Regents OK course changes

389 courses added, 432 dropped; fiscal budget approved

By Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

The state Board of Regents approved proposed course changes at the UI — adding 389 new courses but dropping 432 — at its monthly meeting Wednesday in Des Moines.

"This is typical," said Ann Rhodes, assistant vice president of finance for the UI. "Every year there are courses at the university that have very low enrollment."

Rhodes said many of the deletions are because of faculty attrition.

"Sometimes we have faculty who are experts so we add courses in the discipline," Rhodes said. "But if they leave and there is no one to replace them, then the class must be cut."

"We have a lot of evolution in terms of new faculty coming in and teaching courses for a short while and then leaving," she added.

Rhodes said the anticipated drop in enrollment was not a factor in the elimination of these courses.

"The drop in total enrollment is only projected to be around one percent . . . and most of the classes that were dropped are upper-level," she said.

In other business, the regents approved the UI's $272.8 million final operating budget for fiscal year 1991.

The budget represents a 7 percent increase from last year's budget and includes an average 6 percent faculty salary increase.

But not everyone will receive that much of an increase, according to Peter Nathan, vice president for Academic Affairs.

"Our faculty will read in the paper that they will get a 6 percent increase, but they will not all get that," Nathan said. "We gave increases based on teaching quality."

Nathan said the 6 percent salary increase also didn't apply to the College of Medicine, which received a lesser increase because of its external grants and internal revenue.

"One reason that the College of Medicine is good is because we've been paying competitive salaries," Nathan said. "But we can only (give lesser increases) once."

The regents also approved the establishment of the UI Center for International Rural and

UI OKs laser center rebids

Construction begins in July

By Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

All systems are go for the UI Laser Research Center — finally.

The UI announced Wednesday to the state Board of Regents that bids to finish the laser facility had been submitted below budget.

Construction stopped on the laser facility last fall when the UI rejected all bids because they were over budget. Since then, some areas of the building have been redesigned to cut expenses, according to Susan Phillips, vice president of finance and university services.

Phillips said bids were submitted and "finally" accepted June 19.

"We had a very good bidding climate and we got some very good bids," Phillips said. "We're pleased and anxious to get started."

Eleven bids were submitted by contractors to complete the laser facility. A combination of the lowest bids reached a cost of $15.5 million, which is about $1.8 million below budget, said Richard Gibson, director of Planning and Administrative Services.

"We were aiming at the high numbers, but (the bids) came in low," Gibson said.

Gibson attributed the better bidding "climate" to the downsizing of the project and increased competition between contractors.

"We downsized the project, and the competition situation between the contractors is different than it was last year," Gibson said.

"We have a complex and high-profile building. People tend to be scared off," he added.

"It's simplified to some extent," Gibson added.

Gibson and Phillips both said construction would resume as soon as the contracts were signed.

Record heat wave starts house fires, takes lives in SW

By Douglas J. Rowe
The Associated Press

Record temperatures spurred wildfires that burned dozens of homes in Southern California, and one more death was attributed to the heat on Wednesday in Phoenix, which cooled off — to 118 degrees.

Utilities from the coast inland to Las Vegas asked the public to reduce electricity consumption as the heat wave lingered for a third day. Heat-related power outages were scattered throughout Los Angeles on Tuesday, when electrical use set an all-time record; 5,000 customers lost electricity for a few hours.

Road pavers got a double dose of heat in Texas.

"The asphalt is 380 degrees, plus the 100 or so degrees (from the weather). It makes for pretty rough working conditions," said Danny Jones, vice president of Jones Brothers Paving Contractors in Odessa.

High pressure, which combined to give Phoenix back-to-back all-time records of 120 and 122 degrees, abated only slightly Wednesday. The mercury topped out at another record for the date, 118 in the late afternoon. The slight drop was attributed to a cloud cover early in the day, the National Weather Service said.

A 57-year-old suburban Phoenix man, who was working outdoors at his home, was found unconscious by relatives. Paramedics were called, but the victim was dead on arrival at a hospital. His body temperature had reached 108 degrees, police Sgt. James Flonacher said.

The deaths of three other people Tuesday in Phoenix may also have been related to the heat, but authorities said autopsies were incomplete. Also Tuesday, authorities in Los Angeles said a 4-year-old boy died in a parked car with the windows rolled up.

An enormous, upper-level, high-pressure system over New Mexico created the heat wave by beating back the Pacific Ocean's normal cooling influence.

"I liken it to a huge umbrella sitting over the Southwest and it's just baking under there, but it's not quite reaching San Francisco," said weather service meteorologist Art Lessard.

On the West Coast, the heat was on before dawn. By midafternoon, the mercury hit 109 degrees in downtown Los Angeles, 7 degrees over the record for June 27 set in 1976. Tuesday's 112-degree mark topped the all-time record of 110 degrees set Sept. 4, 1988.

The mercury reached 100 in the valleys north and east of Los Angeles, and in the deserts. Palm Springs was 116 by midafternoon. Normally balmy San Diego was a record 91.

The forecast offered no relief. The weather service said highs would be in the 100s in the inland cities and slightly lower elsewhere through Sunday.

Los Angeles County lifeguards bolstered their forces to handle the throngs seeking relief on the shore, where temperatures were about 20 degrees lower than inland.

"We have extra personnel and we're holding them later because we had over 200 rescues at Santa Monica beach between 8 and 9 last night," said lifeguard Randy Degregori.

Ex-model attests to Barry's cocaine use

By Richard Keil
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Ex-model Rachele Moore testified Wednesday she used cocaine, marijuana and opium with Marion Barry "over 100 times" and that the mayor once told her he was addicted to cocaine.

Testifying in Barry's drug and perjury trial, the woman who cooperated with the FBI in the mayor's arrest said they had a sexual relationship and shared drugs between 1986 and 1988. She said Barry once slapped her to the floor after using drugs.

"It was an intimate relationship, and we used drugs together," said Moore.

Barry watched the 39-year-old Moore with a stony stare as she described their relationship. Barry's wife, Effi, smiled as Moore took the witness stand but wore a grim expression as the witness detailed allegations of sex and drug use.

Moore said Barry was an experienced drug user who baked powdered cocaine into crack.

"After he baked it, we smoked it," Moore testified.

And she said that after smoking crack cocaine in one session, Barry "said he was addicted to cocaine. He said he wanted to quit."

Prosecutors were expected to use her testimony to introduce as evidence an FBI videotape of the Jan. 18 night when Barry allegedly smoked crack cocaine while visiting Moore at a Washington hotel room.

Barry, 54, has pleaded innocent to 10 misdemeanor cocaine possession charges, one misdemeanor cocaine conspiracy charge, and three felony charges of lying to a grand jury about his alleged drug use. One possession charge stems from the sting in which the three-term mayor was arrested.

Moore described an affair that ranged from sex and violence to talks of spirituality, but which always included drugs. She told the court she and Barry used drugs "at least over 100 times."

"There were times we would do it more than once a day, sometimes two or three times a week," she continued.

"Sometimes he would stop by before work, sometimes after hours," Moore said.

Speaking in a low and even voice, Moore described how she and the mayor used drugs, including coke powder, crack cocaine, marijuana and opium, at a dozen places around Washington.

She said Barry became violent after one session at a Washington hotel in which they smoked crack cocaine through a homemade pipe Barry assembled from aluminum foil and a large spoon. The mayor accused her of having a relationship with another man and "slapped me," Moore said.

She returned the slap, she said, but "ended up on the floor" when Barry slapped her again.

"I haven't hit a woman in 20 years," she said Barry told her. "You bring the worst out in a man."

She said they also used drugs at Barry's home. Moore testified she and Barry cooked cocaine powder

3-hour power outage downs UI computers

By Jenny Hanna
The Daily Iowan

Several UI buildings — including almost all the structures on the east side of the Iowa River and Hancher and the Art Museum on the west side — lost electrical power for about three hours Wednesday afternoon.

The power outage caused problems throughout campus, where downed computers disrupted material check-out at the Main Library, graduation analysis in the Union, research in the Biology Building and transfer student registration at Calvin Hall.

Furthermore, the Chemistry-Botany Building was evacuated for a half-hour when fire alarms sounded during the outage. Lt. Jerry Blank of the Iowa City Fire Department said heat build-up from the loss of air conditioning caused the fire alarm to go off.

But Blank added that because there was no electricity in the

Mildly radioactive waste is deregulated

The Associated Press

LANSING, Mich. — A new federal policy deregulating much low-level radioactive waste will have little immediate effect on Michigan's search for a dump site, experts said Wednesday.

The dump would service seven Midwestern states, including Iowa.

However, the experts said the move might prompt a review of federal law covering radioactive waste disposal — a key goal of Michigan leaders — and might cut the requirement for up to 15 dumps across the nation.

The new policy was announced Wednesday by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. It would allow mildly radioactive waste to be put in regular dumps or incinerators or even recycled into consumer products.

Currently, low-level radioactive waste must be shipped to dumps in Nevada, Washington and South Carolina. The new policy would classify such waste as "below regulatory concern" and allow waste producers to apply to be covered by the less restrictive guidelines.

"My personal position is in support of that policy," said James Cleary, commissioner of the Michigan Low-Level Radioactive Waste Authority. "It is good waste management. It makes sense."

"It doesn't give anybody a blank check to go and do it," he said. He pointed out that waste generators would have to go through an approval process to gain permission to dispose of low-level waste in that way.

"I would certainly use this as another lever asking for a review of the whole policy," he said. "We could come up with a more rational waste management system, and that's what we really need."

But Ellen Beal, co-chairwoman of the group Don't Waste Michigan, attacked the new policy.

"We're absolutely opposed to it," she said. "We feel they should be regulating upwards, not downwards. It's clearly the wrong direction."

She said her group would try to persuade the Michigan Legislature to ban the use of the new federal policy. And environmentalists warn of unacceptable radiation risks.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency says the policy is too lenient.

Michigan was selected by the Midwest Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Commission in 1987 to provide the first regional dump to serve Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Suspension reduction is refused

The Associated Press

WATERLOO — A three-judge panel has rejected a request from former Black Hawk County Attorney James Metcalf to reduce the suspension of his law license.

The panel, named to hear allegations that Metcalf instructed assistants to omit blacks from juries when the defendant was black, said its judgment will stand without modification. Metcalf had asked to have the seven-month suspension cut to one month.

The panel ruled earlier that Metcalf had told assistants to exclude blacks from juries, and it suspended his law license effective May 31. Metcalf then resigned from office.

Metcalf's attorneys sought the reduction because of financial obligations. Metcalf cited child support payments of $600 a month to his two children in South Dakota and current support for his wife, Debby, and a 5-year-old son.

Metcalf denied the allegations against him, saying he had instructed his assistants to omit those who were prejudiced against the county attorney's office.

Venture fund helps bolster entrepreneurs

The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Officials on Wednesday announced a $15 million venture capital fund using a portion of the giant retirement fund for state workers.

The Heart Land Capital Investment Fund will be earmarked for investing in "entrepreneurial and early-stage venture capital opportunities within Iowa," said the statement issued by Gov. Terry Branstad. The investments will be made over a seven-year period and will be aimed at bolstering new businesses within the state.

Financing for the project will come from the Iowa Public Employee Retirement System trust fund. That fund, the retirement fund for most public employees in the state, currently holds $4.9 billion.

Internist receives Kaiser foundation fellowship

An internist at the UI College of Medicine is one of three researchers in the United States selected to receive a fellowship from the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation.

