Iraqi demands focus on recognition of Palestinian homeland

By Ellen Nimmons
The Associated Press

As the U.S. defense secretary sparred Monday with the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee over how best to drive Iraq from Kuwait, Iraq insisted a Palestinian homeland was the issue to be decided first.

President Bush, meanwhile, departed from a prepared text to assail Saddam Hussein.

"I realize the sacrifices that Saddam (Hussein's) brutality has caused this nation," Bush told lawmakers in Brazil on Monday. He estimated high oil prices resulting from the Persian Gulf crisis are costing Brazil $5 billion annually — a figure local experts said seemed excessive.

Bush, after winning U.N. authorization last week for a military strike against Iraq unless it quits Kuwait by Jan. 15, offered to send his secretary of state to Baghdad to negotiate.

Iraq agreed to talk. But Monday, Iraq again insisted the Palestinian people must have a homeland in the West Bank and Gaza, with Jerusalem as its capital, before any other Middle East peace questions can be dealt with.

"The first question is Palestine," Iraqi delegate Adnan Malik told the U.N. General Assembly. "Palestine comes first, Palestine comes second and Palestine comes third."

The United States has rejected any linkage of the Palestine issue to Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait. Israel has occupied the West Bank and Gaza Strip since seizing control of the territories in the 1967 Middle East war.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney told the Senate committee on Monday the administration was pessimistic about economic sanctions bringing an end to Iraq's 4-month-old occupation of Kuwait.

"Given the nature of the regime, given Saddam Hussein's brutality to his own people, his very tight control of that society, his ability to allocate resources for the military, their ability to produce their own food... he can ride them out," Cheney said.

"It is far better for us to deal with him now... than it will be for us to deal with him five or 10 years from now, when... Saddam has become an even better armed and more threatening regional superpower than he is at present," the defense secretary said.

He said he saw no indication Saddam was willing to settle the dispute.

Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., questioned the Bush administration's attitude toward economic sanctions.

"If we have a war, we're never going to know whether they would have worked, would we?" he asked Cheney.

"That's the major point here," Nunn said. "The way you find out if sanctions are going to work is to give them enough time to work."

Foggy weather blamed in Detroit airplane collision

Accident kills 19, injures more than 20

By Jim Irwin
The Associated Press

ROMULUS, Mich. — A jetliner clipped another while preparing to take off from the Detroit airport in heavy fog Monday, igniting a fire that killed at least 19 people and left one plane in smoking ruins.

At least 20 people were injured in the collision between a DC-9 and a Boeing 727-200, both operated by Northwest Airlines. Although it was not immediately clear how the collision occurred, a spokesman for air traffic controllers said the DC-9 appeared to have become lost on a slick, foggy taxiway and strayed into the 727's path.

For nearly an hour after the accident, smoke billowed out of the fuselage of the DC-9, where passengers apparently became trapped by the fast-moving fire. By the time the fire was extinguished, much of the plane's roof was open to the overcast sky.

The DC-9, Flight 1482 to Pittsburgh, was carrying 39 passengers and four crewmembers, according to the airline. The 727, Flight 299 to Memphis, was carrying 146 passengers.

Both flights had originated in Detroit, said Patrick McCann, a Northwest spokesman at its headquarters in Egan, Minn.

"Apparently the right wing of the 727 hit the aft section, the engine, of the DC9, taking the engine off," said Alan Muncaster, another Northwest spokesman. "That resulted in the fire. That, at this point, is all we know."

At the time of the crash, visibility was poor and the ground was wet from a morning snow and sleet storm that delayed flights at Detroit Metropolitan Airport. Muncaster said the airport had been closed to inbound traffic but that planes were being allowed to take off.

Tony Dresden, a spokesman for the National Air Traffic Controllers Association, a union representing air traffic controllers, said there was about a quarter-mile visibility in the air, but only about 800 feet on the ground.

"We've had some discussions with our people out there," Dresden said. "The DC-9 pilot became lost on the runways. The pilot gave the ground controller erroneous information about his position and turned right onto the runway where the 727 was taxiing. The DC-9 pilot discovered at the very last moment where he was, and so the ground controller told him to immediately get off that runway, but it was too late."

He stressed that his information was preliminary. The Federal Aviation Administration, which supervises air traffic controllers, did not immediately comment about Dresden's statement.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board were being dispatched to begin a probe aimed at determining the cause of the accident, a safety board spokesman said.

One survivor from the DC-9, 41-year-old John Izzo, said he was dozing when he "heard a bang, felt a thud and then all of a sudden, there was a blast."

"I saw the fire to the right rear. The whole top burned away, but something was definitely blown away because something flew over my head," said Izzo, a Westinghouse nuclear engineer who was returning to Pittsburgh from a business trip.

Izzo said he escaped by jumping from a wing to the ground. He was not hurt.

"The people that made it down and out were crawling through the slush into the middle of the field," he said. "I just watched the fire spread across the plane and engulf the entire fuselage."

Izzo said he was seated in Row 10 and believes people in the rows behind him could not get out.

The body of the 727 did not appear to have

A dedicated UI student arrives at the steps of the UI School of Art Monday morning, despite the worst winter storm to hit Iowa in five years. While dozens of area schools were closed for the day, the UI remained open. Forecasts for today predict sunny but cold weather, with a high of 23 degrees and winds of 5-10 mph.

Winter weather blasts into IC

10 inches of snow bring chaotic scene

By Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

Though Iowa City didn't tremble from an earthquake, it was hit by a winter storm that dumped about ten inches of snow on its residents late Sunday night.

As UI students plodded, skidded and — in some cases — skied to classes Monday, the frightful weather resulted in severe travel difficulties for city buses, UI Cam-buses, ambulances and people returning from Sunday's Billy Joel concert in Ames.

For UI junior Michael Van Wyk, the return trip on Interstate-80 to Iowa City from the concert lasted four hours as road conditions made it impossible to drive faster than 40 miles per hour.

"The roads were passable if you were careful and drove slowly, but there were quite a few cars in the ditch," Van Wyk said. "But the concert was great and it was worth it."

The biggest snow storm to hit the area since 1985 caused numerous cancellations, including most area school districts, eastern Iowa colleges, Iowa State University, most runways at the Cedar Rapids Airport and Iowa City postal service. KRNA deejay Glen Gardner, who stayed in a motel near the station Sunday night so he could get to his 6 a.m. shift, said it was the longest cancellation list he'd seen in 15 years.

UI Cambus Manager Brian McClatchey said bus drivers were

Blizzard bursts indoor practice facility

By Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

Accumulated snow and blistering winds caused the UI's indoor practice facility to collapse early Monday morning, resulting in about $2 million in damages — nearly the amount of money it cost to build.

A UI maintenance man reported around 2 a.m. Monday that part of the roof was loose and flapping in the wind. Physical Plant employees attempted to increase the pressure ■ Collapse of bubble affects more than just football. Page 1B.

The Daily Iowan/Michael Williams

The Iowa Indoor Practice Facility, commonly called "the bubble," collapsed at about 4 a.m. Monday. The damages, which are estimated at about $2 million, will not be repaired for practice before the Hawkeyes' Rose Bowl trip to Pasadena, California.

an interview broadcast on a local television station. "And now, the bubble has burst."

"It was a spectacular sight and it was seriously damaged," Gehrke said.

A combination of cold temperatures, wind, heavy snow and the age of the roof's material resulted in a tear that developed in the roof and eventually split the roof from side-to-side, causing approximately $2 million in damage, Gehrke said. The roof is made of a teflon-coated plastic and was erected five years ago at a cost of $2.8 million. Gehrke said it was only expected to last about eight years.

A representative from the company in Minneapolis that insured the facility is expected to travel to Iowa City today to assess the damage.

Gehrke said the roof would probably be replaced and would be covered by insurance with a $100,000 deductible, to be paid by the UI. But he added that the "bubble" probably wouldn't be replaced until late April or early May because it has to be at least 50 degrees outside before it can be rebuilt.

For the Hawkeye football team, this incident means that players will probably leave for Pasadena earlier than anticipated to practice for the Rose Bowl.

Other teams that use the indoor practice field include the UI baseball, softball and field hockey teams. Gehrke said these teams, along with the men's and women's track and tennis teams, will have to practice in the UI Recreational Building until the facility can be repaired.

Radio prankster cancels UI classes after storm

By Diana Wallace
The Daily Iowan

What might have been the UI's first cancelled day of classes in five years turned out to be the work of a masterfully scheming prankster.

Glen Gardner, KRNA news director and one half of the "Those Guys in the Morning" deejay crew, said he received a call around 7:15 a.m. Monday announcing the UI had cancelled all classes due to the overnight blizzard.

Gardner said he was immediately suspicious of the call because, after 15 years experience in the business and four years as a UI student, he knew that it was a "highly unusual" cancellation.

But Gardner said the caller "didn't miss a beat" in responding to questions designed to trip him up, supplying a name (Mike Blanche), a position (assistant to UI President Hunter Rawlings) and a phone number (335-1472).

After seeing the UI cancellation on KCRG Channel 9 news, Gardner went ahead and broadcast it himself. But, still suspicious, he called the UI Department of Public Safety and asked them to run a check on Blanche.

As it turns out, no one by the name of Mike Blanche is listed as a UI student, employee or area resident. And the phone number he supplied is actually the number of the cashier's office at the Union Parking Ramp.

"Usually you can tell right off the bat when somebody's pranking," Gardner said. "I mean, if someone with a sixth-grade voice calls to say that school is cancelled, you know it's a hoax. But besides everything else, this guy had a very mature voice."

"We've obviously been duped," he said.

At the time "Blanche" called KRNA, the station was receiving about 100 cancellation reports and inquiries every ten minutes, and Gardner said Monday's

Lobbying 'new trend' for former lawmakers

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Former House Speaker Don Avenson would join a swelling list of former legislators in the lobbying business if he accepts a consulting job.

Legislative records show at least 29 former legislators are registered lobbyists. They are joined by 22 ex-legislative staffers who are now lobbyists.

There are no restrictions on legislators becoming lobbyists, though there has been debate about setting a time period that lawmakers would have to wait. Two years is most frequently mentioned.

Avenson announced Monday he was resigning his House seat because of "inquiries regarding my availability for consulting work which may include representing business interests before the Iowa Legislature."

There's a growing trend for lawmakers to convert their contacts and knowledge to income by representing interest groups at the Legislature. Former Senate Republican Leader Cal Hultman of Red Oak and former Rep. Tom Fey, a Davenport Democrat, are two of the latest converts.

Though most have political ties, lobbyists work both sides of the aisle. Many have made arrangements to assure influence no matter who runs the Legislature.

Former Democratic Rep. Ned Chiodo and former gubernatorial staffer Ed Yelick have teamed up in a lobbying firm that's one of the most influential in the rotunda.

Hultman will represent Iowa's community colleges. His partner will be Lowell Junkins, a former Senate Majority Leader and Democratic gubernatorial candidate.

Some legislators have moved into more partisan lobbying. Former Democratic Sen. Ted Anderson lobbies for the largest union representing state workers. James Wengert, president of the Iowa Federation of Labor, is a registered lobbyist. Wengert is a former Democratic House member.

Others have crossed party lines or become totally independent.

Former Democratic House member Scott Newhard represents the Greater Des Moines Chamber of Commerce. Former House Majority Leader Jerry Fitzgerald represents the city of Des Moines, among other clients.

Avenson hands in formal resignation

18-year veteran may opt for consulting

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Don Avenson on Monday formally resigned as speaker of the Iowa House.

Avenson said he resigned to pursue "numerous contacts" that could include representing business interests before the Legislature.

"In order to pursue these business opportunities and to avoid any appearance of impropriety, it is appropriate for me to resign my office as state representative and as speaker of the House," Avenson said in a statement issued by his office.

Avenson won the Democratic gubernatorial nomination this year but lost badly to Republican Gov. Terry Branstad in the general election.

Avenson has been negotiating with business interests since his defeat. Other lobbyists, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Avenson will take a job lobbying for businesses interested in a statewide telecommunications network.

Avenson, 46, did not seek reelection to his House seat, so he would have left office at the end of the year. Technically, he had remained speaker until Monday's resignation, which came in the form of a letter to Branstad.

The move marks the end of one of the most remarkable legislative careers in Iowa's political history. Avenson, a liberal Democrat, has represented a heavily Republican district in Oelwein for 18 years. He was Democratic leader in the House for nearly 15 years and served as speaker for eight consecutive years, the longest tenure in Iowa history.

There had been considerable speculation about what Avenson would do after the election loss. On election night, he ruled out another run for political office.

