A DYING TRADITION?

By Sara Langenberg
The Daily Iowan

Marketing memories — that's Kara Kennedy's job. But overwhelming student apathy and a harrowing $30,000 deficit might stand in the way of her plans.

She's the editor of the Hawkeye yearbook — a century-old tradition of capturing the people, ideas and events that shape the UI campus every year. This year, Kennedy's had to contend with a war, a recession and a trip to the Rose Bowl.

But the tradition is dying. Only 800 of the 1991 books have been sold — down from about 3,500 five years ago — and a $32,900 debt makes it unlikely that the tradition will be allowed to continue beyond this year.

Dean of Students Phillip Jones has charged the yearbook with breaking even on this year's book or there won't be another one.

Problems date back 20 years
The Hawkeye's history of problems began in the 1970s when the book folded for six years.

Until 1972, the book was run by Student Publications Inc., which now oversees The Daily Iowan. Financial support from student fees guaranteed a free book for graduating seniors.

But according to Gene Dieken, the Hawkeye's design editor in 1972, students of that generation lost interest in the yearbook because they didn't feel it represented their values.

"It was the end of the '60s, and people were into alternatives and doing their own thing," Dieken said. "Yearbooks kind of represented the establishment. I think people just got turned away from it."

Financial problems may have also contributed to the book's demise, he added. "They weren't making money. I don't think they were losing vast amounts of money, but they weren't making it."

SPI gave up the venture and for the next six years, there was no Hawkeye yearbook. Then, in 1978, a group of students decided to start the book up again and turned to the student government for help.

"The student government gave them some seed money for it to start up, a board of governors was appointed and they were given space," Jones said. "But the book was supposed to support itself."

Advertising revenue and book sales constitute almost all of the yearbook's income. But according to Jones, this income has not always been enough to pay the book's expenses. A $30,000 deficit was discovered in the yearbook's accounts about five years ago.

That might explain why the yearbook's price jumped from $19 in 1986 to $31.25 in 1989. This year, it costs $29 because Kennedy wanted to "keep it under the $30 mark."

Also this year, the yearbook requested about $4,000 in supplemental funding from the student government to update its computer system.

But Jones said the student government isn't anxious to support the yearbook now and never has been.

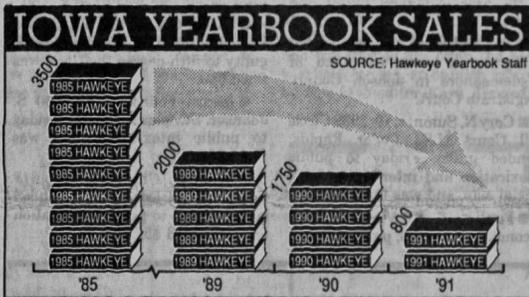

"If you look at (the budget) over the past 10 years, most years the yearbook did not get additional funding," he said. "It has not been underwritten by student government while student government has helped it get started."

"Sit on your own bottom"
According to a March 21, 1991, memo from Jones to Kelly Soukup, the yearbook's financial adviser in the Office of Campus Programs, last year's book may add $8,000 to the already existing debt.

"At this point, the budget projections seem inconsistent with the budget plan," he wrote. "The anticipated cost for the book was listed as $30,480.85 and your correspondence to me indicates that the actual cost may be as high as $39,861 (with $31,005 available in the 1990 account for the yearbook).

"For the time being, no actions may be taken with respect to continuing the yearbook for next year," it ended.

"There is sufficient evidence to show that the enterprise cannot support itself," Jones said last week. "The yearbook has to 'sit on its own bottom' — it has to generate enough income to pay expenses. I have made it very clear that the basis for continuing is meeting costs or we will not have that publication next year."

Soukup said the deficit will grow by $6,000 to $8,000 at the end of this fiscal year because of the 1990 yearbook. As a result, the 1991 yearbook staff has worked out an arrangement with the publisher to reduce its specifications until the book is affordable.

"We will produce only what we can afford, which may result in radical changes in the book," he said. "It may mean that we'll have to cut the number of pages or won't be able to use color, or it may mean that the cover stock will be of a lesser quality — we'll do whatever we have to do to get our book in under budget."

Big Ten yearbooks report similar trend

By Sara Langenberg
The Daily Iowan

Tradition and innovative marketing are keeping a few yearbooks in the Big Ten alive, but the UI's Hawkeye yearbook is not alone in its struggle to survive economic problems and student apathy.

Across the nation, college yearbook staffs are running into students like Erica Rottner, a UI sophomore from Amana who says she won't buy a yearbook this year — or when she's a senior.

"It's not like a high-school yearbook when you see yourself in the pictures and know all the people," Rottner said.

Richard Johns, who serves on the UI yearbook's Board of Governors, said many colleges are finding it difficult to sell their product to such a diverse market.

"The trend from what we hear at other universities is that there are similar problems at other schools," Johns said. "The books that are still solvent are well-established traditions, mainly in southern universities."

In the Big Ten, at least three yearbooks are facing dire straits. The University of Minnesota no longer has a book, while the UI and Ohio State University are struggling with $30,000 deficits and apathetic students.

There are nearly twice as many students at Ohio State as there are at the UI, but Ohio State's yearbook staff has only been able to sell about 300 books this year, according to managing editor Julie Knight.

"I don't think we sold over 500 books last year, and that was one of the best years we've had since 1985," she said. "I almost think there's a trend going on with college students — a lot of students are taking five or six years to graduate, and there are a lot more non-traditional students. It's almost as though the traditional student is leaving, so the demand for yearbooks in general is just going down."

2 charged in weekend burglaries

By Joleen Mahaffey
The Daily Iowan

Ten burglaries occurred in Iowa City on May 4, primarily within the 300 to 500 blocks of South Dodge and South Lucas streets.

Car stereos and audio equipment in motor vehicles were the primary targets for all but one of the burglaries. The other burglary occurred at Carlos O'Kelly's, 1411 Waterfront Drive.

Saturday afternoon one of the complainants, who earlier reported that her car had been burglarized, recontacted the police department, reporting that she had just seen a juvenile male carry a ball bat that had been stolen from her car, according to Police Chief Patrick Harney.

The description led to the locating of the juvenile, who then informed police of the two adult males who had committed the burglaries, police records state.

Keith N. Lynch, 20, 420 S. Lucas St., Apt. 5, consented to the police search of his residence and personal vehicle, according to police records. The search resulted in the seizure of five car stereos, three radar detectors and other miscellaneous property

Troops expand zone, prepare to move Kurds home

By John Daniszewski
The Associated Press

ZAKHO, Iraq — Allied troops expanded their security zone in northern Iraq again Monday to prepare to move up to 200,000 Iraqi refugees home from mountain camps in a huge truck convoy, officials said.

Army Maj. Gen. Jay Garner said the military would rent dozens of Iraqi trucks to move Kurds now living along the Turkish border. He said he hoped the move could be completed within two weeks.

The security zone established to protect returning Kurds was expanded 30 miles east, toward the Iranian border, when French, British, U.S. and Italian airborne troops landed in the town of Suriya, Garner said.

The expansion will help the return of refugees from remote camps in eastern Turkey, he said. It was the third time the coalition has expanded the protected zone. Garner said he expected it to be the last.

He denied there had been any decision for the allies to occupy the Iraqi-controlled city of Dohuk, where many of the refugees lived before they fled Saddam Hussein's crackdown on the Kurdish rebellion that followed the gulf war.

Dohuk, once home to 380,000 people, is under the control of Iraqi troops, and allied forces stopped about three miles short of the city on Sunday, Garner said. Allied commanders said then that the

IC residents organize relief efforts to assist Mideast refugees

By James Arnold
The Daily Iowan

Some Iowa City residents have responded to the plight of the Middle Eastern refugees through the organization of local relief efforts.

Mideast Civilian Relief is collecting blankets, children's clothing, diapers, travel soap dishes and towels to be sent to Iraqi refugees in Turkey and Iran.

Group organizer Kim Yaman said the items they are collecting are not considered vital aid, but are needed.

"We contacted (relief groups) and found some things that were needed," she said. "These aren't the vital needs, but these things will definitely be ... of great help to them."

The group, formed in conjunction with Women Against War, has organized several such relief efforts since the outbreak of war in January.

"We have been working on this since Jan. 16," she said. "In February we facilitated fundraising efforts and asked people to send funds through the Red Cross."

She said the group's other drives resulted in a water distillation unit for refugees in Jordan, in addition to the donation of a half-ton of supplies.

"The situation is overwhelmingly large and overwhelmingly tragic," she said. "We are doing it because it can be done."

Yaman said the local relief effort is being conducted in cooperation with current international aid going to the Kurds in northern Iraq and other areas.

"This feeds right into the international relief efforts that are going on, not just in Iraq, but in Turkey and Iran," she said.

Yaman said the effort will continue for as long as the community supports it, or until there is no longer a need for aid. But she said the need will remain for quite some time.

"With two and a half million refugees, you are talking about a long-term effort," she said. "So this community-based effort is necessary, and we need to keep working on it for a long period of time."

Donations for the Mideast Relief Drive are being accepted at Econofoods, 1987 Broadway St., and New Pioneer Co-op, 22 S. Van Buren St. The drive continues through May 12.

"We try to coordinate our drives to meet the time the ships are leaving," she said. "Also, we are a very small group so we have limited resources."

decision to take Dohuk was imminent.

