Administration: P&S report focused too much on negative

By Ann Marie Williams
The Daily Iowan

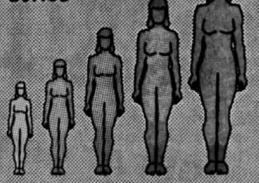

Members of the UI administration said they were not surprised by the contents of a recent review of the professional and scientific staff at the university, but said the tone of the report was unnecessarily negative.

The Affirmative Action Subcommittee of the UI Council on the Status of Women released a report about the concerns of P&S employees, using data compiled from administrative interviews, university sources and a survey of P&S staff.

"If you do read the whole (report), it clearly describes a campus that has problems," said Susan Buckley, affirmative action subcommittee member, at a presentation Wednesday.

Buckley said that when she met separately with UI President

Hunter Rawlings and vice president Mary Jo Small, both commented on the negative tone of the report.

In an interview Thursday, Small said many of the summary-type sections of the report presented the information negatively.

"The tone was often consistently negative, that is, there would be information that — if you compared it with the survey responses — seemed to cast the findings in as negative a light as possible," Small said.

The subcommittee presented the findings to the UI Staff Council and the Faculty Council after the report was released in October. Wednesday the report was presented at a meeting of the Associated Professional and Faculty Women.

The survey addressed a range of issues that affect P&S staff, including supervision and staffing, compensation and advancement opportunities, health and safety issues, and general job satisfaction.

There are about 5,000 P&S employees at the UI — two-thirds of whom are women. Approximately 15 percent were surveyed, and there was a 56 percent rate of response.

One major problem the report

"The tone was often consistently negative, that is, there would be information that — if you compared it with the survey responses — seemed to cast the findings in as negative a light as possible."

Mary Jo Small

identified was the equity of the pay scale; women were found to be significantly underrepresented in the higher pay grades of P&S staff.

In addition, a large percentage of the survey's respondents said they were unsatisfied with the safety of their work environments and about one-third said they worked more than 50 hours a week and were not compensated for overtime.

However, 80 percent of those surveyed said they were satisfied overall with their present jobs.

"(Rawlings and Small) were both quite disturbed that we pointed out that 20 percent of the people felt they did not work in fair, just and non-discriminatory environments, versus saying that 80 percent of the people do," said Buckley.

"There has been no question about the facts. It is how one chooses to present a fact," she added. "You can emphasize the 80 percent or you can talk about the 20 percent."

But Small said the report cited a number of problem areas that correspond with the UI's own initiatives to improve.

"For instance, one of the emphases is performance appraisal. And when we had the extensive work done on it by the Peat Marwick firm, one of the areas we asked them to look into was performance appraisal," Small said.

"And the question of building conditions and deferred maintenance is something that has been a major emphasis for (the UI) to try and get funding for."

The UI hired an external consultant to examine pay-related issues of the P&S staff, and the study is expected to be completed in February. The salary study was mandated by the Board of Regents.

Small said the report will help

Scholarship restrictions could hurt recruitment

By Julie Creswell
The Daily Iowan

Future efforts to diversify the UI student population may become more difficult if federal officials prohibit state universities from offering "race-exclusive" scholarships.

In a New York Times article Wednesday, the Federal Department of Education announced that federally funded scholarships earmarked specifically for minority students were "discriminatory and therefore illegal."

"This is a very retrogressive move. They're trying to turn back the clock," said Philip Hubbard, UI dean of academic affairs, who advanced minority recruitment at the UI by spearheading the Opportunity at Iowa minority scholarship program.

Hubbard, who recently announced his retirement after 40 years at the UI, said this action by the federal government would hinder the UI's minority recruitment efforts and, in a broader scope, hinder educational opportunities for minority students nationwide.

"In this country, minority is all but equivalent to saying low-income. Without financial aid, most minority students will not be able to attend college," Hubbard said. "This hurts our recruitment efforts and our retention efforts. We have a great number of students who were able to attend the university mainly because of these scholarships."

"This is a very retrogressive move. They're trying to turn back the clock."

Philip Hubbard
UI dean of academic affairs

"These students who receive scholarships are role models and leaders. They serve as examples to other students," he added.

But UI Dean of Students Phillip Jones cautioned that this was only one interpretation of the Department of Education's policy and added that the UI hasn't received word concerning any of its federally funded minority scholarships.

"This interpretation is going to raise a lot of questions," Jones said. "It's going to be a question of national debate because it concerns several decades of work."

The Education Department's policy stemmed from a prior announcement by organizers of the Fiesta Bowl, who were offering $100,000 minority scholarships to each of the two participating football teams, Louisville and Alabama universities.

The bowl's officials were notified on Dec. 4 that such a scholarship would be in violation of the Civil Rights Act and they risked losing all federal revenues.

Michael Williams, the Education Department's assistant secretary for civil rights, said this policy was an attempt to create consistency in the financial aid guidelines. Institutions receiving money from the Department of Education may not provide or deny financial aid or other benefits on the basis of race, color or national origin.

Jones said if this policy were enforced nationwide, Opportunity at Iowa would be affected significantly, minority recruitment would suffer "disastrous" results and there would be a "devastating" decrease in minority enrollment in professional schools.

"It has been known for the last 25 years that the greatest barrier to higher education is financial considerations," Jones said. "It should also be noted that there are no full support scholarships for anyone, majority or minority."

Jones said diversity remains a priority at the UI because it is needed to more accurately reflect the makeup of society.

"(Diversity) is needed to reflect the needs of society, and it is very important to the university because we need to provide the experience of dealing with different cultures and different ideas," he said.

"From the controversy generated from the differences we have as a society," Jones added, "it is obvious we don't know how to deal with the differences."

Former captives greeted by Bush

Saddam to get no 'rewards'

By Nancy Benac
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush, welcoming former Persian Gulf hostages to the White House on Thursday, sharply rejected any suggestion that Iraq's Saddam Hussein should get a reward for letting them go.

"Hell, no. Not one thing," Bush said. "You don't reward a kidnaper. You don't reward somebody who has done something he shouldn't have done in the first place."

Asked if he expected to be able to defuse the tensions in the Persian Gulf, Bush snapped, "One way or another we will."

The president met with seven newly released hostages as 32 of their countrymen left the Persian Gulf on the last charter out. He said stories told by returning hostages have demonstrated the brutality of Saddam's actions.

"What this man put the world through — I just can't express it. And I think you all expressed it coming home with a clarity that has brought this home to the American people," Bush said.

He said after the hour-long meeting, "It was a very moving experience. A lot of people who showed a lot of support for what we're doing."

The hostages included one man who hid within the U.S. Embassy compound in Kuwait, four who had been used as "human shields" at sensitive Iraqi installations and two who had been in hiding in Kuwait.

Also on Thursday in Washington: ■ Defense Secretary Dick Cheney stressed that Saddam's release of the hostages brought with it no indication the Iraqi president would pull his troops out of occupied Kuwait.

Murder charge against doctor dismissed

Injunction barring use of 'suicide machine' still effective

By Jim Irwin
The Associated Press

CLARKSTON, Mich. — A judge Thursday dismissed a first-degree murder charge against the inventor of a suicide device, saying he broke no law in helping an Alzheimer's disease patient kill herself.

The judge announced his decision after hearing a tape of the Oregon woman discuss her fight against the disease. "I've had enough," she said on the tape.

Janet Adkins suffered from Alzheimer's disease but might still be alive had she not turned on Dr. Jack Kevorkian's device June 4, District Judge Gerald McNally said at the end of Kevorkian's two-day preliminary examination.

But because Michigan law doesn't outlaw suicide or assisting in it, prosecutors had no case against Kevorkian, McNally said in dismissing the charge against Kevorkian, a 62-year-old retired pathologist from Royal Oak.

There was scattered applause in the courtroom as Kevorkian turned without expression to shake the

"I feel like I'm walking on a cloud."

Dr. Jack Kevorkian

hand of his lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger.

"I feel like I'm walking on a cloud," Kevorkian said on his way out of the courthouse.

Michael Modelski, chief assistant Oakland County prosecutor, said his office was considering whether to appeal McNally's ruling to Circuit Court. That court could reinstate the first-degree murder charge or a lesser charge, such as second-degree murder or manslaughter, he said.

"It was just nice to get a ruling," Modelski said. "I think everyone realizes this isn't the final step."

Despite the dismissal, Kevorkian isn't free to use his device again.

Three days after Adkins died, prosecutors obtained a temporary court order preventing further use of the device. The contraption remains in police custody pending a civil trial, probably in January, on whether that order should be made permanent, Fieger said.

Prosecutor Richard Thompson filed the murder charge nearly six months after Adkins died in the back of Kevorkian's van in a county-owned campground. Kevorkian notified authorities after Adkins was dead. He was questioned by state police but wasn't arrested until Dec. 3.

Autopsy results released in late November showed Adkins, 54, of Portland, committed suicide with an overdose of medication. Fieger said in closing arguments that Kevorkian attached an intravenous tube to Adkins's right arm, but the tube carried only a harmless saline solution.

The drugs that caused Adkins to lose consciousness and then stopped her heart didn't enter her body until after she threw the switch on Kevorkian's device, Fieger said.

Closing arguments were heard after the prosecution played a 40-minute videotape police seized after searching Kevorkian's apartment.

On the tape made June 2 in a motel room, Kevorkian, Adkins and her husband, Ronald, discuss her struggle with Alzheimer's, which causes irreversible brain degeneration, and her decision to ask Kevorkian's help in ending her life.

Adkins gave short and generally clear answers to questions posed by Kevorkian and her husband.

"My life before was wonderful," Adkins says. "I could play the piano and read. I can't do any of those things (now) ... it's too taxing."

"Why do you want your life to end?" Kevorkian asks.

"I've had enough," Adkins answers, her voice breaking.

On the tape, Adkins and her husband, who was not present at Kevorkian's court examination this week, tell Kevorkian they learned of his device from reading a Newsweek magazine article and decided to seek him out. Asked by Kevorkian whether he solicited their business, Adkins says, "No, no, no, no."

Charities not hurt by economy

By Amy Harrington
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — The nation's sluggish economy has hurt fund raising by some Iowa charities but others say they are doing better than ever.

"Most of our events are doing better this year," said W.K. Jumcker, state telethon coordinator for the Easter Seal Society of Iowa. "We moved to a downtown location and the money has almost doubled. I think people are still spending money."

"We are actually running ahead of last year," said Kurt Bowermaster, director of media and public relations at the United Way of Central Iowa.

As of Nov. 19, the United Way had received $10 million, an increase of 5.3 percent from last year.

A strong campaign is what has kept most Iowa charities' fundraising efforts in line with last year.

"Because of the economy, we beefed up the fund-raising efforts," Bowermaster said. "We went to different sources and had a really aggressive approach to raising money this year."

Bowermaster said that although this year's campaign surpassed last year's total, it was less than projected.

Other charities are not getting increases they expected.

"We're not seeing any growth at this time, but we're holding our own," said Judy Wilson, executive director of the Arthritis Foundation.

Wilson said the foundation expected more pledges than received. Turnout at fund-raising events also was lower than expected, but the need for the contributions is increasing, she said.

"Patient services have not been cut," Wilson said.

Professors' foreign experience brings special insight to class

By Laura Pink
Special to The Daily Iowan

On the first day of his Selected Works of the 20th Century literature class, Professor Claude Thomas, a French native, passed out packets about D.H. Lawrence to his students as they entered and took their seats.

"Well then," he said, "how many of the books on my syllabus have you read?"

A confused murmur rose among the students, and Thomas looked into 30 blank faces. When it became obvious to him that no one had read any of the books, he was astounded.

"How can this be?" he gasped. "I have turned in my list four months ago. Have they a problem with ordering the right books?"

The students were dumbfounded that their instructor expected them to have read the books on the syllabus by the time classes began. Slowly a mutual realization was made by Thomas and his students: Things are done differently in French universities.

Most students at the UI have had at least one foreign instructor and perhaps several foreign teaching assistants. But aside from language and cultural barriers that may plague the classroom, foreign instructors — as well as professors who've traveled extensively — can often add perspectives to coursework unavailable in textbooks.

Susan, who asked not to be identified, is a recent graduate of the School of Journalism and Mass Communication. She said foreign instruction can be a great asset.

"I think people should be more exposed to cultures in the classroom," she said.

The UI has a wealth of exchanges with universities and countries around the world, including Denmark, Nigeria, France and China. There are also government-financed exchanges such as the Fulbright and NATO fellowships and the Rhodes scholarships. Directors of the exchange programs see the advantage of UI instructors teaching abroad, as well as the opportunity for UI students to learn from foreign instructors.

Ken Starck, director of the UI journalism school, has used his experience teaching in China to shape the entire structure of his Depth Reporting and Writing class, focusing it on intercultural experiences.

"I keep thinking, what is culturally universal?" Starck said. "What is culturally distinctive?"

He said various cultural perspectives allow students to better examine their own culture.

UI English Professor Robert Sayre, who has had exchanges in both Denmark and France, agrees. "Living in Denmark for about nine months gave me a very different perspective on the United States, a very critical perspective," he said.

Bola Ayeni, a visiting professor from the University of Ibadan in Nigeria, said he was surprised to discover how little American students knew about world geography. He said students from a country that plays the role of "policeman of the world" should be more aware of that world.

Ayeni said Americans are "limited to the major American interests," he said. "There is need to widen that horizon, not only to make good policies, but to make the right policies and develop right strategies."

Professors like Ayeni and Starck see the introduction of intercultural perspectives into the American classroom as not only beneficial, but necessary.

"I've always maintained," Starck said, "that we have a special obligation in that regard, living out here in the cornfields of Iowa, to bring intercultural awareness about."

Jobless benefits increased in Iowa

The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Iowa jobless benefits totaled $11.1 million for 22,895 Iowans out of work, the Department of Employment Services said Thursday.

November benefits increased by $2.5 million and 4,970 claimants over October's $8.6 million for 17,925 jobless Iowans.

In November 1989, the state paid $9 million in jobless benefits to 18,762 Iowans.

"Much of the monthly increase was due to layoffs and temporary shutdowns in manufacturing," department director Cynthia Eisenhauer said. "But many of those same production workers were recalled within two weeks of layoff and have already returned to work."

Manufacturing benefit increases of $1.5 million for November and $1.7 million so far this year were largely due to layoffs in the machinery sector, the department said. Manufacturing benefits totaled $5.4 million for November, $3.9 million for October and $3.7 million the same month a year ago.

Trade and service sector benefits also increased. November 1990 trade benefits totaled $1.9 million compared to the October total of $1.6 million and the November 1989 total of $1.8 million. November service sector benefits totaled $1.6 million compared to the October total of $1.4 million and the year-ago total of $1.3 million.

November 1990 construction benefits totaled $1.1 million compared to the October 1990 total of $700,000 and $972,000 a year ago.

VA Hospital addresses incinerator issue

Public meeting held to discuss possible risks

By Aziz Gökdemir
The Daily Iowan

In a self-initiated attempt to address concerns about the possible health risks of burning medical waste, the Veterans Administration Hospital held an informational meeting Thursday to discuss its new incinerator.

