Budget woes halt services in two coastal states

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A budget deadlock Tuesday forced Connecticut to become the second state in two days to shut down non-essential services, idling 7,000 state workers and leaving unhappy Fourth of July campers shut out of parks.

Efforts to draft a budget for the fiscal year that began Monday were set back Tuesday when Connecticut's Senate rejected a proposed state income tax.

U.S. remains world's biggest debtor nation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States retained its unenvied position as the world's largest international investment debtor in 1990 as direct Japanese holdings in America soared 24 percent, the government reported Tuesday.

The Commerce Department said that the increase in Japanese investments helped Japan solidify its hold as the foreign nation with the second largest total of direct investment in the United States with $83.5 billion.

Britain retained its position as the largest holder of direct assets in the United States, defined as at least 10 percent ownership of a business, with holdings of $108.06 billion.

Thomas' human rights stand questioned

Activists ask Senate to reject him

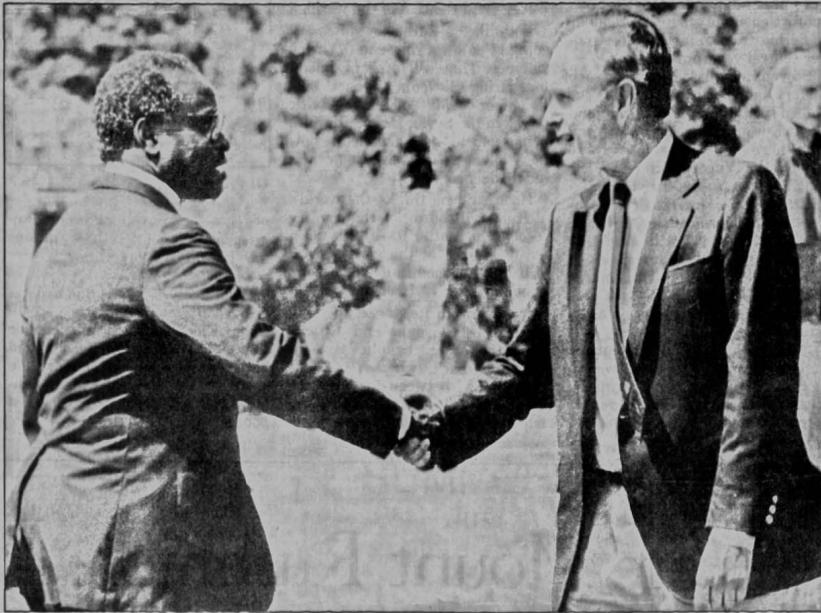

James Rowley

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas in 1987 praised an essay in which a conservative scholar denounced the landmark high court decision legalizing abortion.

Thomas' comments, made in a speech to the Heritage Foundation, were distributed Tuesday by an abortion-rights group. The group called on the Senate to reject Thomas' nomination unless he publicly declares his support for the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision.

The criticism from the National Abortion Rights Action League came a day after President Bush announced he would nominate Thomas, a conservative federal appeals court judge, to the court vacancy created by Justice Thurgood Marshall's retirement.

The group distributed copies of a 1987 speech in which Thomas praised as "a splendid example of applying natural law" an essay in which Lewis Lehrman attacked the Roe vs. Wade decision as conflicting with the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

As potential opponents searched for material to use against it, Thomas visited the White House on Tuesday and spent about an hour in the Office of Legislative Affairs, discussing preparations for his confirmation hearings. As a first step, the administration decided to recruit Kenneth Duberstein, a former White House chief of staff who shepherded David Souter through the confirmation process, to help with Thomas' nomination. Meanwhile, civil rights groups con-

Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas may find it difficult to fill the shoes of former Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, according to local legal experts.

Marshall, who retired last week citing advancing age and health problems, has been called a legend and a champion of civil liberties.

But some experts fear 43-year-old Thomas, a federal appeals court judge, may fall far short of these lofty titles.

"I think his contribution to the civil rights movement was to galvanize it against him," said Adrienne Wing, a UI law professor.

Unlike Justice David Souter, who was relatively unknown before his nomination, Thomas has had quite a public record. He served as chairman of the federal Equal Employment Opportunities Commission for almost eight years and is a member of the Republican Party.

According to Peter Shane, UI law professor, Thomas is ardently anti-affirmative action and has

Slovenia's militia battles for liberty

At least 7 people were killed and 13 wounded in fighting that negates the EC-negotiated truce.

LJUBLJANA, Yugoslavia — Slovenia's militia battled army troops and tanks with guns, rockets and captured armor Tuesday as the breakaway republic erupted into fierce warfare. The country's defense forces vowed to fight until the end.

The federal army said seven to 10 people were killed and 13 wounded in the day's fighting, but Slovenian television later said as many as eight people died in one firefight alone. The death toll was expected to rise.

Late Tuesday, Slovenia proposed an immediate end to hostilities, separation of the two hostile forces and the return of federal troops to their barracks. The statement released by Slovenian Information Minister Jelko Kacin proposed a disengagement of forces starting at 9 p.m. (3 p.m. EDT) at the latest.

There was no immediate reaction from the federal army. Earlier in the day, army chief of staff Gen. Blagoje Adzic vowed to prosecute a war until his troops gained control over Slovenia and neighboring Croatia, both of which declared independence last week.

"We will make sure that the war that has been forced upon us will be as brief as possible," Adzic said on Belgrade television.

The Iowa City Fourth of July celebration will be held at City Park, Park Road, July 4 at sunset.

Parking will be available in the Hancher Auditorium parking lot, according to police Sgt. Craig Leats. Iowa City officials will not allow any parking on the grass due to flooding and muddy conditions.

The Iowa City Police Department will be controlling the traffic flow after the fireworks display has ended, Leats said.

There will be no traffic allowed on Park Road from North Dubuque Street; traffic will flow eastbound only on North Dubuque Street.

On the upper part of City Park Road, traffic will only exit westbound. When leaving Hancher Auditorium parking lot or from Grove Street, traffic will be directed southbound only, Leats said.

People will be arrested if they are caught in possession of or exploding fireworks, Capt. Donald Strand noted.

Local teen smokers face strict law

Heather Chase
Daily Iowan

Iowa teenagers have entered the national spotlight recently thanks to a tough anti-smoking law that went into effect July 1.

The state now has what is considered the strictest smoking law in the country. Anyone under 18 years old who smokes, chews tobacco or possesses any type of tobacco will now be violating the law and may face a variety of penalties.

According to Iowa City Police Sgt. Craig Lish, possession of tobacco by a minor is now a simple misdemeanor. Punishments include a possible 30-day jail sentence, a maximum $100 fine and/or community service. Lish stressed it will be up to the discretion of a judge to determine the actual penalty. Officers can also issue warnings in lieu of a ticket.

Iowa City minors disagree about the necessity and effectiveness of the law. According to Dave Lund, 17, the law is "a good idea because kids are just wasting their life away with cigarettes."

Lund said many kids at his school smoke, but he doubts the new law will have an impact on their habit.

Although Lund is a non-smoker, he agreed with Lori Pieper, 16, who said the new law was an infringement on the rights of minors.

Pieper, a regular smoker, said the law is a violation of her "conscious right to choose."

"If we want to destroy our lungs, we'll go ahead and do it," she said.

Pieper said she is not worried about the new law, as older

Yugoslavian peace efforts disintegrate

UI professors discuss possible resolutions

Monica Phillips
Daily Iowan
Editor's note: The interviews for this article were conducted before events escalated in Yugoslavia Tuesday.

Recent attempts to peacefully resolve the conflicts among Yugoslavian republics have come too late, according to two UI associate professors.

On Sunday, a European-mediated peace effort attempted to encourage negotiations by allowing Stipe Mesic — a Croatian — to assume chairmanship of the Yugoslavian presidency. However, by Monday both the Slovenians and the federal government accused each other of breaking the truce and fighting resumed.

