Gas prices drop over last 3 weeks despite demand

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices dropped more than 2 cents a gallon over the last three weeks despite high summertime demand, an industry survey said Sunday. The average retail price for all grades of gasoline, including taxes, was $1.221 per gallon on Friday, down 2.36 cents from June 21, according to the Lundberg Survey of 13,000 stations nationwide.

'Boyz' violence sends patrons to matinees

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Patrons of a black-owned movie theater in a largely black neighborhood said they trusted daylight and extra security to keep them safe seeing "Boyz n the Hood" after widespread violence marred its debut. News of shootings, fights and stampedes for the exits at screenings of the movie about a young man's life amid the urban reality of street gangs didn't dampen interest, Columbia Pictures said Sunday.

G7 plan to grill Gorbachev on spending

No 'blank check' for Soviet Union

LONDON — Leaders of the world's richest nations met in pairs Sunday before their annual economic summit, preparing hard questions for Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and dire warnings for Iraq.

tainly won't be in the cards" until Gorbachev pushes through economic reforms, President Bush said. The Soviet leader's entreaty to the Western leaders has transcended the official summit agenda, weighted with discussions on farm subsidies and global interest rates.

President George Bush and Britain's Prime Minister John Major joke with photographers as Bush arrived at 10 Downing St. Sunday evening.

The G7 Economic Summit begins today in London. How to help the Soviet economic reform will be a major topic.

dent Francois Mitterrand signaled they were willing to renew military action to force Saddam to abandon his nuclear weapons program. "If it concerns protecting populations martyred, persecuted, massacred by the government of Saddam Hussein, if it concerns seeing Iraq arm itself with a nuclear weapon, an intervention would be just," Mitterrand said. "We are ready if it is necessary." Bush said the two leaders "are together in the way we are looking at this situation in Iraq." Iraq and the Soviet economy were not the only issues distracting the G7 leaders. Secretary of State James Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh, meeting in Washington, came close but failed Sunday in a marathon effort to complete a historic treaty slashing their long-range nuclear arsenals. Bush stopped in France during the national Bastille Day celebrations before heading on to London, host to the 17th summit of the leading democracies: the United States, Britain, Canada, Japan, Germany, France and Italy. Gorbachev arrives Tuesday night and meets with the G7 after their official meeting concludes Wednesday. Though their own economies are becalmed and they disagree about interest rates, currency exchange and trade, the problems facing the Group of Seven pale in comparison to Gorbachev's project of restructuring the Soviet economy. City Council reconsiders IC recycling

The Iowa City City Council will reconsider curbside separation for recycling at its informal meeting tonight. The council has not yet agreed on the details of a proposed program to begin this fall.

The program currently being considered would require garbage customers to separate recyclable plastics, metals, clear glass and newspapers from non-recyclable trash items. Customers would deposit garbage in their own containers, and recyclables would be deposited in a separate container to be provided by the city.

Coralville Dam tames Iowa River, saves money

Associated Press
IOWA CITY — Engineers say the Coralville Dam on the Iowa River in eastern Iowa saved about $2 million in property damage this spring. Paul Sowke, chief of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' economics branch in Rock Island, Ill., said heavy rains this year would have raised flood waters at least 6 inches higher if the Iowa River had not been tamed. "For people who own property, it saved them that extra foot or half-foot, which translates directly into damage," said Sowke.

Even so, the Coralville Lake couldn't hold all of the rainfall and the dam released enough water to cause sustained flooding for about three weeks. But Sowke said there would have been even more damage if a flash flood had slammed water and mud on to unprotected property.

Bank to update downtown facilities

New design emphasizes accessibility

Heather Pitzel
Daily Iowan

First National Bank has announced its plans for a $6 million construction and remodeling project that will include improved handicap accessibility and a three-level atrium.

Details of the project were given Friday by bank President Robert Sierk during a luncheon for community leaders at the Holiday Inn.

The three-phase plan will increase floor space by one-third, Sierk said. Eighty percent of this additional space will be dedicated to consumer service or public areas.

The first phase of construction begins Monday, he said, with the demolition of the former Astro Theatre and the bank's building located between it and the main bank on Washington Street. Those two buildings will be replaced by a new limestone and granite building. Sierk predicted the new facility will be completed and usable one year from now.

The second and third phases are renovating the present building to improve user-friendliness. Sierk said consumer service will take the place of the current lobby and teller area. The atrium will be the centerpiece of the renovated building.

To improve handicap accessibility, stairs will be removed on the first level and the sidewalk in front of the building will be raised 2 feet. Elevators and a teller station for wheelchairs will also be included.

The entire project is set to be completed by August 1993.

Sierk said First National is committed to the development of downtown Iowa City. "This is to be the bank of the '90s and beyond. We designed it with the idea of it being the hub of downtown activity."

Local businesses are designing and doing the construction work on the bank. The project design is by Hansen Lind Meyer, Inc. and the general contractor is McComas-Lacina Construction.

NACo meeting focuses on support of family

Increased reliance on volunteers to provide services is also discussed at the annual conference.

Amy Lundquist
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah — Representatives to the National Association of Counties were urged to encourage volunteerism and strengthen families at opening ceremonies of the group's 56th annual conference Sunday in Salt Lake City.

Some 5,000 county officials were told they formed the front lines of government, facing the day-to-day trials posed by dwindling revenues and spiraling costs. The association claims members from 2,000 of the country's 3,100 county governments.

The conference runs through Tuesday and will include addresses by Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan; Robert Martinez, former Florida governor and director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy; and Gerald McEntee, president of the 1.5 million-member American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

Workshops will include tips on how to pass smoking ordinances, an update on HIV/AIDS in rural America, and a discussion on race quotas and the Civil Rights Act of 1991.

The conference will also consider a controversial position paper on American Indian autonomy being protested by tribal leaders as an effort to undercut existing treaties.

Sunday's ceremonies were held in the Mormon Tabernacle and included addresses by NACo President Michael Stewart of Utah's Salt Lake County and Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, and a preview of a 14-minute videotape with tips on how to shore-up family relations.

Stewart said diminishing resources are forcing local governments to turn more and more toward volunteers to provide services counties used to pay for.

"Research has shown that hundreds of counties are relying on volunteers to offer cost-effective services," he said. Seminars later this week will address how to use and recruit volunteers in county programs.

He pointed to the deterioration of the family, and the resulting crime and drug abuse among children, as a tremendous drain on county services.

NACo, in cooperation with Intermountain Health Care Inc., produced a video giving suggestions for strengthening the family. The 14-minute video, titled "Working on the Dream," was previewed at the opening ceremony.

"As we face the future we need to look back and see what got you here today," he said. "Something happened in our lives that's not happening in the lives of today's children."

The video, which will be distributed to county agencies and community services organizations, presents five tips for parents to help keep children from dropping out of school and experimenting with drugs, alcohol and sex.

The group was also addressed by Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, and Thomas Monson, second counselor to the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Garn, asked by Stewart to recount his April 1985 flight on the space shuttle Discovery, recalled his awe and frustration.

As he looked at the Earth from orbit, he envisioned famine in Ethiopia, the Iran-Iraq war and those living under communism. He also said he saw a world without borders.

"I know I could soften the heart of a (Libyan President Moammar) Ghadhafi or a (Iraqi President Saddam) Hussein if I could just take them into space," Garn said. "It was a life-changing opportunity for me, and I will never forget it."

He commended the county representatives and asked them to remind their constituents how lucky they were to live in America.

"You really are the infantry of government," he said. "You are on the front lines, and when you go home, remember to tell your constituents how blessed they are."

The program featured a brief videotaped message from President Bush, who canceled a scheduled appearance because of the economic summit in London.

"You serve the people who have nowhere to turn," said Bush, who praised NACo's efforts toward strengthening the family.

"You touch the lives of so many people," he said.

Members were treated to a performance of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir including its moving rendition of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," which brought tears to the eyes of many NACo members who joined in the song.

