Congressional Black Caucus to oppose Thomas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Congressional Black Caucus said Thursday it will "vigorously oppose" the nomination to the Supreme Court of Clarence Thomas, a black federal judge. The caucus, consisting of 26 black House members, declined to spell out reasons for its opposition, although former caucus Chairman Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., indicated it was based partly on Thomas' record as head of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Thomas has been accused by critics of lax enforcement of anti-discrimination laws as EEOC head during the Reagan administration. In an earlier development, the White House disclosed that Thomas had taken "several puffs" of marijuana in college.

Bush looks forward to annual economic summit

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — President Bush, looking ahead to next week's economic summit, said Thursday he sees no evidence that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev has decided to speed negotiations on an arms control treaty in hopes of securing economic assistance from the West. Bush added that there's "no linkage" between the talks on slashing nuclear weapons and Gorbachev's desire for economic assistance to boost his ailing economy. Discussions on the strategic arms treaty were underway in Washington on Thursday. Bush spoke with reporters outside his vacation home here after meeting privately with Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu — one of the leaders Bush will be meeting with next week at the annual economic summit in London. The president opened the bilingual news conference with an announcement that he would visit Japan some time near the end of November.

Tension remains in Yugoslavia after accord

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Croatia's leader demanded on Thursday that two top federal army generals be fired, and the leader of Bosnia-Herzegovina said growing tensions among Serbs and Croats were threatening his republic as well. A peace accord reached this week between the government and the two breakaway republics called for all opposing forces to pull back to their bases so negotiations can be held calmly. But both sides have been trading daily charges of truce violations.

Algerian government prepares for elections

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — The government will organize a national conference to prepare for Algeria's first competitive legislative elections, officials said Thursday. Officials also said the two top leaders of the major opposition party, Muslim fundamentalists Abassi Madani and Ali Belhadj of the Islamic Salvation Front, have been charged with rebellion-related crimes and face up to 20 years in prison. According to the official Algerian news agency, the military tribunal at Blida, 60 miles from Algiers, has charged the two with: inciting citizens to take up arms against the state, calls to sabotage, organizing a rebellion, setting up unauthorized armed forces, obstructing the economy, distributing propaganda that could hurt the national interest, and kidnapping, detaining and torturing security forces.

Total solar eclipse visible in Hawaii

Prominence, corona seen through dust

Bruce Dunford Associated Press ATOP MAUNA KEA, Hawaii — Tourists exclaimed and scientists ran experiments Thursday when the moon passed in front of the sun to create a total eclipse, but clouds and volcanic dust blurred the image. "Oh my gosh!" said spectators who gathered atop this 13,796-foot volcano. "Look at that!" "On a scale of one to 10, that was a 10," said Donald N.B. Hall, director of the University of Hawaii's Institute for Astronomy, which runs observatories on the mountain. The U.S. mainland got only partial eclipses in varying degrees, with uncertain weather. At 7:28 a.m. the moon's shadow swept across the island of Hawaii from the west at 5,600 mph. The sudden darkness caused the summit temperature to plummet 5 to 6 degrees. An instant after the image of the sun disappeared behind the moon, the sun's pearly white, glowing corona, or atmosphere, became visible for four minutes. At the top of the eclipsed sun, an orange loop known as a solar prominence was visible to the naked eye. Hall said the loop of fiery gas probably extended 50,000 miles from the sun's surface. "That's one of the most beautiful coronas I've ever seen," said Hall, providing a running narrative to spectators at the mountaintop observatory. The eclipse view down the mountain and across most of the rest of Hawaii was blocked by clouds. About 500 people gathered to watch from the golf driving range at the Mauna Lani Resort in south Kohala on the island of Hawaii, but clouds kept them from seeing the initial partial eclipse when it began. The next total solar eclipse is on June 30, 1992, over the southern Atlantic and part of Uruguay.

Clouds, rain interfere with Van Allen view

Kim Dykshorn Daily Iowan UI astronomers were ready with telescopes and pinhole cameras atop Van Allen Hall Thursday to see what Dwight Nicholson, chairman of the UI Department of Physics and Astronomy, said would have been a "fantastic" event. "I wish it wasn't cloudy because I'd really like to see it," he said of the eclipse, which astronomers across the country have been eagerly awaiting. For anyone who has never seen one, "they're great, they're fantastic," he said. The astronomers planned to observe the eclipse for two hours from 1-3 p.m., but plans were canceled due to cloudy skies. In Iowa, Nicholson said, the eclipse would not be a total eclipse as in Mexico and Hawaii. Because of the differences in angles, in Iowa the moon would never have completely covered the sun. "Imagine standing on top of a dinner table looking directly over a plate on the table. If you take a second plate and very slowly pass it directly over the first plate, you will create the same effect as the eclipse," Nicholson explained. At first only a small arc is visible. As the second plate (the moon) moves across the first plate (the sun), eventually the centers of the two plates will line up and the second plate will completely cover the first plate. Outside, looking at the sun directly would cause blindness. Therefore, as Jim Leckband, a graduate student in the astronomy department, explained, "you would have had to look at it indirectly by projecting it on a piece of paper." The projected image would have resembled a disk with a bite taken out of it. Although eclipses occur somewhere on earth every year, they are rarely observable from land since most of the earth is water, Leckband said. The next eclipse observable in the continental United States will be in 2017.

SOVIET TALKS

President Bush listens to Soviet Foreign Minister Thursday. Soviet delegates are in Washington to Alexander Bessmertnykh at the White House early wrap up treaty talks with the United States.

Arms treaty may be resolved soon

President Bush isn't giving odds on when START will be finalized. The plan is to be discussed next week by Bush and the leaders of the six other major industrialized democracies at a summit meeting in London. Gorbachev, who will make a personal pitch there to the president and the others, hopes it will persuade the wealthy nations to assist his perestroika program. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Gorbachev sent similar letters to the six other leaders. "It basically discusses what he plans to say" at the London summit, Fitzwater said. Bessmertnykh said that during negotiations today, efforts would be made to "try to merge" U.S. and Soviet suggestions on how to resolve remaining obstacles to the arms treaty. Bessmertnykh visited Bush before heading to the State Department for the talks with Secretary of State James Baker. The Oval Office meeting, also attended by Baker and Gen. Mikhail Moiseyev, the Kremlin's top general, lasted about 15 minutes before Bush left for his Maine home in Kennebunkport. Bessmertnykh, speaking with reporters outside the White House, said he hoped that remaining differences could be wrapped up over the next few days. He said there was "political willingness" on both sides to complete the pact now. "The issues are so technical that in a certain way we are hostages of either crazy professors or some technicians. But we are trying to break down the technicalities of the issue and to make the decisions," he said. He said remaining loose ends were largely "the natural difficulty at the end of a long trip of nine years."

Jet explosion in Middle East kills over 250

Mohammed Ibrahim Associated Press JIDDAH, Saudi Arabia — A DC-8 jetliner carrying white-robed Nigerian pilgrims and a crew from Canada crashed in flames Thursday while attempting to make an emergency landing, witnesses said. There were no survivors among at least 261 people on board. Bodies of the pilgrims were scattered across the Saudi desert after the plane nose-dived onto the tarmac and exploded shortly after takeoff, airport officials and the witnesses said. The number of people aboard the plane was in dispute. The plane was leased from the Montreal-based carrier Nationair by a Nigerian company, Holdtrade, to carry the Muslim pilgrims home from Jiddah to Sokoto, Nigeria. The pilot was attempting to return to King Abdul-Aziz International Airport after reporting "technical trouble" when it exploded, airport sources said. Other aviation sources said. See CRASH, Page 6

ICPD reacts to increase of burglaries

The department names a full-time officer to coordinate the Crime Prevention Unit.

Joleen Mahaffey
Daily Iowan

Due to an increase in burglaries, the Crime Prevention Unit at the Iowa City Police Department is revitalizing the Neighborhood Watch Program in certain areas of the city.