According to William Reisinger, associate professor of political science, the break of the two republics — Slovenia and Croatia — from the rest of Yugoslavia partially stems from a power struggle over the strength of the federal government.

From 1960 until the mid-1980s, the national government held a minimal amount of power while the republics carried much of the responsibility for their own economic and political development. Reisinger believes that since the republics were governing their own affairs, Slovenia and Croatia wanted to go one step further to become independent. However, conflict emerged when the republic of Serbia tried to institute a stronger central government.

Steven Hoch, associate professor of history and co-chairman of the International Center's Soviet and East European Studies Program, said there are two possible ways to resolve the Yugoslavian crisis.

"Either whole-scale civil war — which I think is very likely — or the Serbian government, the central government, will begin to negotiate independence with Croatia and Slovenia," Hoch said.

If the situation turns into a civil war, Reisinger doubts Slovenia can win.

"Assuming there is no outside support for or against the Slovenes, I think the Serbian-dominated Yugoslavian army is a stronger force," he said.

Hoch thinks the Slovenian militia may have a small chance as Slovenia's militia is well-trained and equipped. "I don't know if they could succeed or not, but it would be one hell of a war," Hoch said.

Reisinger and Hoch disagree on the effect civil war could have on Europe and the rest of the world.

"I think the European states are going to do what they can to outlay violence. That will probably mean pressuring Slovenia to back off," Reisinger said. "Like the Baltic states in the Soviet Union, they are being told to wait and let a slow non-violent process give them their independence."

Hoch said he thinks the world's attitude will be to let the country resolve the matter itself. "It's not a strategic area of the world either militarily, economically, politically or commercially," Hoch said.

According to Reisinger, the split separating Slovenia and Croatia from the other republics extends centuries back, when Yugoslavia was divided between the Austrian empire to the north and the Turkish empire to the south. As a result of these empires, different languages, religions, ethnic groups and lifestyles emerged.

Financially, Slovenia and Croatia are wealthy enough to become independent and viable economic units, said Hoch. Reisinger added both republics want to be more like their Italian and Austrian neighbors and not dragged down by a poorer south.

MOUNTAINOUS DEDICATION

Bush to dedicate Mount Rushmore

South Dakotans anxiously await the long-overdue ceremony, which was postponed due to World War II.

Chet Borkaw
Associated Press

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL, S.D. — When President Bush dedicates the mountain carving of four presidential faces today, the ceremony will be scaled to match the world's most colossal sculpture.

Bush's speech will cap an hour-long ceremony marking the 50th anniversary of the completion of Mount Rushmore.

The event also will feature a host of celebrities and flights of jet fighters and a B-1 bomber from nearby Ellsworth Air Force Base.

And if the weather cooperates, a helium-filled balloon will raise a 120-by-80-foot American flag to hover above the chiseled faces of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt.

"It will be the largest attempted flag raising in U.S. history," said Tom Griffith of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Society, a non-profit organization that has supported the memorial since the carving began about six decades ago.

"This is history," Griffith said of the celebration, which also includes a fireworks display, a pancake feed, a rock 'n' roll concert, and an arts and crafts festival.

Bush will become the fourth president to visit Mount Rushmore.

Calvin Coolidge took part in a 1927 ceremony marking the start of sculptor Gutzon Borglum's work on the peak that juts above the pine-covered Black Hills in western South Dakota. Franklin D. Roosevelt helped dedicate the completion of Jefferson's face in 1936, and Dwight Eisenhower visited in 1953.

South Dakotans still cherish memories of the three previous presidential visits to Mount Rushmore, Griffith said. "This visit by President Bush will be no different."

During his brief visit to the Black Hills, Bush also will hike, fish and attend a barbecue.

The dedication ceremony originally was set for the Fourth of July, but it is being held a day earlier to accommodate Bush's schedule. The four living former presidents also were invited but chose not to attend.

Bob Hope was named honorary chairman of the ceremony, but he had to cancel because of problems with his eyes. Celebrities expected for the event are actors Jimmy Stewart, Billy Dee Williams, Barbara Eden and Barry Bostwick, and singers Rosemary Clooney and Johanna Meier.

Co-hosts of the event are two native South Dakotans, NBC news anchor Tom Brokaw and television personality Mary Hart.

A dedication ceremony to mark the completion of Mount Rushmore in 1941 was never held because of Borglum's death and the nation's entry into World War II.

Today's event also will mark the official kickoff of a campaign to raise $40 million to provide a face lift to the sculpture and the facilities that handle more than 2 million visitors a year.

Officials say the faces are in no apparent danger of collapsing, but they are studying the stability of the mountain and how to preserve it. The money also will help the National Park Service improve the visitors' center, amphitheater, and other buildings and services.

Because of security related to Bush's visit and to avoid a strain on the facilities and the road leading to Mount Rushmore, today's ceremony will be limited to 1,500 invited guests and another 2,000 people who won tickets in a drawing. Sixteen of the 360 men who helped carve the mountain will attend.

The National Park Service estimates that the average American derriere is 18 inches wide, which means the amphitheater benches will hold 1,300 people. The other guests will stand or sit on the ground under the pine trees that ring the amphitheater.

About 250 reporters from North America, Europe and Asia will cover the event, which will be broadcast live by CNN.

The memorial and state Highway 244 in the area of Mount Rushmore will be closed from 12:01 a.m. today until sometime in the evening after the ceremony, said Jim Popovich, the National Park Service's chief of interpretation.

The shutdown marks one of the first times the memorial has been closed for reasons other than weather or forest fires, but the closing was necessary to prevent traffic jams on the highway and the memorial, Popovich said.

However, Mount Rushmore plans to open again to the public this evening, and special events are planned throughout the Fourth of July weekend, he said. The original ceremony planned for sunrise on July 4 will now be open to the public, even though the dedication will have taken place the previous day.

The celebration also features a rock 'n' roll concert featuring Huey Lewis and the News and what's described as the largest fireworks display in South Dakota history tonight in Rapid City. Other events through the weekend include a Fourth of July parade and an arts and crafts festival.

Iowa disaster area list grows by 35 counties

Associated Press

DES MOINES — Agriculture Secretary Edward Madigan has added 35 Iowa counties to the list of disaster areas because of bad weather this spring and summer.

Madigan approved Gov. Terry Branstad's request to declare 12 counties as disaster areas and those declarations brought with them 23 neighboring counties which also will be eligible, Branstad aides said.

The declaration makes farmers eligible for emergency loan assistance, though they would have to qualify on a case-by-case basis. In addition, they can seek waivers of some farm program requirements, also on a case-by-case basis.

The damages have been caused by early spring flooding, followed by the onset of dry weather.

The latest declarations mean that only Dubuque, Jackson, Fremont, Sioux and Lyon counties are not under some kind of disaster declaration.

Declared disaster areas on Tuesday were:

Audubon, Cass, Cedar, Harrison, Johnson, Keokuk, Louisa, Monona, Muscatine, Pottawattamie, Washington and Woodbury.

Contiguous counties also covered are:

Adair, Adams, Benton, Carroll, Cherokee, Clinton, Crawford, Des Moines, Guthrie, Henry, Ida, Iowa, Jefferson, Jones, Linn, Mahaska, Mills, Montgomery, Plymouth, Poweshiek, Scott, Shelby and Wapello.

RECESSION

Iowa tax collections up from last year

State funds greater despite recession

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Despite recession worries and budget cuts, state tax collections in the just-completed fiscal year were 4.7 percent higher than the previous year, the Legislature's financial adviser said Tuesday.

And during the final month of the year, collections were a healthy 7.3

percent bigger than the same month last year, said Dennis Prouty, head of the Legislative Fiscal Bureau.