Dr. Mary Nettleman, assistant professor of internal medicine in the Division of Clinical Epidemiology, General Medicine and Health Services Research, has been named a 1990 Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation Faculty Scholar in General Internal Medicine. The award provides recipients $60,000 annually for three to five years to support their research.

The awards are designed to advance the distinctive intellectual base of general medicine, prepare young faculty for positions of leadership in general medicine, and advance knowledge and practice related to health promotion and disease prevention.

The foundation's award will support Nettleman's research of the Second-hand stores offer unique, cheap clothing

Buyers want quality, oldness from vintage-clothing shops

By Susan Stapleton
The Daily Iowan

Several years ago, Tony Bodensteiner wanted a Hawaiian print shirt. The only place he could find one was a second-hand store.

"Before Hawaiian shirts became wildly popular, the only place you could find them was second-hand stores. My buddies and I all had Hawaiian shirts. Now you can get them everywhere," Bodensteiner said.

When you're looking for something unique — and cheap enough for a low student budget — second-hand stores just may solve your problems.

And Iowa City has 15 second-hand stores with a variety of enticements for customers.

Low prices bring a lot of customers into bargain stores. Ivy Moore, proprietor of Ivy's Select Used Clothing, 114½ College St., says

"There's not 15 of everything walking around when you buy second-hand clothes. You're less likely to see someone wearing what you're wearing."

Ivy Moore proprietor

Rosie Dalton, owner of Second-Hand Rosie's, 112 Linn St., agrees that customers like the quality of her used upscale and costume clothing. "There's a lot you can't get in mainstream shopping. You get quality for the dollar and a personal touch. People are looking for treasures."

SECOND-HAND STORES

Places to go in the Iowa City area to look for bargains.

- The Budget Shop, 2121 S. Riverside Drive
- Next to New, 213 N. Gilbert St.
- Second Hand Rosie's, 112 Linn St.
- The Second Act, 2203 F St.
- Vintage Books and Clothing, 507 S. Gilbert St.
- Ivy's Select Used Clothing, 114½ E. College St.
- Crowded Closet, 1121 Gilbert Court
- Salvation Army, 1213 Gilbert Court
- Houseworks, 609 Hollywood Boulevard
- This 'N' That, 632 S. Dubuque St.
- Ragstock, 207 E. Washington St.
- Red Rose Old Clothing, 114 E. College St.
- Savvy Boutique, 328 E. Second St.
- Kids Stuff and Country Creations, 1933 Keokuk St.
- The Merry-Go-Round, 1756 Fifth St., Coralville.
- Goodwill, 227 E. Washington St.

Bargain shops carry a wider selection of unique items than the department stores, Moore said. "There's not 15 of everything walking around when you buy second-hand clothes. You're less likely to see someone wearing what you're wearing."

Robert Hudson, manager of Ragstock, 207 E. Washington St., said that half of the store's clothing is used and shipped in from the main warehouse in Minneapolis.

"Traditionally we've been known for our used clothing, but our Ivy's Select Used Clothing, located on the Downtown Pedestrian Mall, features clothes from the early '40s to the present. Various fashions can be found at second-hand stores.

The Daily Iowan/Randy Bardy

clientele is changing," he said, adding many customers are coming in for their new items.

If you want to sell your clothing, many stores offer consignment plans or donations for charities.

Goodwill, 227 E. Washington St., accepts donations at all stores and at area drop-boxes. All of Goodwill's money provides job training and placement for disabled people, according to manager Blake Seaholm.

Dalton takes clothing on consignment at Second-Hand Rosie's.

"I pay 75 percent for clothing on consignment. I go through each item piece by piece, as it would be dealt with by a potential customer. We keep items for 60 days. After that you can pick up your clothing or donate it to charities," Dalton said.

Moore, of Ivy's Select Used Clothing, buys her clothes outright. "If a customer says, 'Oh, it's just like new,' then I don't want it. There has to be some reason for me to like it, like it's old or unusual."

Purchasing second-hand items doesn't have to stop once you've graduated.

Bodensteiner said, "Now that I'm not a student anymore, I don't buy as many clothes and bowling balls, but mostly tacky looking knickknacks and children's toys — for my daughter, really!"

Taukes' net worth near $171,000

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Republican Senate candidate Tom Tauke on Wednesday said that his family's net worth is roughly $171,000 and that he paid more than $16,000 in state and federal taxes last year.

Tauke released a family balance sheet and state and federal tax returns showing he paid $12,190 in federal taxes and $4,399 in state taxes last year. His major asset is a condominium in Washington owned by Tauke and his wife, Beverly.

The condominium is valued at $104,000 and carries a mortgage of $62,903, the disclosure said.

In total, Tauke listed his family's assets at $234,403; the mortgage was his only outstanding liability.

During the year, Tauke reported income of $85,025 from his congressional salary and interest income of $1,899 subject to taxes.

His income was bolstered by $33,472 in honoraria, but that was donated to charity.

In making the disclosure, Tauke joins a long list of Iowa politicians making public their financial affairs. His financial statements exceed disclosure requirements in state and federal law.

"The personal finances of many representatives in Washington today have become an issue," Tauke said in a statement released with the disclosure. "Under those circumstances, all candidates for public office have an obligation to maintain trust in government through complete disclosure."

Tauke, who represents northeast Iowa's 2nd District, is in the midst of a hot Senate race against incumbent Democrat Tom Harkin.

Tauke said he was issuing financial disclosure statements covering himself and his wife because many politicians shift assets around within their families to avoid disclosures.

IC playwrights invited to national conference

2 scripts selected for production from field of 1400

By David Kuenzi
The Daily Iowan

Anyone who has written seriously for American theater has experienced the initial difficulty of getting his or her plays produced. But with experience comes eventual success and distinction — as two Iowa City playwrights recently discovered.

Judy GeBauer and Steve Feffer, both spring graduates of the Iowa Playwrights Workshop, have been invited to participate in the National Playwrights Conference this July at the Eugene O'Neill Theatre Center in Waterford, Conn.

GeBauer's "Bobby Can You Hear Me" and Feffer's "The Wizards of Quiz" were among the 12 scripts chosen for production during the conference, out of about 1400 new works submitted from 47 states, the District of Columbia and six foreign countries. Both scripts were developed in the Workshop's docudrama class taught by Bob Hedley.

GeBauer, who has gone to the conference twice before, said that "the focus is on the script, to find out how it lives on the stage. There isn't the pressure to have a finished product, so there's a chance to get it into a producer's hands without the pressure."

GeBauer and Feffer both met with festival directors in May, and will return in July for a rehearsal period and a two-performance run of each play. Representatives from major U.S. theaters attend the National Playwrights Conference every year to shop for new plays to produce in their coming seasons.

GeBauer's play, "Bobby Can You Hear Me," is about Bobby Sands, the leader of an Irish Republican Army hunger strike in Long Kesh Prison in Belfast.

"I wanted to write about (Bobby Sands) because he was kind of an ordinary Joe. . ."

Judy GeBauer
Author of "Bobby Can You Hear Me"

"I wanted to write about him because he was kind of an ordinary Joe," GeBauer said. "I'm interested in an ordinary man in extenuating circumstances. So the play's about what led him to make those choices — to lead the hunger strike and to die in the hunger strike."

"I wanted to write about this for a long time," GeBauer said. "The docudrama class gave me the opportunity. A lot of good work has come out of the docudrama class, work that has gone on to make it elsewhere."

She said that the play was based on fact, but that when writing docudrama there is more emphasis "on drama and less on 'doc.' It's true to the spirit of the man and to the major events. Having researched him, I kind of had to re-create him. And based on my research and my sensitivity, it would be true to the nature of the relationships."

GeBauer said that Joe Daugherty, an IRA member who has spent time in Long Kesh Prison and is now awaiting extradition in New York, wrote her after he had read the play and "asked if he could send it on to his friends in the prison where the play takes place."

The last time GeBauer went to the conference was in 1987 with her play "Reclaimed," which, she said, "went on to a very good production in New Haven. It's trying to go the next step right now."

She added that theaters often want to be the first to produce a play, and that after a first run it becomes more difficult to get it staged.

Steve Feffer has also been to the Eugene O'Neill Theatre Center before. "I was the administrative assistant there for the year before I came to Iowa," he said. "I found it really exciting to be around the conference, and I really wanted to go back as a playwright."

Feffer has submitted his work to the conference three times in past years, and this year he has finally been accepted with his play "The Wizards of Quiz," a docudrama game's biggest winners. "The show was fixed," Feffer said. "And since Stempel knew all the answers, they fixed it so he'd get some wrong to make it more exciting."

Finally Stempel is forced to throw the match to Charles Van Doren, who becomes the hero of the game show and has his picture on the cover of Time magazine with the caption "The Wizard of Quiz."

"It's about Stempel and how he entered with these extremely noble purposes, and by the end he has to throw the match and ends up suffering a breakdown," Feffer said. "He begins for the better purposes. He believes he's doing something good, and for me it's incredibly moving how it blows up in his face."

"The Wizards of Quiz" has also won the National Playwriting Contest, sponsored by the University of Wisconsin, and the Christina Crawford Award. "I've sent to four places and won at three," Feffer said.

He said that the most promising aspect of the conference will be the people. "It's going to make me a better writer to work with the quality people that are going to be there," he said. "And if I do the work that's needed on the play, I think that something will happen with it."

"But it just feels really good to have come through the program and then to get a play accepted at the O'Neill. It just feels great."

Plays aim at ironies of the '80s

By Henry Olson
The Daily Iowan

Christopher Durang's plays "Laughing Wild" and "The Marriage of Bette and Boo" rely heavily on the humor of the '80s-cum-'90s, risking, perhaps, literary obsolescence. Nevertheless, the Iowa Summer Rep productions of both works are entertaining enough to suggest Durang has some staying power.

"The Marriage of Bette and Boo" is an autobiographical "dramedy." Rife with iconoclasm and set in the fashionable 1950s, the play has everything that appeals to an audience of our time. Fortunately, it escapes the trap of becoming a stage production of a bizarre Wigwag/Spy hybrid.

"Marriage" is the story of Durang's parents. Boo is an alcoholic,

The Iowa Summer Rep

Bette endures four stillbirths because she wants to have a large family. Obviously, Matt (the character based on Durang) feels alienated from his father. His mother spends so much time mourning the deaths and planning the births of other children that she forgets Matt exists.

Greg Jackson is very good as the beleaguered Matt. As the isolated child, he is exceptional.

Durang doubts a happy family exists. "In my travels through life I've actually only come across one couple that I would term as happy or functional," he has been quoted as saying. All of the families in "Bette and Boo" reflect this without slipping into sentimentality.

Bette's parents have stopped communicating. Basically, this is because her father is literally incomprehensible. He dies unnoticed, but remains on stage with a sheet placed over his body.

With material like New Age bombast and Dr. Ruth, the humor of "Laughing Wild" is bound to date.

Ultimately the play is humorous but destroys any hope for a normal life.

Family life is not a concern of "Laughing Wild." It is the story of a man and a woman who meet in the supermarket after the woman has physically beaten the man in a dispute involving a can of tuna. During the rest of the play, they try to figure out the meaning of life, question the morality and/or existence of a higher being, and ponder the outcome of a gladiator battle between Mother Theresa and Dr. Ruth.

The first act consists of two monologues: the man's and the woman's. Though she hasn't read any of the literature, the woman decides she is an existentialist, but she cannot find any more meaning to life other than "ya don't breathe, ya die."

The man unsuccessfully tries to convince himself he is at peace with the universe. In between new age platitudes, he spews the questions of a soul that is not exactly at peace.