Saturday, American Indian leaders said a position paper being presented at the conference is a thinly veiled effort to gain control of tribal lands.

The paper suggests counties should have greater jurisdiction on reservations and offers the association as a body to mediate conflicts between tribes and county governments.

"This is a ploy by the tribes to get our resources," said Ute Tribal Chairman Luke Duncan.

"America is Indian country, and as long as our ancestors are buried across this nation we'll fight hard to keep whatever is left," he said.

Stewart denied that NACo is interested in undermining treaties between the tribes and the federal government.

"It's not our intent to modernize or change treaties," he said.

Crime reports on the rise in rural Iowa

Associated Press
FORT DODGE, Iowa — The crime rate in some rural areas is up in Iowa, although sheriffs say it might be a matter of more victims reporting crimes rather than an actual increase in criminal activity.
"As far as overall crime, we have seen an increase," said Calhoun County Sheriff Bill Davis. He said incidents of thefts and domestic-related sex abuse are up, and that people are reporting more crimes than they used to.
"I really think that when people know that once they report a crime to you and they see something get done on it, they are more likely to call you the next time, and the word will get out," he said.
"They know you're not going to just sit on it. You're going to go out and do something about it."
Kossuth County Sheriff Chuck Day said he is not sure whether it is the number of crimes or the number of reports that have increased in his county.
"I don't know if we're having a (crime) increase or if we're having better reporting," he said.
He attributes increased crime reporting to insurance company policies. "Now the insurance companies won't pay unless it's reported," he said.
But some counties are showing a decrease in rural crime.
"In fact, we can honestly say our crime in rural Webster County — not in incorporated towns — has dropped 6 percent since last year," said Sheriff Chuck Griggs.
"I think we can attribute that to increased patrol," he said.

New UI budget cuts services

The $7.1 million decrease results in fewer classes, services and maybe even majors.

Ann Riley
Daily Iowan

UI President Hunter Rawlings will present a revised preliminary 1991-92 fiscal year budget to the Iowa state Board of Regents at their meeting Wednesday in West Des Moines.

Following Gov. Terry Branstad's recent 3.25 percent across-the-board state budget cuts, the three regent universities were forced to revise their proposed budgets for the fourth time this year.

The revised budget of $259.5 million represents a $7.1 million decrease from the 1991 fiscal year budget.

According to the proposal, the UI will restrict or cancel several services because of lack of funds. There will be a reduction in the number of courses available and sections of current classes, resulting in larger class sizes. Library hours will be reduced, along with staff and reserved reading services.

Rawlings formed a steering committee after the first budget reduction to develop a plan to reduce or eliminate several majors or departments at the UI. The university will present the results of that committee's findings Aug. 12 to the regents.

In other business, the regents will also receive the first annual assessment of the UI's strategic plan. The original plan has been revised to focus goals on areas that will receive greater emphasis in the upcoming year. The six goals of the UI include strengthening the undergraduate program, increasing diversity in the academic community and acquiring a faculty of international distinction.

Strategic planning was instituted last year after the board challenged the UI to become the best university in the Big Ten. According to the report, problems from recent fiscal restrictions have forced the UI to develop methods to counteract the loss of funds. The UI plans to develop a "robust marketing effort to confront the decline in the number of new and transfer students."

If UI resources prove inadequate for achievement of the goals, highest priority will be given to goals related to undergraduate and graduate and professional education.

IOWA CITY — Ana Lopez is a full-time student and budding entrepreneur who doesn't have time to serve on committees. So she thought, Lopez, 31, was appointed by Gov. Terry Branstad last week to the Governor's Committee on Government Spending Reform. She didn't apply for the job and doesn't know any of the other 21 members, most of them with backgrounds rich in business or politics.

But she decided she DID have time to serve, for the very reason that she doesn't fit the mold.

"Certainly it's going to be a controversial group," Lopez said. "It's going to depend on the people, but I think diversity is always the best way to go. The more points of view you present, the better off the state's going to be."

Lopez is guarded about the ideas she will take to the committee. Some are being developed, she said. She does know she wants to make sure that underprivileged or disadvantaged people do not suffer more than others if government is pared.

"I don't intend to sit there like a lump on the log. I intend to learn a lot, and I'm hoping that the commission will also learn from me."

"I know this is a serious problem, state spending," she said. "I believe that there's room for improvement."

A transplanted Iowan from Puerto Rico who spent part of her childhood in New York City, Lopez has lived in Iowa City for 15 years. She earned her undergraduate degree at the UI.

She worked nine years in the UI's affirmative action office and now is a full-time computer consultant at the university's Weeg Computing Center.

She also is enrolled in the UI's Executive MBA Program, an intensive master of business administration program for professionals that meets evenings and weekends.

Lopez and Lisa Heishman of Iowa City started a company this past year that sells recycled paper. Lopez & Heishman Inc. Recycled Paper Products operates out of Lopez's home.

Lopez said she isn't sure how she got appointed to the governor's commission. Not only did she not apply, but she's a Democrat, albeit an inactive one.

Still, "It's a rare and welcome opportunity," she said.

"I must admit I was hesitant at first as I don't seem to have a whole lot of time. But I like to think I manage my time as best that I can. And I'll do whatever I can."

"I'm very concerned that there be enough money to go around so I always take an interest in where the state funding is going."

SIJOUX CITY, Iowa — The second anniversary of the crash of Flight 232 will pass quietly here this week, but claims by dozens of passengers or their estates have still not been settled.

The insurer for United Air Lines, Associated Aviation Underwriters of New Jersey, has settled about 116 claims, but another 160 remain. Some may go to court.

United's DC-10 made a crash landing at the Sioux City airport July 19, 1989, after its rear engine disintegrated in flight. The explosion severed all of the plane's hydraulic systems, paralyzing its wing surfaces. Of the 296 aboard, 184 survived.

A memorial service was held last year, and many survivors returned to Sioux City to thank their rescuers. No special ceremonies are planned this year.

In other Flight 232 news:

■ Capt. Al Haynes, the pilot who fought the controls to bring the plane to a semblance of a landing, makes his final flight on Aug. 26 from Denver to Seattle. Haynes reaches the mandatory retirement age of 60 next month. He has requested that United schedule as many Flight 232 crew members aboard his plane as possible. Several Sioux City officials are expected to be passengers.

■ A memorial to the rescue effort has yet to be constructed. Plans were accepted, but public opposition to the design put the project on hold.

■ The nation's airlines have nearly completed alterations to DC-10s designed to prevent similar accidents. A shutoff valve prevents a total loss of hydraulic fluid. All of United's planes are converted, as are those flown by Northwest, Continental and Federal Express.

2 women found dead in farmhouse

A man is in serious condition following this shooting that police have no motive for.

Associated Press

ADEL, Iowa — Investigators have ruled out murder-suicide in the shooting deaths of two women in a farmhouse near Adel.

Dallas County Sheriff Jerry Tiedeman said authorities did not find the weapon used in the shootings.

Found dead at about 6:30 a.m. Friday were Shari Exline, 29, who lived in the house, and her friend visiting from Fort Dodge, Melissa Maharas, 35.

A third victim of the shooting, Jeff Thomas, 32, remained in serious condition at a Des Moines hospital. Thomas and Exline lived in the house for about two years, and the sheriff said there were no reports of trouble during that time.

A motive was not clear but "from what information we have at this time it was not robbery," Tiedeman said. "But that may change with further investigation." He said there were no signs of forced entry but that many people in the area do not bother to lock their doors.

The sheriff also confirmed that Exline's 4-year-old son was found unharmed in the house. He would not say what the boy told investigators. The boy was placed in protective custody.

Tiedeman said authorities are acting on tips and would like to talk to anyone who might have seen a vehicle entering or leaving the farmhouse Thursday night or Friday morning.

DES MOINES — A private prison proposed by an Indiana man has opened without trouble in Texas, but copies proposed for four Iowa towns have run into strong opposition.

Officials in Algona, Webster City, Logan and Bloomfield are all eager for new businesses, but many citizens have made it clear they want no part of a medium-security prison.