The ICPD recently appointed Officer Kevin Ross to be coordinator of the Crime Prevention Unit which has existed for the last year on a part-time basis.

Currently, the unit's primary target is the Neighborhood Watch Program due to a recent outbreak of residential burglaries.

The burglaries have captured the attention of concerned citizens throughout Iowa City who are interested in securing their neighborhoods and homes, Ross said.

Pam Smith, a neighborhood block captain since last March, said she feels much better since her neighborhood joined the program.

Smith lives near Fairmeadows Park, located on Miami and Lakeside Drives, which became a hang-out for older kids.

"They were drinking and involved in minor distraction to the park and vandalism to Grant Wood Elementary School," Smith said. Younger children would discover broken beer bottles and were often intimidated by the older kids, she added.

Neighbors in the area got together and met with Ross to organize a watch program. Police also stepped up surveillance in the neighborhood and the problem was solved, Smith said.

The watch program is presently concerned with the burglaries; however, Ross says it is designed "to combat any and all crime associated in residential areas."

Smith said even with the increase in burglaries, she feels safe because their block watch is set up with 12 families whose yards are visible to a couple of homes.

The watch program was organized one year ago as a pilot program to see if it would work in Iowa City. But it was not until recently that the ICPD had a full-time person to operate the CPU, Ross said.

Ross is the contact between the ICPD and Iowa City residents. The program is designed to "break down communication barriers between people and the Police Department," Ross said.

"The idea behind the program is neighbors volunteering to take responsibility for the safety of their neighborhoods," he added.

A neighborhood captain, the one who participates first, hosts meetings in her/his home. Ross attends the meetings, and they discuss security procedures.

A major concern is that people learn to recognize what should be reported, such as suspicious people, cars or incidents. The CPU hopes that the program will encourage people to report incidents.

"Too many suspicious incidents go unreported that could have led to preventing a crime or picking up a suspect," Ross noted.

He stressed that the CPU and Neighborhood Watch Program "does not encourage physical activity with a suspect."

The neighborhoods currently involved in the program include blocks that have been hit hardest by crime, but the program does expand to anyone interested.

Cyclists pedal to prevent hunger

Group hoping to raise awareness of this domestic issue travels through Iowa this week.

Associated Press

ATLANTIC, Iowa — A group of cyclists is crossing Iowa, trying to raise public awareness about the hunger problem in the United States.

Cyclists Ending Hunger started its 3,494 mile trip in San Francisco on June 9 and plans to go to Washington, D.C., and then on to New York. The group spent Wednesday night in Atlantic and left for Des Moines on Thursday.

Bruce Stewart of Boston said there is only one reason for the trip.

"The fact that there are hungry children," Stewart said. "One out of eight children are hungry in the United States, and one out of eight are at risk because of poverty."

There are 5.5 million hungry children in the United States every day, said Heidi Hattenbach of Portland, Ore.

"That's not OK with me," she said. "We're a country that should be able to take care of its children. It should be a higher priority on our government's agenda."

The group is trying to raise people's awareness about hunger through newspapers, radio and television. They are also doing presentations for clubs.

The group has riders from New York, Arizona, California, Hawaii, New Mexico, Ohio, Georgia and the country of Malaysia.

The man whose book inspired the 1989 movie "Field of Dreams" visited the farm where the movie was filmed last night.

W.P. Kinsella, whose novel "Shoeless Joe" was the basis of the popular movie starring Kevin Costner, had not seen the baseball field since it was carved out of a cornfield in Dyersville, Iowa, for the movie. The owner of the field has kept the baseball diamond as a tourist attraction.

Kinsella, a Canadian author who is in Iowa City to teach at the Iowa Summer Writing Festival, accompanied 125 festival participants to Dyersville in a field trip that departed Iowa City in the late afternoon.

"I'm anxious to take a bat and go up to the plate," Kinsella said before the trip.

He added that he was more interested in others' reactions to the experience.

"I know that other people are touched emotionally by the situation. I'm just the observer, taking notes on what's going on," he said as he boarded a bus in front of the Union.

The Iowa Summer Writing Festival is a six-week workshop, divided into one-week courses, that attracts participants from around the world. Writing classes similar in format to the Iowa Writers' Workshop are held throughout each session.

Karen Burgus, the festival's assistant director, said there is no selection process for the 650 participants.

"We just want people who love writing and who want to share it with the community," she said.

UI policy forbids finals changes

Heather Pitzel
Daily Iowan

This may come as a big surprise to students who do not pay attention to the student handbook — it is against UI policy to change a scheduled final exam time.

Those people enrolled in summer school may notice there is no scheduled final exam week. However, during the fall and spring semesters, most students have had a final rescheduled before finals week or at another time during finals week.

UI policy states that a change in the final examination schedule is granted only with written approval of the associate dean for academic programs. The change in final exam time should also be "acceptable" to students in the class.

However, the UI Educational Policy Committee estimates that at least one third of the faculty does not follow this policy. They are concerned about several complaints from students who say they did not have enough time to study for their exams.

"We have a rule being violated that can't be enforced," Phil Kutzko, professor of mathematics, said. The EPC believes there is no way of stopping faculty from changing finals short of using "Exam Police."

Faculty who have violated finals policy are not disciplined, said Dean Lindberg, associate dean of liberal arts admission. He receives approximately 10 faculty requests to reschedule tests every semester. Some teachers, he said, have told him the students voted unanimously for the time change.

Lindberg also said that most students and faculty like to finish early and will want a final exam the week before it is scheduled. But, he added, he will not grant permission for that reason only.

Students should have the "empowerment to complain," Lindberg said. He advised that if a final exam is changed to a different time and it creates conflicts for a student, he or she should first ask the teacher for a make-up exam. If that does not get results, the student should speak to an adviser or department chairperson.

EPC discussion of final exam schedule violations was shelved at the last meeting, and Lindberg said he doubts there will be a change of policy.

"We want a greater knowledge of this final exam policy among faculty and students," Lindberg said.

Iowa's prisons Bonnie Campbell calls for a critical look at Iowa's sentencing practices.

Mike Glover Associated Press

DES MOINES — Attorney General Bonnie Campbell, saying confidence in the justice system shattered, on Thursday named a task force to study sentencing practices and find ways to deal with crowded prisons.

One certainty is the panel will push for construction of more prison space to ease a jam system currently holding about 4,057 inmates that is designed to house, she said.

"It does not require one to be a rocket scientist to figure out we need more space," said Campbell. "We don't have the capacity to hold the prisoners."

Campbell said the 24-member committee will make recommendations in October, and that she will push the Legislature to act in November. In addition to prison overcrowding, the panel should examine under-sentencing practices which have contributed to the problem, she said.

Underscoring the need for action, Campbell released figures showing that the state's prisons were holding 4,057 inmates as of Thursday in a system designed to hold 3,045.

Alumnus earns Japan study trip

A UI graduate receives prestigious award and gets a first-hand look at another culture.

of the Center for Asian and Pacific Studies.

"There were certain conditions for the award. The nominee couldn't have visited Japan before and had to be studying an Asian language," Rohlich said when asked why Shervheim was nominated. "Mark had never been there, and he is a very good student. He's made tremendous progress in the last two years."

The first half of the trip, for which Shervheim departed on June 3, was an all-expense-paid study tour of several Japanese cities, including Tokyo and Hiroshima. Shervheim and his fellow student travelers saw demonstrations of traditional Japanese art forms, toured museums and factories, and visited the Tokyo Stock Exchange. He also stayed with a Japanese family for two days.

"The family roles are different (in Japan) than (in the United States)," Shervheim said. "The mother does basically all of the child-raising and homemaking, while the father's sole responsibility is his job."

Shervheim spent the last two weeks of the trip traveling the country on his own, an experience he said he enjoyed.

"I got a chance to see a lot of different sides of Japanese society," he said. "I saw the old, traditional Japan, but I also saw the modern side of the society."

While Shervheim said he didn't have any bad experiences on his trip, he was unpleasantly surprised by the cost of living in Japan.

