

2 Iowa military units head to gulf; IC National Guard on alert

The Associated Press and The Daily Iowan

More than 120 members of the Iowa City 209th Medical Company National Guard unit were put on alert for active duty Monday.

Lt. Col. Robert King said the Iowa City unit and the 134th Medical Company of Washington, Iowa, were alerted for active duty. Meanwhile, two other units — from Mason City and Council Bluffs — became the first Iowa units to actually leave for Saudi Arabia.

The deployment is part of a huge new surge of Americans being sent to the region in hopes of putting additional pressure on Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait.

Members of the National Guard and Reserve can be called to active duty for up to 180 days in response to national emergencies.

In a televised interview with KGAN Channel 2 News, King said putting the guard units on "indefinite alert" status is directly attributable to Bush's decision to send more troops to the Middle East.

Actual dates for entry into active duty and departure have not been received for the Iowa City and Washington units, King said.

The Iowa City 209th unit is a medical clearing company that treats wounded soldiers as they are evacuated, then returns them to duty or decides they should be further evacuated.

Sgt. 1st Class Michael McCandless, from the Washington unit, said he was notified Monday that "with a word" he could be packing his bags.

"I'm just starting to come to grips with this," McCandless said. "Right now, I'm worried about my family and getting ready." Washington's unit, an ambulance company that transports medical evacuees, has an authorized strength of 107.

"I don't think I know how I feel. I've only known for part of a day, and it really hasn't sunk in yet," McCandless said.

"This is a new experience for most of us," he added. "I've never been activated before, and I'm both scared and excited."

King's announcement came as Iowa's first

UI, regents put case to rest

7-year harassment ordeal will be resolved by Friday

By Andy Brownstein and Diana Wallace
The Daily Iowan

The UI has agreed to settle the case of Dr. Jean Jew, putting to rest the five-year-old legal battle that has divided faculty and administrators.

In an official statement released Monday, UI President Hunter Rawlings said "a settlement in principle" has been reached on the case, and that he is "confident" that final settlement documents will be signed by Friday.

The announcement, which was read by Vice President Peter Nathan during a public meeting Monday, came at a time when several members of the UI community had expressed anger at the decision to appeal.

The meeting had been planned by the Jean Jew Justice Committee to protest the apparent stalemate on settling the case, and several faculty members had indicated they were planning to begin a work strike. Also Monday, more than 150 medical students sent a petition to Nathan and College of Medicine Dean John Eckstein asking that the appeal be dropped.

Before a full audience in Van Allen Lecture Room 1, the statement of settlement was met with cheers, applause and teary eyes because the case, which began in 1985 but stems back nearly two decades, was finally settled.

Apologies due

"(The cases) cast a long shadow over the university's community and engendered debate, controversy and doubt about the university's commitment to the principles of equal employment opportunity and professional working relationships," said Rawlings, who was in Kansas City Monday. "Dr. Jew deserves our apologies and our respect for her stand."

Anatomy Professor Ronald Bergman, long a supporter of Jew, said Eckstein should apologize as well. Bergman and others told the DI that Eckstein has said that he would not support a court-ordered promotion. Eckstein was unavailable for comment.

The terms of the settlement are that all of the orders of U.S. District Judge Harold Vietor — who ruled in August that the UI and regents were liable for 12 years of sexual harassment against Jew — will now be implemented.

Vietor ordered the UI to promote Jew to full professor, award her nearly $100,000 in back pay and benefits retroactive to 1984 and provide her with a hostility-free work environment.

On Friday, Vietor denied a motion for a staying order that would have halted the implementation of his ruling while the UI and the regents appealed the case.

"Dr. Jew deserves our apologies and our respect for her stand."

Jew elated

Jew found Monday's announcement almost hard to believe after seven years of fighting the UI.

"I certainly didn't expect any announcement today," she said.

But Jew, who received a standing ovation from the audience, said the fight against sexual harassment at the UI is far from over.

"It's easy to get cynical about words like diversity, affirmative action, justice and equal opportunity for all," she said. "There is reason for hope and optimism. . . . But we should always remain vigilant because complacency is our worst enemy."

Court documents show that the UI and Jew settled on a reimbursement of $895,000 in attorney's fees, considerably less than the original amount sought by Jew's lawyer, Carolyn Chalmers.

Chalmers would not comment on recent developments. But Faculty Senate President Steve Collins said a more complete report on the details of the settlement will be made available Friday.

Safety monitor touted for incinerator

The Daily Iowan

The UI will look at additional monitoring systems for the Oakdale radioactive waste incinerator, according to an announcement released Monday.

A series of studies has been initiated to study the possibility of a system to monitor the incinerator, which is designed to cremate animal remains containing low-level radiation.

Safety concerns of local environmental groups, incinerator employees and area residents led to the development of the study, according to a UI press release.

Last month the UI halted further testing of the incinerator. Approximately 900 barrels containing the animal remains are stored at Oakdale awaiting incineration.

In a statement released Friday, UI Vice President for Research James Morrison asserted that the Eased credit conditions boost economic activity

By Martin Crutsinger
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve, responding to increasing signs of a recession, soon will cut interest rates in a move that should prompt banks to lower a variety of consumer and business rates, many private economists predicted Monday.

The Fed's credit easing is likely to spur a one-half percentage point cut in the prime lending rate, and home mortgage rates should decline modestly as well, many analysts said.

Any reduction in the prime rate, which has been stuck at 10 percent since January, would be seen as a boost to economic activity because about one-third of all consumer and business loans are tied to changes in the prime.

The Fed's top policy-making body, the Federal Open Market Committee, will meet behind closed doors Tuesday to map interest rate strategy.

Many economists were forecasting that Fed officials would, at the very least, vote to lower the federal funds rate, the interest banks charge each other on overnight loans.

Some analysts were looking for an even more dramatic signal that the Fed was easing credit conditions in the form of a cut in the Fed's discount rate, the interest the Fed charges to commercial banks.

There was less consensus on that development, however. The Fed hasn't reduced its discount rate, which now stands at 7 percent, in more than four years.

Instead, the central bank has been concentrating on the federal funds rate, an interest level the Fed can control by deciding how much cash to supply to the banking system.

The central bank trimmed the federal funds rate from 8 percent to 7.75 percent less than two weeks ago as its endorsement of the deficit-cutting package that finally won congressional approval.

Until recently, the Fed has been reluctant to ease credit because of fears the country was on the verge of an inflationary spiral caused by the jump in oil prices after Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

However, the jump in oil prices apparently has not become embedded in other costs because of weak demand. With evidence of a recession growing and with oil prices falling, the Fed has the room to reduce interest rates to lessen the severity of the economic slump, analysts said.

"We can't really argue very much any more about whether the country is in a recession, but we can still argue about how bad it is going to be," said David Wyss, chief financial economist at DRI-McGraw Hill. "I think the Fed will work to keep the recession from being a severe one."

Wyss was one of the economists

Bush's gulf policy concerns Congress

By Jim Drinkard
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Members of Congress expressed increasing worry Monday over President Bush's latest moves in the Persian Gulf, warning that he is stepping out ahead of his carefully created international consensus and that Americans as well as allies may balk at going to war.

"If George Bush wants his presidency to die in the Arabian desert, he's going to get his wish," Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said in an interview.

Bush's spokesman quickly retorted, "Not a shot's been fired. What are these guys talking about?"

The spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said Bush has no intention of leaving Congress out of his decision-making.

"They know what we're doing," Fitzwater said. "They've been kept informed every step of the way. It's appropriate that they be cautious, that they express these concerns. There's nothing wrong with that."

Following Bush's announcement last week that the United States will begin a huge new deployment to gain an offensive capability in the region, the tone on Capitol Hill has shifted from cautious support to apprehension.

Speaking in Albany, Ga., on Monday, Democratic Sen. Wyche Fowler said Congress should come back into session after Thanksgiving to debate the issue and to better define America's goals: "What will constitute victory, how long it might take and, more importantly, to pursue every economic and diplomatic strategy, so that hopefully we can eliminate the military option."

Moynihan's comment was among the harshest assessments yet of the president's handling of the crisis, which has enjoyed broad if nervous support from Congress since Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2.

Others, including Rep. William Broomfield, R-Mich., the senior GOP member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, have voiced concern over the president's failure to consult broadly with Congress on the latest deployment.

But Fitzwater said public support for Bush "has been very strong" and added, "We don't want to go to war. President Bush will say the same things these congressmen are saying — be cautious, follow the policy, support the U.N. resolutions, consult with Congress."

Bush has said he still hopes economic sanctions backed by United Nations resolutions and supported by most foreign nations will persuade Iraq to leave Kuwait without fighting.

One senior congressional aide, speaking on condition of anonymity, said lawmakers who have spent time among the voters in recent weeks are reflecting public unease with the gulf situation. The aide predicted that Bush would come under heavier fire from the Democratic-controlled Congress in the coming weeks.

Senior administration officials, including Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Colin Powell, are to brief lawmakers on Tuesday for the first time since Congress adjourned Oct. 28. And members of the bipartisan leadership were scheduled to meet with Bush at the White House on Wednesday.

Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said he was not consulted about the latest troop buildup and received a call only Friday, the day after Bush announced it publicly.

"I haven't been told reasons why we have to rush this thing," Nunn said in a weekend television interview. "Why not let the embargo work? . . . War should be the last option."

Nunn said Bush has failed to explain, either to Congress or the American people, why the liberation of Kuwait is "an interest so important we're willing to spend thousands of American lives, if necessary."

Moynihan said he was "stunned" by last week's developments, including the announcement that U.S. troops would not be rotated

U.S. urged to use diplomacy, not war

By Lisa Gensacci
The Associated Press

World leaders on Monday urged diplomacy rather than military force to solve the Persian Gulf crisis, and Arab nations discussed holding an Arab summit that Saddam Hussein has said he might attend.

Oil prices were down more than $2 a barrel — to $31.80 — Monday afternoon, in part because traders decided that war was not imminent in the gulf.

President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt reinforced that sentiment, saying Egyptian soldiers would not enter Iraq, even if U.S. and other troops attacked. He said, however, that his troops would enter Kuwait as a peacekeeping force.

In Washington, lawmakers also urged the U.S. administration to back away from its war rhetoric.

"If George Bush wants his presidency to die in the Arabian desert, he's going at it very steadily and as if it were a plan," said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y.

White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater said later that President Bush would work closely with Congress on the crisis, but might be forced to order military action on his own in case of "unforeseen kinds of provocations."

King Hassan II of Morocco on Sunday proposed he host an Arab summit within the next week as a "last chance" for peace. Some nations endorsed that call, and Saddam said he might attend if consulted on the timing and agenda.

Saddam said the summit should discuss linking the Arab-Israeli dispute to any decision over Kuwait, which Iraq invaded and occupied on Aug. 2 in a dispute over land, oil and money.

Hunters find human skeleton in central Iowa

The Associated Press

RUNNELLS, Iowa — A human skeleton was discovered by hunters Monday in a wooded area near this south central Iowa community and investigators were trying to identify the remains.

An official said that as a matter of routine, investigators would look for clues that might link the remains to the disappearances of two

Des Moines-area news carriers in the 1980s. Authorities cordoned off the area after the skeleton was discovered about 7:30 a.m. and the Division of Criminal Investigation looked for clues at the scene — a backwater of the Des Moines River about 1½ miles southeast of Runnells.

Polk County sheriff's deputies on the scene declined to provide details on the skeleton. But sheriff's department Lt. Bill Vaughn said authorities would try to determine quickly if the remains belonged to either of two missing central Iowa news carriers.

Johnny Gosch, then aged 12, disappeared Sept. 5, 1982, as he was about to deliver Sunday newspapers in his West Des Moines neighborhood. Two years later, another carrier, Eugene Martin, then 14, disappeared near his Des Moines home as he was delivering papers. There has been no trace of either boy.

Interview service benefits students

By Dale Wegner
The Daily Iowan

The UI's December graduates are preparing to greet the real world — but will they all have jobs?

The Business and Liberal Arts Placement Office brings companies to the UI to give students an opportunity to interview for jobs without leaving campus.

According to Patricia Hurley, the acting director of the office, 1200 to 1500 students are registered for on-campus interviews.

"The companies come right to campus and most of them have had good experiences with Iowa grads," said Tracy Coppess, UI senior and participant in on-campus interviewing. "They've already got a good impression of you."

Hurley said the placement office offers more than just interviewing opportunities to interested students.

"I encourage them to go a step further, to explore other opportunities than on-campus interviewing," said Hurley. "We do have a number of directories for liberal arts majors in which they can locate a company for themselves."