Lt. Col. Gary Goff, an operations officer under Garner, confirmed Monday that Kurdish leaders had asked the allies to take control of Dohuk, but he said that decision will have to be made at a level higher than the military.

Goff said the security zone in northern Iraq now was 120 miles wide and 30 miles deep, reaching from the Turkish border to north of Dohuk.

In other developments Monday: U.N. spokesman Majed Fayad said in Kuwait City that United Nations peacekeepers were fully deployed at 15 observation posts along the 120-mile-long Iraq-Kuwait border. U.S. Army Lt. Col. John Kalb said 2,400 troops from the 3rd Armored Division — the last American troops in southern Iraq — would withdraw Tuesday. The Americans have been policing the area and operating refugee camps since Iraq's defeat in the war.

Ron Waldman of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control said cholera has been confirmed at the Cukurca camp in Turkey, but officials weren't certain of how many refugees have died of the disease.

Iraq lifted censorship rules imposed on foreign journalists at the start of the war.

Kurdish leaders arrived in Baghdad to resume talks begun last month on their demands for an autonomous region in northern Iraq.

Between 450,000 and 800,000 Kurds fled to the mountains separating Iraq and Turkey in March to escape Saddam's crackdown. Another 1.5 million went to the Iranian border.

Since then, thousands of refugees have died of cold, hunger and disease in squalid mountain camps.

An estimated 30,000 have returned home, most after allied troops moved into northern Iraq to protect them. Garner said many others are stranded in the mountains because of a lack of transportation.

He said the huge transportation operation — known as Operation Gallant Provider — should begin within days.

The military is renting dozens of Turkish and Iraqi trucks to transport people. The most feeble of the refugees will be taken home by helicopter, Garner said. Military mechanics will fix and refuel cars

Iowa Mennonite Relief Sale planned in IC

May 24 and 25 are the dates set this year for the Iowa Mennonite Relief Sale at the Johnson County Fairgrounds, South Riverside Drive. Festivities begin at 3 p.m. May 24 and end May 25 at 3 p.m.

Attractions for the two days include food and craft shops, fish and barbecued chicken dinner, a livestock auction, gospel music, a general auction, and a breakfast/brunch. Many items have been donated by local craftsmen and others. A long-time Mennonite tradition of quilting will also be featured, with approximately 150 handmade quilts to be displayed and auctioned.

Another feature of the fair will be Selfhelp crafts. Selfhelp is a non-profit marketing program which sells handcrafted items by needy people in developing nations. The program is one of many of the Mennonite Central Committee, the relief and service agency of the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches.

May declared student voter registration month

The month of May has been proclaimed High School Voter Registration Month by Gov. Terry Branstad.

Secretary of State Elaine Baxter said 1991 marks the 20th anniversary of the 26th Amendment to the Constitution, which lowered the voting age from 21 to 18 years of age.

Because of the downward spiral of voter participation by the 18- to 24-year-old age group, Baxter has recently focused on proposing legislation and introducing new programs which concentrate on this political problem.

The Iowa Association of County

Auditors will be conducting voter registration drives during the month of May in high schools across the state.

Budget battle f

The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Legislators Monday began to "kiss heads" in budget negotiations aimed at ending this year's session before the week is over. Suggestions to revamp state's income tax structure among the first items to be discarded.

Gov. Terry Branstad said he cleared the decks for session ending budget negotiations.

He said ending the session been simplified because legislators have gotten the message that a tax increase won't be of a budget plan.

"A lot of people were looking a way out, figuring a major increase would eventually be agreed on," Branstad said in a news conference.

"As that option becomes attractive, then I think they're seriously looking at the spend side," he said.

"We've finally reached that point of decision making," the governor said.

As lawmakers gaveled into session, Senate Majority Leader Hutchins, D-Audubon, counted the differences among legislators.

"We don't have that many differences," Hutchins said. "We have to sit down and knock heads and come together."

Hutchins said the income revamp "is gone" and a special committee will be named to potential changes in the income tax.

Branstad's comments came as the Legislature opened its most hopeful will be final. Expense payments to legislators ran out Friday, which will be the end of the session.

He said ending the session has been simplified because legislators have gotten the message that a tax increase won't be part of a budget plan.

"A lot of people were looking for a way out, figuring a major tax increase would eventually be agreed on," Branstad said at a news conference.

"As that option becomes less attractive, then I think they have to seriously look at the spending side," he said.

"We've finally reached that point of decision making," the governor said.

As lawmakers gavelled into session, Senate Majority Leader Bill Hutchins, D-Audubon, discounted the differences among legislators.

"We don't have that many differences," Hutchins said. "We just have to sit down and knock heads and come together."

Hutchins said the income tax revamp "is gone" and a special committee will be named to study potential changes in the interim.

Branstad's comments came as the Legislature opened what most hope will be its final week. Expense payments to legislators ran out Friday, which will hurry the end of the session.

Though most hoped to end the session this week, the two major issues faced by lawmakers — writing a budget and approving a redistricting plan — have yet to be approved.

The redistricting plan is eligible for debate Tuesday, though the timing was unclear.

"This week, I have tried to reduce my schedule somewhat so I have more time available to meet with legislators," Branstad said. "I will have time available just about every day this week."

Branstad said one budget option may be "contingencies that would be available" for cuts to be made after the session ends.

Those would be a pro-rated list of spending cuts to be made throughout the summer if the state's budget woes continue. There's a projected $250 million deficit in next year's budget.

In past years when times were better, lawmakers have approved contingency lists of projects to be approved if the money is available and the package Branstad proposed would mirror that.

One thing he made clear was a salary package won by unionized state workers will not be fully funded, one of the last major sticking points in budget talks.

An arbitrator awarded union workers pay raises ranging from 9 percent to 19 percent, at an annual tab of as much as $50 million.

"Clearly, we can't afford this 9 percent to 19 percent salary increase," Branstad said. "We're going to try to get something reasonable."

Hutchins said Republicans and Democrats in the Legislature have settled on a $34 million pay package to be discussed with the governor.

Yearbook: A dying tradition?

other student organizations on campus.

"One of the biggest things is that a lot of people on The Daily Iowan are getting paid, and they get all this money and we get cut and cut and cut," she said. "With a newspaper you get every day, you're not going to save it. With a book, it's concise, it's consolidated and there's a piece of everything that happened that year."

Kennedy may have a reason to be concerned. She works on the book 20 hours a week during "slow" weeks and 30 to 40 hours a week before deadlines, which come about five times a year. She has a 12-member editorial staff whose combined annual income is less than $7,500 and 35 staff writers and photographers who work for free. She has two computers — one without a hard drive — and office space smaller than a single-occupancy dormitory room. She earns less than $200 a month.

But these aren't the only challenges this 22-year-old marketing major from Davenport has had to face. Because book sales are "at an all-time low," Kennedy has cut 60 pages from the originally planned size for the book. And when she created the budget for this year, she cut salaries by 9.1 percent.

She is also faced with trying to sell a yearbook on a college campus with 28,000 students amid apathy and an economic recession.

"I don't understand why nothing works," Kennedy said. "Very few people realize the importance of a yearbook — what it's going to mean to them in a few years."

"There's a lot of stuff we could do but don't have the money to spend toward marketing," she added. "So many people think 'Oh, I'll never get in the book, there's 28,000 students on campus.'"

Kim Dykshorn, the book's People editor, is in charge of compiling senior portraits.

"It's really hard," Dykshorn said. "So far I've only gotten about 700, and I think there's about 2,000 (graduating seniors). People say 'Why should I buy a yearbook if I'm not going to be in it?' — that's the basic attitude."

"It's a dying tradition," Kennedy concluded. "Universities are getting bigger, and people don't feel it's necessary to have a yearbook to remember over the years."

Pursuing other avenues
Kennedy said she's pursuing other avenues to ensure a book will be produced next year, including going back to Student Publications Inc. for support.

Soukup said it's too early to tell whether or not there will be a book next year because there is still time to sell more books and advertising. The yearbook staff is now tentatively recruiting people to fill unpaid positions for next year's book. He also hopes SPI will want no financial support from the university, she added.

But three other Big Ten universities — Indiana, Purdue and Illinois — seem to be beating the downward trend with some innovative marketing schemes.

At Indiana University, book sales went from 4,800 last year to 5,400 this year. Arbutus adviser David Adams said the staff was forced to take a "whole different marketing approach" in order to make the increase.

"We were in a general state of decline until we revamped things and started trying to get more student pictures in the book," Adams said. "It used to be a senior-only book, but we realized that if you have more people in the book, more people will buy it."

"The big challenge is to find out who the potential people are who want to buy the book and make sure the book is something they want to buy," he added. "Good reporting and covering events which are very specific to that year sell the book better than any of those fancy gimmicks like color and graphics."

Adams said members of sororities and fraternities are often the best yearbook buyers, an opinion echoed by Hawkeye editor Kara Kennedy.

"Very few people realize the importance of a yearbook — what it's going to mean to them in a few years."

Kara Kennedy
1991 Hawkeye editor

to rejuvenate their participation with the yearbook.

Through it all, Kennedy still says the book will be mailed out to students in August — "do or die."

"There are times when I wish I could just quit because of all the problems," she said. "If you could spend a year with (assistant editor Beth Gillies) or I, you would wonder why we do it.

"I want this university to have a yearbook. It's not a personal thing as such, but at a campus this size and this respectable, students should have something to look back on. After college is over people will realize it would have been nice to have something to remember the year with."