State officials aren't enthusiastic, either, saying the proposed facilities wouldn't save the state much money and wouldn't fill the need for maximum-security cells.

An Indiana entrepreneur, Joseph Vaughn, has proposed construction of 308-bed prisons to be built by a company, Diversified Municipal Services Inc., that he operates out of his home in Lebanon, Ind. The prisons would be turned over and gradually purchased by local officials in Iowa.

One prison built by the Indiana company opened a month ago in Newton, Texas, a city of 2,000 located about 150 miles northeast of Houston. The minimum-security prison has 296 inmates. A maximum-security unit to house another 144 will be completed later this summer.

"There was very little opposition to putting it in Newton," said Bill Watson, manager of the facility. "Jobs were needed." He said there are 61 employees and that there have been no major startup problems.

But people in the Iowa towns are not receptive. At least 200 people showed up for a public hearing in Webster City.

"The crowd came loaded for bear," said Webster City Mayor Steven Kehoe. He said the city has put the idea "on one of our lower shelves. If we were to continue pursuing the matter, it would send a message to our people that we don't care a damn what you think."

Many are concerned about the finances, fearful the state would not send enough prisoners to fill the facility or would delay its payments. Others fear escapees.

Paul Grossheim, director of the Iowa Department of Corrections, said the prisons would do little to relieve prison overcrowding in Iowa since they would not add maximum-security cells.

He said the private prisons generally charge about $45 a day compared with $50 spent by Iowa to house its inmates. "But the services they offer fall short of what's provided in the state prisons."

Western ideals must not be forgotten

It's been two years since the Iranian government condemned author Salman Rushdie to death. His novel, "The Satanic Verses," was deemed a blasphemy against Islam. Rushdie had surfaced in recent months for minor public appearances at book signings in London, and it appeared reasonable to hope that he was close to regaining liberty of life without constant threat.

The month of July has shown such hope to be ill-founded. On July 3, Ettore Capriolo, the 61-year-old Italian translator of "The Satanic Verses," was stabbed in his Milan apartment. Now, in another brutal assault, the first death in this deplorable religious lottery has occurred. After translating Rushdie's book into Japanese, Professor Hitoshi Igarashi, 44, was stabbed to death in a hallway outside his university office on a campus north of Tokyo.

Professor Igarashi's death has not, at this time, been positively linked to the death threat against Rushdie and ensuing requests from Muslim organizations in Japan that no translations or reproductions of the novel be undertaken. Capriolo's wounding has more solid linkage to Iran, but it has yet to be commented on officially by Milan authorities.

Both vicious assaults give us cause to ponder some larger issues we face in our own culture. Too frequently, contemporary intellectual debates focus on narrow definitions of opposing sides. This is especially true in the debate over politically correct thought in the academy.

Its most intense battle rages over redefining the core contents of a liberal arts education. Challenging questions have been posed about the canon of great works and how that canon shapes higher education. It has been described as "Eurocentric." Some contend that Eurocentric thinking is a distortion, an intellectual albatross. Some go even further, arguing that young minds are enslaved and stunted by institutional insistence on reading Aristotle, Shakespeare and Emerson.

Setting aside the obvious, that the canon has always existed within a context of lively (and frequently even vicious) scholastic debate, it is important to temper criticism of Western intellectual rigidity, however justified, with an honest assessment and appreciation of Western culture. Anything less debases the we sacrifice rigor in this debate for the sake of Time magazine or easy sound bytes, we place our very future as a society in jeopardy.

Look at the feats mentioned above: recognition of the individual, refine-issues beyond any legitimacy.

We should prize our heritage even as we struggle to reshape and refine contemporary American culture and render our canon more inclusive.

The history of Western culture is the story of humankind's struggle to free itself from ignorance and fear, our entry into a state of existence ruled by faith and reason rather than superstition and tyranny. It is a story in which humanity begins to view itself as inherently valuable and deserving of respect, as something more than a beast of burden created merely to be beaten. Armed with such new perceptions, forebears in Europe forged new concepts of social interaction. This is the story of our refinement of ancient legal and legislative processes and codes that culminated in our demand for the separation of the power held by the church over the soul from the power of the state over the temporal self.

In good times, such evolution was born of exhaustive debate. In bad times it brought bloody conflict, immense numbers of casualties and numerous setbacks. But we forget these many stories of Western culture, frequently peopled by white men and women, at great peril to the quality of the present debate. If ment of rights, separation of church and state. We are where we are today, we are privileged enough to be debating these issues without threat to life and limb, because of the struggles, the intellectual flights and sometimes the deaths of European men and women. We ignore the shame of this history at our great peril as well, and shame is there aplenty. But the ebbing, flowing tide of "Eurocentric" history is the tide by which the world sets its intellectual watch. We have evolved forms of government and civic liberties toward which all people, wakened to struggle on the face of the earth, turn with hope in their hours of pain and terror.

The hope of enslaved and tyrannized people is not given cheaply. It is earned, in this case by the great works of the very culture many people are taking easy aim at during a time of flux. We should prize our heritage even as we struggle to reshape and refine contemporary American culture and render our canon more inclusive. Those two things are not incompatible. Reverting what are in some quarters now simply called "dead white European males" (even in derision many we always exclude the women?) does not bar us from respecting and seeking out the revered of other cultures. In fact, we are clearly encouraged to do so.

Our joy as intellectuals and citizens should consist of panning for gold over the entire face of the cultural globe. As we do so, there is no shame and much good to be gained from remembering where we are. Our history, the good and bad of it, has made us free. Professor Hitoshi Igarashi died at the hands of people who have not learned to respect their freedom. He was, ironically, a professor of comparative culture, a man who took great care to learn the culture of Iran. I daresay, on many levels, he loved that culture and had a deep appreciation for Islam. Now he is dead.

His murder represents a loss of freedom on the great scale, a ripple of intimidation that will flutter the hearts of scholars and others who lead quiet, earnest lives dedicated to examination and reflection. The cultural glitz crowd, the big-money deconstructionist professors and their opponents who live off of grants from the Heritage Foundation, may be in the glossy magazines but they are beside the point. Maintaining intellectual freedom is the point. It is a freedom that one Professor Hitoshi Igarashi has died because other cultures are willing to subjugate freedom to religious fanaticism. We must work to keep our culture one that refuses to do so, it does not hurt us to take pride in our past as we work to secure the future.

BASE CLOSINGS

Don't stop there

President Bush announced last week that he would approve the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission's recommendations to close 25 military bases and consolidate 48 others in the United States. This move is one whose time has come and is hopefully the harbinger of a larger scaling back of the U.S. military. Such steps should be encouraged and extended into all areas of the defense establishment.

The decision to close the bases (which requires and will likely receive congressional approval) is laudable for several reasons. First, it represents a triumph of practicality over politics. Given the hardships that many of the closings will bring for the districts where they are located, the move contains the seeds of political damage for Bush and some members of Congress. In this case, happily, the realities of U.S. security requirements and budget constraints were given precedence. Given the end of the Cold War and the convincing display of force in the gulf war, the United States is not seriously threatened by other countries and cannot justify continuing the military buildup of the 1980s. The base closings wisely recognize these realities.

The move also demonstrates a movement toward creating a smaller but more effective fighting force. The United States should recognize this as a long-term strategy for, despite the rhetoric of peace from the past year or so, the bureaucratic inertia of the U.S. military establishment is still apparent in the funding of programs such as S.D.I. Because of the nature of the legislative process, talk of a scaled-back military has come more readily than actual change.

The base closing initiative represents the first significant move to curtail military activity in the United States, and this should now be extended to other areas of the military sector. A federal commission should be appointed to look into possible base closings around the world. Superfluous weapons systems designed for Cold War showdowns should be cut. Following the example of the base closings, future decisions regarding the military should be made because of global realities rather than political expediency.

