UI given extension to consider appealing harassment case

By Andy Brownstein
The Daily Iowan

The harassment case of Dr. Jean Jew will linger on for at least another two weeks, after a federal judge on Wednesday granted the UI an extension to decide whether to appeal the ruling.

The deadline for appeal, originally scheduled for today, has been pushed back to Oct. 15. U.S. District Court Judge Harold Viotor, who ruled on the case last month, gave his approval after rejecting the attorney general's initial request for a 30-day extension.

"Our request simply states that we want to give both parties time to negotiate while the UI and the Board of Regents decide whether or not to appeal," said Bill Roach, a spokesman for the attorney general's office, which represented the state in the case.

In last month's decision, Viotor ruled that the UI was "ambivalent" to Jew's claims that she had been sexually harassed by her colleagues for over a decade and that these views kept her from receiving a fair tenure review. Viotor ordered the UI to promote Jew, an associate professor in the anatomy department, to full professor and to pay her more than $50,000 in back pay and benefits.

The move for extension represents a departure from the attorney general's original expectations for the case. Deputy Attorney General Gordon Allen said in an interview last month that he doubted the UI would take long to decide.

"The university will want to put this behind them and make a quick decision," Allen said. "This will not be a last-day decision."

But UI Vice President Peter Nathan indicated Monday that "several intricate legal matters are constraining" UI President Hunter Rawlings' decision on the matter. Nathan and other administrators noted the complexity of the case.

Today's extension, which called for negotiations between the two parties, did little to elucidate the UI's stand on the issue. Allen declined to discuss what the nature of these negotiations will be, and Jew's attorney did not want to second-guess the UI's motives.

"If two weeks' additional time means that we can bring justice to Jean Jew, then we welcome it," said Carolyn Chalmers, a lawyer with a Minneapolis-based See Appeal, Page 4A

Bush unloads reserve oil to steady prices

'No justification' for high costs; 5 million barrels of oil for sale

By Tom Raum
The Associated Press

CHICAGO — The White House, claiming there was "no justification" for the recent run-up in oil and gasoline prices, announced Wednesday that President Bush had decided to sell 5 million barrels of crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

The decision to tap the nation's oil reserve as a cannon shot against soaring prices was announced by White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

Fitzwater said the decision to put 5 million barrels on the market was a "test" and the president would take "additional steps to stabilize energy prices."

The reserve contains 590 million barrels of crude oil. It has never been used apart from a 1 million barrel test sale in 1985 that was not aimed at influencing prices.

Fitzwater said he expected prices to decline under the government's sale, but he did not say by how much. Prices have jumped to about $39 a barrel from $21 before Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

Fitzwater said Bush was taking the action to head off "those who might seek profit by subverting the sanctions" against Iraq.

"There is sufficient oil to meet current needs," Fitzwater said. "Oil markets have simply not taken into account additional production coming on stream."

Industry experts have estimated that production in other countries has restored about two-thirds of the 4.8 million daily barrels of oil production removed from world markets by Iraq's takeover of Kuwait on Aug. 2 and the world embargo against Iraqi-Kuwaiti oil.

The United States uses more than 17 million barrels a day, about half of it imported.

Fitzwater quoted Bush as saying there was "no justification for the intensive and unwarranted speculation in oil futures" that has driven the price to about $39 a barrel in the United States.

Fitzwater said this was the first time that the oil reserves, which have been held in salt domes along the Texas and Louisiana coasts, have been tapped for usage since they were established in 1975.

He offered no estimate of how much prices would decline as a result of the sales, but he did say,

"I would expect it would have a downward impact."

"Should the oil situation deteriorate," Fitzwater said, the president was "prepared to bring additional oil on the market" from the reserve.

While insisting there is no oil shortage in the United States "at this time," Fitzwater said, "this test is to make sure the system works."

The spokesman said, "Frankly, there is no way to justify" price increases that sent oil soaring from $24 a barrel to $39 a barrel over the past week.

"We need to make it clear that we do have oil available to put on the market," Fitzwater said.

In remarks prepared for a political fund-raising dinner, Bush said his action was needed "because it is especially important that America is economically healthy and militarily strong."

Bush may relinquish gains tax position

By Alan Fram
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush may be willing to drop his insistence for a cut in the capital gains tax, Republican congressmen said Wednesday, a demand that has been the major obstacle to a budget deal.

But the apparent softening of Bush's position was revealed on a day when Bush and congressional Democrats had their most withering public flareup over the talks in weeks.

The two sides accused each other of endangering their stalled bargaining, just five days before disruptive cuts in government services will be imposed if the negotiations fail.

Bush said nothing about his reported change in his capital gains stance as he campaigned for Republican candidates in Ohio.

"The hangup is with the Democrats," he said, accusing them of refusing to do their part to cut the deficit.

"If and when the ax falls, the Democratic Congress knows that it will be held accountable," he said. "And I will take that message to every state in the union. It is their fault."

He also said Democrats "have not come forward with a package" at the talks, a remark that touched off a Democratic uproar.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, and House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said Democrats have made several offers in recent bargaining sessions.

"To begin a series of charges or countercharges... at this stage is not helpful," Foley said. "It is damaging to the talks, though we're determined it not be critically damaging."

Mitchell said the president must have been "badly misinformed" to have made the comment and called it "highly misleading and damaging."

Nurse reveals bout with HIV infection

By Marc Wallace
The Daily Iowan

After several years of anonymity, Registered Nurse Barb Fassbinder told of her bout with HIV infection during a press conference at UI Hospital and Clinics yesterday.

Fassbinder, a UI graduate, was the first of three health-care workers in the U.S. to contract HIV in the workplace through a medical procedure rather than a needle stick. She said that she hopes by coming forth she can help other health-care workers.

"It happens to real people, with real kids and real families," said Fassbinder.

During the summer of 1986, while working in the emergency room of Memorial Hospital in Prairie du Chien, Wis., Fassbinder came in contact with a patient with AIDS. The patient was brought in during the early morning hours suffering cardiac arrest and had difficulty breathing.

After an unsuccessful attempt to insert an arterial catheter, Fassbinder applied pressure with a gauze pad to the insertion site to stop the bleeding. Although her hands were chapped from gardening, Fassbinder did not wear gloves and had to wait 20 minutes to wash away the blood that had seeped through the pad.

The patient died, and an autopsy established the cause of death as complications from AIDS. Within two weeks, Fassbinder began feeling fatigued, nauseated and feverish but thought it was just the flu.

She recovered and donated blood to the Red Cross in December 1986. After testing her blood with enzyme-immuno assay (EIA) and Western-blot methods, the Red Cross informed Fassbinder that her sample was positive for the HIV antibody.

"If this can happen to me in a small rural hospital in the Midwest in the middle of the night in 1986, it could certainly happen to anyone in the 1990s," Fassbinder said.

The State of Wisconsin Department of Health conducted an investigation that concluded Fassbinder came in contact with HIV through the AIDS-infected patient. Her husband tested negative and had been her only sexual contact. Her children are also not infected.

The Center for Disease Control in Atlanta used this and the other two cases to push for "Universal Blood and Body Fluid Precautions," in which all patients are considered potentially infectious.

College expenses continue to rise

By Lee Witang
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A year at college will cost an average of 5 percent to 8 percent more this fall, a slight lessening in the decade-long spell of higher education inflation, according to an annual survey released Wednesday.

But some officials fear that encouraging news may end soon, especially at colleges in oil-sensitive northern states if the overall inflation rate worsens and a recession occurs.

The survey by the College Board also found that Massachusetts Institute of Technology is the nation's priciest college this fall: an estimated $22,945, counting tuition, fees, room and board, books and supplies, transportation, and other expenses.

According to the survey, fixed charges at four-year private institutions — including tuition, fees, and room and board — average $13,544, an 8 percent increase from last year's $12,557. A year ago, such charges rose 9 percent.

At four-year public universities, fixed costs including room and board average $4,970, up 5 percent from $4,715 the previous year.

At two-year private colleges, fixed costs including room and board average $8,484, up 7 percent from $7,912 last year. Tuition and fees at two-year public institutions average $884, up 5 percent from last year's $841. Few such institutions provide room and board.

"That's progress, though not dramatic," said Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Graduate financial aid hurt by low enrollment

By Jessica Davidson

With general UI enrollment down, funding for graduate student financial aid is suffering, and minority graduate recruiting has been hardest hit, according to Vice President for Academic Affairs Peter Nathan.

"Around late spring (last year), we found we had good candidates, but we had run out of money for them," Nathan said. "And the problem was most acute in minority recruiting."

Student Financial Aid director Mark Warner said the lack of financial aid for minority graduate students stems from two other problems: a larger applicant pool and increasing general costs — such as tuition, room and board, and personal expenses.

"We're trying to stretch the same amount of dollars over a larger number of qualifying applicants and a larger need. The dollars aren't keeping up," Warner said.

Nathan said budgeting sufficient amounts of financial aid has "always been an issue."

"The problem is not in attracting good students; it's in supporting them," he said.

In fact, students who qualified after funding ran out are still technically being "awarded" financial aid, Warner said, but they're not actually receiving any money.

Program stresses safety for students

By Stacy Williamson
The Daily Iowan

Learn to protect yourself! This was the message the audience received at the Whistlestop/Home Safe Home program held in the lobby of Burge Residence Hall Wednesday evening.

Residents of Burge gathered to hear people from the UI Office of Public Safety and the Rape Victim Advocacy Program speak about what students can do to ensure their safety.

Those attending were encouraged to take pamphlets detailing precautions students should take to protect themselves. Whistles provided by the UI Student Assembly were also given away for students to use to alert others when they feel endangered.

Juli Gumbiner, client service coordinator for RVAP, and Mary Jo Lessmeier, a detective with the Office of Public safety, both stressed that students need to make their personal safety their highest priority.

She focused on the recent prowler incidents reported in Burge and Currier and said the most important thing students can do to protect themselves in the halls is to keep their doors locked at all times.

A locked door is the best deterrent for incidents like those that occurred in Burge and Currier, Lessmeier said.

"Criminals are lazy opportunists," she said, adding that most offenders look for the 'easy' victim, the one that is the most available.

"Opportunists will leave if you make it difficult for them to get in," said Lessmeier.

"Most assaults are through unlocked doors. (Offenders) will try your door, and if it's locked they'll go down three doors and go in that unlocked door."

She advised residents to make sure they keep their doors locked even during the day. She said a resident was sexually assaulted in her room by an unknown assailant at 1:20 p.m. in an incident that occurred in a UI hall in a previous year.

Additional safety tips include:

- Don't prop outside or fire escape doors open.
- Don't let strangers into the building.
- Lock room doors even if you're just going down the hall.
- Call for help immediately if you hear or see anything suspicious.

■ In the event of an emergency, call 911 right away. Call the resident assistant on duty second.

Lessmeier said the program was designed to inform, not to frighten students.

"Don't get paranoid — that's self-defeating," she said. "Just be concerned with your safety."

Board ratifies state funds for program

By Heidi Pederson

After a public hearing Tuesday, the Iowa City School Board approved a new plan to finance the Instructional Support Program for the 1991-92 school year.

The new plan is similar to the current enrichment tax it replaces, except the instructional support levy includes money from the state — lightening the load for local taxpayers.

"Twenty percent of this (new) tax comes from the state, where all of the enrichment tax came from taxpayers," Superintendent Barbara Grohe said.

The enrichment tax was a combination of property and income surtaxes designed to garner up to $2.3 million a year for the district.

According to Assistant Superintendent Al Azinger, the support levy will be used for the same purpose as the enrichment tax — to help pay general expenses.

In other business, Azinger announced a plan to reduce class sizes in order to meet a wide range of student needs, such as advanced foreign language classes.

The proposed teacher-student ratios will be implemented slowly, said Grohe. She said concerned parents were probably expecting too much too soon.

"When the ratio was lowered, people thought class sizes would go all the way down to the ratio level in one fell swoop," she said.

"That's not going to happen. It's going to be a gradual process."

Boardmembers also looked at a possible model for a district strategic planning program. Grohe presented a program that has proven successful in other districts similar in size and scope to Iowa City.

While not disapproving of the model, boardmember Sally Staley expressed concern about bringing in an outside facilitator.

"I'm not sure we should pay someone outside to do this when we have people in the community who are professionals," Staley said.

But boardmember Connie Champion supported the use of an outsider. In order to get people to speak honestly, a facilitator without his or her own agenda would be needed, she said. The issue will be discussed further at the Oct. 9 meeting.