"(Greeks) do buy a lot of books because they're the ones in a lot of the organizations," she said.

"In the past, we've gotten several letters complaining 'Your book is about 3,500 books and pulled in a $15,000 profit this year. Debris ("don't ask what it stands for") editor Brian Erler said the book does not accept advertising but accumulates a lot of income by requiring residence halls, sororities and fraternities to pay $125 a page for coverage in the yearbook. Residence halls typically buy six pages.

In return, the organizations get one free book, he said.

Erler said this system is also a good way to publicize the book because "students see other students with the yearbook so they automatically think that it's something they should do."

Greg Carney, editor of the University of Illinois Ilio, said their book sales have been steady for the past five years. This year nearly 5,800 books were sold, more than at any other college contacted.

"We have a good history of support for the yearbook," he said. "This is the 98th edition, so we've been around just about as long as the university, and many people feel it's a vital part of spending four years here."

Carney said most of his sales are to freshmen and seniors, but the staff's marketing efforts are focused on parents — "usually the ones to fork over the bucks."

MFN TRADE STATUS

'The China Syndrome'

China remains a quandary for U.S. presidents. Economically, China represents an enormous, untapped market, one which could pay large dividends to potential investors in the next century. Politically, however, it is an outlaw, a country that refuses to grant basic human rights to its citizens. During the next month, President Bush must decide whether to renew China's most favored nation trade status. While China is certainly a powerful and important international player, the president should not allow expediency to interfere with his stated commitment to human rights. China must prove it is serious about reform before the United States treats it with the consideration afforded to nations that respect human dignity.

The United States can choose with whom to trade, and human rights should be considered when making this decision.

For many years, President Bush has been an ardent supporter of close relations between China and the United States. Even after the Tiananmen Square massacre, Bush strained to preserve a carefully managed relationship with Beijing. President Bush points to China's acquiescence during the gulf crisis as validation of his past policies, but his critics argue that the president's support for the communist regime in China extends far beyond a rational interpretation of events in that country. In particular, many in Congress feel that China must adopt major reforms before the United States renews most favored nation status.

Complaints about Chinese policy center around three different issues. First, China has proven to be an unreliable business partner. According to The Wall Street Journal, "[China] poaches technology and trademarks, treats copyrights and patents casually, and maintains a tightly restricted home market." In essence, China abides by international trade agreements only when it is convenient to do so.

Second, China exports weapons of mass destruction to Third World countries. Chinese missile systems continue to turn up in countries like Iran and Iraq. Currently, China is planning to sell similar weapons to Pakistan. In addition, China has been implicated in the sale of a nuclear reactor to Algeria.

Third, China's record on human rights is dismal. While the rest of the world moves toward a more enlightened view on the rights of the individual, China clings to an archaic system of oppression and fear to control the Chinese people. Of course, the Chinese government believes this is an internal matter and therefore of no consequence to other nations, but the United States can choose with whom to trade, and human rights should be considered when making this decision.

If China had indicated an interest in political reform, the question of whether to extend most favored nation status would be much more difficult. Unfortunately, however, the Chinese government has repeatedly demonstrated its indifference for political and human rights. One hopes that President Bush will not display a similar indifference when determining the future of China's trading status.

Free trade nets bonus for U.S.

In one of their most shortsighted moves in recent memory, a coalition of labor unions and environmental groups weighed in against granting fast track authority to President Bush in negotiating a free trade agreement with Mexico.

The fast track legislation comes up for a vote in Congress later this month and commits the Congress to a closed-rule vote on any free trade pact with Mexico submitted by the president. That is, if Congress votes for the fast track authority, when the negotiated trade agreement comes before it in a year or so, members will not be able to amend the proposal; they can only vote the agreement up or down as a whole.

Of course, Congress can rescind this authority at any time during the negotiations, so it holds a sort of hammer over the president's head. Nonetheless, the prospects of this occurring are slim: The U.S. negotiating team includes representatives of Congress so member input is concurrent with negotiation. Also, rescinding the authority would injure not only this agreement with Mexico, but other countries would be less willing to negotiate trade agreements with the United States in the future if, after painstaking negotiation, the Congress essentially could rewrite the entire agreement. In fact, fast track authority began in reaction to European protests after the Congress amended an agreement to death in the '60s.

Fast track authority means that if legislators object to a portion of the agreement, they must weigh the cost of voting the measure down against the total benefits of the package. And it is unlikely that the president would negotiate a package that is not, on balance, good for the country.

That is what the unions and some environmental groups are worried about: They fear that their interests might be ignored if Congress can't amend a free trade pact with Mexico; they fear that legislators will vote for the nation's good as a whole (which free trade advances in terms of lower prices for everybody and greater efficiency) and not for their interests.

The unions' main objection is the prospect of jobs going south of the border. To be sure, jobs will go south of the border — that's because labor is cheaper in Mexico. (And the fact that nasty capitalists want to hire cheaper labor for the same job is no more unjust than choosing the cheaper loaf of bread at a grocery store: We're all profit maximizers.)

Nonetheless, since the government imposed the tariffs in the first place, and so induced American workers to go into jobs which use fact that a richer Mexico will better guarantee political stability in that country.)

There is little doubt that a trade agreement with Mexico will be a net plus for U.S. labor. Unions do a disservice to U.S. workers by opposing the agreement.

The case of the environmentalists against the agreement is scarcely more persuasive. Environmentalists argue that an industrializing Mexico will cause lots of additional pollution.

Note first the sad state of priorities: The position of U.S. environmentalists is that our nation should keep other nations poor in order to keep the air pretty for us. Of course, we can't help it if we had already industrialized before we understood the impact of pollution.

Aside from the fact that Bush has committed himself to negotiating anti-pollution measures with Mexico similar to those in the United States — which would ensure that Mexico pollutes less as it industrializes than if there were no free trade agreement — there is insufficient evidence of environmental damage to condemn Mexico's poor to another generation of grinding poverty.

To wit, the recent massive and comprehensive study of acid rain which found that its asserted industrial cause is a bugaboo; and scientists don't have the foggiest idea whether the earth is really heating up (or cooling down) and whether this is a result of industrialization.

If there ever was a policy worth supporting, it is a free trade agreement with Mexico. The possibility of a free trade zone from the arctic down to the Yucatan is a rare opportunity of immense importance for the people of Mexico as well as for those of the United States. Bush's strategy is the most prudent balance of environmental concern, concern for the future welfare of U.S. workers and the desire to make life a little better for citizens of the United States and Mexico.

their skills inefficiently, we do have an obligation to mitigate the costs of moving into and training for new occupations. But President Bush has already agreed to such measures.

Ironically, organized labor is also one of the most vocal proponents of immigration restrictions; that is, preventing foreign workers from coming over here and "taking American jobs." The irony is that we have massive illegal immigration from Mexico to the United States because of the higher paying jobs here: With the free trade agreement, wage rates in Mexico will increase and induce putative immigrants to stay there and work rather than crossing the border.

Besides, in future years there is little question that a wealthier Mexico will create jobs in the United States, and hence increase wages, because richer countries buy more American exports than do poor countries. (Let alone the

Rape is crime of violence, power

To the Editor:

It is incredibly disturbing to me that The Daily Iowan could run a front-page article called "Rape" ["Despite society's new views, problems in sexuality remain," April 29] during Sexual Assault Awareness Month without showing any awareness whatsoever that rape is a crime of violence and an act of power primarily directed against women. Howard Ruppel and Georgeanna Hoffman, experts quoted in the article, describe rape as resulting from "a lot of miscommunication between the sexes" and "confusion over sex roles," respectively. Words like "subtle," "compromise," "negotiating," "ambivalence," litter this article and circulate the discursive garbage that rape is simply a "problem" of sexual relations and that if women would just say no real nicely to men or do a little collective bargaining with them then they won't get raped.

If you don't think rape is about unequal power relations then why is it that 95 percent of those who sexually assault are men and 96 percent of those assaulted are women and children? We live in a culture where women's and children's voices are routinely silenced, erased, ignored; we live in a society where women and children already say no to their rapists loudly and clearly, over and over again. To deny that reality perpetuates the misogynist notion that the millions of women and children who have been raped and will be raped were and are responsible for the crime committed against them. To deny that reality denies women's experience in an unsafe world where we must watch over our shoulders for violent men — as we go for a walk, find our parked car, select a book from the library stacks, go to the restroom, sit in a doctor's office, read in bed, go on a date, go to a professor's office, sleep at home, wait for a bus, start a friendship, get married, visit the frat house, stay in the dorms — as we live. I'm not writing about paranoia or "problems in sexuality"; I'm talking about survival and the violent reality of rape.

'American Psycho' lacks morality, humor; sends Easton to bank

To the Editor:

Reading Steve Cruse's review of "American Psycho" ["Of Thoughts," "Psycho," Madame and the Stones," April 24], I was not only amazed by his comments on the novel, but also of his ignorance of the so-called "target audience" (he says anyone under 30) it has. In other words, Cruse, is it that this book is aimed to amuse this particular audience because they will really understand where Bret Ellis is "coming from" as his protagonist violently exploits women, Jews and homosexuals? Cruse says this novel is "pretty rockin'" and "will give you a comforting sense that you've attained a mastery of . . . something." Trash perhaps? For some reason I find dissecting men, women and children, rape, gorging the eyes out of homeless men, luring a rat inside of a woman, torturing dogs and cooking intestines for dinner neither rockin' nor comforting. I find it beyond the limits of disgust. If this is the kind of book Cruse thinks an audience under the age of 30 will find amusing or get excited about then I am worried. I've read a lot of books, and none of them come near to the literal crap that is displayed in this novel. It's no surprise that not one magazine would print a part of the manuscript and that it took so long to get published. No one wanted to come near it! And Cruse, what's this Bret Ellis moralizing? Oh please. If this book is a critique of the morals and mores of the last decade, then I'd like to know where I've been. "American Psycho" is not moral, amusing nor artistic. Instead it is an offensive and over-hyped book which unfortunately because of curious little-boy critics like Cruse is sending Mr. Ellis straight to the bank.

