An AHA volunteer since 1957, Abboud has served two terms on the AHA's national board of directors and has served in various leadership positions on several national committees and scientific councils.

Abbas drops from race
UI College of Law graduate Jeff Abbas has dropped his challenge to Rep. Dave Nagle, D-3rd District.

Abbas ended his candidacy for the House of Representatives for health reasons, according to an Associated Press report.

Abbas, a 1987 graduate of the UI College of Law and a 1984 graduate of Harvard, said he told Iowa GOP leaders earlier this month that he was quitting the race.

His withdrawal leaves the Republican party without a 3rd District candidate for the first time in more than 50 years. Republican leaders recruited Abbas after a long search for an opponent for Nagle.

Free parking available for Amana tournament
The UI will offer free parking at the three locations for fans attending Monday's 24th annual Amana VIP Golf Tournament at the UI Finkbine Golf Course.

Dr. Francois Abboud

Locations include:

- Space for 2,500 cars in unsurfaced lots near the WSUI/KSUI radio towers. Enter from Mormon Trek Road, across the street from ticket booths and Finkbine entry gates.

- Space for 700 cars in the hard-surfaced lot at West High School, west of Mormon Trek Road.

- Space for up to 100 cars at the Hawkeye Softball Complex, south of Highway 6. Weather may restrict parking in this area.

These parking areas will open 6 a.m. Monday.

The UI Department of Public Safety urges fans driving from the west on Interstate 80 to take U.S. 218 south to Melrose Avenue and use the West High School parking area.

Public transportation available will include UI Cambuses and Coralville and Iowa City Transit buses.

Finkbine will be closed for public play until Tuesday.

body in an employee restroom the morning after W.B. McCloud and Co. pest-control workers had fumigated the restaurant with methyl bromide gas. Schneider, a Davenport native, was pronounced dead shortly afterward at UI Hospitals and Clinics.

Although W.B. McCloud and Co. fumigators, under the supervision of Stephen Plath, had tested and found the toxicity level to be within the company's safety standards before any Village Inn employees re-entered the building — Iowa City Police investigators later discovered that a circuit box controlling the restaurant's ventilation system from the roof had been left switched off.

After months of investigation of the incident by the Iowa Department of Agriculture and Land Stewardship and the Iowa Attorney General's office, state officials reached a settlement with W.B. McCloud and Co. in April 1989 that effectively banned the corporation from fumigating a public restaurant or store in Iowa for three years and forced the company to close its Davenport office.

"We still believe they violated the pesticide code," Lahey said of W.B. McCloud and Co., "but if they come in and plead there will be no trial."

Attorney Steven Regenwether, who is representing W.B. McCloud and Co., declined to comment on the case.

The trial is scheduled for 9 a.m. today at the Johnson County Courthouse.

they joined more than 200,000 others waiting to greet Mandela.

The freedom walk, organized by Reebok and the Free South Africa Organization, brought students together from more than 27 schools to increase awareness of Mandela's contribution to the anti-apartheid movement in South Africa.

Each of the walk's 27 teams was sponsored by a corporate donor for $1,000 or more.

According to walk organizer Joseph Johnson, an additional goal of the march was to raise the students' consciousness of racial problems in their own city.

"It's empowering for us," Boston College student Lois Brown said. "It's an opportunity for people to voice their reactions to racial issues."

After more than six hours of waiting, the students heard Mandela speak.

The 71-year-old freedom fighter focused on divestment and asked for donations to help rebuild a non-racist educational and work system for all people in his country.

"For our part, we shall leave no stone unturned until the violence in (South Africa) has come to an end. In this we need your full support," Mandela said.

"We refuse to accept anything less than a full democracy," he added.

While the day was filled with music and chants calling for freedom in South Africa, some at the rally were uncertain of its ability to have a lasting effect on people in the Boston area.

"Boston is a pretty racist city," said Brandeis University sociologist Gordon Fellman. "For some people, I hope, the effects of this rally will transfer to their racism at home. . . . People come for a mixture of motives. Some come because it's trendy; others want to be moved."

United States, the South African responded, "We are prepared to be guided by the black leadership."

At a brief airport arrival ceremony earlier, Mandela had said he was "greatly encouraged" by his rousing reception in the United States.

"I come here to put the message out that sanctions must be intensified and to ask for resources so we could be able to address the problems that are facing our country today," said the ANC deputy president.

Mandela settled down to business in Washington after four days of enthusiastic rallies and appearances that drew hundreds of thousands of supporters.

"We have been greatly encouraged by the rousing reception which the American people in New York and Boston have given us. They have left us with the distinct impression that in this country we have our brothers and sisters who are committed to the fight against racial oppression in our country," Mandela said.

Mandela noted that recent concessions by South African President F.W. de Klerk "have raised the hope for peace." But he said the government yielded "not because of a change of heart but because of the pressure put on the government inside the country and of the international community generally."

It is in Washington that Mandela must make his case for continued U.S. economic sanctions against South Africa's government.

But before getting down to business, the Mandela motorcade took the scenic route into town from National Airport, winding across the Potomac River and past the Lincoln Memorial and the Washington Monument. There was little traffic on the streets and no crowds lining the way.

Give another chance. Give blood.

German unity cuts both ways

European Community has hope, apprehension

By Cotton Timberlake
The Associated Press

LONDON—The economic merger of the Germans on July 1 probably will be a double-edged sword for the rest of Europe.

Experts feel it will spur general economic growth and speed the march toward a single European market, but also may give West Germany, already the strongest economy by far, even more influence over the continent's economic affairs.

The Germans believe they have a strategy that will merge the two economies with minimum shock to the rest of Europe, but there are unknowns.

If the union increases inflation, German interest rates may rise and the other Western European economies, linked in an exchange-rate system, may have to follow.

The economic merger is the first major step toward reunification of East and West Germany.

On July 1, the West German mark becomes the currency of East Germany and the Germans will merge their economic machinery to create what their treaty calls "identical social market systems."

That means East Germany's communist economic regulations will be replaced by West Germany's corporate, union and welfare practices.

"Overall, it should provide a bit of a spur of growth around Europe over the longer term," said Stephen King, international economist with the London investment firm James Capel and Co. "It should be good for the other European export sectors."

Britain's National Institute of Economic and Social Research said in a report, "The rest of Europe is expected to benefit both from higher demand in Germany and also marginally because of increased centrally planned economies' imports."

Neighboring Holland, which sells one-fourth of its exports to Germany, expects to benefit even if unification proves bumpy.

"In the long run, it will be a boon for the Dutch," said Chen Le Lie, an analyst for Banque Paribas Amsterdam. "People can't do with-bit apprehensive about a unified Germany."

