Texas man injured by firecracker at reservoir

CORALVILLE RESERVOIR (AP) — A 33-year-old Texas man was injured when a firecracker exploded in his hand on the Fourth of July, authorities said.

The Johnson County Sheriff's Department said William Stumpff of The Colony, Texas, was hurt in the accident about 3:30 p.m. at the Coralville Reservoir.

He was taken to UI Hospitals and Clinics, where a hospital spokeswoman said Stumpff was listed in fair condition Thursday evening.

Witnesses said the man lost at least part of his thumb in the explosion, but the hospital would give no further details of his condition.

Victim weds man charged with attempted murder

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP) — Melanie Lnenicka watched as the man accused of attempting to kill her pleaded guilty to reduced charges and was sentenced to jail. Then she married him.

James Maclin Jr., 21, had been charged with attempted murder, willful injury and terrorism in the April 23 attack on Lnenicka in the Cedar Rapids apartment the couple shared.

Maclin has been held in the Linn County Jail since then and was whisked back to the jail after the brief wedding ceremony performed by Magistrate Pamela Lewis in a Cedar Rapids courtroom.

Police officer taped beating car theft suspect

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A bystander videotaped a police officer striking a car theft suspect at least two dozen times with a baton, and the police chief said it appeared the officer acted improperly.

"It doesn't look good," Fort Worth Police Chief Thomas Windham said Wednesday about the beating earlier that day. "There were many blows struck with the baton. He struck the suspect a number of times; I don't know how many times."

Connecticut still closed due to budget impasse

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Some July 4 campers ignored "closed" signs outside their favorite Connecticut parks amid a state budget crisis that also challenged holiday motorists. Many highway rest stops were shut.

Gov. Lowell Weicker and top legislative leaders abandoned their holiday plans and attended a closed-door budget summit aimed at ending the stalemate that has paralyzed state government and idled 20,000 state workers since Monday, the start of the new fiscal year.

Escobar to serve life sentence, fears U.S. sanctions

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Pablo Escobar, the jailed drug lord, said in a report published Thursday that he would serve a life sentence for its treatment of his case.

Colombians have expressed concern that the United States may impose trade sanctions or other measures if Escobar receives a light sentence under a leniency program decreed by President Cesar Gaviria.

Escobar, who leads the Medellin cocaine cartel, surrendered last month under the program, which offers reduced sentences for traffickers who surrender and confess at least one crime.

Slovenia ignores Yugoslav demands to abandon control of border posts

Nesha Starcevic

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Federal troops withdrew to their bases Thursday, but a shaky truce faced a new test when the Yugoslav collective presidency demanded that Slovenia give up control of border posts.

The posts have become potent symbols of national sovereignty for the breakaway republic, and the federal army and Slovenian militia fought fiercely for control of them last week and on Tuesday. The presidency demanded Slovenia abandon the posts by Sunday noon.

It also ordered Slovenia to lift blockades of army bases by Friday noon, and to withdraw its defense forces and release captured federal troops by midnight Thursday.

That deadline passed with no sign the republic had complied.

There were no calls on Slovenian radio for troops to return from the field. Slovenian forces in the capital in fact began strengthening barricades Thursday night, replacing buses and trucks blocking streets with criss-crossed iron girders fortified by barbed wire.

The collective presidency, which consists of representatives from Yugoslavia's six republics and two provinces, issued its demands at an emergency meeting Thursday.

Slovenia did not send its representative, and its leaders did not directly address the government's demands. But Milan Kucan, president of the republic, accused the federal presidency of not being ready for dialogue.

"Ultimatums lead to ultimatums, and then war follows," he said.

Jelco Kacin, the Slovenian information minister, appeared to rule out compromise. "Like it is impossible to awaken the dead, it is also impossible to restore the situation that used to exist in Slovenia," he said.

The five-member Slovenian presidency planned to meet overnight to discuss the demands, Yugoslavians in fact began strengthening

States scramble to make overdue 1992 allocations

Mitchell Landsberg

Connecticut had to rely on corporate handouts Wednesday to keep three seaside parks open for the Fourth of July, which could be something less than a holiday for budget-weary legislators there and in several other states.

In California, Gov. Pete Wilson hoped to persuade the Legislature to approve the final pieces of an overdue $55 billion budget in time to meet a self-imposed midnight deadline.

Legislators also hunkered down in Maine and Pennsylvania, which were among the other states that missed Monday's deadline for passing a budget in time for the start of the fiscal year.

About 100 state workers marched through the Pennsylvania Capitol, protesting lawmakers' failure to put together a budget and demanding their paychecks.

There was only one clear winner in the transcontinental budget follies: Maine's private liquor store owners reaped a bonanza when state liquor stores closed for lack of funds.

"This is not the way to run government," said Maine Gov. John McKernan, who shut down non-essential government services Tuesday when the Legislature refused to give in to his budget demands.

Connecticut Gov. Lowell Weicker followed McKernan's lead the next day, putting 20,000 state workers temporarily out of work and shutting selected state offices.

Three corporations promised $43,000 to keep three Connecticut state beaches open through the long holiday weekend. But 25 other state parks were to be closed, and no solution to the state's budget impasse appeared imminent.

Weicker and legislative leaders met Wednesday morning to discuss the budget and agreed to a modified news blackout — not to talk

Communist Party threatened by Shevardnadze's resignation

Alan Cooperman
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The chances of a formal split in the Communist Party increased significantly Thursday with the resignation of Eduard Shevardnadze, a leader of the democratic reformers that Mikhail Gorbachev is trying to keep in the fold.

The former foreign minister renounced his party membership as he angrily refused to submit to an internal investigation of his role in founding a democratic opposition movement.

"Under no circumstances will I submit to such an investigation and kangaroo court because if I agreed to it, I would be providing support... to the return of the Communist Party leadership to repressive methods of crushing dissent," said Shevardnadze, 63, in his resignation letter.

Boris Yeltsin, president of the Russian Federation, called Shevardnadze's decision a "personal matter" but said he believed many others would quit, too.

"That process will go pretty fast now, I think," said Yeltsin, who quit the party one year ago.

Fyodor Burlatsky, a prominent Soviet legislator and party member, predicted that the departure of an internationally respected figure like Shevardnadze could prompt the defection of about one-quarter of the party membership, which plummeted from 19 million to 16.3 million last year.

There was no immediate comment from Gorbachev, who indicated in a speech published Wednesday that he was still fighting to preserve the Communist Party's power.

Law enables small businesses to insure employees

Heidi Pederson
Daily Iowan

A new Iowa law is aimed at making insurance more affordable for small businesses, allowing them to offer coverage to tens of thousands of employees who are currently uninsured.

The law, drafted with the help of private insurance companies, will enable insurers to offer low-cost, basic health coverage to businesses that currently cannot afford employee plans. Limits will be set on rate increases, and employers who qualify will be offered premium discounts.

Debra West, executive assistant to the commissioner of the Iowa Division of Insurance, said the law could help remove some 90,000 Iowans from the ranks of the uninsured. Currently, approximately 223,000 Iowans fall into this category.

Many small businesses have wanted to offer coverage to employees but haven't been able to because of cost, said David Brasher, director of the Iowa chapter of the National Federation of Independent Business.

"The smaller business market is very difficult and pricey," he said. "It's anywhere from 15 to 30 or 40 percent more expensive for an identical package sold to a small business as to a big business. It's so darn expensive, they just can't afford it."

Brasher said the federation thinks the new law is promising.

"We're hoping that with some of the limits and the group pricing mechanisms, some of the fluctuations will disappear; that in fact, (the rates) will return more to the days of what was called community rating," Brasher said. Community rating involves rating similar types of businesses as a group, rather than each business individually.

The new law, West said, consists of three main elements — a basic benefits plan, a ratings structure and a scope of premium credits that will be offered to employers as tax breaks.

The basic benefits plan is aimed at those currently without health insurance. It will cover preventive care, such as office visits and checkups, West said.

"Although it may not be the Cadillac of a policy, it will provide coverage where none has been available before," she said.

The ratings structure outlined in the law will limit premium increases, which have prevented many an employer from getting insurance.