The first meeting of its kind held locally without public pressure was open to the employees, community members and the media. The speakers were Pete Hamlin, air quality and solid waste bureau chief of the state department of natural resources; Brad Long, vice president of Walsh Equipment Inc., a Des Moines company specializing in incinerators; and Jeff Bochie, a certified industrial hygienist.

They presented incinerator information relevant to their fields and then answered questions from the audience to round out the meeting conducted by Annie Tuttle, community relations director of the VA Hospital.

Several community members — some of them from environmental groups — voiced their appreciation to Tuttle for initiating an open hearing.

"I encourage you to give (Vice President for Research) Jim Morrison at the UI a call about this meeting," said one member of the audience. The environmental groups remain unsatisfied about the degree of responsiveness of the UI regarding its own incinerators.

Hamlin, who offered the first presentation, outlined the legal procedure required to obtain a state permit to burn infectious waste.

A conditional permit is required to be able to start construction of a facility, he explained. The VA incinerator is presently in that stage and needs a final permit to start operating.

"(The DNR) engineering staff said (the hospital has) a good chance of meeting our standards, so we gave them a conditional permit," Hamlin said.

After the incinerator is ready to operate, probes inserted into the stack will provide data regarding emissions. The data will be fed into a complex computer model that will come up with a risk figure estimate. According to Iowa law, the acceptable risk figure is one cancer death in one million inhabitants living in the area for 70 years, Hamlin said.

"There is no state limit in the country which has a higher standard," he said. If the VA incinerator meets this standard according to the computer model, then the VA will be issued the permit, he said.

But the system is no guarantee, he reminded the audience.

"(The computer model) is flawed," he said, "but there is no better system I'm aware of."

Not every audience member was impressed by these words.

"Risk assessment systems are only best guesses available," one audience member commented.

"They are flawed, but they are the best available — the DNR uses the strictest standard. I don't see what else we could do in a realistic sense when dealing with these issues," Hamlin replied.

Jim Walters, of the environmental group Iowans for Animal Rights, was the most outspoken member of the audience.

He began by telling a joke about a boy who was confessing to a priest that he had been masturbating. Given the warning that he would go blind, the boy asked the priest if he could at least continue until he needed glasses.

The location of the meeting — held in the hospital's chapel — reminded him of the joke, Walters said.

"It's the same thing. Why do we go on with polluting the air, establishing limits (like the boy in the joke)?" Walters asked.

He added it's ironic that a health-care institution asks permission to increase pollution that causes health problems.

"Models have proved wrong in the past; will you come back here for an apology if this one does?" Walters asked Hamlin.

Hamlin said 55 percent of the air toxins are produced by cars, and 5 percent by woodburning stoves.

"If you're really interested in reducing air toxic waste, go back to the horse and buggy. And if you know of another way to deal with this waste, I would like to hear it — I don't know," he said.

Hamlin also denied Walters' allegation that the DNR had never denied permits.

Long, the second speaker, discussed the development of the incineration technology in recent years.

Ron Barnes, an employee at the hospital, said he didn't think highly of the technology to be used for the new incinerator.

"It didn't sound better than the piece of junk we had before," he said after hearing the specifications, referring to an incinerator used by the VA Hospital from 1972 to 1985.

Long said the incinerator's technology is not old and gave process logic controllers — a three-year-old technology — as an example.

Barnes said he wanted to know if the maintenance personnel — who he said are exposed most to the potential health hazards of operating the incinerator — would be trained.

Steve Heslin, the hospital's assistant chief building manager, said repairs will be handled by a contractor. Hamlin added that the DNR is working on a requirement that will mandate incinerator operators to be trained and certified.

Bochie, the last speaker, sought to clarify what will and will not be burned at the incinerator. As Tuttle said in a Dec. 11 DI article, radioactive waste will be shipped out of state, and landfilling will remain the primary resort for the hospital's waste. Infectious waste will be burned at the incinerator.

The incinerator will be subject to the unannounced inspections of the DNR if it gets a final permit, and the records of the inspection will be open to the public in the department's office in Des Moines. If health hazards are detected by the DNR, it can start an extensive procedure to get the institution to comply with the standards.

In an emergency situation, the DNR can request a shut-down of a facility, but Hamlin said the DNR has no authority to mandate a shut-down.

U.S. farmers: Soviet trade credit too late

By Michael Bates
The Associated Press

WICHITA, Kan. — Farmers are not dancing in their fields in reaction to President Bush's easing of Soviet Union trade restrictions and granting of $1 billion in agricultural credit.

Words of praise for the move announced Wednesday were tempered with criticism Thursday.

"My first reaction is: 'Too little. Too late,'" said Milton Giedinghagen, a Stafford, Kan., wheat farmer who heads the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers. "I hope it does people over there some good."

As the No. 1 wheat-producing and flour milling state in the nation, Kansas has a significant stake in the agricultural export trade. From two-thirds to three-fourths of the hard red winter wheat raised in the state moves into export channels.

Giedinghagen noted cash wheat prices dipped nearly 4 cents Thursday because the grain markets had expected the dollar amount of the credit package to be higher.

"In the immediate term, it will cast a cloud over prices. If we're not able to grant credit in any larger quantity than announced yesterday, the Soviet Union won't have the ability to take its full component of exports projections in the long-term grain agreement," said Jim McKinstry, manager of a large grain elevator in Champaign County, Ill.

The Soviet Union repeatedly has said it needs $3 billion in credit to meet its agricultural import needs.

"This would have been a more welcome occurrence, the credits, had the administration moved forward aggressively and extended these credits last summer when producers were asking for them," said Chris Rink, director of the Oklahoma Wheat Commission.

"We've already lost competition in the European Community and Canada, especially. Those nations extended several billions of dollars of credits to the Soviet Union within the last few months and have already made substantial sales of wheat," Rink said.

Although it should have happened months ago, the action at least puts the United States back in the marketplace, said Dean Kleckner, a Rudd, Iowa, farmer who heads the American Farm Bureau Federation, the nation's largest farm group.

"It's not going to be the great shot in the arm that some American farmers expected," Kleckner said.

Don Hutchens of the Nebraska Corn Board also criticized the $1 billion limit.

"That is not enough in our understanding of what the Soviets need, and it's not enough to get us up to the level of what we were previously selling to the Soviet Union," Hutchens said.

Last year at this time, 6 million metric tons of corn had been sold to the Soviet Union, he said. So far this year, sales total 420,000 tons, he said.

There was some speculation about why Bush held the credits to $1 billion.

"Bush wants to retain a little control, doling it out to the Russians," elevator manager McKinstry said.

John White, Illinois Farm Bureau president, agreed.

New ruling changes Medicaid coverage for some transplants

The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Some Iowans awaiting organs for transplants are concerned over an Iowa Council on Human Services' rule change that limits the types of operations that Medicaid will cover.

The council on Wednesday limited organs for which Iowa Medicaid will pay the medical costs for Iowans who don't have health insurance and can't afford the operation.

"The door could be closed again for me, as well as for anyone else," said Robert Wedbush, 43, of Dubuque, who is awaiting a donor liver.

If he doesn't undergo a transplant before the end of March, he could lose Medicaid coverage, social service officials said. Wedbush had been told in October that Iowa Medicaid would pay for a transplant.

The council changed wording in its Medicaid guidelines so that transplants of adult liver, pancreas, lung and heart-lung transplants are no longer covered.

The action must be reviewed by a legislative committee.

Bush

ied Kuwait.

Cheney said Saddam "continues to deploy more forces to Kuwait and southern Iraq. Every indication is he intends to continue his illegal occupation of Kuwait." Cheney made his comments to reporters after speaking at the National War College.

U.S. District Judge Harold Greene denied a request by 54 Democratic members of Congress for an injunction to force the president to seek a declaration of war before launching an attack on Iraqi troops in Kuwait.

The judge said the Constitution requires a president to gain such authorization before launching an actual attack, but he said the case was premature since a majority of

"You don't reward a kidnapper."

George Bush

Congress had not expressed a view on a possible attack and because Bush "has not shown a commitment to a definitive course of action."

The Air Force said it is sending more U.S. warplanes to Saudi Arabia from Germany and Britain, and the Navy announced the activation of hundreds of reservists for medical duty in the gulf area.

Also, the Pentagon said Cheney and Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, will travel to Saudi Arabia next Tuesday to visit American troops and to meet with Saudi government officials.

Two former hostages spoke with reporters after the meeting with Bush and said the group supported his handling of the gulf situation.

"To a man, we were in agreement with the care and the diligence that is being taken by the president," said Ralph Montgomery, 56.

Montgomery, an architect from Indian Rocks Beach, Fla., said he hid with his son-in-law, who was a teacher at the American school in Kuwait. He praised their Palestinian neighbors for protecting them.

Antonio Mireles, who had stayed at the embassy compound, said the hostages told Bush the Kuwaitis are a peace-loving people and "what has happened here cannot be left unattended."

"It was atrocious what occurred here," said Mireles, 48, who had been working as a civil engineer for the Kuwaiti government.

The last planned U.S.-sponsored flight from Iraq arrived in Frankfurt, Germany, carrying 94 passengers.

Ambassador Nathaniel Hill and other American diplomats had defied Iraq's order to shut down the embassy in August.

The besieged diplomats departed only after they were satisfied that all Americans had been given a chance to leave the country, U.S. officials said.

Farmers vie for Soviet business

Wheat producers hope to see majority of $1 billion extension

By Don Kendall
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The $1 billion in farm credit extended to the Soviet Union could buy most of the Kansas wheat crop this year. Or all the corn grown in Ohio. Or all the soybeans produced in Missouri and Mississippi.

And you can bet that producers of oats, barley, rice, dairy products and dozens of other farm goods will be clamoring for Moscow's attention, too.

"Wheat could be the majority of it, I would think," said Barry Jenkins of the National Association of Wheat Growers. "We may have something going for us because they need some flour real quick."

"But there's going to be people lined up along with us," he noted.

Citing the "tough times, difficult times" facing the Soviet people, President Bush announced Wednesday he was waiving, through June 1991, longstanding trade restrictions and handed the Soviet Union credit lines of $1 billion for farm products and $300 million for manufactured goods.

Ironically, Bush's announcement proved bearish on the market, because the grain trade had expected the president to give the Soviets an even higher credit limit.

Grain futures opened sharply lower Thursday on the Chicago Board of Trade, and one analyst said the credit package was disappointing, that traders had expected a figure in the range of $1.5 billion to $3 billion, the level urged earlier by Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

The Agriculture Department will work with Soviet officials to work out details of the credit package, including schedules for financing and repayment. The USDA underwrites the loans, which are made by private lenders under the department's export credit programs.

Theoretically, if a four-way split could be arranged, with each interest group getting a $250 million piece of the pie, it could mean Soviet purchases of:

■ About 105 million bushels of wheat, based on a recent U.S. farm price average of $2.39 per bushel.

■ About 114 million bushels of corn at an average farm price of $2.19 per bushel.

■ About 45 million bushels of soybeans at the recent average U.S. farm price of $5.51 per bushel.

■ And miscellaneous purchases, with the remaining $250 million, of rice, oats, barley, dairy products, meat and various processed food items.

Actual selling prices to the Soviets would be higher than the farm prices, however, since transportation charges to move grain from inland points to port loading facilities must be computed, too.

The Soviet Union has been buying large quantities of U.S. grain since the early 1970s. In recent years, the purchases have been under long-term agreements that commit both countries to minimum annual levels.

In the fiscal year that ended Sept.

30, the Soviets bought 20.3 million metric tons of U.S. grain, including almost 16.5 million tons of corn and 3.8 million tons of wheat.

That was the equivalent of 650 million bushels of corn and 140 million bushels of wheat — roughly $1.4 billion worth of corn at today's farm prices and $335 million worth of wheat.

Bennett turns down offer to head RNC

By Tom Raum
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former drug policy director William Bennett on Thursday spurned President Bush's offer to be chairman of the Republican National Committee after White House lawyers told him he'd have to give up a book contract and other outside income.

"I didn't take a vow of poverty," Bennett told reporters after giving Chief of Staff John Sununu his letter declining the offer just two weeks after he'd accepted it.

Bennett indicated he was initially told by the White House that his plans to write two books and accept payments for speeches would not present a problem.

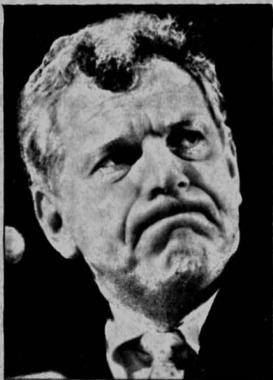

However, Bennett said, "the advice changed." He said he was told by White House counsel Boyden Gray that accepting the outside income while serving as RNC chairman would violate the Ethics in Government Act.

The surprise development was an embarrassment to both Bush and Bennett and sent the White House scurrying in search for a new candidate to take over day-to-day operation of the party from the ailing Lee Atwater.

However, some party regulars — who had never been comfortable with the notion of the combative, arch conservative Bennett as party chairman — expressed relief.

"I thought Bennett was a mistake in the first place," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. "He'd only been a Republican for about four years, never run for office and, to me, it's got to be somebody who understands and likes politics."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush was disappointed and that a replacement had not been chosen. The RNC was expected to rubber stamp Bush's choice.

Administration and Republican sources said that Secretary of Transportation Samuel Skinner and defeated Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., were among those being considered.

Bennett, 47, outspoken and controversial, resigned Nov. 8 as Bush's drug enforcement control director. He was secretary of education during the Reagan administration and now is a fellow at the Hudson Institute, a conservative political research organization.

In a letter to Bush written on Hudson Institute stationery, Bennett told Bush:

"I share your commitment to the highest ethical standards in public service and I would not want to do anything to jeopardize our shared commitment to those standards."

He cited a "longstanding contractual commitment to Simon and Schuster to write two books," including one on his experiences in government.

Bennett received a $187,500 advance from Simon & Schuster for the two books, according to financial disclosure forms.

He would have made $125,100 a year as RNC chairman.

32 come home from Iraq on last evacuation flight

By David Beard
The Associated Press

A final evacuation flight landed in Germany Thursday carrying the U.S. ambassador to Kuwait and his staff, who survived a 110-day Iraqi siege of their embassy by living on tuna fish and swimming pool water.

The five U.S. diplomats from Kuwait were among 32 Americans on the Iraqi Airways flight from Baghdad to Germany, the State Department said.

Ambassador Nathaniel Howell, looking thinner from the ordeal and his gray hair longer, told reporters on arrival in Frankfurt that his staff left the embassy "with the flag flying."

"We're very happy to be here. We're delighted that Americans who wanted to leave did," he said.

Asked if the embassy staff had endured, as reported, a diet of tuna sandwiches, Howell deadpanned, "No, the bread ran out."

The 50-year-old diplomat declined to speak at length, explaining that "we haven't had electricity and water, hot water, at night for 110 days. So, we're going to take advantage of that."

The passengers were booked into a luxury hotel near the airport. State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said they would fly to Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington this afternoon.

The Americans included 23 private U.S. citizens, the five-member Kuwaiti mission staff and four U.S. officials who joined the flight in Baghdad, Tutwiler said in Washington. They were among 96 foreigners aboard, she said.