King said: "Quite clearly, the other Europeans are worried about having such a large Germany in the center of Europe."

"There is of course the fear that Germany's economy makes it much more politically powerful as a whole and raises its prestige and raises its power in the European Community."

A united Germany will have a population of nearly 80 million. West Germany's gross national product last year was $1.2 trillion, single European currency and a single central bank. Britain is opposed, but the National Institute report said monetary integration appeared to have gained support in recent months.

Peter Pietsch, an economist with Commerzbank in Frankfurt, said, "Of course Germany has a big economic importance, and the importance will grow. I don't see how this would be a bad influence."

"We want to be a group of countries with the same target and the same goal" of low inflation, he said in an interview. "We are European, we feel European. I think that is much more important than the isolated importance of one country."

King said France and the Netherlands hope an integrated Europe will spread power more evenly, but Germany "would like to impose more strongly a Bundesbank on the whole of Europe and essentially make a deutsche mark bloc." Hans Jaeckel, senior German economist for the private forecasting firm DRI Europe in Frankfurt, said European integration should be hastened to create a "less German-dominated" Europe.

John Major, Britain's chancellor of the exchequer, takes the opposite view.

"There are those who see in the hectic pace of change in the East a reason for urging similarly hectic change within the community," he told the German Chamber of Industry and Commerce in London. "Speed is of no advantage if you go in the wrong direction. Better to build slowly and well."

"There is of course the fear that Germany's economy makes it much more politically powerful as a whole and raises its prestige and raises its power in the European Community."

Stephen King
international economist

out things like cheese, poultry and pork."

More truck drivers could be employed in hauling foreign goods from the Dutch port of Rotterdam, Europe's busiest, to Germany.

There also are worries.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain said in mid-June that a unified Germany within a federal Europe "would be dominant both in numbers and political and economic power."

Asked whether that worried her, Thatcher said, "Yes... and I think many people in Europe are a little more than 25 percent greater than second-place France.

The central Bundesbank, with its traditionally tight, inflation-fighting monetary policy, already dominates European monetary affairs.

Unification of Germany within the context of Western European integration greatly complicates the economic and political issues.

In 1992, the 12 European Community nations are to scrap trade barriers and become a single market.

Germany and France want a

Unified Germany will begin with a 28 billion dollar deficit

The Associated Press

BONN, West Germany — The first federal budget of a unified Germany in 1991 will run a deficit of more than $28 billion, West German government financial sources say.

According to a draft report from the finance ministry, a copy of which was obtained Sunday by The Associated Press, $8.75 billion of the 1991 deficit will be the result of absorbing the East German budget after unification.

The report also estimated East Germany would receive about $14 billion in the second half of this year and $22 billion in 1991 to help cover unification costs.

The money would come from the German Unity Fund, a venture set up by the West German government to raise money on the bond market to help finance unification, the report said.

On July 1, East Germany will merge its economy with West Germany, ruled by the powerful West German mark.

West Germany's portion of the 1991 estimated deficit, $19.7 billion, compares with an actual 1989 deficit of $12 billion.

Merging the Two Germans

Highlights of May 18 treaty

All provisions take effect July 1

Monetary union

Both Germans will use existing West German currency (the Deutschmark) and central bank (the Bundesbank). Eastern wages and up to 4,000 marks of savings will be converted at a 1-1 rate (6,000 marks for those over 60 years old; 2,000 for children under 15); other savings and all debts at 2-1.

Economic union

East will abandon its current economic system and adopt West's economic, tax, and property ownership policies.

Social union

West's unemployment and pension benefit levels, social security and health care systems will be extended to include the East.

Border resolution

In actions separate from the economic treaty, both parliaments have passed resolutions recognizing the current Polish-German border and renouncing any claim to additional territory.

Currency change unsettled

The Associated Press

LONDON — Foreign exchange dealers agree the first trading day after the powerful West German mark becomes East Germany's currency should be calm, but what happens next is a matter of argument.

July 1, when the merger takes place, is "a special day of course... in particular for the history of this country, but in economic terms, the world will not be so different from June 30," said Peter Pietsch, an economist with Commerzbank in Frankfurt.

West Germany will convert East German marks at the generous 1-1 rate for the first 4,000 and 2-1 above that total.

The government is printing 120 billion marks — $70 billion — for the conversion, which will increase West Germany's money supply by 10 percent.

Recently the mark has been strong in relation to the dollar and Japanese yen — against which it floats freely, but weaker within the nine-currency European Monetary System — which limits its movements.

Bulls believe the mark will be pushed higher by Germany's expected economic expansion and possible increase in interest rates to check inflation. Bears worry about political uncertainty and inflation.

Robin Aspinall, director of currency economics at the London investment firm Hoare Govett Ltd., sees a rise in value to 1.40 marks to the dollar from the current 1.68, and perhaps even to parity in three or four years.

"You have the perfect conditions for a strong currency," he said. "It's right out of the textbook. Of the major currencies, I would back the deutsche mark against all comers."

Pietsch expects an increase to 1.60 to the dollar within a year, but no more.

Stephen King, international economist with the London investment firm James Capel and Co., feels the mark will weaken against the dollar and yen, but rise against other European currencies.

E. Germans prepare for change

By Mark Fritz
The Associated Press

EAST BERLIN — East Germans lined up in front of banks yesterday as they spent an anxious weekend on the threshold of enormous change.

Next Sunday, the former Communist country will merge its economy with West Germany, a momentous event that will have an immediate effect on the lives of the nation's 16 million people.

Left-wing radicals tried to attack the East Berlin headquarters of a neo-Nazi group Saturday, the latest in a series of extremist clashes in recent months that some officials call a byproduct of the social upheaval under way.

Authorities said 21 police officers were badly injured in the rioting, and East German Interior Minister Peter-Michael Diestel called for tougher laws against extremist acts.

Despite recent unrest, Diestel said Sunday that the country has so far succeeded in "safeguarding our young democracy and process of German unity with calm and order."

East Germany's currency will be changed to West German marks Sunday, which marks the former socialist nation's official immersion into the free market and a major step toward full unification with West Germany.

Banks stayed open all weekend to allow customers to fill out applications to change their savings to West German marks, and thousands of people stood in lines.

To keep the powerful West German mark from being weakened by the abrupt expansion of the money supply, East Germans will only be able to convert 2,000 marks — $1,210 — of their savings to West German marks during the first month of economic union.

Some already were receiving checks for that money, which they will be able to cash Sunday.

"We're going to buy a car," said Margit Schollain, 32, as she waited with more than a thousand other people in a series of lines that snaked from a bank on East Berlin's Leipziger Street.