"Now any (rate increase) the insurance company can support that is actuarially sound is allowed, which means if the small group employer has a very bad experience,

BIRTH CONTROL

M.A.T. option to prevent pregnancy

Directors of local clinics discuss how the 'Morning After Treatment' offers women a second chance.

Heidi Pederson
Daily Iowan

Many people have heard the controversy surrounding RU-486, the "abortion pill" currently used in Europe that has not yet been approved for use in the United States. What many aren't familiar with is a legal version of post-intercourse treatment — a version offered in many local clinics.

The "Morning After Treatment" has existed for about 10 years, yet many women are unaware of it for various reasons, according to local clinic directors.

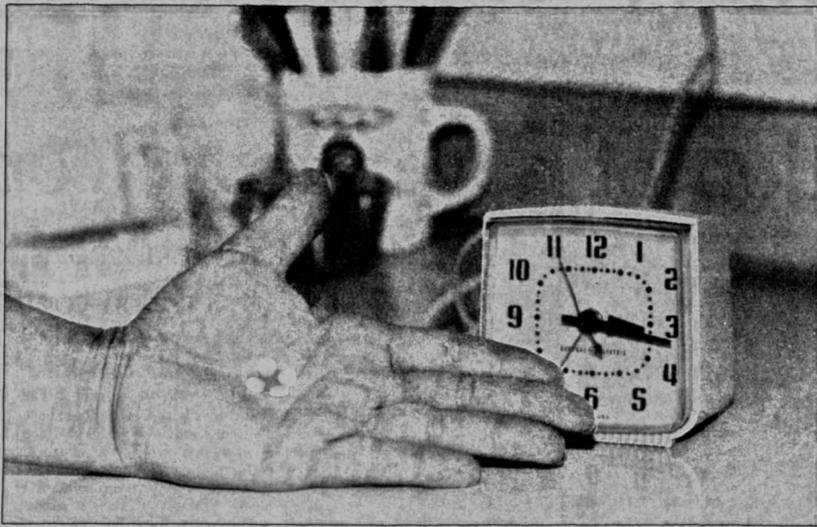

"I think people aren't very aware of this option, probably because preventive measures, like condoms and birth control pills, are put forward first," said Mary Manix, supervisor of Planned Parenthood, 2 S. Linn St.

Gayle Sand, director of the Emma Goldman Clinic for Women, 227 N. Dubuque St., said she believes there are also other reasons for the lack of awareness.

"I think part of it is that there's some sense about having the connection with the abortion controversy," Sand said, adding that many people probably have the M.A.T. confused with RU-486.

Sand stressed that they are really two different methods. While the RU-486 pill induces an early miscarriage when taken and can be used up to the seventh week of pregnancy, the M.A.T. treatment prevents implantation of a fertilized egg and must be taken within 72 hours of unprotected intercourse. After that time, Sand said, the M.A.T. is "simply not effective."

The M.A.T., which is available at the Emma Goldman Clinic, Planned Parenthood and Student Health Service, is actually an older version of the birth control pill that was available in the '70s, Sand said. The earlier pill contained a higher level of estrogen than that found in the modern version. A total of four pills are now taken, said Sand — two at a time, 12 hours apart — at a cost of approximately $30.

David Greedy/Daily Iowan

These four pills, known as the Morning After Treatment, are a type of highly potent birth control pill that can be taken up to 72 hours after unprotected intercourse.

Researchers have several theories concerning how this method works, including one that states that the jolt of estrogen prevents, rather than interrupts, pregnancy. Although many people may believe pregnancy occurs quickly, it actually is a seven- to eight-day process. The hormone jolt from the pills changes the lining of the endometrium, Sand said, making it a hostile environment to the egg. Therefore, pregnancy is never established.

Side effects from the method are few, although the most common is mild nausea, said Penny Dickey, director of patient services for Planned Parenthood of Greater Iowa.

"The chances of serious side effects from a one-time dosage will be slimmer than if it is used more than once," she said. "With the M.A.T. we watch out for the same danger signs of birth control pills — chest pain, headache, etc."

The M.A.T., which is relatively inexpensive, is designed for emergency use only, the directors emphasized. While the failure rate for one-time use is less than 2 percent, that rate increases if the method is used routinely. Compared to the overall reliability of condoms (90 to 99 percent) and the Pill (98 to 99 percent), the M.A.T. is not a good choice.

"It's really a second chance at birth control," Sand said. "It is important to use a primary method because the effectiveness (of the M.A.T.) is not comparable to current birth control methods, and the cost of the M.A.T. would be much higher."

Sand said the morning-after method is actually similar to other preventive measures.

"It's not that much of a reach from the Pill. What it is really, because of its nature and effectiveness, is simply another choice," she said. "The more people who are aware of it, the more helpful it can be in cutting down on the number of abortions."

One UI junior said she sought the M.A.T. almost immediately after a condom broke while she and her boyfriend were engaged in sexual intercourse.

"I didn't feel secure with the odds (against getting pregnant)," she said. "I was so relieved there was something I could do to ensure I wouldn't get pregnant."

Sand said having the M.A.T. available for such experiences, as well as for sexual assault victims, is important.

"The more methods we have for preventing unwanted pregnancies, the better," she said. "The M.A.T. is not the cure-all, but it is one more option that needs to be available for women."

Tsongas joins July 4 parade

The former Massachusetts senator urges Iowans to show their patriotism by buying American.

Mike Glover
Associated Press

BONAPARTE, Iowa — Democratic presidential candidate Paul Tsongas smiled and waved his way through a flag-waving parade Thursday but urged that patriotism extend beyond celebrating the gulf war.

Tsongas said Americans must begin to think of boosting the nation's economy as another form of patriotism.

"If I'm a worker in a factory and I'm committed to the quality of that product, I'm a patriot," said Tsongas, a former senator from Massachusetts. "I become a patriot by what I buy."

Tsongas, the only formally declared Democratic presidential candidate, came to the tiny southeast Iowa town of Bonaparte for July 4 parades, barbecues and celebrations. The festive celebration, featuring bands, floats, balloons and fireworks, is a tradition in the Van Buren County town of 500 about 125 miles southeast of Des Moines.

Along the way, he joined in the town's 10-minute parade, walking two floats behind the county Republican display and just ahead of Joanne Anceel of Fairfield, known as "Fiddlin' Granny."

Tsongas bills himself as a pro-business liberal, and he spent his holiday seeking to focus attention on what he sees as the nation's precarious competitive position.

While joining in the celebrations, he said Americans must learn to equate patriotism with pulling together as an economic unit.

"All things being equal, give American products the benefit of the doubt," he said. He said that sort of economic nationalism is standard fare in nations such as Germany and Japan.

Tsongas generated little excitement as he walked in the parade with his wife, Niki, and daughters Ashley, Katina and Molly. A crowd of 700 gave him polite applause.

After the brief parade, he strolled through the town's business section and bought two handcrafted bowls in a local shop.

While spending his summer campaigning, he said he felt at home in Iowa.

"We usually spend the Fourth at Cape Cod at a small parade like this," said Tsongas. "It's just the same."

The family is in the midst of a two-week swing through Iowa, where the February precinct caucuses are the nation's first test of presidential candidates' strength.

"This is for us as much of a vacation as it is politics," said Tsongas.

Earlier, he met with about 40 local farmers at the Larry and Mary Ellen Moore farm where he took both Republicans and Democrats to task for dodging economic issues.

President Bush, he said, has ignored competitive threats from abroad while Democrats are unable to grasp economic policy.

"The Democratic Party has no economic policy worthy of the name," he said. "I see my role as changing my party. It's a real change in mindset for Democrats."

He conceded his long-shot status. "There's going to be one candidate out there who calls them as he sees them. I think there's value in that."

But Tsongas said he was getting tired of his lonely status and said other candidates, including Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin, should join the field.

"It doesn't do any good to have this quiet. We need to get in there and have a cat fight. The Democrats have got to go out there and show some confidence. We look hesitant and afraid."

He repeatedly turned to his theme that both Bush and other Democrats are flawed.

"(Bush) wants to divide the country by race. The Democrats are not better; they want to divide us by class," said the candidate.

officials announced Wednesday. The money is in two gifts from the Carl J. Herzog Foundation Inc. of Stamford, Conn.