Prouty's revenue report came a day after Gov. Terry Branstad's order slashing state spending 3.25 percent across the board.

In making that reduction, Branstad said state collections were lagging short of projections because the nation's economic recession was continuing to dampen Iowa's economy.

Prouty's report showed tax collections continuing to grow, but below the level officials had hoped earlier in the year.

For instance, personal income taxes grew by 5.6 percent over the previous year, while sales tax collections grew by 5 percent, he said.

Those two taxes are mainstays of the state's budget as the two biggest revenue producers. Sales taxes also are generally considered a good measure of the state's economic health because they measure consumer spending and confidence on non-essential items.

Food and medicine are exempt from the state's 4 percent sales tax.

Posturing hurts health care

U.S. Rep. Fred Grandy tells officials in Omaha that insurance issues will take a back seat to the '92 presidential campaign.

may try to get through Congress a major health-care bill they know President Bush will veto, just to create a major issue for the campaign. Among the Democratic plans is the soon-to-be-introduced Health USA program offered by Sen. Bob Kerrey, D-Neb.

Bush needs to be prepared for any Democratic health-care initiative with a plan of his own and a strategy, Grandy said. The Bush administration has not paid enough attention to the issue, Grandy said.

As he has traveled his northwest Iowa district in recent months, Grandy said he has not held a single town meeting where the question of health care hasn't come up.

Problems are particularly acute in rural communities because farmers and small businessmen often have insufficient coverage and rural hospitals are highly dependent on Medicare, he said.

Grandy said his approach encourages employers to provide insurance through tax credits. For those companies that don't provide their own plans, there would be an assessment by the state to provide coverage under an umbrella plan, Grandy said.

During his meetings in Omaha, much discussion involved how to provide health insurance plans to small businesses with up to 25 employees, Grandy said. Mutual and other private companies have an interest in providing such coverage, he said.

Associated Press
OMAHA, Neb. — Significant change in the U.S. health-care system will likely take a back seat to political maneuvering until after the 1992 presidential election, Rep. Fred Grandy, R-Iowa, said.

Grandy has introduced his own health-care proposal and serves on a Republican health-care task force. He was in Omaha on Monday to talk with Mutual of Omaha officials about the health-care plans before Congress.

"We will see a lot more health-care politics than health-care policy between now and the presidential election," Grandy said.

He said he warned Mutual of Omaha officials that they are likely to see members of both parties "polarize health care for partisan advantage."

Butler Bridge to open by July 4

The board voted to increase the speed limit at the bridge to 35 mph once construction is finished.

The new Butler Bridge on Dubuque Street north of Interstate 80 will be open by July 4, the Johnson County Board of Supervisors learned Tuesday.

Doug Fredericks of the County Engineering Department told the board that construction would continue after Thursday. Guard rails are currently being installed, but seeding is scheduled for later and pier removal will take place after the water goes down. The speed limit will remain at 15 mph until these tasks are completed, said Fredericks.

In other matters, Peter Sheets of Hoover Nature Trail Inc. updated the board on the trail's progress through Johnson County. Twelve miles of the 115-mile trail will pass through northeastern Johnson County near Solon, Sheets said.

"The way it has been presented, we will build the trail then turn over management and maintenance to the Johnson County Conservation Committee," he explained.

"It's becoming more obvious the trail is not going to be inexpensive," Sheets said. "Before we get too far along, we should come to you and ask for support."

Robert Sayre, HNT president and UI English professor, told the board his group had raised $56,000 in cash and pledges with a goal of $200,000.

"Another thing that is very important in Johnson County is developing a linkage between Iowa City and the trail," said Sayre. "It will make an enormous difference in fund raising if people knew they could get on a bicycle and ride to the edge of town and get on the trail."

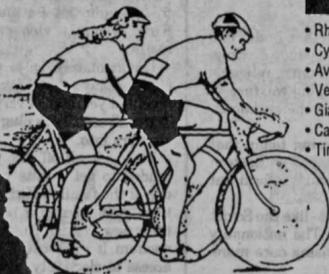

Sayre said HNT hopes to make the trail self-supporting through user fees.

ETHNIC TENSIONS

Boundaries from the past may ultimately haunt the future

Yugoslavia's federal disintegration is yet another reminder of a miscalculation of the power of nationalism — a miscalculation that began with the Versailles Treaty after World War I.

The solution for neutralizing enemies in the aftermath of WWI was redrawing the borders of the defeated countries. Dividing and reassembling countries into new entities, like the Versailles Treaty did, can never serve as a panacea. It is but a quick-fix, sowing the seeds for future disaster. The seeds of Versailles have long since germinated and flowered. Yugoslavia's dilemma is one such product.

Versailles was the quintessence of failure to understand nationalism. After the Austro-Hungarian Empire was "neutralized" at Versailles, the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes was formed from seven former provinces. Myriad nationalities were thrown together under one nation. This would later become Yugoslavia — a hodgepodge of ethnic groups (Serbians, Croats, Slovenes, Macedonians, Hungarians), religions (Orthodox, Catholic, Muslim) and languages. This bubbling mixture of ethnic differences could have only been held together by the authoritarian governments that ruled since WWI.

Yugoslavs and other Eastern Europeans are learning today that democracy after the old regime is a confusing dichotomy. For Eastern Europe, the winds of change carry the aroma of democratic reform but reek of the centralized systems of the past.

Since the end of the autocratic Tito regime, Yugoslavia — like the Soviet Union after Brezhnev — is eroding along ethnic lines. The nationality questions that Josip Broz Tito seemingly settled are arising once more. Democratic reform has exacerbated the situation.

Now the Yugoslav government is scrambling to hold itself together as a federation. Croatia and Slovenia are struggling to maintain their identities, fighting a war on two fronts: against the Yugoslav government and between themselves. Without a central force, the situation is likely to spiral out of control. The ethnic strife in Slovenia and Croatia has precariously placed Yugoslavia on the brink of a bloody civil war.

Presently, it is a Yugoslav civil war that worries world leaders. Tomorrow it may be unrest between Hungary and Romania. Ethnic clashes may continue until the past is completely undone. In the end, geographers will note that Europe in the year 2000 strangely resembles Europe a hundred years before. They may scratch their heads, wondering if history taught any lessons in the 20th century.

Rockefeller commission pinpoints source of child poverty epidemic

It is easy to be cynical about the just-issued report of the National Commission on Children: 557 pages of good intentions, two and a half years in the making, chaired by a U.S. Senator (Jay Rockefeller) with an eye on the White House. Who can be against kids?

And yet the report is very good. It not only describes in meticulous detail the melancholy economic condition of American children: fully 20 percent live in poverty. Its mountain of detail suggests the cause.

"On average, children are better off" — 46 percent better off — "in the 1990s than they were 20 to 30 years ago," the report explains. Yet there has been an explosion of way below average — poor — kids. Where do they come from?

Children who live with both parents are less poor than the average American. Only 7 percent of two-parent families are poor, about half the overall U.S. poverty rate. But 43 percent of mother-only families are poor. And the number of single-parent families has more than doubled in 20 years.

One in four kids lives with only one parent vs. one in eight 20 years ago. Where childhood poverty is endemic, a majority of families have only one parent. In 1960, out of every 20 births in America, one was to an unmarried mother. Today, the number is five.

The report makes clear the devastating economic consequences of single parenthood: "Nearly 75 percent of all American children growing up in single-parent families experience poverty for some period during their first 10 years, compared to 20 percent of children in two-parent families." Indeed, it is the surest ticket to chronic poverty: "Among children living only with their mothers, sustained poverty for seven or more years is common; among children living with both parents, it is rare."

Liberals love to talk about the "root cause" of social problems. Well, here we have a root cause staring us in the face. We have an epidemic of child poverty. It is a direct result of another epidemic, an epidemic of family breakdown.