While Iraq was allowing the completion of a blanket hostage release announced one week ago, it accused Washington of lying about a schedule for U.S.-Iraq talks. It denied U.S. reports that Washington had offered 15 possible dates for Secretary of State James Baker's trip to Baghdad, all of which had been rejected.

Saddam Hussein said Thursday that Iraq wants peace but would fight rather than permit foreign domination of Arab lands and oil.

"We would win and would walk over their corpses and tread on their heads," the official Iraqi News Agency quoted him as saying. The Iraqi president has made similar statements in the past.

Howell, his deputy chief of mission, Barbara Bodine, and three other American diplomats in Kuwait left their embassy early Thursday and flew to Baghdad and then Frankfurt aboard a U.S.-chartered Iraqi Airways plane.

Muhanji's work celebrates family bonds

By Kim Painter
The Daily Iowan

It's been a while since a book held me in thrall. There are many reasons for this. Everything from I've been too busy to I started it but it just didn't pull me in to I'm tired of minimalist fiction or fiction that has as much substance and texture as cardboard.

So I wasn't thrilled when it was suggested that I review a newly published book. But here I am, astonished and delighted to report the existence of a writer who can put the heartbeat of humanity down on paper so it reads like life instead of an EKG.

The novel is "Her," by Cherry Muhanji. It pulls you along the six blocks of John R. Street in Detroit for a ride you won't soon forget. Muhanji has extraordinary eyesight and hearing. She sees the obvious and uncovers the hidden, hears the spoken and reveals the unsaid. For 179 pages she shares all of that with the reader in a narrative spirit of generosity, anger and love.

Who lives on John R. Street in Detroit? Extended black families in rambling old houses with rooms full of stories, drag queens, ex-lovers, current flames, poor blacks, wealthy blacks, unscrupulous blacks, angry blacks, gay blacks, a gay white boy happy to have a place where people don't question difference, "hi-yellah" blacks in their difficult relations with those of darker complexion, pimps, whores and those who seek them out. Muhanji's deft touch leaves none of them hanging gratuitously. They all have humanity. She neither dismisses nor trivializes their stories, but imprints them on the reader's mind with tenderness and an absolutely truthful, unsparring eye:

"When Sunshine rose in the night and stared out, the window came alive and so did she — moving down John R. Street, a satin doll with a wonderful ass.

"... maybe she would go to the Frolic or Flame Showbars where tiny bits of mirror were fitted together behind the bar, forming one giant reflection for all the customers — some to check a moustache, others to wipe away the lipstick smear from a top lip. But none passed their reflection without looking, for that mirror was the only lie they could count on."

The book is about family in its broadest, most robust sense. The narrative is often composed of action between kin. Muhanji portrays the relationship between Brother and his father King throughout the book. At one point in a discussion, Brother confronts King:

"I want my wife to want me. . . . Not like Momma does you. . . . King stared at a naked reflection of his own pain from this son he had never allowed room for. . . . Now, this intertwining of the two pains, one numbed, one raw, had awakened in him a sadness that was bottomless and left no room for talk. Slowly, shaking his head,

While it contains much powerful rendering of male relationships, the book's center stage is occupied by women. There are hilarious, deftly drawn conversations between mother-in-law and daughter-in-law. There are moments of indescribable physical and emotional agony, many of them due to the fact that women are brought up by men and sold by men on John R. Street.

In the end, the book celebrates family bonds, the hope embodied in children and the strength of black women and men. Cherry Muhanji sees our world for what it is and honors it with all her art. This very full world does not once manage to trick her, and she does not once sell it short. The result of that hard bargain between author and reality is a book of extraordinary strength.

Cherry Muhanji will read from her work at 8 tonight at Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St. The event is free and open to the public; the reading will be broadcast live on WSUI AM 910.

MINORITY SCHOLARSHIPS

Miraculous decision

If you're going to allow yourself to believe in miracles, you might as well do it during finals week — especially when it lands directly on the Christmas season. Still, most rational folks don't hope for anything too startling in the way of extra-scientific phenomena. Who would have guessed, for example, that a government agency would ever do anything as intelligent as it is unpopular? It's the kind of freakish happening that puts a die-hard cynic to shame.

This week the Federal Department of Education decided to begin prohibiting colleges and universities that receive federal funds from issuing scholarships "on the basis of race, color, or national origin." The decision constitutes the first firm step toward the destruction of institutionalized racism.

The problem with race-exclusive aid, like the UI's own "Opportunity at Iowa" scholarship, is that it forces institutions to discriminate on the basis of color rather than quality or financial need.

The problem with race-exclusive aid, like the UI's own "Opportunity at Iowa" scholarship, is that it forces institutions to discriminate on the basis of color rather than quality or financial need. Granted, the goal of a colorblind society may indeed be, as critics claim, hopelessly idealistic. It would be ridiculous to expect a society to rid every individual of every conceivable superficial prejudice. But to allow the state to mandate color-consciousness sends a clear message to the public that such behavior is acceptable and necessary. These policies not only abandon all hope of future progress, they serve to decay the substantial progress that has already been realized.

Cultural diversity is a vital component of any credible education, and its attainment need not be hindered by this new policy. Conscientiously implemented minority recruitment programs and need-based scholarships constitute sound and superior alternatives. The Department of Education should be congratulated for its realism, miraculous though it is. No matter how you stack it, double standards, hypocrisy and racism can never build a solid foundation for true equality.

SPACE PROGRAM

Redirection

The eagle has landed. A special committee reviewing the space program has issued its summary report, calling for a significant rearrangement of priorities and procedures. That's one small step.

It is now up to NASA and the president's Space Council to evaluate the findings and establish a reasonable framework for their implementation. It is also incumbent upon President Bush and Congress to cooperate in the administration of increased funding for the struggling space program. Those are giant leaps.

The recommendations include a redirection of emphasis from manned flights to unmanned boosters, a restructuring of current programs and a modified pay scale to keep top NASA employees from being lured to private industry. The committee also recommends a 10 percent budget increase, which would most likely fall in the lap of Congress in 1991.

The space program needs to get back on course. It has not changed ideologically since its inception.

It seems the big boys at NASA may finally come around to our own Professor Van Allen's philosophy of science before self-aggrandizement. The space program needs to get back on course. It has not changed ideologically since its inception. Primarily, the anachronistic emphasis on manned flights must go. Such endeavors are cost-prohibitive, short-sighted and dangerous.

Although the recommendations make perfect sense, the 10 percent budget increase is difficult to accept. For 1991, Congress approved nearly $14 billion for NASA. This represented an 8.5 percent increase. That translates into a proposed increase of roughly $18 billion, which is a hard pill to swallow with the current budget malaise and uncertainties in the Persian Gulf.

But major restructuring requires major funding. And NASA, in fact the entire American fixation with space, is in need of major restructuring. Also, the provision of funding would send a message of good will to NASA officials, who are not entirely pleased with the committee's suggestions. Of course, that message must be tempered with the knowledge that this is an exception, not a precedent, for future NASA funding.

NASA officials are currently reviewing the report. They would do well to adhere to the committee's recommendations. By adjusting their modus operandi and vision for the future, they will make greater strides through space, restore the faith of the American public and honor the strong legacy of the nation's space program.

The U.S. is in its own little world

If I understand the situation correctly, one of the reasons we're gearing up for war with Iraq is that we're trying to create some sort of new "world order."

This seems to mean that we're trying to create a kinder and gentler world and, if Saddam Hussein interferes with this kindness and gentleness, we'll stomp the hell out of him.

And if I understand the situation correctly, much or most of the world agrees with what we're doing. That conclusion can be drawn from the support we've received from the United Nations, which represents most of the world's population.

If you pause and think about that, it's pretty impressive, since the world is a pretty big place and a lot of people live in it.

The most current estimate is that the world's population is 5.3 billion. (If you like to look at zeroes, that's 5,300,000,000.)

So as Americans, we can feel proud that more than 5 billion people have said, through their U.N. representatives, that they're on our side.

And Saddam should feel nervous with that many people thinking he's a low-life character.

Of course, many millions of them are little kids who don't know what's going on. And there are probably millions more who are drunk or hung over or watching game shows and don't care one way or the other.

But even if you want to adjust it down a billion or so, we do appear to have considerable support.

If that's the case, though, it's puzzling that so few of the world's 5.3 billion people have joined us in the Arabian desert.

It isn't easy to get exact figures because the Pentagon keeps pretending that everything is a military secret. But most estimates are that there are about 80,000 non-American military and support people over there with us.

Eighty thousand people would be an impressive turnout for a football or baseball game.

And they would make up the population of a livable-sized small city.

But as a percentage of the world's population, they're not much more than a drop in a swimming pool.

If my pocket calculator is correct, those 80,000 troops and support personnel represent something like .000015 percent of the world's population. What is that? One one-millionth or something? I don't know. Maybe some bright math major can help me out.

I do know that it isn't exactly a frenzied would say: "Holy camel, there are troops from 15 or 20 different countries out there. Quick, hand me the white flag."

However, it becomes less impressive when you look at what some of these countries have sent. There are small-town American Legion posts that provide bigger marching units for parades.

Norway sent a Coast Guard cutter, which would be handy if any icebergs drift into the desert. Denmark also sent a small ship, which is OK, but our troops would probably have preferred a few thousand cases of cold Heinekens.

Saudi Arabia has a few thousand of its own troops on the front lines. That might not seem like many, considering that it was Saudi Arabia that yelled for us to come and protect it after Saddam invaded Kuwait. You might think that Saudi men, young and old and by the tens of thousands, would be enlisting to protect their own country. But we have to understand that they have a tradition of disliking menial jobs. They prefer to use their oil to hire what we, in this country, call "domestic help." Just as some rich Americans hire rent-a-cops to protect their homes and businesses, the Saudis have hired our rent-a-army to fight for their oil wells and pipelines.

All of this might bother some of Bush's critics. But we can look at it another way. If we really want a kinder, gentler, less combative world, this could be an encouraging sign. If there's a war and 99.999 percent of the rest of the world doesn't bother to show up for it, that means there are a lot of kind and peaceful people out there. Or if they aren't kind and peaceful, at least they're not stupid.

turnout. Many rock concerts have drawn bigger crowds. And some of the rock-concert goers were probably more inclined toward violence than our desert allies.

That, of course, is why some of the critics of President Bush's war plans have been saying that the rest of the world isn't doing much more than offering to hold our coat while we brawl with Iraq. And they're asking why, if Saddam is such a threat to world peace and the world's economy, the rest of the world isn't frothing at the lips and just itching to pluck out his eyes.

Some of Bush's defenders respond that there are more countries represented in the desert or at sea than most people realize.

And that's true. About 15 or 20 different countries have sent personnel, which sounds impressive. You would imagine that Saddam

Letters

Lost opportunity

To the Editor:

Two important issues are embodied in Dr. Mary Rush Coan's letter to the DI ["The other side," Dec. 10] concerning the Jean Jew case. One is the way the university's (President Freedman's) unwillingness to act helped perpetuate an atmosphere in which personal attacks would be inevitable. Second is the effect of having promotion determined by a judge rather than by peer review.

Because there were no written standards for promotion in the anatomy department, faculty judicial panels considering the appeals of negative tenure decisions in the cases of Drs. Oaks (1978-1979) and Black (1981-1982) were forced (by the University Operations Manual) to compare the résumés of those two faculty members with that of the faculty member in the department most recently granted tenure, namely, Dr. Jew. Not only were departmental decisions in the cases of Drs. Oaks and Black subject to scrutiny, so was the prior decision to promote. In the Oaks and Black cases, which I was invited to observe as a member of AAUP Committee A, both panels recommended that the department's decisions be reversed.

These recommendations, and the fact that the university found sufficient merit in a third grievance (by Dr. Tomanek) to negotiate a settlement, indicate that procedures in effect in anatomy during Dr. Williams' tenure as head were seriously flawed and prejudicial to some faculty members. The need to grieve divided the department and increased animosity between the grieving faction and the faction aligned with Dr. Williams. All this must be seen as a prelude to subsequent consideration of Dr. Jew's promotion to professor in 1984. Furthermore, regardless of her accomplishments, it would have been difficult even for well-intentioned colleagues evaluating Dr. Jew's credentials to distinguish her work from that of her senior collaborator, co-author, former mentor, business associate and friend, Dr. Williams.

In spite of the unquestionable need to compensate Dr. Jew for the harassment to which she was subjected, the judicial order that promotion from associate to full professor be granted retroactively is regrettable. It sets an extremely damaging precedent to have a promotion decision made by someone unfamiliar with normal university standards and inexperienced in examining promotion dossiers. As this case indicates, the system of peer review is not perfect, but it is difficult to think of a system for evaluating faculty members for promotion and tenure that would be fairer. The faculty, including our local AAUP chapter, should not have been so willing to have the concept of peer review (and tenure) undermined by a judicial order that itself will threaten the integrity of future tenure or promotion decisions.

Ms. Coan's letter closed with the statement: "Most women want to be promoted because of merit, not because they hired a lawyer." I'm sure Dr. Jew felt she deserved to be promoted, was not being judged fairly, and had no alternative to hiring a lawyer. Whether or not the judicial decision was necessitated by failure of the university to act, the fact is that Dr. Jew has been deprived of the opportunity to be judged positively by her peers.

Hopefully, the costly mistakes of the Boyd and Freedman administrations — ignoring the warning signals that began to surface in the Oaks grievance and allowing the deplorable situation in the anatomy department to continue for several years — will not be repeated.

professor of biology

Clarification

To the Editor:

On Nov. 30, The Daily Iowan published an article regarding World AIDS Day, which took place on Dec. 1 ("World AIDS awareness day is Saturday"). This year, World AIDS Day highlighted women with AIDS.

I would like to commend The Daily Iowan for making this vital information available to the community, but several items that were credited to me need correction.

I was quoted as saying: "the state (of Iowa) reported no cases of AIDS in 1984. This year, there are 21 cases so far." The statistics I shared were that there were no reported AIDS cases of women in 1984 and that the projected total for AIDS cases in women in 1990 was 21. (Pacemaker, Vol. 17, Number 11, Nov. 1990, UI Hospitals and Clinics.)

I was also quoted as saying: "the chances of (acquiring) AIDS are seven times greater in rural areas than in urban areas." What I said was that AIDS is rising seven times faster in rural areas with less accessible resources than it is in the cities in the United States. This information comes from the National Commission on AIDS.

Thank you for your support of World AIDS Day 1990. As Hiroshi Nakajima, M.D., Ph.D., and director-general of The World Health Organization, said, "Women are the key to achieving health for all."

Sicilian earthquake kills 19, injures 200

The Associated Press
SYRACUSE, Sicily — A moderate earthquake shook eastern Sicily early Thursday, killing 19 people and injuring about 200, panicking thousands and destroying part of a small town, officials said.

Worst was Carlentini, a town of 10,000 people between Catania and Syracuse. There members of five families were killed when their homes crumbled on top of them as they slept.

The quake struck at about 1:30 a.m. (5:30 p.m. Wednesday EST) and registered 4.7 on the Richter scale, the Ministry of Civil Protection reported. It was followed by dozens of aftershocks during the day.