One gift is to help endow a chair named in honor of Dr. John

The Herzog foundation is the result of Carl Herzog's research of skin disease treatments.

Could this be the end of anarchy?

'Irreverent' tradition in Cedar Bluff may be dying, believe paradegoers

Diana Wallace
Daily Iowan

CEAR BLUFF, Iowa — Legend has it that when the annual Cedar Bluff Independence Day parade was in its infancy some 25-odd years ago, one of the first participants was a local man sitting on a chamber pot in a hay wagon, carrying a sign that labeled him "the only man in Cedar Bluff who knows what he's doing."

Over the years, this tiny Cedar River town 20 miles northeast of Iowa City with about 50 year-round inhabitants has hosted crowds of up to 14,000 people for a spontaneous Fourth of July celebration known for its odd floats, vicious water fights and, one memorable year, topless women protesting pornography.

But this year, despite enthusiasm for the skydivers and the Miss Iraq beauty pageant float, many paradegoers voiced disappointment in the calm nature of the small turnout and 15-minute procession. Soon after, word began spreading that Thursday's parade may have marked the end of Cedar Bluff's unique tradition.

There used to be a lot of animals, a lot of music — polka and Bohemian brass — and a lot of silliness, like a small donkey painted as a zebra," said Bob Kuncl, who weekends in Cedar Bluff and has attended the parade for 20 years. "It was funny. But then the water fights started, and people were getting hit with water balloons and

"There used to be a lot of animals, a lot of music — polka and Bohemian brass — and a lot of silliness, like a small donkey painted as a zebra."

Bob Kuncl, Paradegoer

hosed down, and no one wanted to bring down their animals or their buggies.

"Now all the old-timers are gone, and there's no tradition anymore," Kuncl added. "Next year, I bet there isn't a parade at all."

Some paradegoers blamed the "bad publicity" for the low turnout, referring to Wednesday's Iowa City Press-Citizen article in which Cedar County Sheriff Keith Whitlatch warned of tight security at the event to dissuade water fights.

And one group from Iowa City chanted, "Bring back the water or piss on the parade."

But Whitlatch, now in his 15th year as sheriff, said he thought this year's parade was "the best we've had in years. The safest, anyway, and it's my job to be in charge of public safety. It's been rowdy here in the past. We've had water fights, lost contact lenses, things like that."

But Whitlatch wasn't the only one content to see the parade die down. Oddly enough, it was Hugh Stumbo, who has made floats and T-shirts for the parade for several years since he and his family moved to Cedar Bluff in 1967, that came to Whitlatch's defense.

"You know what killed the parade? It wasn't the sheriff; it was the water fights," he said. "We tried to stop the parade two years ago, but we didn't know how. Nobody organizes it. It just happens."

Stumbo contends the parade has strayed far from its original spirit, when the main themes, he said, centered around drinking, sex and the toilet.

What the parade wasn't about, Stumbo asserts, was patriotism.

"Patriotism has always been an antithesis of the spirit of this parade," he said. "Not real patriotism, but this pseudo-patriotism where you can't say anything negative about the country, where you can't criticize the war."

"This traditionally was a celebration of low life, as opposed to the aristocratic high life," he continued. "I don't want to say the whole thing's been profane. Profane would be too harsh. Let's say irreverent. It's always been independent and irreverent to authorities. This is the only place where anarchy has worked."

Though nobody seems to know just what year it happened, the parade apparently was started by two sisters who rebelled against domesticity and refused to prepare a Fourth of July dinner for their husbands and families. Instead, they walked through town from house to house soliciting beer, and several residents joined them along the way. In subsequent years, fiddlers, horse-and-buggies and tractors began participating.

The parade grew over the years, attracting many eastern Iowa politicians and culminating in perhaps its most famous episode in 1986, when much-arrested Iowa City activist Melissa Farley led a group of bare-chested women in the parade, protesting pornography that portrays violence against women.

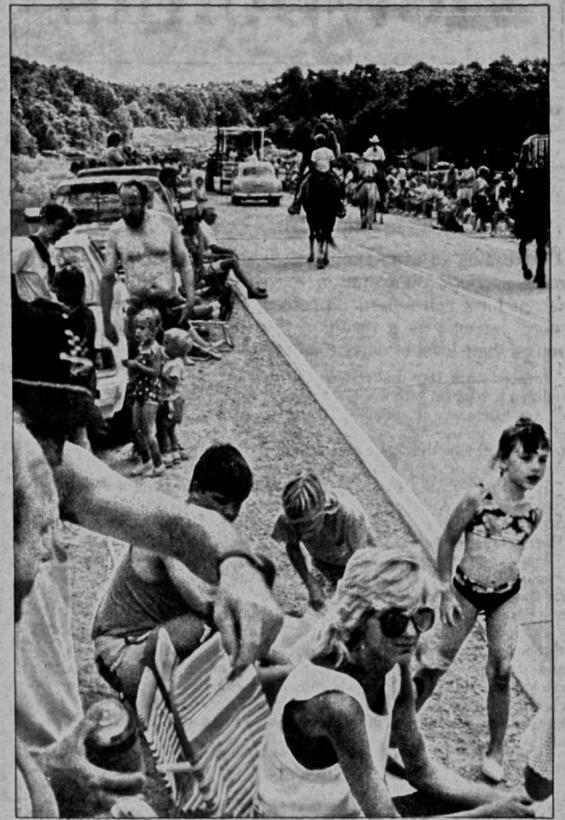

"The way the sheriff and the county attorney dealt with that is indicative of the county," Stumbo said. "They made no big deal about it. They said there was no ordinance against it so there was no attempt made to stop them."

But unlike those who mourned a dying tradition Thursday, Stumbo, who now lives in nearby Tipton, Iowa, is encouraged by the poor turnout, convinced that the parade must die if it is to get back to "the true spirit of things."

"Like Phoenix, we'll rise back from the ashes. People around here need something interesting, unique and weird because they're desperate for entertainment. The war was such great entertainment, and now they need something new."

Next year, Stumbo said, local residents may have a "post-parade parade."

"We'll wait till all the crowds clear and then get down to basics," he said.

Hundreds of eastern Iowans lined County Road F28 Thursday to watch Cedar Bluff's annual Fourth of July parade. Local residents fear diminishing turnout may end the 25-year-old event.

Firefighters extinguish house fire

Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Fire Department responded to the report of a house fire at 1141 College St. late Thursday afternoon. There were no injuries related to the incident, according to fire department officials.

Firefighters answered a 911 call at 5:06 p.m. from a neighbor, who reported seeing smoke coming from the house.

The blaze was soon extinguished, and a dog was rescued from the house. There were no people inside.

Fire department officials began an investigation Thursday evening to determine the cause of the fire.

No damage estimate had been made as of press time.

Iowa woman gets 2nd in hollering contest

Associated Press

JACKPOT, Nev. — A violinist from Boise, Idaho, won the 12th Annual National Hollering Contest and an Iowa woman finished second Thursday outside this tiny northern Nevada gambling town.

Margaret Halvorson of Lake City, Iowa, a former hog calling champion and a three-time winner of the hollering match, took second with, "A wagon train is coming."

Laura Egner of Filer, Idaho, placed third, making this year the first time women have swept the top spots.

The yellers are judged on volume, the length of the call and the quality of the intonation.

INDEPENDENCE DAY

Reasons to celebrate

According to a national and local poll, Americans are more patriotic than ever in the wake of the gulf war. A recent Iowa poll reports 53 percent of Iowans say they are more patriotic as a result of the war — only 3 percent report their level of patriotism decreased.

Independence Day celebrations this year seemed to echo this war-induced patriotism with fireworks named after weapons and the display of war machinery in parades. Though the United States suffered few casualties in the fighting, one would think the destruction in Iraq, teamed with the dubious accomplishments of the war, might dampen some of the patriotic fervor.

It would be more patriotic to celebrate that which truly makes this country great — things that were overlooked in this year's celebrations: the First Amendment, civil rights gains, the justice system. Though far from perfect, the United States has a lot to be proud of.

Perhaps in the future, Independence Day will celebrate the peaceful resolution of an international conflict or progress toward finding homes for the homeless; maybe there will be an upsurge of patriotism because of a decline in racism or the achievement of equal rights for women.