How does government sitting in Washington solve a problem that is at root caused by absent fathers? It can't. There are no good political solutions to a problem that at base is not political nor even economic but moral and cultural.

In such circumstances government can do things at the margins, and the report makes some very good recommendations regarding the margins. It proposes a program of child support for mothers who identify and help find absent fathers so that they can be forced to contribute to their children's welfare. It protests against the more corrupting and irresponsible elements in the kid-oriented culture of music and video. At times, it even preaches old-fashioned virtue. It expressly advocates, for example, "delaying pregnancy until (parents) are financially and emotionally capable of assuming the obligations of parenthood."

Its most interesting idea is its grand proposal of a $1,000 cash giveback from the IRS to every child in America. Where does the money come from? Rockefeller says he will take it out of the space station. This is nonsense. The Bush administration is asking for $2 billion next year for the space station. The Rocky grant will cost $40 billion a year.

The report talks hopefully about taxes "generated on the purchase of luxury items." More nonsense. Taxing yachts was tried in the 1990 budget agreement. It has proved so useless as a revenue raiser and so effective as a job destroyer (yachts are bought by the rich but built by working stiffs) that Congress will likely repeal it this year.

There is no free lunch. Cut taxes here, and you have to raise them elsewhere. Here is where the Rocky grant gets interesting. The elderly do not generally have children under 18. If we raise taxes to pay for the Rocky grant, we will have silently affected an intergenerational cash transfer from the elderly to their children.

This is the most promising, if least remarked upon, consequence of the Rocky grant. There is a general recognition that over the last 50 years the elderly have been disproportionately favored by the government. But any attempt to transfer money back to the young directly by cutting Social Security is political suicide. The report would never admit this, but a Rocky grant financed by a general tax increase is a splendid back door way to do the same thing.

That is the best thing to be said for the grant. Its ostensible promise, to help children, is far more speculative. There is no guarantee that a simple check in the mail that goes not to the child but to the parent will be spent on the child. The only sure incentive created by the grant is for people to have more children, since it lessens the financial burden. (One of the reasons European countries have such direct child payments is that with rapidly dwindling populations they want to encourage people to make babies. This is hardly an American problem.)

No one has the slightest idea how government can prevent the dissolution of the American family. Until someone does, childhood poverty will be a growing problem, highly impervious to solution. In the interim, we have the Rockefeller report. It deserves credit for clarifying the issue and for offering the best current thinking on what precious little government can do about it.

July 4 tradition ends with a turkey

Because my heart pines for the land of no pines — the flatlands of Nebraska — I'll be home tomorrow for one of my family's traditional July 4 celebrations.

Tradition is very important to my family — especially in the Rogers' Independence Day celebration. Nonetheless, being good Americans, we never keep the same tradition two years running. "We're not about to become one of those stuck-in-the-mud type of families," Mom always says about our holiday traditions.

Of course, I always point out to Mom that we were running the risk of being stuck-in-the-mud over the tradition of not keeping any one tradition for two years straight. So this year we're breaking with that tradition and keeping last year's Fourth of July tradition: All the Rogers get together to feast on an Independence Day turkey (with all the trimmings — natch).

The Rogers (with the Rodgers) are the cause of today's Independence Day celebrations. The story is long and uninteresting so get another cup of coffee. (What else do you have to do on a hot July 3 anyway?)

I don't believe that I've mentioned before that my family comes from a long line of village idiots. That wasn't always the family trade, of course. Back in medieval times, before the Rogers went into idiocy — at least professionally — the family first sought its fortune in selling Kirby vacuum cleaners castle-to-castle.

Unfortunately, sales weren't very brisk because electricity hadn't been invented yet, and so very few castles had wall sockets to plug the vacuum cleaners into.

To top it all off, the manor lords tended to get a mite peevish when one of the family's Kirby representatives would dump a pile of soot on their new Persian rugs and then not vacuum it up because they had no access to electricity. The pitch, "But your lordship, just imagine how clean it would be if you did have electricity," didn't work all that well.

So, initially, the family went into idiocy on the weekends just to make the ends meet.

Even as a full-time occupation, however, idiocy didn't pay too well in Scotland. So after a long time at trying to make idiocy a going concern, the family resolved to split up. Half the family really wanted to have a real go at making idiocy pay — so they put a silly "d" in Rogers and moved south to try and be idiots for the English pig-dogs. (That branch of the family later made a name for themselves in the restoration of the crown to England after the Protector died.)

Most of the rest of the family, however, immigrated to America. But even though there were fewer Scots around, idiocy still didn't pay very well, and the demand for Kirby vacuum cleaners didn't pick up much either. (In exasperation at the low sales, the family finally sold the business to a young Thomas Edison.)

As a result of all these bad employment decisions, the family went deeply into debt. So deeply in debt, in fact, that it became a much celebrated fact at family reunions — we had many a debtor's prison named in honor of our tremendous patronage.

After a series of sporadic get-togethers in the late 1600s, the family finally decided that they had to make reunions a regular event. At first they decided to get together biannually. But that only caused a big argument over whether "biannual" meant twice a year or once every other year. (The Rodgers branch maintained that it meant once every three years.)

The family finally just split the difference and decided to get together once a year on July 4.

As I remarked before, the Rogers' debt was a much remarked upon fact. So dependent were we on the bad loans of others, so much were we always in debt and so pleased were we that we could get other people to pay for our excesses, that not only did the family boast about it — at least after our boast of unsurpassable idiocy — but the family also named our reunions, "independence day."

Well, to make a long and tedious story longer (albeit, not "tediouser"), the celebrations proceeded apace over the next few decades. Sometime during that period the Rogers' "non-tradition" holiday tradition began.

On one July 4 in the 1770s (the year has been lost to memory), the family was celebrating April Fool's Day, and one Bladderswhale Rogers, who was recently indentured as a servant to Thomas Jefferson for unpaid debts, thought of a really great joke: "Let's write a document declaring America's independence from Great Britain and forge all of the Founding Father's signatures to it," ol' Bladderswhale said.

Everyone agreed that the joke sounded great. So Bladderswhale, a little tipsy at the time, wrote up the document. (In fact, he was so tipsy that he spelled "inalienable" as "unalienable" — which everyone thought was really funny.) And everyone laughed even louder when clowning around. Bladderswhale forged John Hancock's signature really big. But some Rogers thought that it ruined the joke, because everyone knew that Hancock wouldn't sign his name so silly.

Bladderswhale originally intended simply to tack the document onto Jefferson's door and then ring and run. Unfortunately, since he was a bit tipsy, he tacked it onto the wrong door. Sadder yet for the joke was that the door belonged to the house of the Royal Governor.

Well, he didn't think it was so funny, and neither did King George. The fateful decision was made, however, when the King's military attaché — one Sir Byron Rodgers (the family inherited the knighthood for service indispensable to the Restoration) — informed the king that he had relatives over in America and that "at the first sight of British Redcoats they'll run away like Kirby vacuum cleaners."

Of course, the Rogers did run away at the first hint of a Redcoat. Happily, however, many other nascent Americans did not. And the rest, as they say, is history.

Jim Rogers' column appears Wednesdays on the Viewpoints page.

Pregnant mothers must bear responsibility for health and safety of children they carry

To the Editor: Michael Kinsley's assertion that moderation is safer than abstinence during pregnancy is not only grossly inaccurate, but also terribly dangerous, ["Moderation, safer than abstinence," June 28]. It is not the campaign to warn women of the risks of drinking during pregnancy that is out of hand, but rather the number of babies born with physical, mental and emotional disabilities due to the growing number of alcohol- and drug-addicted mothers.