UI senior Elizabeth Brown said the resources at the placement office have been very helpful in her job search.

"There's a lot of information about the companies," said Brown. "It helps you get to know who the company is."

But not all job-seeking students participate in on-campus interviewing.

UI senior Jeff Brennan said he does not feel on-campus interviewing is a necessity.

"I go through the paper, and I talk

"We're not seeing a lack of opportunity, just a lack of students seeing the opportunity."

to my friends to find out what's out there," he said. "There are jobs out there if you know where to look."

Joe Vandenberg, also a senior, said most of the companies who come to the UI to interview are seeking business majors.

"I don't want to waste a lot of time interviewing with people who don't want a communications major," said Vandenberg.

But Hurley said that most companies are receptive to non-business majors as well. "Liberal arts majors are attractive to many of the companies that come to the university," she said.

The number of companies that interview at the UI has remained stable. Hurley said while the number of available openings may be down, companies are still hiring.

"We're not seeing a lack of opportunity, just a lack of students seeing the opportunity," she said.

One of the reasons the companies aren't getting a full slate of interviews is that many May graduates don't participate in the fall interviews — which Hurley said is a mistake.

"Many of the opportunities in the fall are for May graduates," she said.

Election of socialist to House a beginning, says UI student

By Jessica Davidson
The Daily Iowan

When socialist Bernie Sanders' election to the House of Representatives was announced last Tuesday, one television anchor jokingly observed that socialists can't get elected anywhere in Eastern Europe but they're getting elected here.

The newly elected Vermont representative, Sanders, is the mayor of Burlington, Vermont, and a well-known socialist. He ran as an independent while supporting socialist ideals and surprised many people with his win.

UI political science graduate student Chris Fleury was a volunteer in several of Sanders' mayoral campaigns and was involved in Sanders' last congressional campaign in 1988.

He said when Sanders was elected mayor the first time by a narrow margin, the initial reaction was one of shock.

"A lot of people were scared to have a socialist in an official office," Fleury said. "They thought it was a horrible mistake and in two years they could get rid of him."

But the next time, Sanders won by a much larger percentage.

In this latest election, Fleury said he was particularly impressed because Sanders — who is a socialist, Jewish and not originally from Vermont — won against an incumbent Republican.

"This country is ripe for a major rethinking on how politics work. The two major parties don't have a really innovative vision for the future, and people are not happy."

Chris Fleury
UI political science graduate student

"It certainly doesn't fit what we learn in the political science department," Fleury laughed.

Fleury said one reason Sanders was elected is because the public is dissatisfied with the Democratic and Republican parties because they "say the same things." He said the two parties don't ask certain fundamental questions about government, such as who really holds the power.

"Bernie came along and did ask — and the people responded," Fleury said.

Although Sanders' election is probably not indicative of a new socialist America, Fleury said it is a beginning.

"(Sanders' election) is an opportunity for progressive ideas to take root," he said. "His real impact is not on the House floor or with one vote. It will be as a visible spokesperson raising issues that are not usually recognized. He will be sitting among the congressmen and forcing everyone to hear."

Fleury said any steps toward socialism could be a long time in coming, but he said he felt some changes might happen soon.

"This country is ripe for a major rethinking on how politics work," he said. "The two major parties don't have a really innovative vision for the future, and people are not happy." He cited the recent budget crisis as an example.

He explained that in many cases, Eastern European countries have been suffering under a misnamed totalitarian system — not a true socialist democracy.

He said in the U.S., people should feel freer to respond to a socialist system because they don't have the "tradition of anxiety" found in some Eastern European countries. He said it is "not unrealistic to believe in a new vision for socialist politics in this country."

Other people in the Iowa City area also view socialism as a viable form of government, saying it has been around a long time, gathered a fairly large following and made its own contributions to this country's laws. Iowa City councilwoman Karen Kubby, a member of Bread and Roses, the Iowa City chapter of the Socialist Party USA, said socialism had been given a bad name in the U.S.

"The cold war really scared a lot of people," she said. "I'm glad to see that they aren't scared off by that label anymore, that they will listen to the issues and the positions that socialist candidates have."

UI political science Assistant Professor Michael Jogerst said many people's distrust of socialism also stems from a lack of understanding.

"We don't have a real historical understanding here. The social democratic tradition does have a foothold in this country. In some places, it's actually prevalent," he said, referring to politics in North and South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Although much of the common rhetoric about socialism is incorrect, Jogerst said it is difficult to define socialism.

"There are as many definitions of what socialism is as what Christianity is," he said. "It's hard to nail down."

But supporters do work from some basic principles.

"(Socialism) means educating people about issues and then giving them opportunities to get involved so that they participate and have more control over their own lives," according to Kubby, citing worker-owned business and civil rights as some examples of public involvement.

"Our elected officials should be people's people," Kubby said, adding she has tried to promote a grassroots link to her politics.

"Some people felt like they didn't have an ear on the city council. I'm someone more like them, from the streets, from the neighborhood," she said.

UI history Professor Jeffrey Cox, a member of the Democratic Socialists of America, said socialists like Kubby can make better politicians.

"A socialist has some advantage over an ordinary liberal Democrat because they're more in touch with public opinion," Cox said. He used the example of socialized medicine, which is supported by many people.

"There are as many definitions of what socialism is as what Christianity is. It's hard to nail down."

Michael Jogerst
UI assistant professor

The Republicans and even the Democrats have not adequately addressed the question — while the socialists have, he said.

"On that issue alone, there's a large constituency for socialist politics," he said. "With good politicians like Bernie Sanders there will be many more elected socialist officials."

Although he said he couldn't estimate how much support socialism has, Cox said in some ways the support for certain socialist positions, such as health care and employee rights, has never been higher.

Kubby pointed out that other mainstream practices were once socialist ideals — including child labor laws, social security and the 40-hour work week.

"They were once seen as outlandish and heretical," Kubby said. "Now 50 or 80 years later, they are part of our society. It's really important to have these voices on the outside screaming in, and then there's some movement."

Kubby said socialism is interested in long-term social change.

"We don't talk about social revolution, but evolution, because we realize that this is not about short-term gratification politics," she said.

In a socialist America, Kubby said, higher education could be free and available to everyone, as would community child care, health insurance and other forms of socialized medicine.

Extending trade to E. Europe takes caution

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — A legislative committee looking for ways to expand Iowa trade on Monday was warned to "tread cautiously" because it may be decades before global political shifts pay economic dividends.

The panel was told that political changes in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union "present a wealth of opportunities" but "these changes should not be seen as a panacea."

"It's going to be a long time before they open up," said George Caudill, head of the Iowa

International Development Foundation, a privately financed development group.

In the months since political turmoil began rocking Iron Curtain countries, there have been a host of committees, trade missions and consultants seeking ways to expand the state's exports of farm commodities.

They argue that the agricultural system in USSR and Eastern Europe badly needs to be modernized, and the region is a natural target for the state's farm technology. Those newly opened markets could be a natural exporting target for the state, they insist.

Caudill had a much more cautious view, warning that the economies of many of those countries remain in shambles.

"The basic reason is a lack of hard currency," he warned. "They need our tractors, but how are they going to pay for them?"

There will need to be a major rebuilding of the economic foundation of many of those countries, as well as development of a new generation schooled in the fundamentals of a free market economy.

"Putting money into Central and Eastern Europe now is really risky," he told the European Trade Task Force, a committee of legislators and public representatives.

Walesa invites students from Iowa to visit Poland

The Associated Press

STORM LAKE, Iowa — Polish labor leader Lech Walesa on Monday invited an Iowa college audience to vacation in his country and encouraged the students to start businesses in his homeland.

Speaking from Poland to an audience at the northwest Iowa campus of Buena Vista College, Walesa said he wants to do everything possible to pump life into an economy that he said was left crippled by communist rule.

"So you would all come to us and spend your dollars in Poland... and on the basis of these dollars you will help us develop our technology and our civilization," he said, speaking through an interpreter. Students could see and hear Walesa, and he could hear the students.

Jean Jew vs. The University of Iowa: A Public Discussion

Monday, November 12, 4:30-6pm
Lecture Room 1, Van Allen Hall

It has been a month since the university filed its appeal in the sexual harassment case of Jean Jew vs. the University of Iowa and the Board of Regents. We believe it is essential that all members of the university community have an opportunity to discuss the issues in this case. We have invited President Rawlings to attend and communicate his position on the merits of the appeal.

Students, staff and faculty are all urged to attend.
Please come and share your views.

Contributions to defray the costs of informing the university community about this issue can be sent to the Jean Jew Justice Committee, 18 Forest Glen, Iowa City, Iowa 52245.

in the history of the University of Iowa has come to an end," Collins said.

Suit filed in 1985

Jew first filed suit against the UI and the regents in 1985 for failing to address her complaints, even after a UI faculty committee ruled the previous year that she had been sexually harassed.

Jew also filed a defamation suit against fellow anatomy Professor Robert Tomanek, who was believed to be responsible for spearheading a smear campaign against her. He was found guilty by a Johnson County jury in June and was ordered to pay Jew $35,000 in damages. Jew has not yet received payment from Tomanek.

Several faculty and staff, including Jew, said the UI should seek sanctions against several of the professors who initiated the defamatory rumors against her. William Kaelber and Tomanek, among others, were singled out in Vietor's decision for calling Jew a "chink," "slut" and "whore," and for posting sex-based graffiti about Jew throughout the anatomy department.

Nathan said UI administrators have contemplated sanctions but have not yet come to any decisions.

Community support

Several faculty members said a settlement could not have occurred if professors had not put pressure on the UI and the regents to drop the appeal.

UI Law Professor Peter Shane said the "single biggest factor" in mobilizing the community was the Jean Jew Justice Committee's distribution of Vietor's ruling to all faculty members.

"A large number of people spoke to me — people who don't normally comment on these sorts of things," he said, "and the question that every one of them raised was, 'Why does the university possibly think it can successfully appeal this case?' People from all political stripes and predispositions said that they found the institutional resistance to remedying the case to be incomprehensible."

But in a bold proclamation, Nathan said Jew's seven-year legal battle will be the last of its kind at the UI. He said he recently appointed Associate Vice President Sara Wolfson to deal specifically with faculty grievances, and added that his office is seeking informal, early resolutions to such cases.

"I would be willing to bet anybody anything that this sort of thing won't happen again," Nathan said.

But many were unconvinced. "Do you have a buck?" called out one member of the audience.

"Part of Judge Vietor's ruling was that a copy be distributed to all UI administrators," said Margery Wolf, a professor of anthropology. "Perhaps there should be an exam."

AAUP official unconvinced

One professor, who has worked on dozens of faculty grievances over the years, said many of Rawlings' and Nathan's words rang hollow.

Rawlings' statement that the UI "must continue to demonstrate that it will not tolerate" harassment runs contrary to the experience of Edward Kottick, a UI music professor. Kottick is the chairman of the Academic Freedom and Tenure Committee of the Iowa chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

"At this very moment, there is exactly that kind of harassment going on," Kottick said, pointing to the Jew case. "It's been going on for years and the university knows about it."

Kottick accused the UI of "foot-dragging" on five current faculty grievances, two of which he labeled as potentially explosive as the Jew case.

Though the AAUP was initially optimistic about Rawlings' commitment to ending harassment, Kottick said he sees little to differentiate this administration's stand on faculty issues from that of past UI leaders.

"The difference between the last administration and this one is that the last appeared to ignore problems and the current one says they're appalled that these problems exist, but still does nothing," he said.

Kottick said the UI stonewalls faculty grievances even when the abuses are obvious and offers settlements that "range from disappointing to insulting to laughable."

"If we didn't know better, we would say that they were designed to drive faculty members into the arms of their lawyers," he said.

Jew herself acknowledged that she had many factors in her favor when she decided to fight the UI in court. Jew said the fact that she was single and had tenure and a high salary set her apart from most faculty who can not afford to enter into long and costly legal battles with the university.

Kottick agreed. "Most people who are in those positions just give up," he said. "But there are some, like Jew, who will fight for their rights until their last dying breath."

military units headed for the Persian Gulf.

Most of the Council Bluffs-based 915th Transportation Company left for Saudi Arabia on Sunday, and the rest of the Army Reserve unit left Monday night.

A Mason City National Guard unit, the 1133rd Transportation Company, also left for the gulf.

Both units have been training at Fort McCoy, Wis., since being activated following Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait. Both were being dispatched from Wisconsin.