Congrats to Residence Life staff

To the Editor:

I happened to be at Daum Hall on Saturday immediately following the fire that destroyed a student room. While it is horrible that William Lounsbury was forced to jump from the window in his room, I know that we are all thankful that he had the presence of mind to do so in the face of life-threatening danger.

There are others who deserve to be commended for their response as well, most notably the Residence Life staffs of Daum, Currier/Stanley and Burge Halls. Resident assistants and professional staff from all of these buildings responded promptly, assisting with evacuation of residents and contacting emergency personnel. Tim Feld, the RA on third floor Daum, deserves special thanks for accurately appraising the seriousness of the situation and responding appropriately.

At a time when the university is being scrutinized and found lacking in several areas, it is reassuring to know that the Residence Life staff is trained and prepared to respond to emergencies with efficiency and professionalism. They deserve our gratitude and respect.

Chairman favors departmental merger

To the Editor:

The recent viewpoint by Teri Camery ["UI lacking in ecological education," April 26] was an interesting piece but misspoke on a couple of details. First, I do not believe the proposed merger between the biology and botany departments was intended to increase the focus on molecular biology. The main argument for merger is to gain strength via a department whose size would be more comparable to biology departments in other research universities. Second, molecular biology is not only the study of genetic information and structures within the cell. It is, more important, a technique that is applicable to the study of a broad range of problems in biology. We see those applications in cellular genetics, to be sure, but also in ecology and other population level aspects of biology.

It is unfortunately true that we have not been able to hire permanent faculty to teach courses in the broad areas of ecology and evolutionary biology. The reason is not, however, the proposed merger between the biology and botany departments. Rather, the problem lies in the lack of suitable, new faculty research lab space. Bringing the current biology buildings into compliance with modern safety standards looks like a $10 million, five-year project. That is why we have a request pending with the College of Liberal Arts to solve our space problem outside the current biology buildings and another reason why merging biology and botany is a good idea. Together we would have access to more space than is now available for ecology and evolutionary biology appointments.

Bush's heart responds to drug; shock procedure not needed

President delays exercise regimen, but returns to Oval Office

By Terence Hunt
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON—President Bush returned to work and put in a full day in the Oval Office on Monday as his heart resumed a normal rhythm under medication. "It's great to be back," he said after two nights in the hospital.

The success of the drug therapy allowed doctors to shelve plans to use an electrical shock procedure to make Bush's heart beat normally. The procedure would have required Bush to be put under a general anesthetic and to temporarily transfer power to Vice President Dan Quayle.

Bush's doctors recommended that he curtail his rigorous fitness regimen for a week or so while they fine-tune the drug dosages needed to keep his heartbeat stable. But they said Bush could resume his normal business schedule, and he went ahead with his appointments, including a meeting with former Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

"Feel good," he said during a picture-taking session with Shevardnadze. With a sweep of his hands and a whistle, Bush indicated his heartbeat was normal.

"Talk to my doctor, will you?" he said, fending off further questions. "I'm just glad to be here." Bush, 66, appeared animated, though slightly tired.

He repeated the sentiment after dropping in at a separate event later, saying, "I really do feel wonderfully well. I'm glad to be here in more ways than one."

"He can be expected to live the same life he was living last week," said Dr. Allan Ross, chief of cardiology at Georgetown University and a member of Bush's medical team.

Although Bush was responding to medication, his heart was still beating fast when he was discharged from Bethesda Naval Hospital, but it returned to normal shortly thereafter. Doctors said they hadn't been pressured to release him prematurely.

"It was a pure medical case without any decision having been made for political or other considerations," Dr. Burton Lee, Bush's personal physician, said in a news conference with other members of the medical team.

Lee said White House Chief of Staff John Sununu attended the meeting where doctors decided to release Bush but "didn't really do much more than listen."

The transfer of power from Bush to Quayle that had been envisioned could have caused political problems for the White House by focusing new attention on the qualifications of the vice president. Polls show that many Americans believe he is not qualified to be president.

Bush brushed aside questions about Quayle's competence. "Hey, he has my full support, always has, and he's doing a first-class job."

Although the immediate medical scare appeared over, doctors cautioned that Bush may again experience an irregular heartbeat as they make adjustments in his medications.

While Bush was described in good physical condition, Lee said, "He has said to me in the last couple of weeks, 'Gee-whiz, maybe I'm getting older.'" Lee said he discounted the remark because it was a hot day and "he was completely normal."

Aside from Shevardnadze, Bush also met with former Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., on the emigration of Jews from Ethiopia and held separate talks with Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady and President Paul Biya of Cameroon.

Bush was going ahead with plans to fly by helicopter to a reception in suburban Maryland for the National Rehabilitation Hospital, where his daughter Dorothy LeBlond is the chief fund-raiser.

Bush's wife, Barbara, went ahead with a planned trip to Palm Beach, Fla., to attend a literacy event and to bring back the president's 89-year-old mother, Dorothy Walker Bush. The first lady told reporters she wanted the president to resume his exercises but to cut his coffee intake.

Under the medications digoxin and procainamide, Bush's heart slowed to normal at 10:45 p.m. Sunday — about 30 hours after he first complained of shortness of breath and doctors diagnosed him suffering from atrial fibrillation, or irregular heartbeat.

After stabilizing, Bush's heart resumed beating irregularly at 4:45 a.m. Monday, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said.

Bush's doctors gathered at Bethesda Naval Hospital at 5:30 a.m. and decided, over an 1½-hour meeting, that Bush was responding well enough on medication to be released — even though his heartbeat remained erratic.

President Bush gestures as he walks to the Oval Office on his return to the White House Monday. Bush was released from Bethesda Naval Medical Center after doctors decided they could stabilize his heartbeat.

Storms hinder aid to Bangladeshis; thousands close to death

By Dilip Ganguly
The Associated Press

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Time is running out for survivors in the cyclone-ravaged lowlands of Bangladesh, aid workers warned Monday. Thunderstorms lashed the country, hampering relief efforts and heightening fears that the death toll of more than 125,000 could rise sharply.

Lack of helicopters and flooded roads slowed the distribution of desperately needed supplies for the victims of the cyclone that mauled the length of Bangladesh's coast last Tuesday.

"You need 200 helicopters for this kind of operation, and I have exactly two," said a ranking officer of a unit that flies 10 or 12 sorties a day, dropping food packets in districts near Chittagong.

The southeastern port bore the brunt of the mighty storm that left an estimated 10 million people homeless and ravaged one-fifth of Bangladesh. All communications were disrupted.

Relief organizations fear a cholera epidemic may break out in areas where decomposing bodies are contaminating water. The Red Crescent, the Muslim equivalent of the Red Cross, said 100,000 more people may die if the impending epidemic is not contained.

In Washington, the American Red

Cross said 4 million people are imperiled by lack of food or clean water. Al Panico, director of the U.S. organization's international relief operations, also said a full accounting of the dead is unlikely because so many victims were swept out to sea by the storm.

An independent Bengali-language newspaper Sangbad reported Monday that 200 people have died of diarrhea in nine districts since last week. "Diarrhea is assuming the form of epidemic, and it is creating concern in southern offshore islands," it said.

The needs are great in the affected areas, and local and international efforts have clearly failed to meet even the minimal needs of survivors. Many residents in the southern islands told journalists they had not eaten for several days.

Associated Press photographer Udo Weitz, who flew in a relief helicopter over coastal islands still inundated with sea water, said throngs of desperate survivors at Urir Char island besieged the aircraft, begging the crew for food.

"Police and army soldiers beat back the people, and they were made to sit in a line. An army general gave each of them a small loaf of bread wrapped in plastic," Weitz said.

Bangladeshi officials said assistance was too slow in coming.

Refugees

so some refugees can drive themselves home.

The United Nations and relief groups will provide food and medical aid for the trip home, Garner said.

Goff said the aim is to bring the refugees to the lowlands quickly and then transport them directly back to their home towns and villages.

One source said the refugees would be moved from camps at Uzumlu and Isikveren in Turkey and the Iraqi border town of Kani-masi, where thousands of Kurds have stopped en route home.

Garner said about 125,000 refugees will be moved to the Zakho area, 65,000 will be taken to Sirsenk and 6,500 will be sent to Suriya. The refugees may head back to their own homes or stay in camps built by the allies.

"Two weeks would be great, if we can do it," said Garner.

Military officials say most refugees want to go home as long as the allied force is there to protect them from Saddam.

Goff said the allies can offer no security guarantees to Kurds who return to areas outside the protected zone.

Garner disputed an Associated Press report Sunday saying the U.S. forces came within a mile of Dohuk. The AP report was based on a correspondent's measuring the troops' distance from the edge of town on an automobile odometer. Garner said the troops stopped 2.8 miles from the town.