It is hardly "absurd," as you put it, to act on the assumption of better safe than sorry when it comes to minimizing risks during pregnancy. If a woman makes the decision to follow a pregnancy to term, it is then her responsibility to make sure she does whatever she can to keep that fetus healthy. It has yet to be determined how much alcohol a mother must drink in order to adversely affect her baby. And the amount is likely to differ with each woman and each fetus. Therefore, the logical thing to do is to abstain during pregnancy. Other risks you compare to drinking while pregnant, such as breathing city air, are unavoidable and out of the woman's control. Alcohol consumption is not.

You also maintain that the avoidance of drinking alcohol would cause enough stress on the mother that her pregnancy would be affected by that stress. Well, someone whose only means of reducing stress is to ingest a drug such as alcohol or someone who reacts to abstaining from alcohol with a high amount of anxiety, is someone who has an alcohol problem. And what you should be using newspaper space for is demanding to know why there aren't treatment facilities that will treat alcohol- and drug-addicted pregnant women. There are only a handful of treatment centers in the country that will admit a pregnant woman, and the waiting list for those facilities is so long that the woman would most likely not be pregnant anymore by the time she got in.

I hope, Michael, you think a little harder before you casually give advice about something you know nothing about. I suppose being a male you can't imagine having to give up any of your own pleasures for the safety and well-being of a new life. But that is the reality of being pregnant.

Empowerment from overhead

To the Editor: Hooray to UI Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs Nancy "Rusty" Barcelo. At a recent IC Gay and Lesbian Pride parade she publicly acknowledged her sexuality while stating that this was "the most empowering experience of my life," ["Gays, lesbians march proudly in IC gathering," June 24]. Those who work to eradicate discrimination in all its forms need to understand and appreciate the significance such statements by high-profile people have. It can help others in their personal process of acknowledging and rejoicing in their own sexuality and choice. And maybe — just maybe — those individuals who have not learned to look beyond the personal, private choices of others regarding sexuality can begin to realize that these decisions do not affect ability, success and respect deserved.

He said that one armored vehicle received a direct hit from an anti-tank missile before the Slovenians fled. Slovenian television said eight soldiers were killed and at least three wounded in the clash near Otocec, in Krakovski Forest not far from the Croatian frontier.

Yugoslav air force jets, arriving to aid the besieged soldiers, screamed overhead and fired on the trucks and heavy vehicles used by the Slovenes to block the road. They also sprayed machine-gun fire into the woods, but the Slovenian attackers apparently had withdrawn earlier.

One charred body was still seated inside the vehicle hit by rocket fire. One of the wounded soldiers, cloaked in a blanket, was bundled into a reporter's car and driven to a hospital.

Soldiers with the federal armored unit said they had been retreating to Croatia despite Slovenian demands that the troops surrender their weapons before moving back to barracks.

"They want us to walk away only in our underpants. That is something we cannot accept," said one of the soldiers, Sinisa Milosavljevic.

Heavy fighting also erupted Tuesday on Slovenia's frontiers with Austria and Italy, police said.

Federal troops fought back with mortar fire, tanks, artillery and warplanes.

Also Tuesday, the army opened fire on a crowd of Croats throwing stones and Molotov cocktails at 20 federal tanks as they left a barracks in Zagreb, capital of Croatia. One civilian was reported seriously injured.

The fighting in Yugoslavia is the result of a protracted crisis in the ethnically divided federation of six republics and two provinces, which has been left virtually leaderless.

But he also said that in deciding whether to publicly support or oppose Thomas' nomination, "we have to compare what might happen if we go against him and he doesn't make it; who will the president appoint?"

The abortion-rights group distributed copies of Thomas' speech given to the conservative Heritage Foundation, in which he praised the essay by Heritage trustee Lehrman.

"All persons cannot be endowed both with the liberty to take innocent life by abortion and with the inalienable right to live," Lehrman wrote. Later in the essay he referred to the abortion rights granted in the 1973 decision as "a spurious right born exclusively of judicial supremacy with not a single trace of lawful authority, implicit or explicit, in the actual text of history of the Constitution itself."

On Monday, Thomas declined to answer when asked about his views on abortion, saying he would not discuss any substantive issues before his confirmation hearings.

"Bush is firmly against quotas yet this could be characterized as filling a black quota seat on the Supreme Court," Wing said.

"The president's statement that the selection of Judge Thomas had nothing to do with race is an insult to our intelligence," added Shane. Thomas' qualifications for the job have also been addressed by legal scholars and political experts.

"The idea that a 43-year-old lawyer with one year of experience on the federal courts is the most qualified to be a Supreme Court justice is a very strange idea," Shane said.

But Cryss Farley, executive director of the Iowa Civil Liberties Union, said that who fills Marshall's seat may not have much effect on the court overall.

The last few Supreme Court decisions have involved votes of 6-3 or even 7-2. With such an overwhelming conservative majority, Thomas' appointment may only represent a continuation of the conservative trend on the Supreme Court, which UI law Professor Robert Clinton said began in 1976 and culminated with the appointment of Justice Antonin Scalia. "The shift on the court has already occurred and his resignation simply confirmed this fact," Farley agreed.

But local conservatives are cheering Marshall's resignation and the possible appointment of Thomas.

"It's a great opportunity not only for Bush but the Republican Party to get another conservative member on the Supreme Court," said Jason Gross, state chairman of the College Republicans.

Gross said Thomas is an excellent candidate for the seat and added that his last appointment to the EEOC was readily approved by Congress.

But both those opposed to and in favor of Thomas' appointment agree he has a very good chance of landing a seat on the nation's highest court. Wing predicted that although Thomas will undergo vigorous questioning, his chances are pretty good. Shane gave Thomas a 90 percent chance of getting the appointment.

"We're certainly not going to have cigarette squads," Strand said. "I have difficulty picturing an officer being specifically alert to a young person smoking."

One of the beneficial aspects of the new law, according to Strand, is the ability for the police to use it as probable cause to discuss other matters, such as public intoxication, with the suspect.

Strand said he doubts the law will keep all minors from smoking.

"I suspect it will be a deterrent for some people," he said. "Other people will choose to ignore it. Just like those who choose to drink underage."

Mark Leiter and Paul Gibson relieved before Mike Henneman pitched the final two innings for his 12th save. Baltimore, which got four hits from Mike Devereaux, left a runner in scoring position in each of the last four innings.

NEW YORK — Matt Nokes drove in three runs and Jesse Barfield hit his 17th homer as surging New York handed hapless Cleveland its sixth straight loss and 50th of the season.

While the Indians continued to crumble, the Yankees won their fourth straight game and seventh in the last eight. The Indians, 24-50, have lost 22 of their last 25 games to fall deep into last place in the American League East.

Don Mattingly had two of New York's 15 hits, extending his batting streak to 15 games, drove in a run and scored twice as the Yankees moved within three games of .500. Cleveland's Carlos Baerga went 4-for-4 with a homer and double as the teams combined for 29 hits.

Wade Taylor (4-2) gave up three runs and eight hits in six innings to beat Mike York (0-1). Steve Farr, the fourth New York pitcher, got the final two outs for his 11th save.

Reds 6, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Chris Sabo hit a three-run homer and Mariano Duncan added a solo shot, leading the surging Cincinnati Reds to a 6-3 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

Jack Armstrong (6-6) retired the first 13 batters before Ron Gant hit his 14th homer of the season, and Mike Bell hit his first of the year in the seventh for the other Atlanta run off the Reds starter. Armstrong gave up four hits in seven innings as the Reds won their second consecutive game and seventh in eight starts.

Ted Power pitched the last two innings in relief of Armstrong, giving up Terry Pendleton's eighth homer of the year in the ninth.

The slumping Braves, who lost their fourth in a row to fall to .500 for the first time since May 5, fell behind in the second inning 2-0 when Duncan led off with his third homer of the year off Charlie Leibrandt (7-6). Paul O'Neill and Joe Oliver then singled, Armstrong sacrificed and O'Neill scored on Barry Larkin's groundout.