"In recent weeks, I have received numerous contacts and inquiries regarding my availability for consulting work which may include representing business interests before the Iowa Legislature," Avenson said.

Avenson would join a long list of former legislators who have made the transition to lobbying. Lowell Junkins, who lost to Branstad in 1986, lobbies for the state's community colleges.

Iowa City ducks will survive the winter

By Jessica Davidson
The Daily Iowan

Don't worry. Despite their heart-wrenching quacks as you walk past the Union, the ducks will survive the winter break even if you're not there to feed them.

The UI ducks are as much a part of the campus as late-night study fests and Thursday nights out. Students can be seen at all times of year throwing breadcrumbs into a sea of ducks.

"Ducks are an Iowa tradition," according to UI sophomore Kirk Macumber. "We'd lose class enrollment if they weren't here. They're why I came to (the UI) in the first place."

UI junior Jamie Bradfield, who feeds the ducks "fairly often," said he worries about them in the winter.

"I'm walking to classes, and I see them looking all cold and hungry. They look up with their dark little eyes like, 'feed me.' They make you feel really guilty," he said.

But UI biology professor George Cain said faithful fowl-feeders shouldn't fret about their feathered friends.

"If they didn't have a ready source of food, they'd go somewhere else," Cain said. "They can fly."

The ducks stick around Iowa City for the food and also for the warm water coming out of the sewers that keeps the river from freezing over completely, said Mic Anderson, conservation officer for Johnson County.

"It's pretty easy living around here," he said. "It's the same reason students stay around for six or seven years."

Anderson said part of the reason the ducks don't migrate in the winter is because students make their lives easier. But no one should feel they have to feed them through the winter.

"I'm sure there's enough for them to eat around there in the water," he said. "If they didn't have enough to eat there, there are plenty of corn fields around."

The Daily Iowan/Randy Bardy

Giving a late Thanksgiving feast, UI senior Charles Boettger and UI sophomore Heidi Weller throw popcorn to ducks behind the Union during a lunch break last Monday afternoon.

Ducks in the wild eat a variety of foods, including, not surprisingly, duck weed and other water plants, as well as small crustaceans, mollusks and insects.

"They're fairly omnivorous," Cain said. "They'll eat just about anything."

"But they don't eat Cheetos in the wild," he added.

Cain said it is actually better for the ducks not to be pampered since it unnaturally increases their population. There aren't enough natural predators, such as fox, racoon and hawks, to keep the duck population in balance and free from disease.

"The first thing is not to feed them at all," Cain said. "But if you have to, don't feed them junk food. That stuff is no better for ducks than it is for people."

He recommended natural foods — such as carrots and peas — as good duck food.

Anderson said grain is also beneficial because it helps add the extra layer of fat ducks need to survive the winter.

"I'm not saying you should start hauling sacks of grain down to them," he said. "But bread is okay."

Without the security blanket of a constant food source and at least a patch of unfrozen water, certain species of wild duck — such as the mallard — may migrate as far as Texas and Mexico.

Which species of duck inhabits the UI campus is difficult to say, according to Anderson.

"I've seen some really odd colors down there," he said. "Must be some strange new breeds."

Cain said the wild mallards have interbred in some cases with domestic white ducks and other species, which created the unusual individuals.

"Ducks are, well, not that particular about who they breed with," he explained. He said ducks that don't migrate but live year-round in one area are more likely to breed with different species.

Cain said it is possible at least some of the UI ducks do migrate and winter somewhere warm, but no one has done any studies.

Anderson said although the ducks are used to hand-outs and don't leave for that reason, there's no cause for alarm.

"A person doesn't need to worry about a duck," Anderson said. "It can take care of itself."

Medical professor dies at age 56

University News Services

Michael J. Brody, Ph.D., an internationally known cardiology researcher and professor of pharmacology at the UI College of Medicine, died suddenly Sunday night at a resort near Cairns, Australia. A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., Brody came to the UI in January 1961 as an instructor.

Brody, who was 56, was celebrated for his work that showed the key role the central nervous system plays in the development of hypertension. In a broad series of studies, Brody and his team documented the critical importance of specific regions of the brain and the ways in which they participate in the development and maintenance of forms of experimental hypertension.

He was in Australia to attend the meeting of the Australian Council for High Blood Pressure Research, where he was to be the Distinguished International Lecturer.

The 29 years of his professional career were spent at the UI, where he enjoyed the high professional and personal regard of colleagues.

College of Medicine Dean John Eckstein said, "There is simply no way to assess or describe the loss that Dr. Brody's death brings to his colleagues and to cardiovascular research worldwide. He was innovative beyond belief, with a lightning-quick mind and a boundless supply of energy on which he drew to the fullest in pursuit of his ideas."

Dr. Francois Abboud, Edith King Pearson Professor and head of internal medicine, and director of the Cardiovascular Center, said, "Michael was a friend, a brilliant scientist, a superb teacher and he was a comet among the world leaders in hypertension research. His loss is a devastating blow to hundreds of trainees, colleagues, and scientists, to the young who loved and emulated him, and to peers who honored and admired him."

Brody was director of the UI's recently announced Specialized

Center for Research in Hypertension. The SCOR was established in June 1990 with a five-year, $7.4 million grant from the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute of the National Institutes of Health.

In addition, he was associate director of the UI Cardiovascular Center. The center is nationally respected for its interdisciplinary approach to combating cardiovascular disease, the nation's leading killer.

P. Michael Conn, professor and head of pharmacology, said, "Dr. Brody's career at the University of Iowa has shown us how outstanding research should be blended with a commitment to teaching and training in order to produce a major contribution — both in scientific achievement and in a legacy to students and fellows. We have lost a staunch colleague and a good friend."

Brody had received a great deal of professional recognition for his research contributions to hypertension research. Most recently, he was a recipient of the 1990 CIBA Award for Hypertension Research, which he shared with Abboud.

This year, he was also given the Otto Krayer Award in Pharmacology from the American Society for Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics.

He was active in campus affairs, as well, and served as president of the UI Faculty Senate and as president of PROFS, the Public Representation of the Faculty Senate.

He received his doctorate in pharmacology in 1961 from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, and his B.S. in pharmacy from Columbia University in 1956.

Memorial services are pending. Contributions can be made to the Michael J. Brody Medical Fund at the University of Iowa Foundation.

He is survived by his wife, the former Natalie Samuelson; two daughters, Ellen Laura of New York and Deborah Susan of Alexandria, Va.; his mother, Ethel, of New York; and a brother, Saul, of New York.

ISIS computer error stalls registration

By Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

A "glitch" in the UI's registration computer system stopped several UI students from registering for classes late Friday night.

At 9:05 p.m. Friday night, an "inadvertent mistake" occurred when students' accounts receivable files were being loaded into the computer, according to UI Registrar Jerry Dallam.

For approximately three hours, any student who had recently charged on their student ID was unable to register for classes because the computer incorrectly read they owed the UI money — money not due until December 15.

"It shouldn't have happened to the students. The system just couldn't distinguish between money students owed from the last billing and money students owe in the next billing," Dallam said.

"This was a glitch in the computer we couldn't take into consideration. We're sorry it happened," he added.

Dallam said the system corrected itself Saturday morning and allowed students to register for classes.

Planes

been seriously damaged in the collision. One passenger, 60-year-old Robert Karp of Jackson, Miss., said passengers from the 727 walked off the plane and down the stairs.

"It sounded to me like it was a loud thump," said Karp, a professor at Jackson State University.

"I thought the tire had blown out. The front end of the plane had begun to lift off. I don't think the back wheels were off the ground yet. As soon as I heard the thump we came to an abrupt stop. I remember looking at the other plane and seeing smoke rolling out." Three men who earlier had identified themselves as pilots were sitting across the aisle from him. One of them said, "Oh, my God, our entire wing is gone," according to Karp.

Wayne County Executive Edward McNamara said the only injuries on the Boeing were those that occurred during the plane's evacuation. He did not say how many people were injured on the DC-9, but said there were survivors.

Linda Kalinsky of the Taylor Ambulance Co. said there were 50 or 60 injuries altogether, including some burn victims.

Twenty people were taken to four hospitals in the area, including two who were taken to the University of Michigan Medical Center Burn Center at Ann Arbor.

Muncaster said surviving passengers were taken to the airport Marriott hotel.

A family center was opened at a Ramada Inn about a mile from the scene.

At about 5 p.m., rescue workers hoisted body bags from the DC-9 and handed them to others on a wing.

Smoking will be prohibited in Iowa Senate next year

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — The Iowa Senate, long a haven for smokers, next year will become another of the many state government offices and buildings where smoking is restricted.

Anti-smoking activists said there will be restrictions on where people can smoke in the Senate.

Sen. Jean Lloyd-Jones, D-Iowa City, leader of the effort, said the change came because of changing public perceptions and an election surprise.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Hutchins, D-Audubon, confirmed there was an agreement to limit smoking in and around the Senate chamber.

"I hate to call it a victory, but I think we're making progress toward a smoke-free environment," Ms. Lloyd-Jones said.

ard a smoke-free environment," Ms. Lloyd-Jones said.

The Senate has been a holdout as non-smoking sentiments swept through state government. The House banned smoking several years ago. Gov. Terry Branstad, a non-smoker, has made large sections of the Statehouse smoke-free.

The Senate routinely has rejected efforts to limit smoking. When Branstad ordered cigarette machines removed from state property, Senators seized a machine and installed it behind the chamber. It has remained the only cigarette machine on state property.

Leading the puffing charge was Sen. C. Joseph Coleman, D-Clare, the longest-serving member of the Senate and a heavy smoker.

Coleman was defeated in last month's general election.

Branstad warns: no new spending

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Gov. Terry Branstad on Monday said he wants to meet with legislative leaders on the state's budget but sent "a very clear warning" there's no room for new spending.

"I hope they take it more seriously than they did last year because last year was a disaster," Branstad said.

Branstad said he wants to meet with legislative leaders this month to talk about the 1991 session. Aides said a mid-month meeting is being discussed.

Several legislative interim committees are wrapping up their work and issuing recommendations. Those recommendations carry a significant price tag, and Branstad indicated he would not approve of most.

He said new spending programs will be rejected, and administration officials are looking at cutting existing programs.

"Anybody who wants to discuss some new spending better be ready to tell where they'll cut," Branstad said. "We don't have a lot of money to do that."

State government is expected to collect $200 million more in taxes next year due to natural economic growth. Branstad said major commitments in education and human services will consume much of that increase.

Leaders of both parties have ruled out a major tax increase. Branstad said he does not expect fee increases either.

tedly were on heightened alert. Some troops donned gas masks and protective gloves against a possible chemical weapons strike at the same time Iraq test-fired missiles on Sunday, a correspondent with the NBC Radio network said.

The heightened alert reportedly went into effect early Thursday and was the highest alert since Iraq seized Kuwait on Aug. 2. But it was not a war alert, U.S. military officers said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Iraq test-fired Soviet-type Scud missiles — which could be used to carry chemical weapons — on Sunday, the U.S. military said. The military said the flight path was away from the U.S.-led multinational force in eastern Saudi Arabia.

A jetliner carrying boxing great Muhammad Ali and some former American and Canadian hostages returned to the Jordanian capital Monday shortly after taking off for New York. The plane turned around because of minor technical problems but resumed its flight about seven hours later, officials said.

Also Monday, the British Foreign Office reported Iraq has detained four more British men who had been in hiding in Kuwait. The Foreign Office said there were 440 Britons hiding in Kuwait and an estimated 740 Britons in Iraq.

Cousteau Society speaker to give lecture on environment

By Aziz Gökdemir
The Daily Iowan

Peter Burtchell, a former member of the National Park Service and now a speaker with the Cousteau Society, will present a lecture titled, "Environmental Issues of the 1990's," at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the IMU Ballroom.

Burtchell is a geologist whose main interest is the beauty and vulnerability of the sea.

In a telephone interview arranged through Ted Habte-Gabr, chair of the UI Lecture Committee that is sponsoring the event, Burtchell offered a preview of the topics included in his presentation.

The main part of the lecture will be accompanied by a 45-minute long slide show, followed by a question and answer period.

"Altogether, it should be less than an hour," Burtchell said, before being told that the incinerator controversy is presently heating up in Iowa City and it was almost certain that he will be asked a number of questions specifically on that issue.

In response, Burtchell said that he would be happy to answer — unofficially — any questions of local concern during the Q&A period.

Because covering all the important environmental issues would take up a whole semester of lectures, he said topics like global warming and overpopulation will also have to be limited.