The two planes carrying the 1133rd left Fort McCoy at 4:45 p.m. and 5:45 p.m., King said. They are to arrive in Saudi Arabia about 22 hours after they left.

The remaining members of the 915th who did not leave Sunday traveled with the Mason City unit on Monday, King said.

The exact destination of the Iowa units has not been released.

"Nobody is saying they don't want to go," said 1st Sgt. Charles Lee, 43, of the Council Bluffs reserve unit.

This is the second activation for Lee, whose reserve unit also was activated in 1968 and sent to Vietnam.

"The scariest part is getting on that airplane," he said. "When I left for Vietnam was the biggest day in my life. When the (airplane) wheels lift off the ground is the toughest part. It's the unknown."

"I just hope everyone realizes how patriotic these people are," Lee said, "and how important it is that they come home to jobs."

Asked for any parting messages, Capt. Jaci Knappenberger said, "Wish us well and tell our people we love them."

Incinerator

pathological waste incinerator will not operate without "complete assurances" that it poses no danger to human health and is not an environmental threat.

"I do not approve any incineration plan that is not appropriately safe and defensible," he said.

The UI studies will be conducted by William Twaler, director of the Health Protection Office, and will include the following elements:

- Examination of a stack monitoring system for radioactivity, dioxins and metals. This system would sample exhaust gases, passing them through a carbon filter, spun glass and/or paper filters, liquid scintillation traps and dry ice traps.

Samples would be analyzed at the UI and by an independent laboratory, using radiochemical analysis, gas chromatography, mass spectrometry and atomic absorption techniques.

■ Evaluation of experimental computer software that would enable UI Health Protection Office staff to determine if there would be any low-level radioactivity emissions from the incinerator from any materials expected to be burned and, if so, what the pattern and intensity of those levels would be.

■ Baseline radiation monitoring in the vicinity of the incinerator and the surrounding area.

Morrison addressed the levels of radioactivity at Oakdale are "extraordinary low, nearly background levels. We are shipping out radioactive materials with long half-lives. Most of the radioactive material at Oakdale can be handled without any protective clothing."

Fed

predicting the Fed would also cut its discount rate. But other analysts said they weren't looking for a change in the discount rate until the Fed becomes more convinced that inflationary pressures are easing.

"The Fed will be reluctant to do anything more than a modest cut in the federal funds rate for fear that it could put severe downward pressure on the dollar," said Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co.

If foreign investors abandoned the U.S. currency precipitously in favor of higher rates of return overseas, it could worsen America's inflation problems by making the cost of imports rise.

Sato's paintings view West

By Lindsay Alan Park
The Daily Iowan

The meeting of East and West has frequently provided a context for UI Museum of Art exhibitions, especially during the directorship of the late Mary Kujawski.

"Shozo Sato: Recent Sumi-e Paintings of the American West," which Kujawski arranged, continues this bridging of cultures, this time featuring an artist known for his use of Japanese techniques to render American and European subjects.

Kujawski was a former student of Sato, who is a professor of art and artist-in-residence at the University of Illinois-Urbana. Sato teaches Zen aesthetics, Japanese Kubuki theater (for which he has adapted Western masterpieces, such as "Macbeth") and is skilled in the arts of tea ceremony and flower arrangement.

In Sumi-e painting, water and black ink are painted on rice paper with soft brushes. Sato gave a public demonstration of the technique Nov. 4 at the museum.

The dark, simple frames and the elegant silk borders of the 18 pieces further enhance Sato's Japanese style and make it clear that the overall aesthetic effects of this body of work depend very little on Western influences.

Art

Part of the pleasure in the exhibit, however, is just seeing the way some distinctly American land forms (such as Monument Valley's mesas and buttes) are handled by Sato and placed in an unusual artistic context.

Not that recognizability is the whole point. Clearly Sato is after the most visually interesting aspects of the landscapes and not necessarily what would make the best design for a tourist postcard.

The focus of "Ancient Bristle Cone: Great Basin National Park" (1990), for example, is a gnarled tree with a less-distinct alpine background that we could easily assume to be Japan, if we didn't know better.

Throughout the works, Sato clearly appreciates and takes advantage of visual effects the Recognizability isn't the whole point. . . . Sato uses his understanding of the accidental to ultimately gain control of the images.

medium creates independently of the artist. Sato uses his understanding of the accidental to ultimately gain control of the images.

For example, in "Vail in Snow: Colorado" repeated applications of an inked brush on water-saturated paper produce a series of beautiful, conical marks that are remarkably true to the essence of a distant row of pines on a snowy mountain.

With the subtle bleeding of the ink, Sato gives us more to see than if he had applied controlled details of branches.

The most immediately apparent

Zen influence in these pieces, however, is the reliance on space — within the landscape elements, but especially around them.

In "A Thousand Towers: Canyonlands" (1981), Sato has allowed the paper-white form of the sky to be so dominant in the composition that if not for the resulting tension, the viewer might forget about the rugged landscape.

Sato's paintings will be on display through Jan. 6.

The UI Museum of Art, on North Riverside Drive, is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from noon-5 p.m. Admission is free.

Jacob Singer (Tim Robbins) is plunged into an ice bath to bring down an unexplained fever in "Jacob's Ladder."

'Jacob's Ladder' is a pretentious cheat

Showing at the Englert,

Jacob Singer, Tim Robbins is filled with a childlike confusion and wonder; we're meant to look into his wide-eyed innocent face and want to — well, help him any way we can. The problem is, the only way that this hallucinating dude can be helped is by a few hard slaps to the face. Wake up, already! you may want to scream.

Singer works as a mailman in New York City, depicted throughout as a subterranean hell. Bad things keep happening to him: Scary dreams, unexplained attacks by phantomlike creatures, flashbacks of a gory battle in the jungles of Vietnam in 1971 (flashbacks, by the way, that are impossible assuming that the film is set in the present — the lead character can't be more than 30 years old).

The cause of these horrifying visions, which strike Singer at most inopportune moments, isn't revealed until the end — the very end. In between, suspicion shuttles back and forth between chemical experimentation by the U.S. government and the suggestion that Singer is being haunted by an inability to forget about his dead son. In the course of one evening, he's subjected to malevolent stares by spirits with violently vibrating heads, and witnesses his girlfriend apparently being attacked by a huge flying bat.

The key word here is apparently; Lyne keeps taking us to the brink of revelation, then reveals that the visceral shocks we've just received aren't really real. After a while it ceases to matter what sorts of grotesqueries the film throws at us. A nurse with horns protruding from her head, a disgusting looking saran-wrapped object in a refrigerator, repellent scenes on the New York subway, — all of it can be discounted. (We're tempted to follow the lead of Singer's hysterically unsympathetic girlfriend, who remarks after one of his convulsions, "I've never been so embarrassed in my life.")

The movie's baroque, ominous style is lifted from Alan Parker's "Angel Heart," but that's where the comparison ends; where Parker's film raised genuine questions that required a second viewing, "Jacob's Ladder" is stuck with a facile, sappy ending that negates its comparatively disturbing aspects.

Watching this movie is like seeing the death mask from 'The Exorcist' flashed over and over, without explanation.

Dream movies are stupid as a rule; all of us should have recognized as children the essential cheat behind the concept. "Jacob's Ladder" is probably the ultimate dream movie, attempting to establish a mystery completely without context. Watching it is like seeing the death mask from "The Exorcist" flashed over and over, without explanation. I don't think I've ever seen another film in which substance was so thoroughly overwhelmed by style. "Jacob's Ladder" is shamelessly pretentious.

Food Porn Update: I'm happy to report that the Shakey's Buffet commercial shown before movies in local theaters — the one featuring obscenely glistening closeups of chicken wings, pizza, cherry cobbler et al. ad nauseam — has finally started eliciting the appropriate viewer response. At the "Jacob's Ladder" showing I attended last week at the Englert, the audience openly groaned and made retching noises as the folksy narrator rhapsodized over "the dessert of your choice." Take heed, Shakey's — you're making good folk ill.

NO NEW TAXES

Again?

President George Bush bungled again. His most recent "no new taxes" pledge suggests that he lacks the sense a president should have.

During the 1988 campaign, Bush came across as a person who would stand firm and veto any new taxes. In fact, his pledge was a major factor in his victory. But he destroyed his credibility when he broke that pledge. Yet, even when he consented to new taxes, Bush appeared to be acting in the country's best interests. Americans ought to respect a president who acknowledges budget realities and recognizes solutions to the federal deficit, even if it means sacrificing a major campaign promise.

But Bush's new pledge, proclaimed after Republican electoral setbacks last Tuesday, indicate his willingness to abandon his commitment to fiscal realities. His new commitment seems to be to his popularity, ignoring the realities he may discover in the future. Republican success and re-election in 1992 are doubtful if Bush insists on making pledges and breaking them later. GOP success hinges on the party's ability to convince the electorate that it is the party of prosperity — not the party of the rich.

Even more alarming is that Bush failed to assess how a new pledge would come across. When the president changed his mind the first time by agreeing to raise taxes, his popularity took a nose dive. It is hard to see how Bush could have thought another change of mind would help. It would have been prudent in this situation for Bush to keep his mouth shut altogether. If he wanted to restore his credibility, the president should have toned down his new stance or simply said nothing at all. And if he felt he needed to make a pledge, he should have vowed to avoid new taxes whenever possible, but leave all options open.

The United States needs a strong and credible leader. George Bush's rotating pledges are growing tiresome and un-presidential.

It's getting really old really fast

A couple of weeks ago, The Des Moines Register ran a series of articles on gays and lesbians in Iowa. In return, they received letters. A lot of letters. Many of them began with the same three words: "I'm tired of..." Letters of response ran, off and on, for over a week. Not each writer was tired, but it did seem as if a wave of narcolepsy had overtaken Iowa's heterosexual community, especially liberalist Christian quarters. They were certainly cranky about the Register's attempts to nudge them awake about gays and lesbians in the state. Now Iowa City and the University community are engaged in formal and informal discussions about homophobia and its consequences in the academy. This, too, will no doubt elicit a hearty round of negative response, much of it ill-informed and hysterical.

The good thing about such public dialogue is that issues are raised that otherwise remain internal and frequently fester, only to erupt in horrifying ways. The bad thing about it is that participants have to listen patiently while complete fools air their feelings, which of course must be respected because they are feelings and the fools feeling them are human.

But have no fear. Somewhere between measured societal discourse and hell lies the unmapped territory of newspaper columns. I hope you've at least had your first cup this morning, because it's my turn to be tired.

I'm tired of homophobia. I'm tired of people who just don't get it, people who can't believe being lesbian or gay is just the way many people are. I'm tired of people who are insulted by lesbians and gays, tired of the sort of peevishness that results in suggestions that we could change if we wanted to. We're just fine, thank you, though living in a society that spends as much time, energy and money as this one telling its queers they're crazy, intransigent and damned to the pits of hell wears a good woman down some. It strains the sense of humor, if you know what I mean.

I'm tired of seeing talented friends get good jobs in large and small towns across the nation, only to later report back their demeaning experiences at parties and in offices where queer jokes are an accepted form of entertainment. I'm tired of wasted human potential, of the energy spent by lesbians and gays and those who battle so fiercely against us, energy this country needs, energy that could change the course of world events from perilous to peaceful. I'm tired of people who refuse to grow up.

I'm tired of living in a state that is one of only eight that spends no money at all on AIDS education.

I'm tired of living in a country whose president campaigns for Sen. Jesse Helms with his party's full support. I'm tired of the hypocrisy of that party in making great show of distancing itself from David Duke at the same time. I'm tired of closeted politicians who marry to win elections and who, when elected, work against gay civil rights.

Another thing I'm tired of, especially from heterosexuals fond of trumpeting their high level of open-mindedness, is hearing it said that It's fine with ME that you're gay, but can't you just be quiet about it? No. And there's a reason for that answer, one that goes far beyond anyone's mean desire to raise a ruckus. If we are silent, we are invisible. Because, you see, we wear suits just like your suit. We have the same color of skin that you do, whatever your skin color. You can't see us and you're not looking for us anyway, so we often look just like someone you can share that great queer joke with. If we don't tell you when you are hurting us, we have to walk away swallowing more rage than a self-respecting adult can reasonably be expected to.

So in spite of your open-mindedness, we won't be able to make this a non-issue until we all admit that we know a lesbian or gay man. It won't end until fraternities, sororities, and even our athletic teams and departments publicly support the rights of their lesbian and gay members, instead of perpetuating the pointless misery they've been living in.