Mets 2, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Dave Magadan singled home Kevin Elster with two out in the ninth inning and the

New York Mets beat the Montreal Expos 2-1 Tuesday night, sending the Expos to their ninth consecutive defeat.

Elster led off the ninth by drawing a walk from Barry Jones (3-6) and was sacrificed to second by Kevin McReynolds. After Howard Johnson was intentionally walked and Hubie Brooks flied out, Magadan lined a 3-2 pitch from Scott Ruskin into center.

Alejandro Pena (5-0) pitched the eighth and Franco worked the ninth for his 17th save, striking out pinch-hitter Junior Noboa for the third out with runners at first and third.

PENN STATE: Big Ten coaches claim innocence

say that tongue-in-cheek . . . but I'll trade him schedules if he wants to."

"He may prefer to stay with that schedule," Davis said.

Penn State will begin conference play in 1992-93 after a year as an independent. Its 1991-92 games against smaller than average schools prompted Parkhill to complain: "I'm disappointed more Big Ten people didn't help out. It's not that they couldn't. They wouldn't."

Heathcote and Davis said it was the other way around.

"As soon as we knew of their dilemma, we put it on the agenda and said we should help Penn State any way we can," Heathcote said. "Everyone was willing to play in December, but not in January in February, and that's when he needed games."

Playing January and February games against Penn State would be bad for Big Ten business because they wouldn't provide as much, if any, TV money as non-Big Ten schools will. All of the Big Ten's non-conference games in January and February will be on television.

"We're locked into what the networks pick," Heathcote said. "The networks pick the more glamorous, highly rated teams. Again, Penn State is on the outside looking in."

Penn State will play at Illinois on Nov. 25 and at Ohio State in a TV game Jan. 2. Temple and Georgia are on the Lions' schedule, but so is Maryland-Baltimore County, American, Butler and Old Dominion — twice each. There also are Lafayette, American and Morgan State.

"He hit us in the middle of the reduction of total games, from 28 down to 27, and it comes at a time when travel from our campuses is something we're trying to keep to a minimum," Davis said.

"I'm sure the other coaches would have loved to help them. I didn't hear any dissatisfaction with playing Penn State. It was just everything else."

When Penn State's move to the Big Ten was announced 1 1/2 years ago, Indiana's Bobby Knight complained about traveling in the middle of the winter to play Penn State in a 6,846-seat arena built in the 1920s.

The school has received permission to design a new arena, but concerns about the weather remain.

"You want to take the kids on a holiday trip to Hawaii, or Florida, or New Orleans and get away from the Midwestern winter," said Davis, who previously coached Lafayette in Easton, Pa.

"State College is a beautiful spot, but . . ."

WIMBLEDON: McEnroe bows out ungracefully

he was headed for trouble.

Angry with himself for hitting a backhand wide with Edberg serving in the sixth game of the match, he dropped his racket and pouted, then went on to lose the game on the next point.

When Edberg served an ace to start the eighth game, McEnroe screamed to a linesman that the ball was wide by a foot, marked the spot with his racket, argued with the umpire and finally returned with his head still shaking. Three points later, Edberg won the game at love.

McEnroe argued mightily about a call on a service winner by Edberg in the 10th game, but lost both the beef and the game — again at love.

Yet, through it all, McEnroe managed to hold his serve, fending off break points in the first and 11th games, and push the set to a tiebreaker.

The purpose of all his protests and dramatics, McEnroe said, was to find a way to break Edberg's serve. Edberg didn't let it bother him as he dropped only one point in his last four service games of the first set.

"You want every call to be right, because he's tough to break," McEnroe said. "He volleys real well behind his serve, and I had some opportunities."

"That's why, when people make mistakes by that much, it throws you a little bit, because you hope they're as into the match as you are. Every little point counts on grass. You get up 0-15, and it just puts a little bit of thinking in a person's mind. I think I was making him feel a little bit uncomfortable."

But the complaints became a distraction for McEnroe, his concentration wandered and his tennis collapsed.

He smacked a forehand volley long after serving to open the tiebreaker, and fell behind 5-1. He scratched back to 5-4, including on a feathery light vintage volley, but wound up losing 7-4 when he netted an easy backhand volley at set point. McEnroe's groan resounded in the upper reaches of the stadium.

That was the end of the match right there — even with at least two sets to go. McEnroe slumped in his chair, burying his face in a towel, while his wife, Tatum O'Neal, and friend, guitarist Eric Clapton, fidgeted in their seats.

Edberg turned up his game a notch, playing flawlessly all over the court, as he won 15 straight points in one stretch and 20 of 22 to take the second set in 23 minutes.

While McEnroe moaned or stared at linesmen, Edberg jauntily flipped his racket and played on.

McEnroe finally broke Edberg's serve for the only time in the match and went ahead 3-0 in the third set. But Edberg went on another sweet surge, winning 20 of 25 points to take the next five games, and closed out the match at love in the last game with a service winner.

McEnroe's final outburst — the one that could result in a fine — came in the eighth game of the third set, when he cursed repeatedly at a linesman about an ace by Edberg that he thought was out by a foot.

McEnroe, a three-time Wimbledon winner and two-time runnerup, calmed down as soon as the match ended and graciously called Edberg "a natural" on grass.

"He deserves his due. He outplayed me," McEnroe said. "Who's to say, even if I had won some points, if they hadn't made one mistake the whole match, (that) I would have won. In the future, I would hope to completely avoid showing any signs of letting it seem like it adversely affected me, because he's the type of guy that can build on it a little bit, maybe make him feel better. That's where it hurt."

McEnroe said he still plans on playing tennis once more to give himself a final shot at winning a major championship again.

"I think I can, but certainly it's a long shot," he said. "It doesn't get any easier as you get older. It would be fantastic to be able to do it. I'm certainly not expecting it to happen, but if it happened I wouldn't be in shock. Certainly I'm not going to bet my life savings on it."

Edberg doubted that McEnroe would ever regain his championship form.

"I think that it's a little bit too late," Edberg said. "He still can play some very, very good tennis out there, but he is not as consistent as he was before. He has lost a little bit of speed as well, but you can see there is a lot of greatness out there when he is playing."

Twins' Erickson put on 15-day disabled list

DI wire services

TORONTO — Scott Erickson, one of the favorites to be the American League's starting pitcher in next week's All-Star Game, was placed on the 15-day disabled list Tuesday by the Minnesota Twins with a strained right elbow.

Erickson leads the league with a 12-3 record, a 1.83 ERA and three shutouts in 16 starts. He is in the league's top 10 in complete games (4), innings pitched (122 2/3) and winning percentage (.800).

Erickson said the elbow has been bothering him for the last five starts.

PHILADELPHIA — Lee Thomas' contract as general manager of the Phillies was extended two years by Philadelphia president Bill Giles on Tuesday.

Although the Phillies are 32-44 and last in the National League East, Giles said he and his partners felt Thomas had the major league team and the farm system headed in the right direction.

Thomas said that he was frustrated that the team didn't have more victories, but he didn't blame injuries. The Phillies have had 14 players on the disabled list this season, including seven before Tuesday night's game against St. Louis.

Since joining Philadelphia, Thomas has acquired Len Dykstra, Terry Mulholland, Ken Howell, Dale Murphy, John Kruk, Randy Ready, Charlie Hayes, Roger McDowell, Joe

Boever and Wally Backman.

Dale Ellis has back surgery

MILWAUKEE — Dale Ellis of the Milwaukee Bucks underwent back surgery in California on Tuesday to repair a herniated disc, the NBA team announced.