The lecture will begin with an introduction to the Cousteau Society, a non-profit organization founded in 1973 by Jacques-Yves Cousteau, his son Jean-Michel Cousteau and their team. Jacques-Yves Cousteau is the world's premier marine explorer, and the co-inventor of the aqualung. He and his two sons undertook many exploration projects around the world, during one of which his other son, Philippe, perished.

The Society states its aim as "the protection and improvement of the quality of life."

Burtchell stressed the lecture will primarily deal with three major global issues that are of concern to the Cousteau Society — "Deforestation and Loss of Biological Diversity," "The Coming Water Crisis" and "Antarctica."

Cousteau expeditions to the Amazon, the Nile and Antarctica will be a backdrop for the lecture.

Called the "last continent," Antarctica is presently high on the Cousteau Society's agenda. In January of this year, Cousteau took one child from each of the six inhabited continents on an expedition to the seventh, uninhabited one — documented in a Cousteau film titled, Lilliput in Antarctica.

The Cousteau Society has been circulating a petition for more than a year hoping to encourage world leaders to protect Antarctica as a "Natural Reserve and Land of Science." This effort parallels the Antarctic Declaration being circulated by Greenpeace for individuals to sign. Has the Cousteau Society thought of joining forces?

A divided approach might work better according to Burtchell, who said, "We feel different people respond to different kinds of pressure."

"Some people slam their doors when they hear the name, 'Greenpeace' — which is unfortunate," Burtchell said. This is not the case with Cousteau, a respected name that helps open doors throughout the world.

"We are working from the diplomacy side, Greenpeace from the activist side," Burtchell said.

Finally, there seems to be some confusion regarding the sign language sign printed on the poster announcing the lecture. The UI's Services for Persons with Disabilities, whose telephone number is printed next to the sign, said Monday that they had not been notified by the committee to make arrangements for the deaf.

Burtchell said that even though he is not fluent enough in sign language to be able to conduct the lecture simultaneously in sign, he has some experience from communicating with deaf friends and he would be willing to answer questions from deaf people individually, after the formal Q&A period.

Prank

cancelation list — which included Kirkwood and Coe colleges in Cedar Rapids and postal service in Iowa City — was one of the largest he'd ever seen.

The cancellation was announced on KRNA for about 15 minutes before the clarification was made. It was also aired on several other area stations and two television news channels.

Bob Smith, assistant news director at KCRG Channel 9, said the caller he spoke to even produced the station's code word, which is supplied to organizations to prevent such pranks.

"Blanche" even had the nerve to call KRNA back after the correction was broadcast.

"So," he said, "I guess I really hoaxed you guys."

Classes were actually cancelled Monday at Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa called off its evening classes.

The UI has cancelled classes only twice since 1968.

The last time was in 1985, when an ice storm hit Eastern Iowa during Thanksgiving Break.

Weather

told to drive carefully and not attempt to follow a strict schedule.

"The drivers have done very well. We've mostly tried to keep some semblance of a schedule by keeping them evenly spaced," McClatchey said.

He said several people called with concerns that the Cambuses might not be running.

"People started calling at 6 a.m. and for the first couple of hours we were getting approximately 10 calls per minute. Since then its been pretty consistent," McClatchey said.

"If you go to bus stop, one will come. We don't know when, but one will come," he added.

McClatchey said when the buses initially went out, road conditions were very poor and unsafe so the buses were called back for approximately a half hour.

"Every once in a while one gets stuck, but we get it moving again," he said.

Kim McCarty, manager of customer services for the Iowa City Post Office, said the local postmaster called off delivery because the snow accumulation and 30-mph winds made the streets impassable and conditions unsafe for carriers.

Meanwhile, the Iowa City Police Department reported 14 traffic accidents between 8 p.m. Sunday to 8 p.m. Monday. The Iowa City Fire Department, however, reported little difficulty in maneuvering fire trucks through the snow-covered roads.

"With our fire trucks, because they are heavier, they have less difficulty getting through. We had to drive a little slower and more carefully, but it didn't affect it too much," said Ron Stutzman, captain of the ICFD.

"During one call this morning an ambulance got stuck and we had to call another one, but we worked around that," he said.

Area towing services were kept busy responding to calls and aiding motorists on the interstates.

"We were extremely busy," said Wendy Wissink, office manager of Holiday Wrecker, 211 10th St. Coralville. "We mostly tried to keep the interstate clear. If they called and their car was stuck in their apartment lot there wasn't much we could do. We can't drive through the snow any better than they can."

Gary Forester, a meteorologist at the National Weather Service in Des Moines, said the snowfall began in Iowa City around 6 p.m. Sunday night and ended around 4 p.m. Monday evening.

"This storm developed in the panhandle of Oklahoma and traveled across Missouri. Generally these storms bring heavier amounts of snow because they draw more moisture," Forester said.

Gear Daddies' reputation intact; Erickson tribute bends the mind

By Steve Cruse
The Daily Iowan

The Gear Daddies' first record, 1988's "Let's Go Scare Al," was a profane, bitter swipe at the American heartland myth. Songwriter and vocalist Martin Zellar, who grew up in Austin, Minn., clearly had few fond memories of the place. The album was filled with rural characters leading hopeless, bleak lives. If at times Zellar overstated his case, the record was still a classic slam: The ultimate anti-country country album.

The band's new effort, "Billy's Live Bait," is a looser album — not as didactic as the debut, but less melodic as well. Only the first three songs, "Stupid Boy," "Sonic Boom" and "Wear Your Crown," have the immediacy apparent throughout "Let's Go Scare Al"; the rest relies mainly on carefully constructed atmosphere, and several tracks sound uncomfortably similar.

On the first album, Zellar made a point — in songs like "Boys Will Be Boys" and "She's Happy," of sympathizing with women stuck in destructive or unfulfilling relationships. Now he's gone all the way, as the lyrics of "Stupid Boy" are written entirely from the woman's perspective: "I feel sick and I feel used/You ain't the boy I thought I knew/You go and put me on your shelf/You never think of no one else but yourself." All of the Gear Daddies' strengths — heart-tugging arrangements, loopy hooks and Zellar's wounded yet strong voice — are apparent in this song.

Drummer Billy Dankert's contribution, "Time Heals," is an agreeably repetitive rocker centered around the singer's bemused memories of his father's advice ("Time heals and time forgets/You shouldn't smoke those goddamn cigarettes"). The song doesn't have the charge of Dankert's "Blues Mary" from the first album, but it does send side one out on a strong note.

The album has a few lame tracks. While "Let's Go Scare Al" transcended its traditional chord structures to achieve surprising effect, "Billy's Live Bait" relies too much on standard riffs. The rant "Don't Look at Me," for example, finally degenerates into a retreat of "Strength," but without that song's epic sweep. Also, the final song, a tacked-on, untitled ditty about a guy whose dream is to drive a Zamboni machine, is funny as far as it goes — but then it doesn't go very far.

The press release accompanying "Where the Pyramid Meets the Eye," the recently released multi-artist tribute to songwriter and former 13th Floor Elevators leader Roky Erickson, credits Erickson with "inventing" psychedelic music around 1965 — kind of a silly claim, since just about any major recording artist on acid around that time (George Harrison, take note) could say the same.

Nevertheless, "Where the Pyramid Meets the Eye" is a fantastic album. Even if you've never heard of Erickson, the names of the contributors are enough to make the record a must: The Jesus and Mary Chain, R.E.M., ZZ Top, Poi Dog Pondering, John Wesley Harding, T-Bone Burnett — the list goes on. There are 17 songs altogether, plus two extra tracks on the cassette version.

Erickson's obsession with the preternatural is legendary, and there are lots of monsters on this record. R.E.M., for example, does "I Walked With a Zombie," a hilarious marching country rocker with the following lyrics: "I walked with a zombie/I walked with a zombie/I walked with a zombie last night." That's all there is to it, though Michael Stipe, who can find meaning in anything, bleats out the lyrics almost mournfully.

Also on hand are John Wesley Harding's celebratory rendition of

Roky Erickson

"If You Have Ghosts" ("... you have everything," goes the rest of it), which features backup chants and includes the observation, "I don't want my fangs too long." The biggest freak-out, though, is the explosive epic "Red Temple Prayer (Two-Headed Dog)" by the band Sister Double Happiness. The song's central image — "workin' in the graveyard with a two-headed dog" — is wonderfully metaphoric.

Other highlights are Primal Scream's "Slip Inside This House," a dense sonic steamroller that probably fulfills Erickson's idea of what his songs should sound like; Poi Dog Pondering's delicate version of "I Had to Tell You"; and T-Bone Burnett's rendition of the weepy ballad "Nothing In Return."

Actor Bob Cummings dies at 80

By Rose Ana Berbeo
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Robert Cummings, who played a swinging bachelor in the 1950s sitcom "The Bob Cummings Show" and starred in dozens of films, has died at age 80.

The actor, who had Parkinson's disease, died Sunday at the Motion Picture and Television Hospital in Woodland Hills of kidney failure and complications from pneumonia, said hospital spokeswoman Louella Benson.

After a movie career in the 1940s, he entered the burgeoning TV industry and starred in two versions of "The Bob Cummings Show," which in its first incarnation was probably the closest thing to a sex comedy on television at the time.

On the first "Bob Cummings Show," which ran as a sitcom on NBC and CBS from 1955 to 1959, Cummings played Bob Collins, a photographer with his own airplane who squired beautiful models around town. He could never settle on any one woman, causing endless problems at home and among the various girlfriends.

It was called "Love That Bob" in syndication, and can still be seen in reruns.

In its second incarnation, "The Bob Cummings Show" ran as a comedy-adventure on CBS in 1961-62, and Cummings played Bob Carson, charter pilot and amateur detective.

In 1954, he won an Emmy for "Twelve Angry Men."

Milton Berle, who used Cummings as a straight man in the 1930s and '40s, said the clean-cut actor had a great knack for comedy. "He was a darling man," Berle said Sunday. "I, and others in show business who knew him, will miss him dearly."

Film's notoriety undeserved

By Henry Olson
The Daily Iowan

Some films depend upon inside sources to be noticed. Philip Kaufman's oh-so-naughty "Henry and June" has the MPAA to thank for its recent jaunt into public scrutiny. However, without its X-rating controversy, "Henry and June" would have languished away in obscurity. And well it should have.

Movies

"Henry and June" is the tale of a bizarre love triangle among the celebrated and oft-banned American author Henry Miller (Fred Ward), Anais Nin (Maria De Madeiros) and Miller's wife June (Uma Thurman).

Before Miller's arrival, Nin's existence had been that of a bored housewife. "Iliuh NEEDED to know PEEEEpuhl who are aLIllvuh!" (read: "I need know people who are alive.") she says. The "VEEEhwuh!" ("virile") American piques Nin's interest. "He calls me 'KEED', ('kid') she says.

Just as pornographers Nin and Miller are getting to know each other, in walks June. Immediately, or so she thinks, Nin develops a chemistry with zee aMERweekahn VOOOahn. June leads Nin on but never expresses a sentiment stronger than "I wish I had taken opium with you."

June's character is the only point of interest in the film. She provides the perfect foil for both authors. Seeking out Nin's terror of becoming a bourgeois matron, and Miller's insecurity as a man and author, June invokes in them impotent rage. She destroys their silly erotic delusions by shoving reality down their throats. Unfortunately, her character is irreparably handicapped by Uma Thurman's stunning but unskilled presence.

"Iliuh NEEDED to know PEEEEpuhl who are aLIllvuh!"

If you haven't already guessed, De Madeiros's accent grates upon your nerves like a rake across a chalkboard. She seems to be doing an impression of a French woman imitating an American imitating a French woman.

Add to this Fred Ward's caricature of an American man, and the movie becomes insufferable. Ward is not so much a human being as he is a collection of mannerisms and mispronunciations. He is stereotypically "earthy," sexual without being sensual.

"Henry and June" is certainly mature in its subject matter, but Kaufman hardly treats his characters maturely. Anais and Henry go at it like bunnies all the time, but we see none of the effects it has on their personalities. The only reason we're given for their promiscuity is that June drives them to it.

As for the steamy parts, well, "Henry and June" has lots of 'em, but they are not terribly erotic. Not only do the spicy scenes fail to project any feeling of love, but the actors in them don't really seem to be enjoying themselves. In terms of honest portrayal of lesbian eroticism, "Desert Bloom" was much more believable.

"Henry and June" teaches us nothing. It is simply the story of a few years of a woman's life. That's all very nice, but who wants to sit through two hours of a stranger's past? We become bored; she becomes a "VOOO-mahn." Well, goood for her.