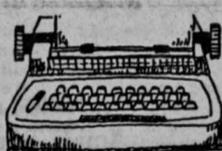

If people comprehended the debilitating effects of homophobia, if coaches realized the damage done by distraction and exhaustion in players trying to keep on top of a situation that makes them constantly insecure, I have to believe things would change. We are, after all, a country in love with statistics, especially those pertaining to productivity. Homophobia has put a hellish dent in American productivity at every level, in every area of endeavor. How could it not be so? Let's say Kinsey is off by a huge amount. Let's say the percentage is 5 percent rather than 10 (and I tend to think, knowing what I know, that it's more likely 15 or 20 rather than 10). Who in their right mind would say it's worth diminishing the capacity of 5 percent of our population for the sake of perpetuating the sham on morality that is homophobia? Who would say that a country searching for greater economic strength should do such a thing? Homophobia is bad policy, public and private. Its benefits are negligible, its drawbacks severe. I'm tired of those who are unwilling to admit that and work for change.

Higher learning

To the Editor:
Seven years ago, three members of this faculty — two women and one male — were denied promotion and two of three lost their jobs, their careers severely damaged almost beyond repair.

This time, however, all of the myriad legal maneuvers failed and the administration had to go to court and lose. Now the administration is appealing — what has the administration learned in seven years? Nothing! This is remarkable for a place of higher learning.

Election lotto

To the Editor:
We should start offering greater incentives to voters than those little metal buttons proclaiming "I voted!"

In this era of negative campaigning, which melodramatically demonstrates that voters are often forced to choose between the lesser of two evils, I support the system of the negative vote. Each voter would be able to cast either a positive vote, which would be tallied in the current manner, or a negative vote for each position or option. One negative vote would cancel out one positive vote, like the marriage between matter and anti-matter. This would give some power, which is its own incentive, back to the voter.

I also support a lottery system that would pay, let's say $10,000, to several randomly selected citizens who cast ballots. The winners of this lottery could be drawn at intervals on Election Day and announced along with incoming tallies. Instead of a day for despair, Election Day would become rather festive.

It wouldn't be difficult to fund this system. We could choose on our Iowa income tax forms to give $1 to the election lottery fund instead of either the Democratic or Republican Party. We could also toss in the money saved from dispensing with those little metal buttons.

The lottery system would go a long way to counteract the demoralization of having to vote for someone because he or she is less offensive than his or her opponent. I can't shake my feeling that no matter who wins, the electorate loses. But I would feel better about voting if there were a chance that there really was something in it for me.

Elections send GOP tumbling in defeat

Suetonius, with a journalist's eye for the telling detail, wrote that Julius Caesar, although stabbed 23 times, nevertheless arranged his toga nicely as he fell. Similarly, Republicans were decorous in defeat last Tuesday.

They insouciantly said that a loss of 27 House seats is average for a party holding the presidency during midterm elections, so a loss of at least nine or so seats 'tis a famous victory. But to understand how far the GOP has fallen, consider the historic low base from which it began this year.

Democrats were already at their highest level at midterm elections during a Republican presidency in this century (259 seats). So it was difficult for Democrats to gain ground, particularly because in 1988 only 21 House Republicans won with less than 55 percent.

But on Tuesday, a bad situation for George Bush deteriorated. He was elected two years ago with his party controlling the lowest percentage of Congress of any first-term president in this century. In his lonely victory, his party lost grounds in governorships and House races and only broke even in the Senate races. He is the first president in history to have won while his party was not gaining in any of these categories.

While Dukakis was losing 40 states, Dukakis' party was gaining two House seats. And now Democrats have been victorious in three consecutive House election cycles, the first such achievement since Democrats did it in 1954, 1956 and 1958.

In 1992, the big three (California, Texas, Florida) will elect 105 members of Congress, almost one-quarter of the House. California will have the highest percentage of the House (12 percent) of any state since New York in the 1880s (13 percent). On Tuesday, two of the three — Florida and Texas — replaced Republican governors with Democrats who will supervise redistricting of just over half — 53 — of the 105 seats.

The eight largest states (California, New York, Texas, Florida, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan) all elected governors, half of them Democrats. By 1992, these states will have redrawn the lines on 212 congressional districts. Democrats will oversee the drawing of 105 of them. Of the eight most rapidly growing states — those gaining seats in 1992 (California, Florida, Texas, Arizona, Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia, Washington) — five or six (Arizona is a cliffhanger) will have Democratic governors during the 1991 redistricting.

Democrats are even better positioned to dominate redistricting than they were in 1981. So the "struggle" for control of the House in the 1990s appears over already. The year 2002 probably will be the 48th consecutive year of Democratic control of the House.

This political season was supposed to be convulsive. But by the end of the primary season, the score was 459-1 in favor of incumbents. Of 460 governors, senators and representatives seeking re-election, just one lost a primary — and only after being convicted of a sex crime.

Four senators (a modern record) and 74 House members ran completely unopposed and about 300 additional House members were effectively unopposed (facing underfinanced opponents). So it was clear months ago that the congressional lagoon was not going to be roiled.

In the last 10 elections, (1970-1988), an average of five incumbent senators have lost. On Tuesday, only one did. And Democrats gained a Senate seat.

Regarding the Senate, Republicans are looking to 1992, when Democrats will be defending 20 seats, including eight that were won in 1986 by 52 percent of the vote or less. But for now, Bush has a problem that was bad before Tuesday and now is worse.

In Bush's first two years, the Senate has been divided 55-45 and has been truculent. (Ask John Tower. Remember the budget.) The Senate now will be divided 56-44 and will be facing a weakened Bush entering a presidential election season. One additional Democrat and increased partisanship will make Bush's life substantially more difficult.

Evidence of Republican decay is everywhere. In New York, the GOP gubernatorial candidate barely beat the Conservative Party candidate, receiving a derisory 22 percent of the vote. In Pennsylvania, the GOP gubernatorial candidate was buried by 36 points. In that swath of America from the Hudson to the Ohio border, the GOP did not even compete for executive power.

The Republican claim to be an irresistibly emerging majority was by Wednesday morning mere wreckage. Tuesday's results were not a referendum on President Bush, but they were to a significant extent a result of him.

The Republican Party's ideological profile has been blurred by Bush, who, in his first month as president, said, "the people didn't send us here to bicker." Actually, the people express themselves through two parties because they have differences worth arguing about.

A party leader who disparages arguing as bickering, and who prefers mushy bipartisanship to healthy polarizing along fault lines of principles, disarms his party and pays a price. Tuesday's results are just the first installment.

Social Security untouched by politicians' federal deficit cuts

By Alan Fram
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Monthly Social Security checks are now virtually off limits to politicians trying to cut the federal deficit because of a small change in the way the budget shortfall is calculated.

The change is a relief for 39 million elderly, handicapped and other Americans who rely on the $265 billion program — and for politicians loath to cut the politically popular pension system.

But critics say the shift formally removes the biggest single domestic program from shoulder of the burden of future budget cuts. As a result, other federal endeavors would have to bear a greater brunt of whatever reductions are made, they say.

"Whether they're elderly or children, if they're poor, they're poor," said Susan Rees, executive director of the Coalition on Human Needs, a Washington-based group that champions aid for low-income Americans of all ages. "Why should one have to sacrifice for the other."

As part of their budget deal last month, the Bush administration and congressional leaders agreed to take Social Security out of the calculations used to determine the federal deficit.

Proponents said with the pension program running an annual surplus of tens of billions of dollars, the overall budget gap was being shrunk artificially under the old system.

That sounds like a dry accounting change, but it's not. What it really means is there is no longer any reason to look to Social Security for budget savings because cutting the program won't make the pool of red ink any smaller.

Groups working for the elderly had been pressing lawmakers to make the change for years.

"They're like drug addicts; you put that money in front of them and they can't resist," said spokesman Bill Ritz of the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, which lobbies for senior citizens. "We just wanted to cure their addiction."

Until now, Social Security has been fair game for budget cutters — technically speaking. But politically, it's been off-limits for years because the elderly have proved they are a voting bloc to be reckoned with.

That lesson was driven home dramatically just a few years ago.

In 1985, the Senate's majority Republicans agreed with the White House to a deficit-reduction plan that included a freeze in Social Security's annual inflation increase.

Two months later, President Reagan backed away from the deal after Democrats agreed in return to allow higher defense spending. That left Republican lawmakers in an awkward position they soon paid for: When the 1986 election was over, the GOP had lost control of the Senate and has yet to regain it.

Ever since, budget writers have been reluctant to even consider reining Social Security costs. During this year's marathon budget bargaining, participants briefly considered restraining cost-of-living increases in the program, but the idea went nowhere.

Because it has long been politically unrealistic to take the deficit-reduction knife to the pension program, some activists say the new budget process means little.

Gulf

Minister Qian Qichen on Monday backed the call for an Arab summit.

Qian said China "will support any Arab effort to resolve the conflict. . . . If Arab leaders agree to meet in a summit, China will certainly support that."

But there was still no response from several Arab leaders and prospects for an early summit seemed dim.

The last Arab summit was held in August and ended in disarray. Mubarak last week rejected a proposal by Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev for an Arab summit, saying the Arabs were too divided to hold a productive session.

In addition, Saddam's insistence on tying his withdrawal from Kuwait to withdrawal of Israel from the West Bank and Gaza Strip was controversial. The United States and its allies have said Iraq must withdraw unconditionally from Kuwait and the issues must be dealt with separately.

In Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, the secretary-general of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council said Morocco's call for an emergency Arab summit had come too late and war was inevitable.

The council's secretary-general, Abdullah Bishara, a Kuwaiti national, told a news conference that war was inescapable because "diplomacy alone will never achieve its objectives."

Bishara said war was the only language the Iraqis understood.

"What will make the Iraqis withdraw is the realization that war is imminent. They will withdraw when they realize there is a sword of Damocles at their necks. If they don't comply, this sword is going to hit," he said.

The council groups are Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates and Oman.

The United Nations imposed trade sanctions on Iraq to force its withdrawal from Kuwait, but two Middle East experts in Washington said it was unlikely sanctions alone would make Iraq pull out.

In a report for the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, Patrick Clawson said he believed Iraq could survive sanctions through late 1991.

James Phillips of the Heritage Foundation said that for Saddam, withdrawal would mean "a humiliating defeat that will threaten his personal power and perhaps survival."

The United States has deployed 230,000 troops in Saudi Arabia as part of a more than 300,000-strong multinational force arrayed against Iraq, and Bush last week announced plans to send 200,000 more soldiers.

The move was interpreted as indicating the United States — with its biggest deployment since the Vietnam War — was preparing to attack Iraq.

When Secretary of State James Baker visited Cairo last week, a senior U.S. official said the United States was confident Egypt would fight alongside U.S. forces if war broke out.

But asked by his party's newspaper, Mayo, whether Egypt would send troops to Iraq following a U.S.-led attack, Mubarak said:

"No, we have nothing to do with Iraq." But if the anti-Iraq allies invaded Kuwait, he said, "We do not mind at all entering Kuwait as peacekeeping forces . . . although I do not hope for this day at all."

Among U.S. congressmen there were calls for caution.

Moynihan warned Bush against any U.S. attack on Iraq without Congress' sanction.

"He will wreck our military, he will wreck his administration and he'll spoil a chance to get a collective security system working," Moynihan said of Bush.

Congress

home from their gulf positions and the administration's conclusion that the United States is free under the United Nations charter to take whatever military action it wants.

"That's the pattern of a country going to war," Moynihan said. "He's decided, he's gone unilateral."

Moynihan hypothetically posed two newspaper headlines: "U.S. Invades Third World Country in Dispute Over Access to Raw Materials," and "World Unites in Support of Tiny Nation Overrun by Brutal Aggressor."

The second is the story the United States wants, he said, but Bush by going it alone is risking the first headline.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said he believed Bush's actions are less ominous, that the White House is simply seeking to use a heightened threat of war to force Iraq to capitulate without shots being fired.

But he also cautioned that the Constitution gives Congress alone the power to commit U.S. troops to war. He noted that Congress could be called back into session to debate that question if an act of war occurs or if the president decides war is necessary.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the New York-based Center for Constitutional Rights said some members of Congress are likely to seek legal action in the courts to force Bush to comply with the War Powers Act.

"It's apparent that a lot of Congress people have questions about the procedural action," said David Lerner, a spokesman for the group. "A lot of them are worried that while they are out, war will break out."

Center attorneys have previously represented individual lawmakers on similar attempts to force the White House to consult Congress before deploying more troops.

At least one lawmaker, Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., has contacted the center to discuss the possibility of bringing a new court case, Lerner said.