A high-ranking military officer told the AP that Army elements had moved inside the Dohuk city limits at around 2 a.m. Monday, but withdrew after sighting Iraqi troops there. The officer spoke on condition of anonymity.

A Kurdish family treks along a mountaintop path as they leave the Umzulu refugee camp on the Turkish-Iraqi border Monday. Allied forces have expanded the security zone to nearly 3 miles from the town of Dohuk, allowing the resettlement of Northern Iraqi Kurds close to home.

Several hundred Iraqi soldiers, after withdrawing from the allied security zone, were congregating in the Dohuk area.

On Monday, Army Lt. Col. John Abizaid visited an Iraqi observation post about six miles north of Dohuk and asked the soldiers to withdraw.

Soldiers of the 3rd Battalion of the 325th Airborne took up positions on a hill just across the road from the armed Iraqis.

"It doesn't seem like they're too much threat," said Staff Sgt. Johnny Hart of Fayetteville, N.C. "I'm not saying I'm not sweating a little, though."

The U.S. Army colonel in charge of negotiating with the Iraqis told reporters that another security problem arises from the presence of Kurdish guerrillas, who have been entering towns in northern Iraq under the expanding allied presence.

"It's kind of a tinderbox," Col. Dick Naab said. "A lot of things worry me."

Bill to restrict sale of cigarettes to minors

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — Youngsters could face criminal charges for smoking or buying cigarettes under a bill on its way to Gov. Terry Branstad.

The bill also would put in place the first restrictions on cigarette vending machines designed to assure people under 18 can't buy from them.

With little debate Monday, the House voted 76-16 approval of the bill. There had been extensive debate earlier in the House and Senate, and House members were approving minor changes.

"There will be some people, at least, who will be reluctant to buy cigarettes," said Rep. Jane Teaford, D-Cedar Falls, main supporter of the bill.

The bill allows fines of up to $100 for youngsters caught smoking or buying cigarettes. Currently it is against the law for those under 18 to buy cigarettes, but penalties are against the retailer who sells the tobacco.

Those penalties would stay in place. The bill would add the potential for charging a youngster caught smoking. It would not allow jail time for youngsters who smoke.

New liquor law before Branstad

By Tom Seery
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — The Iowa Legislature wants to loosen the state's Sunday liquor laws.

In a 26-22 vote Monday, the Senate approved a House-passed bill that allows taverns and restaurants to begin selling alcoholic beverages at 8 a.m. on Sundays and to continue selling such beverages until 2 a.m. the next day.

Current state law allows sales of alcoholic beverages on Sunday from 10 a.m. until midnight. On the other days of the week, the legal hours are from 6 a.m. until 2 a.m.

Sen. Wally Horn, D-Cedar Rapids, said the bill will boost the champagne brunch business at restaurants.

A number of senators expressed lukewarm support for the bill. It now goes to Gov. Terry Branstad, who has not indicated whether he will sign it into law.

Burglaries

Lynch was charged with aiding and abetting in a second-degree burglary, according to police records.

Arrested and charged with second-degree burglary on eight counts was Gary W. Spindle, 18, address unknown, according to police records.

At this time, there appears to be no connection between the car burglaries and the Carlos O' Kelly's burglary, according to police records.

The Sound of Muzhik

With its breath-ingly seductive appeal to Russian nationalism, Eisenstein's "Alexander Nevsky" has led me to ponder whether an American film has made more plenty others of my country want to rally around our music with such fervor.

Certainly this classic black and white film about a 13th-century battle on a frozen lake (shown at the Bijou tonight and tomorrow) derives as much of its power from Sergei Prokofiev's score as from director Eisenstein's mastery of montage. I don't see our lukewarm patriotism partly result from our comparatively uninspiring patriotic music?

Prokofiev effectively combines the rousing anthems of the Russians with the menacing, dramatic dirge sounds that signal approaching enemies, the same.

Patriotism at its finest lifts 'Alexander Nevsky'

By Lindsay Alan Park
The Daily Iowan

The Sound of Muzhiks

With its breathtakingly seductive appeal to Russian nationalism, Sergei Eisenstein's "Alexander Nevsky" has led me to ponder why no American film has made me (or plenty others of my countrymen) want to rally around our flag with such fervor.

Certainly this classic black-and-white film about a 13th-century battle on a frozen lake (showing at the Bijou tonight and tomorrow) derives as much of its power from Sergei Prokofiev's frenetic score as from director Eisenstein's mastery of montage. Might not our lukewarm patriotism partly result from our comparatively uninspiring patriotic music?

Prokofiev effectively contrasts the rousing anthems of the Russians with the menacing, dissonant dirge sounds that signal their approaching enemies, the Germans.

Still, for lining up the allies, there's nothing like portraying the enemy to be monsters (as President Bush proved with Saddam Hussein), and in this respect "Alexander Nevsky" does an admirable job of sliming the army of the Holy Roman Empire. Among the strongest images in the film are the eyes of German knights peering through cross-shaped holes cut in black helmets that resemble inverted buckets.

Ironically, several million Russians would be wiped out by a truly monstrous German regime only a few years after the film's completion in 1938.

For all its gravity and saber-rattling, "Alexander Nevsky" is an often-humorous "buddy film" at heart.

Fresh from battle with the Mongols, the friends Vasily and Gavrilko return to their hometown of Novgorod, where they vie for the affections of the young maiden Olga. When their competitive courtship is interrupted by news of the Germans preparing to attack the city, the buffoonish Vasily and solemn Gavrilko press Olga to choose between them. Olga promises to marry whichever man proves braver in battle.

While many among Novgorod's moneyed classes argue for buying off the Germans with land and goods, patriotic nobles like Vasily and Gavrilko unite with the Muzhiks (peasants) under the command of Prince Alexander Nevsky to save the Motherland.

This is the heroic crux of the film — that the common folk have everything to gain by defending their country.

"Alexander Nevsky" will be shown at the Bijou at 9 tonight and 7 p.m. Wednesday. With subtitles.

'Miss Saigon' gets 11 Tony nominations

By Michael Kuchwara
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — "Miss Saigon" and "The Will Rogers Follies" each received 11 nominations Monday to lead the field for the 1991 Tony Awards, honoring the best of the Broadway season.

"Once on This Island" garnered eight nominations, and "The Secret Garden" got seven. "Our Country's Good" received six nominations.

The nominees for best play were: "Six Degrees of Separation," John Guare's dark comedy of modern-day Manhattan; "Lost in Yonkers," Neil Simon's play about a family under the thumb of a tyrannical woman; the Hartford Stage production of "Our Country's Good," Timberlake Wertenbaker's drama of convicts in Australia; and "Shadowlands," William Nicholson's drama about English writer C.S. Lewis.

Nominated for best musical were "Miss Saigon," an updating of "Madame Butterfly" set during the Vietnam War; "The Secret Garden," based on the classic children's novel by Frances Hodgson Burnett; "The Will Rogers Follies," Tommy Tune's extravagant recreation of the Ziegfeld Follies, and

"Once on This Island," a Caribbean fairy tale.

"Miss Saigon" also picked up nominations for its two stars, Jonathan Pryce and Lea Salonga. It was also cited for direction, Nicholas Hytner; book, Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg; score, Boublil, Schonberg and Richard Maltby; supporting actors, Hinton Battle and Willy Falk; and scenery, John Napier.

Anastasia Screamed plays IC; Gabe's show won't be in vain

By Kimberly Chun
The Daily Iowan

The most pressing problem on Chris Cugini's mind, as he spoke to me from a freezing phone booth in Minneapolis, was the broken glass flying around him. Someone was smashing windows in the background, and he was almost too cold to think or talk.

Bands

Cugini's band, Anastasia Screamed (formerly of Boston and relocated to Nashville) has just finished a show with Throwing Muses and plans to bring its rock & roll extra-special-avaganza to Iowa City tonight at Gabe's Oasis, 330 E. Washington St.

Releasing multiple singles and an album, "Laughing Down the Limehouse" (Roughneck), to multo kudos in England and Europe, Anastasia Screamed has found fistfuls of attention and forced English music pundits to trot out handy rock thesaurus comparisons to the Lemonheads, Dinosaur Jr. and Husker Du.

Many people have heard good things about Anastasia Screamed but haven't exactly heard the band. I asked Cugini to describe his music.

"Well, that's a problem because every song sounds different to me," he said. "We just do what we feel like. We have blues influences, but I think it's mostly different from other people's stuff. It just comes out."

In June, Anastasia Screamed will head back into the studio in hopes of releasing a second album by July. The band will further refine its intricate guitar-mauling roar and alternately goofy and lovely stream-of-THC lyrics. Dig, big daddy-o.

Baker returns to Mideast 'in quest of peace'

By George Gedda
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James Baker said Monday he will return to the Middle East later this week to try to keep alive hopes of convening a regional peace conference.

"As long as there is any reasonable prospect of any chance of success, we should continue to work at this," Baker said. The visit will be his fourth to the region in two months.

After his last trip, the White House acknowledged the results were slim. But Baker said he and President Bush decided another trip was justified.

He and the president agreed, Baker said, that "we should continue to try."

State Department deputy spokesman Richard Boucher said Baker tentatively plans to leave Friday evening and to return next week. Egypt, Syria, Jordan and Israel are on his itinerary but other countries may be added, Boucher said.

James Baker
Secretary of State

Baker said he also plans to meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmyrnykh during his travels in the region. The conference Baker envisions would be held under joint U.S.-Soviet sponsorship.