"It's very expensive," he said. "A meal at McDonald's would run about $10, and a pair of Levi's costs about $75 — that's double what you would pay in the U.S."

But he said the trip was extremely worthwhile. "I think the whole purpose of the trip was to give students a deeper understanding of their culture, and (the Japan Foundation) did a good job of giving an overview of life there," he said. "I saw Japan in a way I couldn't have without going there."

The quickest lesson UI graduate Mark Shervheim learned while in Japan was "not to offer to pay for anything I didn't know the price of."

But that was only one aspect of Japan that Shervheim discovered on his four-week trip, which he earned after winning a Study Tour Award for Outstanding Foreign Students of the Japanese Language from the Japanese Embassy.

Shervheim, who majored in political science and Asian languages and literature before graduating in May, was one of only six U.S. college students chosen to receive the prestigious award. He was nominated for the prize by his adviser, Thomas Rohlich, director

Commission will study Iowa's prison crowding

Bonnie Campbell calls for a critical look at Iowa's sentencing practices.

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Attorney General Bonnie Campbell, saying confidence in the justice system is shattered, on Thursday named a task force to study sentencing practices and find ways to deal with crowded prisons.

One certainty is the panel will push for construction of more prison space to ease a jammed system currently holding about 30 percent more inmates than it was designed to house, she said.

"It does not require one to be a rocket scientist to figure out that we need more space," said Campbell. "We don't have the capacity to hold the prisoners."

Campbell said the 24-member committee will make recommendations in October, and that she will push the Legislature to act in 1992. In addition to prison crowding, the panel should examine underlying sentencing practices which have contributed to the problem, she said.

Underscoring the need for action, Campbell released figures showing that the state's prisons were holding 4,057 inmates as of Thursday in a system designed to house 3,045.

That forces prison officials to release many inmates who aren't a good risk and means that tough-sounding prison terms on the books are rarely actually imposed.

The panel will be headed by Dean Wright, a Drake University sociology professor and prison expert. It includes legislators, prosecutors, prison officials and police, as well as the head of the union representing prison guards.

The state's elected officials have wrestled with prison issues for a decade but have been unable to make major progress.

Parts of the prison system date to before the Civil War.

Suggestions to relieve crowding have ranged from turning parts of the system over to private businesses to imposing the death sentence to radically revamping the sentencing system. None have been approved.

Political leaders, sparked by voter fears of crime, have moved consistently to toughen sentences for virtually all crimes, throwing more and more people into prison.

"We need to break that kind of logjam," Campbell said. "There is growing recognition that the system is faltering, but there is little consensus on solutions."

She conceded that the basis of the problem was political fear of being perceived as weak on crime issues.

"What I'm going to do is ask people to set aside their fear of being kicked out of office," Campbell said. "We have to put aside our fears of what a 30-second sound bite might do us.

"Maybe we should be afraid of the consequences of doing nothing," Campbell said.

Aggravating the prison crowding problem is a state budget crisis that has forced across-the-board spending cuts, including the prison system's budget.

"I have no illusions about the difficulty of the task," she said. "What makes it all the more ominous is that possible solutions may be hamstrung by the severe budget crisis the state is facing."

The study will be divided into two parts, Campbell said. The first will deal with the immediate issue of a prison system out of room to handle inmates, while the second will examine sentencing laws that feed prisoners into the system.

"Those solutions can go a long way toward restoring public confidence in our sentencing system," said Campbell.

"I still don't think we're doing enough," she said.

White said that the board does not see everything done in the county to promote affirmative action. For instance, White said he met last week with the county treasurer and spent 15 minutes talking about affirmative action problems. Similarly, he said he had met recently with the county engineer, and they had had an extended discussion about affirmative action and hiring practices.

White told the board that he is preparing a county job application form and setting up a training class for department supervisors in September. He also plans to have a written county affirmative action policy by the end of the month.

Although final figures are not yet in, preliminary U.S. Census figures indicate that minorities make up less than 5 percent of Iowa's population. Johnson County's workforce is 3 percent minorities, according to the 1991 County Auditor's Personnel Report.

Even though Johnson County may have a higher percentage of minorities than other Iowa counties, they are here because of the university, said Supervisor Pat Meade.

"They are not within the work pool," said Meade. "If they work at all, it's part time. When they're finished with school, they leave."

KRUSE CUSTODY BATTLE

Allegations of abuse merit investigation

It is estimated that one in four girls and one in seven boys will be sexually abused before the age of 18. Human service agencies, therapists and the courts are beginning to recognize the scope of the problem and the devastating effect on its victims, but the system still fails to protect some children.

In what has become a long and involved court battle, Iowa City mother Kitty Kruse is trying to regain custody of her 4½-year-old daughter from her former husband, who she alleges has sexually abused the child.

After their divorce, Kruse and her former husband received joint custody of the girl. Custody was briefly given to Kruse when she made the allegations of sexual abuse, but the latest court decision awarded sole custody of the child to her father. Although Kruse has compiled substantial medical evidence supporting the abuse claims, the Johnson County Department of Human Services has refused to reopen the case.

The physicians' statements submitted by Kruse indicate a "high probability" that sexual abuse occurred. Why the DHS refused to accept or even address the reports is unclear and disturbing. Citing confidentiality, the department will make no comment.

Supporters of Kruse say the DHS has justified its decision by attempting to discredit Kruse, suggesting she might do something drastic such as run away with the child. In addition, she has been given only two hours of supervised visitation per week with her daughter. It seems the more she fights the system, the more it works against her — and her child.

The legal system is fraught with red tape, and court battles often drag on for years. But in this case, a child's well-being is at stake. Certainly there are legal channels to protect children from abuse — why aren't they being used? Shouldn't any indication that a child may be suffering sexual abuse prompt authorities to investigate the situation thoroughly?

Even if the DHS refuses to accept medical evidence presented by Kruse, what harm could it do to reopen the case, perhaps employing a department-appointed physician to ensure neutrality. If the court has truly acted in the child's best interest by awarding primary custody to her father, further investigation will only substantiate this decision.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Do the right thing

President Bush refers to his decision to restore full economic ties with South Africa and China as "doing the right thing." Unlike the Spike Lee film (which bears a similar title), President Bush has received little positive acclaim for his work. Critics on Capitol Hill are giving the president some harsh reviews — doing the right thing is coming at the wrong time.

Half a decade after the United States imposed sanctions on South Africa, President Bush has renewed trade relations with Pretoria. Earlier this year, China regained Most Favored Nation status — two years after the Tiananmen Square massacre. Bush's decision to renew ties with Beijing and Pretoria is premature. South Africa still holds hundreds of political prisoners and in China human rights violations continue. Battle lines on Bush's stance are being drawn in the House.

The president struck out Wednesday with a number of his "Bush leaguers" on the Hill as staunch Bush supporters broke with the president and voted in favor of a bill that will restrict trade with China if there are no significant steps taken toward improving human rights. On the same day, the president failed to heed Nelson Mandela's advice and removed trade restrictions with South Africa. Rightfully so, Bush has been castigated for his actions. "Doing the right thing" has left the president in a precarious position, as he answers questions on his dedication to civil rights.

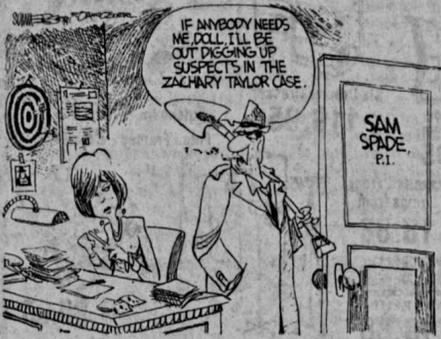

Bush adamantly claims to be a staunch supporter of civil rights. But Willie Horton, Clarence Thomas and a veto of the civil rights bill are indeed dubious contributions to improving civil rights.