Celebrating a holiday such as July 4 can be valuable and rewarding without glorifying war and its destruction. Patriotism, defined as love of and devotion to one's country, should be an integral part of the celebration. But real patriotism is not just blindly waving a flag and cheering; a true patriot has a love and appreciation for the freedom we have as Americans and a devotion to making those freedoms available to all.

GUEST OPINION: JULIANNE MARLEY

Reagan tax cut robbed from the poor

Iowa's present budget crisis has its origins in the federal tax policies of the last decade. When Ronald Reagan entered the White House in 1981, he put forward his "trickle down" theory. Known as supply-side economics, Reagan's idea — and that of his cohorts — was that providing tax breaks to corporations and the wealthy would circulate money through the economy, allowing business and industry to hire new people and open new plants. In short, the economic benefits of these tax breaks given to the rich would "trickle down" to the rest of the population.

The first step Reagan took toward adopting this economic plan was to obtain a huge "supply-side tax cut" in the spring of 1981. This supply-side tax "cut" came on the heels of a similar, but less substantial one enacted in 1978. Together, these actions cut taxes by 36 percent for America's wealthiest citizens. However, neither of these so-called tax "cuts" eased the tax burden on the majority of Americans.

In fact, according to a 1990 report of the U.S. House Ways and Means Committee, nine out of 10 American families are paying a higher share of their incomes in overall federal taxes today than they did prior to the supply-side tax "cuts" of 1978 and 1981. Only the richest 10 percent of the U.S. population has enjoyed a reduction in their taxes since 1977.

The impact of these two tax changes on America's fiscal health throughout the 1980s was dramatic. Not only did they RAISE the taxes of 90 percent of American families, but they also decreased government revenues by $70 billion annually.

So, while government revenues fell, so did the net incomes of most of America's working families. Between 1977 and 1990, the bottom 80 percent of American families saw their incomes fall by 5.1 percent. At the same time, the incomes of the richest 1 percent of Americans increased by 86 percent!

In other words, the economic prosperity that supply-side supporters promised would come with the tax cuts on the rich was never delivered to the majority of Americans. The trickle down never came.

Aren't we spending too much?
Out-of-control government spending

Between 1977 and 1990, the bottom 80 percent of American families saw their incomes fall by 5.1 percent. At the same time, the incomes of the richest 1 percent of Americans increased by 86 percent!

is a common scapegoat for the federal deficit, but the facts point to other causes. Indeed, funding for government programs was clearly in control during this period. Program funding as a share of the gross national product at the federal level was lower in 1990 than in the '60s, '70s or early '80s. During the same period, however, interest payments on the national debt rose substantially. Funds that would otherwise have been put toward programs were being consumed by interest on the deficit.

Tax cuts for the wealthy and the spiraling deficit resulted in less revenue for the federal government. As a result, legislators in Washington scaled back or eliminated dozens of programs for health care, human services, education and more. In addition, many services which were traditionally the responsibility of the federal government were pushed onto the states.

How does this affect Iowa?

When the federal government began to tighten its belt, it cut aid to states and cities. Eventually, programs which were historically administered by the federal government became the responsibility of the states.

Without new revenues, states were ill-equipped to handle these new fiscal responsibilities. But because the Reagan administration was so successful in making taxes unpopular, most states avoided tax increases even though they desperately needed more money to administer the additional government services.

The result is that 28 states, including Iowa, entered 1991 with significant budget deficits. Many of these states have already gutted funding for human services, education and infrastructure priorities like roads. Almost none have authorized new programs. There are few options left but to raise taxes.

For Iowa, and other farm states, the additional obligations from the federal government were especially burdensome because of the hardships wrought by the farm crisis. New programs to fund and decreasing revenues came as a double blow to farm-state budgets.

What do we do now?

The cuts that Iowa made in its state budget go beyond trimming fat. There are few, if any, cuts left which can be made without seriously jeopardizing the state's infrastructure, quality of life and competitiveness in the international marketplace.

If Iowa is going to balance its budget and fund state programs, a tax increase will be needed. The type of tax increase Iowa chooses to enact will greatly impact the state's ability to recover from the current budget shortfall.

Taken as a total, Iowa's present tax system is very regressive. That is, it taxes middle- and low-income people at higher rates than it taxes the rich. Such tax policies are not only inequitable and cruel, they have proven ineffective in raising enough revenue to meet the state's needs.

The fiscal wisdom of tax policies which will require the rich to pay their fair share of taxes can be demonstrated by a look at federal revenue sources. Nationally, every 1 percent levy on the incomes of the most wealthy 10 percent of Americans adds more than $15 billion to government revenues. In contrast, every 1 percent of income painfully extracted from the poorest 20 percent of all families adds only $1.5 billion a year to tax revenues.

If the federal government is serious about reducing its budget deficit, it will have to go where the money is. Similarly, if Iowa intends to solve its budget woes, the state must ask those who make the most to pay their fair share of taxes.

RUSSIAN REFORM

Alternative offers hope

The new "democratic coalition" within the Communist Party in the Soviet Union is one of many promising recent developments in the glasnost era. But the coalition lacks two key members: Mikhail Gorbachev and Boris Yeltsin.

Gorbachev could be relatively easy to bring into the fold — his friend and former Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and his current top adviser Aleksander Yakovlev front the coalition. If Gorbachev will take heed of the coalition's mission, he might see enough parallel to his own views in the late '80s to jump ship while he has the chance.

The CPSU is crumbling around Gorbachev's feet, with the latest blow being Russia's referendum calling for party property to be turned over to the government. Such anti-communist leanings in the Union's largest republic signal a massive move away from the party.

It may be more difficult to attract Yeltsin to the coalition because of perceived party ties, but the coalition need not remain part of the party. If it showed enough growth to become a viable alternative to the CPSU, Yeltsin would have a group tailor-made for his leadership.

The CPSU has served its purpose in Soviet history; those clinging to it now are only inhibiting its move into the modern era. Gorbachev must set the example by joining the new coalition. Now that the Cold War era has been put to rest, the CPSU should be shed like an old winter coat.

Freedom requires social muscle and abundance

I would like to present some highly insightful commentary on yesterday's Fourth of July celebration. Unfortunately I can't; I'm writing this thing a couple days early so I can get the hell out of town. That may be the most insightful of commentary on Independence Day: In most people's minds it is really Get the Hell Out of Town Day. My patriotism has had bad timing this year anyway, hitting its apex a good 10 days early: story of my life.

It was the 22 of June. You knew it was a strange day in the world when 300,000 people — nearly a tenth of Albania's population — mobbed, chanted and longed not for a rock star, but the most un-Elvis of creatures, James A. Baker III.

I am not often touched by the NBC "Nightly News," but that night I was. Albania is a country that formerly combined a rural setting straight out of "Frankenstein" with the social dynamics of "1984." It was the most backward and painfully Stalinistic of the Eastern bloc nations, and therefore the last country to be affected by the wave of revolution that has swept Eastern Europe. This, in some ways, has made Albania's first halting steps toward democracy just that much more triumphant, or at least more surprising. So when the cameras showed James Baker riding into town — the first senior American official in Albania in 50 years — to a reception of fluttering American flags and a thronging, adoring crowd, I admit I had a media-generated lump in my throat.

It was especially touching because James Baker is a man uniquely unsuited to bear the torch of freedom into a country. In a White House replete with the personality-deficient, he is King Vanilla. America must really mean something to these people because their exuberance allowed both James Baker and their own hearts to rise above James Baker. They were exultant; and he, for his part, approached warmth.

He even read some semi-inspiring words: "Welcome to the company of free men and women everywhere, the way our Creator intended us to be. You are with us, and we with you."

But forget the bucks, baby. Let us hope the Albanians know a good recipe for Rhetoric Stew or Symbolism Surprise because that is the extent of the Bush administration's largess. Albania was offered a $6 million aid package during Baker's visit. Chicken feed, in other words.

Baker's visit to Albania was a microcosm of America's overall relationship to the fledgling democracies: moral support yes; financial support no. We say that it's not our job and we couldn't afford to help even if we wanted to.

I do have some sympathy for the we can't afford it argument. The economy is as anemic as the deficit is ravenous. And the Japanese are the No. 1 foreign aid nation in the world now anyway. They're on top of the world, right. Let them be the ones. We should remember, however, that the way they put themselves in a position of generosity was by having a little of that vision thing. And so I say while we can't afford to do it, we can't afford not to.