The War Powers Act requires presidential consultation with Congress and puts limits on troop deployments without direct congressional authorization if troops are fighting or under imminent threat of hostilities.

Such suits in the past have been dismissed on the ground that the courts cannot enter political debates over foreign policy. But Lerner said center attorneys feel it is important to raise the issue in as many forums as possible.

Is this any place for Transcendental Meditation?

"I really want to get the most out of my education and TM definitely is a plus.

I find that I am more rested, think more clearly, I am more in touch with my self and I have more fun. Everything seems easier. I've made a lot of progress since I learned TM.

There is a lot of pressure to do well. Exams, sports, social life — it can be very stressful. In TM, I get very deep relaxation. I come out more alert. I'm less bothered in pressure situations. I meditate a few minutes in the morning and the evening and then I'm more effective all day.

Most people think that studying has to be hard, long, and pressure-intensive. With TM, I've found the opposite! The increased energy I get from meditating has been invaluable for my studies. I find I retain more in class, and essays and exams go more smoothly.

I am more in tune with natural law. By that I mean I'm reaching my goals with less effort. I make less mistakes. It's as though I'm swimming downstream with the current as opposed to swimming against it. The environment is on my side.

In my opinion anyone would find TM a valuable tool in developing their potential.

—Terry C. Kirouac

When Maharishi Mahesh Yogi introduced the Transcendental Meditation program to Western culture over 30 years ago, it seemed like a daring new concept. Perhaps that's why people confused it with other Eastern practices. But TM doesn't require any change in your lifestyle, your beliefs, or even your wardrobe.

TM is a simple, natural, mental technique that you practice a few minutes twice a day, sitting with your eyes closed, which allows you to go directly to the source of your thoughts to develop incredibly creative thinking.

So if you're searching for better performance, creativity, health and enjoyment, consider making a place for Transcendental Meditation.

Violence erupts in France during student marches

Protesters want better school conditions

By Terril Jones
The Associated Press

PARIS — Masked vandals stoned police and set cars afire Monday during a demonstration by 100,000 students seeking better school conditions. It was the first serious outbreak of violence in four weeks of protests.

President Francois Mitterrand promised steps would be taken to address the students' demands. They want more government spending to improve security, upgrade substandard facilities, modernize curriculums and hire more teachers.

The main throng of protesters in Paris was orderly. But several hundred youths on the fringes looted a clothing store, hurled rocks at police, beat journalists, smashed bus stops and torched at least three parked vehicles.

Police in Paris made at least 20 arrests, using tear gas and water cannon to disperse troublemakers. Many of the rioters wore masks and armed themselves with clubs. At least 40 policemen were injured, as well as an unknown number of protesters.

As the students marched in Paris, about 150,000 others took part in protests elsewhere in the country.

A dozen youths were arrested for vandalism in the eastern city of Montbelair.

Mitterrand and Education Minister Lionel Jospin met with a delegation of student leaders and promised an "emergency plan" to address student demands for better education and safety on campus.

Monday's march began at the Place de la Bastille in eastern Paris, where 201 years ago rioters stormed the Bastille prison to start the French Revolution. In the Montparnasse neighborhood of southern Paris, gangs started smashing windows and robbing street vendors about two hours after the march started.

Police Chief Pierre Verbrugghe, who deployed 5,000 officers for the march, told students they would not be allowed to follow their planned route and finish their march on the Champs Elysees.

Many students obeyed the orders, but a few hundred youths squared off against police at the Alma bridge. Police fired water cannon when they tried to cross, scattering the rioters who hurled rocks and trash.

The youths regrouped and repeated attempts to break through the police line. Vandals also set fire to trash and dismantled bus stops.

Jospin has promised more discussions with student leaders today and throughout the week, and said such talks should be held on the local level as well.

Israel offers to discuss Palestinian treatment

By Eileen Alt Powell
The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — In an effort to avoid further U.N. Security Council criticism, Israeli officials on Monday offered to receive a U.N. envoy to discuss the treatment of Palestinians under Israeli occupation.

The offer was billed as a compromise, and the government made it clear that its offer did not change Israel's rejection of a Security Council resolution condemning the Oct. 8 Temple Mount killings and demanding an investigation.

Sari Nusseibeh, a pro-PLO Palestinian leader in Jerusalem, rejected the Israeli proposal as a "fruitless enterprise."

"What the Palestinians need is tangible, effective international involvement," Nusseibeh said. The Palestine Liberation Organization has called for a U.N. force to protect the 1.7 million Arabs in the occupied lands.

An Israeli government official said the compromise proposal was worked out in negotiations with the United States, which reportedly refused an earlier Israeli plea to veto any further U.N. criticism.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Israel had reached "an understanding" with Washington, but he did not make clear if his government had a guarantee that the United States would veto further criticism.

"I cannot guarantee this or another move in the name of the United States," Foreign Minister David Levy said. "But a intensive contacts with the most senior levels in the United States... one can report a good progress."

"We have returned to the basic understanding that is necessary in the relations between the two countries. I am pleased," he said.

Israel radio said the United States had agreed to work to remove the Temple Mount killings from the U.N. agenda if Israel received a U.N. envoy.

American officials have said they want world attention shifted from Israel and back to the Persian Gulf crisis, and they have pressured Israel to accept an investigation into the Temple Mount killings. Israeli police shot to death 20 Palestinians in rioting at the holy site.

U.N. spokeswoman Nadia Younes said in New York that Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar "is now considering sending an emissary."

However, she added, "We do not accept conditions" on the terms of the visit.

Levy outlined the proposal Monday at a closed-door session of Parliament's defense and foreign affairs committee.

Heart-liver transplant recipient dies; autopsy results pending

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Doctors conducted lab tests Monday to determine what caused the sudden death of 13-year-old Stormie Jones, the world's first heart-liver transplant recipient.

It will take one to two weeks to complete the tests, including organ tissue cultures to search for viruses or bacteria, said Lynn McMahon, a spokeswoman at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh.

Stormie went into cardiac arrest and died Sunday morning at the hospital after rapidly declining during the night.

She endured organ rejection and hepatitis after her historic double transplant on Valentine's Day 1984 and a second liver transplant this February.

"We've been able to provide better quality of life and longer life for many people" because of Stormie's ordeal, Dr. Jorge Reyes, staff physician at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh, said after she died.

Yeltsin calls for a strong union treaty

By Alan Cooperman
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin, president of the Russian republic, said Monday that Russia would not pull out of the Soviet Union and that he would try to settle his jurisdictional disputes with President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Yeltsin's remarks came a day after he met behind closed doors for four hours with Gorbachev, his long-time political rival. Previous agreements between the leaders have broken down, and economists said their future cooperation is crucial to solving the country's economic crisis.

Speaking to the Russian Parliament's constitutional commission, Yeltsin emphatically denied that Russia, the largest of the 15 Soviet republics, "wants to break up the union."

"I'm for a strong union and union treaty," the independent Interfax News Agency quoted him as saying.

Gorbachev has been pushing the republics to negotiate a new union treaty to transform the country into a confederation of sovereign republics. Such a treaty could slow or perhaps even halt the rapid fragmentation that began with Lithuania's declaration of independence last March.

While Yeltsin reiterated his desire for a new treaty, he insisted Russia and the central government must first decide who controls the republic's banking system, natural resources, money supply and foreign currency earnings.

"They pressed us, yesterday and earlier, first to sign a union treaty and then resolve remaining issues, in the meantime transferring everything to the authority of the center," he said.

"But we couldn't and will not go for that."

Yeltsin said he and Gorbachev agreed to set up two parallel committees to study how to share control over the economy. Russia has been trying to wrest control over banks, natural resources and other key economic factors so that it can take faster steps toward a market system.

The Russian Parliament has adopted a 500-day blueprint for switching from central planning to a market-based economy.

KING STINGRAY'S

(THE COOL HAIR SALON)
GETS SERIOUS

We're taking a break from our usual advertisements to straighten out some of the rumors being passed along by some of our less ethical competition. It seems the word is that we're a bunch of WEIRDOS who only do STRANGE haircuts. In some ways it pleases us to know that a small locally owned business can cause enough of a ruckus that the BIG BUSINESS competition feels they need to lie to keep their clients from straying away. But it bothers us enough to let you know that what really makes us different from the other hair salons is the fact that we're cool, laid back, fun, and consistently better than the competition.

And if those qualities don't interest you then you're the WEIRDO!

Rivalry?

Iowa netters are worried about tournament play, not intra-state rivalries. Page 3B

Are Pistons NBA's next 'greatest'?

As the National Basketball Association begins another season, fans stand to witness history. If the defending champion Detroit Pistons "threepeat," they can without question call themselves the greatest team in NBA history.

Some people are supposedly born great, others, as the saying goes, have greatness thrust upon them. But in the case of the Pistons, they are currently redefining greatness as we speak.

Hold on Celtics, Lakers, and even Bulls, fans. Don't put down the paper. I'm going to tell you why.

When the Celtics won their numerous championships in the '50s and '60s, the league and the game itself were totally different. Professional basketball in the 1960s was a "white" game. The majority of the players were white, with the only black players being those who had emerged from various inner city "hoods" around the country to succeed at those elite college basketball programs that accepted black players.

Wilt Chamberlain and Bill Russell played at Kansas and San Francisco, respectively. Short of Danny Manning, Kansas hasn't produced a pro player of note since Chamberlain and San Francisco is now resuscitating its program after a seven-year hiatus.

In the '60s, players from small schools were not routinely taken into the NBA the way they are now. This is primarily due to the advent of network and cable television contracts, which allow fairly representative exposure for a wide variety of schools, which is to say that nowadays, playing at Louisiana Tech is not necessarily a bad idea.

It would have been in the '60s. It's not that small-school players didn't make the NBA, it's that it was much harder to do so.

For instance, thanks to Wyoming's national exposure on ESPN, Fennis Dembo graced the cover of Sports Illustrated and, despite a lackluster senior season, was a first-round draft pick. Though Dembo is probably working at his local 7-Eleven now, he would never have been drafted at all during the '60s. Television and its relationship to college ball has increased the opportunities for athletes at small, obscure or "out of the way" schools.

But more important than television has been the NBA's "integration" policy. In the '60s, black players could only play at a handful of schools, none of which were in the South, so many of the best players were neglected and never made it to the college level. If these players made it to college at all, it was most often at all-black schools, which received no publicity and subsequently were not considered NBA sources.

Some of today's top players would have fallen into this trap. In the '60s, Michael Jordan, Joe Dumars, Charles Barkley and Karl Malone would never have played at North Carolina, McNeese State, Auburn or La. Tech.

Like the segregated South, which was sending only white men to congress despite its black plurality, the NBA in the '60s existed as an unrepresentative enterprise which offered only the skills of players who had not been truly tested because of the league's reluctance to accept the talents of the southern black player. Which is not to say that the northern or western black player had a fair chance himself, but certainly he had a better shot than his southern brother.

Once these players were finally allowed to participate on a massive level, both collegiately and professionally, the game of basketball changed. Some were the days of the methodical, deliberate pace and the amazingly dull set shot. In their places came the fast-paced "showtime" game of Julius Erving, David Thompson and George Gervin (all initially ABA players), which brought basketball to the level that currently dominates the game.

Personal style came to define basketball. Much like the bebop jazz musicians of the 40s, players defined themselves as an individual within the context of the group. Erving and Thompson redefined basketball by emphasizing style.

Iowa tall, deep and young

By Brian Gaul
The Daily Iowan

With the graduation of three starters and the addition of a talented and highly-regarded recruiting class, the 1990-91 version of the Iowa women's basketball team will be tall, deep and young.

The first two characteristics are a bonus for eighth-year head coach C. Vivian Stringer. It's the third one that concerns her.

"I'm nervous and anxious as we start the season," Stringer said at the annual Iowa women's basketball media day Monday. "It's the first time we've had this many freshmen — ever."

The size and depth on Stringer's team will be provided by those freshmen. Stringer's seven-deep freshman class was considered the top recruiting class in the nation by most experts last season.

Six of those freshmen — forwards Demetria Bright, Virgie Dillingham, Tia Jackson and Necole Tunsil, center Andrea Harmon and guard Antonia Macklin — were high school all-Americans. Stringer said they will be expected to make an immediate contribution.

"This freshmen group is in a little different situation than any freshmen group that I've worked with before," Stringer said. "We need for them to be able to mature very, very quickly and make a positive contribution now."

They will have to help fill the void left by the graduation of Kodak All-American Franthea Price and two-time all-Big Ten selection Jollette Law. Price is playing professionally in Spain and Law is now a member of the Harlem Globetrotters.