What President Bush must realize is that guaranteeing civil rights is neither campaign rhetoric nor a domestic issue. Civil rights are human rights and must be ensured in Washington, Johannesburg and Beijing. Economic restrictions are a way of sending a message to governments that violate human rights. Lifting restrictions suggests that such transgressions no longer exist — or are no longer noticed.

Reinstating preferred trading status with South Africa and China is not doing the right thing for human rights. Take two, Mr. Bush.

MITCH MARTIN

Judge Martin faces grueling questions

When the Framers decided on this Supreme Court idea, there was a definite reason. I mean they may have all worn comically long socks, but those guys were no idiots.

They already had figured out that your average congressman would rather slide butt-naked down a razor blade slide into a huge pile of salt than take a stand on a controversial issue. So in their infinite wisdom, the Framers decided to set up a system of checks and balances wherein all the really hard and important social issues would be settled by nine old men who had studied all their lives to become bookish and out of touch.

We cannot blame the necessity of this rather goofy system on the cowardice of congressmen. They are not supposed to have backbone. It is their job to cower to their constituency. I blame the constituency. There is too much "Me and Mine" in this democracy, and therefore consensus and compromise are too often impossible.

So the spectacle continues. I've been thinking about this poor Clarence Thomas guy. He is now under wraps until his confirmation, scheduled for mid-September. He is no doubt being coached around the clock on how to be non-threatening to liberals. (Probably by the same people in charge of giving George Bush a personality.)

So I had this horrible dream the other night. One minute I'm a down and out traffic court judge, the next minute George Mitchell's making really bad jokes about me for the cameras with this really sinister look on his face. And then my dream just jumps to the next scene without transition, sort of like one of my columns, and I'm standing there in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee answering the tough questions.

The Committee: What exactly makes you think you are qualified for this appointment?

Me: Well, I am a minority in that I am highly Danish. Also, none of you guys have any idea how I feel about anything. Heck, I don't know myself. In my six-month tenure as traffic court judge for Johnson County, Iowa, I didn't rule on anything even resembling controversy. Well, I did rule that while it was indeed constitutional for the University's Parking Enforcement Squad In Little White Chryslers Specifically Designed For Carting Friends To and From Class to issue tickets, the ticketee did have the right to sing "Deutschland Uber Alles" at the ticketer in a highly sarcastic Bavarian accent. Landmark case really, got free beer for months.

The Committee: Mr. Martin, how can you believe this is the job for you when your own people — the Amalgamated Owners of Cute Little Danish Stores Selling Puny Bits of Wood Carved to No Particular End — gave you a resounding non-endorsement.

Me: I can't say that didn't hurt. But they've just got their fjords all bent out of shape because I had mouthed Danish furniture one night when I had had a little too much Aqua Vitae.

Sen. Kennedy: Judge Martin, first let me say that I have way too much respect for this system to ask you any specific questions about any specific issues or cases. But let's say a person, make it a woman, had a little package inside her, inside her very own body which as we all know is hers and nobody else's to mess with. And let us further say that the way she came to have this package involved sex. And let us further hypothesize that if she waited nine months and didn't call the baby store to say there'd been a mistake, a baby would come out of the package. And let's say she didn't want this baby. But let us say there was a group of totally psycho, Bible nutcases — I mean the sort of people that are always calling my office and reducing those little, snot-nosed interns to tears — who thought for some reason that calling the baby store was an act of murder. Would you think that calling the baby store was murder?

Me: Well, let me answer that question by stating my case on a related subject. Say ... abortion. My position on abortion is that I am still confused. My position is that no one should have to make a decision like that. I am sure a really wonderful position concerning calling the baby store will hit me sometime after I am confirmed. Funny how that works, huh? Let me just say that I will cross that bridge when we come to it. No offense, Sen. Kennedy.

The Committee: Judge Martin, what is your political affiliation?

Me: Do I have to answer that?

Them: We'd appreciate it.

Me: Listen, it's not the sort of thing I like to talk about. It reminds me of third grade when I had this friend that everyone else thought was really geeky but he was a good guy and yet I couldn't stand all the crap I was taking.

Which is just the way people act when they find out. They look at me like I'm wearing a knit tie and say, "You're a Democrat?" And I say, "Well yeah, I mean just so I can vote in the primaries." And then they say, "Why would you want to do that?" And I say, "Well, they're just very nice." And then they say, "Well sure, but they're boring and they have all the political acumen of donut glaze ..."

Sorry, that's where I woke up. Which is a shame because I think my subconscious was about to make a pretty good point. I mean we wouldn't have made all these poor, aging liberal justices hang on to their court seats until they rot off them, if the Democratic presidential candidates weren't always trying to out-idiot each other. The Democrats keep saying maybe next election it'll be our turn to pick incredibly judicious, impartial justices who just happen to meet our ideological needs. I guess that's what being a Democrat is all about, the political equivalent of a Cubs fan.

CHARLES KRAUTHAMMER

Conspiracy deepens; better check the water

Well, they dug up the bones of Zachary Taylor, 12th president of the United States, to prove that he did not die at the hand of God but at the hand of conspirators. Some historical novelist got it into her head that Old Rough and Ready was not the sort to die of gastroenteritis and that his death was just too convenient for the pro-slavery forces of the day. Finding arsenic in Taylor's earthly remains, it was held, would recast the Civil War as the product of a few unknown men who prevented the liberal Taylor, a man heretofore not known as a giant among presidents, from coping with the underlying causes of the coming conflict.

Would that history were so neat. It isn't. And Zachary Taylor wasn't murdered. So the chief medical examiner of Kentucky informs us, 141 years after the fact. The trace amount of arsenic found in him was not enough to kill a mouse.

In fact, Taylor was likely killed by his doctors. Before the 20th century, doctors spent most of their time bleeding, blistering and feeding (what we now know to be) poisons to their already debilitated patients, a bizarre ritual that for centuries was known as medicine. That is what they did to Taylor when he came down with gastroenteritis after consuming iced cherries and milk on a steamy Fourth of July.

But there is no romance in being inadvertently killed by your doctors. And no satisfying sense of injustice at discovering death by natural causes. Hence the eternal quest for the satisfaction that comes from conspiracy uncovered. Taylor's indecorous disinterment is only the most bizarre example of the current quest for conspiracy. We are in the midst of a wave of conspiracy theorizing.

■ Former Carter aide Gary Sick claims that in 1980 the Reagan campaign conspired with the ayatollah to keep the hostages in Teheran past Election Day. If Sick is right, many Democrats believe, then the 1980 election was stolen.

■ A current best seller "Silent Coup: Removal of a President" claims that Watergate was an elaborate conspiracy to dethrone an innocent Richard Nixon, involving some of his own operatives (notably Alexander Haig and John Dean) working hand in glove with such improbable allies as Bob Woodward of The Washington Post.

■ Two princes of Hollywood, Oscar winners Kevin Costner and Oliver Stone, are working on a big screen version of the Kennedy assassination that reportedly paints a vast conspiracy involving the CIA, FBI, Pentagon, Dallas police, Secret Service, big business and Lyndon Johnson. They had to get Kennedy out of power before he could — if this is Stone, what else? — end the Vietnam War. Not only did Oswald not do it alone. He didn't do it at all. The movie hero, played by Costner, is New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison, who once did bring a conspiracy case to trial in Louisiana. It was dismissed by the jury in less than an hour.

What do all these conspiracy theories have in common? They delegitimize what appear to be constitutional transgressions of power. They imply that Reagan, Johnson and even poor Millard Fillmore came to power, and Nixon was deprived of it, not by normal democratic process but by plot.

And now, as if to parody the trend, comes news that Louisiana authorities have decided to dig up the body of Huey Long's assassin. By studying its 60 (!) bullet holes (delivered, at the scene, by Long's bodyguards), they expect to find out if he really did it or if Long's bodyguards did. Remember, Long was vowing to challenge FDR for the presidency. Why is every man not a king?

Forensic medicine will solve the mystery.