Also Tuesday, Azinger was named interim Equity Coordinator, a position designed to organize and manage educational equality in the district. Applications for the permanent position are currently being sought.

Iowa State Bank and Trust presented a check for $22,666 to the school board as part of funding needed to renew a federal modernization grant.

Ellen Widiss was elected new board president and Craig Willis will serve as vice president. Champion, Betsy Hawtrey and Staley were sworn in to begin three-year terms. Jay Christensen-Szlanski retired after three years as a boardmember.

IRS issues warning about deduction discrepancies

Over the next few months, people failing to report various income or property claim mortgage interest deductions on their 1988 federal income tax returns will be receiving letters from the Internal Revenue Service.

The letters are part of a computer program matching financial information sent to the IRS by banks and other businesses with amounts reported on 1988 tax returns.

Letter recipients must reply within 30 days, and the IRS urges them to check tax returns to see if they agree with the changes listed.

If the information matches, each recipient should sign the statement on the last page of the letter and return it to the IRS with a check for the amount due. Iowa City's last big-screen movie theater will close its doors this spring after having been sold to neighboring First National Bank.

'Death Warrant' not just a movie for Astro

Biggest screen in IC closes this spring; moviegoers not exactly 'wild' about it

By Jim Snyder
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City movie lovers will soon have to say goodbye to the big screen.

The Astro Theatre, 212 E. Washington St., home of the largest movie screen in town, will close its doors for good this spring. The Astro building has housed a movie theater for more than 70 years.

The theater was sold Aug. 1 to First National Bank, 204 E. Washington St., according to Jim Sangster, senior vice president of the bank. The bank will expand into the space vacated by the theater but is uncertain of what the area will be used for, Sangster said. Carol Seydel, one of three previous owners of the Astro, said she and her two sisters, Mary Etta White and Joan Morrison, had inherited the building.

"The building is too narrow to be split into two screens like most theaters are doing now," Seydel said. "The bank approached us and we thought it was the wisest thing to sell."

Central States Theaters, a Des Moines based company, has rented the space from Seydel and her sisters to run the Astro. The company has been trying to find an alternate location for the theater in the area, according to Kim Davis, city manager of the Astro, Campus and Englert theaters.

If a new theater is built it will be a multi-theater complex with as many as four screens, Davis said. He added the new theater is probably "not going to be that close to campus" and may even be in Coralville.

screens. "Those small screens don't do much for me," Clark said. "I think they are kind of bogus."

But according to Davis, single movie houses like the Astro often lose money, because a show that does poorly at the box office can tie up a theater for weeks.

Davis explained that many movie theaters are forced to sign contracts establishing a minimum amount of time that a movie must run.

Single movie houses may not be very appealing to theater management, but many UI students will miss the Astro.

"I've been there a couple times, and I really liked the ambience," said UI junior Keith Myers. "It gave me kind of a feeling of nostalgia — just one big screen and no cluster."

UI senior Jeff Messmer agreed: "I will definitely miss the big screen."

It gave me kind of a feeling of nostalgia.

Will the big screen be missed? "Of course," said UI junior Amy Jo Wieland. "If you have a VCR, it's pretty much the same as watching a movie on one of the multiscreen theaters."

Local lawn-care companies accused of false advertising

By Aziz Gökdemir
The Daily Iowan

Three lawn-care companies operating in the Iowa City area have been brought to the attention of the Iowa Attorney General by the Urban Pesticide Committee of Environmental Advocates Inc., who believe the companies have included false and misleading claims in their advertisements.

Environmental Advocates — a local nonprofit organization with 300 members — held a press conference at Market Square Park in Iowa City Tuesday to make the complaints public.

The site was picked because of its proximity to Horace Mann Elementary School, where children could be heard playing in the background.

Recently, a court in New York ruled that Chemlawn Services Corporation must stop making claims the court found to be false and misleading. These claims stated that Chemlawn products were safe and nontoxic.

"We believe that the people of Iowa deserve the same protection which has been afforded the people of New York," said EA member Jo Ann Beard. Her signature appears under the Sept. 7 complaints filed against Chemlawn and two other companies, Spring Green Lawn-care and All American Turf Beauty Inc.

The attorney general's office said Wednesday it received the complaints "some time significantly after" that date and is presently evaluating the complaints. The companies have not been contacted.

John Chaney, the owner of Spring Green Lawn-care's Iowa City franchise, said he doubts anything will come out of the investigation. "This kind of thing has happened before," he said.

But EA is not taking the matter lightly.

"These products are designed to kill living organisms, and clearly children, pets and wildlife fit that category," said Beard.

An estimated 70 million pounds of pesticides are being applied every year to urban landscapes, according to EA member Amy Brophy-Steinkraus.

According to the U.S. General Accounting Office's March 1990 "Report on Lawn-care Pesticides," "Currently, these pesticides are being applied in large amounts without complete knowledge of their safety."

Under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act, the Environmental Protection Agency is required to evaluate the risks and benefits of a proposed pesticide before it is registered for use. However, the EPA has no authority over safety claims made by the companies. Furthermore, it is still in the preliminary stage in re-assessing the risks of lawn-care pesticides under the reregistration program, which is not scheduled to be completed until 1997.

icides in need of reregistration, but none of them has been reassessed, the GAO report said.

"There are too many unknowns," said Brophy-Steinkraus, mother of two young children. "I don't think the lawn-care industry can assure anyone that their pesticides are not a risk to children."

Could an outright ban of the production of lawn-care pesticides be the ultimate goal?

"Certainly," said Ron Vogel, a spokesman for the EA, after the conference, "but this goal would need a lot of citizens behind it. Right now, we believe the law has been violated and (we) are acting on that."

And Vogel said there are stronger voices to be heard.

Damaged motor causes short-term disturbance

By Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

A burned-out motor on a rooftop fan blew smoke through the ventilation system of a downtown Iowa City building, causing the evacuation of several people around 10:45 a.m. Wednesday.

The Iowa City Fire Department responded after employees of Ragstock, 207 E. Washington St., reported "light smoke" drifting from their air conditioning vent, according to Ray Wombacher, Battalion Chief of the ICFD.

"We evacuated the second floor and Ragstock, but not the third floor because we didn't see any smoke," Wombacher said.

Several workers, who had been in offices of the Paul-Helen Building where the incident occurred, said no alarms went off telling them to exit the building, but rather, they were evacuated through "word of mouth."

Wombacher said a third fire engine was called to the scene for "precautionary reasons" when the source of the smoke wasn't immediately discovered.

Four people were in Ragstock when smoke was first noticed coming out of an air vent. The establishment was evacuated for about two hours while firemen ventilated the store.

Robert Hudson, manager of Ragstock, said the store suffered no damage to its merchandise or structure.

Careers Day links business, UI students

By Susan Stapleton
The Daily Iowan

Business suits and portfolios abounded Wednesday as nearly 2,000 UI students and graduates flocked to the Union Main Lounge for the 14th Annual Careers Day.

More than 140 companies beckoned prospective employees with slick brochures, dazzling displays and company cards. Oscar Mayer Food Corporation gave out free keychains and Domino's Pizza Inc. dispensed free magic slates for refrigerators.

Careers Day is designed to enable students to obtain useful information from employers about majors and courses of study to enhance their career prospects, said Pat Hurley, director of the Business and Liberal Arts Placement Office.

Students had a variety of reasons for entering the Main Lounge doors on Wednesday.

UI senior and economics major Shawn Fier said he attended Careers Day to "see what's out there." Fier plans to attend graduate school after he graduates in December but wanted to learn more about the opportunities available to him in the future.

Sociology major Kim Hoefler came to Careers Day to find out what positions will be available when she graduates and to learn more about the organizations.

"There's not a lot for non-business majors," she said after leaving the lounge. "They should at least recruit more companies to come on campus that aren't in retail or sales."

Senior Jim King agreed and said he felt his biology major didn't interest many prospective employers.

"It really is limiting to liberal arts and physical sciences majors," he said, and a woman next to him added, "Try being a chemistry major."

But Hurley said more businesses than ever are looking at social sciences, humanities, journalism and communication studies majors.

"Forty percent of the employers here are looking at all majors," she said. "If you look at all of the hard sciences too, 60 percent are interested in them."

Business majors didn't feel they had any advantages over other majors.

"There may be more opportunities, but there's more competition for those jobs," said Wade Shriver, a finance major.

Shriver said Careers Day helped him meet people he will be interviewing with through the UI on-campus interview program.

"There's no edge," he said. "They don't take résumés if they're already interviewing through the UI on campus."

Some students went to the event on the advice of their professors.

"We had to go," said junior finance major Scott Griesse, adding that his marketing teacher advised members of his class to expose themselves to more internship positions.

Some underclassmen also attended to get a glimpse of the future. Sophomore Shelley Spicer came especially to visit one booth — Recruit U.S.A. Inc. — to learn more about what she can do with her Japanese language training.

Many students felt apprehensive as they first saw the booths and businesspeople filling the main lounge, but senior Lisa Wedewer said the companies were probably also nervous.

"The pressure's on them to tell about the company and get us interested," Wedewer said, adding that she's confident she'll have many job possibilities because of her accounting major.

Hurley said the Business and Liberal Arts Placement Office will be holding a Graduate and Professional Fair Nov. 1.

Van Allen selected to speak at space symposium in Paris

University News Services

James Van Allen, UI Carver Professor of Physics Emeritus, will deliver an address titled "The Outer Planets and the Heliosphere" Thursday at a European Space Agency (ESA) symposium in Paris. The ESA is a cooperative space research association composed of 13 European nations.

Van Allen says that the symposium will be an opportunity to encourage continued cooperation between U.S. space researchers and their European colleagues. One of the founding fathers of space exploration, Van Allen continues to monitor data sent to Earth from Pioneer 10, the most remote man-made object in the universe, and Pioneer 11, a companion craft. The data may one day help to determine the boundaries of the heliosphere, the region of the sun's influence.

Van Allen is also part of the Galileo Project to explore the planet Jupiter.

The symposium is being held in honor of Reimar Lust, German physicist who is retiring following six years of service as director general of the ESA.

firm. "But we have yet to see that the university has come to terms with what has happened."

Chalmers said she has not yet been notified by the UI or the attorney general's office about possible meetings and added that she would resist any attempts on their part to "plea bargain" Vietor's decision.

"After winning two cases, do they still think we would bargain down?" she asked. "Why in the world would we? So far, they have not identified a single bona fide disagreement or appealable issue in Judge Vietor's ruling."

There was also some disagreement Monday over how Allen brought the application for extension to Vietor.

After making several "courtesy calls" to Chalmers, Allen tried to meet with Vietor ex parte, or without the plaintiffs — a tactic Chalmers termed "extremely unusual."

Allen countered, saying this was standard procedure.

"I'm a little taken aback Ms. Chalmers would say that," Allen said. "She's supposed to be an experienced lawyer. If she would read the rules of civil procedure, she would learn that extensions can be filed this way, and should be filed this way."

Vietor eventually allowed Chalmers to voice her concerns via telephone.

There will be no more extensions after Oct. 12, Allen said. If the UI files for an appeal, the case will go to the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. If it is contested beyond that, the only legal avenue remaining would be the U.S. Supreme Court.

The attorney general's office echoed the sentiments made earlier this week by several UI administrators, who indicated they could decide either way on the case.

"It's up to the university and the regents to decide," Roach said. "I presume they could go either way."

Schwarzenegger delivers verdict on fitness in Iowa

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Hollywood met the heartland Wednesday as actor Arnold Schwarzenegger declared "it's hip to be fit."

Schwarzenegger warned Iowa's schools are not keeping youngsters in shape.

"Schools are cutting down or cutting out on physical fitness programs," the actor and body builder declared. "We have the obligation to keep our youth fit."

Schwarzenegger urged "daily, quality physical education." Iowa schools are required to offer 50 minutes of physical education a week.

"I think we need to increase that," he said. "I wouldn't come to this state if it was a perfect state."

Schwarzenegger, a Republican activist and head of the President's Council on Physical Fitness, toured schools and held a "fitness summit" with state officials.

"In this country, youth fitness is in a rapid decline," said Schwarzenegger, a native of Austria.

He capped his three-hour visit with a rally on the Statehouse steps that took on the trappings of a campaign rally. There were cheerleaders, bands and reporters and television cameras to record the actor mugging with Republican Gov. Terry Branstad.