"There was a huge roar all of a sudden. Everything shook," said Sebastiano Valvo, an employee at the Syracuse prefect's office.

The bodies of 13 people were pulled from the rubble in Carlentini. They included two elderly couples; a woman, her two daughters and two grandchildren; a 32-year-old bar owner; and a couple and their 18-month-old daughter.

The bar owner's wife died of her injuries in the hospital in Lentini.

In addition, four elderly people from the Catania area and one person from Nisemi, west of Syracuse, died of heart attacks after the quake, the Italian news agency ANSA reported.

A rescue worker in Carlentini told ANSA that he found the bodies of Sebastiano Musumeci; his wife, Francesca; and their 18-month-old daughter Veronica together.

"They're all hugging in a big bed," the unidentified worker was quoted as saying. "Maybe they were in such a deep sleep that they didn't even understand what happened. Let's hope it was like that."

The couple's 5-year-old son Rosario escaped.

About 200 people were injured, the Italian news agency AGI said. The quake caused at least $400 million in damage, according to the prefect's office in Syracuse.

Up to 2,500 people were left homeless by the quake, said the Civil Protection Ministry.

Rescue crews dug through wreckage under a driving rain to try to find survivors.

In Carlentini, officials said they would set up a huge tent on the village sports field to shelter some of the 1,300 people left homeless. Two neighborhoods were badly damaged and at least five people were seriously injured.

In other cities and towns along the coast, chunks of concrete were shaken off buildings and hurled into the streets.

Numerous churches were declared unsafe and closed. Prisoners from a jail in the town of Noto were transferred to other facilities after they spent much of the frigid, rainy hours after the quake sleeping in the prison courtyard.

The mayor of Syracuse, Gaetano Bandiera, asked the region's prefect to proclaim a state of emergency.

The quake's epicenter was in the Gulf of Noto about 30 miles southeast of Syracuse, said the National Institute of Geophysics.

Local and regional authorities rushed to find shelter for those unable to return to their shaky dwellings.

In the city of Augusta, the mayor requisitioned a holiday village to provide dwellings for 1,500 people. In Catania, a visiting circus made available its heated tent for victims of the earthquake.

The mayor of Priolo, working with local businesses, dished out hot meals for those in need.

Police reported a few cases of looting in areas hit by the earthquake. Two men were arrested in Carlentini on robbery charges.

Sicily, an island just west of the Italian mainland's toe, has been struck several times by major earthquakes.

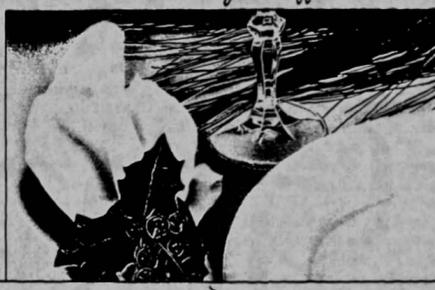

In 1968, nearly 400 people died in a quake. In 1908, a quake leveled the city of Messina, killing 83,000 people.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph.

An earthquake of magnitude 4 can cause moderate damage, while a quake of magnitude 5 can cause considerable damage.

Ann Rhodes, vice president of university relations, said Rawlings felt the council's report raised some legitimate concerns.

"I think that it highlighted some things that we were aware of. . . It confirmed some things that we had some concerns about anyway," Rhodes said.

Small said it is difficult to say what impact the report will have but added the administration will attempt to address all of the recommendations made.

"It would be too early to predict anything specific coming out of it," Small said. "And there are areas where we will go through and see if we can come up with changes that may improve things."

Roselle Wissler, subcommittee member, said she is concerned about whether the administration will make any changes in response of the survey.

"We certainly don't want to have put in this much work and have nothing happen," Wissler said. "We certainly hope that some action will be taken on some of these things. . . There are a lot of things that need to have further study done on them."

Iowa looks ahead to holiday games

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

The non-conference season is almost done for the Iowa men's basketball team. But with final exams out of the way, the Hawkeyes have almost three weeks to train intensively before the Big Ten season begins.

And Iowa has a variety of opponents to go up against before they open their conference schedule at Ohio State Jan. 3.

"It's been going pretty fast," freshman forward James Winters said. "It doesn't seem like we've played seven games; it seems like we just started yesterday. It's fun though."

Iowa's first contest will be against Maryland-Baltimore County Saturday at 7 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

The Retrievers were 1-5 on the season going into this week. They return two starters and nine lettermen off a squad that finished 12-16 last year.

The two squads have never met, and Iowa coach Tom Davis said the Hawkeyes have spent more time re-evaluating their progress than scouting UMBC.

"We've been very fortunate in that we've played well when we've had to," Davis said. "I think that's where you have to be real critical and evaluate just how are we rebounding, for example."

"We're happy to be where we are and yet trying to be real objective as to what we've got to do to continue to keep this ballclub moving up."

Out of the league squads, Iowa ranks ninth in field goal percentage, seventh in rebounding and second in blocks. According to Davis, that shows that despite being 6-1 on the year, the Hawkeyes still have a lot of progress to make.

"I think it points out to how much work we still have to do with this ballclub," the coach said. "The fact that we won is terrific, but if there's one theme over this next couple of weeks until we get ready for the Big Ten season is how much can we improve."

"The fact that we've got so many freshmen and first-year players trying to fit in leads you to believe that there should be a lot of room for improvement."

The Hawkeyes will host Chicago State Tuesday at 7 p.m., and will face No. 6 UCLA Saturday, Dec. 22, at 7 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye.

According to Iowa forward Jay Webb, who was recruited by the Bruins, that will be a tough contest for the Hawkeye team.

"That's going to be a really big test," Webb said. "They're just bombarded with talent. I think we're going to have to play really well if we're going to win."

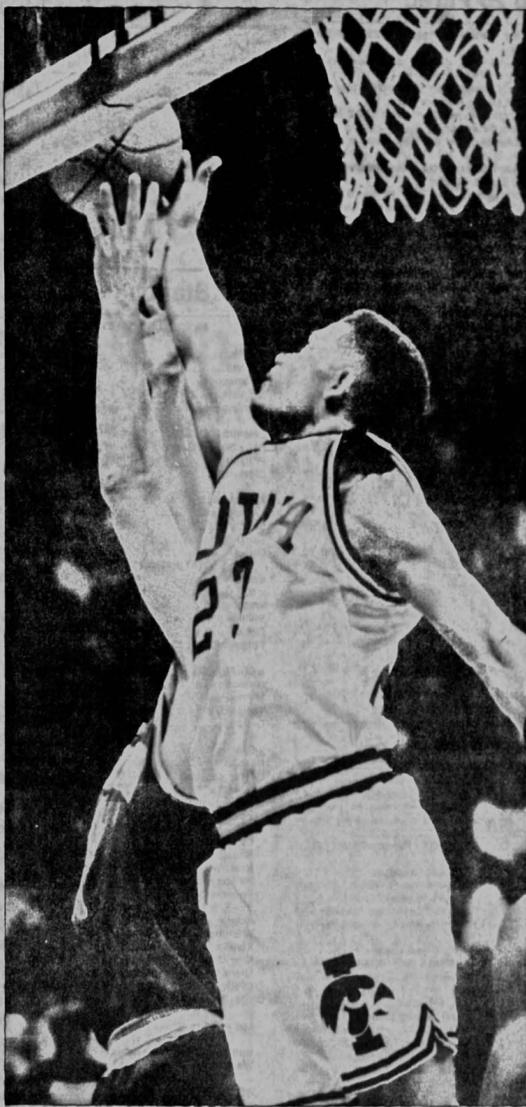

Following that matchup, the Hawkeyes will leave for Hawaii and the Hawaii Holiday Tournament, where they will face Hawaii-Hilo on Dec. 28 and Chamainade on the 30th.

While the tournament marks the last tuneup for Iowa, Webb said he thinks the trip helps in ways other than competition-wise.

"That's going to be like the final leg in our improvement, so I think that's going to be a really key trip," Webb said. "It'll also be key for the younger players to get used to playing in different time zones and having all that free time and being able to stay focused."

"I think it'll be a great experience," Winters added.

After Hawaii, Iowa will travel to Ohio State, followed by home contests against Michigan State and Michigan on Jan. 5 and 10, respectively, and a game at Minnesota on Jan. 12.

Iowa forward James Winters goes up for a rebound against one of the Hawkeyes' opponents earlier this season. The Iowa squad will play nine games during the winter break.

No holiday hiatus for busy Hawkeyes

By Brian Gaul
The Daily Iowan

The next four weeks may be a vacation for most Iowa students, but it will be anything but a break for the Iowa women's basketball team.

After the Hawkeyes finish taking final exams in their classes, they will begin their basketball midterms. But Iowa coach C. Vivian Stringer said it will be good for her team to get the distractions of school behind them.

"I'd like to believe with the relief of the pressure of tests, we'll be free of stress," Stringer said. "They'll be anxious to play. I'm hoping that will help us in playing well and being on the right track."

Iowa is entering one of the toughest stretches in its schedule as the holidays approach. The four-week break for Christmas will see the 15th-ranked Hawkeyes in action against:

■ Nebraska — the Hawkeyes and Cornhuskers will meet in Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Dec. 16 in Iowa's only pre-Christmas action. Nebraska is unranked but has already beaten traditional Big Ten power Ohio State in Columbus, Ohio.

■ No. 17 Washington — Stringer's team travels to Seattle, Wash., on Dec. 30 in a pre-Rose Bowl matchup between Hawkeyes and Huskies.

■ No. 3 Georgia in the Big Ten-SEC Challenge — the Bulldogs will come to Carver-Hawkeye Arena as part of a nationally-televised (CBS) doubleheader between representatives of the two conferences. No. 4 Purdue will face No. 5 Auburn in the other contest.

■ Wisconsin, Illinois and Purdue in Big Ten play. Iowa opens defense of its 1989 conference title against the Badgers in Madison, Wis., on Jan. 2 before returning home for games against the Illini Jan. 11 and the Boilermakers Jan. 13.

Iowa has won or shared the conference title in each of the last four seasons. The Hawkeyes tied Northwestern for the league title last year.

C. Vivian Stringer

But the graduation of three starters from that team and the addition of seven freshmen has left the Hawkeyes in an unfamiliar position. Stringer's team isn't the favorite to win this year's Big Ten title.

The Hawkeyes were picked to finish third in the league in a poll of conference coaches earlier this fall. Northwestern and Purdue were the league favorites.

Despite the youth on the team, the Hawkeyes have gotten off to a 5-1 start. Iowa has already faced three nationally-ranked teams and beaten two of them.

Iowa's strength in the early part of the season has been its inside game, where center Toni Foster and forward Trisha Waugh are averaging a combined 29.5 points and 16.9 rebounds per game.

The strong inside play has been a pleasant surprise for Stringer, whose teams have relied on a good perimeter game and guard play in the past. But Stringer said that

Hawkeyes and Huskies on collision course

James says Lewis will be available

By Jim Cour
The Associated Press

SEATTLE — The Washington Huskies are counting on having tailback Greg Lewis and free safety Tommie Smith for the Rose Bowl. But Lewis, the Pacific-10 Conference rushing champion with 1,279 yards this season, may have to wear a brace on his left knee in Pasadena, Calif.

No. 8 Washington (9-2) will play No. 17 Iowa (8-3) in its first Rose Bowl appearance in nine seasons.

"There's a certain amount of weight to a brace," coach Don James said Thursday.

Lewis suffered a knee injury that required arthroscopic surgery to repair cartilage damage in Washington's next-to-last regular season game, a 25-22 loss in Seattle when the Huskies were ranked second in the nation. He missed the Huskies' regular season finale, a 55-10 victory at Washington State.

"The medical staff says he's clear to play," James said.

James said he will be cautious with Lewis in practice. He initially will hold him out of contact work.

"I don't think it would any sense for him to start banging around," James said. "We will give him a few days to get a feel for the brace and see how his leg responds."

There's a chance Lewis won't have to wear a brace. He said the final decision will be made by team doctors and Lewis.

"They may attempt to see if he can get by with a tape job to see if that would give him a sufficient amount of support," James said.

James suspended Smith and he missed the Washington State game, the last game of the season, because he did not attend a class, an infraction that also resulted in his being suspended for a game last season.

"He'll get back on the team," James said of Smith. "But we're not sure where we're going to put him."

Both Lewis and Smith are listed as starters in Washington's pre-Rose Bowl depth chart. The Huskies open their Rose Bowl practices Saturday and leave Tuesday for Los Angeles.

Beno Bryant started in place of Lewis and Shane Pahukoa started for Smith in the Washington State game.

Washington's depth chart also showed that William Doctor has been moved to first team ahead of starter Dana Hall.

"We'll throw that back in competition and take a look at it," James said.

Washington will be going to its fourth Rose Bowl in James' 16 seasons in Seattle. The Huskies were underdogs in all three previous Rose Bowls and won two of the games.

They'll be favored to beat Iowa in a rematch of the 1982 Rose Bowl game that Washington won 28-0.

"We've always felt good about being the underdog in a bowl game because that helps," James said. "So it's something we'll have to deal with. We have to spend a lot of time talking to our players about their performance level that it's going to take to have success."

James said Iowa also will be highly motivated because the Hawkeyes are being accused of backing into the Rose Bowl.

Iowa lost two of its final three games, including a 31-24 loss to Minnesota in its regular season finale. The Hawkeyes got the Big Ten Conference's Rose Bowl berth when Michigan beat Ohio State 16-13.

"There's a pride factor," James said. "We've been there. I know the effect it has on coaches and players and the determination that you get. We'll get the best that Iowa has got."

Fry will try to redeem '82 defeat

By John Shipley
The Daily Iowan

When initially informed that the University of Iowa's indoor practice facility collapsed December 3 under the weight of a heavy snowstorm, Washington football coach Don James was concerned.

"Is that right?" he asked. "They weren't working out, were they?"

But after learning that the Hawkeyes' "Bubble" collapsed at 4 a.m., an unlikely time to hold a football practice, James chuckled.

"Now they're going to have to practice outside like us," he said.

All's fair in love and Rose Bowls. Besides, what's a little ribbing between friends. James and Iowa coach Hayden Fry are good buddies, having met eight years ago when the two coaches first (and last) went head-to-head in the '82 Rose Bowl.

In fact, Fry has said that the most memorable thing about that trip to Pasadena was meeting James and his family.

"I remember Don and (his wife) Carol as being two of the nicest people I've ever met," said Fry. "Other than that, I try to wipe out those memories."

Fry has good reason to forget the rest of his first Rose Bowl. First of all, Fry was walking around with pneumonia and medicated to the point where memory becomes a quick casualty.

Secondly, and perhaps more importantly, James and his 9-2 Huskies whipped Fry's heavily-favored 8-3 Hawkeyes that day, 28-0. It was the first Rose Bowl shutout in 28 years.

"We had a fine football team and didn't fire a shot that day," said Fry, 0-2 in the Rose Bowl and 4-4 in bowl games overall.

James, on the other hand, has fared well in the granddaddy of bowl games, sporting a 2-1 record in the Rose Bowl and a very impressive 8-3 mark in bowl games as Washington's coach.