What is so odd about this rash of claims that various American presidential transitions were illegitimate is that America has produced the most durable and orderly system of transferring power in history. And yet ghosts keep appearing warning of murder most foul. Why is it that Americans are so ready to believe we transfer power like the Borgias, though with somewhat more guile?

The most reasonable explanation for this eruption of odd thinking is coincidence. This is always the safest and most likely explanation for any conjunction of curious circumstances, the periodic clustering of plane crashes, for example. Not satisfied? If we are going to go beyond coincidence, then we must speak of underlying causes. In societies, as in individuals, paranoia arises when a world view has exploded and some new intellectual structure — preferably conspiratorial — is needed to fill the void and explain the world. Paranoia comes with disorienting cultural and ideological disintegration: consider Germany at the collapse of Weimar and Iran at the fall of the shah.

Or America in the 1960s and 1970s. Then, for example, Cambridge, Mass., sported an all-time outfit called the Assassination Information Bureau. Social convulsion would explain the rise of conspiracy theories then. But now? The '90s are hardly a time of cultural revolution. Bush's America is quiescent to the point of coma. Why the rash of conspiracy theories?

Why, conspiracy, of course. There are people who wish us ill. They must know that the quickest way to debilitate a society is to turn it paranoid. Has anyone checked the water? Was that really benzene in the Perrier?

Who are these shadowy characters? We can never be sure about these things. But my guess is the Medellin cartel. In conjunction with the Jews, of course. Orchestrated by Bill Casey. When do we dig him up?

Serbs want peace, not control

Your editorials about U.S. policy toward Yugoslavia ["Bush cites sovereignty as guiding principle," July 1 and "Boundaries from the past may ultimately haunt the future," July 3] contain a simplified vision of a very complex issue. I would like to call your attention to a statement you made which is neither true nor logical.

Unfortunately, the sentence which is the core of the article is very prejudicial and could hurt the feelings of truthful Yugoslavs. You say, "After being dominated by the Serbian Communist leadership, these nor economically dominated by Serbia.

Second, Yugoslavia is dominated by Serb population. In the census of 1981, about 36.3 percent of the Yugoslavian population was Serbs. They are spread mostly in four republics: Serbia, Bosnia and Hercegovina, Montenegro and Croatia. So, any kind of dissolution of Yugoslavia is against their existential interest: to be in one country. Serbs are afraid of the "Kurds fate."

Third, at this moment Serbia (with about 85 percent Serbs and 15 percent Albanians, Hungarians and others) has a Communist leadership, but it also has active and free opposition. You cannot find active opposition in Croatia or Slovenia. So, saying that they are democratic and that Serbia is not — as you read these days — is not fair.

Yugoslavia's Entangled Republics

During the Cold War, the nationalist politics of Communist Josip Broz Tito brought unity that rose above traditional ethnic rivalries. But with the fall of Communism in Eastern Europe, the rivalries have surfaced, bringing political strife and violence.

The Balkans in 1914

How Yugoslavia was formed

The Balkan country was born in the aftermath of World War I as a joint kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes. After being occupied by the Germans in 1941, it re-emerged as a Communist-style federation of six "people's republics" with Macedonia, Montenegro and Bosnia-Hercegovina added to the three pre-war states under Tito.

Accuracy requires all six sides

Recently, violence and death have thrust Yugoslavia upon the world's attention. In the local press, several articles have expressed opinions about events and possible outcomes of the tensions which are finally boiling over. It cannot be pointed out too often that anything said about Yugoslavia has to have six sides in order to approach accuracy. For instance, it is a terrible and unproductive simplification to say that all of the present turmoil is concerned with escaping the tyranny of Serbia.

There is a separatist movement in each of the six republics of Yugoslavia, whether it is openly declared or not. This movement started in 1964, when power began to be transferred from the central government to the republics. The influence of politics on the economy resulted in six closed markets with very weak interconnections.

Even before the first multiparty elections last year, it was very clear that Yugoslavia was a structure of six countries existing in one. In each republic, the winners of the elections were those who, regardless of their party affiliation, declared that the republic could do better economically alone, without the others. In Slovenia and Croatia, the winners are strongly anti-Socialist; in Bosnia and Hercegovina as well as Macedonia, they are far from being Socialists; and in Serbia and Montenegro, they are Socialists.

Throughout the country, everyone feels loss and everyone blames others for it. Therefore, the basic question in Yugoslavia now is not whether some republic wants to secede; each one does. The question is how to separate — how to divide — common goods and $19 billion worth of foreign debt. Each republic is jockeying for a favorable position so as to leave the federation with as little baggage as possible. One of the most effective tools in this effort is nationalism. In the case of Yugoslavia, where nationalities and religions are so mixed, this can be very dangerous.

Taking into account the historical experience and present situation of the country, the only peaceful method for solving this crisis is tolerance, patience and negotiation. If the politicians in each republic show a lack of these qualities, they will lead Yugoslavia into a civil war with unforeseeable consequences. In the events of the last two years, they have shown a great deal of irresponsibility in this regard.

The claim of each nation to have its own country is legitimate and so is the desire for separation felt by the nations of the Yugoslav federation. Whether we approve of this desire or not, it is a fact with economic, historic and social background and must be respected as such. However, the method of achieving the goal is as important as the goal itself.

Intolerance of other ethnic groups living in one's own republic and a rejection of negotiations between republics do not form a sound basis for separation. In fact, the race toward independence in each republic is a device for diverting attention from the fact that the governments put into place by the 1990 elections failed to provide the promised increase in jobs and rise in standard of living.

There is no power now which can reverse the process of separation going on in Yugoslavia. Instead of fighting it, opponents of the process must be patient and tolerant and engage in negotiations. Whoever does not act in this way is guilty of the violence and death in his own republic.

Old Yugoslavia is dead; the future is still a mystery. Whether a new Yugoslavia or several new countries emerge from the latest events is not so important. What we need is whichever solution will bring peace, democracy and a higher standard of living to all people in Yugoslavia. It is my fervent wish to go back to my homeland and be able to say, "I am happy here," and see that everyone else, no matter of what nationality and religion, can say the same. Goran Lesaja is a graduate student in the Department of Mathematics.

two republics are both capable and deserving of self-rule."

First, since WWII, Yugoslavia has never been dominated by Serbian leadership. Though Tito was an old-fashioned Communist and internationalist, he was Croat, and most of his comrades in power were Slovenians and Croats (for example, E. Kardelj, B. Kidric, brothers Krajger). After Tito's death, Yugoslavia has had a presidency with representatives from each of eight constitutional units, six republics and two provinces, with a rotation principle for president (first among equals). All three prime ministers after 1980 were Croats (M. Planinc, B. Mikulic and now A. Markovic). The most important ministers in federal government — economy, finance and foreign affairs — have been covered by Slovenians and Croats. If Slovenia and Croatia were dominated by Serbia, how did they come to be the most prosperous republics in Yugoslavia? So, by any means, Yugoslavia was neither politically Fourth, the federal army is not just a military power, but it is a political power as well. It is dominated by hard-line Communists, but it is not Serbian-dominated. The number of high officials in the army is controlled by the Federal Assembly (Parliament), which has been applying the population proportions to this very sensitive issue. The federal army's goal is, in fact, to take over the republics and to resume the power and glory of Tito's time; it's not the same goal of Serbia. At this moment, the goal of the Serbian government — to provide one country to all Serbs — just provisionally and partly resembles the goal of the generals.

Finally, a principle of self-determination and self-rule was implemented in Yugoslavia in 1943. It is not in doubt now, and it is not an invention of new leaders. The time of the Cold War was better for Yugoslavia than for others in Eastern Europe — in the first place, because of its geographical location but also because of the wise strategy of J.B. Tito, who managed to get a lot from the West while paying almost nothing to the East. Now, I am afraid that "a devil is back to take its own."