Budget

workers rallied outside the Capitol at noon to demand a quick solution to the budget crisis. They carried signs reading, "Your furlough begins Nov. 6, Election Day," and "Congress, you do your jobs so we can do ours."

The rally was organized by the American Federation of Government Employees, which represents 700,000 federal workers.

Inside the building, the Senate voted overwhelmingly to apply the spending cuts to the salaries of members of Congress and top executive branch officials, including Vice President Quayle and members of the Cabinet — items now exempt under the Gramm-Rudman budget-cutting law.

After a morning meeting at the White House, GOP lawmakers said Bush was signaling compromise.

Instead of lowered capital gains tax rates, Bush might accept other items he believes would spur the economy, they said.

"He might be willing to look at other alternatives in the growth area," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, the No. 2 House Republican, said the alternatives could include corporate tax breaks designed to encourage research and to prod businesses to operate in ailing urban and rural areas.

The developments occurred as negotiators for the White House and Congress were resuming their search for a package of tax increases and spending cuts that could reduce the deficit by $500 billion over five years.

Soviet religion liberated from political repression

By Alan Cooperman
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet legislature formally ended decades of religious repression on Wednesday, passing a law on freedom of conscience at a time when Soviets are flocking to churches in record numbers.

"Our people suffered to get this law," said Mikhail Kulakov, a leader of the Soviet Union's Seventh Day Adventists, who have been persecuted for evangelical activities.

The law forbids the government from interfering with religious activities, improves the legal status of religious organizations and gives Soviet citizens the right to study religion in homes and in private schools.

The Soviet constitution has long guaranteed freedom of worship, but in the past the Communist Party's ideological opposition to religion as the "opiate of the masses" made that guarantee hollow.

In practice, the government discouraged religious services, closed churches and synagogues, imprisoned religious leaders and preached atheism.

"The most important thing for us is not only that the law is passed, but that it begins to work," said Adolph Shayevich, Moscow's chief rabbi.

Peter Reddaway, an expert on Soviet religion at George Washington University in Washington, said in a telephone interview "there is reason for optimism the law will be respected."

He noted that official tolerance for religion has increased since President Mikhail Gorbachev came to power in 1985. Gorbachev's mother is a practicing member of the Russian Orthodox Church, and last year he acknowledged he was baptized as a child.

"The authorities have been loosening restrictions for a couple of years, and now they're putting it in writing," Reddaway said.

He said Western experts estimate that a quarter of the 285 million Soviet people practice religion, and the number is rising fast.

Among signs of religious revival are increasing numbers of seminarians and the reopening of churches that were used as store-houses, garages and even factories.

Three years ago, Gorbachev held talks with the head of the Russian Orthodox Church, the first such meeting in more than 40 years. In December, he met Pope John Paul II at the Vatican.

Bibles are no longer confiscated at Soviet borders, holiday church services are shown on television and religious publications are flourishing.

On Sunday, a Divine Liturgy was held in the Kremlin's Uspensky Cathedral, the first full service allowed in Russia's most important cathedral since 1918.

Jews are also enjoying greater religious autonomy, including freedom to study Hebrew, which previously had been suppressed.

The Ukrainian Catholic Church, outlawed by Josef Stalin in 1947, has come out from underground and reclaimed some of its property. Under the new law, it can apply to local authorities to regain lawful status.

In Soviet Central Asia, where Muslims predominate, attendance at mosques has risen and copies of the Koran are in heavy demand.

Earthquake hits areas along New Madrid Fault

By Steve Baker
The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — An earthquake shook parts of Illinois, Kentucky, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee and Indiana this morning, but no major damage was reported.

The quake was felt at 8:19 a.m. CDT. It registered 4.6 on the Richter scale and was centered along the New Madrid fault 40 miles north of New Madrid, Mo., according to Don Kelly, a spokesman for the U.S. Geological Survey in Reston, Va.

New Madrid has been the site of some of the greatest earthquakes in U.S. history. The New Madrid fault line runs from Marked Tree, Ark., to southern Illinois and has hundreds of small quakes every year.

Although there were no accounts of damage, the tremor rattled nerves throughout the region, which has been on edge about predictions of a major quake.

Kenneth Rutledge, who lives 16 miles east of Hopkinsville, Ky., said he was sitting in his living room when the quake hit.

"I'm telling you, it moved me," he said. Leonard Nash, who was visiting a farm in Piggott in northeastern Arkansas, said, "You could feel it and hear things moving in the house. It lasted just a few seconds.

"It didn't excite us too much. It wasn't anything that was that frightening. We just looked at each other, said, 'Hey, that was an earthquake' and continued our talking."

Scott Chambers, the director of Emergency Medical Services in Corning, Ark., said he felt the tremor at the local hospital.

"It was about like standing real close to a train track when a train comes by — a little harder than that," he said.

Three or four cataclysmic earthquakes struck the New Madrid fault in the winter of 1811-12 and were felt as far away as Boston. They have been estimated at about 8 on the Richter scale, which didn't exist at the time.

"I don't think this is a precursor to a larger event," Elaine Foust of the U.S. Geological Survey in Nashville said today. "But we could flip a coin and decide. I'm not God; I can't predict."

Nation's report card unfavorable; student performance feeble

By Tamara Henry
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A 20-year summary of the nation's educational achievements released Wednesday by the Education Department shows student performance is low and not improving.

Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos described the report by the National Assessment of Educational Progress — popularly called the Nation's Report Card

— as "a compendium of disappointment" and as "a guide for corrective action."

Cavazos stressed that the study revealed significant discrepancies between what researchers indicate is most effective in improving educational performance and what students report about activities in the classroom and at home.

The report includes data from reading, writing, mathematics, science, U.S. history, civics and geography assessments conducted in 1986 and 1988 and trend results by the congressionally mandated project over the last two decades.

Most of the data show that "our present education performance is low and not improving."

Top educators called for radical changes in the way education takes place in America and for less talk and fewer studies from policymakers.

"The report clearly shows the recent rhetoric from the bully pulpit has had a zero effort on student achievement," said

Gordon Cawletti, executive director of the Association for Supervision and Curriculum.

Key findings of the report were:
■ Students can read at a surface level, getting the gist of material, but do not read analytically or perform well on challenging reading assignments.

■ Few students write well enough to accomplish the purposes of different writing tasks, and most do not communicate effectively.

■ Students' grasp of the four basic arithmetic operations and beginning problem solving is far from universal in elementary and junior-high school; by the time students near high-school graduation, half cannot handle moderately challenging material.

■ Only small proportions of students appear to develop specialized knowledge needed to address science-based problems, and the pattern for falling behind begins in elementary school.

Prosecution presents in Milken trial

By Rick Gladstone
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Prosecutors seeking a stiff prison term for Michael Milken released their long-awaited arguments to the sentencing judge today, urging her to concentrate on the convicted financier's "sweeping and serious crimes."

The 200-page memorandum to U.S. District Judge Kimba Wood exhorted her to pay scant attention to Milken's good deeds and consider evidence that he was a systematic crook.

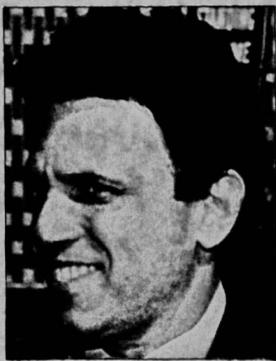

"The court's sentence must demonstrate that persons who possess great wealth and prominence cannot expect that their privilege or their money will insulate them from certain and serious punishment," said the document signed by acting U.S. Attorney Roger Hayes.

It was released a day after Milken's high-powered legal team released their own recommendations to the judge, who is scheduled to sentence Milken on Monday.

The defense lawyers have urged the judge to weigh Milken's generosity and philanthropy and spare him from prison. They suggest alternatively that Milken be ordered to work full-time with youths in the drug-plagued ghettos of Los Angeles.

The most celebrated defendant in the securities fraud scandals that rocked Wall Street in the 1980s, Milken faces a maximum of 28 years in prison on six felony counts, to which he earlier pleaded guilty, including conspiracy, securities fraud and tax violations.

"His good works, however commendable, should not shield him from incarceration," the prosecution memorandum said. "Milken is guilty of sweeping and serious crimes. He should be sentenced to a substantial term of imprisonment."

The prosecution cannot recommend a specific prison term, and Wood has wide discretion in passing sentence. But many legal experts expect the 44-year-old ex-trader of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. junk bonds to do time.

Wood ordered the release of sentencing memorandums earlier this week because of the enormous public interest in the Milken case. But she instructed the two sides to edit the documents to delete incriminating references to Milken associates.

Milken abandoned claims of innocence in April and agreed to a plea bargain that spared him from a much wider indictment and assumes his cooperation with prosecutors in other probes.

But in sentencing, the defense has opposed the prosecution's effort to portray Milken as a conniving criminal mastermind who committed more crimes than he had admitted.

Lead defense attorney Arthur Liman wrote that hundreds of letters from Milken relatives, friends and clients portrayed him as a benevolent capitalist, hard-working family man, and a "person of great conscience."

A young woman without a lobster refuses to join a dinner party. A grandmother remembers her bandit lover. And a painter, with help from Bonnie and Clyde, steals $8,000 in grant money while seeking truth.

Francine Prose, an accomplished novelist, created these characters in "Women and Children First," her first book of short stories, published by Pantheon in 1988. The New York Times called these 12 stories "A meticulously observed collection . . . stories that glow with a burnished wisdom."

Now Prose, a visiting professor at the UI Writers' Workshop, has found her way back to the novel and is working on "Primitive People," her eighth novel, which she says explores " . . . how incredibly horrible people can be to each other in the 1980s and 1990s." The novel's action revolves around a Haitian woman who works as an au pair in the mansion of a wealthy but disintegrating family in upstate New York.

The public is invited to hear Prose read from "Primitive People" Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Law College Auditorium. Admission is free.

Besides her work with the UI Writers' Workshop, Prose has taught at Harvard, the University of Arizona, the Breadloaf Writers' Conference, Sarah Lawrence and the Warren Wilson MFA Program for Writers.

Her stories have appeared in Atlantic, Antaeus, Vogue, The New Yorker, the Village Voice and Mademoiselle. She has received two grants from the National Endowment for the Arts.

"Actually, I never thought I was going to write another novel," Prose says. "I enjoyed doing the short stories so much that I hated the thought of doing a novel."

Prose loved the feeling of being able to complete a story and be done with it in a week or two. But . . . "I was working on an idea. I thought it was going to be a short story but it kept getting bigger and bigger."

Prose's novels include "Judah and Pious," which won the Jewish Book Council Award, and "Bigfoot Dreams," a highly acclaimed romp starring Vera Perl, ace reporter for a supermarket tabloid specializing in the super sleaze. The Washington Post called "Bigfoot Dreams" "metaphysical high comedy . . . a laser beam of American psychology."

In reviewing "Women and Children First," the New York Times wrote, "What distinguishes this collection is Ms. Prose's strong, distinctive voice; her acerbic humor; her bold pursuit of the bizarre that lurks beneath the surface . . . and her unsparring, though not unkind, insight into the subtleties of character and nuances of relationships."

The bizarre may be lurking beneath the surface, but the stories always seem to find their way back to the mainstream.

In "Everyone Had a Lobster," Valerie is living in the summer house of a mansion shared by a lawyer, two therapists, a painter, a contractor "and so forth." She's a guest of her best friend, paying the price of admission by entertaining the group with her eccentric behavior and watching while they sink into a life of Citizen Kane fireplaces, gourmet meals and after-dinner home videos.

One night, Valerie arrives uninvited at one of these dinners, survives the experience of being the only diner without a lobster and then endures watching a video of a strange incident at the beach: One of the lawyers nearly drowns while the group tapes his struggle and eventual rescue by the Coast Guard.

"You almost died," Valerie said. "Gary almost died, you guys."

"All right, Valerie," said Roy. "We can't all be world class swimmers."

Further unsettling experiences occur, and eventually Valerie, left alone, realizes "how the very worst moments of waiting for life to begin are better — much better — than knowing it already has."

Prose's characters struggle against insurmountable obstacles in strange shadow. But by the end of the stories, powered by her strong narrative voice, they're standing in familiar light — a light of startling clarity and meaning Francine Prose will bring to life with her voice Thursday night.

Blood, pasta sauce and rock & roll: Scorsese's 'GoodFellas' has it all

By Steve Cruse
The Daily Iowan

Martin Scorsese's "GoodFellas" is the best commercial film to open in Iowa City yet this year. Brash, funny and violent, it's the movie that "Married to the Mob" wanted to be but lacked the guts (and blood): A gangster flick that doesn't so much transcend its genre as embrace it wholeheartedly. This is the kind of movie that can make an explicit metaphorical connection between blood and pasta sauce, and get away with it.