The mood was a mixture of apprehension and excitement over the economic experiment about to unfold.

"I think it will bring many social problems and not just unemployment," said Jan Falkenstern, 24, as he waited. "I think the unrest that happened yesterday is part of it."

The riot in the city's Lichtenberg district followed a demonstration by about 4,000 leftists who were protesting recent attacks by radical rightists on foreigners.

Casualty estimate expands in Iran

Aftershock triggers further destruction

By Slobodan Lekic
The Associated Press

RUDBAR, Iran — The most powerful aftershock in three days rocked earthquake-devastated northern Iran on Sunday, triggering a landslide that blocked the road linking this shattered town to the Caspian Sea coast.

The casualty toll climbed to 50,000 killed and 200,000 wounded, according to a newspaper close to President Hashemi Rafsanjani. Official radio put the death toll at 48,000.

Army mountaineers climbed peaks in the rugged region in an effort to rescue villagers trapped in remote hamlets following Thursday's earthquake, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

A plane carrying medicine and other supplies from the United States was one of 50 relief aircrafts that landed at Tehran's Mehrabad airport during the day, IRNA said.

The plane "was sent by the United States, through the United Nations," the agency said. The flight was arranged through the relief organization Americas.

It was the first overt U.S. shipment of its kind to be accepted by Iran since the hostage crisis of 1980, when 52 American hostages were held at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran for 444 days. The two nations have no diplomatic ties.

Earlier in the day the radical newspaper Jomhuri Islami urged that no help be accepted from the United States and other countries whose hands "are stained with the blood of the Iranian people."

Iranians carry a coffin with the remains of one of the 50,000 killed in a catastrophic earthquake in the northern Iranian province of Gilan. More than 200,000 were injured in the quake.

The Foreign Ministry, however, denied that foreign relief teams were barred from the stricken area and said that "due to the magnitude of the disaster" Iran would accept all such aid.

"Iran accepts the assistance of all foreign countries except Israel and South Africa," Tehran radio quoted Deputy Foreign Minister Ali Mohammad Besharati as saying.

There were conflicting death tolls. The Tehran Times, the nation's leading English-language newspaper, quoted an unidentified senior relief official as saying 50,000 people died and 200,000 were injured in the quake.

He said even that was a conservative estimate because "the figures are quoted taking account only of those who have been registered officially as dead or wounded." Many victims were not counted, he said.

In Geneva, senior U.N. relief official M'hamed Essaafi also estimated the toll would reach 50,000 dead and 200,000 wounded.

Tehran radio put the toll late Sunday at 48,000 killed and 100,000 injured.

The stench of decomposing bodies hung over Rudbar, a town of 100,000 people. Official reports said the quake killed at least 4,000 people there.

Rescuers aided by police dogs pulled bodies from the rubble. A team of 205 French rescue workers arrived in the region with 18 search dogs and 35 tons of equipment, state-run television reported.

Officials said the quake killed 150,000 head of cattle, and health officials were trying to dispose of the rotting carcasses — fearing contamination of water supplies and the spread of infectious diseases.

The geophysics center at Tehran University reported 60 aftershocks Sunday. It said the strongest jolted Rasht on the Caspian Sea and measured 5.7 on the Richter scale.

Television reports said the jolt touched off a landslide that blocked the 35-mile road between Rasht and Rudbar, a critical route for relief supplies.

A quake of magnitude 5 can cause considerable damage, while one of magnitude 6 can cause severe damage. Thursday's quake registered between 7.3 and 7.7 on the Richter scale.

Japan outdistances U.S. in foreign-aid donations

The Associated Press

PARIS — Japan surpassed the United States to become the biggest donor of government aid to the Third World in 1989, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development said Monday.

The achievement could soften criticism that Japan, with its immense financial strength, has not done its share to help developing countries.

Japan's total aid effort in 1989 was $9 billion, compared with $7.7 billion for the U.S., the Paris-based organization of industrial democracies said in a report.

The U.S. figure represented a decline of 27 percent from 1988, after adjusting for inflation.

The decline meant that U.S. aid as a share of gross national product declined from 0.21 percent in 1988 to 0.15 percent last year — the worst performance among the organization's main aid donor countries.

Joseph Wheeler, chairman of the group's Development Assistance Committee, told a news conference Sunday that U.S. aid to the Third World has fallen steadily in recent years.

But Wheeler said he expects the U.S. will lift its aid effort to at least $9 billion this year. He said U.S. contributions to multilateral aid institutions should return to normal levels in 1990, and substantial new aid programs in Central America are likely.

But this probably won't be enough to enable the U.S. to regain its No. 1 slot, Wheeler said, since Japan plans to spend at least $31 billion on aid over the next three years.

Wheeler said government assistance to developing countries from all sources in 1989 totaled $51.3 billion, scarcely changed from the year-earlier figure of $51.7 billion. The total flow, including private funds and export credits, to these countries is estimated at $109 billion, up 4.5 percent from 1988.

Wheeler said the aid effort of the international group's 18 richest countries has increased in real terms at an average rate of 2.9 percent a year, or a total of about 33 percent in the past decade.

Wheeler said the aid effort of Western industrialized nations in 1989 wasn't affected by assistance to Eastern Europe. Most donor countries have indicated future aid to Eastern Europe won't be diverted from traditional aid recipients, he said.

The group said Scandinavian countries continued to provide the most official aid last year as a percentage of GNP, led by Norway with 1.02 percent.

The member nations are: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Britain, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, the United States and West Germany.

The third biggest donor in dollars, after Japan and the U.S., was France with $5.14 billion, followed by West Germany with $4.95 billion.

Iranian paper blames U.S. for quake deaths

The Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — An anti-American newspaper in Iran said Sunday the United States is partly to blame for the death of tens of thousands of people in last week's earthquake.

The "criminal role of America in Iran's past became evident once again in the recent earthquake," the Jomhuri Islami said in an editorial reported by the official Islamic Republic News Agency.

"Our people, even under the rubble, chant 'Death to America' and pray to God to cut off the hands of the United States ... even those hands stretched out to help," it said.

It argued that by "plundering Iran's oil and other resources" for 25 years, the United States had prevented the use of even a small part of the national wealth for urban development projects and "advanced (anti-seismic) building construction systems.

"Even after its expulsion from Iran, the U.S. government by imposing economic sanctions and launching several other plots, halted the renovation of the country," the editorial added.

The newspaper was implying that with these actions the United States had blocked the diversion of funds to earthquake safety measures.

"If the United States has real humanitarian objectives and intended to help the Iranian nation, it should do only one thing — stop hatching plots," the newspaper said.

It called on Iranians to reject relief offers by the United States.