The U.S. policy toward Yugoslavia is pretty controversial. First, they encouraged Slovenia and Croatia to secede by freezing financial aid to Yugoslavia "selectively," allowing aid to Slovenia and Croatia. Then they took a very firm stand supporting Yugoslavia as a single entity and encouraging the federal government to take back control of the frontiers. And when the army realized that this is not a "First May Parade" and started real combat operations, America officially began backing the rebellious republics again, adding a great deal of confusion. This is obvious, but who knows what is behind it?

of a burglary July 10, according to Iowa City Police Department records.

The burglary occurred at 1218 Ginter Ave. and was reported at 7:03 p.m., records state.

The neighbor was watching the house while the victims were out of town on vacation. Capt. Patrick Harney said the house was ransacked, but it is undetermined as to what was stolen since the residents are still out of town.

ple the project.

But before any construction plans are made, the damage assessment report and grant proposal must first be evaluated by officials in the regional office in Kansas City, Mo. If they consider the merits of the grant sufficient, the request will then be sent to Washington, D.C., where federal officials review the report and declare these public roads and buildings a disaster before any funding is approved, McGinley said.

The approval process will take about a week, but "it's hard to tell how long it will be before the funding is approved," he continued.

McGinley and other city officials are hoping for speedy processing and believe raising the street is the best solution to the flooding problem.

lem.

"Hopefully (this project) would eliminate the possibility of flooding to only once every 100 years or so," McGinley said.

If the mitigation grant is not approved, the federal government would provide just 50 percent of the funding necessary, leaving the city to come up with the rest of the money.

But if all goes well and the money is allocated, construction will probably begin in July or August of next year, according to City Engineer Rick Fosse.

"Money for the project has been budgeted for the city's fiscal year beginning July '92," Fosse said, adding it would take approximately two months to complete construction.

The area of Dubuque Street affected by construction would be from Kimball Road (just north of Park Road) to Foster Road, south of Interstate 80.

Garry Templeton was intentionally walked, giving the New York Mets a 4-3 victory over the San Diego Padres for their eighth straight win.

Larry Andersen (2-2) walked pinch-hitter Greg Jefferies with one out. Kelvin Torve, another pinch hitter, hit into a fielder's choice and San Diego chose to walk Templeton, a .243 hitter. McReynolds, who entered the game with a .293 average, then bounced a single up the middle to score Jefferies.

John Franco (2-6) pitched 1½ innings for the victory, getting Darrin Jackson on a pop up with two outs and the bases loaded in the eighth.

The Padres have lost 10 of 13. Dwight Gooden allowed three runs and seven hits in 7½ innings, struck out nine and walked three.

CHICAGO — Pinch-hitter Ken

Oberkfell's two-run double with two outs in the 11th inning gave Houston a 6-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs on Thursday night, the Astros' sixth win in their last seven games.

Oberkfell's hit off Dave Smith (0-5) made a winner of Al Osuna (5-2). Mike Capel got the last three outs for his third save, leaving the bases loaded in the bottom of the 11th when Mark Grace grounded out to first.

for Kansas City. Appier also was the last Royal pitcher to defeat Detroit, on July 7, 1990, at Tiger Stadium.

The Royals scored an unearned run without a hit in the first, then got just four hits in the second, including Macfarlane's 11th homer.

Detroit starter Dan Gakeler (1-3) walked three batters in the first and the route was on when Kansas City leadoff man Gary Thurman scored on shortstop Travis Fryman's boot of a grounder by Macfarlane.

SkyDome, in the eighth.

Candiotti (9-7) gave way to Tom Henke, who pitched a perfect ninth for his 17th save in as many chances, ending the Rangers' four-game winning streak. The loss, coupled with Minnesota's 7-3 victory over Boston, dropped the Rangers a game behind the Twins in the American League West.

Twins 7, Red Sox 3
MINNEAPOLIS — Mike Pagliarulo's third hit broke a tie, and Paul Sorrento added a three-run pinch homer for Minnesota.

Pagliarulo, who went 3-for-3 with a homer, doubled off reliever Jeff Grey with one out in the seventh inning to score pinch-runner Jarvis Brown and break a 3-3 tie. Sorrento, batting for Junior Ortiz following a walk to Shane Mack, hit his first homer on only his second hit in 12 at-bats since his recall from Portland on June 29.

Carl Willis (4-2), who pitched 2½ innings, won in relief. Boston starter Greg Harris (5-8) lost despite allowing five hits in six innings while Minnesota's Kevin Tapani gave up 11 in 5½.

The loss left second-place Boston, which got three hits from Mike Greenwell, 6½ games behind pace-setting Toronto in the East.

Royals 9, Tigers 5

"The Southeastern Conference is such a tough league that it's almost impossible to go through the season undefeated," Cook said. "It's much easier for a team from the Big Eight or Southwest Conference to go 11-0 and play for the national title."

bowl with a disappointing matchup between the Cavaliers and Tennessee. Despite a close score — Tennessee won 23-22 — the Sugar was the lowest-rated New Year's game.

"That was embarrassing for the Sugar Bowl and ABC," Cook said. "Hopefully, that won't happen again with this new system."

NBC, which televises the Orange and Fiesta bowls and will begin showing Notre Dame games this season, is delighted with the new postseason arrangement. The other bowl in the coalition, the Cotton, is televised by CBS.

"I think it will create more excitement in college football and reinvigorate the Jan. 1 bowls," said Ken Schanzer, executive vice president of NBC Sports. "It's a very creative, very innovative way to increase the possibility of a national championship game."

Cook feels the Orange and Cotton bowls will benefit more from the coalition than the Sugar because University legal counsel Brad Booze said the school had been told to appear Sept. 27.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — A prosecutor is considering felony charges in a telephone services theft case in which four University of Arkansas athletes have been suspended from their teams.

The four made thousands of dollars' worth of phone calls through unauthorized use of an access code, according to UA athletic director Frank Broyles.

Twelve to 15 athletes apparently used the athletic department's Wide Area Telephone Service (WATS) line. Three male athletes ran up bills above the $200 line above which a theft becomes a felony.

I started reading a lot of Etheridge Knight. He had written poems from prison, and a lot of times I've felt imprisoned here, because you can't really be yourself. That's how I've felt, like I couldn't be myself."

Should college athletes be paid? You're making a lot of money for the university, while Tom Davis is a wealthy man.

"Yeah, we're making a lot of money for the university. There's nothing we can do about it, as far as wanting money.

"It's hard to live far away and have to pump your parents for money. Not everyone can do that, not everyone has that background.

There are ways you can get assistance.

"Right now, it doesn't matter, because education will pay off. I talk to Coach Davis a lot, and he says it's all right — especially now — to do without, because what you're sacrificing, you're going to get many fold over."

Do you see yourself in the NBA?

"I'm pushing towards it. Every day I work out, and every time I shoot, that's what I'm aiming for: the NBA. But if I don't make it, I'm not going to be a statistic; I'm going to graduate, man. Even if I do or don't make the NBA, I'm still going to live. Life's not going to be over for me."

stage, but gave it up to LeMond, who had gained enough bonus seconds to move into first place. LeMond subsequently turned the symbolic jersey over to Sorensen following the team time trial Sunday.

On Thursday, Marie broke away from the pack early and gradually built up the 22-minute margin as he traveled the Normandy countryside. The gap was reduced to 15 minutes at the 125-mile mark of the stage, when the real battle moved to the back flank as riders jockeyed for position to gain bonus seconds.

Kelly gained another four seconds to move ahead of LeMond, who had led Kelly by a second at the end of Wednesday's stage.

"This morning I was feeling capable of taking the yellow jersey at least once," Kelly said.

The 35-year-old Irishman raced in his first Tour de France in 1978 and has been as high as fourth. He does well in the intermediate sprints and was expected to chip away seconds from LeMond.

There are three more intermediate sprints Friday in the 104-mile leg from Le Havre to Argentan. But an important time trial Saturday could again shake up the standings.

"If I do well in the time trial, maybe I will be able to take the yellow jersey," Kelly said.

Williams knocked out of Pan Am Games

FORT LODGE — Amateur boxer Jerry Williams said a dirt bike accident has knocked him out of the Pan Am games in Havana and the world amateur boxing championships in Australia later this year.