Along with point guard Stephanie Schueler, the trio formed a potent outside combination for the Hawkeyes, who won their fourth consecutive Big Ten title last year. Iowa was 23-6 overall and tied Northwest-ern for the conference crown with a 15-3 mark.

Schueler, who averaged 11.1 points per game last year, is back for her senior season, but Stringer said that four players could fill the positions held by Law and Price.

According to the Iowa coach, sophomore Laurie Aaron and juniors Becky Shrigley, LaTonya Tate and Trisha Waugh will see playing time at the guard and small forward positions.

Iowa's inside attack will be led by the team's other senior, center/forward Felicia Hall, and sophomore Toni Foster. Hall averaged seven rebounds per game last year, and Stringer said that Foster is playing "as though she's making a call for Kodak all-American honors right now."

"I'm more comfortable with the plays and I'm working harder than last year," Foster said. "I'm used to being here more than last year and I'm not depending on other people to carry the team. If it's up to me to help, I'm ready."

Iowa's inside attack will receive a boost on Jan. 15 when UCLA transfer Molly Tidebeck becomes eligible to play. The Waterloo, Iowa, native averaged 12.7 points per game in 1 1/2 seasons with the Bruins.

Tidebeck, a sophomore, has been unable to practice since aggravating a knee injury early in the season. Although she had minor surgery to correct the problem, Tidebeck said she expects to be able to play when she regains her eligibility.

The Iowa coach also said that the freshmen post players are progressing faster than the other fresh- See Stringer, Page 2B

Hawks' opener versus Temple remains a 'secret'

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa basketball team will face its first nationally-ranked opponent this week, but not many people seem to care.

Or else they just don't know. In the first round of the National Invitational Tournament Thursday, 19th-ranked Temple will face the Hawkeyes at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. But only about 5,000 tickets have been sold for the 15,500-seat arena.

And with student tickets selling for $5, that is something that Iowa coach Tom Davis doesn't seem to understand.

"A $5 reserved seat for a student to see a nationally-ranked team in Temple is a pretty good deal," Davis said at his press conference Monday. "As I looked at it, the thing that jumped out at me was Michigan. They just reminded me of Michigan's ball club with the deep, tall talent. This year, I think they've got as good a bench as Coach Cheney has ever had."

"This is a very strong ball club. And we know we've got our hands full."

Temple senior Mark Macon, a 6-foot-5 guard, is the most well-known of the Owls.

The Saginaw, Mich., native has started 95 consecutive games and is already Temple's career scoring leader with 1,926 points.

But according to Davis, people may not realize how good Temple is because, except for Macon, the Owls have not been highly-publicized.

"Macon is being talked about by everybody as an All-American and a lottery-pick candidate guard," Davis said. "Everybody knows that, but I'm not so sure they know how good the other talent is. They really have some fine, fine players."

"They're 19th in (The Associated Press poll). It surprises me they aren't higher, an NCAA Tournament team with all their starters back. And the top guard and top big guy and a pretty good depth of size."

The Iowa-Temple game will be shown on ESPN Thursday night, but unless 12,000 tickets are sold, there will be a regional black-out. That means ESPN will not carry the game in the Iowa City area.

The number of tickets sold will also dictate where second-round action will take place.

"Following Thursday night's games they will announce who the home team is for the Saturday night's game," Davis said. "They'll look at numbers of tickets sold in the arenas as well as the availability.

"We've already made them aware that Carver-Hawkeye is available that night for an 8:30 game or whatever time will fit with a home football game. But we've made them aware that we'd like to host a game were we to win."

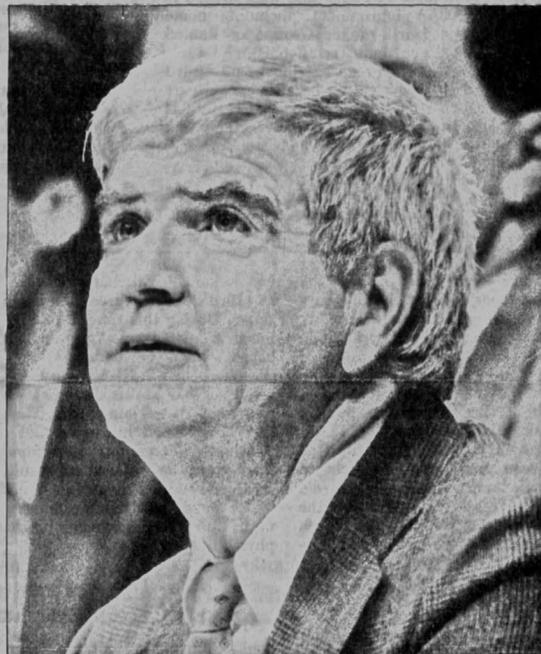

If the Hawkeyes win Thursday, they will face the winner of the Notre Dame-Fordham game. If they lose they will be out of the tournament.

But Davis said the winner of the matchups might have a problem in that they won't have much time to make travel plans for the second-round games.

That, however, is a dilemma he said he hopes to face.

"So were we to win sometime Thursday night I would guess we'd be told whether we have a home game or go on the road," the coach said. "You're kind of hoping that it's a problem because if it's not a problem, then we've got 11 days to prepare for our next ballgame after that, which of course will be Drake (Nov. 27)."

"You hope that you only have one day to prepare and you've got a lot of travel plans to get in place. That's one of the reasons it's really exciting."

The Daily Iowan/Andy Scott

Iowa coach Tom Davis is worried that poor ticket sales will regionally black-out Iowa's nationally-televised opener with Temple Thursday night.

Tarkanian's Rebels starting out on top

By Robert Macy
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Nevada-Las Vegas coach Jerry Tarkanian, faced with a Soviet threat and the spectre of an NCAA decision, received some good news Monday.

His Runnin' Rebels start the preseason where they began last season: No. 1 in the college basketball poll.

"I expected you to be rated high because we have four starters back from last year's team," Tarkanian said Monday of his team that won the NCAA championship with a 103-73 rout over Duke.

"We feel we have a good team this year. Whether we're No. 1 or not I don't know, but we're up there with the best. I just hope those pollsters are right."

A panel of 65 sports writers and broadcasters picked UNLV No. 1, followed by Arkansas, Arizona, Michigan State and North Carolina.

Tarkanian said that also was his choice for the top five. Rounding out the Top 10 in the preseason poll were Duke, Alabama, Indiana, Georgetown and Ohio State.

Tarkanian is busy this week preparing for Saturday's visit by the Soviet national team. The Rebels are 3-0 against the Soviets, the best record of any college team.

"They're a great shooting team," Tarkanian said of the Soviets. "And they've got a whole country to choose from for their team, so they have plenty of talent available."

Unlike previous years, the fact the Russians are coming is not uppermost on Tarkanian's mind this week.

The NCAA Infractions Committee may hand down a decision any day on whether the Rebels can defend their national title.

The committee, in a stunning decision July 20, said the Rebels could not participate in postseason play in 1991. The edict was a final penalty growing out of a 14-year battle between Tarkanian and the NCAA.

The university obtained a rehearing before the committee Oct. 28 and presented a series of four penalty options. They included Tarkanian sitting out postseason play for one or two years plus recruiting and television restrictions.

The committee promised a response to the UNLV proposals "in a timely manner," with speculation the decision could come shortly.

UNLV officials argued the NCAA was penalizing players who were in grade school when the infractions occurred during the early- and mid-1970s. All-America Larry Johnson and Stacey Augmon passed up potential million dollar NBA contracts to return for their senior year and a chance to defend the title.

Fifty of the 65 voters made UNLV No. 1. The Runnin' Rebels got 1,601 points, far ahead of Arkansas (1,506) and Arizona (1,488), which each received five first-place votes.

Michigan State was fourth with one first-place vote and 1,302 points and was followed by North Carolina with 1,282.

Irish, Buffs near title rematch

The Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. — Although Colorado is second behind Notre Dame in the rankings, Buffaloes coach Bill McCartney wants the Irish to win their final two regular-season games.

If Notre Dame beats Penn State and Southern California and Colorado beats Kansas State on Saturday, their Orange Bowl showdown will be a clear-cut clash for the national title.

"Hopefully, they'll win their two games and we'll win ours, and it will be for the championship,"

Runners get NCAA bid

By Scott Garringer
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's cross country team received an at-large bid to the NCAA Championships Monday repeating last year's scenario when the Hawkeyes had their highest finish ever.

Junior Jennifer Brower will lead Iowa into battle on Monday, Nov. 19 in Knoxville, Tenn. Brower placed 10th in Saturday's Region IV Championship earning herself an individual bid. Iowa's invitation assured that the rest of coach Jerry Hassard's Hawkeyes will be making the trip.

Sophomore Tracy Dahl and senior Tami Hoskins will be joining Brower as the only three Hawkeyes returning from last year's eighth-place squad. Iowa's finish in 1989 was especially surprising considering a lackluster performance at regionals. The 1989 squad also received an at-large berth.

Hassard was happy to receive the invitation, but disappointed in the rest of the country's perception of his team.

"I thought that if we placed in the top three at regionals we would be assured a bid," Hassard said. "I feel we are a little under-ranked. This will provide us an opportunity to prove our strength."

Monday's bids completed the 22-team field, four of which compete in the Big Ten. Michigan and Big Ten champion Indiana earned automatic bids.

men and several could play early the season. Freshmen Dillingham, Harmon and Cathy Marx play the post positions. "They're coming along so fast," Waugh said of the freshman post players. "They're not only talented but they're progressing quickly." Stringer's team will need to progress quickly to survive its early-season schedule. The Hawkeyes play six of their first nine games on the road, including contests with four teams that played in last year's NCAA Tournament. In total, Iowa faces 12 teams that were invited to last year's NCAA tournament, including home contests against fourth-ranked Georgia on Jan. 5 and sixth-ranked Louisiana Tech Feb. 25. "We have a real tough road," Stringer said. "But I tell you what, it doesn't matter because once we are through with that tough of a schedule, I really feel that these freshmen will have tasted everything that can happen on the road. We will be battle-proven at that point."

Without without that experience, Stringer's team has received its share of preseason recognition. Iowa is ranked as high as ninth in the NCAA Basketball Preview and cracks the top 20 in two other polls. The Hawkeyes open the season with their own tournament, the Amana-Hawkeye Classic, Nov. 24-25. But Stringer said before she can worry about Iowa's first road game against UCLA, she must try to find a starting five. "Every day I change the combinations," Stringer said of her lineup. "You might find that on the 24th we start all veterans. I don't think that we're going to have a solid starting lineup clearly until January. Not that it matters so much as that we're all prepared. "With the youth of this team, there's no way that we can have basically five people carry us. I think that for the first time we will look to see that we can get major contributions from each and every player. That's what it is going to take."

confused with the Jimmy the Greek theory of breeding that says blacks are better ball players because they are "natural" athletes. Blacks have dominated basketball because they exist in a culture that has always insisted on highly stylized expression, be it in music, literature or sports. The 79 NCAA championship game between Magic Johnson's Michigan State team and Larry Bird's Indiana State team would set the tone for most of the 80s, which became a tug-of-war between Mag-ic's Lakers (five championships) and Bird's Celtics (three championships). During this time, Bird, the latest in a long line of great white hopes, would be touted as the greatest player in NBA history and given god-like status. So much so that when Piston guard Isiah Thomas blasphemed his name, Zeke was almost excommunicated from the league. The unfortunate result of this situation has been that Magic never received his proper until Bird was no longer able to physically play.