Iran, at odds with the United States since the 1979 seizure of hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, has said it would welcome relief from the American Red Cross and other U.S. humanitarian groups.

Winnie Mandela urges crowd to pray for liberty

By Tamara Henry
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Winnie Mandela implored a huge church crowd Sunday to pray for the struggle for freedom by black South Africans and to "teach us how you tolerated racism" in America.

Mandela, accompanying her husband, Nelson, on an eight-city visit, briefly addressed an enthusiastic crowd of about 2,500 at a historic Methodist church that is within walking distance of their hotel.

"We need your prayers. We need you to help us, teach us how you tolerated racism," said Mandela, wearing black African garb that had huge splashes of brown and purple. The crowd burst into wild laughter, applause and cheers.

"We admire you for that. It is one factor that is driving us to fight for the liberation of South Africa, to fight for your roots because that is where you belong."

Mandela, who had fought in the anti-apartheid movement during the 27 years her husband was imprisoned in South Africa, stood at the same pulpit at the Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal Church that noted black leaders such as Frederick Douglass and Dr. Martin Luther King used in the past to sway support for the civil rights struggle in America.

She said the ANC was peaceful until forced to violence by the South African government and that its leaders are "speaking a peace language" again. But she stressed that "it is not easy to walk that path of peace" because many of the younger people are ready for immediate change.

With her remarks constantly interrupted by applause, Mandela said the ANC wants to negotiate with President F.W. de Klerk from a "position of strength. We want him to know that we got your footsteps behind us."

The occasion was women's day at the church, and a host of noted women addressed the crowd during the more than three hours they waited for Mandela to arrive. She did not mention the reason for their tardiness, and the audience did not seem to mind waiting for her.

Besides taking up an offering for the cause and listening to an African a cappella singing group, the program also included Jacqueline Jackson, wife of civil rights activist Jesse Jackson; Effi Barry, wife of embattled Mayor Marion Barry; and Sister Bernard Ncube, president of Federation of Transvaal Women who herself was imprisoned for one year in solitary confinement in 1986.

"We look forward to that day when you can join us when we hoist the flag of the African National Congress," said Mandela, noting the trip is the "first time that I've personally been able to leave the country because of apartheid."

"I was banned for 25 years. I was under house arrest and I spent nine years in exile in blindfold. But you were with me all the time."

Minneapolis condominium detrimental to Durenberger

By Larry Margasak
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sen. Dave Durenberger was cautioned by his attorney in 1986 about accepting government reimbursement for staying in a Minneapolis condominium, according to documents, despite his contention this month that he had no reason to doubt the propriety of the plan.

Durenberger, R-Minn., collected $40,055 in per diem payments from the Senate from 1983 to 1989 for staying in the condominium. He was part owner from 1983 to 1987, and says he sold the facility in April 1987 — a deal called a sham by the special counsel for the Senate Ethics Committee.

The propriety of Durenberger accepting reimbursement for staying in the condominium — with a bedroom, bathroom, kitchen and sitting area — is one of the principal areas of investigation for the Senate panel.

After a 15-month investigation of alleged financial irregularities by the 55-year-old Republican, the committee soon will decide whether he willfully violated the rules and deserves punishment.

The committee's special counsel,

Robert Bennett, argued in trial-like hearings June 12 and June 13 that Durenberger misled the Senate. First, Bennett said, Durenberger hid his part ownership of the condominium as he collected reimbursements from 1983-87; and then he engineered a phony sale to the company owned by his former campaign manager to keep the reimbursement money flowing from 1987 to 1989.

It wasn't until December 1989 that Durenberger formally sought the Senate's advice on the propriety of the reimbursements, after a news story in the Minneapolis Star Tribune raised questions. The Rules panel said $11,005 of the reimbursements were improper, and Durenberger repaid the money. The Ethics Committee will determine the legality of the remaining $29,050.

Three years before Durenberger asked for a Senate ruling, his personal attorney, Michael Mahoney, advised the senator in late 1986 that he "couldn't find any support" for the reimbursements the lawmaker had been receiving since 1983. Mahoney recalled the advice in statements to the Ethics Committee, now part of its official record.

Spy plane's retirement in question

By Donna Cassata
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When last seen, the SR-71 Blackbird spy plane was slicing through a dreary March sky for a record-setting final coast-to-coast flight that touched off regrets and doubts over its retirement.

The Air Force and Congress had decided several months earlier that the reconnaissance aircraft that provided unsurpassed snooping during the Cold War had become too costly and that satellites could do the job easily.

Shortly after its 68-minute, 17-second trip from Los Angeles to Washington, Blackbird No. 17972 was shipped off to the Smithsonian Institution.

But the Blackbird wasn't quite dead yet.

Tucked away in the report accompanying a $4 billion spending bill that President George Bush signed last month was a provision telling the Pentagon to maintain at least six of the spy planes for use in the event of a national crisis.

"The above outlined program should not be considered a charter for re-establishment of SR-71 flight operations which were terminated as a part of the fiscal 1990 budget deliberations," the report said.

Rather, the intent of the lawmakers' action was to ensure that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which will receive three of the planes, has enough funds to conduct aeronautics research and that the Air Force could begin flight operations within 90 days of an emergency.

The report even designated the aircraft by tail numbers for the contingency program.

Although the report provision is non-binding, Pentagon refusal to adhere to the language would be too costly in the tenuous relationship between Congress and the Bush administration.

Thus, behind-the-scenes negotiations have been going on between the Air Force and several congressional committees over the report language. And the cost to maintain the black, dagger-shaped planes is a major issue.

Lawmakers and congressional sources, who requested anonymity, said Air Force Gen. Michael Dugan told members of Congress that the cost of maintenance would total $30 million.

The 'Zodiac' slayer kills under Cancer

By Virginia Byrne
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The city's "Zodiac" gunman became a killer Sunday when a 78-year-old man died, 3½ weeks after he was shot in the back by the letter-writing attacker, a hospital administrator said.

Joseph Proce, the third of four people the gunman shot, went into cardiac arrest at Jamaica General Hospital at 10:25 a.m. and died about 40 minutes later, said administrator Ole Pedersen.

Proce, who walked with a cane, was shot in the back as he walked near his Queens home on May 31. He lost a kidney and never left the hospital's surgical intensive care unit, Pedersen said.

A note was discovered near the street where Proce was shot. It read simply, "Zodiac — Time to Die." The gunman also wrote police, "The third sign is dead on May 31 1990 2:04 a.m. white old man with a cane shoot in front of house."

Police believe the victims have been chosen because of their birthdates; Proce was a Taurus born May 12, 1912.

The Zodiac victims also are vulnerable. Besides Proce, they have been a 50-year-old man who used a cane to steady a childhood limp, a 33-year-old man who was drunk and a sleeping homeless man.