Williams fractured a collarbone when a dirt bike he was operating flipped after it hit a pothole in a field on July 3.

The boxer said he plans to resume training soon and hopes to become even stronger in preparation for competition to make the U.S. Olympic team for the 1992 games in Barcelona, Spain.

Dykstra to return Monday

PHILADELPHIA — Outfielder Lenny Dykstra is expected to return to the lineup of the Philadelphia Phillies Monday night against the Los Angeles Dodgers, Dr. Phillip Marone said Thursday night.

Dykstra will have missed 58 games with a series of injuries, including a broken collarbone, after running his car into a couple of trees May 6 in suburban Radnor.

"It's not healed yet," Marone said. He added that Dykstra is 85 to 90 percent ready to play and that sending him back out on the field does entail a calculated risk.

All is not forgiven for South Africa

Associated Press

Not all arms have been opened wide to welcome South Africa back to the international sporting community.

Sports officials in Zimbabwe said Thursday the country will continue its ban on all sporting links with South Africa. The officials indicated Zimbabweans will stay away from competitions where newly admitted South Africans are taking part and that the end of embargoes by the International Olympic Committee and the International Cricket Council will not immediately alter Zimbabwe's policy toward South Africa.

"The paramount question is the suffering of black people in South Africa. The dismantling of apartheid is not enough. We want to see a universal franchise or a constitution leading to that," said Tobaiwa Mudede, chairman of the Zimbabwe Sports Council.

Organizers of the Scandinavian Masters golf tournament seem willing to make the necessary moves to allow South Africa to compete. They hope the highest sports body in Sweden will lift its ban on golfers who competed in South Africa before the tournament starts Aug. 1.

The Swedish Confederation still bans athletes whose names are on a United Nations blacklist from competing in sports events in Sweden. But athletes who signed a pledge they would not participate in future South African events were allowed to compete in Sweden in the last nine months.

The U.N. blacklist includes leading European golfers Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain, Bernhard Langer of Germany and Sandy Lyle of Scotland. They have all expressed interest in playing in Sweden.

"We wish they could make a fast decision, but we can't demand it," said Carl-Gunnar Sandin, executive director of the Scandinavian Masters. "They can come to Stockholm the day before the tournament starts if the Swedish Sports Confederation doesn't make its decision until July 30."

Ken Schofield, head of the PGA European Tour, has called for Sweden and the Netherlands to scrap the blacklist and lift their bans on individual South African golfers.

The refusal to support the lifting of bans on South Africa could be a temporary decision for Zimbabwe, South Africa's neighbor.

Zimbabwe has been one of Africa's most vocal supporters of sports and trade embargoes against South Africa.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Champ choice made easier

Associated Press

Winston Churchill once called democracy "the worst form of government except all those other forms that have been tried from time to time." The same might be said of college football's new post-season system.

It's certainly not perfect, and it doesn't guarantee a No. 1 vs. No. 2 showdown every year. But it's better than the current postseason mess, and it improves the chances of having a clear-cut national championship game each Jan. 1.

"Like the League of Nations, it's a little shaky. But unlike the League of Nations, I think it can work," ESPN's Beano Cook said of the alliance between four major bowls (Cotton, Sugar, Orange and Fiesta), two conferences (Big East and Atlantic Coast) and Notre Dame.

Under the agreement, which takes effect in the 1992 season, the champions of the Southwest, Southeastern and Big Eight conferences will continue to get automatic bids to the Cotton, Sugar and Orange bowls.

Whichever of those bowls has the highest-ranked team would then choose the most attractive opponent from a five-team pool, which will include Notre Dame, the champions of the Big East and ACC and two highly-ranked at-large teams.

If, for instance, Nebraska is No. 1 and Notre Dame is No. 2 in the final regular-season poll, they would meet for the national title in the Orange Bowl. The Orange would automatically get Big Eight champ Nebraska and then be able to select the top-ranked team in the pool, which in this case would be Notre Dame.

There are several loopholes, however, that would prevent a 1-2 bowl matchup. The Big Ten, Pac-10 and Western Athletic conferences aren't part of the coalition, so there wouldn't be a dream game if one of those leagues had the No. 1 team heading into the bowls. A similar problem could occur if, for example, Texas was No. 1 and Alabama was No. 2. Unless a waiver was granted, Texas would be committed to the Cotton and Alabama would be locked into the Sugar.

"It's not a perfect system, but it's better than the one we've got now," said Mickey Holmes, executive director of the Sugar Bowl. "It definitely increases the chances of getting a 1-2 game on New Year's Day."

Although the system should lead to more national championship games, Holmes said that wasn't the driving force behind the coalition.

"The main intent was to get the best possible matchups in all the bowl games," he said. "We're going to wait until the regular season is over before we decide who's playing where. In the past, we've run into some problems because of the rush to invite teams before the season is over."

That's what happened to the Sugar Bowl last year, when a late-season collapse by Virginia left Holmes' See ALLIANCE, Page 7

Webb and Webb go one-on-one

Jay Webb, player of the summer in the Prime Time League, talks to the DI about life, liberty and Etheridge Knight.

What did you think you were getting into when you came to Iowa from California?

"My first thought was that it was going to be barren somewhat, and I was quoted as saying that Iowa was barren. But on my visit I came and it was really beautiful.

"People say there's nothing to do, but that's a plus, that's a bonus. If I was at home, I'd have many more distractions."

Do you think you're having a good summer?

"I think I'm having an all right summer. A lot of people have been saying I'm playing well, but I guess I'm my best critic. Some people say I'm too hard on myself. I know I can get a lot better."

Was your inconsistency during the regular season frustrating for you?

"It was. Since over the two years I've been here, I've had the physical talent, but...

"Especially with Coach (Tom) Davis, it's mind over matter. Basketball, period, is mind over matter. I think that's what the edge is — it's mental. Because there are probably about 5,000 Jay Webbs, as far as physical ability, and I guess what could separate me or any other athlete is that mental strength."

Is the theory accurate that black players are limited within a rigid system?

"I guess it depends on the player. A lot of times, yeah, it's hard, because if you're used to doing something on the playground, or the sandlot, you're used to it. And then you get into a system, the way the offense slows you, you can't get it like that."

"I guess it does kind of hold you back. I guess that's why a lot of guys on our team are scoring a lot in Prime Time, because they're a little bit more free. With the PTL, they really don't try to tell you about your own game. They'll just say, 'Go out there.'"

How is that different during the regular season?

"There is more instruction, and there's more pressure. During any season, every game there's money on the line — tournament-wise, Big Ten championship-wise. There's a lot of pressure."

"A lot of times I have fears of trying to do too much: If I would try to take that step over the fence, I'd mess up; if you make a move and you make that shot, it's going to be fine. But you have to keep on doing it."

Is it true that you're thinking about transferring? If you're unhappy, why?

"It crossed my mind, but I didn't know anyone could read my mind. Sometimes, it will cross my mind. But, if I go somewhere else, it's probably going to be the same thing. Of course, I've thought about it. I thought, 'Just go somewhere else. Maybe things will be better.'"

"After the season, I was like, 'I've got to get away. I need a respite from this.' I just really isolated myself from basketball and everyone around basketball.

"And I started resorting to poetry."

Brewers cool off torrid White Sox

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Bill Wegman pitched his first complete game in more than a year, and the Milwaukee Brewers scored four runs in the fourth inning to cool off the Chicago White Sox 5-1 Thursday night.

Wegman (5-3) gave up one run on three hits in the fifth, but then settled down and held the White Sox to one single the rest of the way. Wegman allowed six hits, struck out three and walked three in pitching his first complete game since a 5-0 victory over the Oakland Athletics on May 18, 1990.

The Brewers, held scoreless by Charlie Hough (5-4) for three innings, sent nine batters to the plate in the fourth. The loss was only the fifth in 17 games for Chicago.

Wegman, who a year ago was on the disabled list with a season-ending elbow injury, surpassed his combined victory total for the past two seasons. He opened this season on the disabled list and was activated May 3.