The second half of the play has the man dressed in the garb of the "Infant of Prague." Wait, I'll explain: The woman has shot Sally Jesse Raphael and is subbing for her on her show; the Infant of Prague is her guest. From this absurd arena, Durang attacks everything from the NEA funding dilemma to the Catholic Church's position on the use of condoms to prevent AIDS.

Jennifer E. Rives and Mark Hallan, who play the man and woman, share a fine sense of timing and an appreciation of the absurd. Their antics were so hilarious that the night this reviewer saw them that they kept a certain "Mr. Chuckles" in the back of the audience in stitches all evening.

With material like New Age bombast and Dr. Ruth, the humor of "Laughing Wild" is bound to date. Its iconoclasm will most definitely lose its edge — perhaps within the space of a year.

Of course, none of that matters now. It is a well-paced play with several very funny moments. And, to Mr. Chuckles, that's probably all that matters.

'RoboCop II': Fun but stupid

If you liked 'RoboCop I,' you may be disappointed

By Steve Cruse
The Daily Iowan

"RoboCop II" doesn't make a bit of sense — like the malfunctioning cyborg of the title, it just galumphs stupidly along, firing at random and hitting the occasional target. The entire movie is so badly constructed that one suspects that all of the scenes (none of which can be described as "pivotal") could be completely reversed in order, with minimal impact on the plot. (What difference would it really make if, for example, the torture sequence in the drug lord's chamber took place at the very beginning rather than at the middle?)

What's surprising is that for the first hour or so, "RoboCop II" is a lot of fun — a hilarious parody of decadent, media-ravaged popular culture. As fans of the first installment know, the film's setting is futuristic Detroit, a hellish slum where street crime runs rampant (in my favorite scene, a bat-wielding little league team sets upon the owner of a discount electronics store as he shrieks for mercy), and where the police are at the service not of the citizens but of the insidious corporation that pays their wages. RoboCop, of course, is the corporation's lethal weapon — a part machine, part human law enforcer who offers such tight-lipped homilies as "Isn't this a school day?" before blowing out the innards of his latest adversary. (Sorry for the plot review, but it's sort of a necessity with sequels.)

The early action scenes, in which RoboCop tracks down the purveyors of Nuke (crack of the future, aptly named), are filled with neat ideas — like when RoboCop kills a bad guy by deflecting a bullet off of a wall at the precise angle necessary to hit the top of the target's skull. The best parts, though, are the assorted satirical jabs at TV culture, such as a teletthon to benefit Detroit in which a man plays "Born to Be Wild" on a fiddle (yes) while going through various fakir contortions. These bits have nothing to do with the plot, of course, but they're funny enough to merit inclusion. They keep things moving.

Peter Weller, as RoboCop, has the cyborg schtick down perfectly. Exhibiting the requisite robotic economy of movement, he turns his torso or neck one slow jerk at a time, so that the whirl and click accompanying his motions sound like the real thing, not just sound effects. Almost nothing can faze him; the only time he hesitates to make a kill is when the potential victim is a 10 year-old drug dealer. (He's such the epitome of Cool that it's easy to forget his reactions have been programmed in advance by others.)

The movie eventually falls apart, as a subplot involving a new, evil RoboCop takes precedence over the earlier humor. Although this aspect introduces some intriguing moral questions — exactly what sort of brain should be implanted into a prospective RoboCop? we're supposed to ponder — for the most part the last half of the film degenerates into shootouts that aren't even violent enough to hold our attention.

For the first hour or so, it's a hilarious parody of decadent, media-ravaged popular culture.

Also on hand are Nancy Allen, who drifts in and out of the action as RoboCop's partner, and Belinda Bauer as Dr. Faux, an obsessive scientist who pants, "You're perfect and I must have you" as she reads the police profile of a psychotic murderer.

Jayhawks' 'Blue Earth' combines country, rock

By John Kenyon
The Daily Iowan

OK, let's discuss some of the commonly held myths about country music.

First, that it is composed of inane songs with titles like "My Woman Done Me Wrong, So Me and Jack Daniels Done It to Another." Second, that it's all square dance-paced steel guitar drivel pumped out like a litter of stray puppies by Kenny Rogers. And last, if it's gonna be any good at all, it's gotta come from Nashville.

Commence debunking: Play "Blue Earth," the latest album from Minneapolis' own Jayhawks, and see where country music could be today if one were to eradicate much of the last two decades.

Music

The term "country rock" comes immediately to mind when pondering the Jayhawks' sound. Perfectly entwined harmony with some deft guitar picking are provided by vocalist/guitarist Mark Olson and lead guitarist/vocalist Gary Louris. This, coupled with a steady rock beat courtesy of Marc Perlman on bass and Thad Spencer behind the drums, provides the Jayhawks' framework.

While the term "country rock" can send chills of horror down the spine, the Jayhawks generate those chills another way. Their music recalls the sentiment and sincerity of country the way it was meant to be, back when Hank Williams Sr. was still crooning — simple-sounding yet complex arrangements complete with a little twang.

Take a song like "Dead End

Angel," seemingly the broken mold into which the Randy Trivises of new country are trying to pour their tired formula. Or how about "The Baltimore Sun"? Could it be the long lost son of Glen Campbell's "Gentle on My Mind"? If so, is this a curse? A blessing? Hear the album.

Speaking of the album, it is actually made up of demos the Jayhawks cut while looking for an album deal. They were touched up by a producer, but the true sentiment of the songs seems to have remained. Makes one glad a major label didn't get a chance to "mold" them.

It's up to so-called alternative music to bring the Jayhawks under its wing. Right now country doesn't deserve them. Were they to be marketed as country, fate would surely guide them to budget bin hell at Musicland, damned for being too rock 'n' roll. Top 40? Get serious. "Hi, I'm Casey Kasem, and coming up, we've got the Jayhawks, the Silos and in the top spot for the second week in a row, Dinosaur Jr."

So, it's up to everyone to obtain Jayhawks music. Besides "Blue Earth," there is also their eponymous first album, which was released on the Hawks' own Bunkhouse Records. Though not as polished or perfect, it is still a good two or three notches above most of what's out there.

Another very convenient way to hear the Jayhawks is to go to Gabe's Oasis, 330 E. Washington St., tomorrow night, where they will be performing. Get there early, however — it seems odd, but the Jayhawks are opening for Iowa City's own Dangtrippers. Hopefully, the world will soon wise up, and the Jayhawks will be headlining all over the place.

Western companies worried that Soviet Union can't pay its bills

By John Iams
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Mikhail Gorbachev is urging Western companies to do business with the Soviet Union, but they are becoming increasingly worried about the country's ability to pay the bills.

Some recent signs of trouble:

- A Finnish company halts shipments of newprint for Pravda and Izvestia.
- Two Japanese companies suspend delivery of electronics.
- A Soviet newspaper describes its country as "deadbeat."

The Soviet Union is lagging badly in paying debts to foreign business partners, and a government spokesman acknowledged Tuesday that it is having difficulty paying $2 billion owed to foreign companies.

Gorbachev hopes Western commerce and joint ventures can turn his lagging economy around. He neglected to mention the payment problems in a pitch to business leaders during his June visit to the United States and Canada.

Gorbachev has little control over the failure of Soviet companies to make good on their debts, but he could pay a political price if nonpayment damages his faltering reforms.

Over the past two years, 14,000 Soviet enterprises have been free to make their own deals with foreign companies without going through the central government.

In early 1989, Soviet businesses were told they must become self-sufficient and could no longer rely on the state to bail them out.

Signing a contract in the Soviet Union used to take years of wrangling, both with the enterprise making the deal and the ministry supervising it. But, once the contract was signed, foreign companies knew they would be paid — on time and in hard currency.

"With decentralization, many Soviet enterprises continued to place orders as in the past," a Western diplomat said, speaking on condition of anonymity. "Now, bills fall due, and there are insufficient funds, and this is creating a lot of difficulties."

According to the Soviet business weekly Commerçant, deliveries from foreign companies worth up to $500 million have gone unpaid since October 1989. "Similar deficiencies have occurred before, but they have always been resolved by credits from the Foreign Economy Bank," the newspaper said.

Commerçant said, "The exact number of deadbeat organizations is unclear, but one thing is certain: If additional currency resources are not located in time to make payments, deliveries on faith will cease."

Many Western companies are giving Soviet companies more time to pay their outstanding bills for goods already delivered, but they are reluctant to continue supplying goods.

Iowa coaches Fry, Davis, Gable each get pay increases

By Greg Smith
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Faculty, staff and athletic coaches at Iowa's three universities and two special schools will see more money in their paychecks beginning July 1.

The Iowa Board of Regents on Wednesday approved operating budgets and salary raises totaling $938.7 million for the five schools for fiscal year 1991.

Faculty, professional and scientific staff at the UI will receive six percent raises. Also included in the budgets were increased salaries for UI coaches and a $15.7 million budget for the UI athletic department.

Football coach Hayden Fry received a $7,500 pay increase to bring his salary to $132,700. Men's basketball coach Tom Davis will earn $107,500 after a $6,000 raise. Wrestling coach Dan Gable's salary will be $70,000 after a $4,000 raise.

Their boss, athletic director Chalmers "Bump" Elliott, received a $7,350 raise to bring his salary to $112,350.

Women's basketball coach C. Vivian Stringer will earn $78,900 after receiving a 13.5 percent raise totaling $9,400. Women's athletic director Christine Grant's salary was approved at $87,500 after a $6,500 raise.

The UI's operating budget totals nearly $273 million, about $16 million higher than a year ago. State appropriations account for $180.9 million, a 9.6 percent increase from 1990.

verdant pine forest Wednesday and forced the evacuation of subdivisions totaling nearly 800 residences.

In Southern California counties, 18 homes were destroyed and 14 damaged in brush fires by Wednesday evening.

Although the most intense heat ever experienced in a major U.S. city lessened, Wednesday was still a bad day for motorists in Phoenix, said Trish Zigante, Arizona Automobile Association operations specialist.

"We are getting a lot of tows, which is probably heating, and also a lot of flat tires," Zigante said.

"Then of course there are the battery jumps."

Zigante said the AAA in Phoenix averaged 700 trouble calls per weekday before Monday but had answered 1,100 to 1,200 each of the first two days of the week and seemed to be running near that Wednesday.

And while neither rain nor sleet nor snow nor dark of the night might keep letter carriers from swift completion of their appointed rounds, the heat in Texas is.

The Postal Service told customers they might expect minor delays in daily delivery because carriers would be taking more breaks to drink water and cool off. Lubbock is sweltering through the hottest June on record, with 18 days of temperatures over 100.

"We are concerned for their health," said Don Jones, postal field operations director. "This is bad weather for them."

CIREH will be supported by grants of $500,000 within five years from Pioneer Hi-Bred International Inc. and will combine faculty from the UI colleges of medicine, liberal arts and engider and smoked it while Barry's wife and son were away from the house.

Moore's mother's home. She said she and Barry smoked crack cocaine there several times, including Dec. 22, 1988, the day Barry's visits to the hotel room of convicted drug dealer Charles Lewis were made public. Barry once smoked so much cocaine in the house, "I had to hold him up. Afterward, he said, 'That was a really great hit.'"

The Virginia home of Bishop H.H. Brookins, the leader of more than 300 African Methodist-Episcopal congregations in the region. She said she began to pass out there after smoking crack cocaine and cried out, "Marion, Marion." But, she said, the mayor turned off the bathroom light and left, telling her later, "I couldn't do anything, there was nothing I could do."