The film tells the story of Henry Hill (Ray Liotta), a half-Irish, half-Sicilian kid in New York who joins the Mafia at age 11 and steadily rises through the ranks as a courier, petty thief and, eventually, full-fledged thug. Because he's not completely Italian, Henry can never be "made" (that is, become an official Mafioso); nevertheless, through wits and hard work he wins the affection of his neighborhood's crime boss, the quietly menacing Paulie (Paul Sorvino). For Henry it's a dream come true: In restaurants and bars he's suddenly being treated like a movie star, by people he hardly knows. (Of course, they're all terrified of what he represents.)

In early scenes, Henry is filled with starry-eyed admiration of the crime bosses; gradually, he learns how to utilize the same glowering expressions that once put him in awe. His closest companions are Jimmy (Robert DeNiro) and Tommy (Joe Pesci) — gangsters-for-hire who commit anything from robbery to occasional hits. (Some new vocabulary is introduced along the way: When someone is murdered in this movie, he's been "whacked.")

The central conflict of Henry's life is that he can't stop seeing himself as an outsider, at least partially. Even after he's been a member of the inner circle for several years, he's still trying to get the rhythm suffering betrayal. His wife, Karen (Lorraine Bracco), is the only stable force in his life, but he unfeelingly isolates her from the beginning of their marriage.

Some of Scorsese's recent films — "The Color of Money" in particular — were drowned in technique; the constant camera swoops and quick cutting couldn't make up for lack of content. In "GoodFellas," though, Scorsese knows when to lay off the hyperkinetics. In one scene Karen holds Henry at gunpoint, threatening revenge for his infidelity; after gently coaxing her to put the revolver down, he down, to become attuned to the gangster argot. His tough-guy stances and slit-eyed stares, even his laughter at his compatriots' jokes, seems affected and skittish. He's constantly scared of making a wrong move — witness his petrification when Tommy seemingly takes offense at Henry's description of him as "funny." (His voice-over, which occasionally narrates the action, is marked by a tremble, almost childlike excitement at his ability to give us an exclusive report from the mysterious world of the Mafia: The unspoken message is Isn't it incredible that I'm doing this stuff?)

The tag line on "GoodFellas" posters is "Three decades in the life of the Mafia" — and this proves an accurate description of the film's tone. It's just a big violent slice of life; there isn't a plot per se, although Henry's life goes through several momentous changes: getting married, being incarcerated, knocks her to the floor and points the gun in her face, asking "How do you like it?" Scorsese simply steps back at this point and lets the characters' actions speak for themselves. (The camera's impassive observation is painfully echoed in a later scene, in which the distraught, isolated couple huddles in a corner clinging to each other.)

Scorsese has said that he doesn't want to make "cute" underworld movies "about weddings and Mama's cooking." In fact, "GoodFellas" contains more than its share of jokes about both — but the authenticity of the film's atmosphere prevents them from seeming like plays for easy laughs. The entire film is a brilliant alternation between hilarity and horror.

U.N. RESOLUTION

No resolution

The United Nations Security Council on Tuesday increased its multinational pressure on Iraq by voting 14-1 in favor of an air embargo. The move is undoubtedly a strong show of international condemnation of Iraq's continued occupation of Kuwait, but such measures are worthy of important questions: Will Saddam Hussein view these measures as a provocation? How effective are the U.N. embargoes? How undesirable will war be to the Bush administration? The U.N. embargo may initiate war regardless of whether it succeeds or fails.

In response to the first question, Saddam may already be making final preparations for war. An article in The Wall Street Journal seems to support this hypothesis. The Journal reported yesterday that within the past week Iraq has increased its military forces near Kuwait by 70,000 troops, 700 tanks, 700 personnel carriers and 200 artillery pieces. This show of force illustrates that the situation is extending far beyond a war of words.

To underestimate Saddam's most recent military build-up would be unwise at this juncture. And to disregard the fire power of Saddam's arsenal would be downright foolish. Iraq possesses a number of long-range surface-to-surface Scud missiles and air-to-surface Exocet missiles with ranges of 350 and 450 miles, respectively. Both the Scud and the Exocet are capable of carrying chemical weapons. Iraq's strategic position makes these weapons as deadly as ballistic missiles. Tel Aviv and Odessa are within the range of Iraqi missiles. This is most likely the best explanation for an invisible Israel during the past few months.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze has also expressed his consternation. In his address to the United Nations General Assembly, Shevardnadze warned, "A great war may break out in the gulf region any day, any moment." Remember that the White House has been relying on Soviet reports on the Iraqi situation. So it would seem that Shevardnadze's words are an accurate assessment.

The volatile character of Saddam Hussein is reason enough to believe that his threats may turn into action. An answer to the second question lies in Saddam's unpredictability that enables him to turn any situation to his advantage. His assuagement of Iran has added difficulties to the enforcement of U.N. sanctions. Shipments of oil to Iran will be difficult to curtail if Iran disregards the embargoes.

A breakdown in the effectiveness of the U.N. sanctions and continued threats from Iraq will be serious considerations for engaging in war. So far, the American populace and the Bush administration are reluctant to engage in any conflicts at this point. After all, the '90s decade represents a new era of peace to many. However, Americans are tolerable to a point. Imagine how quickly attitudes will change in the wake of a recession with gas prices at $2 a gallon, which many economists are now predicting.

The U.N. embargoes have been passed in an attempt to achieve peace within the Middle East, but they present a Catch-22 situation. If the embargoes manage to choke his country, Saddam will initiate war; if they fail, the U.S. may become the aggressor. It seems, sadly enough, that economics is the basis for every move of decision-makers. If no substantive agreements are reached, then war will most likely break out within the next few weeks. Pentagon leaks have already implied this. October will most likely be the cruelest month.

No case for religious repression

(The following is an abridged version of prepared remarks presented by Jim Rogers at a panel discussion of Oregon vs. Smith, the Peay case, sponsored by Hope Presbyterian Church, on Sept. 23.)

In Oregon vs. Smith, one interest distinguishes Justice Scalia's majority opinion from Justice O'Connor's concurring opinion: How convenient for the state should be the First Amendment guarantee of religious free exercise?

Scalia views the cost of a broad free exercise trump card as overly burdensome in a diverse society: "Precisely because we are a cosmopolitan nation made up of people of almost every conceivable religious divergence, we cannot afford the luxury of deeming presumptively invalid, as applied to the religious objector, every regulation of conduct that does not protect an interest of the highest order."

Scalia severely constrains the scope of the traditional test in free exercise cases: Does the state have a compelling interest in regulating the religious activity in question? Is the type of regulation chosen the least restrictive means to achieve the state's goal? Scalia deems a "luxury" case-by-case determination of whether a law of general applicability unconstitutionally burdens a citizen's religious activity.

O'Connor views the traditional standard, inconvenient or not, as the minimum required by the First Amendment: "Even if, as an empirical matter, a government's criminal laws might usually serve a compelling interest in health, safety or public order, the First Amendment at least requires a case-by-case determination of the question, sensitive to the facts of each particular claim."

Scalia doesn't tell us why he deems the traditional standard an unaffordable luxury. He does trot out the specter of anarchy, where "each conscience is a law unto itself," but the older standard doesn't encourage social chaos. It says simply that unless the state has a really good reason for prohibiting certain religious activities, then they should be left alone. Scalia raises a bugaboo that just doesn't exist.

While I think Scalia's arguments are incorrect, as a practical matter I don't think the case represents a great turn toward religious repression in this country.

The case does, however, raise broader issues. Issues such as those columnist George Will raised during the summer in his attempt to place an idolatrous spin on the case. Remember, however, that Will began his column by chastising Scalia for not making the proper arguments in the majority opinion. We shouldn't blame Scalia for Will's radically statist reinterpretation of the decision.

Nonetheless, the dispute over the case reminded me of an itch, one that I hope you permit blood transfusions.

In forcing the transfusion the state must tell the Jehovah's Witness that one of the two premises is wrong: As a matter of official state dogma, either (1) or (2) is not religious truth. On what basis does the state rest its argument?

That the state claims religious neutrality is not surprising, but it is a myth nonetheless. Former Harvard law professor Harold Berman sets the modern democratic state's claim in its proper context: "(In the 19th and 20th centuries there) was the very gradual reduction of traditional religion to the level of a personal, private matter . . . while other belief systems — new secular religions (ideologies, 'isms') — were raised to the level of passionate faiths for which people collectively were willing not only to die but also to live new lives. . . ."

"Liberal democracy was the first great secular religion in Western history — the first ideology which became divorced from traditional Christianity and at the same time took over from traditional Christianity both its sense of the sacred and some of its major values."

Democracy is the established religion in the U.S. It is this official faith, not state neutrality toward religion, that tells the Jehovah's Witness that his faith is false. Of course, the state makes similar, albeit more subtle, claims everywhere.

The time has long passed to believe Enlightenment bigotry about its neutrality. We need a new, less dishonest way of talking about religion and the law in the U.S.

As a Fordham University political science professor put it in an issue of the Journal of Law and Society: "The pluralist game will continue to be played, of course, because there is no other game in town. But there is no need for it to keep on being a confidence game in which one side proclaims its cause as neutrality and the other side is gullible enough to believe it. . . . We shall play the pluralist game more honestly, perhaps even with better results, if we admit openly what the game is and what stakes we are playing for."

Jim Rogers' column appears Thursdays on the Viewpoints page.

will suffer me to scratch in your presence. It is a claim implicit in even O'Connor's opinion and that of the dissenters. Namely, the idea that the state can be somehow neutral toward religion.

This is not only a practical impossibility, it is a theoretical impossibility.

Let's take the well-known case of Jehovah's Witnesses, blood transfusions, and their children. Based on a really goofy exegesis of a couple of Bible texts, Jehovah's Witnesses forbid themselves blood transfusions and, if permitted, would forbid them to their children as well. In the case of children, the state typically steps in, asserts a compelling interest with respect to protecting the child's life and orders the blood transfusion.

Few of us would disagree. But if we look at the Jehovah's Witnesses' claim, we see that in the state's action it cannot help but make assertions as to what it considers to be substantive religious truth.

Here is the Jehovah's Witnesses' argument in brief: (1) Eternal life is preferable to temporal life; (2) blood transfusions deny their recipients eternal life, therefore; (3) we shouldn't Football Saturday: I love it, I love it!

Football Saturday started in earnest last weekend. Cincinnati doesn't count in my mind. I don't think you can say it's a game until both teams know how to engage in running and jumping and stuff like that.

I am afraid I didn't quite make it to the stadium last Saturday. It's not that I didn't think it would be a lot closer game than it had any right to be. It's because I'm holding out for that special someone to go with. I mean, of course, Sigmund Freud.

I never can seem to hook up with the guy. First of all, he's a little dead. Secondly, he hails from Austria. He probably prefers that wimpy European kind of football. You know, swarthy guys running around, tripping each other and taking their shirts off. And even if he would go, he'd probably want to take his mom.

Mitch Martin

And that's a shame. He's just the kind of nutty guy who could appreciate a spectacle like a home game at the UI.

I'd have him come on the Wednesday before a game, while things were still calm. That way he could see the state still safely cradled in its superego. (By superego, I do not mean Arsenio Hall.) In about seven minutes of highly concentrated research on the subject, I learned that the superego is the internal manifestation of a society's morals and values. As we all know, the Midwest produces morality by the bushel. On the surface, Iowa always seems on the verge of becoming one large 4-H meeting. Especially with all the big media personalities in this state that go around being professionally wholesome. I wonder; if you gave local snooze anchor Eadie Fawcett a blood transfusion, would you use skim, 2 percent or whole milk? Every congressperson in this state spends loads and loads of quality time with his or her Good Christian Family. Then the duly elected salts-of-the-earth make a commercial about it.

But on football Saturday our friend the superego takes the day off. That way, everyone's id is allowed to run wild. As you may remember from intro to psych, the id is that primordial beastly lurking down in your rotten little soul that lives for sex, drugs and rock and roll — followed by more sex.