His Huskies won the 1978 Rose Bowl, 27-20 over Michigan, lost to the Wolverines 23-6 in 1981 and beat Iowa in '82.

As things stand now, Washington is a 9-point favorite to win on New Year's Day when the No. 9 Huskies play No. 18 Iowa in the 77th annual Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif.

"If you look at post-season play, the team that usually wins is the underdog," said James. "It concerns me that I hear we're going to be the favorite to win."

Both coaches are the elder statesmen in their conferences — Fry in his 12th Big Ten season and James in his 16th in the Pac-10 — and each feels either team can play with anybody on any given day.

"I've been looking at about a game a day (of the Hawkeyes on tape)," said James, who will take his team down to Pasadena December 18. "I just think when you get into the upper echelon of football — the top 20 teams — any team can play with any team. They look to me like Michigan, they look like Miami."

"I think this going to be one of the better games of all the bowl games," offered Fry.

It could've been even better. Going into the ninth week of the season, Washington was 8-1 and ranked No. 2 by the Associated Press behind Notre Dame. Iowa, hot off a 54-28 shellacking of Illinois, was 7-1 and ranked at No. 6. Each team's loss had come to a highly-ranked opponent — Iowa to eventual No. 4 Miami, Fla., and Washington to eventual No. 1 Colorado.

Had both teams kept winning, it was not unreasonable to expect that the Rose Bowl might decide who finished at No. 1 for the first time since 1978.

But such plans were quickly quashed, as both teams lost at home that very week — Iowa 27-26 to Ohio State and Washington 25-22 to UCLA.

Washington wouldn't lose again and finished the season at 9-2, 7-1. Iowa closed their season with a 31-24 loss to Minnesota at the Metrodome and finished 8-3, 6-2.

Iowa is led by junior Matt Rodgers, the 6-foot-4, 205-pound first-team All-Big Ten quarterback who threw for 2,032 yards and 14 TDs with only seven interceptions.

"I like him," observed James of the co-Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year. "I had kind of an impression from what I'd read and the way people were talking about perimeter play has been a concern for her thus far.

 "In order for the inside to be effective, the perimeter has got to control the ball," the Iowa coach said. "The perimeter offense is seriously sputtering. That's where the big question mark is."
 As a result, Stringer said she is still not settled on a permanent starting lineup for her team, and her decisions may get more complicated when UCLA transfer Molly Tideback becomes eligible on Jan.

15. Tideback was the Pac-10 Freshman of the Year in 1989.
 Stringer said it may take until January or February before all the positions and roles for her players will be decided.
 "I would think that by January we'll settle in," Stringer said. "By January and February, I know that we should have some nice depth and nice quality. We'll pretty much be settled down in terms of who's going to start."

him that he wasn't a real mobile guy. But I was really impressed with the way he moves around."
 Perhaps James was unimpressed with Rodgers' mobility because his own quarterback flat-out excels at running the ball.
 Mark Brunell, the Huskies' sophomore left-handed QB, complemented his 1,732 yards passing with 444 yards of rushing, good for second on the team and a respectable 4.2-yard average. Brunell matched his 10 TD passes with 10 rushing TDs and threw only eight interceptions.
 But despite their impressive quarterbacks, both Iowa and Washington like to run the ball, and both teams to do it very well — Iowa behind the senior tailback tandem of Nick Bell and Tony Stewart and Washington with the 1990 Doak

Walker Award winner, senior Greg Lewis.
 Lewis, the Pac-10's Offensive Player of the Year, became the first Washington tailback to record back-to-back 1,000-yard rushing seasons this year when he ran for 1,279 yards and eight TDs for a 5.6-yard average. Lewis was lost to a knee injury during the UCLA loss, but could be healthy by the Rose Bowl after successful arthroscopic surgery. Right now, James says the verdict won't be in until his teams begins practice the 15th.
 "We're really not going to know on Greg Lewis until we get back out and practice," said James. "He's got to go back out and see if he can go through the pounding."
 Iowa will counter with co-Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year and Doak Walker finalist Bell, a 6-foot-3, 255-pound tailback with a penchant for carrying defenders until they fall off. Bell gained 945 yards this season and rushed for 10 TDs. He also caught 18 passes for 223 yards and two TDs.

 "Bell bothers me because we were recruiting him at one time," said James. "When he's healthy, you look at him make moves that he probably couldn't make towards the end when he was beat-up a little bit."
 "He's not a fullback — he's a tailback type guy in a fullback's body."
 Bell's slightly smaller counterpart, Tony Stewart (6-foot-1, 209 pounds), is Iowa's all-time second leading rusher and amassed 823 yards and three TDs for a 5.5-yard average in his final season as a Hawkeye.

While each team fields excellent running games, both Iowa and Washington take pride in snuffing the run. Iowa was the only Big Ten team to allow fewer than 100 yards per game, holding opponents to a measly 2.8 yards per carry.
 Washington is even more impressive, allowing an average of 1.9 yards every time an opposing runner carries the ball.
 As far as James is concerned, all Iowa-Washington history is bunk. He feels this year's versions of the Hawkeyes and Huskies are evenly matched and that's the way he's preparing his team.
 "I see some similarities with things they've done in the past, but I'm not really going to worry about what they did in the past," James summarized. "It's this year that we've got to worry about."

'Majik' undergoes rotator cuff surgery

DI wire services
 GREEN BAY, Wis. — Green Bay Packers quarterback Don Majkowski underwent surgery Thursday to repair a torn rotator cuff in his right shoulder and will miss the remainder of the season.
 Coach Lindy Infante said surgeons who performed the operation in San Diego did not characterize the injury as career threatening, but said Majkowski would not be able to throw for at least three months and maybe six.
 Infante said the medical people are expecting leagues by a 27-9 vote on Thursday.

 The vote by the National Association of the Professional Baseball Leagues, the minor league governing body, was exactly the 75 percent minimum required for approval. Major league owners ratified the Professional Baseball Agreement on Tuesday.
 "The majors and the minors must work together to ensure the best, and most orderly, system of developing talent for big league play," National Association president Sal Artaaga said.
 "Our vote is an endorsement of that view of a relationship that dates back to the turn of the century," he said. "On the other hand, many of our teams have told me they are still deeply concerned about the bargaining process and the sweeping changes represented by the new PBA."

ISU's Bergman injured
 AMES — Iowa State's frustrating basketball season took yet another sour turn Thursday when X-rays revealed that reserve forward Mike Bergman has a broken left wrist.
 Doctors will put a cast on the wrist Friday. An Iowa State spokesman said Bergman will be out at least eight weeks, which would be most of the season.
 The 6-foot-8 freshman, who is left-handed, hurt his wrist in the first half of Iowa State's 68-62 loss at Northern Iowa on Tuesday night. He had been playing more in recent games and made two 3-point shots against Northern Iowa before getting hurt.
 The Cyclones have played the last two games without center Phil Kunz, who has a broken bone in his left hand. He could return next week.

Perry agrees to contract
 ST. LOUIS — First baseman Gerald Perry, who spent 1990 with the Kansas City Royals and then became a free agent, agreed Thursday to a three-year, $3.3 million contract with the St. Louis Cardinals.
 Perry, 30, spent his first seven major league seasons with the Atlanta Braves. He hit .254 in 133 games for Kansas City last summer and is a lifetime .267 hitter.
 General manager Dal Maxvill said Perry will back up Pedro Guerrero at first base and also fill the role of a left-handed pinch hitter.
 Denny Walling, the Cardinals' top left-handed pinch hitter the past two seasons, also is a free agent. Previously this winter, St. Louis lost left-hander Ken Dayley to the Toronto Blue Jays and outfielder Vince Coleman to the New York Mets.
Mets signs Puhl
 NEW YORK — Free agent outfielder Terry Puhl agreed to a one-year contract with the New York Mets on Thursday.
 Puhl, a .281 hitter for 14 years in the majors with Houston, batted .293 in 37 games with the Astros last season. He was troubled by shoulder problems and underwent arthroscopic surgery Aug. 27.
 "My shoulder is 100 percent now," Puhl said. "I'm already throwing and I don't anticipate any difficulties."
 Puhl is guaranteed $100,000 under the contract, but would get a $350,000 salary if he makes the opening day roster. He could make bonuses of $75,000 each for 200 and 250 plate appearances.

Sportsbriefs

a complete recovery, but radio station XTRA-AM in San Diego, quoting sources, reported that doctors did consider the injury to be potentially career threatening.
 The Packers said Dr. Gary Losse and Dr. David Flood initially were performing an arthroscopic procedure to repair an impinged nerve. But they discovered a 1 1/2-inch tear in the tendon of the rotator cuff.
 The doctors then made a separate incision to repair the tear in a 90-minute procedure.
 The rotator cuff is a group of muscles covering the shoulder joint that connects the upper arm bone to the shoulder bone. It controls shoulder rotation, a key motion to a quarterback's passing.

La. Tech: From division I-AA to bowl game

By Stephen Hawkins
The Associated Press

SHREVEPORT, La. — The road to national recognition takes Maryland and Louisiana Tech to the Independence Bowl.

The Terrapins (6-5), winners of three ACC titles in the mid-1980s, made their first postseason appearance in five years in Saturday's Independence Bowl. The Bulldogs (8-3) are in a bowl game in just their second year back in Division I-AA.

Naturally, both coaches view the game as a steppingstone.

"We will use this as a springboard," Maryland coach Joe Krivak, his contract recently extended, said. "We are not there yet, as consistent winners. Year in and year out, we play one of the toughest schedules in the nation and this team was able to accomplish its goal of a bowl game."

The Terrapins finished above .500 for the first time since 1985. And it took a 35-30 upset of then No. 8 Virginia to pull off the feat. The game against the Cavaliers was Maryland's sixth against a team ranked in the Top 25.

And when the Terps did win, it wasn't in convincing fashion: Four victories came in the final two minutes.

"This season has been like a roller coaster," Krivak said. "But the critical thing is our players hung in there and stayed close enough in every game to be able to make those big late plays."

Krivak wants the Terps to return to days when a postseason trip was almost automatic. Maryland, making its 17th bowl appearance, played in six consecutive bowl games in the mid-1970s, and in 11 bowls from 1973 to 1985.

Losing three games by four points and tying Penn State, Maryland finished 3-7-1 a year ago — its worst record since back-to-back 2-9 seasons in 1970 and 1971.

Louisiana Tech, best known for having Terry Bradshaw as its quarterback in the late 1960s, made the postseason only after Baylor turned down an Independence Bowl invite and several SEC teams suffered late-season losses.

Tech, located in nearby Ruston, returned to Division I-AA last season after 13 years in Division II and I-AA. They've been to the Independence Bowl twice before.

"The bowl game is a big step for our program as far as moving back into Division I," said Tech coach Joe Raymond Peace. "We have tried to sell that we have a solid football team and a winning tradition and would be where we are given time."

In 1988, the Bulldogs played eight Division I opponents and finished 4-7, and last year were 5-4-1, even though they had seven road games.

Tech, which has won five straight, dropped its three games by a total of 18 points.

Iowa swimmers head south

Wodjat will compete for his native Poland

By Michael Watkins
The Daily Iowan

The holiday season is known to be the time of year when it is better to give than to receive. And the Iowa men's and women's swimming and diving teams will be giving of themselves this break — sacrificing their time in the midwestern winter weather for a training period in Florida and Hawaii.

The men's team, 4-1 on the season and ranked 10th in the latest national polls, will be braving the 80-plus temperatures in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida. Meanwhile, the women's squad, 19th ourselves for the Big Ten Championships and the NCAA's."

While in Florida, the men's squad will be training and competing in the Edward Kennedy East-West Meet against over 40 teams nationwide. But they'll be doing so without the contributions of national and Big Ten champion Artur Wodjat, who will be swimming for his native Poland at the World Championships in Perth, Australia.

Wodjat, the bronze medalist in the 200-meter freestyle at the 1988 Seoul Olympics, will be facing stiff competition in Italy's Giorgio Lamberti, the current world record holder in the 200 free, and Germany's Uwe Dassler, who placed second to American Dan Jorgensen two weeks ago in the same event at the U.S. Open Championships in Indianapolis, Ind.

Wodjat is also expected to be challenged by Sweden's Anders Holmertz and Germany's Stefan Pfeiffer, as well as fellow Polish national teammate Mariusz Podkoscielny.

"Artur will be competing against some of the world's best swimmers in both the 200 and 400 freestyle events," Draper said. "We all think he's got a great shot at both races, especially the 400."

For the women's team, Kennedy hopes that training in Hawaii will not only provide an opportunity to compete in the Rainbow Invitational against the likes of defending Big Ten champion Michigan, Arizona State, and Wisconsin, who the Hawkeyes defeated 182-117 in a dual meet earlier this season. It will also give them enough practice to ready themselves for meets scheduled later in the week.

"The Rainbow Invitational is always a great meet," Kennedy said. "It's a lot of fun and several swimmers from outside the collegiate ranks as well as the country come and compete, so there is a lot of variety in the competition."

Following the invitational, the Hawkeyes will face Villanova and the University of Hawaii in dual meet competition, a situation Kennedy forecasts as being both beneficial and challenging for the team.

"Villanova has just activated the current Canadian breaststroke champion which will make them really strong," Kennedy said. "Because of the depth in their freestyle speed, their relays should be pretty good as well, which will make us work that much harder."

"(Hawaii coach) Horton wasn't too strong last season, but he has picked up some good Scandinavian swimmers this year which should make the team tougher. I'm looking forward to a really fun meet."

Men's Swimming

nationally and 5-1-1 in dual meet action, are headed for the tropical trade winds of Hawaii.

Both teams are geared towards intense training in order to get ready for the remainder of the season, as well as toward swimming against some of the nation's toughest collegiate competition.

"This will by far be our hardest training of the season," said men's assistant coach Rich Draper. "This is our big push for the upcoming Big Ten's and NCAA's. Our goal is to get the guys into the best physical shape possible for the rest of the year."

"This is our opportunity to really concentrate on training," said women's head coach Peter Kennedy. "We'll have 10 or 11 days of really intense training to prepare

Big East needs football buddies

By Ross Sneyd
The Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — The Big East Conference, long known as a basketball powerhouse, said Thursday it would add football next fall and was courting four eastern schools to join the four already playing at the major college level.

Meetings would be held next month with Rutgers, Temple, Virginia Tech and West Virginia "to discuss potential membership in the Big East only in the sport of football," the conference said in a statement.

The Big East's current four Division I-AA football schools — Syracuse, Pittsburgh, Boston College and new member Miami — agreed in an eight-hour meeting Wednesday to add football to the conference's 17 sports.

Commissioner Michael Tranghese said in an interview that he was confident the Big East would be able to work out agreements with the four additional schools.

The Big East needs only two of the four for an NCAA-regulation conference. Tranghese, who said he had "absolutely no intention of going out and searching" for other schools, expected to land at least two.

"Obviously the fact that we're inviting them in is a good sign," he said. "We could play with six, we could play with seven, we could play with eight."

Virginia Tech president James McComas said his school looked forward to next month's talks.

"The Big East is well known for nationally recognized institutions with which we have much in common, and we look forward to exploring with them this exciting possibility," he said.