Graduates' work on display

By Lindsay Alan Park
The Daily Iowan

This week's exhibit in the UI Art Building's Eve Drewelowe Gallery displays the paintings of graduate students in art Jolene Reynolds and Andrew Moran.

Apart from the presence of landscape elements, the work of these two artists is unrelated, yet Reynolds and Moran have intelligently circumscribed the gallery with a tonally progressive installation that begins cool, warms up and cools down again.

Reynolds' work mostly features human figures with fluttering birds near their heads, offering viewers a range of responses. However, she seems to be only scratching the surface, considering the visual and thematic possibilities her work raises.

The Daily Iowan/David Greedy

areas of a couple of the canvases she begins to play with trees and negative space around the birds, but even these efforts are by hindered by an overall indistinctness.

Abstract art doesn't have to be indistinct, but several of Reynolds' pieces in this show become so when viewed from more than a few feet away. The muddiness probably results from a combination of factors, but the most obvious problem to me is the ubiquitous use of green, which apart from its effect on other colors, lessens the impact of the areas where green is used superbly (as is the flock of birds around the woman).

Moran's spare landscapes, on the other hand, are quite distinct visually, but that isn't surprising given the safer route he has taken. Moran adapts Hudson River School's rules for flawlessly balanced landscape painting to his spare, surreal vistas. While borrowing a sky or two from a Flemish master, Moran contrasts them with otherworldly (or perhaps underwater) vegetation that would look more at home in a Bosch's "Garden of Earthly Delights."

Scale seems not to affect the amount of detail Moran includes in his images — very little. As a result, a shape resembling a geyser reads so strangely that when it reappears larger on another canvas, it looks unfinished. Moran's rendering of shadows fare the worst, looking careless and amateurish.

The Drewelowe gallery, located in the UI Art Building, is open from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. The paintings by Reynolds and Moran will be on display through Thursday, Dec. 6, after which there will be a closing reception from 5 to 7 p.m.

"About Touch," art student Wendy Kveck's show of paintings and drawings will be on display through Saturday, Dec. 8 in the UI Art Building's Checkered Space gallery.

Kveck uses mostly solid color applied with deliberate, economic brush strokes to create simple forms that comprise surprisingly complex compositions akin to the work of the late Milton Avery.

The subjects of "About Touch" include mothers, children, friends and pets in various acts of contact. A little girl clutches a black dog, mothers fuss with daughters' hair, a woman drinks coffee and gently pets another dog's head, a tot nestles in her mother's lap — in all of these Kveck tries and mostly succeeds in expressing the mood and feeling of touch.

There will be a reception for Kveck's show on Thursday, Dec. 6, at 8 p.m.

UI jazz students to perform at Sanctuary restaurant; director calls show an on-the-job learning experience

By Brett Ratner
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City music fans will have an opportunity this week to support local talent, as UI jazz students bring their talents out of the classroom and into a "real-life" proving ground.

The Sanctuary, 405 S. Gilbert St., will host the UI Small Jazz Ensembles class' final performance of the semester on Tuesday and Wednesday night. The shows start at 9:30 p.m.; there is no cover charge.

Small Jazz Ensembles director Steve Grismore, Professor of Jazz Studies at the UI, says that the "bar gigs" provide an opportunity for young musicians not available in the classroom.

"Playing at the Sanctuary and Gabe's puts the students in a real-life live situation," Grismore says. "They have to know how to count off tunes, communicate with the other members of the band, and act professionally in front of an audience."

The performance of the various combos represents the student's final examination for the semester. The bands are organized and directed predominantly by the students under the supervision of the music directors. While the styles performed are basically jazz, many bands feature a variety of types of jazz, ranging from modern fusion to traditional standards. Many bands also feature original music.

There will be four combos playing each night. Grismore urges everyone, especially students, to come to the shows and "support some aspiring jazz musicians."

One of her figures, seemingly straight out of Picasso's "blue period," evokes humor because his windblown beard is indistinguishable from a bird. On another canvas, tension dominates as a child contemplates with wonder a perched red fowl.

Yet Reynolds ignores what so many other artists, from Vergil to Goya to Hitchcock, have seen in the image of birds "upside the head" — terror and forshadowing of death. The idea is simply not present, even in the image of a female figure, who though engulfed in a flock of descending birds, displays little urgency.

Reynolds seems ambivalent about her focus and about her use of color. The birds are not prominent enough in the compositions to sustain much interest, and her limited exploration of the forms leads me to think she isn't very interested in them either. In small

MCA SALE

International education

The recent purchase of the Music Corporation of America by Japanese business interests created another round of concern that the Japanese are buying out America. For some, that concern manifested itself in Japan-bashing. But instead, the sale of MCA should signal to Americans that they need to help themselves and that they stand to learn much from the Japanese.

Why does Japan continue to gobble up big American businesses — specifically Hollywood studios? The massive U.S. trade deficit with Japan is the reason. Every day Americans take home a plethora of Japanese goods. The capital used to purchase the Honda, Mazda and Sony products flows back to Japan. As a result, the Japanese have excess capital available with which to acquire American businesses and real estate.

Criticizing Japan, or any other nation, will not stem the tide of foreign investment. Americans must take a proactive approach if they are to re-establish U.S. economic competitiveness.

One action the average U.S. citizen could take to help reduce the trade deficit — and consequently the rate of foreign investment — is to buy American-made goods. Certainly, this is no panacea, but it is something most Americans could do without much hardship.

But the real issue is that the United States needs to improve its own production system. George Will was correct when he addressed Japanese investment and said that Americans would not have to sell part of the farm if they were doing a better job farming it. Workers must increase their productivity and industry must manufacture products that are as good or better than those of the foreign competition. And they need to cost less.

Japan-bashing is not going to help U.S. businesses make better products. Throughout history, great civilizations have risen to the top and stayed there by adopting the best cultural aspects of rival civilizations. Americans would do well to study Japanese economic and educational methods. The United States is in no way a second-rate power, but its relative decline in recent years should prompt American businesses to look for — and willingly accept — ideas for improvement.

The sale of MCA to Japan signals that Americans need to farm their homestead better to avoid being plowed under.

It's the vice that gives me peace

It's one of those days. The news doesn't strike me as momentous. Margaret Thatcher deserves a political obituary written with the kind of in-depth analysis I stubbornly refuse to wrangle with today. I don't wish to exploit my family by writing about the Thanksgiving holiday. But if the New Madrid quake doesn't put the kabosh on all our insignificant pursuits, Tuesday is column day. Somewhat dispirited, I reached into my pocket for inspiration.

In it I found a plastic bag, the kind that seals shut when you press the lock top together. Inside the bag were two cigars I'd purchased earlier in the day, wrapped in cedar with their ends clipped. I smoke cigars perhaps twice a year. The first time I did it my mother executed to perfection the Maternal Chuckle of Scorn. Mothers learn this laugh the moment offspring attain the age where they will damned well do things mothers do not want them to. Having no legal means to prevent this, mothers learn to undermine revolutionary acts after the fact or, even better, as they occur. The Maternal Chuckle of Scorn is an efficient mechanism for impeding any child's bolt toward independence.

I'm no longer clear on the impetus for buying that first cigar. It could have been the sweet, heavy aroma of the tobacconist's shop. I only remember I was at my parent's house when I smoked it. It had been an exceptionally stupid purchase. I didn't know anything about the strengths of different brands. My one certainty was that it had to be visually striking if I was going to be seen smoking it. I therefore selected a very long cigar of imposing circumference and intermediate darkness. One night after dinner, I took matches and the cedar slats real appreciators use to light cigars out to the front porch.

It was a muggy summer night. A trio of bedraggled cows rubbed against the neighbor's fence, giving forth an occasional piteous moo. Since it was after 9:00 p.m., mom had donned her short-sleeved nightgown and slippers. She padded out behind me. Her own cigarette glowed cheerily in the dark.

"What are you doing?" I can't explain it, but I did not appreciate her tone of voice. I had the uncanny suspicion she was enjoying secret mirth. Mirth at my expense is something I react poorly to.

"I'm having a cigar." I lit the cedar with a match, let the flame turn blue, and began to puff on the enormity clutched between my teeth. It felt like I was taking a pull on a Mini Mag Lite. At this tense moment my mother, being as subject to poor judgment as any other while I smoked it.

I puffed and exhaled. I knocked off the ash every so often. Mother laughed at me every so often. At one point I became angry enough to swear at her mocking behavior. This drove her to issue a Maternal Sigh of Martini and retreat to the kitchen. I remained on the porch smoking and thinking until I held a reasonably small stub. Thus began my serious appreciation of vice.

Used reasonably, most vices enhance the quality of life. This is something I know now that I could not articulate when I was smoking my first cigar. Since that night, I have grown to enjoy a variety of foods, wines, liquors and brandies. I stock cognac each winter. I look forward, soon, to trying Armagnac for the first time. These things are often regarded as elitist because of their cost. I suspect it has more to do with the luxury of time than the luxury of expendable income. I tend to enjoy them late at night, when the rest of my life has faded to a dull roar. I tend to enjoy them moderately, because they do cost an arm and a leg. And because, sooner or later, every cigar I've ever smoked comes to taste like a wet gym sock.

There is currently a state-sanctioned backlash against vice in our culture. I find this interesting, considering that many people's best ideas and most charitable turns of mind come to them amidst a quiet smoke or drink in the wee hours. Humphrey Bogart (who, I feel compelled to say before someone else says it for me, died of cancer after years of heavy smoking) once said he couldn't trust any man so afraid to make a fool of himself that he refused to take a drink. Here, here. For those of us in the moderate zone — heavy smoke sweetening the air around us, the amber contents of a snifter sparkling in the candlelight — the gentle pleasures of our vices serve not to deaden us, but to keep us alive to the possibilities of life.

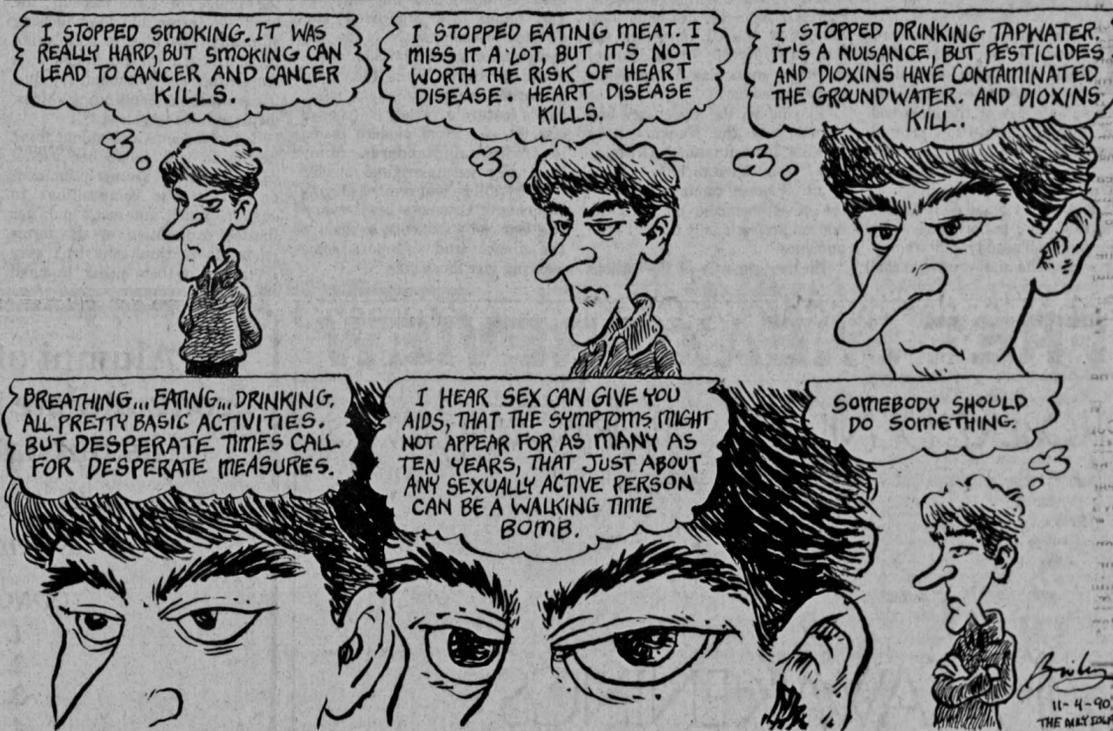

Kim Painter

mortal, chose to let fly the Maternal Chuckle of Scorn. A deep sound, a very heartfelt, warm and human sound, emanated from her midriff. If I hadn't known better, I'd have sworn she simply found the spectacle of her 21-year-old daughter lighting a cigar with a piece of wood amusing. But I knew better. She was making sport of me. I sat back in the metal lawn chair and crossed leg over knee, trying to look like a woman of importance, a CEO or a tarlet.