It all starts in the predawn light, which is spooky. Ominous looking monsters known as "family vans" come from across the state, heading upstream to the tailgating estuary known as Kinnick. There, they spawn bumblebee-like creatures known as "alumni." An "alumnus" is a humanoid creature that bases as much as two-thirds of its self-image on the The Associated Press football poll. (A terrifying subspecies from a place called Notre Dame has been known to swell to the size of a banana boat.) "Alumni" walk around with this dazed, happy look on their faces and entrepreneur-pleasing wads of cash in their pockets. Other, less-round, creatures known as "students" walk around doing the same thing, but with smaller wads.

The first urge to be satisfied is the palate. As soon as the participants wake up, they locate a breakfast buffet and eat themselves sick. If you have not reached a high degree of sympathy for the gait of a pregnant woman by 10 o'clock, you're doing something wrong.

The second appetite to be satisfied is usually of the rampaging consumer variety. No, this isn't heaven; it's a mall! "Alumni" have an instinctive drive to buy every trinket in the city. Webster's Third or Fourth Collegiate Dictionary defines trinket as: "1) Of or relating to any worthless hunk of plastic that has the emblem of an apparently schizophrenic tigerhawk, in so that people will buy it; 2) Hayden Fry owns the rights to it, so don't give me any of this can't afford crying nonsense."

The third appetite to be satisfied is of the Betty Ford variety. Since the days of Noah, people have had an uncontrollable passion for getting zonked enough to tell various friends and family what they really think of them. This is often followed by hours of fun-filled falling down.

Now for the Main Event: sex and violence! Freud suspected that symbolic aggressive acts could drain off the urge for actual physical violence. I'm not saying we should give season tickets to every violent criminal in the state, but since every non-violent criminal in the state has them, we should really give it some thought. Imagine what good it would do them, watching in vicarious elation as human beings who have spent their whole lives devoted to the game of football prowl the gridiron, making threatening gestures at each other with a proud, fierce fury. And that's just the coaches.

There are also, for our viewing enjoyment, men and women in clever little outfits bouncing along the sidelines. They have the sort of sex appeal and peppiness that should have gotten Doris Day shot 30 years ago! And who knows, maybe 23 beers later, downtown after the game

By the end of the day every testosterone, pheromone and screaming moan in the county has had a chance to exercise its nature. Even if people don't get their yearnings properly sublimated by the times bars close, they still have several hours before dawn breaks to fill the police blotters. But they had better hurry. With the morning comes the Sabbath, and your superego may be back in time for church.

Mitch Martin's column appears Thursdays on the Viewpoints page.

Ironic situation

To the Editor:
"AFSCME halts biweekly pay."
"The Union has solved your problem."

These are headlines taken from the letter distributed to merit staff by AFSCME soon after the regents approved revocation of the biweekly pay plan. It infuriates me that AFSCME thinks the UI's merit staff has no memory and doesn't recall that it was AFSCME who caused their problem in the first place! Furthermore, it seems that much of the media has also been glossing over this fact, and the issue is too important to let it slide by. Whenever I watched a report on television, I waited for them to mention the irony that AFSCME was working so hard to undo the damage it had done in the first place. But this was never pointed out. I also remember looking for but not finding this information in The Daily Iowan. And now AFSCME itself has the gall to make statements like, "We have done one thing for you — stopped biweekly pay from implementation." And, "If we would have had more members, this situation would not have occurred." It disturbs the hell out of me that no one in the media has emphasized the irony of the entire situation, and instead has let stand as true whatever propaganda AFSCME has put out.

So I will point out the obvious. If AFSCME truly had been interested in representing the merit staff of the UI, it would have polled all of the workers, not just the few who actually became union members. If it can send us a letter inviting us to become members, it certainly could have avoided the whole mess by polling us on our opinions before it shoved a pay plan down our throats that had the support of only 5 percent of the affected employees.

No, I am not anti-union. I don't believe unionization is always the answer to management/labor problems because oftentimes the lines are not so definitely drawn anywhere. In this particular circumstance, I am angry at the behaviors of this union.

I think if AFSCME wants to rectify the situation, it would be best if it began working for all employees it represents, not just for its members. If AFSCME proves to the merit staff that it is concerned about their working conditions and not just amassing a larger membership, it would better encourage people to join, more than the low-cost MasterCard or Advantage Dream Vacation incentives offered in AFSCME's brochure.

Shame on them

To the Editor:

The recent actions of the infamous "student" group New Wave during the visit of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia have brought shame to our great university. It was bad enough when the group tried to burn the flag on the Pentacrest last summer, but its actions on Monday, Sept. 17, in protest of Scalia at the Boyd Law Building were too much.

New Wave members delayed the start of the speech by blocking the entrance to the room where it was to be held, they barred guests from entering the room and they pounded on the wall once the speech had begun. This sort of behavior would not be tolerated by any other student group and reflects negatively on the student body and the UI.

I hope the Student Senate will show some courage and deny New Wave the student funds it has been receiving.

Counterrevolution

To the Editor:

Law student Tony Krukow suggests that if we all become lawyers, we can present our arguments to Antonin Scalia and — if we're good at our job — will be able to change the justice's mind! ("Demonstrators prevented from interrupting Scalia address," Sept. 19, DI). I would like to agree with Krukow, but the fact is that Scalia is a radically conservative ideologue whose mind is already largely made up. That's precisely why he is on the Supreme Court, and why during Reagan's eight years a generation of conservatives was appointed to the federal court system. Failing to legislate regressive change, the so-called "Reagan Revolution" (actually a counterrevolution), made its greatest gains in the judiciary with a cadre of activist judges dedicated to overturning legal precedent and deciding cases or preordained beliefs. The right wing's smokescreen about "original intent" and "strict constructionism" of the Constitution is merely cover for what it itself refers to as its "movement's" profoundly radical goals: destroying individual and community liberties, strengthening the corporate state, mandating religious belief and keeping minorities and women in their places.

Nuclear weapons treaty closer to joint resolution

By Barry Schweid
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The United States and the Soviet Union made headway Wednesday on treaties to reduce conventional and long-range nuclear weapons as they strengthened their cooperation on the Persian Gulf crisis.

"On quite a few questions there is progress," said Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze at the conclusion of a four-hour meeting with Secretary of State James Baker. "But in order to carry these through to the end, we'll have to meet again," he said.

Failure to reach agreement on the arms accords could cause postponement of a 34-nation summit meeting in Paris in mid-November, interrupt the easing of East-West tensions in Europe and delay a trip to Moscow in December by President Bush.

Baker and Shevardnadze met for their pivotal talks at a mid-town hotel about a mile from the United Nations, where they voted on Tuesday to impose an embargo on cargo shipments by air to Iraq and occupied Kuwait.

The aim is to force Iraq to withdraw from the oil-rich emirate, which it seized Aug. 2, sending tremors through world oil markets and touching off hoarding and price rises.

An unscheduled meeting presumably will be held later in the week, or possibly next week, while Baker and Shevardnadze attend a special session of the U.N. General Assembly.

Shevardnadze did not specify on

"On quite a few questions there is progress."

Eduard Shevardnadze
Soviet foreign minister

what issues progress was achieved and suggested a lot of work remains to be done. "There are so many problems," he told reporters through a Russian translator.

Baker said they also dealt "a good bit with cooperation" at the United Nations and added, "We ran out of time, quite frankly."

At the United Nations the two superpowers are working in tandem to tighten the economic screws on Iraq by denying President Saddam Hussein's government all trade except for humanitarian food supplies.

Baker and Shevardnadze were non-committal about a flight from Iraq to Jordan in the wake of the air embargo. "We are not familiar with the facts," Baker said.

"We'll have to look into it," Shevardnadze agreed.

Baker began the meeting thanking Shevardnadze for a strong speech at the United Nations on Tuesday condemning Saddam and for the way the Soviet foreign minister presided over the Security Council session.

Shevardnadze said he was operating under a "directive" from Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to break the deadlock in the negotiations over reducing non-nuclear arsenals in Europe.

Secretary of State James Baker, left, meets with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in New York early Wednesday morning.

He said the two sides had "to find a solution."

Two weeks ago, when Baker was in Moscow, they decided to jettison any attempt to limit the size of U.S. and Soviet troop concentrations in Europe under the treaty, which still would impose ceilings on tanks, anti-aircraft artillery, helicopters and armored personnel carriers.

But the Soviets have agreed separately to a phased withdrawal of their 350,000 troops from East Germany, which dropped out of the Warsaw Pact on Monday and will merge with West Germany, a NATO member, on Oct. 3. Defense Secretary Dick Cheney announced Wednesday he has ordered the withdrawal of 30,000 Army troops and 10,000 Air Force people from Europe over the next year. There are now 300,000 Army and Air Force people in Europe.

Aside from the troop issue, the two sides have also considered abandoning limits on non-nuclear aircraft in the arms treaty, but deferred a decision.

The question is whether all land-based aircraft should be included, as the United States proposed, or whether planes the Soviets say have defensive missions should be exempted from restrictions.

Another unresolved issue is whether any single member of NATO or the Warsaw Pact should hold no more than 30 percent of permitted weapons, as the Bush administration proposes, or be allowed up to 40 percent, as Moscow favors.

Also, the two sides have not settled verification procedures.

Last week, R. James Woolsey, the chief American negotiator, said the United States would seek postponement of the Nov. 19 Paris meeting if agreement were not reached on a draft treaty in time.

U.S. health-care costs higher than Canada's

By Daniel Q. Haney
The Associated Press

BOSTON — Doctors in the United States charge more than twice as much as Canadian physicians for the same work, and this helps explain why this country's health-care costs are dramatically higher, a study concludes.

The study found that despite their fatter fees, however, U.S. doctors earn only about one-third more than Canadians. The reason: Canadian doctors are busier and make up for their lower fees by seeing more patients.

Unlike the United States, Canada provides complete, fully paid health coverage for all its citizens. In the United States, one in seven people has no health insurance, and even those with coverage typically have to pay at least part of the bill. Despite these differences, health care costs 20 percent more per person in the United States than in Canada.

In an attempt to help sort out the reasons, economist Victor Fuchs of Stanford University compared the differences in the cost of physician services in the two countries.

Overall, physician fees are 2.4 times higher in the United States than in Canada. Other factors besides doctors' earnings contribute to the lower cost of medical care in Canada.

"If physician fees in the United States were the same as in Canada, by how much would total health care expenditures be reduced?" said Fuchs. "If the fees were cut in half and lowered to the Canadian level, total expenditures would be reduced by about 10 percent."

Health care now accounts for about 11.5 percent of the gross national product in the United States, while in Canada it is about 9 percent. If U.S. spending could be held to the Canadian percentage, more than $100 billion a year would be saved.

His calculations, which converted Canadian figures into U.S. dollars, were published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine. Among the findings:

■ Doctors provided fewer services per person in the United States than in Canada.

■ U.S. fees for surgery and other high-tech services, such as X-rays and anesthesia, were more than three times higher.

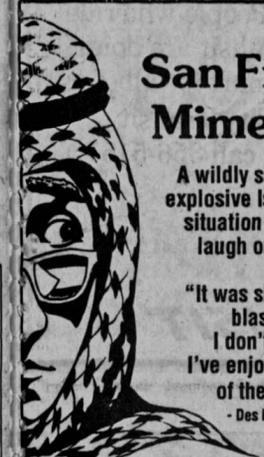

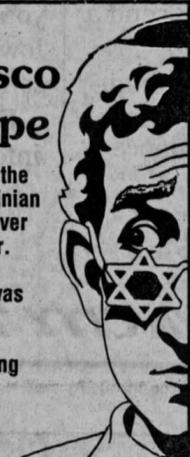

■ On a per capita basis, Canada had more doctors but fewer specialists than the United States.

■ U.S. doctors are paid five times more than Canadians for visiting patients in a hospital.

■ U.S. doctors spend twice as much as Canadians for rent and other office expenses and generally have nicer offices, probably to help them attract patients. Billing costs are also higher in the United States because Canadian doctors need to deal with only one insurer, the government.

Canadian fees are uniform for each service within provinces and are set through negotiations between doctors and the government.

A survey by Medical Economics magazine found that U.S. physician incomes rose 12.5 percent in 1989, almost triple the rate of inflation.

Allies raise questions concerning U.S. distribution of economic aid

By Martin Crutsinger
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. allies raised questions Wednesday about a fund-raising campaign launched by President Bush to collect billions of dollars in economic assistance for countries hurt by the Persian Gulf crisis.

In an effort to overcome objections, American officials held a flurry of meetings with top finance officials in town for the annual meetings of the 154-nation International Monetary Fund and its sister organization, the World Bank.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady was the host for a luncheon of finance ministers from Saudi Arabia, the exiled government of Kuwait and other oil-rich Persian Gulf countries from whom the United States hopes to raise substantial sums to support the campaign against Saddam Hussein.