Temple athletic director Charles Theokas said it was significant that the Big East was limiting its talks to just four schools.

Detmer adds Maxwell to his trophy cabinet

By Ralph Bernstein
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — The Maxwell Award is the latest piece of hardware Ty Detmer has been awarded.

Detmer, who this year led Brigham Young to a Holiday Bowl appearance against Texas A&M, has broken two NCAA passing and total offense records.

The junior signal caller, who was honored on Dec. 6 with the Heisman Trophy as the year's outstanding college player, beat the competition for the Maxwell Award.

In a vote of 878 coaches, members of the media and fans, Detmer finished with 1,993 points to 1,385 for Notre Dame running back Raghib "Rocket" Ismail. Colorado running back Eric Bieniemy had 747 and Virginia quarterback Shawn Moore 431. Detmer was named on 830 ballots and received 47 percent of the first-place ballots in the 3-2-1 voting.

Ballots are sent to members of the American Football Coaches Association, the Football Writers Association of America and the nearly 1,000 members of the Maxwell Football Club.

Detmer repeated his intention to return to Brigham Young for his senior year and let the NFL wait until after he graduates.

"First of all I made a commitment to the school and I believe in living up to that," Detmer said. "I'm just enjoying school right now. I don't think I'm ready to go on my own yet. There is no reason for me to leave right now."

Detmer's statement was reminiscent of the two juniors, quarterback Andre Ware of Houston and running back Barry Sanders of Ohio State, who uttered similar words after winning the previous two Heisman Trophies. They insisted they were going back to school for their senior year, but both changed their mind and are with the Detroit Lions.

"I've never seen a kid throw the ball more accurately," said former Philadelphia Eagles coach Dick Vermeil.

Grapplers to face three weeks ranked at No. 2

By Jay Nanda
The Daily Iowan

After being bumped from the top spot of the latest Amateur Wrestling News poll, the Iowa Hawkeyes will spend the next month trying to regain the No. 1 ranking against some of the other top teams in the country.

The No. 2 Hawkeyes (9-0) are in the midst of a three-week layoff, but will return to the mat at the Midlands Open in Evanston, Ill., Dec. 29-30. The Midlands is a non-scoring meet that will not only serve as a warmup for their home-opener, but will also give Hawkeyes such as Doug Streicher a chance to work his way back into the starting lineup.

Streicher began the season as the No. 2 ranked 150-pounder but due to an intrasquad loss to teammate Terry Steiner earlier in the year, he has seen limited action.

Following the Midlands, Iowa will finally get a chance to wrestle in Carver-Hawkeye Arena, as they host Purdue and North Carolina State at 7:30 p.m. on Jan. 4.

The Hawkeyes hold a 25-4-3 advantage in the series versus the Boilermakers, including the last 11 in a row. However, the Hawkeyes have wrestled Purdue only twice in Coach Dan Gable's 14-year career at Iowa. Iowa has won both of those meets.

As for the Wolfpack, they don't return any all-Americans and don't figure to be much of a challenge.

'90 films discussed — sort of

Steve,
I feel it's only fair to warn you that the following column really stinks. No, I know I've said that before, but this time I really mean it; this one reeks. It's been a long two weeks and I really have been too busy with finals and all that stuff to really put together a semi-coherent, even mildly amusing piece. (Notice I've put spaces between all the paragraphs to make it seem longer.) If it's at all possible, I highly suggest replacing it with some AP wire story about the New Kids. See? Even this pre-column cop-out feels trite and clichéd. I'm very sorry about all this and I promise to work harder in 1991. Thank you for your understanding.

— Locke

"Man, just make 'Darkman' No. 1 and lose the rest of this junk."

8) "The Freshman." Sayeth the Goons: "Oh man, 'The Freshman' sucked!"

7) "Pump up the Volume." "John, rub my head for luck — I think we can score some smack tonight!" bubbled Morehouse.

6) "Miami Blues." "Speaking of smack, did Corey Feldman make any films lately?" responded Shipley, his beady, rodent-like eyes all aglow with holiday cheer.

5) "Glory." "Didn't Gerrit Graham make any movies this year? Oh, yeah: 'Child's Play 2.' Put that on the list!" insisted the Glimmer Twins.

4) "GoodFellas." Interjected the Boys of Winter, "Hey, what about that one where Arnold Schwarzenegger put his finger up his nose and into his brain?"

3) "The Cook, the Thief, His Wife &

Her Lover." "How can you just ignore Kirstie Alley like that? What about 'Madhouse' and 'Sibling Rivalry'?" whined the Lit Majors-turned Gridiron Hacks.

2) "Cinema Paradiso." "Cinema

"Witches"! I saw that! It rocked!"

Paradiso?" cried the Sweaty Hoard of Two, "Isn't that a foreign film? I hate subtitles! If I want to read I'll take People magazine to the crapper!"

1) "Henry V." The Wisened Wizards of Wine, Women and Word-play ask "Isn't that 'Henry and June V, Portrait of the Ever-Popular Tortured Artist as a Young Serial Killer Elite'?"

Other jewels of wit and wisdom the Surly Sporty Ones uttered:

"You aren't really gonna put that stuff about the crapper in there, are you?"

"When's the Simpsons movie gonna come out?"

"You know this is like something Cahoy would have written, isn't it?"

"No, not enough mentions of REO Speedwagon and Stephen King."

"Arnie, reach for my leg and hand it to me. I think I've got a keeper!"

"God, I hope my girlfriend doesn't read this."

"God, I hope my wife does read this — she never reads anything I write."

"Can we go drink yet?"

I'm trying desperately to write my Top 10 Films of the Year column, but the Sports Guys, Shipley and Morehouse, are standing over my shoulder, bugging the living hell out of me, saying things like, "How come you got 'Miami Blues' and not 'Tremors'! Fred Ward's an actor's actor!"

In the face of such harassment I did manage to get some sort of list together. So here they are, my favorite films of the past year, qualified by the fact that several films I really wanted to see didn't get here ("Miller's Crossing," "The Krays" and "Witches," to name a few.)

"Witches"! I saw that! It rocked!" taunted one of the Box Score Buffoons.

10) "Darkman." To which the Dual-Headed Jock Strap replied,

Man blows nose into hamburger

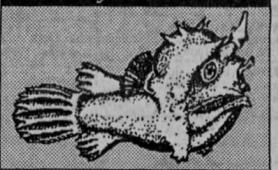

The Associated Press

PHOENIX — Jack in the Box pulled its radio and TV ads in Phoenix and is trying to keep a low profile after one of its cooks was arrested on suspicion of blowing his nose into a hamburger he served to a policeman.

The man, George Juan Kuehme, 20, was fired after the incident Monday.

Jack in the Box corporate spokeswoman Jan McLane Rieger said Wednesday that the fast-food chain withdrew its broadcast commercials because of bad publicity, including "jokes being made on various radio stations."

Tales of the Bizarre

She said the ads would not resume for two weeks in the area, where there are 78 Jack in the Box franchises.

Police said Kuehme, an employee for less than a week at a Phoenix Jack in the Box, blew his nose onto one of the burgers two police officers had ordered at the drive-up window.

One officer, Gary Underhill, had taken three bites from his sandwich when he noticed something wrong, police said.

Kuehme is alleged to have told a co-worker, "That's what the cop gets."

He was booked on suspicion of aggravated assault, adding a harmful substance to food and disorderly conduct.

Rieger said a second, unidentified employee was fired over the incident. She said the company apologized to Underhill and contributed $2,000 to a police fund.

Hawkeye Profile: Moses Santos

Iowa defensive end ready to face Huskies

By Michael Watkins
The Daily Iowan

Now that the Iowa Hawkeyes have captured a share of the Big Ten Championship and secured a berth in the Rose Bowl, they all have swelled heads and big mouths — right? Not according to Iowa defensive end Moses Santos.

"All season long, our goal has been to win the Big Ten and make it to the Rose Bowl," said Santos, a 6-foot-3, 273-pound junior out of Hempstead, N.Y. "As far as Washington is concerned, they are an excellent team and we all realize that it's going to take a strong team effort to defeat a team of the caliber of Washington — not words. They didn't get where they are by doing nothing."

But though the Hawkeyes' performance in the Rose Bowl is near the top of his priority list, Santos, a physical education major, didn't agree to come and play for Iowa simply because of the football program. He came to Iowa City for the same reason most students come here — to get an education.

"I liked the college setting and it's an excellent place to go to school," Santos said. "As far as academics are concerned, when I came here to visit, they (coaching staff) emphasized them and how important they are."

"And of course, there's Iowa's winning tradition. Coming from a winning program (his high school finished 27-1-2 during the three years he started), I wanted to continue to be associated with that. So, I figured that Iowa would be an excellent place to combine both of those aspects of school — athletics and academics."

Following off-season recuperation from a foot injury he sustained last year in the second game of the season, much of this season has been successful for Santos — that is, until he suffered knee and ankle injuries early in Iowa's 27-26 loss to Ohio State. But to Santos, who's main concern is "the team," waiting on the sidelines has always been worse than the injury itself.

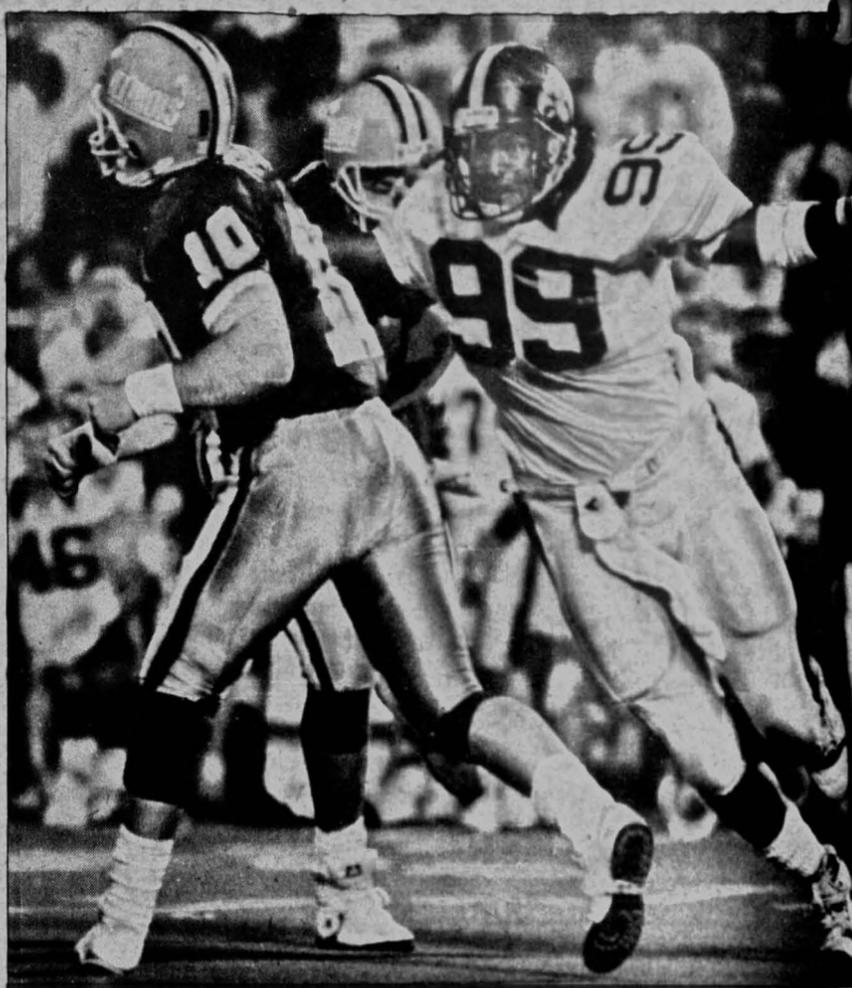

"When you're injured, it's very painful to sit and watch knowing that you aren't able to contribute to the team," Santos said. "A lot of the time, you're reduced to nothing more than a sideline cheerleader."

"It was very difficult for me to watch the team struggle knowing that there was nothing I could do about it, especially in the games this season against Ohio State and Minnesota. All you can really do is strive to get better so you can eventually help the team."

Although the entire 1990 campaign has been the highlight of his college career, Santos considers the second game season to be his personal best.

"This season against Iowa State was my best game of the season and would have to be what I consider my best game (ever)," said native of the Dominican Republic. "I had the most tackles in the game, including a sack in which the quarterback fumbled the ball."

"From a team standpoint, I'd have to say that the Illinois game was our best because we were able to put everything together on both sides of the ball — defensively and offensively."

Illinois quarterback Jason Verduzco releases the ball just as Iowa defensive end Moses Santos pounces. The Hawkeye defense held the Illini to just 16 yards rushing.

"I'm not really surprised, though, I'm just glad that we were able to stick together like we did. I always knew that we had the potential to do it."

Although his high school athletic endeavors included competing in the 400-meter run and the shot put in track and field as well as playing on the school lacrosse team, Santos' love in sports has always been defensive football.

"Although my main goal on the field is to stop the other team from scoring, I think sacking the quarterback is the ultimate," said Santos, who recorded 80 tackles and seven sacks his senior year at Hempstead. "It's fun to do."

Santos attributes a lot of the tactics and energy he exerts on the field to the standards set by the one person he idolizes most in football — New York Giants' linebacker Lawrence Taylor.

"I really admire his intensity, attitude toward the game, and the physical ability that he brings to the game," Santos said. "He's always ready to make the big play."

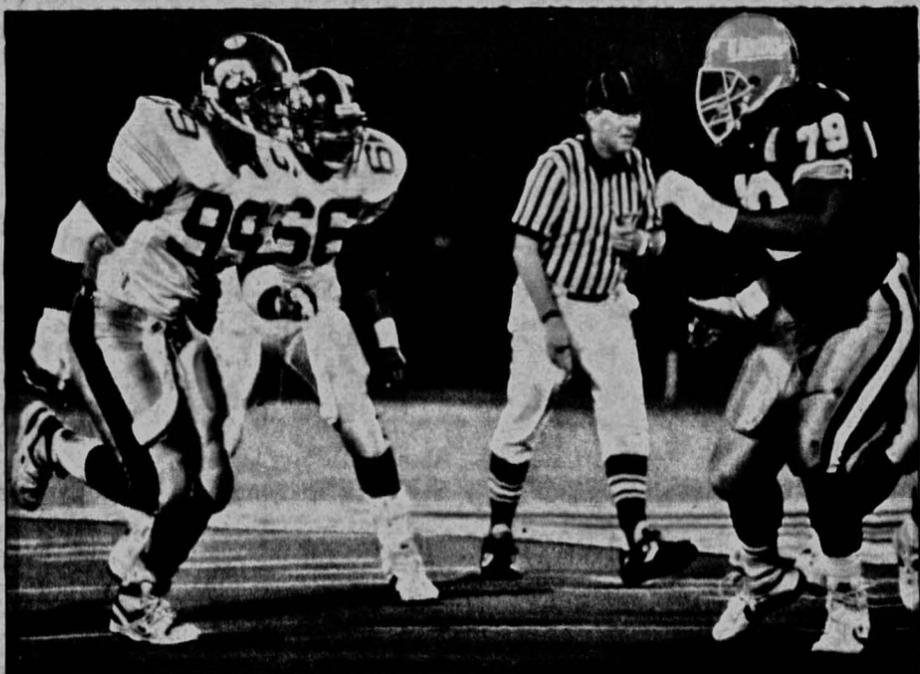

As far as what the future holds for Santos, he doesn't know. He does, however, have a game plan already set for next year, and it involves a lot more than just getting himself ready for the football season. He's looking toward the long haul — preparing for the rest of his life.