A stable, democratic Eastern bloc would mean many things to the United States. It is estimated that $130 billion of the $300 billion America spends annually on defense is spent defending Western Europe. And poverty stricken as they are, the East is nuts to be a viable trading partner. They would be a market from Levi Strauss and Company's wildest dreams.

While the we're broke argument does have some merit, it is not the major reason for U.S. tightfistedness. There is much sentiment in and around the federal government against using billions and billions of taxpayers' dollars to cushion the fall of greedy, power-mad oligarchies that have fallen due to their own incompetence and downright stupidity, unless of course you count the savings and loan industry. George Shultz said that The Grand Bargain, the exchange of billions of Western aid for Soviet reform, would send the wrong message. He thinks the Soviets should move to a free market simply because it is such a swell idea. Soviet fears that there might not be any market left by the time the move is completed did not seem to enter into his mind. His reform plan is basically a Horatio Alger story with big, fuzzing hats.

Once again the American government's fondness for social Darwinism rears its ugly head. Necessity is the mother of invention, and all that jazz. Wealthy government officials have this wonderful capacity for confusing the wonders of necessity with hopeless squalor. I mean a fair amount of necessity does bring out the best in people. But too much adversity brings out the Donner Party in people. Witness the ethnic strife in the Soviet Union and the budding civil war in Yugoslavia.

Americans tend to look at the anti-communist revolutions in a self-pleased, antiseptic manner. I myself will admit to having too much of the "We won" mentality. (The media coverage has been very much a "We came, we saw, we gloated" affair.) Visiting American dignitaries have acted as if freedom is Latin for everything is now hunky-dory.

Freedom does not mean that. Freedom is a hard thing. Freedom stinks sometimes. Most of the time freedom and democracy are distinguished from totalitarianism by the opportunity to choose from the lesser of two evils, instead of having someone choose it for you.

It is no coincidence that the secret desire of a good half of this country's youth is to live in their parents' basement until the age of 45. (We all want to be in Wayne's World.) It is no coincidence that this country is a gold mine for psychologists, evangelists and army recruiters — purveyors of reassuring, simple directions on how to assemble your life. We are neurotic because we are free.

And we have had a good 300 years of practice and an embarrassment of wealth with which to handle this freedom thing. I mean, this is not an America Sucks column. If anything, we should appreciate the wild ambition inherent in the American dream and be more understanding of our shortcomings. And we should remember that Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union are without either the abundance or the social muscle it takes to support freedom.

That was what just killed me about those goofy, wonderful Albanians. They have no idea what they are getting themselves into. And when the reality of freedom comes and punches them right in the nose, they had better have some food in their bellies. Because you can say one thing for all the Joseph Stalins in this world: They may shoot an uncle of yours now and again, but they always promised to feed your kids and tell you what to do.

Mitch Martin's column appears Fridays on the Viewpoints page.

Vasil Tupurkovski, Macedonia's representative on the federal presidency, said a ministerial-level European Community delegation probably would be invited to return to help mediate. The team, led by Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek, helped mediate a cease-fire over the weekend, but it quickly failed.

A lower-level EC mission was visiting Slovenia and Croatia on Thursday.

In Prague, meanwhile, representatives from the 35-member Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe awaited word from Belgrade on whether it would accept observers from the body to monitor the cease-fire.

The federal army intervened in Slovenia a week ago after the republic seized control of the 27 border posts on its frontier with Italy, Austria and Hungary.

Since then, about 90 people have been killed and hundreds wounded, according to Slovene officials.

An informal cease-fire began Wednesday, and there has been strong domestic and international pressure for the two sides to avoid further bloodshed.

Yugoslav media reported Thursday that the government of Serbia, the biggest republic, no longer opposed an independent Slovenia if the secession could be worked out peacefully.

There was no indication Serbia weakened its hard opposition to Croatia's independence. Serbia has threatened to annex the parts of neighboring Croatia that have large Serb concentrations if Croatia secedes.

Croatia and Slovenia both declared independence June 25. But Croatia has not attempted to assert its sovereignty, thus avoiding for now the combat that has wracked its neighbor.

The presidency's order Thursday did not specify what would happen if Slovenia did not comply. But in an interview with Belgrade television, Tupurkovski appeared to rule out government-ordered force.

"We have to forget the military option," he said, saying the presidency was seeking "a peaceful option."

Kacin, the Slovenian information minister, said Thursday that federal troops were withdrawing to their bases and that the truce had not been broken. Tanjug said all army units were back at their barracks.

But Slovenian leaders warned the fighting could resume.

"The war is not over," Kacin said. "We have agreed on a cease-fire, but we want to sign a truce document that will guarantee the army will not strike again."

Federal military and police officials agreed to abide by the informal cease-fire after a seven-hour negotiating session that began Wednesday night.

Dusan Plut, head of the Slovenian delegation at the talks, said the negotiators were unable to resolve differences over control of Slovenia's border and military prisoners.

Heavy federal troop columns moved from the national capital, Belgrade, toward Croatia and Slovenia before dawn Wednesday.

That left them with little to say until late Wednesday night, when a governor's aide reported they had reached general agreement on the spending side of the budget. No details were released. The more controversial issue of taxes was left until Thursday.

Much of state government remained open for business, despite the shutdown. The state's lottery games continued, as did summer-school courses at state colleges. Courts stayed open, and welfare and unemployment checks were not delayed.

But thousands of campers were told they had to get out of state parks by sundown.

"To all the businesses and people who supported our troops, we congratulate you," Sentman said. "Soldiers, this parade's for you."

Certificates of appreciation from the Iowa National Guard were awarded to Jeanne Seaton, founder of the Hawkeye Desert Shield Family Support Group, and to Margaret Morgan, founder of the annual Fourth of July Operation Desert Shield Certificates of Appreciation were awarded to local radio stations KXIC and KCJJ for supporting the war with guard and reserve radio ads.

such as a catastrophic illness, (the companies) can charge whatever they're showing their losses justify," she said. "These increases can be severe — 150 percent would not be uncommon."

The new law requires insurers to group small businesses (defined as 25 employees or less) into giant pools when assessing rates.

The premium credits are meant as incentives and will be funded in part by the state, West said.

"When the insurance has been offered by a group, the employer pays the full cost for the first year. The second year they get a $25 dollar per qualified employee rebate on the premium," she said.

Another part of the law, and one which hasn't been worked out in great detail, is targeted at small businesses who have proven such bad risks that no one will sell them insurance at all. This part guarantees coverage to any employer, although they would still pay above-average premiums when put in this "assigned risk" pool.

The reaction of private companies has been good, West said.

"We've had great success in working with them," she said. "We know of several large insurers who are currently working on such a product."

Dick Helms, a Principal Financial Group vice president who helped draft the law, said his company is supporting it "as I think most of the insurance industry is."

Helms cautioned that the new law, while positive, is only beginning to address the problem of making insurance available to everyone.

"It's only a first step," he said. "It's not a cure."

Rookie Rusty Meacham (2-0), recalled from the minors on June 25, blanked the Red Sox on three hits over five innings in his second major league start. Mike Henneman, the third Detroit pitcher, worked the final 2 1/2 innings for his 13th save. Boston rookie Mo Vaughn hit his third homer in eight major league games.

Johnson followed with a looping double to left off Tim Burke (3-4), making it 2-1. Jefferies hit his sixth home run and the Mets got another run on reliever Barry Jones' error in the ninth. Whitehurst (5-4) won for the third time in four starts. He gave up one run on four hits, struck out seven and walked one.

History and their worst since a 12-game skid in 1976. Howard Johnson singled home the tie-breaking run after an eighth-inning dispute and the Mets beat Montreal for the ninth straight time. Gregg Jefferies, batting for Whitehurst, hit a two-run homer in the ninth as New York improved to 12-2 against the Expos this year.

MAJOR LEAGUE ALL-STARS

Managers name All-Star reserves

George Bell, Lee Smith get call for NL

Jim Donaghy
The Associated Press
NEW YORK — Manager Tony La Russa added outfielder Harold Baines and reliever Dennis Eckersley to the All-Star roster on Thursday, giving the Oakland Athletics five players on the American League team.