"I could have died," she told the court.

After another crack-smoking episode, Barry said he was addicted to cocaine and "talked to me for the first time about developing his spiritual side. He was tired, he wanted to get his life together, he talked about starting to go to church," said Moore.

They were smoking together one Sunday in 1987, Moore testified, when "I told him, this is Mother's Day, aren't you going to spend time with your family? He told me, 'I am, but I have some time after church.'"

Moore said Barry often became paranoid, and once sent her out to see if someone was watching them from a van parked outside the townhouse where they were using cocaine. Barry had a series of hiding places where he stashed the drug, including a vacuum cleaner bag, Moore added.

Moore testified she first tried to hide her use of crack cocaine from the mayor because she "didn't want the burden of guilt of introducing it to him."

But, she said, Barry told her he was experienced with "freebasing" — or smoking cocaine — when he found a crack pipe in her apartment.

"Before the night was out, we had freebased, we had done crack," she said.

At the time, Moore ran a youth modeling program for the city, and she testified that Barry helped her get the contract for the program. She estimated the contract was worth $180,000.

Moore said she ended her sexual relationship with Barry in June 1988 "because there was so much drug use over that period of time."

But "once we stopped the intimate relationship, we continued using drugs," Moore testified.

At a bench conference, Assistant U.S. Attorney Judith Retchin said Moore has been in the government's witness protection program since Jan. 29 because of death threats. Retchin claimed that there is a $100,000 contract out on Moore's life, but that there is no evidence Barry had anything to do with the threat.

At Calvin Hall, where transfer students were registering for fall classes, the outage was an inconvenience but didn't completely halt the process.

"We were lucky this hit late in the afternoon," said Marcy Levy, program assistant for registration, adding that the outage affected only a few students in Wednesday's registration group.

Students registering for classes at the time of the power outage will be enrolled in their classes and receive their transcripts by mail, Levy said.

As of Wednesday evening, the cause of the power outage was still unknown, according to Tim Spacek, general manager of systems maintenance at the UI Physical Plant.

Study reveals younger Americans know less about news

By Mike Feinsilber
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans under age 30 know less about what's going on in the country and the world than any other generation in the past 50 years, according to a study of how people keep up with the news.

It found that younger Americans are less likely than earlier generations to have read a newspaper or watched a television news show. Twenty-five years ago, 67 percent of people under age 35 said "yes" when asked if they had "read a newspaper yesterday." Now only 24 percent say "yes."

Television news-watching has also dropped. Young people who said they watched the TV news "yesterday" fell from 52 percent in 1965 to 41 percent this year.

The study said that from 1941 to 1975, young Americans were on a par with their elders in public knowledge and in following most major news events closely. But since 1975, young people have been less attentive, and the trend is accelerating, it said.

"The Information Age has spawned... an uninformed and uninvolved population," concludes the study. It was conducted by the Times Mirror Center for the People and the Press, sponsored by the company that publishes the Los Angeles Times. The center's own polls and those of four other polling organizations taken over the years were analyzed.

Even though the average 30-year-old is more likely to use a computer, to have attended college and to be reading a book than someone 20 years senior, the younger generation knows less about the world, the study said.

In the latest measurement, 12,000 random sample interviews conducted between May 1989 and last March were analyzed. The number of young people who could correctly answer questions about current news was at its lowest level since pollsters started asking questions about familiarity with the news in the early 1940s.

"Social scientists and pollsters have long recognized that younger people have usually been somewhat less attuned to politics and serious issues," it said. "But the difference now is more striking than ever before."

"The Army-McCarthy hearings, Watergate and Vietnam were stories followed closely by young and old alike. However, since the mid-70s young people have shown much less interest in most news, including the biggest stories with the most far-reaching implications."

The exceptions: sports news and the abortion issue. There, the young match their elders in news interest.

In 1989, 25 percent of each group kept up with the World Series; 41 percent of the young and 33 percent of people over 50 knew about the Supreme Court's most recent major abortion ruling.

By contrast, in a March 1990 survey, less than a quarter of people under 30 and less than half of those over 50 could identify Jim Wright, who resigned a year ago as speaker of the House of Representatives, or Helmut Kohl.

Talks begin over plan to reduce deficit

By Alan Fram
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democrats responding to President George Bush's endorsement of possible tax increases offered a plan Wednesday to cut billions of dollars in benefit programs such as Social Security. Republican congressional leaders, meanwhile, faced a budding rebellion over Bush's tax turnabout.

White House and congressional negotiators searching for ways to cut the 1991 federal deficit began discussing proposals in earnest, a day after Bush said "tax revenue increases" are needed as part of a plan to cut the deficit.

Democrats, citing Bush's concession, offered a plan that one participant, speaking on condition of anonymity, said totaled $5.6 billion in savings. Negotiators are seeking $45 billion to $60 billion in new taxes and spending cuts for fiscal year 1991, which starts Oct. 1.

Another official, also requesting anonymity, said the options came to $10 billion. The official said one element was a three-month delay in cost-of-living increases for benefit programs for which people qualify automatically, such as Social Security pensions for retired workers.

Under that plan, the annual cost-of-living boosts would be delayed from Jan. 1 to April 1 for a savings of $3 billion.

The official said the suggestion for delaying cost-of-living adjustments ran into objections from Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., and House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, White House Chief of Staff John Sununu, right, meets with Minority Leader Robert Dole of Kansas, left, prior to budget conference hearings on Capitol Hill Wednesday.

D-III. Rostenkowski said the political consequences of such a delay would be "death," the official said.

Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., said the Democratic package also included reductions in Medicare and federal employee benefit programs.

"We're trying to be even-handed about it, tit-for-tat," said Sasser. "They're talking about taxes, and we're talking about reducing entitlements," the bureaucratic term for benefit programs.

House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., said the negotiators generally agreed that their goal should be to achieve a balanced budget by 1995. The Gramm-Rudman law requires the deficit to be eliminated by 1993, a goal that virtually everyone in Washington believes cannot be achieved.

"It's fair to assume... the targets are going to be changed," Domenici said of the series of declining annual deficit goals set by Gramm-Rudman.

In seven weeks of meetings, only one proposal had been advanced, a $51 billion deficit-reduction package offered last week by White House budget director Richard Darman. It was quickly dismissed by Democrats as insufficient.

But Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., said after emerging from the Wednesday morning session of closed-door bargaining, "The whole tenor has changed. It is very determined. It doesn't seem to be as acrimonious. It's, 'How do we get there?'"

Some other Republicans, not part of the negotiations, didn't feel that way.

"The president may well go into a back room somewhere and sign off on this deal, but Republicans haven't," said Rep. Bob Walker, R-Pa., who led a letter-writing campaign in the House against any tax increase.

Negotiators said there was no attempt during Wednesday morning's meeting to learn what taxes Bush was referring to.

But outside the Capitol meeting room where negotiators met, Democrats and Republicans grappled for political advantage over Bush's statement. The president said Tuesday that spending cuts, changes in the budget process and a cut in the capital gains tax rate — which everyone agrees would increase revenues, at least initially — were also required to shrink a budget gap that could surpass $200 billion next year.

Housing Secretary Jack Kemp told reporters that revenues can come from many sources, including a growing economy, new federal fees or taxes on tobacco.

"It certainly didn't violate, in my view, any pledge," Kemp said.

But many rank-and-file Republicans, counting on the subject of taxes as a campaign issue against Democrats, were pained by Bush's retreat from his promise of "no new taxes."

Aftershocks hamper relief efforts in Iran

By David Thurber
The Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Aftershocks rumbled through northern Iran on Wednesday, shaking buildings and killing a relief worker who was trying to dig out bodies buried under debris from last week's earthquake.

Bad weather hampered rescue efforts and was blamed for the crash of a relief helicopter that hit a mountain in Gilan province. Three people were reported seriously injured.

Tens of thousands of people took shelter in tent cities set up with the help of foreign volunteers. About a half-million people were left homeless by Thursday's quake, which registered between 7.3 and 7.7 on the Richter scale.

Officials at the Red Crescent, the Moslem equivalent of the Red Cross, said they had counted 40,000 dead and more than 60,000 injured. Government officials earlier said 50,000 people died and 200,000 were injured. A Red Cross official said Tuesday the death toll could reach 70,000.

More than 200 people hurt in the quake died of their injuries Wednesday in hospitals in Zanjan province, the Islamic Republic News Agency reported. It gave no details.

IRNA reported that a 19-year-old volunteer died Wednesday in Rudbar, a hard-hit Gilan province. A wall collapsed on Iraj Amjadian, a student at the police academy, when a mild quake shook the city as he and other volunteers were trying to pull bodies from the debris of a collapsed building.

Fifty aftershocks struck Tuesday and Wednesday in Gilan province, on the Caspian Sea, and Zanjan, just south, according to Tehran University's Geophysics Center. More than 400 aftershocks have hit since Thursday.

At a news conference in Tehran, the managing director of Iran's Red Crescent societies said survivors were being housed in more than 70,000 tents sent to the region, IRNA reported.

Mohammad Parham said 175 foreign planes airlifted thousands of tons of supplies, including medical aid, tents and other items. He praised the foreign relief effort and said about 500 foreign doctors and relief workers were in the quake-afflicted area.

He said relief operations were approaching the final stages and that there was no need for additional foreign doctors and relief workers, IRNA reported.

"The need for foreign doctors and rescuers was acute only in the first 72 hours. Now, the need is for medicines and shelter equipment," said Seyfollah Vahid Dastjerdi, the Red Crescent chief.

Foreign aid has come from more than 26 countries, including sworn enemies like the United States, Britain, Iraq and Saudi Arabia.

That has prompted a bitter debate among Iranian leaders. Radicals say the donations should not lead to improved relations with the West, but others say they should.

An Iranian child walks around remaining furniture Monday. The camp was set up by Iran's Red Crescent societies in the village of Klisshom.

Members of Iran's parliament Tuesday ruled out any forgiveness for British author Salman Rushdie, the United States or other foes in exchange for their donations.

Parliament member Ayatollah Saddegh Khalkhali said the reported $8,650 donation by Rushdie to a newspaper relief fund would not reverse the death sentence against him.

Iran's late spiritual leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini issued a religious edict in 1989 that Rushdie should be executed for allegedly blaspheming Islam in his novel "The Satanic Verses."

Some Western diplomats say the quake and resulting international aid effort could lead to better diplomatic ties.

"Of course the goodwill gesture being shown by France and other countries will have favorable effects in future relations of these countries with Iran," French Minister for Humanitarian Action Bernard Kouchner said in an interview published Wednesday in the Tehran Times.

City wants name sans Stalin link

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — City fathers of a historic Russian settlement have turned their backs on a famous son who grew up to be a henchman of Stalin and have decided to ask that their city's old name, Tver, be restored, Tass said Wednesday.

