Kitty Kruse's ongoing battle to keep her daughter out of the arms of a man she believes is a sexual predator

Kitty Kruse is a local woman who is fighting to keep custody of her daughter, 7-year-old Kitty Kruse, from a man she believes is a sexual predator. Kruse is due in court next week to argue that her daughter should not be returned to a man she says has been abducting the child, and who she believes is a sexual predator. She says she has evidence to prove her case, and she is calling on supporters to rally behind her.

Supporters of Kitty Kruse picket in front of the Johnson County Department of Human Services.

Teachers weigh Bush’s ‘America 2000’

President George Bush’s plan for increasing literacy among adult learners resulted in a national campaign last fall, according to an Iowa newspaper.

The National Education Association, which included Bush in a panel of 70 speakers at a policy conference, has been fighting for adult education programs since the early 1980s.

The NEA says the campaign has left too many people behind. "Some people are surprised by the lack of progress, but others are not," says NEA President Richard Niman. "We’re still fighting for the same issues we fought for 20 years ago." In the past two years, Bush has called for increased funding for adult education programs, and the NEA has been actively involved in lobbying Congress for more money.

Lebanon unites

Lebanon has been a country divided by factional fighting and political instability for many years. Americans new geared toward the destructive effects this war has had. Last week, an American Marine barracks was bombed in 1983. Fortunately, recent events offer hope for an end to this destructive trend. The Lebanese government has made great strides toward ending the internal conflict. The United States, in acknowledging the importance of the situation and offering technical and financial assistance to help bring this about, is assisting the government of the Lebanese in this ultiama.

Peace accord comes to standstill, but Slovenian cease-fire remains

Tony Smith
Associated Press

LJUBLJANA, Yugoslavia—Talks aimed at ending a deadly peace accord were reportedly suspended Thursday between Yugoslavia and Slovenia, officials disagreed on its future and fighting broke out in the country.

But a nearly week-old cease-fire held only in parts of Slovenia, divided Croatia, which the Slovenes declared independent last month, official media reported Wednesday. Fighting continues in Yugoslavia's eastern province of Vojvodina.

Slovenian and the federal president's guards were reported patrolling the peace accord, even before a European Community-organized meeting Thursday to discuss it.

President Milan Kucan, of the federalist Parti­cle Socialist Union, said Monday that he would not attend.

Monday, calls on Slovenia and Croatia to accept independence moves for three months. Negotiations on the terms of the two republics' independence are continuing in Brussels.

Slovenia's cabinet — presidency has not met the pact. It com­menced Thursday in Slovenia but was called off amid differences.

President Arsenije Mitcovic Pika said the republic had not completely satisfied federal demands but declared the accord as successful.

Associated Press reporter Stanislav Jurek in Zagreb, Croatia, reported that the accord was successful.

Foreman may take Holyfield fight first

Ed Schoelky Jr.
Associated Press

NEW YORK — At first George Foreman appeared to be a pawn in a threatened fight, a match few people wanted to see.

The thinking went that such a fight was using a threatened fight — with opponents being used to lure a bigger name.

Foreman is currently a light-heavyweight, though he has stated on several occasions that he would like to be a heavyweight.

Foreman said he was not going to help Holyfield get a fight.

"We're facing a big challenge and that would sound great because that would be a great challenge."

George Foreman wants to fight Mike Tyson, but has been fitted for a research with heavyweight champion Holyfield.

The forecast for Holyfield's latest fight was the worst.

Foreman is rated one of the best boxers in the world. However, his next fight is in doubt because of a possible injury.

Foreman has a broken rib and is in a hospital.

Foreman said he would like to see Holyfield fight again, but his next fight is uncertain.

Knicks play Ewing

Knicks say Warriors trying to steal Ewing

Bill Bernard

O'Neal was the starter at center over Patrick Ewing Friday for the second straight game.

Ewing's agent, David Feld, said there was no release from the club last week, and that Feld would go to New York to talk with the Warriors about the situation.

"There was no release from Ewing's agent, David Feld, that the Knicks would play Ewing," said Feld. "This is just a rumor that has been circulating.

"We're not going to comment on the situation."

The Knicks, who have lost their last four games, are without Patrick Ewing for the next three games.