The Zodiac gunman has written letters to news media and police detailing the shootings, which began in March. In a November letter to police, Zodiac threatened to kill 12 people, one for each astrological sign.

The latest shooting was before dawn Thursday, when Larry Parnham, a 30-year-old homeless man, was wounded as he slept on a Central Park bench. The police Zodiac Task Force was doubled to nearly 50 officers, chief of detectives Joseph Borrelli said Friday.

The latest victim apparently was chosen and stalked because of his astrological sign, police said. The other three each had different signs, but authorities didn't know whether the attacker knew that before they were shot.

Parnham told detectives that days before the shooting, he was befriended by a stranger who asked him his birth date, Borrelli said.

Detectives fear the gunman may stalk future victims the same way, and urged New Yorkers to beware of strangers asking their birth dates.

A note claiming responsibility for the Central Park shooting was received Friday by the New York Post. The gunman also has claimed responsibility for the other shootings, which took place in March and May in an eight-block working-class section straddling the Brooklyn-Queens borough line.

The latest note appeared identical to an earlier one sent to the paper by the gunman, said Post editor Jerry Nachman. Four similar notes have been found: one sent to police, one to the CBS show "60 Minutes," and two left with shooting victims. All but one of the notes start with the words "This is the Zodiac," and three contain the phrase "the twelve sign will die when the belts in the heaven are seen."

The notes recalled David Berkowitz, who killed six young men and women and wounded seven others in New York City in 1976 and 1977. He wrote letters to newspapers about the killing signed "Son of Sam."

Cuba offers Castro-Noriega tapes

MIAMI — The Cuban government is willing to cooperate with U.S. prosecutors and turn over tape recordings of meetings between Fidel Castro and Manuel Noriega for use in the ousted Panamanian leader's U.S. drug trial, a top official said.

In one meeting, the Cuban president and Noriega discussed the 1984 destruction of a cocaine laboratory in Darien, Panama, established by Colombian drug lords, said Ramiro Abreu, a Cuban official in charge of relations with Central America.

Noriega told Castro about the destruction of the lab as an example of Panamanian efforts to fight drug smuggling, Abreu told reporters Thursday in Havana. His remarks were carried by Spain's national news agency EFE.

Federal prosecutors say Castro was acting as an intermediary between Noriega and leaders of Colombia's notorious Medellin cocaine cartel, who were angered by the loss of the lab.

"It is not good to specify what is contained in those conversations of Noriega with Cuban officials because they are evidence that could be used at the trial, but we are willing to collaborate," Abreu said.

Navy finds helicopter crash victims

NORFOLK, Va. — Searchers have found the bodies of all four victims of last week's Navy helicopter crash off the Virginia coast, a Navy spokesman said.

The bodies of Lt. Jane Paradeis, 26, of Rice, Minn., and Lt. j.g. Jason Skubi, 24, of Sandpoint, Idaho, were found Saturday night, said Lt. Russ Greer, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet Naval Air Force.

Searchers also found additional pieces of the CH-46 Sea Knight helicopter, which went down at 12:50 p.m. Friday about 6 1/2 miles off Virginia Beach.

The bodies of Petty Officer 1st Class Norman Geisel, 29, of Saint Mary's, Md., and Airman John Burkhardt Jr., 21, of Boylston, Mass., were found earlier Saturday, Greer said.

The Norfolk-based helicopter was flying from the Norfolk Naval Air Station to the USS Detroit, a combat support ship, when it went down within sight of the ship.

The 89-foot-long, twin-engine Sea Knight is used by the Navy to resupply ships at sea. It can carry loads of 6,000 pounds at speeds of 165 mph.

Crock-Pot company ex-president killed

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — An 83-year-old man who was president of the company that introduced the Crock-Pot electric slow-cooker was beaten to death, and his grandson was charged Saturday in the slaying, police said.

Authorities said they hadn't determined what started the argument Friday night between Isidore Miller and his 21-year-old grandson, Michael Miller, that ended in the elder man's death.

Michael Miller was charged in Jackson County Court on Saturday with second-degree murder and armed criminal action, said police Sgt. Keith Francis of the homicide unit. He was held pending an arraignment.

Francis said Michael Miller used his fists and a brass lamp to beat his grandfather to death.

"All we're saying is that it was a domestic disturbance — obviously," Francis said. "We don't know what it was about."

Isidore Miller, former president of appliance maker Rival Manufacturing Co., was pronounced dead in his Kansas City home Friday night.

His wife, Evelyn, suffered minor injuries when she tried to intervene in the fight, police said.

A neighbor, Frank Titterington, said Evelyn Miller called for help when her grandson allegedly began beating her husband.

Michael Miller apparently had been visiting his grandparents for several days, but had not stayed there regularly since he was a small child, Titterington said.

Isidore Miller was Rival president from 1964 to 1986, when the company was acquired by the New York investment banking firm Gibbons, Green, van Amerongen Ltd.

Loggers anxious about spotted owl plan

WASHINGTON — Environmentalists and loggers are anxious to see how the Bush administration makes good on its promise to find a balance in the struggle to save the northern spotted owl without crippling the Northwest timber industry.

As officials at the Interior Department and other agencies struggled with the issue this weekend, some lawmakers said the decision could affect President George Bush's political popularity in the Northwest as well as the future of the 2-foot-tall brownish owl.

"I think the president himself is in a helluva fix," said Rep. Les AuCoin, an Oregon Democrat.

The Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management were scheduled to unveil an owl protection plan Friday.

Man, sons rescued from cave

HARRISONBURG, Va. (AP) — A man and his two sons lost in a cave for five days without food or water survived by sitting quietly to save energy and reciting Bible scriptures to remain hopeful, the father said Sunday.

"Toward the end, we figured we were going to die," Gary Lutes said. "We were happy it would be all three of us together and not just one. We figured that was better than continuing on like that."

Lutes, 37, a Tampa, Fla., land surveyor, and sons Gary Jr., 13, and Timothy, 9, were rescued from a West Virginia cave Saturday, state police said. They had been lost since Monday.

They were taken to Rockingham Memorial Hospital in Harrisonburg, Va., where they were listed in stable condition Sunday.

The search did not begin until Friday. Father and sons endured bats, dehydration and hallucinations during the wait for rescuers that began soon after their lamps went out while they explored a side trail, Lutes said.

"If it had gone on another day, it would've been a different outcome," Lutes said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from his hospital bed.

"For the first few days, I thought we would be rescued," he said. "After the fifth day, I was really beginning to wonder."

Lutes, a member of the National Speleological Society, said it was the first time he had gotten lost in 20 years of cave adventuring.