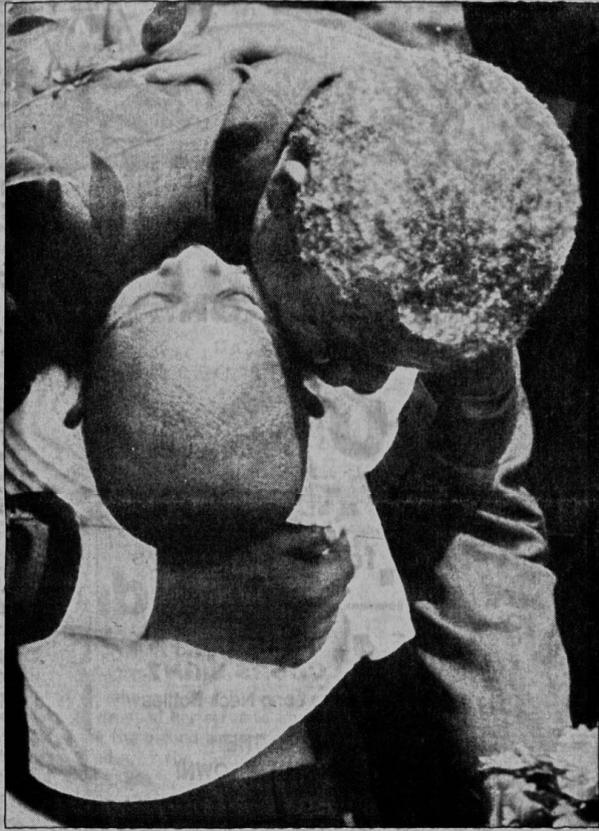

The city of 400,000 residents, 105 miles northwest of Moscow, had been renamed Kalinin following the death of former Soviet President Mikhail Kalinin in 1946.

Tass reported city authorities had decided to ask the Soviet government to return the old name of Tver to their city, and that on Wednesday district officials also asked to rename the surrounding area administered from the city.

Kalinin was a comrade of Soviet dictator Josef Stalin for years and served as Soviet president under Stalin from 1938 until his death. He was born in Tver in 1875.

Even if the name change goes through, Kalinin's name won't be erased from Soviet maps yet.

The historic German city of Koenigsberg, which was incorporated into the Soviet Union at the end of World War II, still bears the name Kaliningrad. One of Moscow's main thoroughfares is Kalinin Prospekt. And atlases list at least five other towns across the Soviet Union with names such as Kalinin, Kalinino and Kalininsk.

Nelson Mandela leans to embrace a young boy who presented him with flowers at Hartsfield International Airport Wednesday. Mandela later met briefly with reporters, saying sometimes violence may be warranted in fighting apartheid.

Mandela hailed at tomb of late civil rights leader

By Robert Byrd
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Nelson Mandela paid silent tribute Wednesday at the tomb of Martin Luther King Jr., and the slain civil rights leader's widow fervently upheld Mandela's right to depart from non-violence in the struggle for black rights in South Africa.

Mandela did not speak during the brief wreath-laying ceremony, which included the singing of the anthem of the U.S. civil rights movement, "We Shall Overcome."

Later, the Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference that King founded, told Mandela, "We reject the constant nagging you have experienced about violence. ... We respect the right of oppressed people everywhere to seek their own liberation."

The audience of more than 1,500 people at Big Bethel AME Church cheered loudly.

Corena Scott King said, "Reverend Lowery has spoken for all of us and he spoke well. We support you; we love you; we revere you."

Mandela told the audience, "As a result of your support and the hospitality you have shown us now, it is futile for the white minority in South Africa to resist the people's demand for one-person, one-vote."

Martin Luther King III told a reporter that Mandela's visit to the center named for his father showed that "clearly he does not support violence. I think Mr. Mandela wants non-violent solutions, but the government has pushed him to that." Some local civil rights officials had suggested Mandela should follow King's philosophy and renounce violence. But upon his arrival here Wednesday morning, the founder of the African National Congress wasted no time reminding the group of his view that black South Africans face a different battle from the one King led.

"Unlike you, we are still under the grip of white supremacy," Mandela said at the airport. To reporters he added, "Non-violence is a good policy when conditions permit."

King was assassinated in 1968, five years after Mandela began his 27-year prison stay for plotting sabotage to overthrow the minority white government of South Africa. The government released him in February, and negotiations are underway aimed at dismantling apartheid.

A scheduled midday break for the 71-year-old Mandela was extended, delaying the wreath-laying ceremony by about three hours. Mandela has at times canceled events to rest during his grueling 14-nation tour of Europe and North America.

At Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport, Gov. Joe Frank Harris, a white conservative Democrat, called Mandela an inspiration and welcomed him to "the birthplace of equality and justice for all of America."

There was no sign of protest over Mandela's refusal to repudiate Libyan President Moammar Gadhafi, Cuban leader Fidel Castro and Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasir Arafat.

Hubble in trouble

LOS ANGELES — Scientists were dismayed Wednesday after learning that a problem with the Hubble Space Telescope's mirrors will render its cameras almost useless until a space shuttle can be sent on a repair mission.

"It's a major blow to our hopes," said Kim Leschly of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. "It is very disappointing, extremely disappointing."

NASA had planned to make repairs in June 1993 and said it may move up that mission.

"People aren't crying," said John Holtzman, an astronomer at Lowell Observatory in Flagstaff, Ariz. "It's just that there have been so many delays in this project that when you say wait another three years, it's slightly depressing."

NASA officials announced Wednesday that a manufacturing error prevents proper focusing of the $1.5 billion telescope's mirrors.

They said that until space shuttle astronauts can make repairs, the problem will make the telescope's most important instrument — the Wide-Field and Planetary Camera — virtually useless.

Helicopters collide in Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Two helicopters carrying journalists collided Wednesday afternoon as they were returning from a Contra demobilization ceremony in the countryside. A witness said several were badly injured.

"In all the years I've covered the war, I've never felt so close to death," said Ernesto Mejia, an Associated Press photographer aboard one of the helicopters. "It seemed unreal, to end the war almost dying."

There were unofficial reports that at least 14 people had been hospitalized. A spokesman for the presidential press office said authorities were still compiling a list of the injured several hours after the crash.

Mejia said 24 journalists were on board the two helicopters when they collided at 2:15 p.m. as they were taking off from San Pedro de Lovago, a village where Contra commanders had turned over their weapons to President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro in a ceremony marking the end of the civil war.

The journalists were evacuated to Managua, about 100 miles away, in helicopters from the United Nations/Organization of American States force overseeing the Contra demobilization.

USDA tests beetle-killing potato plant

WASHINGTON — Genetically altered potatoes that could be naturally deadly to beetles are being field tested in the Pacific Northwest, the Agriculture Department said Wednesday.

The outdoor tests were scheduled to begin this week in Prosser, Wash., said geneticist Charles Brown of the department's Agricultural Research Service.

"Ultimately, we want to know whether potato plants could use this genetic weapon to combat Colorado potato beetles with little or no chemical insecticide," he said.

Brown is based at the agency's vegetable and crop research unit in Prosser and is collaborating with other scientists from the University of Washington, Seattle, and another USDA researcher in Yakima, Wash.

The quarter-acre potato plots are at Washington State University's research and extension center in Prosser.

Sudden fires burn Arizona pine forest

6 firefighters killed, 50 summer houses destroyed in blaze

The Associated Press

PAYSON, Ariz. — A blaze that killed six firefighters when it flared like "a big blowtorch" spread Wednesday across 15,000 acres of Arizona's most verdant pine forest.

A photographer who escaped the fatal firestorm Tuesday described how he and others fled for their lives into a burned-out clearing.

"There wasn't much time for thinking, just survival," said Chad Surmick. "All of a sudden the trees around us started bursting into flames. It was like Roman candles going up all over the place."

The firefighters were killed and five others injured when a "dry thunderstorm" struck the area Tuesday, driving the fire along the Mogollon Rim in all directions and trapping several crews, said Jim Paxon, fire information officer for the Gila National Forest in New Mexico.

"It's just like a big furnace, a big blowtorch kind of effect," Paxon said. "It built its own thunderhead from the fire. That was a 40,000-foot vertical column, five to six miles across."

The fire had destroyed about 50 houses and forced evacuation of 700 others by Wednesday.

The dead firefighters were five inmates from the Perryville state prison west of Phoenix and an administrative assistant to the warden at the prison's San Pedro Unit, said corrections spokesman Michael Arra. Four of the five injured firefighters also were Perryville prisoners, while the fifth was from a Tucson fire department.

The inmates were participating in a 5-year-old volunteer firefighting program that had never had a casualty, Arra said.

Surmick, a photographer for the Mesa Tribune, was with six other journalists and a number of firefighters "when we started noticing the fire getting closer and closer and the smoke was getting really bad."

While he and others ran to a previously burned clearing, the fire jumped the road behind them.

"As we were running up the hill, some of the TV guys were trying to film," Surmick said. "The firefighters were screaming at them, 'This is not the time to be filming; we are going to die if you don't get up that hill.'"

AP/Carl Fox

Surmick and the others were trapped in the clearing for about three hours.

Tanker planes and helicopters backed up as many as 1,500 firefighters and support personnel fighting the blaze in Tonto and Coconino National Forests, which was ignited Monday by lightning. Firefighters also had to contend with a heat wave that sent temperatures soaring to an all-time record high of 106 degrees at Payson, 13 miles to the southwest.

Smoke billowing from 30-foot-high flames was so thick that command stations repeatedly lost touch with firefighter crews.

Payson was choked with smoke, and the smoke and ash reached as far away as Show Low, 90 miles to the east.

Tonto National Forest fire information officer Bob Celaya estimated that nearly all of Bonita Creek Estates, a subdivision of 57 summer homes, had been destroyed. The subdivision was evacuated Monday evening, and the residents of about 700 other threatened homes were told to evacuate Tuesday.

Soviet Communist Party set for meeting of factions

By Andrew Katell
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Despite the rise of conservative foes, a top official said Wednesday it is unlikely next week's pivotal gathering of Soviet Communists will be postponed or will turn against Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Vadim Medvedev, the party's ideology chief and member of its Politburo, also said the platform and rules that the party leadership will propose to the congress have been reworked in response to criticism from both left and right.

In the new documents, the party takes a repentant tone about its blame for the country's ills.

Medvedev's comments — and the revisions of the main congressional documents just four days before the 4,700 delegates converge on Moscow — showed the leadership's deep concern about keeping the party together. Reformers say conservative foes of Gorbachev could dominate the gathering, undermine him as he tries to pull the country out of a deep economic and political crisis, and force progressives to quit the party.

The reform-minded president of the Russian republic, Boris Yeltsin, urged Tuesday that the 28th Communist Party Congress be postponed until autumn to "stabilize the political situation." Medvedev said other Communist officials also want to delay the congress, now scheduled to start Monday, because there have been too many political meetings lately.

"I believe the train has already left the station, and we should stick to the original date," he told a news conference. He added that the leadership had contacted delegates across the nation, and most oppose a delay.

The issue is expected to come up Friday at a meeting of the party's 249-member policy-making Central Committee. That body will review the timing of the congress and discuss the main congressional documents, Medvedev said.

Right to face child accusers denied to abusers by Court

By Richard Carelli
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — People charged with child abuse have no guaranteed right to face-to-face confrontations with their young accusers if the children would suffer emotional trauma as a result, the Supreme Court ruled Wednesday.

In a pair of 5-4 rulings, the court gave tacit approval to the constitutionality of measures taken by many states to spare children from such potentially traumatic confrontations.

Those measures include the use of videotaped testimony, testimony by one-way closed circuit television, and even testimony by doctors and others who interviewed alleged abuse victims.

"A state's interest in the physical and psychological well-being of child-abuse victims may be sufficiently important to outweigh, at least in some cases, a defendant's right to face his or her accusers in court," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the court.

The decisions, in cases from Maryland and Idaho, are expected to make it easier to prosecute people on such charges.

The number of cases is growing. More than 2.2 million child-abuse reports were filed in 1988, according to the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse.

"This is a victory for children," said Joyce Strom of the Child Welfare League of America after learning of the rulings. "This is a step in the right direction of strengthening a judicial system to protect children and acknowledge their special need."