Dante Bichette's sacrifice fly with the bases loaded and none out produced the first run. After Jim Ganter walked, Bill Spiers' grounder scored another and Paul Molitor followed with a run-scoring bunt single. Darryl Hamilton singled in the last run.

Tim Raines' two-out single off Wegman in the fifth scored Joey Cora for Chicago's only run.

B.J. Surhoff had an RBI single in the eighth off Chicago reliever Ken Patterson.

Blue Jays 2, Rangers 0

TORONTO — Tom Candiotti extended his shutout streak to 15 innings, and John Olerud drove in the decisive run as the torrid Toronto Blue Jays beat Texas 2-0 Thursday night, dropping the Rangers out of first place.

Candiotti, in his third start since a trade from Cleveland, allowed five hits in eight innings and struck out a season-high 10 for the fifth time while walking none. The victory, Toronto's fourth straight and 16th in 19 games, gave the American League East leaders a baseball-best 11 shutouts.

Olerud's RBI single, his third hit, came in the seventh off Kevin Brown (7-7). Rance Mulliniks hit an inside-the-park homer, his second and the first ever at the

Avery baffles Cardinals for seven, Braves win 4-1

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Steve Avery, who flirted with a no-hitter, and Juan Berenguer combined on a two-hitter as Atlanta beat St. Louis.

Avery retired the first 18 Cardinals before Rex Hudler blooped a single to center field leading off the seventh inning for the first hit off the 21-year-old left-hander.

Avery (9-5) faced the minimum 21 batters through seven innings, however, as Hudler was thrown out attempting to steal. He left in the eighth when the first two Cardinals runners reached on errors and scored an unearned run.

Jose DeLeon fell to 3-8.

Pirates 10, Reds 6

CINCINNATI — Barry Bonds drove in four runs, including three in Pittsburgh's five-run eighth inning with his 12th homer, as the Pirates defeated the Cincinnati Reds 10-6 Thursday night.

Struggling Randy Myers (4-6) gave up all five runs in the eighth after the Reds had twice rallied to tie the NL East leaders.

Jose Lind and pinch-hitter Orlando Merced singled to open the eighth. After a sacrifice by Gary Redus moved up both runners, Lind scored on a sacrifice fly by Andy Van Slyke and Merced came home on a single by Bobby Bonilla.

Jay Bell, who had been intentionally walked, and Bonilla scored ahead of Bonds' homer.

Vicente Palacios (6-2) got the win in relief of Zane Smith. Stan Belinda pitched two innings.

The Reds tied the score 5-5 when Eric Davis, making his first start since July 3, hit a two-run homer off Palacios.

Expos 3, Dodgers 2

MONTREAL — Ivan Calderon homered and Mark Gardner gave up two runs in seven innings as Montreal beat Los Angeles. The Expos have won three of their last four games after losing 11 in a row.

Gardner (5-5) allowed six hits before Scott Ruskin finished for his sixth save. Ruskin gave up one hit.

Dodgers starter Bob Ojeda (7-6) hit a two-run homer to tie the score 2-2 in the second inning, his first major league home run. Calderon, a starter in the All-Star game, gave Montreal the lead with his 10th homer with two outs in the third inning.

Phillies 3, Giants 2

PHILADELPHIA — Terry Mulholland gave up five hits in 8½ innings and John Kruk hit a home run as Philadelphia hung on to beat San Francisco.

Mulholland (8-8) had three-hit shutout going until the ninth when Mike Felder led off with a double and Will Clark hit his 16th homer. Mitch Williams put two runners on base but ended the game for his 14th save.

The Phillies scored in the fourth inning off loser Trevor Wilson (4-3) on Kruk's RBI single. Kruk hit his 11th homer in the eighth and Dickie Thon singled home a run in the seventh.

TOUR DE FRANCE

Marie takes lead from LeMond

Salvatore Zanca

Associated Press

LE HAVRE, France — Thierry Marie staged a near-record breakaway in Thursday's sixth stage of the Tour de France, shaking up the standings with his first-place finish and dropping Greg LeMond into third place.

Three-time winner LeMond, who started the day in first place, finished 30th in the 161-mile stage from Arras to this port city. Irishman Sean Kelly moved from third to second place overall.

Marie moved out early and built a 22-minute margin that was whittled to less than two minutes by the end of the leg. Marie started his move with 145 miles left in the stage. The longest breakaway in the event's history was 157 miles in 1947 by Albert Bourlon of France.

At the end, Marie's margin and 32 seconds of bonuses gave him a lead of 1 minute, 4 seconds over Kelly, who placed fourth in the stage behind Remig Stumpf of Germany and Djamelidine Abdoujalpov of the Soviet Union.

Abdoujalpov, riding for Carrera, was tied for third with LeMond, 1:07 behind Marie.

The stage started without Wednesday's leader, Rolf Sorensen of Denmark, who was forced to withdraw after breaking his collarbone in a fall. LeMond became the leader when the start list closed without Sorensen's signature.

The American refused to wear the yellow jersey during the stage out of respect for Sorensen, who flew to a sports clinic in Italy for surgery.

"It's not the best way to take the yellow jersey but that's not going to change anything," LeMond said. "I am not going to look for all the attacks. It's impossible."

Giancarlo Ferretti, director of Sorensen's Arioste team, said LeMond talked to the Dane before Thursday's stage.

"When Rolf left it was very sad. He had tears in his eyes," Ferretti said. Sorensen was already in Italy by the time Marie regained the overall lead.

Marie won the prologue and had the yellow jersey during the first

Gas prices drop over last 3 weeks despite demand

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices dropped more than 2 cents a gallon over the last three weeks despite high summertime demand, an industry survey said Sunday.

The average retail price for a gallon of gasoline, including tax, was $1.221 per gallon on Friday, down 2.36 cents from June 21, according to the Lundberg Survey of 13,000 stations nationwide.

Prices dropped despite an average tax increase of .38 cents a gallon over the period, analysts Tribby Lundberg said.

'Boyz' violence sends patrons to matinees

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Patrons of a black-owned movie theater in a largely black neighborhood said they trusted daylight and extra security to keep them safe seeing "Boyz n the Hood" after widespread violence marred its debut.

News of shootings, fights and stampedes for the exits at screenings of the movie about a young man's life amid the urban real street gangs didn't dampen interest, Columbia Pictures said Sunday.

"This speaks for itself," said moviegoer Mike Goodman, going toward a crowd waiting to see an afternoon showing at the Bwin Hills Entertainment Complex, a theater frequented by gang members.

"People want to see it because it's a positive movie," Goodman said Saturday. But, he added, "They want to see it in the daytime."

Continued strife between Croats, Serbs kills 2

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Croatian militia and Serbian militants battled Sunday in clashes that left at least two dead and many wounded as ethnic strife in the breakaway republic continued to strain Yugoslavia's cease-fire.

The violence came after the federal government, Croatia and Slovenia gave final approval for unarmed European Community observers to monitor the truce between the national army and militias of the two secessionist republics.

The outbreak of fighting in Croatia's Banija region, about 30 miles south of Zagreb, showed the difficulties of implementing the plan.

"There are dead and very many wounded on both sides in the fighting today" in the village of Kraljevci and Dragoinci near Petrinja in eastern Croatia, Ta news agency reported.

Pakistan-Afghanistan border hit by quake

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) — A strong earthquake rocked Pakistan's rugged mountain border with Afghanistan on Sunday, shaking buildings in cities from Peshawar to the Indian capital of New Delhi.

Seismologists said the quake severe enough to cause considerable damage, but there were immediate reports of deaths, injuries or serious damage.

The quake measured 6.6 on the Richter scale and lasted about a minute, said seismologists at Royal Hong Kong Observatory and the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo.

The quake's epicenter was placed 185 miles north of Peshawar in the sparsely populated Hindu Kush mountains, about the same distance due northeast of Afghan capital of Kabul. It was near the southern Soviet border with Afghanistan.