He and his sons were exploring New Trout Cave in Pendleton County in eastern West Virginia, about 200 miles west of Washington, D.C.

The trouble began when Lutes put down his pack to squeeze through a small opening, intending to retrieve the pack on his way out. When their lamps later went out, he and his sons couldn't find the opening or the pack, which held food, water and extra flashlights.

"When the light started going out, I knew there was a serious problem. (The boys) got upset because they saw the look in my face, but it was basically calm from then on," Lutes said.

"I knew if there was panic or terror we'd be nowhere. We wouldn't have made it unless we were sitting and being calm," he said.

They took turns keeping watch. They recited psalms and prayed they would be rescued, Lutes said.

The search began after relatives in Powhatan, Va., contacted police when the Luteses missed a meeting, police said. About 25 experienced cave rescuers from Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland helped police search.

Using Lutes' parked car as a starting point, they began combing three sets of caves Friday morning.

The three were caked with dirt and parched, but otherwise were in remarkably good condition.

Twin brothers denied bond for murder, burning of woman

PULASKI, Tenn. (AP) — A judge has denied bond for 300-pound twin brothers charged with murdering a woman, burning her body and dumping it in the Elk River.

Circuit Judge Jim Hamilton denied bond Friday for Pete and Pat Bondurant, 35, who are being held in separate county jails for security reasons.

They are charged with first-degree murder in the May 1986 death of Gwen Dugger, 26, of Elkmont, Ala. The twins were indicted in April after a witness came forward, prosecutors said.

District Attorney General Mike Bottoms, who asked that no bond be set, called the case "one of the most gruesome set of facts ever put on in this court."

Pat Bondurant's estranged wife, Denise, testified at the bond hearing that the twins each had sex with Dugger after she bought drugs "and got high to the verge of passing out."

Denise Bondurant, who filed for divorce Friday, said her husband then clubbed the woman with an ax handle, and Pete Bondurant shot her twice in the head.

Dugger's body was wrapped in garbage bags and burned in a 55-gallon barrel behind the house, Denise Bondurant testified. She said the remains were crushed, put back in the barrel and dumped in the river.

The brothers sat emotionless a few feet away at the defense table.

Holly memorabilia sells for big bucks

By Larry McShane
 The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Life imitated art at an auction Saturday when actor Gary Busey, who played Buddy Holly in a film biography, paid $242,000 for an acoustic guitar owned by the late rock 'n' roll pioneer.

In addition to the 1945 Gibson guitar with a cover hand-tooled by Holly himself, the 118 lots in the Holly sale included a Fender Stratocaster guitar that netted $110,000 and a pair of the rocker's trademark black-rimmed glasses that went for $45,100.

The auction brought in a total of $703,611, said Laura Stewart, spokeswoman for Sotheby's auction house.

The proceeds will go to Holly's family, including his widow, Maria Elena Holly, and his brother, Larry Holly of Lubbock, Texas, Stewart said.

Busey, who bid by telephone, was widely acclaimed for his 1978 portrayal of the bespectacled rocker in "The Buddy Holly Story." His winning bid was more than six times the pre-sale estimate of $35,000.

The acoustic guitar, covered with four-color leather, has the words "Buddy Holly," "Love Me" and "Blue Days, Black Nights" hand-tooled across the top and "Texas" hand-tooled across the bottom.

Holly's Stratocaster electric guitar attracted nearly double its pre-sale estimate of $60,000 and was purchased by an unidentified bidder. Holly was playing the guitar on the ill-fated tour that ended with his death.

The black-rimmed glasses, which Holly wore at the end of his career, sold for $45,100 to the Hard Rock Cafe, Stewart said. The late John Lennon, another rocker who wore glasses, once said of Holly's shades, "He made it OK to wear glasses. I was Buddy Holly."

Another prominent buyer — Pat DiNizio, lead singer of the Smithe-reens — paid $14,300 for a reel-to-reel tape recorder and microphone that Holly used to compose new songs.

Holly burst into prominence in 1957, reeling off a string of hits like "Peggy Sue," "Rave On," "That'll Be The Day," "Maybe Baby" and "Not Fade Away." Holly, along with J.P. "The Big Bopper" Richardson and Ritchie Valens, died in a Feb. 3, 1959, plane crash when he was 23.

Andretti beats Dad for Indy-car win

By Bob Baum
The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Michael Andretti charged to the lead at the start and then held off a challenge from his father, Mario, to win the Budweiser-G.I. Joe's 200 on Sunday, his second Indy-car victory in as many weeks.

The younger Andretti led all but three laps, falling briefly behind his father only because of pit stops.

Michael finished 3.92 seconds ahead of his father. His average speed of 110.673 mph was a track record, breaking the mark of 103.984 set by Emerson Fittipaldi last year.

Al Unser Jr. finished third, holding off a strong late challenge from Danny Sullivan. Sullivan started from the pole but was passed by Mario Andretti on the 26th lap and lost further ground during his second pit stop.

The father-son team from Nazareth, Pa., dominated in their Newman-Haas Chevrolet-powered Lola. Michael Andretti was in firm control on the sun-drenched, nine-turn Portland International Raceway course in a performance nearly identical to that of last week, when he won at Detroit by almost a lap and became the first Indy-car driver to lead from start to finish since 1985.

Andretti, 27, has won 11 times in eight seasons of Indy-car racing.

In 1986, the Andrettis finished 1-2 at Portland. But in that Father's Day race, Michael ran out of fuel on the last lap and lost to his father by .07 seconds, the closest finish in modern Indy-car history.

"We finally broke the ice in Portland," Michael said. "It was just a great day."

Mario Andretti, who won in Portland in 1985 and 1986, narrowly missed his first victory in two years.

"I never had a car work so good and still finish second," he said. "The kid really had it hooked up good today."

Michael Andretti started in the No. 2 spot in the 25-car race, but charged ahead of Sullivan at the start.

He stretched the lead to just over 11 seconds after 27 laps. Sullivan, meanwhile, was passed by the hard-charging Mario Andretti at the end of the main straightaway at the start of the 26th lap.

Michael probably would have won by an even greater margin had it not been for a caution flag that tightened the field from the 41st through 45th lap after Buddy Lazier's Buick-powered Lola spun out in the chicane at the end of the straightaway.

Mario was unable to take advantage of the yellow, with Michael pulling out to lead by at least two seconds the rest of the way.

Sullivan, meanwhile, spent the last half of the race on the tail of Unser and once pulled nearly even, but he couldn't pass to move into third.