Mother laughed again. I glared at her. "Well," she scolded, "I don't know why you want to do that."

"Because it tastes good." This was a lie. A taste for cigars is cultivated, much like a taste for wines. It tasted like hell. It was like sucking on a smoking, wet gym sock. I looked down at mom and smiled, trying to ignore the queasiness that billowed in my gut like a cloud. I focused on the spot below my nose without crossing my eyes. It was a long cigar indeed. And mother, I could tell, had the patience to sit beside me laughing all night

Boycott the smut

To the Editor:

I have some serious problems with Mr. Wallace Chappell and the smut he's bringing to the stage of Hancher Auditorium, one of the finest auditoriums in the nation — a stage that has been saturated with only the finest products of culture, from "Les Miserables" to Zubin Mehta and the New York Philharmonic. Take a look at the latest accomplishments of the homosexual community. We now have naked people prancing around on stage in Hancher. For what? What is the purpose of this? Is it to strengthen this community's understanding and awareness of "what it is to be gay in this country, what it is to be black in this country, what it's like to be special"? I don't have to be Russian to know they're starving. I don't have to be Kuwaiti to know my country has been invaded. This type of smut only erases our cultural heritage.

Wally says there was no university money spent, and that it received help through NEA funds; which means, in fact, this is funded by you and me, whether we choose to see this or not. Join me, and don't see this garbage. In doing so, let's send a long overdue message to our congressional dimwits that not only do we not want to see this kind of stuff, we don't want to pay for the learning experience, either.

Alternatives

To the Editor:

In her story "200 attend discussion by Operation U.S. Out" [Nov. 28, DI], Ms. Jennifer Glynn inaccurately attributes a statement to me. She writes that I, along with several others, argued that "while it was crucial for citizens against war in the Persian Gulf to organize and voice their opinions, it was the responsibility of the government to come up with alternatives."

I repeatedly stated during the meeting that my view is that Americans should organize themselves against Bush's war drive and that it is for Arabs to decide how best to resolve the current Iraqi-Kuwaiti dispute. The political principle here is defending the right of Arab self-determination. The countries in the region, and most especially the Arab masses, are the only ones who have any business being involved. Whatever Bush may think, the U.S. is not the world's cop.

Nor is the U.N. It should now be evident to all that the U.S. intends to conduct war under a U.N. security council cover. As nations, the permanent members of the Security Council figure among the greatest robbers and butchers of the past 100 years. It makes no difference whether it's a U.S. or a U.N. gun that is held to the head. There can be no Arab self-determination until all non-Arab troops are withdrawn.

Bush and the U.S. government do have a responsibility. The opinion that Ms. Glynn reports me as sharing was actually offered by the "woman in the audience" quoted in the next paragraph. I could agree with that speaker if she meant, as I suspect she did, not that government should find alternative ways to kick Iraq out of Kuwait, but that it should find a way to bring U.S. troops home other than in military caskets.

The crucial question in the Persian Gulf

As the smoke of battle cleared over Antietam in 1862, two noncombatants picked their way through the human carnage. They were armed not with guns, but with new devices of profound importance for the future of war: cameras.

They had been sent to Maryland by Matthew Brady, at whose New York gallery there subsequently appeared an exhibit, "The Dead of Antietam." A New York Times reporter wrote: "The dead of the battlefield come up to us very rarely, even in dreams... Mr. Brady has done something to bring home to us the terrible reality and earnestness of war. If he has not brought the bodies and laid them in our dooryards and along our streets, he has done something very like it."

A century later, in Indochina in the 1960s, cameras would change the relationship between war and the home front, and hence would limit the ability of democracies to have a recourse to force. Saddam Hussein may have this in mind when he says, "America is not a society that can stand 10,000 casualties in one battle." America did stand it at Antietam, but that was before the graphic revolution in communication.

That revolution produced, in time, television, and a new tension between the traditional instrument of statecraft, war, and the foundation of democratic government, opinion. But that tension was a long time in coming.

Robert Hughes, the art critic, writes about the cynicism in the aftermath of The Great War (as it was known to a generation quaintly confident that the future had nothing worse in store). Hughes says people knew they had been lied to, not least by journalism: "A compliant and self-censoring press had seen to it that very little of the reality of war, not even a photo of a corpse, found its way into any French, German or British newspaper."

In 1943, Life magazine created controversy, and a new era in journalism (and in international relations), by publishing a photograph of three dead Americans on the beaches of New Guinea. We were not yet a wired nation during the Korean War, so Vietnam was our first "living-room war." All future wars will be.

Because of television, which makes war's horrors instantaneously and universally immediate, democratic leaders must take extraordinary care to prepare civilians for the facts of combat. That is a political reason (there is also a constitutional reason) why Congress should convene immediately to begin either protecting Americans from, or preparing them for, the eruption of slaughter in their living rooms.

But suppose there is no bloodshed. Suppose economic sanctions are given time to work, and do. And suppose success is achieved not by tidy technological pressure — not just by denial of spare parts for Saddam's military machine — but by the most basic deprivation: of food.

Last week Iraq claimed, almost certainly falsely, that the sanctions are killing babies. Iraq produced pictures showing a malnourished baby with a swollen belly, purportedly a victim of the sanctions.

Let us be clear-eyed about our hopes that the sanctions will make war unnecessary: Suffering children are part of our objective.

In 1932, the Western world was still reeling from The Great War and was looking for alternatives to violence. (The next year Hitler came to power and two weeks later students of the Oxford Union voted for a resolution never to fight for King and country.) In 1932, a Twentieth Century Fund report, the authors of which included John Foster Dulles, assessed food embargoes against nations that import (as Iraq does) significant amounts of foods:

"(Food embargoes) are not persuasive measures, but the most savage of war measures. They are particularly difficult to uphold on merely moral grounds, since they bear more heavily on the civilian population than on the army, and more heavily on women and children than on men. For effectiveness, and for moral standing, a really successful food embargo ranks well in advance of torpedoing hospital ships and is somewhere near the class of gassing maternity hospitals."

Even allowing for hyperbole, the point is germane. Have America's leaders prepared the public for the sight of the success of sanctions: pictures at dinner time, in living rooms, of babies' swollen bellies?

So far the primary role of television in the current crisis has been to tell the story of our plucky military men and women making do in the desert. On what may be the eve of war, while huge numbers of hospital beds are ready for casualties, television chat-shows punctuate their segments with cheery snippets of tape showing soldiers saying "Hi, Mom! Are Americans ready for the real thing?"

It cannot be proven, but it is believable that today's public wariness about war in the gulf is, at least in small part, a result of recent exposure to black-and-white war photographs 125 years old — those from Antietam and elsewhere that were used in the PBS series on the Civil War.

Saddam, whose defensive deployments are designed to maximize American casualties quickly, knows the crucial question: What can Americans stand?

Bush continues journey despite Argentine revolt

By Terence Hunt
The Associated Press

BRASIA, Brazil — President Bush shrugged off a military revolt in Argentina and proclaimed "a new era of hope" in newly democratic South America as he opened a five-nation tour Monday. Bush vowed not to skip a visit to Buenos Aires.

The administration expressed confidence the uprising would be quelled quickly, but Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger said: "If the situation became such that there was a real danger to his security, I'm sure we'd take another look at it."

The Argentine crisis threw a cloud over Bush's week-long mission, intended to celebrate the sweep of democracy throughout the hemisphere. It also obscured Bush's message that Iraq's invasion of Kuwait was driving up oil prices and forcing poor countries to pay high fuel bills that they could ill afford.

Francisco Rezek, foreign minister of Brazil, called the revolt in Argentina "a step backward for democracy in Latin America."

The Bush administration took another view.

White House press secretary Martin Fitzwater told reporters Monday evening that the situation in Buenos Aires "does appear to be improving" and that Argentine President Carlos Menem was in control.

"It is not a large-scale uprising," Fitzwater said. "My argument would be that fundamentally democracy in Argentina is working and when this is over it will demonstrate the roots of democracy in Argentina are fairly deep."

Bush said he would not abandon a planned stop Wednesday in Buenos Aires, where Menem declared a state of siege, suspending constitutional guarantees, after the fourth military uprising in four years.

"I have great confidence in the security there," Bush said.

Late Monday, after an attack by loyalist troops, many of the rebels were reported to be surrendering.

Administration officials accompanying Bush talked throughout the day with U.S. Embassy officials in Buenos Aires. "We intend to carry out that portion of the trip," Eagleburger said. "I still suspect this will be over relatively quickly."

The rebellious soldiers said they were not trying to overthrow the government but wanted to force changes in the way the military is run.

There also was violence in Chile, another stop on Bush's trip, as bombs exploded in a chapel and in the offices of two right-wing political parties. There were no injuries. An anonymous caller said the blasts were a protest of Bush's visit.

Bush arrived in Brasilia at dawn after an overnight flight from Washington, accompanied by a mostly junior staff. He was greeted by a 21-gun salute and military pageantry at the pillared Planalto Palace, the workplace of President Fernando Collor de Mello.

Secretary of State James Baker remained in Washington to testify before Congress on the Persian Gulf. The White House chief of staff, John Sununu, and the national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, also found reasons to stay home.

European farmers rally, protest U.S. farm plan

By Martin Crutsinger
The Associated Press

BRUSSELS, Belgium — Negotiations to complete an unprecedented global free trade pact opened in turmoil on Monday. Delegates inside the hall clashed on farm issues, while police outside battled angry demonstrators.

Almost 30,000 farmers marched through the cobblestoned streets of this European capital to protest a U.S.-backed proposal aimed at trimming billions of dollars in trade-distorting agricultural subsidies.

At one point, police used tear gas and water cannons when demonstrators tried to storm the European Parliament building.

Organizers hoped the protest would send a blunt message to delegates who have gathered for the concluding session of a four-year effort to overhaul the world trading system.

The talks are known as the Uruguay Round for the nation where they began in 1986. They involve 107 member nations in an effort to rewrite the constitution of world trade, a document known as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, or GATT.

The United States, hoping to reduce trade deficits still running at close to $100 billion, is aggressively pushing a package of proposals aimed at expanding export opportunities for American farmers and businesses.

In addition to trimming farm subsidies, the U.S. agenda included efforts to crack down on the piracy of U.S. products, estimated to cost American businesses $60 billion annually, and to expand GATT rules to cover the fast-growing service industries, such as banking and insurance.

But officials of the 12-nation European Community, noting the number of protesters, maintained that adoption of the U.S. farm proposal would represent political suicide. They insisted that they had no latitude to go beyond an offer for a 30 percent cut in internal farm supports.

"The only flexibility I have is in explaining in detail the impact which the reduction in internal supports will have," said Ray MacSharry, the European Community's agriculture chief.

U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills told delegates in an opening speech that the EC proposal was totally inadequate. The United States is demanding 90 percent cuts in export subsidies, used as incentives to promote overseas sales, and 75 percent reductions in internal supports and market barriers.

Stricter student loan standards sought in revision of act

By Tamara Henry
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Education Department will ask Congress to toughen the Higher Education Act to cut down on defaults in the federal student loan program, an official said Monday.

Leonard Haynes, assistant secretary for post-secondary education, told a banking convention that student loan defaults are costing the nation nearly $2 billion a year. He said the figure is "simply unacceptable" although it may pale against other federal agency debts.

To reduce the default rates, Haynes said, the department will seek to toughen major provisions in the Higher Education Act when it comes up for reauthorization next year. The law is the statutory authority for about 60 higher education programs.

Haynes said the department may require stringent performance standards of both students, colleges, universities and trade schools before they are allowed to join student loan programs. There also may be greater scrutiny of administrative and financial abilities of schools, as well as the quality of education offered, he said.

"We will not reinvent the wheel, but we believe we must create a more efficient, fairer, and less confusing student aid delivery system, while continuing to maximize post-secondary access and choice for needy students," he said.

"What we have in place is not serving us well. But the question is 'how good is better?'"

Leonard Haynes
U.S. Education Department

Haynes, speaking at a Consumer Bankers Association conference, stressed that "we are committed to taking the lead on reforming student financial aid and other higher education programs."

"What we have in place is not serving us well," said Haynes. "But the question is how good is better."

The total of student loan defaults is $7.8 billion. An estimated $12 billion will be loaned to some 5 million students during fiscal 1990.

This year the Education Department has come under harsh criticisms by members of Congress for lax oversight of the federal student loan program.