After Brady's luncheon, other treasury officials were holding a session for officials representing more than 20 potential donor countries that make up the Gulf Crisis Financial Coordination Group.

Bush unveiled the group Tuesday in a speech at the opening session of the IMF-World Bank meetings, saying the informal panel was needed to organize the fund-raising effort.

However, various foreign finance ministers made it clear that the allies who are expected to put up the billions of dollars in assistance had a number of objections to the outline of the U.S. plan.

The disputes ranged from such basic issues as how much money should be contributed to which countries should receive the aid.

British Chancellor of the Exchequer John Major said he had heard figures ranging from $8 billion to $18 billion for the amount of money being sought.

A U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, put the American request in a more narrow range of $13 billion to $15 billion. However, some European countries contend that amount is too high and should be scaled back to about $9 billion.

The U.S. plan would target the assistance to three countries — Egypt, Jordan and Turkey. The administration fears that without substantial aid the resolve of those key "front line" states to support the campaign against Iraq may crumble.

However, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait reportedly objected to the inclusion of Jordan in the aid package. Both countries have criticized Jordan for being reluctant to support the U.N. trade embargo against Iraq.

Major told reporters before the donor meeting that it might prove impossible to resolve all the disputes, forcing the issue to be addressed in coming weeks at a higher-level gathering of finance ministers.

For his part, Japanese Finance Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto stressed that the proposed assistance package drawn up by the United States should be viewed only as a starting point for discussions.

Minorities

About 56 minority graduate students received approximately $250,000 in financial aid before funds were exhausted, Warner added.

A request for a half-million-dollar increase in funding for UI financial aid passed by the Board of Regents last week is now before the governor's Department of Management. If the request is passed by the governor, it must then pass the state Legislature.

This year, the UI's financial aid budget was $11,727,794. "If we had that much more in the aggregate (total), obviously we could cover more," Vice President of Finance Susan Phillips said.

The UI earmarks certain funds for programs that support minority students, including the Educational Opportunity Program. The financial aid, collected in part from a percentage of tuition increases and also from state and university allocations, are distributed on a need basis.

Although minority students are the hardest hit, Nathan said increasing the level of financial aid available to all students is a "high priority."

reach," Cavazos said in a statement.

The survey's national averages are weighted to take enrollment into account. Colleges with large enrollments count more heavily than smaller schools.

At their worst, costs at public and private institutions rose in double digits from 1981 through 1984. Rates at four-year public colleges shot up 20 percent in 1982-83. They settled into the 5 percent to 9 percent range the past six years.

While encouraged by the gradual easing in tuition increases, Rosser and other college leaders say resurgent inflation and a looming recession could upset the pattern.

Universities in chilly northern states, especially, will likely feel the pinch of rising oil prices, Rosser said.

"Assuming there is a decent jump in inflation, I would expect that this would lead to tuitions not further reducing themselves, and they might well go up, though not as fast as the overall inflation rate," said Arthur Hauptman, a consultant to the American Council on Education and author of a recently published book, "The College Tuition Spiral."

He added that a recession might lead to sharper tuition hikes at public universities, since economic downturns often lead to more conservative state spending.

People who ride Iowa City Transit reduce America's foreign oil dependence America is being blackmailed in the Middle East...

They are betting that our thirst for imported oil and the gasoline it makes will weaken our national resolve. They think we'll give in to our craving for unlimited supplies of gasoline.

So what can individuals do? Simple. Use less gasoline. Conserve. If each car owner burns one less gallon of gasoline a day, that would send a loud clear message.

If enough people eliminate one car trip a day, we lessen our dangerous dependence on foreign oil.

The new Independence Day could be the day you leave the car at home and take an Iowa City Transit bus to work, shop or class.

You'll save money, you'll save gasoline, and you and millions of other transit riders across the country will help settle the confrontation faster. That's the smart way to ride out the storm.

Tagliabue wants some answers in Patriot harassment case

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Zeke Mowatt, the New England Patriots tight end who a female reporter says sexually harassed her in the team's locker room, has been called before NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue to explain his actions.

NFL spokesman Joe Browne said Wednesday that Tagliabue made the decision to meet with Mowatt sometime next week after speaking both to New England owner Victor Kiam and to Lisa Olson, the reporter for the Boston Herald who made the accusations.

Tagliabue has the right to discipline Mowatt, either with a fine or suspension, or to reprimand him.

In interviews Tuesday, Kiam said that several Patriots officials had complained to him about Olson's conduct in the Indianapolis Colts' locker room where she allegedly went into the shower area looking for a player following the New England-Indianapolis game on Sept. 16.

The Herald said Olson never went into the Colts' locker room after the game, but conducted all her interviews in the Patriots' locker room.

Kiam also denied earlier reports in several newspapers that he referred to Olson as a "classic bitch" in the locker room last Sunday after the Patriots-Bengals game.

Kiam had apologized to Olson but she refused the apology.

"How about slapping them with substantial, not gratuitous, fines and giving the proceeds to a shelter for battered women?"

Lisa Olson

"How can I accept his apology after he questioned my professionalism in front of hundreds of thousands of television viewers?" Olson said in Wednesday's editions of the Herald. "It's obvious the Patriots are trying to bury the sexual harassment issue by trying to discredit me with blatant lies. I am the victim here and they are putting me on trial."

"The apology was a start, but the issue is not whether Victor Kiam thinks I'm a 'classic bitch.' If the Patriots are interested in solving this issue, how about making public the names of the players who verbally and sexually harassed me instead of covering up for them. How about slapping them with substantial, not gratuitous, fines and giving the proceeds to a shelter for battered women? How about requiring the guilty players to undergo counseling, as any other corporation would do if its employee degraded and humiliated a woman in the workplace? How about acting like human beings, instead of glossing over the issue and making me out to be the bad guy?"

Olson said that on Sept. 17, a practice day, she was interviewing New England defensive back Maurice Hurst at his locker. She said Mowatt stood close to her, exposed himself and made lewd remarks, adding that other players made similar comments but she was too upset to look up and identify them.

The Herald said five players were involved.

Patriots general manager Patrick Sullivan said Monday he had concluded his investigation and fined one player an undisclosed amount.

Charger nose tackle sidelined after brutal attack outside bar

By Dennis Georgatos
The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — San Diego Chargers nose tackle Joe Phillips was attacked and severely beaten by three men early Wednesday after leaving a Mission Beach bar, police said.

Phillips, 27, suffered a skull fracture, broken nose, three broken ribs and a broken facial bone near an eye in the attack, police spokesman Bill Robinson said.

"Three males apparently jumped him," Robinson said. "One of the men had steel-toed boots and they struck Mr. Phillips with their fists and with their boots."

Robinson said Phillips was in the intensive care unit at San Diego Sharp Memorial Hospital. However, hospital spokeswoman Gwen Barnett refused to release any information about Phillips' condition, saying she could neither confirm nor deny that he was being treated there.

The Chargers placed the 6-foot-5-inch, 275-pound Phillips on the reserve non-football injury list, meaning he will miss at least one month.

"He was assaulted down in Mission Beach. He's got some head injuries. He definitely won't be able to play for a while," coach Dan Henning said.

Henning said he didn't know the details of the fight.

Robinson said Phillips had just left Saska's Bar in Mission Beach about 1 a.m. and was walking to his car when he was assaulted. Robinson said because of Phillips' condition, investigators have not been able to speak with him.

The three assailants remain at large, police said.

"We have been unable to speak to Mr. Phillips and at this stage in the investigation we have no apparent reason for the attack," Robinson said.

He added that there were witnesses to the beating but he declined to say what they told investigators. He said robbery did not appear to be the motive.

Phillips originally joined the Chargers as a replacement player during the 1987 players' strike and has stuck with the team as the starting nose tackle.

Originally a fourth-round selection by Minnesota in the 1986 draft, Phillips was released by the Vikings during their 1987 training camp before joining San Diego. Over the last two seasons he has started in each of the Chargers' games.

The Chargers filled the vacant roster spot by signing free-agent defensive back Michael Brooks.

Chargers defensive linemen Les Miller and George Hinkle will share duties at nose tackle in Phillips' place, Henning said.

The players were told by coaches that Phillips had been hurt, but learned later of the severity of the injuries when reporters asked what happened to their teammate.

Miller said that the attack on Phillips is another indication that football players are not insulated from society's darker side.

"I don't know how to react to something like that... anger... helplessness, definitely helplessness," Miller said. "It's a big city, it can happen to anybody."

Defensive line coach Gunter Cunningham said it was tough losing Phillips because of his onfield contributions as well as his camaraderie with the other players.

"Les and George have to pick up the slack," Cunningham said. "I'm just concerned for him, for Joe Phillips the guy, not the football player. That's what I'm worried about. For me and the guys, it's tough on us and our best wishes are for him."

Mets can only keep pace

The Associated Press

MONTREAL — David Cone gave up two hits over eight innings and tied the major league strikeout lead Wednesday as the New York Mets kept their pennant hopes alive with a 4-0 victory over the Montreal Expos.

The Mets remained three games behind the Pittsburgh Pirates, who beat the Chicago Cubs 4-3 earlier Wednesday night.

Cone (13-10) struck out seven to reach 221 for the season. That is one more than the Dodgers' Ramon Martinez and leaves him tied with Texas' Nolan Ryan for the major league strikeout title.

The hits, by Larry Walker and Jerry Goff, were both broken-bat, opposite-field singles.

Pirates 4, Cubs 3

PITTSBURGH — Zane Smith improved to 6-1 with Pittsburgh by throwing a seven-hitter and Andy Van Slyke hit a two-run triple as the Pirates lowered their magic number to five, beating the Chicago Cubs 4-3 Wednesday night.

Van Slyke, overlooked most of the season as Barry Bonds and Bobby Bonilla have enjoyed career years, went 2-for-3 and has four RBIs in his last two games as the Pirates neared their first National League

East title in 11 years.

All the runs off Smith (12-8) were unearned as he lowered his ERA in his last six starts to 0.55. He has given up just three earned runs in 49 innings during a stretch that has included three complete-game victories and two shutouts.

Smith didn't walk a batter and struck out four.

Red Sox 7, Indians 2

BOSTON — Luis Rivera's two-run single capped a five-run first inning that included five hits, two errors, a balk and a wild pitch and the Boston Red Sox snapped a three-game losing streak Wednesday night with a 7-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

The Red Sox, who surrendered the American League East lead to Toronto while losing eight of their previous 11 games and began play trailing by 1½, had their biggest offensive production since Sept. 12 with 13 hits, including three by Carlos Quintana and a homer by Mike Greenwell.

Backed by the quick 5-0 lead, rookie Dana Kiecker (8-9) struggled through wildness for the victory with help from Larry Andersen and Jeff Gray. Kiecker allowed only a run and two hits in six innings but was replaced by Andersen after issuing his seventh walk to start the seventh. Gray pitched the ninth.

White Sox 3, Twins 1

CHICAGO — One night after they were eliminated from the American League West race, the Chicago White Sox reached 90 victories for the first time in seven years, defeating the Minnesota Twins 3-1 Wednesday night behind the pitching of Greg Hibbard.

Hibbard (14-9) held the Twins to three hits in eight innings and the White Sox provided all the runs he needed on first-inning RBI singles by Dan Pasqua and Robin Ventura. After giving up a first-inning single to Shane Mack, Hibbard retired the next seven batters before Dan Gladden singled leading off the fourth. Gladden was balked to second and came around to score on groundouts by Mack and Kirby Puckett.

Bobby Thigpen pitched the ninth, extending his major league record to 54 saves. He gave up a hit and a walk.

Cardinals 8, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Bryn Smith allowed only one run in seven innings and Todd Zeile homered and drove in two runs as the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the Philadelphia Phillies 8-1 Wednesday.

Miami wants conference call

The Associated Press

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — The University of Miami hopes to join the Big East or Atlantic Coast Conference and has eliminated the Southeastern and Metro conferences from consideration, school officials said Wednesday.

Remaining an independent in all sports is "not very appealing at all" and "very, very low on the priority list," Athletic Director Sam Jankovich said at a news conference.

Some sort of affiliation with the Big East appears most likely. Officials from that league plan to visit the Miami campus soon, while it's uncertain whether ACC officials will pay a visit, Jankovich said.