Irwin follows his U.S. Open win with Buick victory

By Bob Green
The Associated Press

HARRISON, N.Y. — Hale Irwin rode the emotional high of his U.S. Open triumph to a second consecutive victory Sunday, a two-stroke win over Paul Azinger in the Buick Classic.

Just as he did in celebration of a 72nd-hole birdie in the Open at Medinah, Ill., Irwin trotted to the ropes restraining the gallery around the 18th green and slapped high-fives with spectators after completing a final-round 66.

This was a much more prefatory visit to the gallery and was accompanied by a wry, almost-embarrassed

Associated Press

Hale Irwin waves to the crowd on the 18th green at Westchester Country Club after winning the 1990 Buick Classic. Irwin's victory comes one week after earning the U.S. Open title in Medinah, Ill.

1966 to follow up a U.S. Open triumph with a win the following week.

"I did what I had to do," Irwin said. "But Azinger made it tough on me there at the end."

Azinger, who will defend his title in nearby Hartford next weekend, applied the pressure with a bogey-free round of 65 that left him second alone at 271.

The skinny man called "Zinger" by his fellow pros pulled within one stroke of the lead with a 15-foot birdie putt on the 15th and had a chance to tie for the lead with a 8-footer for birdie on the final hole.

He missed it, however, and Irwin — playing behind Azinger — closed it out with a 6-foot birdie putt of his own.

Rookie Kirk Triplett came on with a 66 and was third at 272. He was followed by Ken Green at 67-273.

Blaine McCallister, who shared the third-round lead with Irwin, took himself out of the title race over the first nine holes and dropped back into a tie at 274 with Jim Gallagher.

McCallister matched par 71 on the hilly course in the northern suburbs of New York, and Gallagher shot 67.

Irwin, who came from behind in both the fourth round and 18-hole playoff in the U.S. Open, followed a different script this time.

He ripped the front side in 4-under-par 32 and owned a four-stroke lead at the turn.

"I felt it was a good omen to get off to such a good start," he said. "I wanted to get in position where they had to come get me, not make a bogey and get back in the pack. And that's that I did."

Irwin scored eight consecutive pars immediately after the turn, good enough to keep him in front.

The closing birdie wasn't even necessary. But it gave him the excuse for another gallop around the gallery and a renewal of the high-five act.

Irwin's 19th career victory was worth $180,000 from the total purse of $1 million. It went with a $220,000 check from the Open to give him winnings of $400,000 in six days — more than in any previous full season in his 22-year PGA Tour career.

It marked the first time he had scored consecutive victories, and made him the first player since Billy Casper in

Navratilova keeps title in Wimbledon tuneup

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Martina Navratilova needed just 45 minutes to retain her Eastbourne grasscourt title Saturday in preparation for an unprecedented ninth Wimbledon singles title.

Navratilova made it nine Eastbourne wins in 16 years by beating Gretchen Magers 6-0, 6-2. She allowed her opponent only 24 points as the two battled with the blustery conditions at this English South Coast resort.

The victory, worth $70,000 to Navratilova, was her easiest triumph at Eastbourne since she defeated Australia's Wendy Turnbull 6-1, 6-1 in the 1983 final.

"I didn't have anything to hurt her," said Magers. "She was on top of everything I could hit at her."

"It's embarrassing and frustrating but I am very proud of what I did this week."

Magers ousted sixth-seeded Jennifer Capriati of the United States in the second round on her way to only her fourth final of her professional career.

But the American, whose main achievement was to break Navratilova's serve twice, was clearly outclassed in the final.

"She shouldn't feel humiliated," Navratilova said. "She didn't play badly — everything just went my way. She didn't lose it, I won it."

Navratilova showed no signs of the knee problem that required treatment during Friday's semifinal win over Jana Novotna.

"I felt really nimble and light on my feet," she said. "The knee felt better today than for months. Today my knees felt like they were 15, yesterday they felt 50."

Cameroon celebrates soccer win

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — Soccer fans danced until dawn Sunday after Cameroon's historic advance into the World Cup quarterfinals, and support swelled for a campaign to erect a monument to the team's star player.

Police said 21 people were hurt in various incidents during the celebrations, and an entire neighborhood was blacked out by a fire that wrecked three houses.

But nothing could dampen the joy that swept Yaounde, the capital, after the 2-1 overtime victory over Colombia on Saturday night. The victory made Cameroon the first African team ever to reach the quarterfinals.

Roger Milla, whose two goals against Colombia raised his tournament total to four, told national TV he dedicated his goals to his two children and to President Paul Biya.

Many of the celebrating fans supported a proposal by the state-owned Cameroon Tribune to construct a monument in honor of Milla, 38, who came out of retirement at age 38 to compete in the World Cup. Citizens were urged to contribute even small sums to help raise the needed funds.

42 pros tee up for V.I.P., Watson looking to repeat

By Brian Gaul
The Daily Iowan

Tom Watson and the other 41 professional golfers competing in this year's Amana V.I.P. golf tournament today at Finkbine Golf Course are probably glad that Hale Irwin isn't going to be in attendance.

After all, Irwin is hot. The U.S. Open champion won his second straight tournament Sunday with a victory in the Buick Classic in Harrison, N.Y.

For Watson, Irwin's absence means one less challenger to his 1988 title. Watson won the event by shooting a 65, two strokes behind the tournament record set by Bert Yancy in 1971.

Watson also led the field when the tournament was rained out after 18 holes last year.

The tournament contestants include golfers from all three professional circuits — 27 from the PGA, nine from the Senior PGA, and six from the LPGA.

Two Iowans — Greg Ladehoff of Clinton and Dave Rummells of West Branch — will be among the PGA challengers to Watson's title.

Beth Daniel and JoAnne Carner from the LPGA will be competing, as will Charles Coody and Larry Ziegler from the senior circuit.

Four professional golfers will be appearing in their first Amana V.I.P., including Mark Brooks, Jim Gallagher, Jr., Jay Delsing and Michelle McGann.

Groups of five will tee it up at 7 a.m. at Finkbine's 6,665, par 72 course. One professional and four celebrities will make up each group.

The four college basketball coaches in attendance — Iowa's Tom Davis, Iowa State's Johnny Orr, Creighton's Tony Barone, and California-Santa Barbara's Jerry Pimm — will also be competing in the "ham dunk" contest at the first tee. The coach who makes the most consecutive free throws will win an Amana ham.

Celebrities at the event include comedian Arte Johnson, actor Ernest Borgnine, billiards champion Steve Mizerak and Chicago Bears coach Mike Ditka.

"This is a tremendous event for the local community," Finkbine professional Lynn Blevins said.

10 Big Ten players estimated to go early in NBA college draft

On Wednesday afternoon, several young basketball players will be within a lay-up's distance of a dream come true.