Such changes will obviously not come overnight. Given the painfully long amount of time it takes to effect real change in the military establishment and the desire of members of Congress to protect military projects in their districts, one cannot expect the Pentagon to simply roll over and die. However, the reorganization or closing of 73 U.S. bases sets an encouraging precedent for a smaller military and one more consistent with current geopolitical realities.

GUEST OPINION: JIM ANDERSON

Frustration is tempered by freedom

A year ago, I was at the end of a grinding, eight-week political campaign that took me 7,000 miles to the frontiers of Eastern Europe. There I worked in the city of Kosice (Ko-shi-say), Czechoslovakia, 70 miles west of the Soviet border, as a campaign adviser for Public Against Violence (The Slovak Democracy Movement) doing what I could to help the movement prepare for the nation's first free elections in over 50 years.

Prior to Adolf Hitler's bloodless conquest of Czechoslovakia in 1938, Czechoslovakia was Central Europe's most successful post-WWI democracy. Then, following the liberation of Czechoslovakia by Allied forces in 1945, Joseph Stalin's Iron Curtain descended on Eastern Europe, isolating Czechoslovakia from the West. Over the next four decades, Czechoslovakia was ruled by a succession of Communist gangsters kept in power by the military might of the Kremlin.

But the remarkable recent political transformation of Eastern Europe marked the end of Communist oppression and the beginning of democratic reforms. The peaceful overthrow of the Communist regime of Czechoslovakia in November 1989 became known as the "Velvet Revolution," and its leader, an imprisoned playwright named Vaclav Havel, became the country's president.

I had the privilege to campaign with President Havel in my adopted city of Kosice. The campaign visit had many of the trappings of a campaign rally in the United States: a 20-car motorcade, political aides bumping into each other, tight security, swarms of journalists and admirers hoping for a handshake.

Inside, after a glass of mineral water, a cigarette and a photo-op, Havel led the campaign delegation onto the balcony overlooking the town square and was greeted by 70,000 Slovaks and a thunderous chant of "HAVEL! HAVEL! HAVEL!"

Havel's visit to Kosice came 10 days before the election. For those who have not worked on a political campaign during its last week, it can be likened to finals week. People are tired, tempers are short and everyone looks forward to the end. The final week of the Czechoslovakian campaign was no different.

As a rule, a winning campaign requires a plan that implements a number of different elements. The primary difference between the Czechoslovakian campaign and an American campaign was the elements used in the campaign plan.

The implementation of phone banks, door-to-door canvassing and direct mail have long been trademarks of American campaigns. But these ideas were met with skepticism because the country's phone system is slow, mail costs are expensive, and after 40 years of living in fear of the Soviet KGB and the Czechoslovakian state security, most Slovak citizens are justifiably reluctant to cheerfully open their doors to someone from a political organization.

Thankfully, the American way is not the only way to campaign. One of the principal methods of voter persuasion in Czechoslovakia was a carefully orchestrated poster campaign. If it didn't breathe and was not a church, chances were it had a campaign poster attached to it. Volunteer brigades roamed the cities and villages of Czechoslovakia armed with posters, brushes and buckets of industrial-strength glue. With 18 parties and movements on the ballot including Public Against Violence, Christian Democrats, Slovak Nationalist Party, Free Hungarian Movement, the "new and improved" Communist Party, and even the Beer Party, by election day the country looked like a wallpaper store.

Television also played a major role in the campaign. In the United States, political campaigners spend most of their financial resources buying media time, resulting in a glut of political advertising that often leaves voters feeling disgusted about the entire political process. However, in Czechoslovakia, people eagerly turned to the nearest television set whenever they heard the introduction music for VOLBY 90 (Vote 90), which consisted of a series of commercials aired one after another.

Because Czechoslovakian television is state-controlled, every campaign has the opportunity to air its message. The format allowed each campaign with the financial and technical resources to air one 30-minute commercial, two 15-minute commercials, and a series of three-minute, two-minute, one-minute and 30-second commercials beginning six weeks before the June 8 and 9 election days.

The most surprising aspect of the Public Against Violence campaign was the sophistication and accuracy of their in-house polling operation. Slovak number crunchers, using some of the newest Western-made computers, were able to quickly input and process polling data, break down voter demographics, chart opinion trends, and determine where the party was strong and where campaign resources needed to be placed. The final poll indicated a four-way race between Public Against Violence with 41 percent followed by the Christian Democrats, Slovak Nationalists and the Communists.

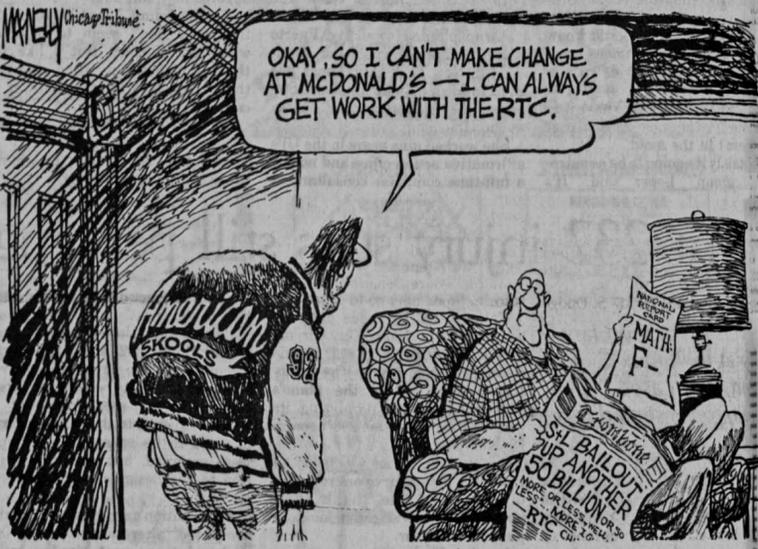

During the two days of balloting, Slovakian voters cast their ballots for a slate of candidates for the House of Nations and the House of Peoples, (similar to the United States' Senate and House of Representatives), for the Federal Assembly and for president.

When the votes had been counted, 90 percent of those eligible to vote in the country had cast a ballot, and Public Against Violence had won 38 percent of the vote in Slovakia, making it the major player in the formation of a coalition government.

The political changes that followed as a result of the 1990 Czechoslovakian elections have also brought about some adverse side effects, such as rampant inflation and a shortage of basic consumer goods. However, the frustration caused by these side effects is tempered by the fact that for the first time since Hitler's war machine marched on their country in 1938, the Czechoslovakian people can now write their own history. I feel fortunate to have had the rare opportunity to watch first-hand a country transform itself from a Communist dictatorship to a popularly elected democracy, and in the process live a page of history.

A war is a great diversion: exactly what is needed now

Slats Grobnik scowled, carefully folded his newspaper and dropped it on the bar-room floor.

"You know what this country needs?" he said. "A neat little war. Are you crazy? We just had a war. 'Yeah, and now what?'"

Now what? Now we have returned to a normal life.

"That's what I mean. Who needs normal? Normal is a recession. I don't want to think about a recession. Normal is we got too many poor people. I don't want to think about crime. Normal is we got too much crime. I don't want to think about crime. Normal is the schools are producing young boobs. I don't want to think about the schools. Normal is that this country is a mess, but it don't know it, and I don't want to think about that."

Aren't you being unduly pessimistic? Things aren't all that bad for most people. You're working, eating regularly and have a sturdy roof over your head.

"I'm lookin' at the big picture. That's your problem. You don't look at the big picture."

I have weak eyesight.

"If you'd look at the big picture, you'd see it ain't too pretty. Ah, but we are still the world's greatest superpower."

"Yeah, then how come we're leading the world in savings and loans and banks doing the el fold, huh?"

A setback, yes. But one can look at it, as many economists do, as a financial adjustment.

"Uh-huh. A bunch of pin-stripe goofs take my savings and they loan it out to a bunch of hustle-bucks, and then the deals fall apart and they go bust, so I got to pay my taxes to keep these bozos in business."

Crudely put, but I suppose you have a point.