However, the decisions were not a total victory for the states nor a total defeat for the Constitution's Sixth Amendment, which says that "in all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with all witnesses against him."

Writing for the court in the Maryland case, O'Connor said, "That the face-to-face confrontation requirement is not absolute does not, of course, mean that it may easily be dispensed with."

She added, "A defendant's right . . . may be satisfied . . . only where denial of such confrontation is necessary to further an important public policy and only where the reliability of the testimony is otherwise assured."

O'Connor said trial judges may shield children from such confrontations only when substantial emotional trauma — not mere nervousness or reluctance — would result.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist and Justices Byron White, Harry Blackmun and Anthony Kennedy joined O'Connor.

Justices Antonin Scalia, William Brennan, Thurgood Marshall and John Paul Stevens dissented.

Scalia, who has nine children, wrote for the four that the states' real interest in such cases was obtaining "more convictions of guilty defendants."

"That is not an unworthy interest," he said, "but it should not be dressed up as a humanitarian one."

expressed interest in the 6-foot-10 forward, he wasn't one of the 54 players drafted Wednesday. "It's not the end of the world," Bullard said. "I hope to find some other place to play." Bullard said he isn't certain where that place will be. "Europe would be a good opportunity," he said. "It's kind of a summer project finding a place to play." The Warriors acquired Atlanta's second-round pick — the 28th overall — and used it to select Jepsen. The former Iowa center said he wasn't surprised that the Warriors chose him or that he was picked early in the second round. "You have an idea of who is looking at you," Jepsen said. "At least I did... I had a feeling for where I would go. It's just what I expected, really." The Warriors, who were looking for post players in the draft, landed two of them. Xavier's Tyrone Hill, a 6-foot-11 forward, was Golden State's first round selection. But Jepsen said the Warriors' need for post players didn't necessarily make him an immediate starter. "If I was going to step in and start right away, I would have been picked No. 1 like Derrick Coleman

(the top draft selection), players like that," he said. "If it will take you two, three years to develop they'll pick you a little lower." "I've got a long ways to go and a lot of work to do. I don't think I'm at my potential." Jepsen said he was impressed with Nelson, who guided the Warriors to a playoff berth in the 1988-89 season. Golden State just missed the playoffs this year. Nelson played on the Iowa basketball team from 1960-62, earning all-Big Ten honors in his final two seasons and third team all-America honors his senior year.

"I read about him in the record books," Jepsen said. "I've heard a lot about him. I've followed his coaching career since I was a kid." The center, who scored 48 points for the Rhoades-Koser team of the PTL Wednesday, said he took some NBA-size advice on how to spend the night of the draft. "I asked a lot of people, I asked Brad... What should I do for the draft?" Jepsen said. "Should I stay home and watch on TV or go out and play? They said I should play." "It helped get the heart beating. It worked out just right."

in strikeouts with 96. That's about $320,000 per win of $13,333 per strikeout. It doesn't appear that Langston is a strong Cy candidate either. Milwaukee's Yount likewise tested the free agent waters, but chose to stay put. The Brewers rewarded Yount for his loyalty and 1989 AL MVP season with a three-year $9.6 million contract. And Young has followed suit with perhaps his most disappointing year ever, hitting a paltry .254 with six home runs. Again, that's roughly $20,000 a hit or $213,333 a homer. Incidentally, the Brewers are in fifth place. Obviously the size of their respective paychecks is not solely responsible for their poor seasons. And other big-money free agents such as Rickey Henderson, Dave Stewart and Jeff Reardon are having banner years. But the enormous media attention and subsequent pressure to perform that goes hand in hand with the big bucks affects some people tremendously. Perhaps Jose Canseco is not one of those people. Is it possible that there could be any more attention on the A's slugger than there already is anyway? And who has greater expectations of Canseco than Canseco? So far, Canseco has talked the talk and walked the walk. But it seems to me that the A's are taking a huge gamble that Canseco can walk the walk with $23.5 million on his muscular shoulders.

Wimbledon

6-2, 7-6. Capriati, who became the youngest Wimbledon winner on Tuesday when she won her first-round match, dropped her serve to go down 6-5 in the second set, but broke back and won the tiebreak 7-2. Fifth-seeded Zina Garrison of the United States also advanced. She beat Cecilia Dahlman of Sweden 6-2, 6-1, losing just 14 points on her serve and winning the final six games after Dahlman broke for a 1-0 lead in the second set.

As this year's hopefuls were winning, a one-time contender played the final singles match of her career. Hana Mandlikova, a finalist here in 1981 and 1986, was eliminated by Ann Henricksson of the United States 6-3, 6-3. Mandlikova said before the tournament that she would retire from singles play after Wimbledon. "I felt relieved and sad," Mandlikova said. "The only thing I'll ever regret is not winning here. It was my dream since childhood and I was in two finals. But I'll never have to be nervous or practice as hard as I always did." His confidence shaken and his once-glorious game in tatters, McEnroe said Tuesday that he realized he must start all over. "I'll try to get my act together," a somber McEnroe said after his earliest Wimbledon exit since 1978. "You know, this is a long-term project. There's a lot of act to get together." McEnroe was joined on the sidelines by four other men's seeds, including fifth seed Andres Gomez and sixth seed Tom Mayotte. Gomez, a clay-court specialist who won the French Open earlier this month, was sluggish in a 6-4, 6-2, 6-2 loss to American Jim Grabb. Mayotte, who usually is at his best on grass, lost 4-6, 7-6, 7-5, 6-3 to Gary Muller.

players." "I think this will make it easier for the Mark McGwire and the Matt Williams to negotiate their contracts," Canseco said. The agreement was reached after more than a month of negotiations, during which Canseco spent 15 days on the disabled list with a back injury. Despite missing 16 games this season because of back and wrist problems, Canseco has 20 home runs, 50 RBIs, 12 steals and a .307 batting average.

The deal makes Canseco the fourth Oakland player who will earn more than $3 million a season. Pitchers Dave Stewart and Dennis Eckersley and outfielder Rickey Henderson had already reached that salary plateau. The deal ends three years of contract squabbling between Canseco and the Athletics. In February, Canseco said he would never forgive Alderson for threatening to bring up the player's off-the-field problems in a possible arbitration hearing.

Alderson was referring to Canseco's brushes with the law in 1988 and 1989, including one that led to a no-contest plea to possessing a loaded gun. Canseco also was cited for several traffic infractions. The two sides avoided arbitration, agreeing to a one-year, $2 million contract for the 1990 season just 48 hours before the scheduled hearing. Canseco earned $1.6 million in 1989. In April, the Cuban-born Canseco said racial discrimination was behind the Athletics' refusal to offer him a multi-year contract. He later recanted the charge. Canseco was voted the American League's Most Valuable Player in 1988. He hit 42 homers, stole 40 bases and batting .307 that season. Last year, he played only 65 games because of a broken bone in his left hand. He batted .269 with 17 homers and 57 RBIs. Canseco was voted the AL's Rookie of the Year in 1986 after hitting 33 home runs and 117 RBIs with a .240 batting average.

Nebraska tests waters on joining Big Ten

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Nebraska Athletic Director Bob Devaney sent out a feeler to the Big Ten Conference last week after reports that Oklahoma would consider an offer to leave the Big Eight for the Southwest Conference. But OU and NU officials say the Sooners aren't likely to move, and Devaney says the Huskers aren't, either. Even if they were, they would have to wait out the Big Ten's four-year moratorium on further expansion talks. "I can't see it unless it's a desperation move," Devaney told the Omaha World-Herald. "I can't see why we would go into the Big Ten and do all that traveling. I don't think it's something we ordinarily would seek at all." Tyson, Foreman fights to be moved

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
The Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — When Caesars Palace couldn't agree on the price for a September doubleheader featuring Mike Tyson and George Foreman, promoters Bob Arum and Don King played a Trump card.

So, the fights are headed for Atlantic City's Convention Center on Sept. 22, where the live-site promoter will be the Trump Plaza hotel-casino of financier Donald Trump, who has been doing some heavy sparring lately with international bankers concerning interest payments on junk bonds.

"We have a deal in principle with the Trump organization," Arum said Wednesday.

A Trump Plaza official, who did not wish to be identified, said staging the doubleheader, on which Tyson will fight Alex Stewart and Foreman might fight Francesco Damiani, will give Trump Plaza right of first refusal on a Tyson-Foreman match.

The doubleheader originally was scheduled for Sept. 8 and it was expected it would be held at Caesars Place in Las Vegas, where, on June 16, Tyson knocked out Henry Tillman and Foreman knocked out Adilson Rodrigues.

Arum said Caesars Palace found the live-site fee to be too high. Both he and Trump Plaza declined to reveal the price on which they had agreed.

Sept. 22 would be the day after James "Buster" Douglas is scheduled to defend the heavyweight title at The Mirage in Las Vegas, but there are indications the fight will be held in October.

If the 41-year-old Foreman, who was champion in 1973-74, does not fight Damiani, of Italy, his opponent could be Michael Dokes, according to Arum.

"We're still leaning toward Damiani, but George still wants it to be for 12 rounds for the title, but I think we'll work it out," Arum said.

Damiani is recognized as heavyweight champion by the relatively new World Boxing Organization, while the World Boxing Association, World Boxing Council, International Boxing Federation and an overwhelming majority of boxing fans recognize the champion to be Douglas, who upset Tyson Feb. 11 at Tokyo.

HBO, which put together and televised the tournament that unified the title, with Tyson as champion, insists on the bout being billed as a 10-round non-title match.

As for holding the Douglas-Holyfield fight in October, Dan Duva, Holyfield's promoter, said Wednesday, "If they want to move to October, we'll be reasonable about it. We want to make sure Evander Holyfield gets as much exposure as possible."

There is concern, Duva said, that efforts to publicize the fight will be minimized by the litigation in which King and Douglas are suing each other over breach of a promotional contract.

King's suit is scheduled to begin Monday in U.S. District Court in New York.

Scorer reverses call on Ripken's 'error'

By David Ginsburg
The Associated Press

BALTIMORE (AP) — Record-book writers, get your asterisks ready. Cal Ripken's errorless streak is not over, after all.

Official scorer Billy Stetka, who charged Ripken with an error Tuesday when the Baltimore Oriole shortstop apparently muffed a cutoff throw from center fielder Mike Devereaux, reversed his own call early Wednesday.

After viewing the videotape and talking with a few players and coaches, Stetka decided to give Devereaux a throwing error on the play.

As a result, Ripken's revived errorless streak was at 68 straight games entering Wednesday night's game against Cleveland. Thanks to Stetka's ruling, Ripken is still alive in his pursuit of Eddie Brinkman's 18-year-old American League record of 72 consecutive errorless games by a shortstop.

"I talked to everyone involved," Stetka said. "Virtually to a man, everyone except Devereaux said the throw was well off line. Cal had to use more than a reasonable effort to make the play."

Ripken's "error" occurred in the first inning of the Orioles' 5-3 loss to Cleveland on a play that was anything but ordinary.

With one out and Jerry Browne on first base, Dion James looped a single into short center.

Devereaux bobbled the ball and was charged with an error. He picked the ball up and threw to Ripken, who allowed the throw to bounce off his mitt and roll into foul territory. Browne came around to score and Ripken had his second error of the season and first since April 13.

Or did he? After some of the participants in the play — including Ripken — voiced displeasure over the call, Stetka checked the videotape after the game several times, at various angles, and in slow motion.