Bessmyrnykh plans to arrive in Israel on Friday, the same day as Baker's departure. The Soviet diplomat also will visit Arab countries.

Baker's plan calls for direct talks between Israel and its Arab neighbors as well as direct talks between Israel and Palestinian representatives.

"In that sense, it would be a very, very broad conference of a nature and type that has never before taken place," Baker said.

While saying there is "some chance" he might be successful, Baker added that "there will not be peace in the Middle East until the parties themselves decide they want true reconciliation and peace."

No leader has rejected the Baker proposal outright but a host of differences over such issues as participants and agenda have prevented agreement. As an example, Israel wants no United Nations role for the conference while Syria believes the United Nations should be a major contributor.

There is also broad disagreement over the makeup of a Palestinian delegation. Palestinians reject Israeli demands that Palestine Liberation Organization members not be allowed to take part. Baker has maintained that the outcome of the gulf war opened a "window of opportunity" for progress on the Arab-Israeli front that should not be squandered away.

But there is little to suggest an increasing Arab willingness to make an accommodation with Israel. For example, the Arab League in recent days announced that 100 firms had been added to the list of companies the League is boycotting because they do business with Israel.

In response, Boucher said Monday the administration remains "firm and unyielding."

For their part, the Israelis irritated Baker by inaugurating two new Jewish settlements in occupied territory during his last visit to the region. The administration looks on settlement activity as an obstacle to peace.

Baker disclosed his travel plans while welcoming former Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze on a sentimental return visit to Washington.

Fighting in Soviet Armenia intensifies; troops said to have destroyed village

By Andrew Katell
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The president of Soviet Armenia said Soviet troops had destroyed an Armenian village near the border with Azerbaijan on Monday and that dozens of people were killed, news reports said.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, meanwhile, said his government was determined to settle the bitter ethnic fighting between the two southern republics. He said the disputed territory of Nagorno-Karabakh, a predominantly Armenian enclave inside Azerbaijan, should have its autonomy fully restored.

Feuding between mainly Christian Armenia and predominantly Muslim Azerbaijan goes back centuries and involves land disputes as well as religious and cultural differences. Hundreds have died since 1987 in battles growing out of the dispute over Nagorno-Karabakh, which has been under Azerbaijani rule since 1923.

Armenian President Levon Ter-Petrosian said Soviet army troops using helicopters, tanks and heavy artillery had destroyed the village of Voskepar, in Armenia on the Azerbaijani border. A statement carried by the Armenpress news agency said the village was leveled and dozens of people killed.

In another report, Tass said Sunday that 200 paratroopers were airlifted by helicopter into Yerevan to protect military personnel and installations.

Paratroopers occupied the nuclear power plant in Yerevan, Radio Russia said in a report monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. The lieutenant general commanding interior forces in the area, Yuri Shatalin, said he had learned of a plot to attack the power plant, but did not say who was behind the plot.

Soviet Interior Minister Boris Pugo told the legislature that Soviet troops last week had seized weapons from Armenian extremists using two villages as bases in Azerbaijan and evacuated several hundred women and children at their request.

Armenian authorities say 37 people were killed and many others injured when Azerbaijani and Soviet forces attacked the villages of Getashen and Martunashen.

Today I sat on a bench and ate an apple.
It was a nice sunny day and a lot of people were outside.
Someone with a little girl walked by me and the girl was looking at me.
Then she smiled and tried to hide behind her mom so I couldn't see her.

and O'Neill, but Quinones popped up and Mariano Duncan grounded out. Merced doubled to start the first, his fifth extra-base hit in four games, and scored on Bonilla's one-out single off Jose Rijo (1-2). Bell led off the sixth with his second homer, a drive into the left-field seats. Bonilla made it 3-0 in the seventh off reliever Randy Myers with his second run-scoring single. The Pirates were 2-4 at home against the Reds last season.

Expos 10, Giants 4
MONTREAL—Delino DeShields, Marquis Grissom and Tim Wallach

each hit home runs in the fourth inning Monday night, leading the Montreal Expos past the San Francisco Giants 10-4. Kevin Mitchell hit two homers for the Giants, giving him a major league-leading 10 for the season. San Francisco has lost six of its last seven games. Don Robinson (0-1) was roughed up for seven runs and eight hits in three-plus innings in his first start of the season. The Expos scored five runs in the third inning. Starter Dennis Martinez (4-2) opened the third with a double and moved to third base on Grissom's single. Both runners scored on Wallach's double.

Barre farm team to fill in for the injured players. The Phillies obtained Daulton in the June 1980 draft. In 1990, he led National League catchers in games (139), walks (72), runs (62) and doubles (30), while hitting a career-high .268 with 12 home runs and 57 RBIs. He became a free agent at the end of the 1990 season, and the Phillies resigned him to a 3-year, $6 million contract. After Sunday's game, Dykstra joined Philadelphia in a 1989 trade with the New York

Mets. He had an outstanding 1990 season, hitting over .400 until June 11 and ending the season at .325, with 192 hits, 35 doubles, 9 home runs and 60 RBIs. He was the NL's starting center fielder in the All-Star game. The only Phillie to start in all 24 games this season, Dykstra is averaging .302. He leads the league in runs scored with 23 and was among the league leaders in hits with 29. He is in the first season of a three-year contract that guarantees him $7.3 million plus incentives based on plate appearances. Four sports figures have died in recent years as a result of alcohol-related accidents. Martin died on Christmas night 1989 in a one-car crash. Lindbergh was killed Nov. 11, 1985, when he drove his Porsche into a concrete wall after missing a turn. NASCAR driver Robbie Moroso died Sept. 30, 1990, when he lost control of his car and crashed into another vehicle, also killing the other driver. Fred Washington, a rookie defensive lineman with the Chicago

Bears, was killed last Dec. 21 along with a passenger in his car when they crashed into a tree. In August 1989, Stacey Toran, a defensive back with the Los Angeles Raiders, was killed when his BMW went off a curve and overturned. His blood alcohol level was .32, four times the legal level in California. Hall of Famer Bill Shoemaker, the winningest jockey in thoroughbred history, is paralyzed after sustaining a broken neck in a car crash last month. He was legally drunk at the time.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Former University of Mississippi football player Chucky Mullins, paralyzed after making a tackle in a 1989 game, died today of complications from a blood clot in his lungs. Mullins, 21, died at about 2:35 p.m. CDT at Baptist Memorial Hospital, hospital spokesman Michael Calhoun said. "Physicians . . . said the damaged suffered Wednesday (May 1) was extensive and unfortunately too much for Mr. Mullins to overcome," the hospital said in a statement. Mullins was moved to the Memphis hospital from Oxford, Miss., last Friday. He had passed out and stopped breathing while dressing for class last Wednesday. A defensive back, Mullins was paralyzed from the neck down after making a tackle in an Oct. 28, 1989 game with Vanderbilt. Blazers to build new, larger stadium

PORTLAND, Ore. — The Portland Trail Blazers announced plans Monday to construct an arena seating 16,000 to 20,000, to be completed by the start of the 1994-95 NBA season. The project will cost an estimated $125 million to $150 million, with the Trail Blazers paying most of it. The Trail Blazers want the arena to be built in northeast Portland near the existing Memorial Coliseum, the team's home since the franchise was formed 21 years ago. The coliseum, built in 1960, seats 12,884 for Trail Blazers games. When a new arena is completed in Salt Lake City, Memorial Coliseum will have the smallest capacity of any of the 27 NBA arenas.

North Stars take 2-1 advantage over Oilers

The Associated Press
BLOOMINGTON, Minn. — Dave Gagner had three assists and Bobby Smith scored the winner on a fine individual effort as the Minnesota North Stars took a 2-1 lead in the Stanley Cup semifinals Monday night with a 7-3 victory over the defending champion Edmonton Oilers. Brian Bellows scored twice for Minnesota, which is 18-2-2 at Met Center since Jan. 17 and hosts Game 4 Wednesday night. The North Stars' first home playoff victory ever against Edmonton gave them a 6-1 record at Met Center in this year's playoffs. Trying to reach the Stanley Cup finals for the first time since 1981, the North Stars have already beaten Chicago and St. Louis, the NHL's top two regular-season teams. Minnesota had the 16th-best record and finished 12 points behind No. 11 Edmonton. After going 4-0-2 at Minnesota from 1986-90, the Oilers are 0-3 at

Met Center this season and have been outscored 17-5. Edmonton, 6-0 in Campbell Conference championship series and winner of five of the last seven Stanley Cups, needs a victory Wednesday to avoid falling into a deep hole. Only eight teams in NHL history have rallied from 3-1 series deficits. For the ninth time in 15 playoff games, the North Stars scored in the first

Pacers happy with playoffs

By Hank Lowenkron
The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indiana Pacers feel they ended the season as winners, although for the fifth time in five playoff trips they were eliminated in the opening round.

Indiana pushed Boston to the final seconds before losing 124-121 Sunday, and only two points separated the teams in the five-game series won by the Atlantic Division champions.