The situation has since forced the league and sportswriters to consistently give Magic make-up MVP awards. Magic is currently receiving awards which no doubt belong to Michael Jordan because he couldn't win when he still posed a threat to a healthy Bird. But amidst all of this, it is the Pistons who have finally emerged as the NBA's premiere team. The Pistons have none of the elements that have defined the greatness of the NBA for the past 20 to 30 years, but in a game dominated by offense, they have perfected defense. They have, in essence, given new meaning to the word "greatness." No team has won three straight championships since the 60s. Consecutive longevity once again offers a new meaning to the word. This being the case, about June 15 we will see the crowning of the greatest team in NBA history. Todd Boyd is a Ph.D candidate and teaching assistant in Communication Studies

Poll

McCartney said. The game will be a rematch of last year's Orange Bowl, when Notre Dame beat top-ranked Colorado 21-6 and ruined the Buffaloes' bid for the national title. "We will benefit from last year's experience," McCartney said. "That game taught us a lot of things, most importantly that you have to stay tough mentally at halftime. That showed in the third quarter, when Notre Dame came out and took control of the game." The Irish (8-1) were a near-unanimous pick as the top team in Monday's Associated Press poll after beating Tennessee 34-29. They received 55 of 60 first-place votes and 1,495 of a possible 1,500 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Colorado (9-1-1), which beat Oklahoma State 41-22, got the other five first-place votes and 1,419 points. Losses by No. 2 Washington and No. 3 Houston helped the Buffaloes gain their highest ranking of the season. Miami (6-2), which did not play Saturday, rose two spots to third with 1,349 points. The Hurricanes, who will meet the Southwest Conference champion in the Cotton Bowl, have a chance to become the first team to be voted national champion with two losses. Georgia Tech (8-0-1), the only major team without a loss, jumped from seventh to fourth after edging Virginia Tech 6-3. It's the Yellow Jackets' highest ranking since 1961, when they were No. 3 early in the season. Brigham Young (8-1) went from eighth to fifth, only one point behind Georgia Tech, after beating

Wyoming 45-14. Florida (8-1), which can't play in a bowl because of NCAA probation, moved up four notches to sixth following a 38-7 victory over Georgia. Texas (7-1) shot up seven spots to No. 7, its best ranking in six years, after handing Houston its first loss, 45-24. Virginia (8-1) jumped from 11th to eighth after beating North Carolina 24-10 and Florida State (7-2) rose from 12th to ninth after mauling Cincinnati 70-21. UCLA's 25-22 upset of Washington (8-2) plunged the Huskies from second to 10th. Nebraska was 11th, followed by Houston, Iowa, Tennessee, Mississippi, Michigan, Clemson, Penn State, Southern Cal and Louisville. Rounding out the Top 25 were Ohio State, Illinois, Michigan State, Auburn and Southern Mississippi. Houston and Auburn each fell nine notches. The Cougars went from third to 12th and the Tigers from 15th to 24th after losing to Southern Mississippi 13-12. Iowa plummeted seven places to 13th after falling to Ohio State 27-26. Tennessee dropped five spots to 14th and Illinois went from 17th to 22nd following a 22-17 loss to Michigan. Oregon, 20th last week, and Wyoming, which was 25th, dropped out of the Top 25. Oregon was beaten by California 28-3. Ohio State and Southern Mississippi took their places in the poll. The Buckeyes (6-2-1), ranked as high as 15th earlier this season, were 21st and the Golden Eagles (8-3) were 25th. Southern Miss was 18th last season after upsetting Florida State, but then lost four in a row.

Drunken Patriots fans beat firefighter

DI wire services
 FOXBORO, Mass. — A firefighter was knocked unconscious when football fans became violent after officials tried to put out a campfire near Foxboro Stadium, according to a published report.

Tarpley will undergo surgery Tuesday and is expected to miss four to six weeks. The team initially had said he would be out no more than three weeks because it thought the injury wasn't as serious. Mavericks team physician J. Pat Evans said the MRI, performed Saturday, revealed a tear of the lateral meniscus cartilage. "We don't know whether it's a stable tear or one that's going to clip around," Evans said. Evans will perform the arthroscopy immediately after completing an arthroscopy procedure on the right knee of Mavericks guard Fat Lever, who has been troubled by inflammation in his right knee since training camp. Tarpley's injury occurred in the first period of Friday night's 111-99 victory over Orlando. His right kneecap slipped out of place when he landed after making a shot on a fastbreak. In five games, Tarpley averaged 20.4 points and 11 rebounds, sixth-best in the NBA.

Li Hi Bong of North Korea could not match him. Kim finished with a total of 753 1/2 pounds. Yotov's, whose performance was his best this year, lifted 731 pounds and Li lifted 726 pounds.

Sportsbriefs

Firefighter Robert Lucas Jr., 20, was struck on the head and knocked to the ground after Sunday's game between the New England Patriots and the Indianapolis Colts, The Patriot Ledger of Quincy reported. Lucas was treated at Norwood Hospital and released. George W. Allen, 51, and his son, Gary I. Allen, 26, both of Acushnet, were charged with assault and battery on a firefighter, police said. The pair was held at the Foxboro Police lockup on $1,000 cash bail each. They are to be arraigned Tuesday. Tarpley scheduled for surgery
 DALLAS — Dallas Mavericks forward Roy Tarpley has been scheduled for surgery after a magnetic resonance imaging study revealed a cartilage tear on his injured right knee.

Korean lifts way to lightweight title
 BUDAPEST, Hungary — Kim Myong Nam of North Korea won the lightweight title Monday at the World Weightlifting Championship. Kim earned his victory after a powerful performance in the snatch event, easily lifting a field-leading 346 1/2 pounds in the competition for athletes weighing 148 1/2 pounds or less. In the jerk half of the contest, he lifted 407 pounds and rivals Yoto Yotov of Bulgaria and

Eckles back with Bullets
 LANDOVER, Md. — Bullets guard Ledell Eckles ended his contract holdout Monday by signing a two-year contract. Eckles, who missed the Bullets' training camp in October, will be placed on the suspended list for five days because he is not physically ready to play. The five days will carry the team through Saturday, when the Bullets will have to make a roster decision. Currently, the Bullets have 12 active players, not including forward John Williams, who is on the injured list. General manager John Mash said Eckles is a welcome addition because he will relieve Bernard King of some of the scoring load. "Assuming Ledell is able to show his form of last season," Mash said. Last season, Eckles averaged 13.5 points while playing in 78 games. He started seven games for the injured Jeff Malone and averaged 25.3 points and 4.3 rebounds as the starter. He scored a career-high 40 points versus New Jersey on March 21, 1990.

Denver Broncos blitzing San Diego

Denver Broncos quarterback John Elway runs from blitzing San Diego Chargers Burt Grossman, right, and Junior Seau during the fourth quarter of San Diego's 19-7 win at Jack Murphy Stadium Sunday.

NFL mediocres charging back

By Dave Goldberg
The Associated Press

Just to remind people that 16 games is a long season.

Here come the Saints, Packers and Chargers. There go the Bucs and, to a lesser extent, the Raiders.

While the Giants, 49ers, Bears, Dolphins and Bills continue to sail along at the top of the NFL with a combined record of 42-3, the jockeying for secondary playoff positions is changing every week.

A lot of the action Sunday was on the West Coast, where the Packers handed the Raiders their first home loss of the Art Shell regime. The Raiders, who had won 10 straight at the Coliseum under Shell, now are 6-3 and officially out of the elite.

And the 4-5 Packers are back in the NFC wild-card race, along with the 4-5 Saints, who have unleashed Craig "Ironhead" Heyward and the defense in two straight wins by a total of 56-14.

Heyward, who had 35 yards in 11 carries in his first seven games, gained 277 yards in 39 carries the past two weeks, including 155 yards in Sunday's 35-7 destruction of the sliding Bucs. Tampa Bay, which started 4-2, now has lost four straight and has been outscored 102-23 in the last three games.

"That's the best Craig has run consistently in the 2½ years he's been here," coach Jim Mora said of the 250-pounder, who has ballooned to as much as 290 pounds during his career.

Then there are the Chargers, who improved to 5-5 with a 19-7 win over Denver.

San Diego is only 1½ games behind the Raiders and a half-game behind the Chiefs in the AFC West and the difference is quarterbacking.

Steve DeBerg of the Chiefs and Jay Schroeder of the Raiders have had predictable off-days the past two weeks, while the Chargers' Billy Joe Tolliver has hasn't thrown an interception in four games (121 attempts), after throwing eight in the first six games. Kansas City hasn't scored an offensive touchdown in 10 quarters.

But the key is defense for the Chargers, who are 5-5 after a 2-5 start. In their first five games, they allowed 322 yards per game and were minus-four in turnover ratio; in their last five, they've allowed 199.8 yards and are plus-15 in turnovers, as Burt Grossman, Lee Williams, Leslie O'Neal have all demonstrated Pro Bowl capabilities.

"They're as good up front as any team we've played this year," John Elway of Denver (3-6), another team going south fast, said of the Chargers.

Streking

Atlanta's 30-24 loss at Chicago was its 15th straight on the road.

Minnesota's 17-7 win at Detroit (Andre Ware, 5 of 11 with 2 interceptions in his NFL debut) ended an 8-game road losing streak.

Miami's defense hasn't allowed a touchdown in three games or a rushing touchdown in six games following its 17-3 win over the Jets.

Kansas City hasn't scored an offensive touchdown in 10 quarters.

Seattle's win at Kansas City was its first there since 1980 and its sweep of the Chiefs was its first in that series since 1978.

San Francisco has won 17 straight games.

San Francisco has won 16 straight road games.

The wins by Minnesota over Detroit and Indianapolis over New England marked the first time this season that two teams have split a season's series. The other 13 have all been swept.

Butch Rolle's last 8 receptions for Buffalo have been for touchdowns. They date back to 1987 and total 16 yards, an average of two per catch.

The Raiders' loss to the Packers was coach Art Shell's first home loss after 10 wins since taking over after the fourth game last season.

The one that got away

Derrick Thomas set an NFL record with seven sacks Sunday for the Chiefs.

But the one that got away cost the Chiefs the game. It came on the final play of the game when Thomas hit Seattle quarterback Dave Krieg, then slid off, allowing Krieg to throw the 25-yard touchdown pass to Paul Skansi that won the game 17-16.

"The sack I didn't get is the one I'm going to remember," Thomas said.

Still, Thomas has 25 sacks in 25 NFL games, easily an NFL record for sacks-per-game. He needs eight in his final seven games this season to beat Mark Gastineau's single-season record of 22, set in 1984, although Reggie White's 21 in 12 games in the strike-shortened 1987 season is still the more impressive mark.

More sacks

The AFC is supposed to be the less physical conference.

But the NFL's four leading sack teams are all from the AFC — the Dolphins and Chiefs with 35 each; the Chargers and Raiders with 32.

Special teams

While nobody knows if it's a record, the Giants' Sean Landeta hit three straight punts inside the Rams' 5-yard-line in New York's 31-7 win Sunday.

All landed at the 3 and they led to 14 points.

The first set up a short punt by Keith English that was returned 22 yards by Dave Meggett to the Rams' 30 and set up the TD that put New York ahead 24-7.

The next led to an interception by Gary Reasons that put the Giants at the Los Angeles 15 and set up the final score.

All five of Landeta's punts Sunday were inside the 20.

"It's not just luck," Landeta said. "There's a way of putting spin on it so it bounces backward or to the side. When you're down deep, you don't want it moving ahead."

A long absence

Marcus Dupree, who missed five years after what appeared to be a career-ending knee injury in the USFL, saw his first action since 1985 for the Rams at the end of the loss to the Giants.

Rivalry aside, tourney stressed

By Brian Gaul
The Daily Iowan

When the Iowa volleyball team meets Iowa State tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Carver-Hawkeye Arena, it won't be the battle between bitter rivals that one might expect.

Oh, the match will have plenty of significance for both teams as they fight for post-season tournament bids. But the coaches said that the intrastate rivalry won't be a factor.

"I really don't think it's a rivalry the beginning of the season. After we played and lost to them earlier, I want to win as much as anyone."

The Hawkeyes dropped a five-game match to the Cyclones in the first round of the all-Iowa Championships Sept. 8, and Willis said that the loss is more of a motivator for the Hawkeyes than the rivalry.

"The team just carries through with it as another team we need to beat," Willis said. "I don't think we get any more psyched up. Everyone wants to win because we got beat by them earlier this year."

The real significance of the match is its effect on tournament bids. The Hawkeyes, 13-12 overall, still hold faint hopes of an NCAA tournament berth and are also fighting for a spot in the Women's Intercollegiate Volleyball Championship.

The Cyclones, 22-9 overall, are in a similar position. Currently tied for second place in the Big Eight Conference, the Cyclones are also a borderline team for an invitation to the NCAA Tournament.

Both teams could use a win tonight to boost their tournament hopes.

"We have two important matches left — at Iowa and at Oklahoma," Mealer said. "I know Iowa has made tremendous improvement since the beginning of the season and I think we're a better team."

"It should be a good match. It's always tough for us to come to Iowa City and win... I expect it to be one of those knock-down, drag-out type of things."

Volleyball

any more," Iowa coach Ruth Nelson said. "It's more of a rivalry for Iowa State than us. I know I don't treat it as a rivalry."

"It's better that way. The players don't try to get extra up for it and they play more like they can play."

"I think the football and basketball rivalries are huge," Iowa State coach Vicki Mealer said. "In volleyball, people aren't as fanatical and won't take it so seriously if one team loses."