"Yeah, and the next mess we're gonna get is the insurance companies and the pension outfits that put a lot of our money in all them junky bonds. So when it comes time for my old lady to plant me, maybe she won't be able to collect the price of the casket. And my old lady will have to pay taxes to keep those yo-yos in business."

Many economists say the insurance and pension problems are exaggerated.

"No kiddin'. Hey, what's an economist?"

An expert on economics. They study the figures, the numbers, the indicators and predict where we are going financially.

"Oh, yeah. They're the same experts who didn't know that junk bonds were really junk, and that S&Ls and banks were shoving money at deadbeats a mob loan shark wouldn't trust, and all those companies that were going in hock to take over other companies were just putting people out of work. Hey, why don't they change the law so that if those Wall Street hustlers can't pay their debts, they get hit in the shins with baseball bats the way Tony the neighborhood loan shark used to do?"

Please, violence is not a solution to economic problems.

"Says who? The country is crawling with dope peddlers who solve their economic problems by knocking people off. What do you think guys are doing when they pull a gun and heist a grocery store? What is a guy doing when he steals a car except solving his economic problems? We got to have 10 million people in this country who are solving their economic problems every day by grabbing somebody else's loot."

That could be an exaggerated figure.

"Nah, that's conservative because I ain't including the stockbrokers, the lawyers, the bankers and the other legit purse snatchers. If I toss them in, then I figure half the country is stealing from the other half."

Many economists say there is light at the end of the tunnel; that we are coming out of the recession and good times are around the corner.

"Yeah? Well, it's like the guy said. The light at the end of the tunnel might be a train coming your way. So you explain this to me. If we're going to be in good shape, how are we gonna do it if our schools ain't working, if we're up to our ears in hock to the rest of the world, if we can't afford to take care of our old people and sick people, if our businesses are getting aced out by Japan and Europe, and if our politicians ain't got the guts to tell us what's going on and they got a good deal going for themselves and they don't want to screw it up by telling us the truth?"

I concede that we have problems. But why do you think we should have another war?

"To take our mind off our troubles."

SUMMIT: Richest countries meet

geny Primakov said Sunday that the pace of change in his country would "depend on the move which we expect to see from the other side, the West."

"We shall do it in spite of everything," Primakov said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"We shall do it. But at the same time, if we have been supported, it will minimize the risk for us."

In a round of bilateral meetings Sunday, British Prime Minister John Major met Mulroney, Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu and Italian Premier Giulio Andreotti, and invited Bush for dinner.

Andreotti also met with a Soviet delegation led by Primakov. Italy is one of the largest investors in the Soviet Union, and the Italians have already promised Gorbachev over $7 billion in credits, said Andreotti's spokesman, Pio Mastrobuoni.

Mulroney said the Group of Seven leaders would have some hard questions for Gorbachev. "Questions like, 'Well if your economy is in such great difficulty, and it is, why do you persist in spending such vast amounts of money refurbishing your military?'" Mulroney said.

Major said he had studied Gorbachev's proposals but was unclear about how they would be implemented.

"I genuinely believe we need to have a dialogue with President Gorbachev before we reach conclusions on it," Major said.

"Whether the G7 will be able to respond to this, I somehow doubt it," said Mulroney. "I don't believe you will see either miracles or blank checks from the G7 summit."

Mitterrand said he wished that Gorbachev could receive the aid "that would be necessary for him to enable the economic situation of his country to pick up," but stressed that it was primarily a job for the Soviets themselves.

"This is not blank check time," Bush added at the French news conference.

He said the summit leaders "will not do anything that will send a signal that we are shifting our attention away from the fledgling democracies in Eastern Europe in order to help the Soviet Union."

Japanese government spokesman Taizo Watanabe said Japan's attitude was based on three criteria: whether the Soviet Union could make good use of aid economically, whether Gorbachev was committed to cutting military spending and an islands dispute.

"We regard this (islands) problem as evidence of lingering expansionism on the part of the Soviet Union," said Watanabe. "But it's wrong to assert we are bargaining the Northern Territories for large financial assistance."

START: Arms-reduction talks bog down weapons on missiles, submarines and bombers by 30 percent.

The pact has engendered complaints from the Soviet military, upset by what it views as too many concessions to the Americans, and from U.S. conservatives irate at what they view as too much accommodation with the Kremlin.

Each side appears to have given some during the final leg of the talks, although U.S. officials and outside experts painted a picture of more Soviet than U.S. concessions overall.

For example, on the thorny issue of "downloading," or how many warheads would be taken off each multiple-warhead missile, the Soviets started out by asking for 2,150 warheads to be downloaded while the Americans only wanted 1,000. Baker said they settled on 1,250.

Previously, the Soviets had also agreed to reduce by some 50 percent the number of long-range SS-18 missiles, the most powerful ones in their possession; while the United States has managed to maintain its advantage over the Soviets in such categories as long-range bombers and cruise missiles.

Under the treaty, which runs more than 500 pages, the United States would be limited to 10,400 nuclear warheads — down from 12,000 currently — and the Soviets to 8,000, down from 11,000.

But Bessmertnykh, who was accompanied to the negotiations by Soviet chief of staff Gen. Mikhail Moiseyev, appeared satisfied.

"It was really a tremendous effort on both sides," said the Soviet minister.

"I really am very much satisfied with the job we have done with the American team," said Bessmertnykh.

hope he doesn't miscalculate."

Scowcroft made the comments during an interview on CNN's "Newsmaker Saturday" from Bush's vacation home in Maine and in a question-and-answer session with reporters afterward.

"We think it is very important that he comply with the terms of the U.N. resolution, particularly as they concern nuclear and biological and chemical weapons and equipment," Scowcroft said of Saddam.

He underscored previously stated U.S. skepticism about Saddam's intentions and credibility.

His remarks came as a United Nations inspection team said Saturday that Saddam was promising an expanded list of its nuclear facilities.

"He has demonstrated a pattern of duplicity that would lead us to be very skeptical" about any such promise, Scowcroft said.

Western diplomats said the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council had firmly warned Iraq to disclose its nuclear capabilities by July 25 or face serious consequences.

Scowcroft, saying he was not familiar with Saddam's Saturday promise, noted previous documents in which Saddam understated his nuclear capability, then later "admitted he had not come clean. ... Maybe he's coming a little cleaner."

males" (even in derision many always exclude the women?) does bar us from respecting and giving out the revered of others. In fact, we are clearly urged to do so. ... our joy as intellectuals and citizens would consist of panning for gold the entire face of the culture. As we do so, there is no one and much good to be gained remembering when some history, the good and bad of made us free. Professor Hitoshi Igarashi died at the hands of people who have not learned to respect freedom. He was, ironically, a proponent of comparative culture, a man who took great care to learn the culture of Iran. I daresay, on many occasions, he loved that culture and had deep appreciation for Islam. Now his death is a loss of freedom on the great scale, a ripple of intimidation that will flutter the hearts of scholars and others who are quiet, earnest lives dedicated to the pursuit of knowledge and reflection. The usual glitz crowd, the big-money constructionist professors and their opponents who live off the backs of the Heritage Foundation, may be in the glossy magazines, but they are beside the point. Making intellectual freedom is the point. It is a freedom that Professor Hitoshi Igarashi has shown us other cultures are willing to give up freedom to religious fanaticism. We must work to keep it. We are not hurt as to take pride in it as we work to secure the future.

What is a guy doing when he steals a car except solving his economic problems? We have 10 million people in this country who are solving their economic problems every day by grabbing somebody else's loot.

Nah, that's conservative because it includes the stockbrokers, the lawyers, the bankers and the other purse snatchers. If I toss them then I figure half the country is falling from the other half. Many economists say there is light at the end of the tunnel; that we are coming out of the recession and good times are around the corner. Yeah? Well, it's like the guy sitting at the light at the end of the tunnel. It might be a train coming your way, but you explain this to me. If we're going to be in good shape, how are we gonna do it if our jobs don't exist, if we're up to our ears in debt to the rest of the world, if we can't afford to take care of our old and sick people, if our businesses are getting aced out by Japan and Europe, and if our politicians ain't got the guts to deal with what's going on and they go around dealing going for themselves and they don't want to screw it up by telling us the truth? We concede that we have problems. Why do you think we should have another war? To take our mind off our troubles.