The Hurricanes' struggling basketball program would receive a boost from either league.

"Both bring an awful lot to the table," Jankovich said. "(The ACC) is a lot more traditional and has been in existence longer than the other. The Big East has been there for 11 years and is getting better all the time."

Miami has yet to receive an invitation to join a conference, and Jankovich and university president Edward Foote have yet to make a recommendation to Miami's executive board of trustees, Jankovich said.

The board will make a final decision by Oct. 16, barring unforeseen developments, Foote said.

Jankovich met with Big East officials Tuesday in Boston. He and other Miami officials met Wednesday and agreed to eliminate the SEC and Metro.

The primary reason for the decision, Foote said, was the university's large number of alumni, students and potential students with ties to the Northeast.

"In the Big East, we have the highest concentration of our alumni from that region, outside the state of Florida," Foote said. "To be able to play quality intercollegiate athletics in an area where we have lots of students and lots of alumni is certainly an advantage."

"On the other hand, the ACC... has a significant impact on the Washington-Baltimore market, where we also get a lot of students."

Larger television markets on the East Coast also figured in Miami's decision to discontinue discussions with the SEC and Metro, Foote said.

In response to Miami's announcement, SEC Commissioner Roy Kramer said no invitation had been issued to the school. He said the league is happy with its present 12-school alignment.

The ACC expanded to nine teams with the addition of Florida State last month, and Assistant Commissioner Tom Mickle didn't rule out the possibility of further expansion.

"We're very flattered Miami is considering the ACC," Mickle said. "The ACC certainly is not aggressively seeking expansion, but in this day and time we're obviously willing to keep our options open."

Michael says Yankee staff will change

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — New York Yankees general manager Gene Michael said Wednesday that there will be changes in the coaching staff next year.

"There is a problem here," he admitted prior to a game with the Baltimore Orioles. "If I said there wasn't a problem, I'd be lying. But we'll solve it, you can be sure of that."

Michael denied that any decisions have been made. Published reports indicated that third-base coach Buck Showalter, pitching coach Billy Connor and batting coach Darrell Evans won't be back next year.

The reports said first-base coach Willie Ferraro and bullpen coach Mark Connor would be retained.

"The names aren't right," he said of the reports.

Oakland feels at home in Blue Jays' SkyDome

By Craig Horst
The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — No offense intended, but the Oakland Athletics would rather play Toronto in the American League playoffs — not that it really matters.

"We've got a lot of work, a lot of things we need to accomplish before it's all said and done, and we're going to get right to it," said Dave Stewart, who won his career-high 22nd game in shutting out Kansas City 5-0 in the clincher Tuesday.

The A's preference of Toronto over Boston seems not to have so much to do with teams as with buildings.

"If I had my choice, it would be Toronto," said Rickey Henderson, who had three hits and scored two runs as Oakland won its third consecutive AL West title. "They have that indoor ballpark. Back east, it's going to be cold. I'd rather play in that indoor ballpark."

Echoes Jose Canseco: "Toronto. I'd rather play against Toronto in Toronto because I like their stadium and I like playing against them."

The A's will play out a string of eight games before starting the playoffs against the East Division winner. The Blue Jays held a 1½-game lead going into Wednesday night's games.

Henderson will likely rest his aching thumb for much of the eight games. Canseco is suffering from a sore back, but he said he will likely play Thursday after missing six straight games.

But the same spirit that made the Athletics the first team to win a division three straight times since the Royals, Phillies and Yankees did it from 1976-78 is likely to carry over into the playoffs.

"My highs have been high, but I just feel blessed to be on this team," said Stewart, who pitched a no-hitter in June and has won some important games for the A's. "We don't want to be at the bottom end of the totem pole when all is said and done. We want to be on top."

Everyone knew the clincher was inevitable, even the Royals.

"You hate to see this, especially with the expectations we had," Royals Manager John Wathan said. "But it was inevitable the way they played."

"It's human nature to have a letdown after you win a world's championship, but they certainly have not showed any signs of a letdown. It's tough to keep repeating the way baseball is. It just shows how strong a club they are."

The Royals really never had a chance Tuesday. Stewart had a two-hitter and had retired 13 of 14 batters before George Brett singled with two out in the sixth.

The Athletics opened the game with three straight singles off Kevin Appier (11-8) and scored runs in the first two innings to give Stewart all he needed.

It all added up to a sweet night for A's manager Tony LaRussa, who accepted a congratulatory hug from Royals pitcher Storm Davis in the Oakland clubhouse.

"Excuse me, I've got to see a friend," LaRussa said before greeting Davis, who pitched for Oakland before signing with the Royals as a free agent.

A's pitcher Dave Stewart is congratulated by teammate Harold Baines after Stewart's 5-0 shutout of the Kansas City Royals clinched the American League West title. It was Stewart's 22nd win of the season and propelled the A's into the playoffs for the third consecutive year.

BASEL, Switzerland — Third-seeded John McEnroe beat Milan Srejber 6-4, 6-3 on Wednesday night to advance to the second round of the Swiss Indoors tennis tournament.

McEnroe, ranked 11th in the world, easily dominated the Czechoslovak, who ranks 70th.

Second-seeded Goran Ivanisevic of Yugoslavia struggled before beating Alexander Volkov of the Soviet Union 7-6 (6-4), 6-1. Ivanisevic, a last-minute wild-card entry, is the highest surviving seed after top-seeded Andres Gomez of Ecuador was upset by France's Jean-Philippe Fleurian on Tuesday.

But the crowd's attention clearly focused on McEnroe, billed Wednesday by witzerland's leading sports newspaper as "perhaps the best

Yankees 4, Orioles 2
NEW YORK — Dave Righetti set a career save record for left-handers and Steve Balboni homered as the New York Yankees beat the Baltimore Orioles 4-2 Wednesday night.

Starter Chuck Cary (6-11) yielded five hits and both Baltimore runs before leaving in the seventh when he tore the nail on the middle finger of his left hand.

Jeff Robinson gave up an infield hit in 1 1/2 innings and Righetti pitched a perfect ninth for his 35th save in 38 opportunities this season. The Yankees have won only 64 games.

Reds 5, Braves 2
CINCINNATI — Eric Davis hit a two-run homer and drove in three runs Wednesday night as the Cincinnati Reds reduced their magic number to four with a 5-2 victory over the Atlanta Braves. Jose Rijo (14-7) allowed eight hits, including a two-run homer by Ron Gant in the eighth, as the Reds closed in on their first National League West championship since 1979.

The Reds have won five of their last six games. The modest spurt has raised their record to 55-55 since June 4.

Davis victimized one of his favorite pitchers to play the starring role Wednesday night. He had an RBI single and a two-run homer off John Smoltz (13-11), giving him a lifetime .643 average (9-for-14) with four homers against him.

Graf advances in Volkswagen Open
LEIPZIG, East Germany — Steffi Graf of West Germany got off to a wobbly start but rebounded to whip Italy's Laura Colarsca 6-3, 6-2 Wednesday in the second round Volkswagen Open.

Golarsca jumped to a 3-1 lead and looked like she could create some trouble for Graf. But Graf dominated the rest of the set and won it in 30 minutes.

The second set was all Graf's. She built up a 3-1 lead on two break balls and yielded a single game to her opponent.

Manon Bollegraf of the Netherlands beat American Kathy Rinaldi 6-4, 6-0 and Spain's Conchita Martinez defeated Swede Catarina Lindqvist 6-3, 6-3.

Capriati defeats Maleeva
TOKYO — Jennifer Capriati moved into the third round of the Nichirei International women's tournament Wednesday with a 6-2, 6-4 victory over Magdalena Maleeva of Bulgaria.

Soccer triumphs, 3-2; Lacrosse loses, 11-7

By Michael Watkins
The Daily Iowan

The Women's Soccer club survived a scare at home this past weekend en route to collecting yet another victory, barely edging the University of Northern Iowa 3-2. Their triumph over the Panthers gave the team a 4-1-1 record on the season and their best start in years.

Clubs

"This was clearly our biggest and best game of the season so far," said Coach Becky Schaffner. "Our passes were excellent and we played a perfect game of fitness soccer. Everyone played hard."

Although the victory was a team effort, Coach Schaffner singled out exceptional midfielder play from graduate student Danielle Aoki.

"Danielle's contribution to this victory was excellent. Her passes were accurate and her decisiveness in shot choice was very good," added Schaffner.

The women's soccer club next plays in a tournament in Des Moines this weekend.

After only two weeks of practice and a long summer layoff, the Men's Lacrosse team opened the 1990 season Sunday with a narrow 11-7 loss to Northern Illinois.

"The team played really well considering our short practice schedule," said coach Mark St. Jermaine. "We're expecting great things from this year's team."

Continuing their quest for success, the team plays Drake Saturday on the southwest side of Fieldhouse Field at 1:00 p.m.

Magic Johnson

Magic to toss in for Teagle

By Jennifer Bowles
The Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson was credited with another assist Wednesday, only it wasn't on the court.

Johnson voluntarily surrendered part of his salary so the Los Angeles Lakers could acquire guard Terry Teagle under the NBA's salary cap limits, General Manager Jerry West revealed Wednesday.

"We didn't have enough money under the cap to pick up Terry's contract without Magic giving up a substantial amount of his own salary," West said.

Under league rules, no team can exceed $11.8 million per year in total player salaries.

Johnson spoke to West about a month ago and offered to relinquish part of his salary to get a first-rate player.

"To make a long story short, we got something concrete and all of a sudden this thing came where we thought we could make a deal and we took him up on his offer," West said.

The amount of money Johnson gave up was not disclosed, but an informed source said it was "a substantial amount, in six figures."

Teagle, a 30-year-old swingman acquired from the Golden State Warriors, has two years remaining on a contract that will pay him a reported $600,000 in 1990-1991.

The trade, which was announced Tuesday, called for the Lakers to give the Warriors their first-round draft choice in 1991 in exchange for Teagle, who averaged career bests last season in scoring (16.1) and rebounding (4.5).

He is expected to replace Michael Cooper, the longtime Laker swingman who left the team this summer to play in Italy.

In another move related to the salary cap and the acquisition of Teagle, the Lakers traded center Mark McNamara to the San Antonio Spurs on Tuesday for undisclosed considerations.

Johnson, who was named MVP for the third time last season, said he was willing to give up a substantial sum of his salary to strengthen his team.

"It's about winning. Of course money is great, but I play to win and that's why I did it," Johnson said in a statement.

He is currently in Spain on a promotional tour for a company.

"It is another incredible play in a long line of incredible plays by Magic Johnson in the pursuit of victory," Lakers owner Jerry Buss said. "In my mind, he's the best team player ever."

The Lakers, who won the NBA championship five times in the 1980s, were eliminated by the Phoenix Suns in the Western Conference semifinals last season.

Gant comes back with 30-30 season

By Tom Saladino
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — A year ago, Ron Gant was in the low minors and wasn't sure he had a career in baseball. Now, the Atlanta Braves center fielder is a member of baseball's exclusive 30-30 club.

"There were a lot of questions," said the 25-year-old Gant, recalling last season's fall from grace when he wound up at Sumter of the Class A South Atlantic League after hitting only .177 with 9 homers and 9 stolen bases in 75 games with the Braves.

That followed a rookie season in 1988 in which Gant hit .259 with 19 homers, 60 RBIs and 19 stolen bases as the Braves' second baseman.

The Braves were unhappy with his fielding, shifted him to third in the spring of 1989 and, when that failed, he was sent to Sumter to learn center field.

"The reason why I'm having such a good year is that my confidence was, and still is, a lot higher than last year," said Gant, who hit his 30th home run Tuesday night in a 10-0 victory over Cincinnati.

Gant also has 31 stolen bases, 76 RBIs, 101 runs scored and was hitting .292. He is the 13th player in major league history to attain 30 home runs and 30 stolen bases in one season. "Coming into the spring, I knew if I got a chance to play I would prove myself. Belief in myself got me through last season," he said.

Gant learned how to play center field at Sumter, then in the off-season went on a weight program and gained 10 pounds.

"I did well my first year in Atlanta and people were saying, 'This guy will be in Atlanta a long time,'" he said. "But then, after the season I had last year, I found out who my true friends and fans were.

"A lot of people were saying, 'He's never going to be back in the major leagues,'" Gant said.

Braves manager Bobby Cox calls Gant and rookie teammate Dave Justice "franchise players."

"This year I've been real quiet and not saying much. I just go out and do my job and leave it up to the organization as to who plays," said Gant.