"My goal for next year is to just complete my classes and get my degree and graduate," Santos said, "because that was my major goal in coming to college. I just want to come out and give it my best effort."

"As far as eventually turning pro, that is pretty much the goal of everyone in college football. Right now, though, my most important goal is to just finish and graduate

Hawkeye Profile: Marvin Lampkin

Running back leaves 'jail cell' for Kinnick

By Jay Nanda

The Daily Iowan

Spending time in a state penitentiary is not something many people would laugh about or take pride in. But for Hawkeye running back Marvin Lampkin, doing time on an East St. Louis, Ill., football field wasn't just fun — it was "great."

No, Lampkin and the rest of the inmates didn't rob and pillage innocent bystanders during their high school days.

The only slaughtering they did was on the football fields throughout

"It was great," Lampkin said of his experience as a Flyer. "Sometimes I think it's probably more unbelievable than people may believe."

However, like many athletes, the man they call "Scooter" has gone from being the mainstay of a high school football offense, to a third-string tailback at a major university.

But Lampkin is the first to admit it isn't all that bad when the two guys ahead of him are Nick Bell and Tony Stewart. In fact, he's even picked up a few pointers from the two seniors.

"Hopefully I'll just continue to improve and pick up where they (senior tailbacks Nick Bell and Tony Stewart) left off. Hopefully, I might even be better than they were."

Marvin Lampkin

Illinois. At Senior High School in East St. Louis, football wasn't only an extra-curricular activity, it was a way of life — even if some newspapers called Senior High's field a "jail cell."

"It was," Lampkin agrees. "Being an inner-city team, I think it was kind of intimidating for some teams from the suburbs to come down there and play. We took a lot of pride in it, just like we take a lot of pride playing in Kinnick, here."

But that intimidation was not limited to Parson's Field, home of the Flyers.

Lampkin and the rest of his team also took their menacing act on the road, becoming not only Illinois' most fearsome high school football team for several years, but was also counted among the nation's elite.

Lampkin was only one cog in the Flyers' machine, but he was an important one at that. He currently holds East St. Louis' record for yards rushing (3,048) and he scored 49 touchdowns in his career.

During his sophomore season, Lampkin scored 13 touchdowns in leading the Flyers to not only the state championship, but also the No. 1 ranking in America.

He followed that up by scoring another 13 touchdowns his junior year and as a senior, Lampkin rushed for 1,936 yards (a 9.0 average) and 23 touchdowns. That year, the Flyers claimed second in the state with a 13-1 mark.

Then the awards came in — Super Prep first team, honorable mention all-American by USA Today and St. Louis Post-Dispatch Player of the Year. And to top it all off, Lampkin was an honor student.

"With Tony, it's his determination and Nick, the way he just conquers opposing tacklers. It's a variety of things."

Lampkin, in only his sophomore season, knows he will have a lot more to say with his actions on the field in the next two seasons once Bell and Stewart graduate. And Coach Hayden Fry knows it too.

"Hopefully I'll just continue to improve and pick up where they left off," Lampkin said. "Hopefully, I might even be better than they were."

Lampkin has rushed for 161 yards on 38 carries this season, the longest of his runs being a 15-yarder in a 38-9 win over Purdue. But Fry says he's been slowed by that old bugaboo known as injuries.

"He's been wounded all year. He's had hamstring, groin pull and when we've called on him, he's done a real good job. Had he been healthy, he would have gotten a lot more playing time this year. (Next year) he'll either be number one or number two at the running back position. He's an exciting football player."

Excitement is something Lampkin generated at East St. Louis and according to the Hawkeye running back, if it weren't for Flyer Coach Bob Shannon, he may have been doing his scootin' somewhere other than Iowa.

"Coach Shannon is probably the best coach and probably one of the best persons I've ever been associated with. He instilled a lot of qualities in me that I treasure today and as far as the football aspect of it, the things I've learned from him carry over to now."

"He left it up to me," Lampkin said of the influence Shannon had on him to become a Hawkeye, "but he pointed out things such as how I would fit into their offense, and my strong points."

Lampkin, who has rushed for three touchdowns this season, has shown he can fit into the Hawkeye system fairly well in his young career. He also knows it could all end in a flash.

"We all know football is a thing that can be taken away from you within seconds," he said. "My mother (Marianne) has been very instrumental in making sure I have the grades and that I realize football is a momentary aspect of life. Also, realizing that that degree I should receive, I will have forever."

Lampkin, who is majoring in accounting at Iowa, said he is working towards becoming a CPA and has set his sights towards a position as CEO. But he adds there's

"It would mean so much," Lampkin said of the satisfaction such a victory would bring. "It's like a national championship for me all over again."

college." But first, Santos will concentrate on the Washington Huskies, Iowa's opponent in the Rose Bowl. Particularly Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Year, Husky tailback Greg Lewis. However, Santos anticipates a diverse Husky attack — one in which a single player cannot be looked upon as the entire team.

"I think that because Washington is a strong team all-around, you just can't key on one or two people," Santos said, "because then someone else may come along and surprise you like Eric Ball did to the Hawkeyes in the '86 Rose Bowl."

The 1991 Rose Bowl

Hawkeyes provide activity for winter break

By David Taylor
The Daily Iowan

For many people the Christmas and New Year's Day holidays are not what they're made out to be.

A month away from the pressure of classes and nagging instructors is certainly a bonus for most everyone, but add to that the stress of buying gifts on an already tight budget for people you don't really like, plus family commitments of the most gut-wrenching nature.

Throw in the ever present holiday tradition of socializing with hometown people you would sooner strangle, and it does not paint a very pretty picture of yuletide spirit.

However, the resurgence of the Iowa football team this season has arrived to help ease the burden of holiday blues. The Rose Bowl is quite an added incentive for holiday celebrating, and a victory on January 1 would raise the spirits of all but the most cold-hearted Hawkeye fans.

And for the lucky students actually going to the Granddaddy of them all, this Christmas vacation could have enough fun and excitement for two holiday breaks.

"I've been looking forward to this since the Michigan game," said Dave Ketchmark, a junior from Portage, Mich. "As soon as I found out we were going for sure, I got plane tickets, parade passes and hotel reservations. We got the whole plan and it should be a great time in Pasadena."

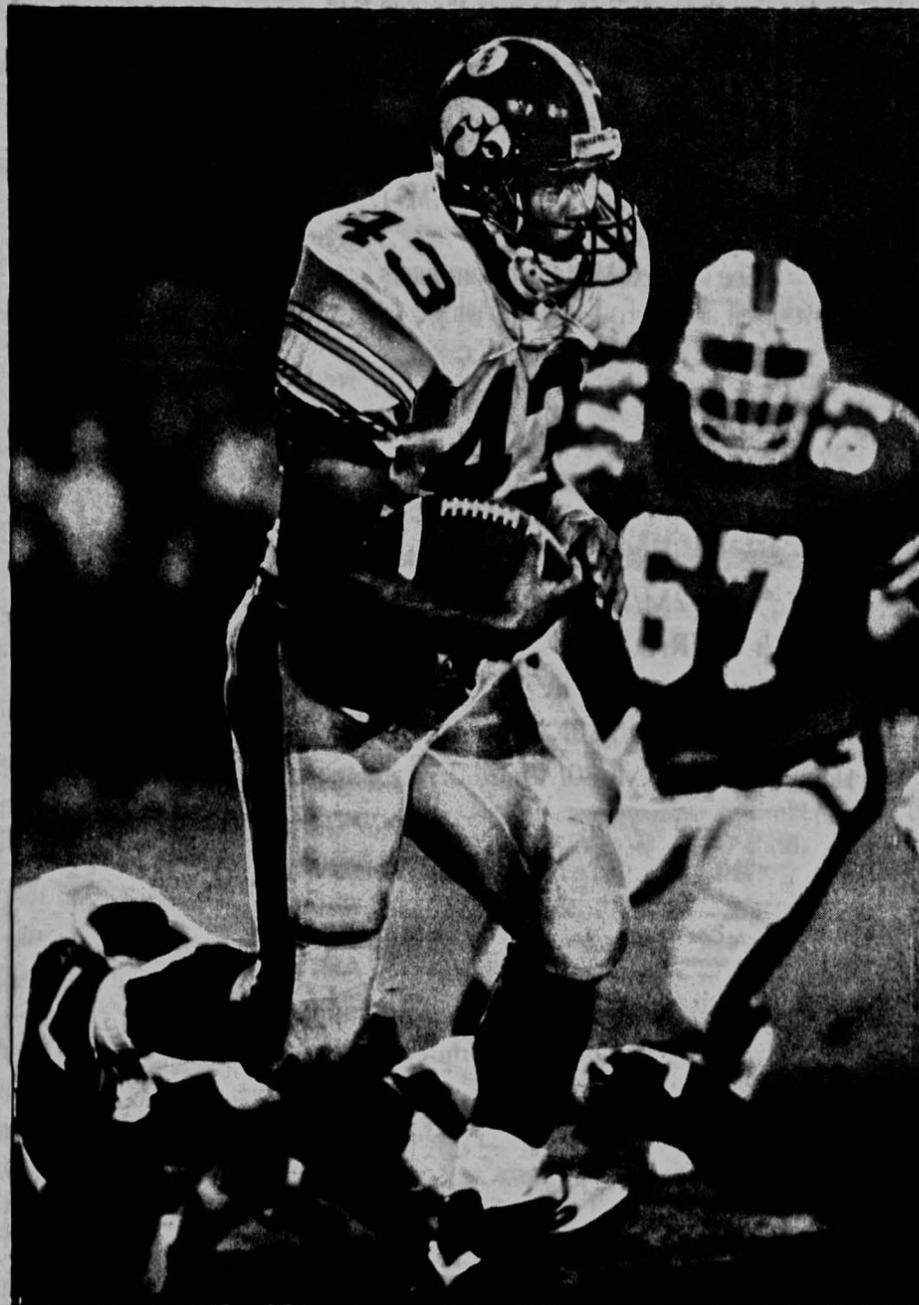

Many students have followed the same course of action as Ketchmark, but some began making plans even earlier than the Michigan game.

Angie Wagner, a sophomore from Waterloo, made plane reservations in the middle of September and has other reasons for going to California besides the Rose Bowl.

"I'm going to visit my friend in Mission Viejo first," Wagner said. "And then another friend that goes to the University of Washington is meeting us out there, and we're all going to party together."

Iowa fans got into the Rose Bowl spirit at a game at Kinnick Stadium earlier this season.

The outlandish ticket prices at airports in Des Moines, Cedar Rapids and Chicago have caused more than one student to consider alternative methods of transportation.

Driving, whether in a caravan of vehicles or with a couple of friends you can stand for more than one hour is a popular choice, although the savings might not be worth the trouble that can be encountered on such a voyage.

Bad weather, car breakdowns and personality conflicts with other passengers can make a fun drive through the country look like something from National Lampoon's Vacation. If you do choose this option, make sure the car you drive is not called a "family truckster."

An almost forgotten mode of cross-country traveling, the Amtrack train, is another possibility. Again, saving money is the primary concern here, but the scenic drive and the train's bar car might be worth checking out for those interested.

And finally, for those on the brink of financial ruin but absolutely must see the game, there is one more option — the Greyhound bus.

Perhaps the ultimate transportation system, the going rate for Iowa to California on one of these beauties is $68, just like the commercial says. Possible problems include anyone riding for over 1,000 miles with a screaming baby, or people that attach themselves to you like a magnet, with an overwhelming urge to assure you that they "usually travel first-class on an airline."

Of course not everyone is able to accompany the Hawkeyes to Pasadena, but that needn't spoil the good time.

One student who will be watching from afar is Michele Schaeperkoetter, a sophomore from Des Moines.

"You need to get a lot of people together and have a party at the same time for something like this," said Schaeperkoetter. "It's always better if there are more people watching and having a good time with you."

"This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," added junior Mike Wertz. "There is no way I would miss seeing the game."

Although it may seem hard to believe, there are some fans out there who have not made any big plans concerning the Rose Bowl.

For these unlucky types, a variety of places will be showing the game on television, and one can wander down to the nearest neighborhood watering hole to at least watch the game in companionship other than Mom and Dad.

Generally, this is the most sought-after method of escaping the house, even though the people one is apt to find at these neighborhood establishments are usually of the most obnoxious persuasion imaginable, especially when viewing Iowa football games, much less the Rose Bowl.

"I am heading down to the bars that morning to watch all the bowl games, and I'm not leaving until after the last one is over," said junior John Weber.

Parties, private or public, also have a way of intensifying the bowl day fun. Many public get-togethers are organized by Hawkeye booster associations of some sort, and the private, in-house kind usually attract their share of Hawk extremists.

Iowa quarterback Matt Rodgers was named first-team all-Big Ten by the coaches and the media after a stellar junior year. The coaches also tabbed him conference offensive player of the year with fellow Hawkeye Nick Bell and Michigan's Jon Vaughn.

Iowa vs. Washington Preview

Fry, James prepare for '82 Rose Bowl rematch

By John Shipley
The Daily Iowan

When initially informed that the University of Iowa's indoor practice facility collapsed December 3 under the weight of a heavy snowstorm, Washington football coach Don James was concerned.

"Is that right?" he asked. "They weren't working out, were they?"

But after learning that the Hawkeyes' "Bubble" collapsed at 4 a.m., an unlikely time to hold a football practice, James chuckled.

"Now they're going to have to practice outside like us," he said.

All's fair in love and Rose Bowls. Besides, what's a little ribbing between friends. James and Iowa coach Hayden Fry are good buddies, having met eight years ago when the two coaches first (and last) went head-to-head in the '82 Rose Bowl.

In fact, Fry has said that the most memorable thing about that trip to Pasadena was meeting James and his family.

"I remember Don and (his wife) Carol as being two of the nicest people I've ever met," said Fry. "Other than that, I try to wipe out those memories."

Fry has good reason to forget the rest of his first Rose Bowl. First of all, Fry was walking around with pneumonia and medicated to the point where memory becomes a quick casualty.

Secondly, and perhaps more importantly, James and his 9-2 Huskies whipped Fry's heavily-favored 8-3 Hawkeyes that day, 28-0. It was the first Rose Bowl shutout in 28 years.

"We had a fine football team and didn't fire a shot that day," said Fry.

Four years later Fry brought his most impressive team into the Rose Bowl to face UCLA. His 1985-86 Hawkeyes were 10-1 and featured Heisman runner-up Chuck Long at quarterback and All-American Ronnie Harmon at tailback. But again, Iowa succumbed to its Pac-10 rival, this time doomed by turnovers in a 45-28 loss.

