Durenberger is denounced for violations

Senator must repay $123,000 for funds improperly received

WASHINGTON - The Senate's ethics committee unanimously denounced Sen. Kent 0. Durenberger, R-Minn., saying it found "no evidence" that he broke any rules and ordering him to make restitution for $123,000 in salary and expenses improperly received since 1982.

"There is no evidence that Sen. Durenberger broke any Senate rules," the committee said in a statement. "The fees were for 113 speeches and book signings. The fees were for 113 speeches and book signings.

"The Senate's ethics committee has considered the matter and found no evidence that Sen. Durenberger violated any Senate rules." The committee's statement noted that Durenberger had made speeches to raise money for the Republican National Committee and for reelection campaigns, but that he had not returned the fees.

"The committee concluded that Sen. Durenberger violated Senate rules and that he should return the fees. He has agreed to do so." The committee also said that Durenberger had made speeches to raise money for the Republican National Committee and for reelection campaigns, but that he had not returned the fees.

Rapid climate shifts have Iowa precedent

The Daily Iowan

"If you find that weather patterns change too fast to react so that you can't move or adjust to them, this can result in long-term, systemic, long-term and abundant climate change," said Baker. "We've seen a rapid shift from moist forest to hot, dry prairie."

The records show that about 8,000 years ago, Iowa was covered by deciduous forest, which was replaced by spruce forest about 12,000 years ago. The records also show that the area has grown warmer and drier over time, with the last 3,500 years of record showing a significant increase in temperature and decrease in precipitation.

"What Baker found in examining the pollen was that the area has grown warmer and drier over time, with the last 3,500 years of record showing a significant increase in temperature and decrease in precipitation," said Baker. "This is not a new phenomenon, but it is a very significant one."
Officials are reluctant to identify a woman or an abortion clinic involved in the case because state law makes it a crime to disclose such information without the permission of the woman involved. In a statement, the Associated Press said, "The woman who had the abortion is a minor." The AP cited a legal precedent in which a minor's right to confidentiality was protected. The AP said it was not aware of any other cases in which the Associated Press has been ordered to disclose such information.

The AP also noted that the case is the first in which the Associated Press has been ordered to reveal the identity of a woman who had an abortion, following a similar order in the case of an anonymous woman who had an abortion in 1995. In that case, the AP had refused to reveal the woman's identity, citing concerns about privacy and confidentiality. The AP had been ordered to reveal the identity of the woman in a lawsuit filed by the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue.

Manuel Puig in 1974

Puig was born in 1928 in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and grew up in the wealthy neighborhood of La Boca. His father, a successful engineer, and his mother, a musician, introduced him to the arts from a young age.

Puig's first novel, "El laberinto del fauno" ("The Labyrinth of the Faun"), was published in 1969. The novel tells the story of a young boy who discovers a hidden entrance to a secret world beneath his house. The novel was a critical and commercial success, and Puig became an overnight sensation.

Puig went on to write several more novels, including "El beso de la mujer araña" ("The Kiss of the Spider Woman"), which was adapted into a Pulitzer Prize-winning Broadway play and a four-time Academy Award-winning film. Puig also wrote plays, screenplays, and essays, and was known for his controversial and provocative writing style.

Puig was a vocal critic of the Argentinian military junta and its human rights abuses, and his writing often explored themes of politics, sexuality, and identity.

Puig died on September 13, 1990, in Buenos Aires, Argentina, at the age of 62. He left behind a legacy of groundbreaking and influential work that continues to be studied and celebrated today.
OPEC begins talks on raising crude oil price

By David Jacobson

PARIS — OPEC ministers began a two-day meeting Wednesday aimed at settling the price of crude oil and agreed to cut production by about 2.2 million barrels a day, a move that could lead to higher prices for gasoline at the pump nationally.

The cut was seen as a way to stem a recent slide in oil prices that has triggered concerns about lower revenues for OPEC countries, which depend on oil exports for more than half of their national income.

The agreement was reached at the end of a meeting of the OPEC Joint Ministerial Monitoring Committee, which is responsible for overseeing the compliance of member countries with production targets.

The committee was formed in 1999 to monitor the implementation of production cuts agreed upon by OPEC member countries, and its role has expanded to include assessing the impact of changes in production levels on prices.

At the meeting, the ministers agreed to maintain the current production level of 8.5 million barrels a day, which is 2.2 million barrels below the level agreed upon in 1999.

The reduction would affect several countries, including Saudi Arabia, Iran, Iraq, and Libya, which are significant producers in OPEC.

The agreement comes amid growing concern about the global economy, with some analysts predicting a recession in the United States and Europe.

"We will raise the reference price," said Mohammed Sanad, Saudi oil minister.

"It is a step forward," said a senior OPEC official.

Analysts say the move could have significant implications for the global oil market, as OPEC is a major producer and its actions can shape prices.

"It's a vote of confidence in OPEC's ability to manage the market," said a senior energy analyst.

The move is seen as a way to stabilize prices and prevent a further decline in oil revenues, which have fallen in recent months due to lower demand and increased supply.

"We need to stabilize prices and support the market," said a member of the OPEC Joint Ministerial Monitoring Committee.

The OPEC production cut is expected to boost oil prices by about $5 a barrel, according to some analysts.

"It's a positive development," said a senior energy official.

However, some analysts believe the move may not be enough to stabilize prices, as demand is expected to remain weak in the near term.

"I'm not optimistic," said a senior energy analyst.

The move is also likely to be met with resistance from some OPEC members, who may see it as a way to protect their own interests at the expense of others.

"It's a self-serving move," said a senior energy analyst.

The meeting was held on the sidelines of the annual OPEC conference in Vienna, where member countries are expected to review their production targets and discuss other issues.

The conference is scheduled to take place on Thursday and Friday.

"We will discuss the current situation and look to the future," said a senior OPEC official.

The meeting is expected to be attended by around 20 OPEC members, who will discuss a range of issues, including the impact of the recent oil price decline on their economies.
Louisiana governor vetoes bill requiring warning labels

BATON ROUGE, La. — Gov. Buddy Roemer vetoed a bill Wednesday that would have required warning labels on recordings deemed to promote such behavior as sex, drug abuse and violence.

Movies and recording industry officials opposed legislation deemed to promote such behavior as sex, drug abuse and violence.

A restoration of the right of artistic freedom of expression, which is the foundation of our nation, and the need of parents to select material for their children, is paramount.

She said her organization and members of the PCA had worked with the legislation, which was introduced by Rep. Earl Landry, D-New Orleans, to prevent the loss of jobs and a loss of tax revenue.

"The legislation has only served to add more onerous restrictions that have been imposed on the industry," she said. "This has created a lot of friction with state legislators and is not a productive way to resolve the issue."

The legislation would have required warning labels on recordings that promote such behaviors as sex, drug abuse and violence.

Although Roemer vetoed the bill, he was concerned that the legislation could be re-introduced.

"As far as I'm concerned, it's not in the best interest of the industry to develop a system that is designed to promote such behavior as sex, drug abuse and violence," Roemer said. "This is a very important matter to us, and we are committed to ensuring that the film industry is not regulated in a way that will prevent it from producing the kind of content that the public demands and expects."