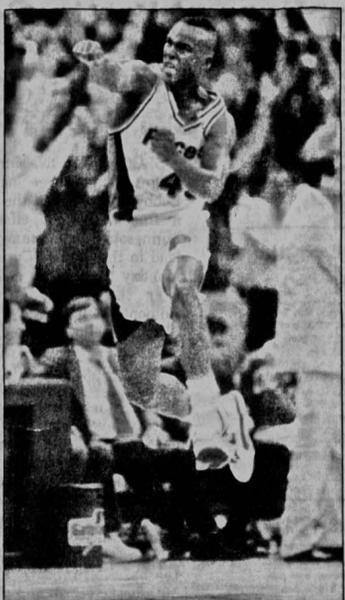

"Obviously we wanted to win, but we proved ourselves able to compete," Indiana coach Bob Hill said. "I think the Pacers proved themselves to a lot of people in the series with Boston. No one gave us a chance and we came so close. This team came a long way and accomplished a lot, overcoming hurdles and just missed reaching the second round."

The finish came after a frustrating 9-16 start that resulted in the firing of Dick Versace as coach, with Hill, his assistant, taking over. Indiana compiled a 32-25 record under Hill.

Hill ordered the team into an up-tempo style game, utilizing its quickness to force turnovers and transition baskets. Under Versace, the Pacers shot .465 and averaged 104.7 points. Under Hill, the team shot .505 and averaged 114.8 points in 57 games.

Injuries to guard Vern Fleming and center Rik Smits forced Hill to go to his bench. When they were healthy, he decided the club was more effective with free agent Micheal Williams at point guard and Greg Dreiling taking in the middle.

A veteran Boston club saw Indiana overcome a 13-point deficit to win Game 4 and the Pacers reduced a 16-point deficit to two points before Chuck Person, whose dramatic 3-pointers had sparked the team throughout the series, missed an off-balance 3-pointer that would have put Indiana ahead with 6.8 seconds left in Game 5.

Pacers forward Chuck Person

Boston's Brian Shaw then made four free throws in the final seconds, offsetting Person's last-gasp 3-pointer that gave him 32 points for the game and 130 for the series.

"They got the big lead but we've got the type of team that refused to die," Person said. "We had a chance to win it. . . I went for it and I missed it. . . If I had to do it again, I'd take the same shot."

"We're making progress and I think this series is going to help us get over the hump," said Reggie Miller.

Strock: Dolphins used drugs

The Associated Press

MIAMI — Stimulant pills and pain-killing injections were widely used on the Miami Dolphins during the 1970s and 1980s, alleges former Dolphin quarterback Don Strock in a draft of his autobiography.

Strock, a Dolphin backup from 1974 to 1987, writes in the manuscript that prescription stimulant pills were routinely used by his first five seasons and that pain killers were common during his entire Miami career.

He claims unnamed team doctors dispensed the drug Ritalin until about 1978. Ritalin is a trade name for methylphenidate Hydrochloride, a central stimulant often used to treat depression and the sleeping disorder narcolepsy.

The NFL's substance abuse policy prohibits the use of Ritalin unless it is prescribed by a physician, NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said Monday. Ritalin was also prohibited during the years Strock says the drug was widely used by Dolphins players, Aiello said.

Dolphins players usually took the Ritalin pills during pre-game warmups, Strock told The Miami Herald.

The book was co-authored by New York-based freelance writer Harvey Frommer and is published by Pharos Books of New York.

As for the alleged widespread use of stimulants, Strock writes: "When I first came into the league there were players who had their private pillboxes and bottles, their own exclusive medicine cabinet. . . About half the guys on the Dolphin roster used Ritalin."

Strock also writes that the team doctors commonly issued shots of the pain killers Novocain — a trade name for the cardiac depressant procaine — and Xylocaine — a trade name for the local anesthetic lidocaine. Both block pain by deadening the nerve.

The players even had a nickname for the drugs: the 'Caine Brothers.

Injections of pain-killers are permitted by the NFL if issued by a team doctor. However, the current team doctors for the Dolphins say they use them very rarely.

The doctors during the Strock years were Herbert Virgin — who was primary physician from 1968-83 and emeritus in 1984 — and his son Charles — who was assistant in 1972-83 and primary in 1984-88.

Herbert Virgin died in January 1989. Charles Virgin is no longer affiliated with the club and did not return phone calls to his private Miami practice Monday.

Strock, asked by The Miami Herald whether his reference to "team doctors" meant the Virgins, said, "You could assume that."

The former Dolphin could not be reached Monday for further comment.

Dan Kanell, who replaced Charles Virgin as primary physician in 1989, said, "I'm amazed it (Ritalin) was used."

As for the pain killers, Kanell said he rarely uses them, approving only "two or three" shots during the 1990 season.

Among the revelations of routine pain-killer use, Strock writes about an injection to safety Lyle Blackwood (1981-86), who once broke his nose and took a shot "right between his eyes."

Drunken Dykstra slams car into tree

Injures self, passenger Daulton after bachelor party

By A.J. Hostetler
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — A drunken Lenny Dykstra slammed his new red sports car into two trees while driving home from a bachelor party early Monday, causing multiple injuries to himself and Philadelphia Phillies teammate Darren Daulton, authorities said.

Dykstra faces drunken-driving charges based on tests showing that his blood alcohol level exceeded 0.10 percent, the state's legal limit, said acting Radnor Township Police Chief Henry Jansen, who would not reveal the exact figure. Fox News reported, without divulging its source, that Dykstra's level was 0.17.

Dykstra, 28, sustained three broken ribs, a broken right collarbone and a broken right cheekbone. A broken rib punctured a lung and his heart was bruised, according to doctors.

Daulton, 29, the Phillies' catcher, suffered a broken left eye socket, a scratched left cornea and a heart bruise, doctors said.

"Both are very lucky gentlemen," said Dr. David Rose of Bryn Mawr Hospital. "The kind of shape they were in, as strong as they were, helped them."

Alcohol-related accidents have killed at least five sports figures in recent years, including New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin and Philadelphia Flyers goalie Pelle Lindbergh.

Dykstra is on a one-year baseball probation as a result of gambling. He testified last winter that he lost close to $78,000 in poker games in Mississippi.

Baseball Commissioner Fay Vincent would not discuss possible penalties.

"I was very sorry to learn of the serious injuries to Len Dykstra and Darren Daulton," Vincent said. "The only proper concern is for their well-being. I wish them well and hope their recovery is both quick and total."

Dykstra will miss at least the next two months, Phillies spokeswoman Tina Urban said. Daulton was expected to miss 15 days, Urban said.

The Phillies would not speculate on how the injuries may affect the players' careers.

Dykstra, a left-hander at bat and in the field, broke his right collarbone.

The center fielder was driving his 1991 Mercedes Benz in suburban Radnor at 1 a.m. when he lost control, crossed the road and struck two trees on the passenger side of his car, Jansen said.

Police were still unsure how fast Dykstra was driving in the 35-mph zone. Neither man was wearing a seat belt and the car's air bags did not inflate because the impact was from the side, not from the front or back, Jansen said.

Both players declined medical attention when police first found them walking outside the car, police said. While at the Radnor police station, they complained of pain and were taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Dykstra and Daulton were on their way home from a bachelor party for teammate John Kruk, who was to be married Monday, Phillies spokesman Larry Shenk said.

The accident occurred 13 days after Phillies management replaced Nick Leyva with manager Jim Fregosi. The Phillies were 4-9 when Leyva was fired.

At a news conference Monday afternoon, team president Bill Giles was upset.

"Life is so... unpredictable," Giles said. "In baseball, things are going so good... You win six out of eight (games) and then you get slapped in the face."

Fregosi, who replaced Leyva on April 23, said team officials had not yet considered any ramifications of the accident.

"The primary thing right now is we're concerned about their health," Fregosi said.

The Phillies (11-14) start a nine-game road trip on the West Coast Tuesday.

Fregosi said Von Hayes would be moved to center field, and the team has called up catcher Darrin Fletcher and pitcher Wally Ritchie from the club's Scranton-Wilkes-See Phillies. Page 9

Nets rookie Coleman is voted best

By Tom Canavan
The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Derrick Coleman added the icing to a season that saw him lead all first-year players in scoring and rebounding by capturing the NBA Rookie of the Year award on Monday.

"After I finish all these questions, I'm going to go home and pinch myself," said Coleman, the No. 1 pick in last year's draft, who will pocket $200,000 in contract incentives for winning the award.

The announcement came as no surprise based on the numbers.

Coleman had 40 games in which he scored in double figures in points and rebounds, 32 games of 20 or more points and 42 of 10 or more rebounds. He wound up averaging 18.4 points and 10.3 rebounds per game.

But his numbers didn't reflect the 6-foot-10 former Syracuse star's worth to the Nets, a team that's had little return from many of its high draft choices.

The list of flops includes Pearl Washington (12th pick overall in 1986) and Dennis Hopson (3rd overall in 1987). Chris Morris (4th overall in 1988) still is having trouble proving his worth.

Willis Reed, the Nets' senior vice president for basketball operations, knew the track record.

"There were a lot of question marks about who we would take or whether we'd utilize the pick," Reed said, recalling last June's draft. "I said all along we'd explore all possibilities and if we used the pick, we'd take the right player."

Coleman proved to be just that.

With him in the lineup, the Nets improved from a league-low 17 wins in 1989-90 to 26 this season. The team also was much more competitive and rarely found itself blown out.

"I think the biggest problem a number-one draft choice always has to face is to prove you are number one," Nets coach Bill Fitch said.

"Whenever someone mentioned (Dennis) Scott or (Lionel) Simmons to me, I always said they were never under the same pressure as Derrick. In my mind it (choosing the award) was no contest."