A report by investigators for the Senate Government Affairs subcommittee on investigation faulted the department for "very minimal, if any, oversight over the accrediting bodies."

The department, the report added, granted schools eligibility in the student loan program without verifying that they were licensed and accredited.

"The department will place a greater emphasis on performance standards and outcomes measures in the areas of school accreditation, eligibility, licensing, and student success," Haynes said.

Haynes said performance standards might focus on an institution's ability to keep and graduate students.

Although the department cannot assess curriculum, Haynes said, it may "use the outcomes of the educational program to determine its quality."

In addition, Haynes said "we hope to eliminate unscrupulous recruiting techniques and weak admissions standards that often have misled students into poor quality schools and defaults on loans."

Rebel leader overthrows Chadian government

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The State Department reacted cautiously Monday to the overthrow of the Chadian government by a rebel leader U.S. officials say is supplied by Libya.

"The embassy is instructed to conduct normal contacts and monitor the situation closely to determine whether a new regime has effective control over the country," department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said.

She said that U.S. Ambassador Richard Bogosian would meet with rebel leader Idriss Deby to find out what his policies are and discuss future U.S.-Chadian relations.

"It appears that the forces of Mr. Deby are in effective control" of the Chadian capital of NDjamena, she said.

Asked if the United States would recognize the Deby government, she responded: "The issue of recognition is de-emphasized" until after a thorough diplomatic review.

Tutwiler repeated the U.S. position that Deby, 38, a former military aide to ousted President Hissene Habre was funded by Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi.

"I can tell you that the United States stands by the statement of last week," she said. The department said then that Deby's forces "are armed and supplied by Libya."

Continental back in bankruptcy court

HOUSTON — Continental Airlines Holdings Inc., the remnants of Frank Lorenzo's Texas Air Corp. empire, filed for protection in bankruptcy court Monday, saying it was overwhelmed by its debts and surging fuel prices.

The company, parent of Continental Airlines Inc., filed its Chapter 11 petition in Wilmington, Del., where it is incorporated. The filing is the second time in seven years Continental has sought to reorganize.

In 1983, as Lorenzo was building Texas Air into what once was the nation's largest airline operator, Continental filed for protection from creditors amid a bitter labor dispute with its union.

The filing allowed Continental to scrap union contracts and hire low-cost replacements for strikers. It also led to a change in federal bankruptcy law to make such a move more difficult.

Texas Air eventually grew to include Eastern Airlines, but lost day-to-day control of that carrier when a bankruptcy court judge replaced Lorenzo with a trustee. Eastern, too, had filed for Chapter 11 after a strike.

Monday's move by Continental didn't affect any operations or schedules among the 88 U.S. cities and 55 international destinations it serves with a fleet of more than 300 planes. Management sought to reassure passengers and employees that the carrier would continue to run normally.

Tobacco industry lobbied EPA on reports

For three years, the tobacco industry and its Congressional allies have lobbied the Environmental Protection Agency to soften or delay its three draft reports on second-hand cigarette smoke, documents show.

Industry representatives sent the EPA a mountain of technical information that dwarfs the EPA's reports and met repeatedly with agency officials to press their concerns, according to documents obtained by The Associated Press under the Freedom of Information Act.

"They clearly were privy to stuff that was going on that we had no idea about," said Mark Pertschuk, executive director of Americans for Nonsmokers' Rights in Berkeley, Calif.

The EPA at the industry's request twice extended the time allowed for outside comment on draft reports.

"No one else was as active in conveying their concerns and interests," said Robert Axelrad, director of the EPA's indoor air division. He said the agency received "boxloads" of material from the industry.

Report: Colleges prize research too much

NEW YORK — Colleges are shortchanging students and faculty alike by prizing professors' research far more than their teaching or their social commitment, a report says.

"Scholarship Reconsidered: Priorities of the Professoriate," released Sunday by the Carnegie Endowment for the Advancement of Teaching, takes academia to task for shunning involvement in solving problems outside the ivory tower.

"What we urgently need today is a more inclusive view of what it means to be a scholar — a recognition that knowledge is acquired through research, through synthesis, through practice and through teaching," said the study by foundation president Ernest Boyer.

The report called on college officials to base tenure decisions on teaching skills and community involvement as well as scholarly publications. And it urged campuses to include the views of past and present students in evaluating professors for tenure or promotions.

"In the current climate, students all too often are the losers," said the report.

"In glossy brochures, they're assured that teaching is important, that a spirit of community pervades the campus, and that general education is the core of the undergraduate experience."

Suicide doctor charged with murder

PONTIAC, Mich. — A doctor whose device was used by a woman to commit suicide was charged today with murder.

Dr. Jack Kevorkian was charged in the death of Janet Adkins, 54, who traveled to suburban Detroit last June to use an apparatus he devised.

He hooked her up to the intravenous device, then she pushed a button that triggered a flow of coma and death-inducing drugs into her bloodstream.

Adkins of Portland, Ore., had been diagnosed a year earlier with Alzheimer's disease, a degenerative brain and nerve disorder.

"Janet Adkins was not terminally ill. She was not suffering any pain," Oakland County Prosecutor Richard Thompson said Monday at a news conference to announce the murder charge. "For me not to charge Dr. Kevorkian would turn Oakland County into the suicide mecca of our nation."

Inouye defends Keating 5; FBI launches investigation

By Larry Margasak
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A senior Senate colleague defended the integrity of the Keating Five senators before the Ethics Committee on Monday, while away from the hearing, law enforcement sources said the FBI was examining the lawmakers' conduct as well.

Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, told the ethics panel that the five senators whose conduct is the subject of the hearings appeared to be providing typical service to a constituent when they intervened with savings and loan regulators on behalf of S&L owner Charles Keating Jr.

Inouye specifically endorsed the conduct of Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., who was described in prior testimony by regulators as a negotiator for Keating in two 1987 meetings.

Keating donated or raised $1.3 million for the five senators' campaigns and causes.

"I do not believe Sen. DeConcini crossed the line" between proper and improper action, Inouye said, referring to DeConcini's request that regulators waive a thrift regulation that was harming Keating's Lincoln Savings and Loan. "If it was improper, all of us at one time or another have done that."

Inouye said he appeared as a defense witness, over the objections of his staff, because "I believe what is on trial here is not the five colleagues of mine but the U.S. Senate, and for that matter the Congress of the United States."

Meanwhile, law enforcement sources speaking only on condition of anonymity, said the FBI is looking into the senators' conduct as part of a wide-ranging investigation being coordinated with federal prosecutors in Los Angeles and Phoenix.

Examination of the senators' dealings with Keating is one aspect of the broad federal criminal inquiry into allegations of financial wrongdoing at Lincoln Savings and its parent American Continental Corp. Justice Department officials declined to comment on a report in Monday's Washington Times that the FBI is focusing on allegations of vote trading and bribery against two of the senators, Democrats Alan Cranston of California and DeConcini.

The other members being investigated by the Senate Ethics Committee are John Glenn, D-Ohio, Donald Riegle Jr., D-Mich. and John McCain, R-Ariz.

New image for Germany's Kohl

By Nesha Starcevic
The Associated Press

FRANKFURT, Germany — Helmut Kohl's re-election campaign showed the German chancellor in a new, self-assured style: more elegantly dressed, relaxed, a better speaker.

And the crowds were bigger, too, giving Kohl more enthusiastic receptions than ever in his eight years as chancellor.

Having delivered the unification of East and West Germany in record time, Kohl had been heavily favored all along to win a third four-year term.

But in the last four weeks of the campaign, the 60-year-old Kohl still made 28 campaign appearances, doing what he likes the best: working the crowds and winning elections.

One of the last was in southern Germany in Offenburg, pushing his wheelchair-bound interior minister, Wolfgang Schaeuble, onto the podium.

Schaeuble barely survived an assassination attempt in October and the gesture was vintage Kohl, a move that would strike the hearts of ordinary Germans.

But it was not only electioneering. Kohl was deeply moved by Schaeuble's ordeal and had tears in his eyes when he had visited the bedside of his trusted minister and possible successor.

In Chemnitz, in former East Germany, before speaking at a campaign rally, Kohl stopped at a local inn to have coffee and banter with the owners.

These are the times he says he likes the best, mingling with ordinary people, when he feels like a "farmer at the plough. You can smell the earth."

According to nearly complete official returns, Kohl's center-right governing coalition won 54.8 percent of the vote Sunday, to 33.5

percent for the main opposition Social Democrats, led by Oskar Lafontaine.

Kohl became chancellor in October 1982, when a switch of coalition alliances enabled him to form a government at the head of his Christian Democratic Union. He was confirmed in national elections in 1983 and 1987.

At first he was regarded as a blunder-prone provincial politician who spoke with a distinct local accent. But Kohl has risen to the status of a respected international statesman, leader of a country that will play a political role finally equal to its economic might.

"In many fields of politics, we are in a leading position in Europe and in the world," Kohl said recently.

Often said in the past to be slow in making decisions, Kohl seized the historic opportunity presented with the collapse of East Germany's Communist government and the fall of the Berlin Wall a year ago.

Helmut Kohl

"I like to be underestimated. I've managed very well for 30 years by being underestimated," Kohl likes to say.

His whirlwind, relentless drive to achieve quick unification paid off when Germany became one fully sovereign state, on Oct. 3, with Kohl as chancellor.

NFL plays hypocrite in boycott

A rather troubling phrase is currently circulating around the country. Lately, it's not uncommon to be told — by an individual, magazine or television show — that racism is "on the rise." The most troubling aspect of this assertion is its implication that somewhere between the end of the Civil Rights movement and the presidency of Ronald Reagan racism had actually been on the decline.

Bulldogs and firehoses aren't necessary for a racist society. Racism is so ingrained into the fabric of this country that it can express itself in any number of ways, none of which have to involve overt physical violence.

For instance, racism has been very prominent the last couple of years in sports, most recently in the well-publicized issue concerning the NFL's imminent Super Bowl boycott of Arizona because the state does not honor a paid holiday in memory of Dr. Martin Luther King. The Arizona hubbub only follows an impressive line of racism crossing the sports barrier.

First we heard now ex-Dodgers general manager Al Campanis opine on ABC's Nightline that the reason blacks have not occupied front office and managerial roles in baseball was that they "lacked the necessities" to do so. As host Ted Koppel repeatedly gave him the opportunity to redeem himself on national television, Campanis continued to put his foot in his mouth until he finally ended the interview by asserting that blacks can't swim because they don't have any buoyancy.

Then football oddsmaker Jimmy the Greek theorized that blacks were superior athletes because they are "bred" that way and that blacks shouldn't aspire to coaching positions because that would leave nothing left for the white guys to do.

This summer the members of Shoal Creek Country Club — in that most progressive of states, Alabama — insisted that the PGA and corporate sponsors go ahead and penalize them for not admitting black members because "that's just the way we do things down here." After some minor protests, Shoal was able to stop the boycott by admitting one black member.

The rejection of the King holiday by Arizona's voters certainly extends beyond the realm of sports, but it has been most apparent because of its immediate affect on the sports world. Because of the holiday rejection, the NFL will likely look for a site other than Tuscon to play the 1993 Super Bowl and various college football teams have refused to participate in the state's Fiesta Bowl. Louisville and Cal-Berkeley will play in Tuscon on New Year's Day.

Arizona's rejection of the King holiday is an offense not only to black people, but to anyone who holds the idea of a free and democratic society dear. But let's not fool ourselves.

The NFL is not a Civil Rights champion. The league is acting purely in a manner based on self interest. The NFL wants to avoid corporate and other group boycotts like the ones that threatened the much lesser event at Shoal Creek. By acting now, the NFL has successfully avoided public embarrassment and financial disaster.

Sixty percent of the NFL's players are black, yet only one of the league's 26 head coaches is black. Virtually no NFL front office personnel is black. Dr. Harry Edwards has accurately called contemporary sports a "modern day plantation system."

The only place blacks can gain NFL employment is on the field — unless you want to clean the stands at the game. But even on the field blacks still contend with racist attitudes.

Many would argue that the league's policy concerning black quarterbacks has changed, that black QB's — like Houston's Warren Moon and Philadelphia's Randall Cunningham — are now some of the best in the game. But Cunningham was drafted as a punter and Moon had to prove himself in the Canadian Football League before getting a shot in the NFL. In addition, as QB's inevitably get injured, older white quarterbacks like Joe Ferguson and Steve Grogan get called upon while Doug Williams — he of the great-

The Iowa Hawkeye football team has overcome many obstacles during the 1990 season. But, last night, the roof caved in. Literally.