"Both teams have a lot of respect for each other and it's just a fun match to play."

Part of the reason for the dampening of the rivalry is the low number of Iowa natives on both teams. Only one player in Nelson's top 12 — Camanche native Barb Willis — hails from the state. The Cyclones will play only two or three Iowa natives tonight, according to Mealer.

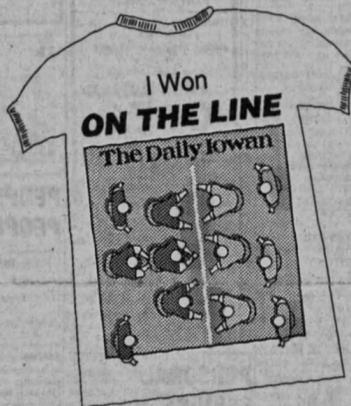

"Yeah, I'd probably say that does take away from the rivalry," Mealer said. "The players that aren't from Iowa don't have the background to understand the tradition between the two schools."

One example is Iowa's Christy Janssen. A native of Agoura Hills, Calif., Janssen said she didn't realize the importance of the rivalry until Iowa lost to the Cyclones earlier this season.

"Everyone said, 'You don't understand how big a deal this is,'" Janssen said. "I probably don't understand it as much as a senior or an Iowa native like Barb."

WBA likely to OK Foreman for Holyfield

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The World Boxing Association's sanctioning of a Evander Holyfield-George Foreman heavyweight title fight is expected to be announced Wednesday at a news conference.

Promoter Dan Duva, who on Monday announced the conference, said only that the matter would be discussed.

The WBA, World Boxing Council and International Boxing Federation all have ruled that the winner of the James "Buster" Douglas-Holyfield fight on Oct. 25 would have to next fight Mike Tyson. Holyfield scored a third-round knockout of Douglas, who had won the title from Tyson, currently ranked No. 1 by all three organizations.

Only the WBC, however, appears set to strip championship recognition from Holyfield should he not fight Tyson next. There were indications that the IBF, like the WBA, is ready to allow Holyfield to first fight the 42-year-old Foreman, ranked fourth by the WBC, sixth by the WBA and seventh by the IBF.

Hawkeyes overcome injuries at TCA

By David Taylor
The Daily Iowan

"So-so" is how coach Steve Houghton referred to his men's tennis team's performance at the ITCA Regional over the weekend. "We beat who we should have and lost to the highly ranked players," Houghton said.

Five players and two doubles squads competed in the tournament, but problems arose even before play started when freshman Klas Bergstrom developed a thigh injury. Bergstrom was a high seed and attempted to play, but was unable to continue after a few games.

"That really hurt us because I figured he would advance pretty far in the singles, and it hurt our doubles team of him and Carl Manheim," Houghton said.

Thomas Adler took Bergstrom's place and the makeshift team captured two victories before falling in the third round. "They did okay for not having played together before," Houghton said.

Houghton said that much of the tournament was luck of the draw, and cited Paul Buckingham and Adler as playing especially well.

M. Tennis

The tournament was also a brief look at the Big Ten with many of the low players competing against other conference opponents.

"The Big Ten will be very strong," Houghton said. "There are about five or six good teams this year, so we know what we are up against."

The Hawkeyes will not play again until January, and Houghton said that he felt they would be a better group come spring. "The young guys will develop more, and we have good workers on the court and in practice," Houghton said. "I was very pleased with what we were able to accomplish in the fall."

The team is also eagerly awaiting the arrival of freshman Fabian Heller from Argentina.

"I was very pleased with what we were able to accomplish."

Steve Houghton
M. Tennis coach

"I think right now we are an above-average team, and when he (Heller) comes I'm hoping it will push us up a step or two," Houghton said. "He will definitely help us in both singles and doubles."

Iowa closes out season at Rolex Midwest tourney

By David Taylor
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's tennis team closed out the fall season over the weekend with a handful of players competing in the Rolex Midwest Regional.

Lori Hash, Tracey Peyton, and Andrea Calvert represented the Hawkeyes in singles competition, and Hash teamed with Catherine Wilson in doubles play.

"I saw some good play out there, but we didn't have the best tournament overall," said Iowa coach Micki Schilling. "We did well on some of the things we had been working on in practice so it wasn't a wasted tournament."

W. Tennis

Iowa faced some stiff opposition, battling many of the players from Big Ten and other Midwestern schools. Hash lost to Stefanie Benz of Wisconsin 6-2, 3-6, 7-6, while Peyton was defeated by Danielle Paradine of Indiana 6-3, 7-5. Calvert won her first match against Kris Limpert of Marquette 6-3, 6-3, but lost to Lindsay Aland of Michigan 7-6, 6-4 in the second round.

In doubles the situation was a somewhat better. Hash and Wilson beat a pair from Michigan, and then scored a stunning upset over the No. 1 seeded team from Northwestern before losing to a duo from Illinois 7-6, 2-6, 2-6.

"The tournament was a small preview of what the Big Ten season will be like," Schilling said. "There are a lot of very good players, and it will be a tough year."

The team is no stranger to adversity having dealt with the loss of three top players from a year ago and a rash of nagging injuries throughout the season. The spring will be a different story, however, and Schilling expressed concern about conference play.

"We will be working toward the spring season and the Big Ten schedule now, but (the Big Ten) is strong and it makes me wonder," Schilling said.

"Our training time will be cut down, but we are still going to practice and work on new things," Schilling added.

The squad breaks from competition until January 8, when they will travel to Wisconsin for the Milwaukee Classic.

Hawks edge Minnesota at new pool

By Michael Watkins
The Daily Iowan

Iowa coach Glenn Patton predicted that in order for the Hawkeyes to perform well Friday against Minnesota, sophomore freestyler Mike Johnson would have to be a successful meet. Although Johnson didn't fare as well as expected, Iowa did defeat the Golden Gophers — and on Minnesota's new home turf.

"It was great finally swimming as a Hawkeye," said Johnson, who sat out last season as a UCLA transfer. "I'm happy with the way I swam, but I was a little bit disappointed with my performance in the 200 IM (individual medley). It's really great starting off the year with a victory."

M. Swimming

Because of strong freestyle and relay performances, Iowa defeated Minnesota, last year's Big Ten runner-up, by the narrow margin of 129-114 in the Gophers' newly-christened $14.6 million Aquatics Center.

"It was a great meet," Patton said. "It went right to the last relay."

Iowa won four of the six freestyle races including the final 400 relay. National and Big Ten champion Artur Wojdat captured the 200 and 500 freestyle races with times of 1:39.95 and 4:27.61, respectively, as Iowa swept the 200 with second and third place finishes by junior Doug Helm and freshman Dan Stoppenhagen.

On the boards, Iowa's freshman diver B.J. Blair had strong performances in both the 1- and 3-meter events. In the 1-meter competition, he finished third, totalling 255.08 points behind Minnesota divers Scott Upper and Omar Boyd.

Gourmet Express: Burritos and egg rolls

By Henry Olson
The Daily Iowan

Did you miss me, dear reader? The truth is, the latest restaurant I've visited just couldn't be done justice in the space of one week. My discovery? Gourmet Express on Riverside Drive. I can't find the address in the phone book — it's that new.

Gourmet Express is a teeny eatery that has yet to find its niche in Iowa City. On the Sunday afternoon I visited it, only one other person was there, and he was working. Perhaps it's for the best that the dining area has only eight booths.

The management of Gourmet Express has wisely disguised its minuscule seating capacity with served at Gourmet Express? It's a high-concept blend of fast-food Mexican and Chinese cuisines. I had the Sunday Special, which consisted of a burrito and an egg roll.

While waiting for my food, I visited the facilities; when I exited the man behind the counter ran into the bathroom as though he suspected me of trying to steal the sink.

After a short pause, he presented me with my order. The burrito was pasty and bland. The egg roll was OK, if a bit greasy.

While I was eating, the lyrics "Who put the bop in the bop she bop?" wafted through the air. And if that wasn't disconcerting enough, the man behind the counter began talking on the phone to someone and I distinctly heard the statement, "Yes, he's still here."

Gourmet Express is at that crucial point in a restaurant's life of establishing its following. With its combination of boring Mexican and Americanized Chinese food, I'm sure the customers will shortly flock to its doors. For some of the more outspoken members of the community, Gourmet Express' obscurity holds a little bonus: This is definitely one restaurant that cannot afford to refuse service on a political basis.

Actress Eve Arden dead at 83

By Bob Thomas
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Actress Eve Arden, the wisecracking best friend from scores of movies who achieved her greatest fame as the saucy schoolteacher on TV's "Our Miss Brooks" in the '50s, died today of heart failure. She was 83.

Arden died with two of her four children at her side, said her manager, Glenn Rose.

She also suffered from cancer. The comedian appeared in poor health when she attended the Warner Bros. studio rededication last summer and was forced to leave the celebration early.

Arden was best known for her role of the teacher with the sharp tongue and big heart in "Our Miss Brooks," which she played for five years on radio and then four on television in 1952-56.

"The Eve Arden" show followed, but lasted only a season. She then appeared in "The Mothers-in-Law" with Kaye Ballard in 1967-69.

An actress since age 7, Miss Arden was discovered for Broadway by producer Lee Shubert, who signed her for the 1936 Ziegfeld Follies in New York, starring the late Fannie Brice.

After two years with the Follies, she won a Hollywood contract to appear in the film "Stage Door," which propelled her to fame and a career spanning several dozen films.

In 1940, Arden returned to Broadway to appear with Danny Kaye in "Let's Face It" and such hits as "Very Warm for May" and "Two for the Show."

"Stage Door," starring Katharine Hepburn, Ginger Rogers and Lucille Ball, would set the pattern for Arden's film career.

She usually played the best friend of the heroine, brightening the dramatics with her deadpan humor and memorable one-liners.

One of her best-known film roles came as Joan Crawford's friend in "Mildred Pierce," which earned Arden an Academy Award nomination for best supporting actress and one of her most memorable lines.

In the film Arden says about Crawford's horrible daughter: "Veda's convinced me that alligators have the right idea. They eat their young."

In 1947, Arden was offered the lead part of Connie Brooks in CBS radio's "Our Miss Brooks." The show became a success with Arden's portrayal of the Madison High School English teacher.

CBS signed Arden to play the same role on television. The show "Our Miss Brooks" debuted on Oct. 3, 1952, and lasted four seasons. Gale Gordon played the crusty principal, Osgood Conklin.

A well-known line in "Our Miss Brooks" came when student Walter Denton would say each morning, "Greetings, fairest of all possible English teachers."

Arden replied, "Well good morning, most observant of all possible pupils."

In later years, she made appearances in Steven Spielberg's TV series "Amazing Stories" and on Showtime's "Farie Tale Theater," as well as in the films "Grease" and "Grease 2."

New Kids fan says trauma was worth it

The Associated Press

FORT DODGE, Iowa — A Fort Dodge teen-ager says it was worth getting crushed at a concert to get a kiss from a performing idol — New Kid Donnie Wahlberg.

Carrie Savage, 14, was one of the youngsters injured Friday night in a fracas that erupted when Wahlberg jumped into the audience at the end of a concert by the New Kids on the Block.

But she says she was rewarded with a kiss on the lips.

"Donnie came up to me, told me to stop crying and kissed me," Savage said on Sunday.

Savage sprained her wrist after teen-age girls and security guards became entangled as the teen idol jumped into the stands without warning at Hilton Coliseum in Ames.

Later Wahlberg pushed fellow band member Danny Wood into the crowd as Wood was reaching down to touch the hands of fans.

After the concert, 18 girls ranging in age from 10 to 16 were treated at Mary Greeley Medical Center in Ames for "sprains and strains," said hospital spokeswoman Carlette Paulson.

"The girls were on top of me so I couldn't get out," Savage said. "A bodyguard pulled my arm and twisted it."

Savage said everyone was cleared out of the coliseum immediately and the doors were locked with only the injured remaining.

Three New Kids went back into the coliseum to talk to the injured and to apologize to them. The teen stars went among the injured, Savage said, offering them water, ice and autographs.

"Jordan Knight was real upset — about ready to cry," Savage said. "He couldn't take it and had to leave."

At the beginning of Friday's concert Wahlberg told his fans he would never hurt them, Savage said. "He felt really bad when he hurt us," she said.

I went to work at the copy store today.

Hal, the manager, showed me how to run a big copy machine and got me started making 3,000 copies of something.

After about 3 minutes, the machine got jammed.

I went looking for Hal so he could show me how to fix it, then a customer told me her machine was jammed and asked me to fix it.