The Bucks said the 6-foot-7 Ellis had the discectomy at Seton Medical Center in Daly City, Calif., under the direction of Dr. Arthur White, an orthopedic surgeon. The team said the surgery was a success.

The team said Ellis, 30, was expected to stay in the hospital four to seven days and would begin rehabilitation under White's care for an additional four to seven days.

Ellis averaged 19.3 points in 21 games as a

Cardinals winning without HR punch

R.B. Fallstrom
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — The ghost of Roger Maris is giving St. Louis Cardinals' power hitters a run for their money.

Maris hit a record 61 home runs in 1961, and the way it's going he's got the entire Cardinals' team beat for the second time in six seasons. Through 75 games, near the midpoint of the season, they've got only 23 home runs to trail the major leagues.

That's only five more than Minnesota's Chili Davis. At this rate, they'll have trouble topping Cecil Fielder's 51-homer season from 1990, let alone challenge Maris.

Think about it. "I never think about it," Cardinals manager Joe Torre said with a sigh. "It's a waste of time. I'd rather think about something useful, something I have control over."

Torre has guided the surprising Cardinals into contention in the NL East without a big banger, combining airtight defense with timely hitting and team speed. But he's as wishful as the next manager about building a lineup around, say, a Reggie Jackson.

"Of course, you'd like to have a guy, one swing of the bat and you score a run," Torre said. "We don't have anybody capable of that."

Instead, Pedro Guerrero leads the team with four homers, and went from May 18 to June 25 between fingers. This, from a guy who hit 32 home runs in back-to-back seasons in 1982 and 1983, and hit 33 seasons, but he's still looking for his first this season.

Light-hitting second baseman Jose Oquendo has hit only 11 home runs in his eight-year career.

"A lot of balls here would be out anywhere else, but here they're doubles off the wall or routine fly balls," Lankford complained. "One minute the ball carries and the next it just dies. It doesn't really matter how hard you hit it."

"So, why try for home runs here?" They don't hit them anywhere else, either, though. Never have, really. At least in the last 20 years or so. And it's been 51 years since they last had a home run champion (Johnny Mize, 43).

Last year they trailed the majors with 73 homers, 43 at Busch and 30 on the road. In the last 10 seasons, they've never topped the century mark and have finished last in the National League eight times. They hit only 58 in 1986.

Even Jack Clark's 35-home run season in 1987 couldn't boost them past 94 and another year of dead-end power numbers.

"I knew when we left spring training we couldn't afford the luxury of swinging and missing," Torre said.

in 1985 for the Dodgers. Guerrero blames it on spacious Busch Stadium, which caused him to retool his swing for the gaps rather than the fences.

"This park," said Guerrero, "is not my type of park. You've got to be strong to hit one out of here. I don't think I'm ever going to be able to hit one out to straight center."

Rookie center fielder Ray Lankford also blames it on Busch, where it's 383 feet to the gaps and 414 to straightaway center. He was in double figures for home runs in each of his three minor league

Q Before Bob Welch won 27 last season, who was the last pitcher to win 25 games?
 Tuesday's Answer: New York Mets, San Diego Padres, Montreal Expos, Houston Astros.

WIMBLEDON

McEnroe goes down whining

Steve Wilstein
 The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — The cursed rain intruded again on this wettest of Wimbledon, too late to save John McEnroe from a stormy exit and too soon to suit Martina Navratilova.

The rain pelted Centre Court on Tuesday just as Navratilova was scratching back against a fusillade of forehands by Jennifer Capriati, the girl with a look of a future champion.

Capriati calls the nine-time Wimbledon winner a "legend" but certainly didn't play in awe of her in taking the first set 6-4 before falling behind a break at 3-2 when the rain came.

Stefan Edberg had long since endured McEnroe's foul-mouthed tantrums and rare moments of artistry to beat the three-time champion 7-6, 6-1, 6-4.

A brouhaha developed over whether McEnroe would be fined for abusive language toward a linesman that was broadcast, albeit with bleeps, on British television. The only punishment McEnroe received during the match was from Edberg's serves and volleys.

Jim Courier and David Wheaton, the vanguard of a new generation of Americans making their mark in men's tennis, joined Edberg in the quarterfinals along with Michael Stich. Guy Forget led Tim Mayotte 4-3 in the fourth set, and Thierry Champion led Derrick Rostagno 4-1 in the fifth set when the rain hit.

Steffi Graf, the women's top seed, had already taken off after reaching the semifinals for the fifth straight year with a 6-1, 6-3 victory over No. 7 Zina Garrison. The American beat Graf in the semifinals here last year before losing to Navratilova.

Mary Joe Fernandez, the women's fifth seed, reached the semis here for the first time, beating fourth-seeded Arantxa Sanchez Vicario, 7-5, 3-6, 6-1.

Capriati, 15, displayed as much power and poise as the 34-year-old Navratilova, but offered a contrasting style.

Whereas Navratilova charged the net at every opportunity, Capriati slugged from the baseline and came in only when she had Navratilova very deep and off balance.

Capriati's most effective weapons proved to be her return of service and forehand passing shots. After an exchange of breaks in the eighth and ninth games of the first set, Capriati broke Navratilova again with two forehand returns on the final two points.

Navratilova complained about the last point, a crisp pass down the line, because she thought the serve had been long. The brief argument got her nowhere, and she had to regroup quickly to stay in the match.

Capriati started out the second set with a service winner and an ace. Navratilova pounced back with four straight points to break her and nearly got another break in the fifth game. But Capriati survived four break points to hold to 3-2.

Edberg said he could see "the greatness out there" in McEnroe's wrist-flick volleys and sweeping serves, yet knew the 32-year-old American couldn't keep it up.

McEnroe's histrionics and complaints started early, a sure sign

Blind query to Jim Frey

Jim Frey
 General Manager
 Clark and Addison Streets
 Chicago, IL 60613

Dear Mr. Frey,

First of all, let me congratulate you on the Cubs' recently broken three-game winning streak. It was fun while it lasted.

I am writing to you with the hope of being considered for one of the current openings in your starting rotation. Despite the recent woes of your club, I would be proud to wear a Cubs uniform.

I was a right-handed swingman for three years with the Loyola Merchants of Los Altos, Calif., Little League before leaving the game at the age of 12. I had a fastball and a changeup, and in 1977 saved a career-high five games, including the pennant clincher against Los Altos Pet Supply.

I still have the changeup.

While my experience in the field of major league pitching is somewhat limited (well, non-existent), I believe I can make up for it with a youthful enthusiasm for the game that seems to be missing from your current staff.

While I am aware that the Cubs are not advertising for pitching help, I couldn't help noticing that fellow right-hander Shawn Boskie was quickly sent back to Iowa after yesterday's 13-4 loss to the division-leading Pittsburgh Pirates. I hope you will consider me as a replacement, preferably as a starter, but also in the bullpen.

In addition to the youthful enthusiasm and the changeup, I can also offer you an opportunity to relieve the Cubs' current financial burden. Currently, I make about $350 a month as the sports editor of The Daily Iowan, and received no salary whatsoever for my previous baseball experience.

As far as I'm concerned, anything with major medical and I'm in the black, and judging by the Cubs' disabled list, you offer major medical. In short, I am a steal.

I'm sure I don't have to remind you that Boskie gave up eight runs on 11 hits in three-plus innings yesterday. Or that three of your starters gave up a total of 14 runs to the Cardinals four games earlier. I can do the same thing for you, but a lot more cheaply.

For instance, Rick Sutcliffe is taking in $2 million a year for throwing 100 pitches in simulated games. Danny Jackson is making $3 million for spending more time on the disabled list than on the mound. When he was healthy, Jackson compiled an ERA of 5.67. Sutcliffe 13.50.

And speaking of money, I hope you saved the receipt on Dave Smith because it's time to trade him back in, maybe for Jim Deshaies or Jim Clancy. I guarantee you, if I were used as sparingly and cleverly, I too would have 16 saves, and maybe less than his four blown saves.