"We lost both of them and we don't feel good about that," assessed Fry, 0-2 in the Rose Bowl and 4-4 in bowl games overall at Iowa.

James, on the other hand, has fared well in the granddaddy of bowl games, sporting a 2-1 record in the Rose Bowl and a very impressive 8-3 mark in bowl games as Washington's coach.

His Huskies won the 1978 Rose Bowl, 27-20 over Michigan, lost to the Wolverines 23-6 in 1981 and beat Iowa in '82.

As things stand now, Washington is a 9-point favorite to win on New Year's Day when the No. 9 Huskies play No. 18 Iowa in the 76th annual Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif.

"If you look at post-season play, the team that usually wins is the underdog," said James. "It concerns me that I hear we're going to be the favorite to win."

Both coaches are the elder statesmen in their conferences — Fry in his 12th Big Ten season and James in his 16th in the Pac-10 — and each feels either team can play with anybody on any given day.

"I've been looking at about a game a day (of the Hawkeyes on tape)," said James, who will take his team down to Pasadena December 18. "I just think when you get into the upper echelon of football — the top 20 teams — any team can play with any team. They look to me like Michigan, they look like Miami."

"I think this going to be one of the better games of all the bowl

Iowa Hawkeyes football coach Hayden Fry

The Daily Iowan/Andy Scott

games," offered Fry.

Iowa is led by junior Matt Rodgers, the 6-foot-4, 205-pound first-team All-Big Ten quarterback who threw for 2,032 yards and 14 TDs with only seven interceptions.

"I like him," observed James of the co-Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year. "I had kind of an impression from what I'd read and the way people were talking about him that he wasn't a real mobile guy. But I was really impressed with the way he moves around."

Perhaps James was unimpressed with Rodgers' mobility because his own quarterback flat-out excels at running the ball.

Mark Brunell, the Huskies' sophomore left-handed QB, complemented his 1,732 yards passing with 444 yards of rushing, good for second on the team and a respectable 4.2-yard average.

But despite their impressive quarterbacks, both Iowa and Washington like to run the ball, and both teams to do it very well — Iowa behind the senior tailback tandem of Nick Bell and Tony Stewart and Washington with the 1990 Doak Walker Award winner, senior Greg Lewis.

Lewis, the Pac-10's Offensive Player of the Year, became the first Washington tailback to record back-to-back 1,000-yard rushing seasons this year when he ran for 1,279 yards and eight TDs for a 5.6-yard average. Lewis was lost to a knee injury during the UCLA loss, but could be healthy by the Rose Bowl after successful arthroscopic surgery. Right now, James says the verdict won't be in until his teams begins practice the 15th.

"We're really not going to know on Greg Lewis until we get back out and practice," said James. "He's got to go back out and see if he can go through the pounding."

Iowa will counter with co-Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year and Doak Walker finalist Bell, a 6-foot-3, 255-pound tailback with a penchant for carrying defenders until they fall off. Bell gained 945 yards this season and rushed for 10 TDs. He also caught 18 passes for 223 yards and two TDs.

"Bell bothers me because we were recruiting him at one time," said James. "When he's healthy, you look at him make moves that he probably couldn't make towards the end when he was beat-up a little bit."

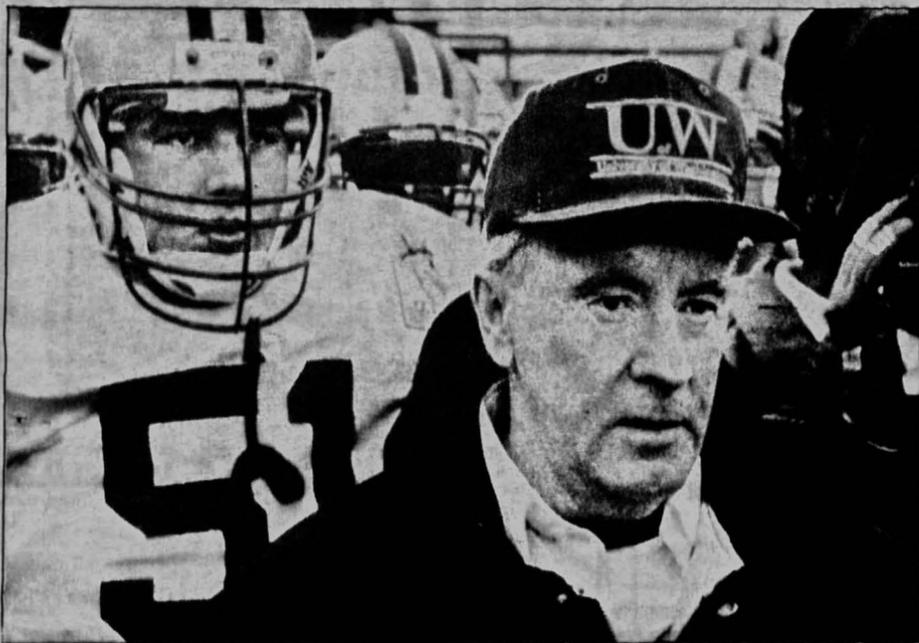

Bell's slightly smaller counterpart, Tony Stewart (6-foot-1, 209 pounds), holds the all-time Iowa rushing mark and amassed 823 yards and three TDs for a 5.5-yard average in his final season as a Hawkeye.

While each team fields excellent running games, both Iowa and Washington take pride in snuffing the run. Iowa was the only Big Ten team to allow fewer than 100 yards per game, holding opponents to a measly 2.8 yards per carry.

Washington is even more impressive, allowing an average of 1.9 yards every time an opposing runner carries the ball.

As far as James is concerned, all Iowa-Washington history is bunk. He feels this year's versions of the Hawkeyes and Huskies are evenly matched and that's the way he's preparing his team.

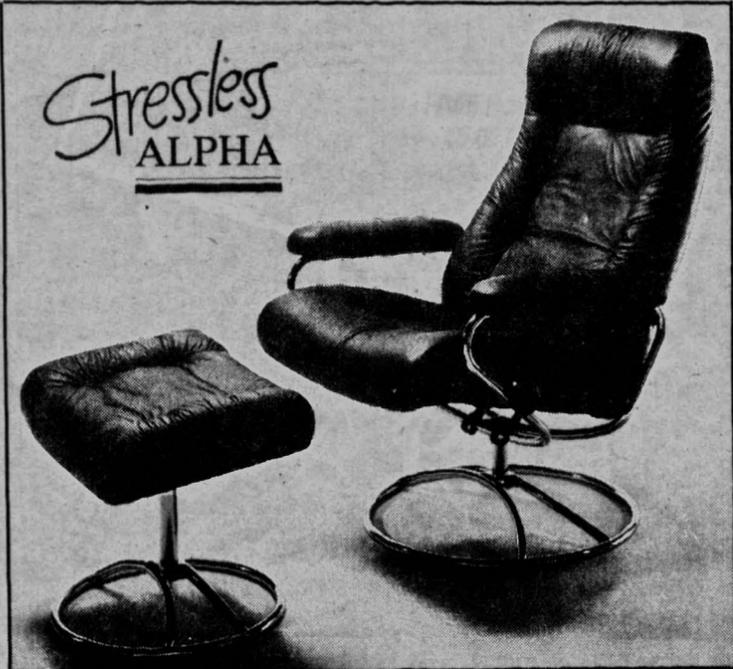

"I see some similarities with things they've done in the past, but I'm not really going to worry about what they did in the past," James summarized. "It's this year that we've got to worry about."

1990 Season Recap

A time to remember for proud Hawkeye team

By Erica Weiland
The Daily Iowan

On January 1, 1991, the Iowa football players will enter the Rose Bowl like they've come onto many other fields this season — holding hands and walking tall with their heads held high.

There may be mountains in the background and a warm, California sun in the sky, but the team will be the same one that stepped onto the Kinnick Stadium grass Sept. 15.

The 1990 Iowa football team is a proud squad, in spite of ending the season in a four-way tie for first place in the Big Ten with two losses and "backing into" the Rose Bowl berth.

After finishing 5-6 last season and not being invited to any bowl game for the first time since 1980, the Hawkeyes had nothing to lose. And going into the 1990 season, they knew it.

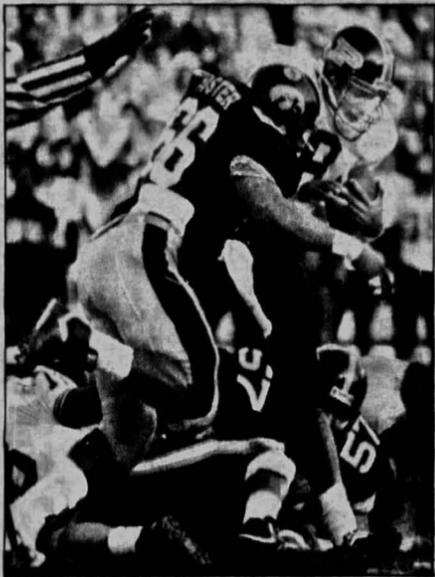

"The sky's the limit for us," senior linebacker Melvin Foster said at the football media in August. "We're the underdogs. That's fine. I love being the underdog. When my back is against the wall, that's when I come out fighting."

But even with belief that the team would be improved and hopes of the conference championship, many of the Hawkeyes weren't expecting to accomplish as much as they did.

"It's hard to think you're going to the Rose Bowl when you're ranked 70th in the nation (in the preseason)," said junior kicker Jeff Skillett. "I really don't think anyone expected us to go to the Rose Bowl. We would have been happy with just making it to a bowl game. I didn't expect that big a turnaround."

"It was definitely a goal (to go to the Rose Bowl), but I was realistically hoping for seven wins," backup quarterback Jim Hartlieb said. "I thought that would be a realistic goal. As it turned out, maybe we should have shot a little higher."

The Hawkeyes opened their season with a 63-10 victory over Cincinnati. But given the Bearcats' 1-9-1 record from the year before, many people didn't credit the Iowa squad.

The Daily Iowan/David Greedy

The next week, Iowa took a 45-35 win from intrastate archrival Iowa State. But it was much the same song as the victory was tainted by injuries to the Cyclones' star running back, Blaise Bryant, and quarterback Chris Pedersen.

Then the Hawkeyes found themselves heading into a matchup with the defending national champion Miami Hurricanes at the Orange Bowl that nobody thought they would win.

They didn't.

But for three quarters they stayed close to the Hurricanes, trailing by only three points with 8:29 left in the third quarter.

Despite a 48-21 final score, the game opened the eyes of many people and gave the Hawkeyes encouragement that would carry them into the Big Ten season.

According to some players, the only way the loss hurt the team was in that they knew they could defeat the Hurricanes, but watched it slip through their fingers.

"It was a case of going up against a good team and being able to compete with them," Iowa defensive end Moses Santos said. "The final score was not indicative of the game. It was a real confidence booster. Later on there was no stopping us. We had worked so hard. We weren't willing to give up what we had worked for."

Just one week later, the Iowa football team rolled into — and over — Michigan State in East Lansing.

Avenging a 17-17 tie, resulting from a field goal at Spartan Stadium two years ago that Skillett and Fry still insist was good, the Hawkeyes defeated the Spartans 12-9.

And for the first time in quite a while, the Iowa squad did the Hokey Pokey in the locker room, signifying that the win was a big one.

"It's been a long time since we did the Hokey Pokey in the dressing room after the game," Fry said in a post-game interview. "We save that for the big victories."

But the team that later would be referred to as the "dancing fools" by Sports Illustrated and later as the "Big Ten's most-feared road warriors" by ESPN, didn't stop there.

After beating Wisconsin 30-10 at Kinnick Stadium, the Hawkeyes hit the road to take on Michigan in Ann Arbor.

When the dust cleared on Oct. 20, the Hawkeyes stood with a 24-23 win over the Wolverines and a glint of roses in some of happy eyes.

"After the Michigan win, after winning on the road twice against good opponents, I said, 'Hey, I think we've got something here,'" Hartlieb said.

Talk of the Rose Bowl began surfacing in the media. And Fry, usually the first one to quiet such discussions, couldn't hold back his excitement.

"Can you believe two times in Michigan in the same year?" the coach said after the game. "Whoeee! First time ever, the first time an Iowa football team has ever beaten both Michigan and

The Daily Iowan/David Greedy

Hawkeye fans stormed the field and took down the uprights after Iowa beat Purdue 38-9 in the last home game of the 1990 season.

Michigan State on the road in the same year."

For Fry and his squad, the enthusiasm would only grow as they knocked off Northwestern 56-14 in Iowa City, then proceeded to Champaign, Ill., the next weekend to face — and defeat — the feared Fighting Illini.

The 54-28 thrashing of the then-top team in the conference came on the same day that Washington clinched the Rose Bowl bid for the Pac-10. And with Iowa needing just two victories out of its three remaining games to represent the Big Ten in the "Granddaddy of Bowl Games," talk of a 1982 Rose Bowl rematch was heard.

"Going into the Illinois game, we knew we had to win to have a chance to go to the Rose Bowl," Skillett said. "After the game, the light started shining a little brighter — to say the least."

The next week, however, the light dimmed as Iowa lost a heartbreaker at home to Ohio State, 27-26. At the same time, Washington was upset by UCLA, bidding adieu to all hopes of the Rose Bowl deciding the national championship.

But in the Big Ten, the Run for the Roses was the hot topic. And despite the loss, Iowa was still in the driver's seat. And Fry still believed in his team.

"We're still in first place; we're still in line for the Rose Bowl," the coach said after the loss. "All we have to do is win our next two games, and we'll go to the Rose Bowl."

"We've got a lot of sad young men up there (in the locker room), and they're hurting. . . . The normal thing to do would be to fold our tents and go to hell. But we didn't get to be first in the Big Ten with those kinds of people."

"The loss to Ohio State in my mind as well as in the minds of others, was a fluke," Skillett said. "That was just one of those games where nothing went our way."

A week later, the Hawkeyes rebounded, squashing Purdue 38-9 at Kinnick Stadium. But that could be the end of the regular-season glory for Fry's team.

Just one week later, at the Metrodome in Minneapolis, the Hawkeyes lost 31-24 to Minnesota.

Iowa was still awarded the Rose Bowl berth after Michigan defeated Ohio State in the last seconds of their game in Columbus, Ohio. But there were no smiling faces in the tunnel after the game.

"The only positive thing (about the loss) is that not many teams can lose the last game as still go to the Rose Bowl," Skillett said.

But Hartlieb said he doesn't think the two conference losses will hurt the Hawkeyes when they face the Huskies on January 1.

"They (the losses) were both heart-breaking," he said. "But you always have your ups and downs. I don't see us falling off from a performance standpoint."

On January 1, 1991, the Iowa football players will enter the Rose Bowl like they've come onto many other fields this season — holding hands and walking tall with their heads held high.

And whether they win or lose, the 1990 Iowa Hawkeyes can be proud of what they accomplished this season.

The team that was 5-6 last year snuck up on the Big Ten — and the country — made believers out of hardline cynics and proved that Iowa and Coach Fry was still a winning combination.

"Nobody really knew how good the team was (before the season began)," Santos said. "But we gained confidence in ourselves and found out that we are a good team and had talent."

"We always believed in ourselves. We just had to go out there and do it."