The 1990 NBA college draft will usher in some of the professional basketball stars of the 90s. And as a quick look down nearly any NBA roster will attest, the Big Ten has been a steady supplier of NBA talent.

This past season was no exception. Like the NBA, Big Ten action was fantastic. And at least 10 selections in the two-round draft could conceivably come from Big Ten schools.

Although there is a great deal of talent throughout the conference, the following players seem to me to be the most likely draft picks.

After hitting national championship-winning free throws for Michigan during the 1988-89 season, 6-foot-2 point guard Rumeal Robinson returned to the court and displayed the brilliance that made him an all-American. But he also showed flashes of inconsistency that led to upsets such as the one by Iowa in Carver-Hawkeye last January.

Robinson, endowed with a linebacker's physique and the body control of a dancer, will undoubtedly go early in the first round. Sme prognosticators have Robinson slated to join former Wolverine guard Gary Grant with the Los Angeles Clippers.

This past season 6-foot-10 center Terry Mills finally lived up to the billing he received four years ago as a Michigan freshman. Early in his college career, Mills showed all the mobility and enthusiasm of a beached whale.

But last year Mills displayed deft shooting and passing, strong rebounding and improved conditioning — all of which makes him an attractive power forward prospect. Don Nelson's diminutive — by NBA standards — Golden State Warriors could use Mills's height and newfound mobility.

Unheralded 6-foot-8 forward Loy Vaught may be the least known of the Michigan trio, but his play was the most consistent. An active defender, aggressive rebounder and amazingly consistent shooter — as a junior he led the NCAA in field goal percentage — Vaught is cut from the same cloth as the Portland Trail Blazers' Buck Williams.

If he is still available, look for the forward-poor Washington Bullets to select the quiet Vaught. He's coach Wes Unseld's type of player.

Talent-laden and controversial Illinois also has three potential draft picks. Kendall Gill, Illinois' 6-foot-5 shooting guard, completed his outstanding career as the 1989-90 Big Ten scoring leader. In addition to

Celtic star says coach never got fair chance

By Beth Harris
The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Larry Bird said former Boston Celtics coach Jimmy Rodgers never got a fair shake before he was fired.

"It's sort of a shock they let Jimmy go. When K.C. (Jones) was coaching things ran pretty smooth. When Jimmy took over he never really had a chance," Bird said prior to playing in his annual all-star charity basketball game Sunday night at Market Square Arena.

Rodgers, who played basketball for Iowa and whose son Matt is quarterback for the Hawkeye football team, was fired after the Celtics lost to the New York Knicks in the first-round of the NBA playoffs. He was eventually replaced by assistant Chris Ford.

Bird said he believes injuries to key players, including himself, and lackluster draft picks combined to spell doom for Rodgers.

"We're getting older, but it's not me, Kevin (McHale) or Robert's (Parish) fault. You have to get the people to fill in," Bird said. "We just haven't got the guys who can come in and get the job done."

Bird scoffed at suggestions that trading McHale or Parish would bolster the Celtics' aging lineup.

"Kevin is not replaceable. You don't give up a guy to hope you'll pick up a guy in the draft to do the things Kevin does," said Bird, who traditionally spends the summer in French Lick, his hometown in southern Indiana.

He also dispelled recent rumors that he would approve of a trade to the Indiana Pacers.

"It's not in my plans to leave Boston. I want to finish my career there. The Pacers had their chance once, so too bad," he said with a laugh.

While he dislikes losing Rodgers, Bird said Ford would have an easy transition from assistant to head coach in the same organization.

"Jim let Chris do a lot. Chris has been there since the beginning of all of us, so it's just up to the players to come together and not worry there's going to be a new coach," he said.

Changes ahead for Wimbledon?

By Steve Wilstein
The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Times are moving fast, too fast for some, as Wimbledon opens today amid the rush of youth, the last stands of the old guard and heretical calls to abandon the lovely lawns for fake grass.

Egad! Is nothing sacred? Next they'll be talking about throwing out aging champions — watch out, John McEnroe — and doing away with "predominantly white," though Andre Agassi isn't around to press hot-pink power on the good stewards of the All England Lawn Tennis Club.

Reputations certainly don't guarantee respect, as former wunderkinder and defending champions

Boris Becker and Steffi Graf are finding out.

Becker, a three-time Wimbledon winner, finds himself the mere second seed behind Ivan Lendl, who hasn't won here in 10 attempts.

Becker at least will have the honor of opening today's play on the lush, fresh turf of Centre Court, taking on a late, and no doubt, trembling qualifier, Luis Herrera of Mexico.

Lendl opens on Court 1 against Argentina's Christian Miniussi as the Czechoslovakian native and Connecticut resident renews a quest for the only Grand Slam title to elude him.

Graf, seeded No. 1 among the women, will be trying to regain the respect of the tennis boppers, particularly 16-year-old Monica Seles, who drubbed Graf in

Hagan considers signing with Blue Jays in 1991

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Colorado quarterback Darian Hagan, named The Sporting News' college football player of the last fall, has tried out with the Toronto Blue Jays and says he may sign a baseball contract to play that sport professional next year.

"I want to concentrate on football" in the upcoming season, Hagan told the Denver Post in a telephone interview from his home in Los Angeles. "I'll probably sign (a baseball contract) this year and play both next year. I'm working on football this summer."

Hagan, 5-foot-10 and 185 pounds, has two seasons of eligibility remaining at CU. He was selected by the Blue Jays in the 40th round of major-league baseball's free-agent draft earlier this month.

NCAA rules allow an athlete to keep his college eligibility in one sport while playing professional in another.

Briefs

Canseco returns to action

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Jose Canseco was activated Saturday by the Oakland Athletics after missing 14 games with a back injury.

Canseco was in the A's lineup for Saturday's game against the Chicago White Sox.

In 52 games before going on the disabled list, Canseco hit 20 home runs with 50 RBIs and a .325 batting average.

Canseco, who has a history of back problems, spent three nights in a hospital, where he was placed in traction. Team physician Dr. Allan Pont diagnosed Canseco's injury as a bulging disk in his back that was pinching his sciatic nerve.

Publisher dies of cancer
DETROIT (AP) — Roger Stanton, publisher of Football News and Basketball Weekly died Saturday of complications from cancer. He was 61.

The Minneapolis native, who lived for the past 30 years in Detroit, died at St. John's Hospital.

The Football News was founded in 1939, and Stanton became editor and publisher in 1962. He started Basketball Weekly in 1967, and the pair grew to boast a combined circulation of 190,000.

The publications will continue during their respective seasons under the direction of Stanton's widow, Pam, and his nephew, Matt Kornmeier.

Stanton stirred controversy when