First baseman Mark McGwire, hitting only .197, and outfielders Rickey Henderson and Dave Henderson of Oakland were voted to the starting AL team in fan voting announced on Wednesday. Left off La Russa's team is Oakland outfielder Jose Canseco, who leads the major leagues with 20 home runs.

The defending world champion Cincinnati Reds and Los Angeles Dodgers each placed five players on the National League team, with four reserves each.

The 62nd All-Star game is scheduled for Tuesday night at Toronto's SkyDome. The starting pitchers will be announced on Monday at a news conference by La Russa and NL manager Lou Piniella.

Carlton Fisk, 43, was selected as the AL's backup catcher. It's Fisk's 11th All-Star selection.

In addition to Eckersley, the AL pitching staff has Roger Clemens and Jeff Reardon of Boston, Jimmy Key of Toronto, Mark Langston and Bryan Harvey of California, Jack McDowell of the Chicago White Sox, Jack Morris and Rick Aguilera of Minnesota and Scott

Roberto (left) and Sandy Alomar are the first brothers to start on the same All-Star team since the AL's Joe and Dom DiMaggio in 1949.

Sanderson of the New York Yankees.
Minnesota's Scott Erickson (12-3) might have been the AL starter, but he was placed on the disabled list this week with a sore elbow.

The AL reserve infielders are Cecil Fielder of Detroit, Julio Franco of Texas, Ozzie Guillen of Chicago and Paul Molitor of Milwaukee.

Fielder, who has 19 homers and 62 RBIs, may get a chance to start because McGwire is still bothered by the effects of a burst eardrum.

The outfield reserves for the AL are Joe Carter of Toronto, Kirby Puckett of Minnesota, Ruben Sierra of Texas, Danny Tartabull of Kansas City and Baines.

In addition to Canseco, California's Dave Winfield (17 homers, 56 RBIs) and Minnesota's Chili Davis (19 homers, 52 RBIs) were left off the team.

The National League pitching staff as selected by Piniella is Tom Browning and Rob Dibble of Cincinnati, Tom Glavine of Atlanta, Pete Harnisch of Houston, Dennis Martinez from Montreal, John Smiley of Pittsburgh, Lee Smith from St. Louis, Frank Viola of the New York Mets and Ramon Martinez of Los Angeles. Ramon Martinez and Glavine lead the NL with 11 victories.

The Mets' Howard Johnson, who leads the NL with 19 homers and 60 RBIs, was selected as a reserve infielder along with Barry Larkin of Cincinnati, John Kruk of Philadelphia, and Eddie Murray and Juan Samuel of Los Angeles.

The NL reserve outfielders are George Bell of Chicago, Bobby Bonilla of Pittsburgh, Ivan Calderon of Montreal, Felix Jose of St. Louis, Paul O'Neill of Cincinnati and Brett Butler of Los Angeles. Bell and Calderon both came over from the AL this season.

Houston's Craig Biggio is the NL's backup catcher.
The only surprise omission from the NL team was San Diego first baseman Fred McGriff (15 homers, 50 RBIs).

Ryne Sandberg of the Chicago Cubs was elected the NL starting second baseman and led all voters with 2,526,747. Sandberg, who currently has a hand injury, got the most votes since Gary Carter of Montreal totaled 2,785,407 in 1982.

Seattle outfielder Ken Griffey Jr. paced the AL this year with 2,248,396 votes.

The NL starting infield has Will Clark of San Francisco at first base, Sandberg at second, Ozzie Smith of St. Louis at shortstop and Chris Sabo of Cincinnati at third. The starting outfield is Darryl Strawberry of Los Angeles, Andre Dawson of Chicago and Towy Gwynn of San Diego. Strawberry, however, has already said he will not be going to the All-Star game in order to rest his injured left shoulder. He led all NL outfielders with 1,393,009 votes, followed by Gwynn's 1,381,602.

The starting AL infield has McGwire at first base; Roberto Alomar of Toronto at shortstop; Cal Ripken of Baltimore at shortstop; and Wade Boggs of Boston at third. The AL starting outfield is Griffey Jr. and Rickey and Dave Henderson.

Cleveland's Sandy Alomar was elected at catcher.

The Alomars are the first brothers to make the starting lineup of an All-Star game since Joe and Dom DiMaggio started for the AL in 1949.

AL stars upset about teammate choices

Jim Donaghy
The Associated Press
NEW YORK — As usual, there seems to be some questions about who is going to the All-Star game.

Manager Tony La Russa added outfielder Harold Baines and reliever Dennis Eckersley to the All-Star roster on Thursday, giving his own Oakland Athletics five players on the American League team.

La Russa also added Minnesota outfielder Kirby Puckett. But Puckett has some All-Star ideas of his own.

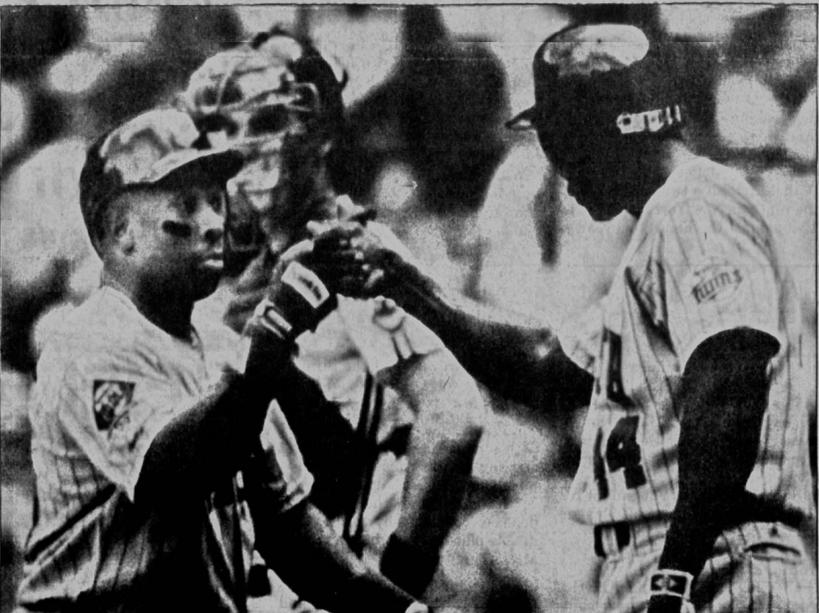

"A lot of guys got left off who should've been on there," Puckett said. "We've got a guy who has 19 home runs (Chili Davis) but didn't get chosen. I kind of feel bad. I'm honored, but the hard part is that a lot of guys who should have made it don't make it."

Cincinnati's Chris Sabo, the National League's starting third baseman, doesn't think he deserved it.

"Last year, I think I deserved to be voted in," said Sabo, who is hitting .272 with 12 homers and 37 RBIs. "This year, however, I don't think so. There are other guys having better years — Howard Johnson, Terry Pendleton and Todd Zeile. I think they deserve to go ahead of me, but the fans voted me and I'm not going to say I'm not going."

First baseman Mark McGwire, hitting only .197, and outfielders Rickey Henderson and Dave Henderson of Oakland were voted to the starting AL team in fan voting announced on Wednesday. Left off La Russa's team is Oakland outfielder Jose Canseco, who has 20 home runs.

The defending world champion Cincinnati Reds and Los Angeles Dodgers each placed five players on the NL team, with four reserves each.

The 62nd All-Star game is scheduled for Tuesday night at Toronto's SkyDome. The starting pitchers will be announced on Monday at a news conference by La Russa and NL manager Lou Piniella.

The AL reserve infielders are Cecil Fielder of Detroit, Julio Franco of Texas, Ozzie Guillen of Chicago and Paul Molitor of Milwaukee.

Franco was the MVP at last year's All-Star game, and thinks he should be starting this season.

"I don't care, because I know I'm better," Franco said of losing in the balloting to Toronto's Roberto Alomar. "I've got better numbers and I'm a better fielder. It's all just a bunch of bull. I don't know how he's on the team ahead of me."

Fielder, who has 19 homers and 62 RBIs, may get a chance to start because McGwire is still bothered by the effects of a burst eardrum. If McGwire doesn't go, he will probably be replaced by California's Wally Joyner.