1990: A season to remember

By John Nelson
The Associated Press

Cecil Fielder, Ryne Sandberg, Willie McGee and George Brett. In the midst of talk of purple hearts, peerless players and pecking at the newspapers, these and others are making 1990 a season of rare accomplishment.

They are chasing major league goals that are really major league.

The American League home run and RBI titles have been conceded to Fielder. Detroit Tigers first baseman would become the first major leaguer since George Foster in 1977 to hit 50 or more homers.

"He's an MVP if I've ever seen one," Tigers batting coach Vada Pinson said. "He's doing this alone. He's gone beyond the purple heart."

The Tigers are out of the AL East race, so that leaves the MVP chase wide open. Rickey Henderson of Oakland and Kelly Gruber of Toronto play for division leaders, and Roger Clemens of Boston used to.

Playing with the second-division Chicago Cubs, Sandberg can sympathize with Fielder. Sandberg probably won't win the National League MVP, but this already has been an unprecedented season for him.

Last month, he became the first second baseman ever to hit 30 homers in consecutive seasons, and he also could become the first at his position since Rogers Hornsby in 1925 to lead the league in homers.

"How would you like to be a manager in the major leagues and have a guy who makes all the plays, hits .300 and gets 30 home runs?" asked Cubs manager Don Zimmer. "He's the best at his position in baseball."

Then, there's Willie McGee, whose trade from St. Louis to Oakland on Aug. 29 created a peculiar situation in the leagues' batting races. McGee had enough at-bats to qualify for the NL title, and he's leading Henderson, meanwhile, is chasing Brett for the AL batting title, and teammates have never won both races.

Since the A's already have clinched the AL West, it's OK to look at the individual statistics, and McGee leads.

"I look. It's out there everywhere. You can't help but see it," he said. "I'm a fan, too."

If Brett prevents McGee and Henderson from making history, he'll make history of his own. Brett won the AL batting titles in 1976 and 1980, and if he wins in 1990, he'll be the first player to win in three decades.

"To win one when you're 23 years old and turn around and win one when you're 37 — it would be a great feat," Brett said.

Entering Wednesday's games, here's a look at who's winning in the various categories:

Most Valuable Player
The NL West-leading Cincinnati Reds have no players with huge numbers, so it appears the winner in the East gets the MVP. Pittsburgh has two candidates, Barry Bonds and Bobby Bonilla. Bonds is hitting .306 with 113 RBIs, 33 homers and 50 stolen bases. Bonilla was at .280 with 32 homers

"(Cecil Fielder)'s an MVP if I've ever seen one. He's doing this alone. He's gone beyond the purple heart."

Vada Pinson
Tigers batting coach and 115 RBIs.

If Bonds keeps his average up, he could be the first player ever to bat over .300 with more than 30 homers, 100 RBIs and 100 runs in a season.

In the AL, it's down to Fielder, Henderson, Gruber and Clemens. Fielder had 48 homers and 126 RBIs, both league-leading figures, a .284 batting average and scored 99 runs. Gruber had 30 homers, 113 RBI and a .280 average.

Clemens is 20-6 with a 1.98 ERA and 204 strikeouts. His three-week absence with shoulder trouble corresponds roughly to Boston's fall from the AL East lead. Valuable? "I feel that even at 50 or 60 percent, I'm more valuable to the team when I'm out there," said Clemens, who is supposed to return to the rotation on Friday against Toronto.

Gruber had 113 RBI and 30 homers, but Henderson probably is the favorite. Along with his .324 average, he had 27 homers, 58 RBI, 114 runs and 63 stolen bases, four away from Lou Brock's all-time record of 938.

Cy Young
Doug Drabek of Pittsburgh and Bob Welch of Oakland lead their respective leagues, but Welch has some formidable competition.

Welch is 25-6 — the first 25-game winner in baseball since Steve Stone in 1980 — with an ERA of 3.02, which pales next to Clemens' 1.98. Welch's teammate, Dave Stewart, is 22-10 in his fourth straight 20-win season without a Cy Young.

"I'd like to win it," Welch said. "Who wouldn't? But with so many guys having excellent seasons... If somebody chooses to vote for me, fine. If not, then somebody very deserving will win it."

Drabek seems assured of the NL honor. At 21-6, he was the league's only 20-game winner. His ERA was 2.87. Ramon Martinez was 19-6 with a 3.00 ERA and led the majors with 11 complete games. Frank Viola of New York is 0-1 in two tries to win his 20th.

Rookie
Sandy Alomar Jr., of Cleveland has the edge in the AL. A fine defensive catcher, he was hitting .287 with 64 RBIs. Kevin Maas of the Yankees had 20 homers in 238 at-bats, and Boston outfielder Carlos Quintana was hitting .286 with 65 RBIs.

The NL rookie race comes down to a matter of styles — the speedster Delino DeShields and the slugger Dave Justice. DeShields, a second baseman, was hitting .291 with 40 stolen bases for Montreal. Justice, an outfielder, had 28 homers and 76 RBIs for Atlanta.

"DeShields has had a good year, but I think it depends on what type player you like," Justice said.

Home Runs
Fielder's 48 gave him the runaway lead over Mark McGwire of Oakland, who had 39, and teammate Jose Canseco with 37. If Fielder breaks the 50-homer barrier, he'll be the first in the AL since Roger Maris (61) and Mickey Mantle (54) did it in the same year, 1961.

Sandberg was in a much closer race with 38. Strawberry had 37 and Kevin Mitchell of San Francisco had 35.

RBIs
Again, Fielder, at 126, was way ahead of Gruber at 113 and McGwire with 107. In the NL, Bonilla was one ahead of Joe Carter of San Diego. If Carter overtakes him, he would become the first player ever to win the RBI title in both leagues. He led the AL with 121 in 1986 at Cleveland.

Batting Average
McGee left the NL batting .335. Lenny Dykstra of Philadelphia was at .327, and Eddie Murray of Los Angeles was third at .325.

Former prodigy Shriver planning her comeback

By Beth Harris
The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Pam Shriver watches 14-year-old tennis sensation Jennifer Capriati with a mixture of envy and awe.

As a 16-year-old amateur, Shriver capped her own glorious summer with a runner-up finish to Chris Evert in the 1978 U.S. Open.

Capriati reached the fourth rounds of Wimbledon and the U.S. Open this summer in the splashiest debut since Shriver, Tracy Austin and Andrea Jaeger were tennis' new kids on the block.

But injuries knocked out Austin and Jaeger by the mid-1980s, leaving Shriver as the lone survivor.

Now 28, she's planning a comeback after undergoing surgery in June for torn cartilage in her right shoulder. The injury is the first serious one of Shriver's 12-year career.

"Everyone's cautioning me, 'Don't hurry back,'" Shriver said Thursday during a visit to Indianapolis for meetings with the President's Council on Physical Fitness. "I don't think it's too late. A lot of it just depends on my own desire."

Ranked as high as No. 3 in the world in 1984, '85 and '88, Shriver has slipped to No. 33 after playing just 13 singles matches this year.

She says her fighting spirit was bolstered by the over-30 set's strong showings in this year's Grand Slam tournaments.

Ivan Lendl won the Australian Open, Andre

Gomez upset Andre Agassi to win the French Open, Martina Navratilova won her record ninth Wimbledon singles title and John McEnroe reached the semifinals of the U.S. Open.

"You've got to look for motivating factors, something a little extra to give you a kick because it's easy to just sit back and rest on past successes and say 'Let's leave it to the kids,'" Shriver said.

Capriati nearly stole the show this summer from such veterans as Navratilova, Steffi Graf, Monica Seles and Gabriela Sabatini.

"She's had an incredible amount of attention. With that attention usually comes the expectations, comes pressure. People are a lot smarter now as to how much is too much, but there's no guarantees," said Shriver, who upset Navratilova in reaching the '78 U.S. Open final.

"At the moment, she seems to be a little immune to it, but through the years there's always been a pattern that you tend to find out more about yourself the second year."

"If you took a graph of top players who burst onto the scene, their second year they've had some adversity they've had to deal with and what happens then?"

At 6 a.m. Thursday, Shriver was practicing at the Indianapolis Indoor Sports Center with coaches from the United States Tennis Association.

Indianapolis is a USTA regional training site and frequent stopover for touring pros who want to tune-up their games or physical conditioning.

Connor clears blues barriers

By Brett Ratner
The Daily Iowan

The general conception of the blues guitarist might be an unshaven, scraggly dude slinging a beat-up Fender Strat. It might seem unlikely, then, for a young woman from Massachusetts to take the highly competitive Chicago blues scene by storm.

But Joanna Connor says: "Believe It!"

Connor, one of the most respected blues guitarists of the last two years, will be performing Friday, Sept. 28, at F.B. & Co. in Waubeek, Iowa. Opening for Connor will be the band Killin Floor. The show starts at 7 p.m.; general admission tickets are $12 and are available locally at B.J. Records, 6 1/2 S. Dubuque St. (For directions to Waubeek, see accompanying map.)

Connor, backed up by her new band, the BluesMasters, is one of the hottest new talents to hit the Chicago blues scene. Under her belt are performances on the main stage at the Chicago Blues Festival plus several gigs with such greats as Buddy Guy, Lonnie Brooks, A.C. Reed and Albert Collins.

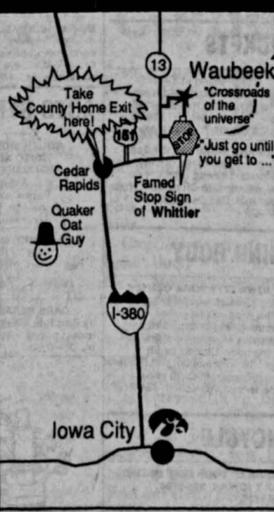

Adding to her impressive list of credentials is her debut album, "Believe It!" — which has won the acclaim of Guitar World magazine, Guitar for the Practicing Musician, plus newspapers in Houston, Boston and, of course, Chicago.

Of the album's title, Connor says, "We weren't sure what to name the album — and a lot of people still were skeptical that a woman could play blues guitar — so I thought it would be cool to tell everyone to believe it!" Her debut release should leave no one who hears it skeptical. The album acts as a forum to showcase her obvious prowess on the guitar. But "Believe It!" shines where most guitar-oriented albums fall short, in that it is well-done throughout.

Connor is quick to praise the talent of her back-up band, and it more than lives up to its billing; Guitarist Anthony Palmer, bassist Stan Mixon and drummer B.J. Jones cover a variety of styles without missing a beat. True professionals, they're able to show off a little without dominating Connor's own performance.

The tunes chosen are a tasteful mix of originals and covers. Hot spots are "I'm Satisfied" and a killer version of Aretha Franklin's "Dr. Feelgood." Needless to say, Connor rips through the guitar solos — but the listener is pleasantly surprised to find that the vocals are every bit as strong. Overall, "Believe It!" delivers a strong variety of funk, rock and straight-ahead blues.

"We've played (in Waubeek) for the past couple of years and it has always been a party — we like to get people dancing and having a great time."

Joanna Connor

Connor's diversity of styles and influences found its roots in her hometown, far away from Chicago. Growing up in Worcester, Mass., she was introduced to various styles of music by her mother. "When I was about 7, my mom bought me an acoustic guitar and I started taking classical guitar lessons. I really didn't get into it and it collected dust for several years."

In high school, she took up the guitar again and played and sang in several bands. But her most important experience was her first trip to Chicago. "A friend of mine and I decided to road trip to Chicago to check it out. I had the best time. We were too young to get into most of the blues bars but we were able to get into a few, and I had the time of my life."

That experience stuck in her head and a couple of years later, she decided to move there permanently. She tried her hand playing in several bars, eventually acquiring a reputation as a strong young player.

Guitarist Lonnie Brooks provided her first break into the scene, allowing her to play a couple of guitar solos during one of his shows. Brooks, as well as other players on hand, were impressed enough that word of her abilities quickly spread throughout the tight-knit blues scene. Connor's fame has only escalated since then.

At Friday's show you can expect the same type of hard-core blues that won her fame in Chicago, but Connor stresses that variety will be a positive aspect: "We will play some soul, R&B and more straight-ahead rock. We've played there for the past couple of years and it has always been a party — we like to get people dancing and having a great time."

Currently, Connor is working on her next album, which she says will contain more original songs. Also, the addition of a saxophone/keyboardist will diversify the band's sound. She has been collaborating with producer Jim Gains, who has worked with Carlos Santana and Stevie Ray Vaughan.