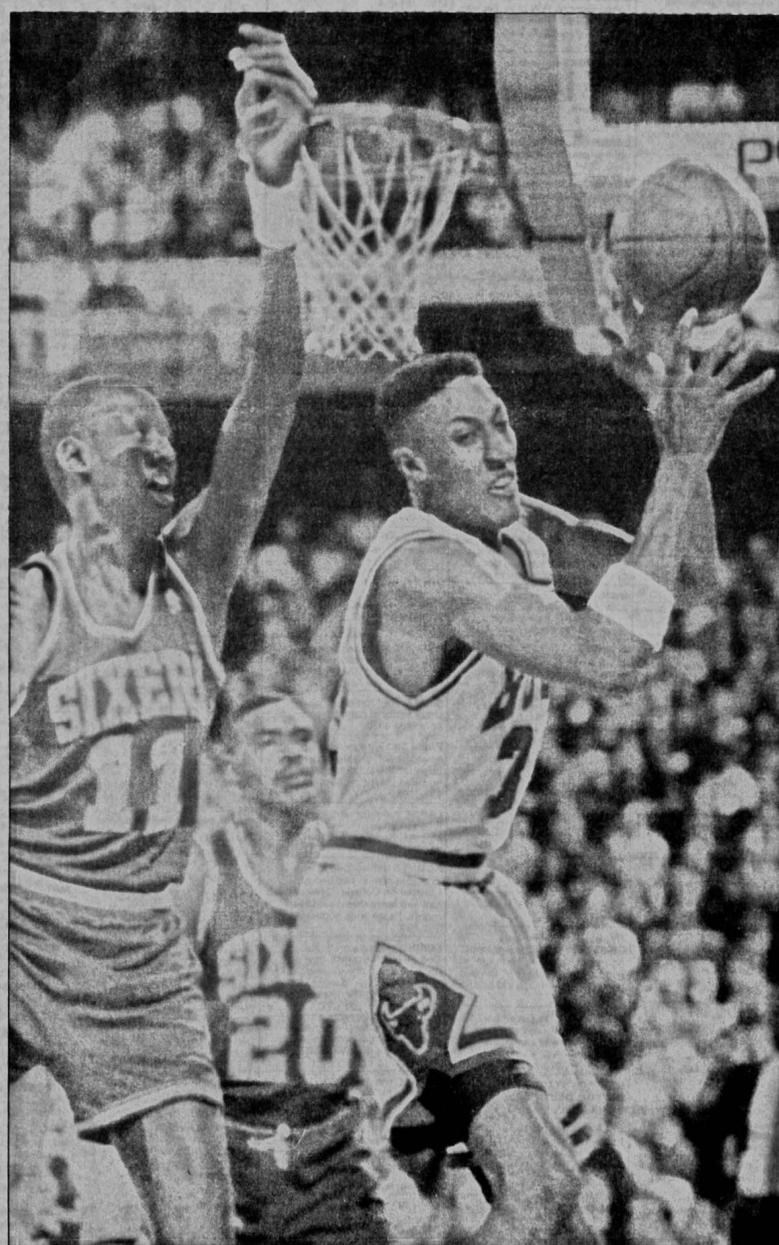

Coleman received 69 votes from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters — three from each NBA city and 15 representing national media.

Simmons, of Sacramento, (18 points, 8.8 rebounds) finished second with 22 votes. Scott, of Orlando, was third with three votes. Dee Brown of Boston got the final two votes.

Coleman, who left Syracuse as the NCAA's all-time leading rebounder, said the toughest things to deal with his rookie season were the travel, the physical nature of the pro game and losing — something New Jersey did 56 times this season.

It often left him angry and he seemed to take it out on the court the following night.

Chicago takes 2-0 series lead

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan scored 29 points and Scottie Pippen added 23 but the Chicago Bulls had to put down a late surge by the Philadelphia 76ers Monday night for a 112-100 victory and a 2-0 lead in their second-round playoff series.

The Bulls led by as many as 14 points in the fourth quarter. The 76ers got within five with 2:34 remaining but got no closer.

Hersey Hawkins led all scorers with 30 points and Armon Gilliam had 22 and Charles Barkley 20 for the 76ers. All five Bulls starters scored in double figures, as Bill Cartwright had 13 points, Horace Grant 11 and John Paxson 10.

The best-of-7 Eastern Conference semifinal series shifts to Philadelphia for games Friday night and Sunday afternoon.

The victory was the fifth without a loss in the playoffs for the Bulls, who swept the New York Knicks in three games before taking two straight from the 76ers.

The Bulls trailed 37-33 early in the second quarter before a 7-0 run put them ahead to stay. Jordan scored five of the Bulls' last seven points as they opened up a 62-53 halftime lead. He and Hawkins each had 18 first-half points.

Chicago led 84-73 after three quarters and opened a 14-point lead when Craig Hodges opened the fourth quarter with his second 3-pointer of the game.

Hawkins' three-point play and a free throw by Barkley cut the deficit to 10 and Andre Turner kept the 76ers in the game with a pair of 3-pointers, but each time Jordan came back to score to keep the Bulls comfortably ahead.

A pair of free throws by Hawkins with 2:34 left cut the lead to 103-98 but Grant's rebound of Jordan's missed shot put the Bulls back on top by seven points with 2:06 remaining.

The Boston Celtics and Detroit Pistons open a second-round playoff series tonight, largely because of Larry Bird and Isiah Thomas.

The Celtics survived a scare when Bird, already hampered by a bad back, returned from a frightening fall to lead Boston past Indiana 124-121 in the fifth game of their first round series Sunday.

That got Boston past the first round for the first time in three years and secured a date against the defending champion Pistons who used a big performance from Thomas to batter Atlanta 113-81 in their fifth game.

Los Angeles, with a 1-0 lead over Golden State, goes against the Warriors on Wednesday night.

Bird was brilliant, seeming to lift the Celtics by his own willpower after going down face first with just over four minutes left in the first half. It was feared that he had sustained a fractured jaw. But five minutes into the second half he came out of the dressing room to an emotional roar from the Boston Garden crowd.

"I didn't know if Larry would be back," coach Chris Ford said. "I didn't know he was coming back until I heard the crowd. He is truly amazing and courageous."

"I was coming back, no matter what," Bird said. "You don't worry about it (pain) when you're on the court. You just go out there and

HOUSTON — Dave Smith got a save in his first game back at the Astrodome and George Bell hit a two-run homer in Chicago's four-run fourth inning as the Cubs beat Houston 4-3 Monday night.

Smith, who signed as a free agent with the Cubs, pitched 11 seasons in Houston and is the Astros' all-time save leader with 199. He received a polite ovation while taking the mound in the ninth inning and retired the side in order for his sixth save, striking out one.

Greg Maddux improved to 4-1, allowing three runs and four hits in seven inning before Paul Assenmacher relieved.

Mark Grace led off the fourth with a single off Jim Deshaies (0-4) and scored on Bell's homer to left field. It was Bell's seventh homer of the season and his third in four games.

Andre Dawson ended an 0-for-14 slide with a double and scored on Hector Villanueva's double. Villanueva went to third base on a fly ball and scored when Maddux reached base on first baseman Jeff Bagwell's fielding error.

Craig Biggio singled with one out in the fourth inning for the first hit off Maddux. One out later, Gonzalez walked and Bagwell tripled home two runs.

Pirates 3, Reds 1

PITTSBURGH — Vicente Palacios gave up one run in seven-plus innings and Bobby Bonilla drove in two runs as the Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the Cincinnati Reds 3-1 Monday night.

Orlando Merced was 3-for-4 and scored a run and Jay Bell homered as the defending National League division champions played in Pittsburgh for the first time since last season's playoffs. They split a two-game series in Cincinnati last week.

Palacios (2-0), a major reason the NL East-leading Pirates have withstood Doug Drabek's 1-5 start, survived seven walks and a pair of bases-loaded jams to one-hit the Reds for seven innings. He left after Eric Davis broke up his shutout bid with a solo homer and Hal Morris singled to start the eighth.

UI freshman William Lounsbury, the student who leaped from his third-story Daum Residence Hall window during a fire April 20, has been charged with possession of explosive or incendiary materials or devices by the Iowa City Fire Department. The charge is a Class C felony that carries a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and up to a $10,000 fine.

According to a press release issued by the UI Department of Public Safety, gasoline, firecrackers, bottle rockets, caps and wooden matches were discovered in Lounsbury's room during the investigation. The report said the items were being used to construct a rocket when they were ignited — causing an explosion, fire and $5,000 in damage.

"It was definitely not intentional," Lounsbury said from his home Tuesday. "The fire was definitely an accident. I'd like to comment more, but I can't say anything."

Lounsbury's lawyer Leon Spies said the fire was not intentionally set by Lounsbury, adding that his client is merely being charged with the possession of incendiary materials.

IOWA CITY — The UI plans to go ahead with the incineration of more than 1,000 radioactive dog carcasses, officials said Tuesday.

In a university news release, Director of the Health Protection Office William Twaler said regular burning would begin after tests of the pathological waste incinerator at the school's Oakdale campus.

Studies have indicated that release of radioactivity and other emissions from the incinerator will be at levels far below standards set by state and federal agencies, the UI news release said.

The UI had been under fire from environmental groups to hold a public hearing before some 900 barrels containing the slightly radioactive carcasses are burned in a refurbished, 25-year-old incinerator a few miles west of downtown Iowa City.