At about 4 a.m. Monday, Iowa's $2.8 million Indoor Practice Facility, more commonly known around campus as the "Bubble," collapsed, leaving not only the football team, but many other Iowa sports teams out in the cold.

Ann Rhodes, UI assistant vice president of finance, said Monday the dome is insured, but she did not know which company insures the five-year-old structure.

"It's insured," Rhodes said. "The deductible for the university is $100,000 — the rest will be covered by insurance."

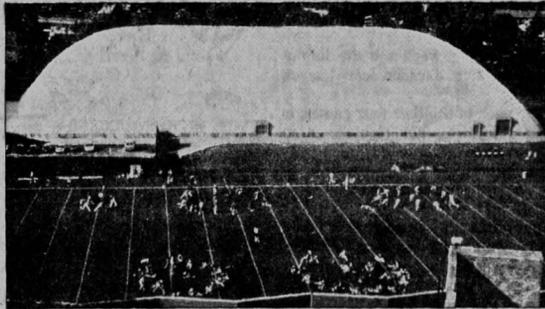

Rhodes said an adjuster will come in to assess the damage when weather conditions permit.

"I don't know yet how much it will cost the university," Rhodes said. "The adjuster won't be in for a couple of days because he's stranded up in Minneapolis."

Rhodes was also unsure about the repair costs, but Del Gehrke, director of athletic facilities estimates the cost of repair to be $2 million.

The collapse of the structure left the football squad with many options, including the temporary use of the UNI Dome in Cedar Falls or borrowing the dome's dormant artificial turf. The UNI Dome is now dominated by two basketball courts and an indoor track used by the Northern Iowa winter sports

Hawkeyes fall in poll after Penn State loss

The Associated Press

As a result of Penn State's 82-62 drubbing over Iowa last Saturday, the Hawkeyes and Nittany Lions did some flip-flopping in Monday's Associated Press women's basketball poll.

Iowa, now with a record of 3-1, dropped four notches to 15th, while Penn State rose four spots to 13th.

Meanwhile, Virginia, which won an impressive road game at Texas last week, remained No. 1.

The Lady Cavaliers (3-0) received a near-perfect endorsement from the nationwide panel of 64 women's coaches by collecting 61 first-place votes and 1,596 points.

In handing Texas its third straight loss without a victory, its worst start ever, Virginia helped send the Longhorns on one of the longest dives in poll history as they fell from 12th to 20th.

Coaches showed a reluctance to punish Texas further this week because of the tough early schedule. The other losses were to No. 11 Long Beach State and No. 21

Southern Cal, both on the road.

The No. 20 ranking is the lowest for Texas since it was unranked in early January 1982. But the Longhorns maintained their streak of 148 straight poll appearances, dating to the same month.

Meanwhile, idle Auburn (2-0) held second with the remaining three first-place votes and 1,522 points. North Carolina State (4-0), which upset then-No. 3 Tennessee 90-77 at Raleigh last Saturday, moved up four spots to third with 1,406 points.

It is the highest ranking for the Wolfpack since holding they were third on Dec. 5, 1978. That same week was also the last time the Atlantic Coast Conference had two teams among the top three. Maryland was ranked second in the same poll.

Georgia opened with two victories and held fourth with 1,392 points. Louisiana Tech also opened by winning its own tournament over West Virginia and Central Michigan to hold fifth with 1,339 points.

Tennessee (1-1) dropped from sec-

But The Cardinal fall was actually created by North Carolina State moving past them after the win over Tennessee.

Drake coach looks to snap Iowa streak

By Brian Gaul
 The Daily Iowan

When first-year Drake women's basketball coach Lisa Bluder leads her team to battle against No. 15 Iowa tonight in the Drake Fieldhouse in Des Moines, she will be trying to snap a pair of losing streaks.

Bluder's team has lost four consecutive games, including Sunday's loss to Kansas in its home opener, 71-62. The Bulldogs, 0-4 overall, have also lost four straight to the Hawkeyes, including a 70-58 loss last year.

Drake leads the overall series between the two schools, 19-5, but hasn't defeated one of Stringer's teams since the 1985-86 season.

Bluder, who was the 1990 NAIA Converse Coach of the Year after leading St. Ambrose College to the NAIA Final Four last year, has yet to win as a Drake coach. The Bulldogs have been outscored by an average of 20 points in their first four games.

The Hawkeyes, 3-1 overall, are coming off a road split on the East Coast. Iowa defeated then-No. 23 Connecticut, 58-41, and lost to No. 12 Penn State, 82-62.

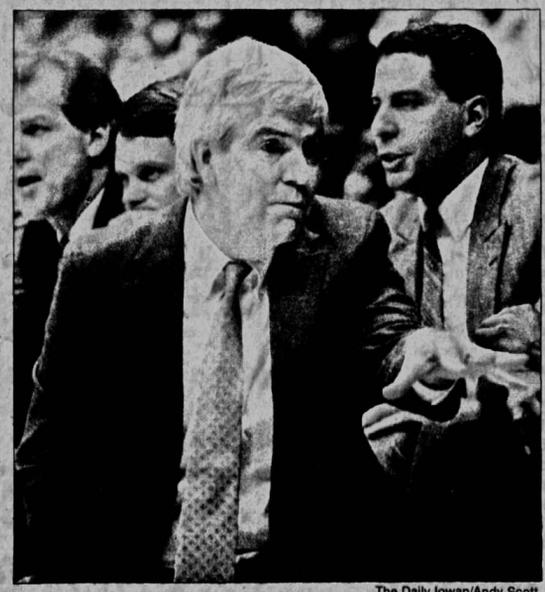

After facing Drake tonight, the Hawkeyes will finish the road swing against DePaul in Chicago Saturday.

All-America candidate Jan Jensen has led the Bulldogs in both scoring and rebounding in each of their first four games. The 5-foot-10 forward from Kimballton, Iowa, is averaging 25.5 points and 8.5 rebounds per game.

Senior guard Yvette Maison is the only other Bulldog averaging double-figures in scoring. Maison averages 10 points, 4.8 rebounds and 6.3 assists per game.

The Bulldogs could have trouble shooting against a stingy Iowa defense. Iowa's opponents have shot only 39 percent from the field, and

See Hoops, Page 2B

Because of the many newcomers on his team, Iowa coach Tom Davis doesn't think revenge will be a motive for the Hawkeyes tonight against Northern Iowa.

Revenge not a factor as Iowa prepares for Northern Iowa

By Erica Weiland
 The Daily Iowan

A year ago, the Iowa men's basketball team was shocked 77-74 by Northern Iowa in front of 22,797 fans at the UNI Dome in Cedar Falls.

But when the Hawkeyes host the Panthers tonight at 7 p.m. in their own Carver-Hawkeye Arena, Iowa coach Tom Davis doesn't think redemption will be on his players' minds.

"I hadn't thought about that," the Hawkeye coach said. "I guess that's because we have so many new guys. And even some of the returning guys didn't play key roles in that game last year."

The Iowa and UNI squads seem to be on opposite ends of the spectrum in many cases.

Take, for instance, returning players.

Northern Iowa has nine returning lettermen, including three starters, from a team that went to the NCAA Tournament last season.

The Hawkeyes will suit up six returning letterwinners, including starters Troy Skinner and James Moses.

"I want to stress how many veteran players (the Panthers) have back," Davis said. "It's a good veteran ballclub coming off probably their best year, in recent history at least."

Eldon Miller's UNI squad finished 23-9 last year. The 14th-seeded Panthers upset No. 3 seed Missouri in the first round of the NCAA Tournament but lost to Minnesota in the second round.

The Hawkeyes ended the 1989-90 season with a 12-16 record and did not advance to postseason play for the first since the 1983-84 season.

Last year in the UNI Dome in front of the biggest crowd ever to attend a basketball in Iowa, Panther guard Brad Hill made two 3-point baskets in the final minutes to ice the win.

It was the first victory for Northern Iowa over the Hawkeyes — who hold a 12-0 advantage in games played in Iowa City — since 1913.

Iowa is now 4-1 on the season after defeating Colgate and Creighton last weekend to win their 8th Amana Hawkeye Classic title. UNI is 1-4 after beating Nevada 76-75 in overtime Saturday.

But Davis said the Panthers will be ready for tonight's matchup.

"There's no question that this is a big game," Davis said. "UNI would probably like nothing more than to knock us off. And we're trying to get that across to our young players."

est QB performance in Super Bowl history — can't get a call to save his life.

The NFL is only a small component of a larger racist society. Before racism can stop, it has to be admitted, and like the country in general, racism has never been admitted to in the NFL. In the case of Arizona, the NFL has acted for the love of money, not brotherhood. Don't believe the hype.

Todd Boyd is a Ph.D candidate and teaching assistant in Communications Studies.

Drake is shooting just 39 percent on the season.

Drake's opponents have hit 59 percent of their shots, while the Hawkeyes are shooting 46 percent from the field this year.

The Hawkeyes have also rebounded their opponents by 8.8 boards per game, led by junior Trisha Waugh's 10.3 rebound average. Sophomore Toni Foster (15.3 points per game) and senior Stephanie Schueler (13 ppg) are the leading scorers.

Both teams have played challenging schedules in the early stages of the season. Iowa has faced then-No. 19 LSU, Connecticut, Penn State and UCLA. The Bulldogs have taken on No. 8 North Carolina State, Texas Tech, Arizona and Kansas.

teams. The artificial turf, which is used during the football season, now lies rolled-up along the sidelines of the dome.

"We would try to entertain any requests we would get from Iowa," said UNI assistant athletic director Jim Egli. "We would try work something out along the lines of lending the turf if it would be needed."

But Iowa coach Hayden Fry said instead of asking UNI for assistance, the Hawkeyes will probably opt for a warmer climate. Fry said his team will likely leave early for Pasadena and prepare for its Rose Bowl game against the Washington Huskies in California.

"It makes us change our plans for the Rose Bowl... We'll have to go to Pasadena) a little earlier now because we can't practice here in Iowa City," Fry said in a local news report.

Iowa was originally scheduled to leave for Pasadena on Dec. 20, but will now leave Dec. 17, according to Rhodes. "The team will probably leave a few days after finals are over," Rhodes said.

According to assistant sports information director Phil Haddy, plans are being made to move the date of Hayden Fry's press conference to an earlier date to accommodate the Hawkeyes' early departure.

The Iowa field hockey, softball and baseball teams will also be affected by the dome's collapse. All three squads have either practiced or played games in the facility since it was first built in October of 1985.

The Women's Athletic Department has some immediate concerns about the availability of the dome after it promised its use to the Canadian National Field Hockey Team.

"We have a Canadian National field hockey team that we invited to play here for the next three weeks," said Paula Jantz, Iowa assistant women's athletic Jackson hyperextended her knee in Iowa's 73-65 overtime win over LSU in the Amana-Hawkeye Classic championship game. Stringer and her staff did not learn about the injury until the knee became swollen the day after the game.

Jackson's knee was examined several times last week and she did not travel with the team on its East Coast road trip. Jackson scored seven points in a reserve role against LSU.

■ Senior Felicia Hall, who has started each of the first four games, is questionable for tonight's game after reinjuring her right knee in Saturday's game against Penn State.

Hall, one of just two seniors on the team, originally injured the knee during the Hawkeyes' trip to Japan in May and aggravated it in a preseason scrimmage in Jefferson, Iowa.

The 6-foot-2 forward played only four minutes Saturday before she twisted the knee and was taken out of the game. Her playing status was listed as day-to-day.

director. "Our immediate concern is to find an alternate facility for them.

"As for our teams, we didn't have anything scheduled until next semester."

The department called UNI athletics to request the use of the dome, but due to the Panther's winter sports commitments Iowa was referred elsewhere.

"We referred them (Iowa) to an athletic complex in Madison (Wis.), because we simply don't have the room right now," Egli said.

The Iowa baseball team will also be affected by the loss of the Bubble and could be headed back to the Recreation Building to prepare for the spring season.

"It's scary to think about not having it," said Iowa baseball coach Duane Banks. "All the spring sports used to work out in the Recreation Building. But it was a zoo in there.

"We're supposed to start (practice) the first day of second semester. So we have some time."

Iowa football players were shocked upon discovering their practice facility would be unavailable for bowl preparation.

"We heard about it this morning, but we didn't want to believe it," said Iowa defensive lineman Ron Geater. "After going there for four years, it's weird to be able to see Carver-Hawkeye where you used to see the Bubble."

"It's just another obstacle we have to overcome on the way to the Rose Bowl," said backup quarterback Jim Hartlieb.

There may have been some palpating hearts and wrinkled foreheads in Iowa City, but out in the Great Northwest there was little sympathy for the Hawkeyes.