G7 SUMMIT

Bush, Mitterrand for military renewal

Iraqi compliance with U.N. cease-fire resolution faces possible deadline

Barry Schweid
Associated Press

RAMBOUILLET, France — President Bush and French President Francois Mitterrand on Sunday signaled their willingness to renew military force if Iraq fails to disclose and then destroy its nuclear weapons capabilities.

Baghdad's nuclear program is a "cause of alarm all over the world," Bush said.

Mitterrand said military action would be "just" if Baghdad continued development of nuclear weapons or threatened Kurds or other segments of its population. "We are ready if it's necessary," he said in a television interview that aired just before Bush arrived from the United States.

Bush said he had not heard Mitterrand's statement before being asked by a reporter but offered, "We are together in the way we are looking at this situation in Iraq; the situation being Saddam Hussein's continuation of lying and trying to go forward with some nuclear capability."

He said he had evidence that Iraq has yet to fully and truthfully describe its nuclear resources. He did not elaborate.

The subject, along with economic aid to the old Communist Bloc, dominated an afternoon of pre-summit discussions as the two leaders met in advance of this week's seven-nation economic meetings in London.

Bush arrived from the United States as French television networks were reporting Mitterrand's comments. There were rumors of a July 25 deadline for Iraq to comply with United Nations resolutions.

The two men spoke as Iraq was delivering a new list of its nuclear facilities to United Nations inspectors, and Bush spoke disparagingly of previous versions which proved to be incomplete.

The U.N. cease-fire resolution that ended the gulf war required Iraq to disclose all its nuclear materials and equipment, and cooperate in the destruction of any nuclear weapons program.

Mitterrand's summer chateau in Rambouillet, 60 miles outside Paris, was the first stop of a long European visit for Bush, who left immediately afterward for London. The three-day economic summit, beginning today, is expected to focus in large measure on Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's plea for economic assistance for his battered economy.

The Soviet president will have lunch privately with Bush on Wednesday before holding talks with all seven summit leaders.

Mitterrand said it is not likely that a Western aid proposal will be finalized by summit's end on Wednesday. The two presidents had a different emphasis when asked about assistance, with Mitterrand saying he favored "enough aid" for the Soviet leader to succeed in reform and quickly, and Bush saying this was no time for a "blank check."

Much of the news conference was taken up with questions about Iraq, whose occupying army was forced from Kuwait earlier this year by an international coalition that included the United States, France and several dozen other nations.

Japanese spokesman Taizo Watanabe hinted from London that his government would go along with any decision by the summit to threaten a new attack. "Naturally there's a limit to what we can do," he said in referring to Japan's constitutional bar against dispatching military force.

But a key adviser to Gorbachev said in a televised interview that a military strike to block development of a nuclear weapons program would be "counterproductive." Yevgeny Primakov made his comments on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," saying he was expressing a personal view.

Mitterrand was the last of the Western leaders to agree to use force to oust Iraq's army from Kuwait earlier in the year, yet his statement on use of force to destroy a nuclear program went beyond what Bush had to say at Sunday's news conference.

In his television interview, Mitterrand said, "If it concerns protecting populations martyred, persecuted, massacred by the government of Saddam Hussein, if it concerns seeing Iraq arm itself with a nuclear weapon, an intervention would be just."

President George Bush is greeted by French President Francois Mitterrand, right, as he arrives on Bastille Day Sunday for a bilateral meeting on the eve of the opening of the G7 Summit in London.

MIDEAST PEACE CONFERENCE

Syrian president approves U.S. proposal for discussions with Israel

Nick Ludington
Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — President Hafez Assad said Sunday that U.S. peace conference proposals are "an acceptable base" to settle differences in the Middle East, the Syrian Arab News Agency reported.

Assad's statement, contained in a letter to President Bush, could mark a significant step forward for Washington's efforts to convene a peace conference. Syria's reaction may also set the tone for other Arab nations, such as Jordan, that have been receptive to the conference idea.

Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa handed Assad's letter to the U.S. ambassador to Syria, Edward Djerejian, on Sunday, the agency said.

Under the U.S. proposal, talks would be held between Israel and the Palestinians on the future of the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank. At the same time, there would be a peace conference sponsored by Washington and Moscow involving Israel and its Arab neighbors.

Washington has been awaiting the Syrian response before Secretary of State James Baker, who has traveled to the region four times this year, makes further diplomatic efforts. There was no indication whether he would embark on another mission soon.

Baker is scheduled to attend the summit of industrialized nations in London this week and then accompany Bush to Greece and Turkey.

The Israeli Foreign Ministry had no initial comment on the Syrian announcement. Foreign Minister David Levy's spokeswoman Aliza Goren said they were still trying to obtain a text of Syria's response.

William Murphy, a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Damascus, said any comment on the Syrian response must come from Washington.

In the letter, Assad praised the efforts of Bush and Baker "to cope with difficulties that block convening the conference." Assad also expressed satisfaction with the Soviet Union's role in the peace process.

Assad said U.S. proposals are "positive and balanced and constitute an acceptable base to reach a comprehensive solution and achieve a peace process in the region because the proposals are on the basis" of previous United Nations Security Council resolutions.

The Syrian news agency gave no further details.

Resolution 242, adopted Nov. 22, 1967, calls for the withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from the West Bank and Gaza Strip, captured from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war. Resolution 338, passed Oct. 22, 1973, urged negotiations for "a just and durable peace in the Middle East."

Syria has insisted on an international conference with a U.N. role.

However, Israel, in its response to Bush last month, demanded a regional conference with no U.N. role. It also stressed that any conference must include only a formal opening and then break up into separate talks between Israel and each Arab state and the Palestinians.

It was not immediately clear whether Syria had given up its demand that the conference reconvene periodically — something Israel strongly opposes.

Israel has agreed to have the United States and Soviet Union co-sponsor the conference.

There are about 700,000 Palestinians in Gaza and about 1 million in the West Bank. Baker has said that Israel's drive to build more settlements on the West Bank is a major obstacle for peace.

Earlier Sunday, Syria and China issued a joint statement saying Middle East stability could only be achieved by Israel's withdrawal from the occupied territories.

The statement came as Chinese Prime Minister Li Peng left for Kuwait after talks with Assad and other Syrian leaders. Li is the first Chinese premier to visit the gulf.

Li on Saturday backed Syria's call for an international peace conference under U.N. auspices. China is one of the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council. The other members are the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France.

Joliet prison violence injures 3, kills inmate

Associated Press

JOLIET, Ill. — More than 2,000 state prison inmates were under lockdown Sunday after violence that left one prisoner dead and three guards injured, one seriously.

"It's locked up tighter than a drum," said Brian Fairchild, a Department of Corrections spokesman.

Trouble began at Statesville Correction Center when an inmate stabbed a guard captain on Saturday, Fairchild said. The inmate continued attacking the guard after a warning shot fired by a guard in a tower.

The tower guard shot and killed the inmate, who was not identified.

Prisoners blockaded a door leading to the cellblock and set a trash fire before several dozen guards in riot gear retook the four-story building, Lockport Fire Department Lt. Dick Cronholm said.

Cronholm said he heard several shots fired as he and other firefighters entered the cellblock to douse the fire.

Police from neighboring communities were called in to help prison guards quell the violence, which was confined to one cellblock, Fairchild said.

No hostages were taken. No further details were released. Prison officials referred calls to the Corrections Department, where spokesman Jimmy Hale said there would be no comment until today.

The guard captain was upgraded from critical to serious condition Sunday, and two others were released from Silver Cross Hospital, nursing supervisor Sherry Lindstrom said.

The guard captain may have been hit accidentally by shotgun pellets fired by the tower guard, Fairchild said. It was unclear how the other two guards were injured, he said.