Noticing that Ripken had to leave the ground to get his glove on the throw, Stetka said he would consider changing the call after talking to Devereaux, Ripken and Cleveland third base coach Rich Dauer before Wednesday night's game.

After doing so, Stetka changed his mind.

Ripken, who rarely complains about anything, had made no effort to hide his feelings after the game.

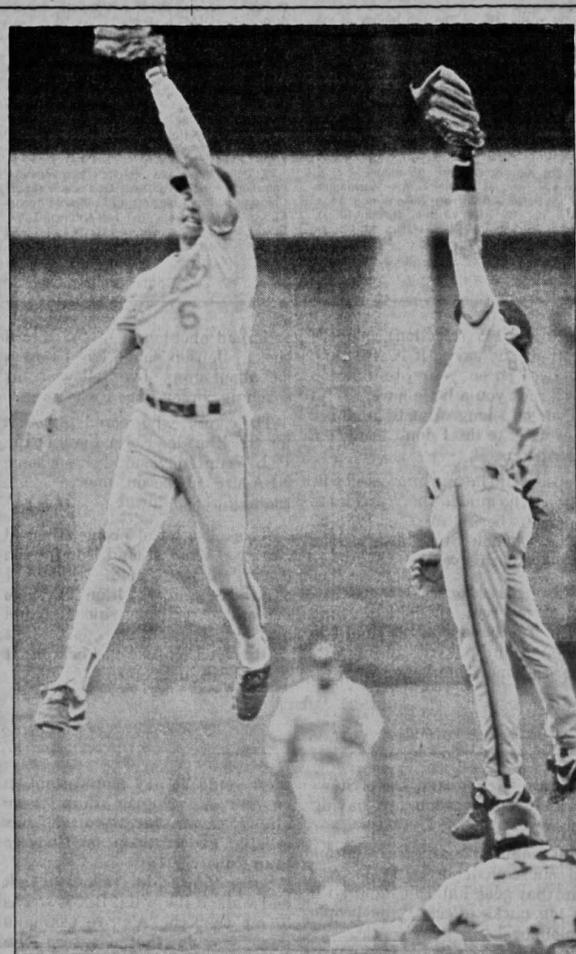

"I thought the throw was off line and high," Ripken said. "I was going to cut it off. I jumped and it went off the glove. It was one of those plays where you get an 'E' for effort."

"I guess it was one of those errors where someone has to get it. I'm not going to say I didn't deserve it, but there are too many discrepancies in official scoring."

After learning that his errorless streak was still intact, Ripken said, "If it wouldn't have been changed, it wouldn't have mattered to me. It's nice that I didn't get the error, but I wouldn't have lost any sleep over it."

Dauer, who had as good a view as anyone, expressed similar sentiments about the call.

"Dauer told me that Devereaux should have gotten the error," said Orioles' public relations director Rick Vaughn. "He was pretty adamant about it."

Strange Brew(ers)

World Cup takes 3-day break

By Barry Wilner
The Associated Press

ROME (AP) — On the 20th day — and the 21st and 22nd — the World Cup rested.

After two frantic rounds of soccer, the field has been cut to eight teams, half of them surprises. The reward for the quarterfinalists is three days off to plot strategy, heal the wounded and, in one case, see the Pope.

The Irish team spent part of Wednesday at the Vatican and had an audience with Pope John Paul II. Dressed in their green and white sweatsuits, the team met privately with the pontiff, joined by Coach Jack Charlton and the bishop of Limerick, Monsignor Liam O'Boyle. They presented John Paul with a soccer ball autographed by all the players and a team pennant.

Then, led by the bishop, they all burst into "Come On You Boys in Green."

The boys in green have a heavy task ahead — beating Italy at Olympic Stadium on Saturday. The Italians have won all four games by shutouts. The Irish had three ties in the first round, then 120 minutes of scoreless soccer against Romania in the second round before winning a penalty kick shootout.

"We'll make it hard for them," said goalkeeper Paddy Bonner.

Italy's Roberto Baggio expects just that from Ireland.

"We're worried about giving up a goal on a counterattack, as it will be tough to come back and score against their defense," Baggio said. "The Irish play a typical long-ball game, so we'll want to score early so we can better cope with their open style."

The most wide-open styles are employed by West Germany and Czechoslovakia, who play Sunday in Milan. The Germans have shown the most dangerous, blanced attack, while the Czechoslovaks have been led by Tomas Skuhravy, the World Cup's leading scorer with five goals.

The other games this weekend are Argentina-Yugoslavia at Florence on Saturday, and England-Cameroon at Naples on Sunday.

Several English fans among the 246 expelled from Italy after rioting in the Adriatic resort of Rimini said they were treated cruelly by Italian police.

"When we were arrested we were held in a garage and treated very roughly," said Michael Vincent. "We were punched and kicked by the police for no reason. I have never known anything like it and will never go back to Italy again."

"Even on the plane (back to London) they treated us like animals. We got one glass of water and were told to keep looking ahead and not to turn round to talk to anybody. Otherwise, you would get a smack across the head."

The incident was the worst involving English fans during the World Cup and served as yet another setback in England's attempts to get its club teams readmitted to European events. English clubs have been barred since 1985, when rioting at the Cup of Champions game between Liverpool and Juventus caused the deaths of 39 fans, mostly Italians.

Emidio Di Giambattista, the chief prosecutor in Italy's Court of Accounts, said in a report filed Tuesday that World Cup construction costs were double original estimates and had contributed to the country's soaring public debt.

He said public debt now amounted to 98.3 percent of the gross domestic product and that World Cup construction projects shared part of the blame.

FIFA president Joao Havelange told Gazzetta Dello Sport that the next World Cup would include one more team from Africa, at the expense of Europe, which will lose a spot. He credited the strong showing by Cameroon as a major factor in the change, which must be ratified by the world soccer federation in December.

NCAA presidents support time cutback

By Doug Tucker
The Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — College athletes will have to spend no more than 20 hours a week on sports, an average reduction of about one-third, under legislation the NCAA Presidents Commission will sponsor at the 1991 convention.

The time-reduction addresses a common complaint voiced by athletes in a survey two years ago, and are based on recommendations by a group of conference commissioners.

Also following a recommendation by the commissioners, the presidents agreed to sponsor scholarship cuts in a move to reduce spiraling costs.

In addition, the commission will sponsor a measure to increase the number of games in a basketball season from 25 to 27 and specify that athletes during their season must get at least one day a week off. The maximum number of contests or dates of competition would be reduced in most other sports, however.

Modifying a commissioners' recommendation, the presidents will seek a five-year phase-out period for athletic dorms.

Only eight hours per week will be allowed for sports during an athlete's off-season.

The measures will be put into legislative form by the Collegiate Commissioners Conference later this week. The commission and the NCAA Council have until Aug. 15 to submit legislation for the January 1991 convention.

"The commission will be meeting with the Council to do some fine-tuning," commission chairman Martin Massengale of Nebraska said at a news conference Wednesday.

"There could be some minor changes in what we're recommending."

The commission sought similar reductions at a special NCAA convention in 1987 but were rebuffed. This time, Massengale said, the presidents are working with athletes and coaches, not against them.

"The key issue is cooperation and interchange of ideas," said NCAA executive director Dick Schultz, joining Massengale at the news conference. "The presidents have sought out the input from coaches, athletic directors and student-athletes in all sports. As a result, there is a melding of those ideas together."

The scholarship cut proposals would not take effect until Aug. 1, 1992.

In football, schools could still give a maximum 25 grants per year, but no more than 44 in a two-year period. Also, the overall football scholarship limit would be reduced from the present 95 to 92 in 1992, 88 in 1993 and 85 in 1994.

In basketball, schools will be limited to only four scholarships in any one year, but no more than seven in any two-year span. The current overall limit of 15 would be reduced to 14 in 1992 and 13 in 1993.

In all other sports except women's gymnastics, women's tennis and women's volleyball, scholarships would be reduced by 10 percent. In those three excepted sports, there would be no reduction.

Massengale said the scholarship reduction measures will be placed at the end of the agenda.

"We don't want these to represent the only cost-reduction measures," Massengale said.

Jepsen drafted by Warriors

By Brian Gaul
The Daily Iowan

The timing couldn't have been much better for Les Jepsen.

When the 7-footer emerged from the locker room just minutes after his team's Prime Time League basketball game Wednesday, a sea of reporters and a former teammate were there to greet him.

Brad Lohaus, Milwaukee Bucks forward and former Iowa player, gave Jepsen the news. The former Iowa center had just been drafted by the Golden State Warriors of the National Basketball Association.

The Warriors made Jepsen the first pick of the second round and the 28th pick overall in the 1990 NBA Draft. The Bowbells, N.D., native will be coached by Don Nelson, an Iowa graduate and three-time MVP of the Hawkeye basketball team.

"I'm excited, really," the 245-pound center said. "I'm anxious to get a new challenge. College is over and now it's time to move to a different level."

"I just wanted a guaranteed shot with a team. I've been working all my life for an opportunity and now I get an opportunity."

The news wasn't as good for former teammate Matt Bullard. Although nine teams had 23.5 million: Can Canseco foot the bill?

Far be it from me to tell anyone, let alone the world champion Oakland Athletics, how to spend their money. But All-Star outfielder Jose Canseco's new contract seems excessive.

Earlier in the week, the A's and Canseco announced that they had reached an agreement on a record five-year, $23.5 million contract. I can only assume the A's know what they're doing, but $25 million?

No one will deny that Canseco has MVP-caliber talent. Or that, barring injury or arrest, he will be one of baseball's brightest and brashiest stars of the '90s.

Canseco is blessed with that rare combination of power, consistency and speed. He was baseball's first 40-40 man (home runs and stolen bases in a season), and often says that he will be baseball's first 50-50 player.

Don't bet against him. The A's aren't.

But even since 1976, when baseball's first free agents signed for beaucoup bucks, major league baseball's owners have gambled millions of dollars on young men like Canseco.

Sometimes their gambles have paid handsome dividends. Despite their hefty price tags, players like Reggie Jackson, Catfish Hunter, Don Baylor, Fred Lynn and Dave Winfield turned out to be sound investments.

Other free agents, countless others, have been pure busts. Does anyone remember Disco Danny Ford? How about Bill Campbell or Don Aase? Does the name Lee Lacy ring a bell? I didn't think so.

"But Jose Canseco," you're saying to yourself, "is a blue-chip commodity. Surely he'll produce and bring a healthy return."

Don't be so certain. Money, serious money, has strange effects on people. Among other things, it tests their mettle, their character. It changes expectations and perceptions.

Not coincidentally, many of baseball's recent top money men have struggled on the field.

During the off-season, the three most sought-after free agents were the San Diego Padres' relief pitcher Mark Davis, the Montreal Expos' pitcher Mark Langston and the Milwaukee Brewers' center fielder Robin Yount. All three have had poor seasons to date.