"Is that right?" said Washington football coach Don James. "Now they're going to have to practice outside like us."

San Francisco nabs NL batting champ

DI wire services

ROSEMONT, Ill. — Free agent Willie McGee, the National League batting champion who wound up the season with Oakland, has agreed to contract terms with the San Francisco Giants, The Associated Press has learned.

McGee, 32, hit .335 for St. Louis before being traded to Oakland in late August. He batted .274 for the Athletics, but they did not express great interest in signing him for next season.

The Athletics got McGee for Felix Jose and a minor leaguer as insurance in case center fielder Dave Henderson did not fully recover from injuries. But Henderson was OK for the postseason, and started ahead of McGee for most of the World Series.

Winter Meetings

"Willie McGee is the kind of player who wants to come to the ballpark everyday knowing he'll play. I couldn't promise that," Athletics manager Tony La Russa said earlier Monday.

For losing McGee, the Athletics will still get a top draft pick.

McGee was the NL's Most Valuable Player in 1985 and is a three-time Gold Glove winner.

Brett Butler has been San Francisco's center fielder for three seasons. He could become an instant free agent later this week if baseball owners, as expected, ratify a collusion settlement.

Even if Butler does not leave, McGee could play elsewhere in the Giants' outfield. San Francisco already has Kevin Mitchell in left field and Kevin Bass in right, although Bass missed most of last season with a knee injury.

Expos keep Martinez

Right-hander Dennis Martinez agreed today on a three-year, $9.25 million contract with the Montreal Expos.

Martinez, 35, was 10-11 with a 2.95 earned-run average for the Expos in 1990 and was selected to the All-Star team for the first time in his career. The new contract replaces the final year of a two-year extension signed prior to the 1990 season.

Expos general manager Dave Dombrowski said he feared Martinez was going to be declared a "new-look" free agent when a collusion agreement is reached later in the week.

"We felt we could not go into the season without our No. 1 pitcher," Dombrowski said. "We needed to sign him. He's our No. 1 man."

Martinez has a 55-41 record with the Expos in five seasons and is 163-134 lifetime.

Pendleton agrees to Braves' terms

Free agent Terry Pendleton on Monday agreed to a four-year deal with the Atlanta Braves.

The switch-hitting third baseman hit .230 with six homers and 58 RBIs in 121 games for the St. Louis Cardinals last season. Exact terms were not immediately disclosed, but it was believed to be $10 million over the four years.

Several teams, including the Chicago Cubs and New York Yankees, had expressed an interest in Pendleton since the end of the season.

Pendleton was the Cardinals' third baseman for the last six seasons. His best year was 1987, when he hit .286 with 12 homers and 96 RBIs.

The Braves needed a third baseman since Jim Presley became a free agent and indicated he would not return.

Pendleton, when healthy, is among the best defensive third basemen in baseball. Three times he has led the National League in assists. In 1989, he led the NL with a .971 fielding percentage.

Yanks, Padres swap farmhands

The New York Yankees traded outfielder Oscar Azocar to the San Diego Padres on Monday for a minor league player to be named later.

Azocar was not protected on the Yankees' 40-man roster and, under baseball rules, would have gone on irrevocable waivers on Tuesday. The Yankees had set a deadline of Monday afternoon for trading Azocar.

Azocar batted .248 with five home runs and 19 RBIs in 65 games this season as a rookie. He was part of George Steinbrenner's youth movement in midseason and hit well at first, but tailed off.

Knicks think MacLeod can help

By Barry Wilner
The Associated Press

PURCHASE, N.Y. — John MacLeod, who knows all about building programs, has taken on the chore of revitalizing the New York Knicks.

MacLeod ran his first practice as the Knicks' coach Monday, just hours after Stu Jackson was fired. The Knicks are 7-8, just 3-5 at home, and have been criticized for a lack of discipline and spark on the court.

"I will be positive and have a realistic approach," said MacLeod, who ranks fifth among active NBA coaches with 675 victories.

He coached the Phoenix Suns for 17 seasons, taking them from the bottom of the Western Conference to the NBA semifinals four times and to the NBA Finals in 1976. He coached the Dallas Mavericks for three years, but was fired early last season.

The 53-year-old MacLeod also had a 10-37 record at Oklahoma, turning the Sooners from a Big Eight also-ran into a championship contender.

"I will emphasize the positive and stay away from the negative," he said. "But I will not say things are honky-dory when they are not."

Things were not going well for the Knicks this year under Jackson, who never had been a head coach on any level. Their struggles at home only magnified the overall problems of a team with few outstanding outside shooters and not enough unselfish players.

"It just didn't work out as well as we thought," general manager Al Bianchi said. "I'm not going to go into the specifics or step on anybody."

Jackson was unavailable for comment, but Bianchi said he thought Jackson "was surprised a little bit... in those situations, when somebody tells you that, there isn't much you have to say. You thank the person for the opportunity. You don't like it, of course."

Bianchi knows the experience of being fired first-hand. It happened to him in 1975 with the Virginia Squires of the ABA.

He then joined the Suns as MacLeod's assistant coach for 11 seasons.

When Bianchi was seeking a coach to replace Rick Pitino after the 1988-89 season, he contacted MacLeod.

"The timing was not right," said MacLeod, who was with the Mavericks then and didn't want to move his family. "For me, now is right. I've been out of coaching for a year, doing television and scouting, so I stayed current."

Bianchi turned to MacLeod now because MacLeod's strengths are exactly what the GM perceives the Knicks lack most.

"His strengths are his discipline and he is a meticulous guy right down the line," Bianchi said. "It's difficult to be that consistent all the time and that is one of the things that amazed me about him."

Associated Press
New Knicks coach John MacLeod

"I think that kind of discipline and stuff filters down and it gets you to execute on the floor. I think those strengths are what this team needs, that discipline, that kind of guy."

The decision to fire Jackson, who has the rest of this year and all of next remaining on his contract, was made Friday.

Bucs go back on word, fire Perkins

By Fred Goodall
The Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Ray Perkins was fired Monday as coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, a day after the team ended a six-game losing streak with a victory over Atlanta.

Bucs owner Hugh Culverhouse, who only recently said he intended to keep Perkins, named assistant head coach Richard Williamson as interim coach. Culverhouse had come under criticism from fans and the media during the Bucs' losing streak to fire Perkins.

The move comes with the Buccaneers a loss shy of their eighth consecutive losing season. Sunday's 23-17 win over the Falcons improved their record to 5-8.

Culverhouse had predicted before the season that the team would win at least 11 games. During the losing streak he gave Perkins a vote of confidence, saying he wouldn't allow the coach to quit even if the Bucs didn't win another game.

Associated Press
Ray Perkins when hired in 1987.

But fans called for Perkins' firing and organized a boycott of the first quarter of Sunday's game.

Perkins' record in just less than four seasons with the Bucs was 19-41. None of his teams won more than five games.

Including four years with the New York Giants, he has a career NFL record of 42-75.

The move came amid mounting speculation that Perkins' job was in jeopardy and a published report in The Orlando Sentinel that quoted the coach as saying he felt he would be dismissed at the end of the season, if not this week.

Culverhouse told a news conference the decision wasn't made until early this afternoon during a meeting with Perkins. He said the coach's record since coming to the Bucs from Alabama in 1987 was the sole reason for the change.

"He took it hard because he's always been a winning coach," Culverhouse said. "But he's had four years and we didn't have a winning season. Don't look for any other reasons."

Williamson will be given consideration for the permanent job, Culverhouse said. Williamson was elevated on the recommendation of Perkins.

Fernando Carnota, a reporter for Radio Mitre in Buenos Aires, lies on the ground surrounded by his colleagues Monday after being shot during an exchange of gunfire by loyal soldiers and army rebels trying to take over army headquarters in downtown Buenos Aires.

Argentinian rebels seize headquarters; call for military change, not overthrow

By Ed McCullough
The Associated Press

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Rebels who seized army headquarters and bases began surrendering after loyalist troops attacked with tank shells, mortars and machine guns Monday, two days before President Bush was to visit.

At least three government soldiers were killed and eight wounded, the army said, though independent news reports said without elaborating that eight were dead. At least 10 civilians, including three journalists, were wounded in crossfire, the local agencies reported. Rebel casualties were not disclosed.

Bush, in Brazil on the first leg of a South American visit, said he had no plans to cancel his stay in Argentina, and U.S. officials indicated they did not consider the military uprising to be a serious threat to the 16-month-old government of President Carlos Menem. Bush is scheduled to arrive Wednesday.

"This is not a coup," a rebel spokesman told reporters. "We recognize the authority of President Menem as commander in chief."

The army estimated the rebels numbered 200. The rebels claimed they had 700 followers.

The rebels said they were not trying to overthrow the government, but were seeking changes in the way the military is run. It was Argentina's fourth military insurrection in four years.

Menem declared a state of siege, which suspended constitutional guarantees and gave him sweeping powers to ensure public order. He threatened to declare martial law, which would allow execution of rebels.

About 45 rebels surrendered along the River Plate after failing to take over coast guard headquarters, presidential spokesman Humberto Toledo said. Another 30 surrendered at the Palermo infantry base about five miles northwest, scene of some of the heaviest shooting.

About 60 rebels were captured on the outskirts of Buenos Aires after several mortar rounds were fired.

And a group of about 12 rebel tanks was prevented from crossing the Parana River into Buenos Aires Province.

"The last areas of conflict very rapidly are going to end," Toledo told state-run television.

But rebels remained holed up inside army headquarters, a multi-story office building two blocks behind the Government House, where Menem has his office. They also held a Boulogne tank factory 16 miles northwest of the capital.

Earlier, the insurgents ignored a demand by army chief of staff Gen. Martin Bonnet for an unconditional surrender, and indicated they were loyal to a colonel who led the last uprising, in December 1988.

"Within the army, we don't recognize any other legitimate authority than that of Col. Mohamed Ali Seineldin," retired Maj. Hugo Abete, a spokesman for the rebels, told reporters. Seineldin has been under military arrest since Oct. 22.

Banks were ordered closed and federal employees sent home. The stock exchange closed early, and federal police prohibited public gatherings across the country.

Roads in this capital city of 11 million people were blocked, and Newbery metropolitan airport was closed.

The Government House, the Economy Ministry and Vice President Eduardo Duhalde's helicopter were struck by bullets. Duhalde was not injured.

House leaders re-elected

By Steven Komarow
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House re-elected its leaders on Monday, the Democrats by acclamation and the Republicans by aggravation.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., and Majority Whip William Gray III, D-Pa., all will return to their jobs for the 102nd Congress. They were unopposed, and received standing ovations from the Democratic Caucus.

On the Republican side, Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., and Minority Whip Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., also had no opponents.

But the No. 3 Republican, Jerry Lewis of California, and the party campaign chairman, Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., both survived only after bitterly fought campaigns.

Lewis was challenged by Rep. Carl Pursell, R-Mich., a moderate who received heavy behind-the-scenes support from Gingrich and his allies.

of Republican leader when Michel retires, possibly in 1992.

During this year's budget battle, Lewis backed President Bush while Gingrich bolted and helped bring down the president's compromise package that included higher taxes. Pursell and the Gingrich group tried to oust Lewis in part because of his stance on that issue.

Lewis prevailed 98-64 and then appeared to fire the first shot in the expected 1992 race to succeed Michel. The outcome, he told reporters, was "somewhat of a disaster" for Gingrich and his allies. "Their purpose was not to help Carl Pursell but to dump Jerry Lewis," he said.

Pursell, asked what Gingrich's support did for him, said merely, "I think Newt has been somewhat hurt by his election back home." Gingrich was re-elected to Congress by less than one percent of the vote.

Gingrich, however, declared victory.

"It was clear that the conference wants a more activist conference. That's part of why he had a challenge. I suspect you'll see Jerry being a little bit more active," Gingrich said.

Vander Jagt withstood an assault from Rep. Don Sundquist, R-Tenn., who had to repeatedly deny charges he was put up to wringing by the White House.

Sundquist accused Vander Jagt of allowing mismanagement and cronyism at the Republican National Campaign Committee, and Vander. Jagt promised a review.

police from resuming the questioning of a suspect who asks to see a lawyer for the first time, unless the suspect initiates the conversation.

In other action, the court:

- Agreed to use a case from Florida to decide whether police who have an owner's permission to search a car must get a court warrant before opening any containers inside the vehicle.

- Left intact a lawsuit settlement that eased restrictions on abortion clinics in Illinois. The court, without comment, rejected arguments that the settlement does not adequately protect women or fetuses.