All for a hell of a lot less than $3 million a year.

While I realize petitioning for a major league pitching job via a blind query like this is a longshot, I am somewhat encouraged by the appearance on your staff of Heath Slocumb. I suspect he got his job the same way.

While Slocumb is a rather imposing figure on the mound, he does seem to have trouble throwing the ball the full 62-foot distance

MAJOR LEAGUES

Pittsburgh's Andy Van Slyke slides in as the Pirates brutalized the Cubs 13-4 Tuesday in Wrigley.

Pirates send Boskie packing

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Gary Varsho always thought he'd hit his first major-league home run at Wrigley Field.

A member of the Chicago Cubs' organization from 1982 until he was traded to Pittsburgh last spring, Varsho homered twice, tripled, hit a sacrifice fly and knocked in six runs, leading the Pirates' 22-hit attack in a 13-4 victory over the Cubs on Tuesday that sent Chicago starter Shawn Boskie down to Triple-A Iowa.

In the process, Varsho, who had driven in five runs all season, drove in six. He also had a triple and a sacrifice fly.

"I put a lot of time here and I always thought my first home run would be in Wrigley Field," said Varsho, who spent parts of each of the last three seasons with the Cubs.

Varsho also was pleased because his parents, brother and sister were at the game, having driven down from Wisconsin.

"We wanted Varsho because he is an experienced pinch hitter," manager Jim Leyland said of the trade that sent Steve Carter to the Cubs. "We gave up a good young player to get him. He knows his role and accepts it."

The Pirates seemed to know their roles in avenging their 6-5 loss in 13 innings Monday night.

The 22 hits were the most for the Pirates since they had 23 on Aug. 11, 1979, against Philadelphia. The team record is 27 in 1922, also against Philadelphia.

Bobby Bonilla and Mike LaValliere had four hits each. In addition to Varsho's triple, Bonilla, Orlando Merced and Bobby Bonds also tripled while Andy Van Slyke started the scoring with his eighth homer, in the first inning.

The Cubs not only lost the game but also second baseman Ryne Sandberg, who bruised his right hand stealing second base in the first inning.

X-rays were negative and reports were Sandberg might miss five to seven days but Sandberg said, "I'll be back as soon as I'm able to handle a bat. That should be in a day or two. It's not broken."

Benefitting from the Pirates' biggest hit total of the season was winner Doug Drabek (7-8), who allowed nine hits in gaining his fifth victory in six decisions.

The outcome was costly to Boskie (3-8), who shelled for 11 hits and eight runs in three-plus innings and was optioned to Iowa after the game.

The Cubs purchased the contract of right-hander Laddie Renfroe from Iowa to replace Boskie, whose successors didn't fare better

Surging Blue Jays keep Twins down

The Associated Press

TORONTO — A bases-loaded single by Rance Mulliniks in the ninth inning gave the surging Toronto Blue Jays — who overcame four errors — a 4-3 victory over the sliding Minnesota Twins in a battle of division leaders Tuesday night.

Mulliniks singled to center off reliever Steve Bedrosian after the Blue Jays had loaded with bases with none out against Terry Leach (0-1). Devon White had an infield single and took third on a hit to right by Roberto Alomar before Leach walked Joe Carter intentionally.

The winning hit was the 16th for Toronto, which won for the 11th time in 13 games. The Twins have lost six of seven games. Reliever Duane Ward (2-3) pitched a perfect ninth.

The Blue Jays had tied it in the eighth when Manuel Lee hit a two-out double off Leach. He scored pinch-runner Derek Bell, who entered the game after John Olerud reached on a one-out infield single to Leach. Bell stole his first major league base prior to Lee's double.

Tigers 4, Orioles 3
BALTIMORE — Cecil Fielder hit a long homer to tie Minnesota's Cliff Davis for the American League lead and added an RBI single, helping Bill Gullickson win his 10th game for Detroit.

Fielder's 19th homer, measured at 440 feet, gave the Tigers a 4-0 lead against Jeff Ballard in the fifth inning. Ballard (4-9) has lost his last 11 decisions at home.

Gullickson (10-4) gave up seven hits and a walk in 5½ innings in matching his victory total for last season in 32 starts with Houston. In his 17th start this year, he became the first Detroit pitcher since 1988 to win 10 games before

BIG TEN BASKETBALL

Big Ten coaches say Penn St. was too picky

Kelly P. Kissel
 Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Big Ten coaches said Tuesday that Penn State wasn't included on many of their basketball schedules next season for a variety of reasons, including shorter schedules, TV games and geography.

One athletic director said the Nittany Lions didn't make his schedule because they never replied to an offer for a late-season game at Chicago.

"I asked them if they were interested and I never heard back from them," said Northwestern athletic director Bruce Corrie, who's still looking for a Feb. 29 game. Penn State coach Bruce Arkhill criticized league members Monday for not finding room on their schedules for his team next season, but coaches and athletic directors said the Lions' appeal couldn't be answered by everyone.

Michigan State coach Jud Heathcote said TV played a role. Iowa's Tom Davis said Midwestern teams, like birds, like to fly south in the winter. Both suggested Parkhill enjoy a weaker schedule while he has a chance.

"It could be a blessing. He should enjoy a 20-win season while he can," Heathcote said. See PENN STATE, Page 7

Texas man injured by firecracker at reservoir

CORALVILLE RESERVOIR (AP) — A 33-year-old Texas man was injured when a firecracker exploded in his hand on the Forest Hill Reservoir on July 3, authorities said.

The Johnson County Sheriff's Department said William Stumpff of The Colony, Texas, was hurt by the accident about 3:30 p.m. at the Coralville Reservoir.

He was taken to UI Hospitals and Clinics, where a hospital spokeswoman said Stumpff was listed in fair condition Thursday evening.

Witnesses said the man lost at least part of his thumb in the explosion, but the hospital would give no further details of his condition.

Victim weds man charged with attempted murder

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP) — Melanien Lnenicka watched as the man accused of attempting to kill her pleaded guilty to reduced charges and was sentenced to jail. Then she married him.

James MacIn Jr., 21, had been charged with attempted murder, willful injury and terrorism in the April 23 attack on Lnenicka in the Cedar Rapids apartment the couple shared.

MacIn has been held in the Linn County Jail since then and was whisked back to the jail after the brief wedding ceremony performed by Magistrate Pamela Lewis in a Cedar Rapids courtroom.

Police officer taped beating car theft suspect

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A bystander videotaped a police officer striking a car theft suspect at least two dozen times with a baton, and the police chief said he appeared the officer acted improperly.

"It doesn't look good," Fort Worth Police Chief Thomas Winham said Wednesday about the beating earlier that day. "There were many blows struck with the baton. He struck the suspect a number of times; I don't know how many times."

Connecticut still closed due to budget impasse

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Some July 4 campers ignored "closed" signs outside their favorite Connecticut parks amid a state budget crisis that also challenged holiday motorists. Many highway rest stops were shut.

Gov. Lowell Weicker and top legislative leaders abandoned the holiday plans and attended a closed-door budget summit aimed at ending the stalemate that has paralyzed state government and idled 20,000 state workers since Monday, the start of the new fiscal year.

Escobar to serve life sentence, fears U.S. sanctions

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Pablo Escobar, the jailed drug lord, said in a report published Thursday that he would serve a life sentence to prevent U.S. retaliation on Colombia for its treatment of his case.

Colombians have expressed concern that the United States may impose trade sanctions or other measures if Escobar receives a life sentence under a leniency program decreed by President Cesar Gaviria.

Escobar, who leads the Medellin cocaine cartel, surrendered last month under the program, which offers reduced sentences for traffickers who surrender and confess at least one crime.