The prison was built in 1920 to house 1,506 inmates. In recent years it has regularly held more than 2,000.

Officer who beat suspect claims action was justified

Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas — A police officer videotaped striking a handcuffed car theft suspect 28 times with a nightstick said, "I did what I was trained to do."

"I did what I thought I was supposed to do," Edward Parnell said in a Fort Worth Star-Telegram report Sunday.

Parnell arrested Ernest Anderson July 3 for alleged car theft and was driving him to a police station when Anderson kicked out a rear side window and tried to get out of the cruiser.

Anderson said he erupted because his handcuffs were too tight.

Parnell stopped the car and began beating Anderson with a nightstick. A woman videotaped the beating from a home near the highway.

Parnell, 32, said he didn't have any choice but to subdue him with force.

"I don't have control of the situation. And as far as I'm concerned, I'm losing because he's still coming out of the vehicle," Parnell said.

"I then took my nightstick with two hands, brought it back and swung with as much force as I can muster. . . . I needed him back in the car, either through pain or fright."

Anderson, 21, was treated for cuts and bruises. It had not been determined which injuries were caused by the nightstick and which were caused by smashing the window.

"I've been trained in the academy to not let a felony prisoner escape. I've also been trained not to let somebody commit suicide," Parnell said. "I've been trained to use whatever force is necessary to not let either happen."

After the videotape was broadcast nationwide, Parnell was charged with assault with a deadly weapon. He has been relieved of duty.

He is also required to stay at home during business hours Monday through Friday and must check in with the department every weekday at 8:30 a.m.

GRAND PRIX

Texan wins Des Moines Grand Prix

Associated Press

DES MOINES—George Robinson of Houston drove his Camaro to victory Sunday in the Trans Am race at the Des Moines Grand Prix.

Robinson started eighth in the field but moved up as mechanical troubles sidelined several of the top qualifiers during the race.

It was Robinson's first victory on the Trans Am circuit, which features modified versions of mass production cars such as Chevrolet Camaros, Oldsmobile Cutlasses and Ford Mustangs. He said his strategy was to save his car while staying in contention on the twisting, 2-mile course over downtown streets.

"There's a lot of guys that run hard at the beginning and a lot of guys who don't finish the race," he said. "We don't run real hard in the beginning."

Jack Baldwin of Marietta, Ga., finished second in a Camaro. He started the race in the No. 2 position, behind Scott Sharp of East Norwalk, Conn. Sharp won the pole position Saturday, and led Sunday until his car's drive train broke on the 38th lap of the 62-lap race.

"All of a sudden the back end of the car felt like it had bottomed out," said Sharp, who also won the pole here last year but failed to finish after hitting a wall.

Baldwin took the lead when Sharp dropped out, but was overtaken by the hard-charging Robinson on the 59th lap. The drivers' cars brushed up against each other as Robinson took the lead by forging into the inside position on a turn.

"I just came in real hard," Robinson said. "It probably wasn't the greatest place to pass, but I had an opening."

Baldwin's car spun around and stalled, and he took several seconds to get the car started and back on the track. He finished 33.8 seconds behind Robinson, who had an average speed of 71.44 mph. Baldwin said his car was fading prior to the brush with Robinson, and he did not criticize the winner for trying to pass on a turn.

George Robinson of Houston, Texas, celebrates after winning the 124-mile, Des Moines Grand Prix Sunday afternoon.

Fastest lap: Irv Hoerr, 1:37.971 (73.491 mph).

"He would have passed me anyway," Baldwin said. "I don't feel bad about finishing second."

Les Lindley of Anaheim, Calif., finished third after starting dead last in the 26-car field. He did not run a qualifying lap Saturday because mechanics were still working on his Camaro.

Shawn Hendricks of Piedmont, S.C., won Sunday's second event, the Escort World Challenge. Hendricks, driving a Corvette, started in the No. 2 position and took the lead on the final lap of the one-hour race.

Doc Bundy of Gainesville, Ga., started on the pole and led much of the race before fading in the final lap. A fire broke out in the rear end of his Lotus as it neared the finish line, and he ended up in third place. R.K. Smith of Carlsbad, Calif., was second in a Corvette.

Hendricks said his only hope late in the race was that something would happen to Bundy's car. "I couldn't believe it," Hendricks said. "I came off the turn and all of a sudden I saw smoke and he was dead in the water."

Bundy was treated at the scene for superficial burns. Firefighters rushed onto the track to extinguish the fire.

Tony Kester of Michigan City, Ind., won Sunday's final race, the Olds Pro Series featuring open-cockpit cars. Ken Kroeger of Waukesha, Wis., was second.

Walter Payton, former running back for the Chicago Bears of the National Football League, finished in sixth place.

U.S. OPEN

Mallon upsets the vets again for title

Denne H. Freeman
Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas—Freckled and friendly Meg Mallon could lose her standing as the most popular player on the LPGA Tour if she keeps winning majors.

The bubbly 28-year-old Mallon, who won the LPGA championship two weeks ago, handled 98-degree temperatures and two of the tour's toughest pressure players to earn the 46th U.S. Women's Open championship on Sunday.

"I can't believe I did it again," Mallon said.

Young nerves beat old nerves on a physically demanding day which had a heat index of 105 degrees.

She did it the hard way by taming sun-seared Colonial Country Club's treacherous back nine with three brave birdie putts for a final round 4-under-par 67 and a 1-under-par 283.

Mallon said earlier in the week she was so tired she had no chance. But she didn't give veterans Pat Bradley, 40, and Amy Alcott, 35, former U.S. Open champions, much of a shot with a putter that sizzled like the weather.

"My putter picked a nice time to get hot," Mallon said. "I didn't know I had the lead until I asked my caddy when we walked off the (final) green."

Mallon, who played collegiately at Ohio State, seized the lead with an 18-foot birdie putt on the par-4, 400-yard 14th then knocked down a 20-footer on 15 for another birdie.

She had a 3-under-par 32 on the incoming nine to earn the $110,000 first place prize by two shots.

Mallon, who had been a pro for five years, won her first LPGA tournament by taking the Oldsmobile Classic at Lake Worth, Fla., in the second event of the year.

"Once you get a winning feeling you like to keep doing it," she said.

Bradley, the 1981 Open champion and leading money winner on the LPGA Tour, began the day tied with 24-year-old Joan Pitcock. Bradley, winner of 27 tournaments, birdied two of the first three holes then bogeyed No. 9 to turn at 1-under 35. Bradley finished second with a final-round 71 and a 1-over total of 285.

Bradley was also second to Mallon in the LPGA, losing by a stroke.

Pitcock, a non-winner from Fresno Calif., shot herself out of it with a 2-over 38 on the front. Pitcock had a final-round 75 and was at 289.

Alcott and 19-year-old Brandie Burton opened just one shot behind the leaders.

Alcott, who needs one more victory for automatic inclusion into the LPGA Hall of Fame, was out in 35 but matched two birdies with two bogeys. She shot even-par 71 and finished with a 2-over 286.

"I chipped in and holed a shot from a bunker but Meg showed she is a champion and she is a great person," Alcott said. "She's probably the most popular person on our tour."

"I don't know about that label," Mallon said. "There's a lot of great people out here."

Burton took herself out of it when she knocked her tee shot out of bounds on the 460-yard, par-5 No. 3 and took double-bogey 7. Burton shot 75 for a 290 total.

Meg Mallon

Laurel King finished fourth with a final-round 70 and a 287 total.

Betsy King, who became the fourth player to fail in an attempt to win three consecutive Opens, finally broke par at Colonial after two 74s and a 78. She shot a 3-under 68 to finish at 294, 10 over.

"Great champions have great heart and Meg showed that in the heat out there today," said Alcott.

NFL Camp Summaries

Bengals Ickey Woods is claiming his reconstructed left knee is nearly good as new after strenuous off-season conditioning, but receiver Reggie Rember might have lost his shot at making the team because of a lack of dedication.