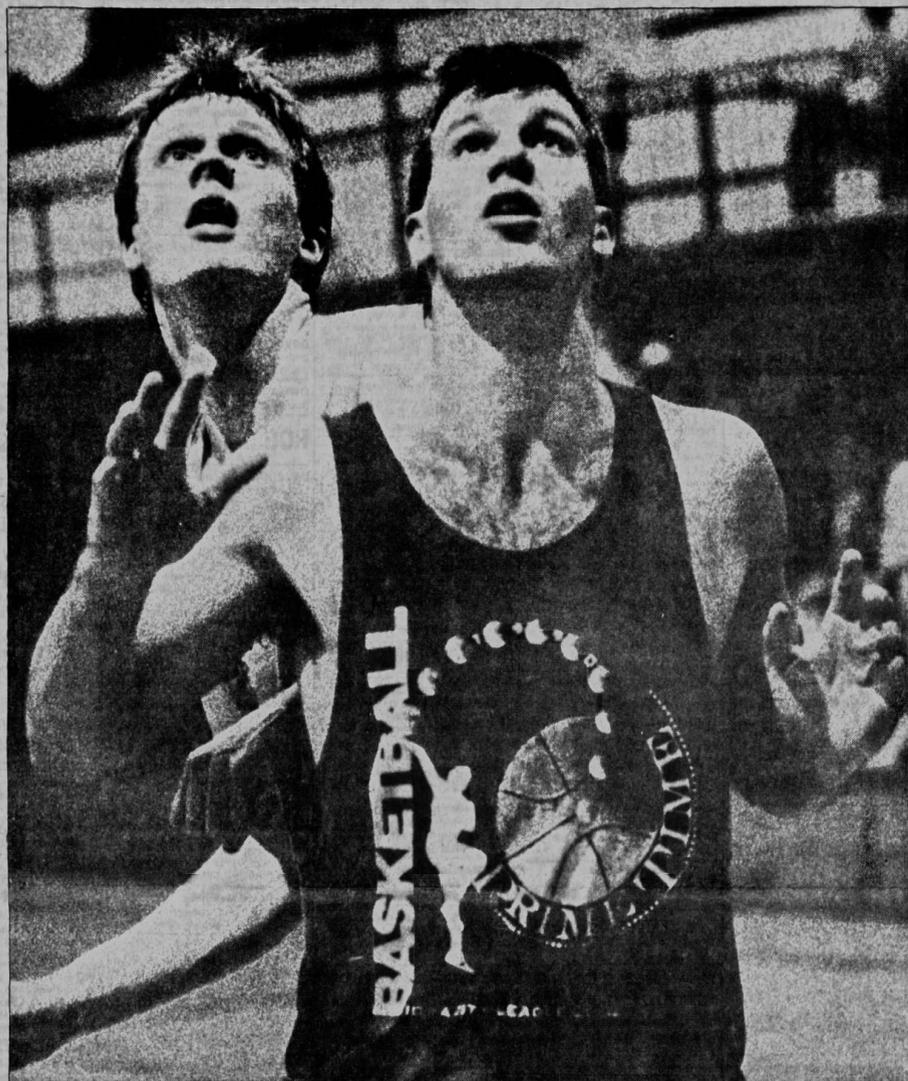

After winning the 1989 National League Cy Young Award, Davis signed a $13 million, four-year pact with the Kansas City Royals. Davis, who had 44 saves for the Padres last year, is 1-3 with a 4.91 ERA and five saves. That's roughly $260,000 per save.

I predict that Davis won't win the Cy this year. In fact, it is rumored that Davis will be traded back to San Diego before the season is over.

Montreal's Langston signed with the already pitching-rich California Angels, for the then-record sum of $16 million over five seasons. This season, Langston is sporting a 4-7 record in 14 starts.

He is, however, among AL leaders

The Airliner's Doug Moeller couldn't keep Les Jepsen from getting the good news. Jepsen was told immediately after his Prime Time game that he was drafted by the Golden State Warriors.

Chicago, Oakland change places in AL West

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP)—Chicago moved into first place ahead of Oakland in the American League West on Wednesday as Ron Kittle hit two home runs to help the White Sox beat the California Angels 5-2 for their seventh straight victory.

The White Sox departed for their West Coast trip trailing the A's by four games but return to Chicago four percentage points ahead after sweeping three-game series from Oakland and California. The last time the White Sox were first this late in the season was 1983 when they won the division.

Tigers 5, Athletics 4

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP)—Mike Heath led off the ninth with his second homer of the season as Detroit broke a three-game losing streak and knocked Oakland out of first place in the AL West for the first time since April 11.

Oakland is four percentage points behind the Chicago White Sox.

Giants 8, Reds 3

CINCINNATI (AP)—Don Robinson, pitching with just two days of rest, allowed four hits in eight innings, and Matt Williams homered and drove in four runs as the San Francisco Giants beat the Cincinnati Reds 8-3 Wednesday.

Cubs 5, Expos 3

CHICAGO (AP)—Ryne Sandberg, batting .422 with 17 homers and 29 RBIs in his last 29 games, had two home runs and a single as Chicago beat Montreal.

Sandberg, two hits short of 1,500 for his career, homered off Kevin Gross (8-5) in the first inning and hit another solo shot off reliever Bill Sampen in the seventh. It was the 16th time Sandberg has homered twice in a game. His 43 homers since last year's All-Star break are the most in the majors.

Pirates 5, Phillies 3

PITTSBURGH (AP)—Wally Backman's two-out RBI double in the seventh inning scored rookie Orlando Merced with the go-ahead run as Pittsburgh handed Philadelphia its sixth straight loss.

Braves 4, Dodgers 0

ATLANTA (AP)—John Smoltz pitched a three-hitter for his second shutout this season and first victory ever over Los Angeles, and Greg Olson homered and scored twice for Atlanta.

Rangers 9, Twins 2

MINNEAPOLIS (AP)—Nolan Ryan allowed one run and six hits in seven innings to earn his 296th career victory as Texas beat Minnesota to snap a four-game losing.

Ryan (7-4) has allowed only six earned runs in his last four starts, beginning with his sixth career no-hitter on June 18 against Oakland. Ryan's three strikeouts left him three short of fanning 100 batters in a season for the 22nd time, a major-league record he presently shares with Don Sutton.

Brewers 5, Yankees 4

NEW YORK (AP)—Dave Parker reached 2,500 career hits and Rob Deer hit a two-run homer to help Milwaukee and left-hander Bill Krueger beat New York.

Parker, an 18-year veteran, picked up No. 2,500 with a single in the second inning, singled during the Brewers' two-run fourth and was on base with his third single when Deer hit his 13th homer to make it 5-1 in the sixth.

Coleman top pick; shooters dominate

By Bill Barnard
The Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP)—Derrick Coleman went to the New Jersey Nets with the first pick before the NBA draft took on a shooter's look Wednesday night.

Coleman, a 6-foot-10, 235-pound All-American forward, was the all-time leading rebounder in collegiate history and Syracuse's all-time leading scorer with 2,143 points. He was a starter for four years for the Orangemen and was almost universally considered the best NBA prospect.

With Coleman taken, big men became a scarce commodity. Of the remaining 26 picks in the first round, 13 were guards or perimeter players.

Seattle took 6-3 Oregon State point guard Gary Payton and Denver followed with LSU's 6-1 Chris Jackson, a 29-point scorer in his two years in college. Not since Detroit took Isiah Thomas with the No. 2 pick in 1981 has a guard been taken as high as Payton.

Then came 6-7 Dennis Scott of Georgia Tech, an outstanding perimeter shooter who was taken by Orlando, and 6-5 guard Kendall Gill of Illinois, selected by Charlotte.

The string of shooters was broken when Minnesota selected 7-0 Felton Spencer of Louisville and the Sacramento Kings grabbed 6-7 Player of the Year Lionel Simmons of La Salle with the first of their record four first-round picks.

The Kings later selected guard Travis Mays of Texas at No. 14; 7-0 center Duane Causwell of Temple with the 18th pick; and forward Anthony Bonner of St. Louis at No. 20.

The seventh pick was the Kings' own after they finished with a 23-59 record this season. The other picks were acquired in trades with Dallas and Utah. The Mavericks sent the 14th and 18th picks to the Kings in a deal that brought Rodney McCray to Dallas.

After Simmons, three more players were chosen. Bo Kimble, the nation's leading scorer at Loyola Marymount with a 35.3 average, was selected by the Los Angeles Clippers, who can use him as insurance while Ron Harper recovers from an injured knee. Willie Burton, a 6-7 forward in college, then was grabbed by Miami, which acquired the ninth and 15th pick from Denver in exchange for the No. 3 selection.

Atlanta, which had switched first-round picks with Golden State earlier in the day, then took Michigan point guard Rumeal Robinson.

Robinson was the first of three Michigan players taken in the first round matching the most ever from one college team in the same year.

Forward Loy Vaught was selected by the Clippers with the 13th pick and forward Terry Mills was Milwaukee's selection at No. 16.

Indiana had three players taken in the first round after its undefeated national championship season in 1976 — Scott May, Bobby Wilkerson and Quinn Buckner. UCLA matched that in 1979 when David Greenwood, Roy Hamilton and Brad Holland were chosen in the first round.

The Nets, whose 17-65 record was the worst in the NBA last season, haven't had a first-rate first-round selection since Sleepy Floyd in 1982.

Coleman was considered the top prospect in the draft, but questions about his attitude left some doubt the Nets would take him.

"I'm a warm, loving kind of guy," Coleman said. "I think most guys from the inner city get a bad rep. At Syracuse, a lot was blown out of proportion."

Coleman said he expects to be a starter.

"They need a couple of players to help them out," Coleman said of the Nets. "Hopefully, I'm one of those."

Payton was thrilled to be taken by the SuperSonics.

Canseco's salary — Major League cash

By Tim Liotta
The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Jose Canseco became baseball's first $5 million man today when he signed a five-year, $23.5 million contract with the Oakland Athletics.

The announcement of the deal was delayed 45 minutes as the two sides worked out the final details.

Canseco's salary will increase every year during the contract, which runs from 1991 through 1995. He will earn a base pay of $2.8 million in 1991, $3.6 million in '92, $4.1 million in '93, $4.4 million in '94 and $5.1 million in '95.

The deal also includes a signing bonus of $3.5 million, which will boost his pay this season to $5.5 million.

The contract makes Canseco the game's highest-paid player, topping the five-year, $19.6 million deal Don Mattingly signed in April with the New York Yankees.

"This new contract reflects Jose's ability as a player and the dramatic change in the marketplace since December of last year," said Oakland general manager Sandy Alderson.

Canseco, the only player ever to hit 40 homers and steal 40 bases in the same season, called the contract "a great win for the

Becker, Graf advance to 3rd round

Defending champion Boris Becker files through the air to return a shot from Australia's Wally Masur during their second round match on Wimbledon's grass Wednesday.

By Rob Gloster
The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Calm returned to Wimbledon today. After a day of uproar and upsets, top players led by defending champions Boris Becker and Steffi Graf moved into the third round with relative ease.

Monica Seles and Jennifer Capriati, two of the prime teen-age challengers for Graf's title, also advanced but had to overcome second-set rough spots.

Becker especially seemed to jerk the tournament back to normal, a day after seven seeds — including three-time champion John McEnroe — were eliminated in the first round.

The men's second seed had trouble with his serve early against Australian Wally Masur. But by the middle of the second set he looked like the player who has won here three times, diving after shots and sending rocket volleys into the corners to win 6-7, 6-2, 6-3, 6-2.

Graf, going for her third consecutive Wimbledon title, followed Becker onto Centre Court and beat Meredith McGrath of the United States 6-3, 6-0 in 44 minutes. Graf lost only six points in the second set and closed the match in love on two service winners.

Seles, the hottest player in tennis and the newly crowned French Open champion, overcame some second-set trouble to defeat American Camille Benjamin 6-3, 7-5.

Benjamin overpowered the third-seeded Seles at times with her serve-and-volley game but simply lacked the consistency to win. She led the second set 4-1, 40-0 but Seles, the 16-year-old French open champion, came to wrap up her 34th consecutive victory in straight sets.

The 14-year-old Capriati, seeded 12th, beat Julie Halard of France