In addition to Canseco and Davis, California's Dave Winfield (17 homers, 56 RBIs) and Chicago's Frank Thomas (13 homers, 57 RBIs) were left off the AL team. So was Angels left-hander Chuck Finley (12-3).

"I'm not going to use the word 'snubbed' or anything else," Winfield said. "Let's say that the way the voting is, people make the selections and they're right maybe half the time. After that, it becomes a numbers game, where you have to select some poor soul from every team — whether he is having a better year than you or not."

NL EXPANSION

Finish line in sight for baseball expansion teams

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Denver and Miami are expected to gain final approval as the National League's expansion franchises when major league baseball owners meet Friday by telephone conference call.

The new teams, which will be called the Colorado Rockies and either the Florida Marlins or South Florida Marlins, will begin play in 1993. They will be the first new major league teams since Seattle and Toronto joined the American League in 1977.

Each city needs nine of 12 votes from NL owners and eight of 14 votes from AL owners. Approval is considered a certainty.

"I don't expect any serious problems," Commissioner Fay Vincent said Thursday from Cape Cod, Mass.

Steve Ehrhart, commissioner of the World Basketball League, will become president of the Rockies. Pittsburgh Pirates president Carl Barger, a close friend of Miami owner H. Wayne Huizenga, is expected to become president of the Marlins.

Barger is a director of Huizenga's company, Blockbuster Entertainment Corp., and his imminent shift has raised conflict-of-interest questions, since Pittsburgh chairman Douglas Danforth was chairman of the NL expansion committee.

Huizenga, Barger, Danforth and baseball officials have said that Barger was not involved in the expansion process.

"There was no conflict," Vincent said. "I was in on the process. There was nothing untoward. There's no real concern on my part."

"I don't like to speculate on Carl," Huizenga said. "I've got two or three other people in mind."

Opening day for the new teams may be 21 months away, but the first pitch — for souvenirs — is much closer.

"Merchandise will be on the marketplace two or three days after formal unveiling of the team logo," said Rick White, president of Major League Baseball Properties. "There's going to be a huge demand for product, and we want to make sure we can satisfy it."

Friday's vote will cap a race that formally began in June 1990, when the NL issued its expansion guidelines.

No. 2 seed Boris Becker one match away from finals.

WIMBLEDON

Top seeds play to expectations

Stephen Wilson
The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Steffi Graf and Gabriela Sabatini are already there. Stefan Edberg and Boris Becker are one match away.

The Wimbledon seedings are holding true, with the top two women having reached the final and the men on course for another 1-2 championship duel.

After 10 days of play, Wimbledon has once again asserted itself as an exclusive club reserved for the premier grass court players.

With a few exceptions, the 128-player fields have gradually been whittled down to the best in the game.

Monica Seles wasn't here to live up to her top seeding in the women's draw, pulling out at the last minute with a still-undisclosed ailment.

But the woman who inherited the No. 1 spot, Steffi Graf, held up the seeding by overpowering No. 5 Mary Joe Fernandez 6-2, 6-4 on Thursday.

In the other women's semifinal, second-seeded Gabriela Sabatini held off No. 9 Jennifer Capriati 6-4, 6-4.

It's the fourth time in the past five years that the top two women's seeds have progressed to the final. The top seed has won the title in nine of the past 10 years.

Neither Graf nor Sabatini has dropped a set in five matches, further underlining their supremacy.

But Graf has been especially impressive, showing the dominant form that brought her back-to-back Wimbledon titles in 1988 and 1989.

"I always have the desire, but I'm going to be very, very eager," she said. "I want it badly, and I want to do well again. I just want to win it. . . I am very confident."

The men's field was narrowed Thursday to top-seeded Stefan Edberg, No. 2 Boris Becker, No. 6 Michael Stich and unseeded David Wheaton.

In Friday's semifinals, Edberg will play Stich and Becker will face Wheaton.

NOTES

Stich fine as 'other German'

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Michael Stich is the "other German" at Wimbledon, but he's quickly making a name for himself.

A semifinalist at the French Open, he has quietly risen to No. 7 in the world.

But he stands out as a champion-ship unknown alongside the other singles semifinalists, fellow German Boris Becker, defending champion Stefan Edberg and even American David Wheaton, who made the fourth round last year.

The 6-foot-4 Stich aced his way into today's semis by beating French Open champion Jim Courier.

He served 15 aces in the match, his average for the five matches he has played, and with 76 has more than any other player in the tournament.

Three-time Wimbledon champion Boris Becker was under the hammer from Frenchman Guy Forget and colorful American Andre Agassi was fighting back from a set down to countryman David Wheaton.

And what was the British Broadcasting Corporation showing its millions of viewers Thursday?

Michael Stich

Cricket.
The BBC has screened the Wimbledon tennis championships for decades usually with live coverage for up to eight (will) a day.

But there are no British players in the final stages of the men's and women's singles, while the English cricket team is leading the West Indies 1-0 in a five match series.

So the cricket took precedence.

British tabloids have moved quickly to offer replicas of Andre Agassi's on-court outfits as competition prizes.

The fifth-seeded American usually wears colorful on-court attire and speculation buzzed before Wimbledon about whether he would comply with club's tradition of wearing predominantly white.

WIMBLEDON, England — If Bunker Hill had been as tough as Centre Court, the colonies might still be part of Britain.

Andre Agassi, two points from the Wimbledon semifinals, choked again and limped out a loser.

Jennifer Capriati, Mary Joe Fernandez and Jim Courier were run out in a hurry.

Not even David Wheaton, the lone American winner among five playing on the Fourth of July and the only one wearing a stars and stripes headband, escaped unscathed.

Wheaton suffered a hyperextended Achilles tendon during a 6-2, 0-6, 3-6, 7-6 (7-3), 6-2 victory over Agassi that could threaten his semifinal match Friday against Boris Becker.

Americans didn't have a holiday picnic, with the only survivor coming from a match that pitted fellow countrymen.

The rout began with German Michael Stich beating Courier, the French Open champion, 6-3, 7-6 (7-2), 6-2.

It got nastier in the women's semifinals with Graf overpowering Fernandez, 6-2, 6-4, and Gabriela Sabatini dispatching Capriati 6-4, 6-4.

Capriati, at 15 the youngest Wimbledon semifinalist, tried to intimidate Sabatini by moving in on returns — the same strategy that worked so well in beating Martina Navratilova the day before.

But Sabatini served deeper than Navratilova and played better from the baseline and at the net.

"She was dictating a lot of the points," Capriati said. "She was the one who was moving me from left to right, and she came to the net a lot."

"I'm just going to leave knowing that I beat a great champion and that I got to the semifinals."

Sabatini has confidence going into Saturday's final against Graf, who she has beaten five straight times.

"I'm playing good tennis. I'm pretty confident mentally," Sabatini said.

Becker struggled before beating Guy Forget 6-7 (5-7), 7-6 (7-3), 6-2, 7-6 (9-7) to move a step closer to a final rematch against defending champion Stefan Edberg, a 6-3, 6-2, 7-5 victor over Thierry Champion.

A warm, torpid day, ended with Agassi and Wheaton trying to get through a match of changing momentum and alternating medical care.

Agassi said he felt his right thigh muscle tear slightly in the first game of the match after he came down on a serve, and he began thinking seriously about quitting in the third game.

"It was gradually getting worse all through the course of the match," said Agassi, who had trainer Bill Norris wrap a bandage around the thigh late in the first set.

Norris later treated Wheaton by giving him a couple of pain pills for his foot, after dashing over to Court 1 to bandage a grass burn Becker suffered on a knee.

Wheaton's stronger serve-and-volley game dominated through the opening set, but Agassi turned the match completely around by jumping on Wheaton's serve with strong returns in the second set.

"I couldn't visibly see him really struggling out there," Wheaton said. "He raised his game, and my game went down."

Agassi said he never really felt he had a chance after he hurt himself, despite winning the second set and moving well.

"The thought of winning was asinine at that point," said Agassi. "I thought there was no chance for

Old stroke lifts Floyd at Western

LEMONT, Ill. — Ray Floyd was back to his old, natural swing and suddenly is playing like younger Ray Floyd.

"Tee to green, I'm probably playing the best I have since the '80s," the 48-year-old Floyd said Thursday. Then he reconsidered. "It may be I'm playing even better than that."

Playing in brisk afternoon wind, he missed only two greens and did not make a bogey in a 6-under-par 66 that staked him to a share of the first round hole in the transplanted Western Open.

Floyd was joined in the top spot by left-hander Russ Cochran, Mark Lye and Mike Sullivan, who birdied all the par-5 holes of the Dubsread course at Cog Hill that the touring pros are playing in competition for the first time.

The tournament was held at Butler National for 17 years but moved to its new site after the PGA Tour established a policy requiring open membership practices at clubs hosting its tournaments.

Butler, an all-men's club, chose not to comply with the policy that was adopted last August during controversy over racial segregation at Shoal Creek in Birmingham, Ala.

Dubsread continued to draw rave reviews from the game's touring pros.

"A fabulous course," Floyd said. "Marvelous architecture. It's a U.S. Open-caliber course."

Mark Calcavecchia, one of the men a stroke off the first-round lead, called it "one of the two or three best we play all year."

Calcavecchia shot a 67 and left a 10-foot birdie putt — the one that

Cubs saved by Grace in 11th

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — After watching the Chicago Cubs blow another big lead, Mark Grace was envisioning a long losing streak.

"If Paul Assenmacher doesn't get Don Slaught and Curtis Wilkerson out in the ninth," Grace said, "we fall behind, and we might not win another game all year. That's the way it's been going for us."

Assenmacher did his job, and Grace led off the 11th inning with his second homer of the game to give the Cubs a 9-8 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates on Thursday.

Grace's sixth homer of the season came off Bill Landrum (1-1), the fifth Pirates pitcher, on an 0-2 pitch.

"Landrum doesn't give up many home runs, but today he made a bad pitch," Grace said.

"Obviously, I should have thrown that 0-2 pitch at his shoetops but that's hindsight," Landrum said. "I had gotten him to chase on that pitch a few times in Pittsburgh."

It was the second career two-homer game for Grace, who hadn't homered since June 16. Grace's other two-homer game was on August 19, 1989 at Houston.

"You'd rather lose a game the way we did then lose on a wild pitch or throwing it away," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said. "I thought it was a terrific effort on our part to come back."

Chuck McElroy (5-0), the fifth Cubs pitcher, gave up one hit in 1½ innings for the victory.

Greg Maddux, who hasn't won since June 6, was chased in the eighth inning when the Pirates scored five runs. The Pirates scored 36 runs in splitting the four-game series.

With one out in the eighth, Maddux walked Barry Bonds and Gary Varsho. One out later, Curt Wilkerson singled home a run.

Dave Smith replaced Maddux and walked pinch-hitter Lloyd McClendon to load the bases. Orlando Merced then hit his first career grand slam, his second homer of the series.

"You've got to give the Pirates credit," Grace said. "They don't give up. Those guys keep after us and keep after us. I don't know what they do with other teams. They just continually wear the ball out against us."

National League All-Stars Andre Dawson and George Bell each hit two-run homers for the Cubs.

Phillies 7, Cardinals 1

PHILADELPHIA — Dale Murphy hit his 390th career home run and Terry Mulholland ended his five-game losing streak as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the St. Louis Cardinals 7-1 Thursday.

Murphy passed Johnny Bench and tied Graig Nettles for 25th place on the all-time homer list. Murphy drove in three runs and Ricky Jordan also homered as the Phillies avoided a four-game sweep.

Mulholland (6-7) struck out a career-high 12 and gave up five hits in his first complete game since last Sept. 30. He had not lasted more than 4½ innings in four of his last five starts.

The Phillies, who had lost nine of 11, stopped St. Louis' three-game winning streak. Philadelphia had dropped seven consecutive games

West helps Twins regain West

The Associated Press

TORONTO — David West hadn't pitched all season but he hadn't forgotten how.

West allowed just two hits over seven innings as the Minnesota Twins defeated Toronto 1-0 on Thursday, snapping the Blue Jays' five-game winning streak.

"The adrenaline's going and everything else but my concentration took over and I felt good," West said. "I kept the ball down and let them hit it."

"In the later innings, the changeup started coming around pretty good and I could sneak a slider in for a strike to lead the hitters off with. It was one of those days where everything was going pretty good."

West, who had been on the disabled list all season with elbow and abdominal muscle injuries, was activated Tuesday to replace injured starter Scott Erickson. He struck out five and walked one.

"He pitched a beautiful ballgame for us," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "The kind of game we've expected out of West over the years and we've had a glimmer of."

West allowed Joe Carter's fourth-inning double and rookie Derek Bell's first major-league hit, an infield single in the seventh.

Steve Bedrosian pitched the eighth, allowing a double by Devon White, and Rick Aguilera pitched the ninth for his 21st save.

Pedro Munoz led off the second inning with a single off Jimmy Key (10-4) and advanced to third on Shane Mack's single. Junior Ortiz then hit into a fielder's choice to score Munoz.

Key pitched 7½ innings and gave up seven hits, striking out three. A one-out walk to Scott Leius in the fifth snapped Key's string of 33 1-3 innings without allowing a walk.

It was only Minnesota's second victory in its last nine games.

Yankees 3, Orioles 2
NEW YORK — Steve Sax and Mel Hall homered as the New York Yankees beat the Baltimore Orioles 3-2 Thursday for their sixth straight victory.

The surging Yankees improved to 37-38, the closest they have been to .500 since a 2-3 record on April 13. New York has won nine of its last 10 games.

Roberto Kelly's RBI single in the eighth off reliever Todd Frohworth broke a 2-2 tie. Eric Plunk (1-2) pitched one-plus inning for his first win since last Sept. 22 against Boston. Lee Guetterman got the last three outs for his fifth save, ending the game with a double play.

Starter Roy Smith (4-2) took the loss for Baltimore, which got a homer from Chris Hoiles, his fourth.

Mariners 3, White Sox 2

SEATTLE — Jay Buhner homered twice in a game for the first time in the major leagues and had the RBIs as Seattle broke a five-game losing streak.

Storms bowl through Iowa, cause damage

Violent thunderstorms bowled through Pennsylvania and Iowa on Sunday with torrential rain and destructive winds, uprooting trees and knocking out power. An Iowa woman was fatally crushed by a falling tree and wind blew a tent down on 400 people at a religious revival near Philadelphia.

Joyce Elaine Dreesman, 32, of Dike, Iowa, was killed when a tree crashed on a van in which she had sought shelter from rain and winds topping 60 mph, police said. She was camping with her family near Clear Lake.

High winds caused damage near the Iowa communities of Sioux Center, Emmetsburg, Algona, Archer, Freeman and Orange City, the National Weather Service said.

Floods reveal millions of years of history

DES MOINES (AP) — The spring flood has excavated the ages, back to the dinosaurs and beyond.

Geologists say an unusual window to the past was provided when Saylorville Lake overflowed and tumbled over its emergency spillway, washing away a 192-foot wide chasm.

Exposed in a matter of days were hundreds of millions of years of history, from spruce logs ground into the topsoil just 14,000 years ago by a glacier to coal and shale formed when Iowa was part of a sea.

Geologists are making special trips to see the cut, which won't last long. Foliage will soon cover the sheer walls. And in a few weeks, some of the shale that was rock hard will turn to mud again, just as it was before the pressure of additional layers made it hard.

Quake shakes up parts of Arkansas, Missouri

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — An earthquake rattled parts of Missouri and Arkansas on Sunday but caused no injuries or serious property damage. Officials said the quake wasn't on the New Madrid fault.

The quake registered 4.0 on the Richter scale, said John Minsch, a geophysicist with the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo. It hit at 4:24 p.m. and was centered near Alton, Mo., near the Arkansas border.

"It made the floor feel like it rolled, and it shook stuff on the walls," said Joyce Neely of Hardy.

The Sharp County Sheriff's office received a report of a cracked basement foundation.

Wilder: Responses about Robb could be misleading

WASHINGTON (AP) — Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder said Sunday that questions about his truthfulness in denying involvement in a state police investigation of reports that associates of Sen. Charles Robb were intimidating witnesses stemmed from a "misunderstanding."