Washington At Carlisle, Pa., the Washington Redskins opened camp at Dickinson College with their No. 1 quarterback Mark Rypien absent and still not under contract. Redskins coach Joe Gibbs said he considers Rypien his starter, but made it clear he's ready to turn to backup Stan Humphries if Rypien falters. Rypien and the Redskins were reported to be close to reaching an agreement.

Receiver Hassan Jones underwent arthroscopic knee surgery shortly after the receiver finished a two-week stay in a Minnesota alcohol rehabilitation center and just before he was accused in civil and criminal suits of assaulting a man. The Bengals ordered Rember to undergo counseling for alcohol dependency after he was charged with drunken driving in two off-season car accidents.

Rember, 24, missed a Wednesday appointment with Wyche, and the coach hasn't talked to him since. Rember did not return a phone call to his house Thursday. Getting Woods to work has been no problem at all. He finished his nine-week treadmill program this week by running a 4.45 40-yard dash, the fastest of his pro career.

Four Orioles hurl a 'quiet' no-hitter

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — If it wasn't the weirdest no-hitter ever pitched, it may have been the quietest. "I don't think anybody really knew what was happening," Baltimore reliever Gregg Olson said after four Oriole pitchers combined to hold Oakland hitless in a 2-0 victory Saturday.

An Oakland Coliseum crowd of 40,047 — or the maybe 30,000 who remained — gave polite applause to Olson after Harold Baines struck out to end the game. Maybe they didn't know who deserved the applause. Nobody on the field knew who to hug.

The scene was quite unlike last season on June 11 in Oakland, when Texas' Nolan Ryan pitched his sixth career no-hitter at Oakland and the crowd gave him a thunderous ovation while the Rangers jockeyed for shoulder position to hoist a triumphant Ryan.

"Bob Milacki was the guy who deserved the credit," Olson said. "If he would have still been out there, there would have been a dogpile. He should get the brunt of the celebration."

Milacki (5-3) pitched six innings before leaving with an injury to his hand, hurt while deflecting the A's best chance for a hit on a Willie Wilson liner up the middle. The ball hit off Milacki and caromed over to first baseman Randy Milligan for an out.

Mike Flanagan, Mark Williamson and Olson each pitched one inning to finish off only the second four-pitcher no-hitter in baseball history. On Sept. 28, 1975, Oakland's Vida Blue, Glenn Abbott, Paul Lindblad and Rollie Fingers shut down California without a hit.

"I really didn't care if the guys gave up a hit, as long as we won," said Milacki. "But it sure worked out great."

The Orioles had never pitched a no-hit game on the road before. Saturday's was the first by Baltimore since Jim Palmer beat Oakland on Aug. 13, 1969.

Palmer, working for a Baltimore TV station, called Saturday's no-hitter from the booth in Oakland.

"The great thing about a no-hitter is its spontaneity," said Palmer. "Mine was kind of ugly (an 8-0 victory). This one was still close enough that they had to be concerned about winning the game."

"With the way the game was so close, I thought we were going to break their heart," said Oakland manager Tony La Russa.

Palmer talked about how four pitchers throwing a no-hitter may have taken some of the drama out of it.

"It's certainly tougher for one person; just ask Eckersley," said Palmer, referring to the ace A's reliever who pitched a no-hitter in 1977 when he was a starter for Cleveland.

"It's a lot easier to get a guy out once instead of four times. But that's not to discredit these guys. They pitched great. Olson was as good as he could be today. I mean he paralyzed Canseco and Baines. It was like gridlock."

Canseco struck out looking at a curve ball for the second out in the ninth. Dave Henderson made the first out of the inning when shortstop Cal Ripken made a nice backhand stop of his grounder in the hole and threw him out by a step.

"If I looked calm on my play, I wasn't," Ripken said. "I was jittery. That's the first time I've ever been in on a no-hitter."

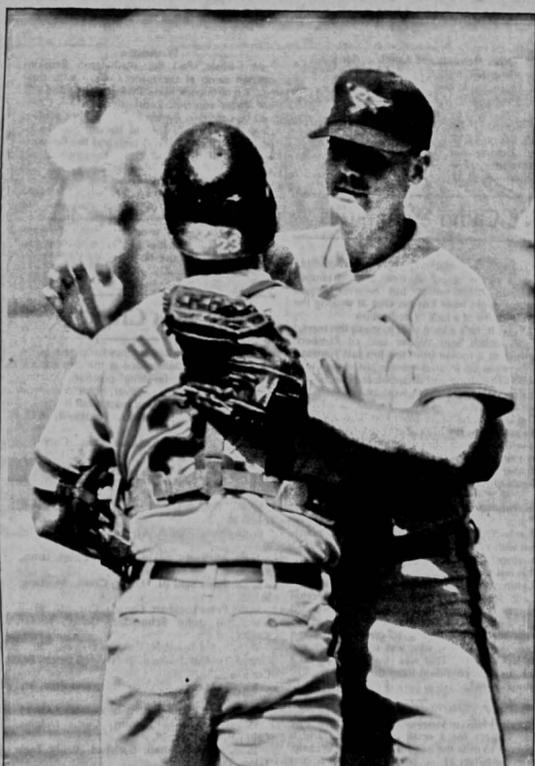

This was the Orioles' fifth no-hitter. On April 30, 1967, Steve Barber and Stu Miller lost a combined no-hitter, 2-1 to Detroit.

"I'd say it's tougher for four guys to pitch a no-hitter, because all four guys have to be on," Baltimore manager Johnny Oates said.

Oakland came close to a hit only one other time. In the seventh, Mark McGwire hit a drive off Flanagan that Mike Devereaux ran down in deep center field.

Last year, there were a record nine no-hitters, starting with a combined effort by California's Mark Langston and Mike Witt on April 11. In 1991, two have been thrown: one by Ryan at Texas and the other in Philadelphia by Tommy Greene.

Milacki struck out three and walked three. Flanagan walked one in the seventh and Williamson pitched a perfect eighth, retiring Mike Gallego on a foul popup and getting pinch hitter Rickey Henderson and Wilson on routine grounders.

'We really went back to basics,' said glove designer Alan Walker.

Pump it up, when you don't really need it

Trudy Tynan Associated Press

CHICOPEE, Mass. — First it was fancy basketball shoes. Now, they've pumped up the baseball glove.

Spalding Sports Worldwide introduces its Flex Air mitt, with a built-in pump and release valve, at the National Sporting Goods Trade Show in Chicago on Monday. The company says it's one of the first major innovations in gloves since Hall of Fame pitcher A.G. Spalding left the mound in 1876 to start making them.

The glove, which won't be on store shelves for another five to six months, will initially be made in fielders models for baseball and softball. It will contain three air polyurethane air chambers across the back of the hand, the wrist and the thumb to tighten the fit across the back of the hand.

The glove can be inflated in seconds with a pump built into the back of the thumb and deflated as quickly by pushing a release valve that gives as engaging a "pffst" as any sneaker.

Cost of the glove will be $120, close to the top price for pumped up sneakers, which go from $85 to $130.

The ball catching surface remains essentially the same double-thickness of leather that has resounded to fly balls for more than a century.

But Spalding officials said they are considering adding a shock absorbing cushion before the glove goes into general production.

The reason there are no air pockets on the palm is simple, according to Alan O. Walker, director of research and development for team sports: "The ball would bounce out."

"When you inflate something, it becomes rigid. It's like blowing up a balloon," he explained. "And you need to feel the ball to catch it."

"We really got back to basics," said Walker, who has been working on the glove for more than 18 months.

SPORTS QUIZ

Who was the last pitcher to start both ends of a double header?

Friday's Answer: Julio Franco had the only two RBIs in the 1990 All-Star game.

TOUR DE FRANCE

LeMond more comfortable with his lead

Salvatore Zanca
Associated Press

RENNES, France — Greg LeMond is more comfortable in the lead now that the Tour de France has neared the midway point.

The three-time winner, who several days ago said he preferred to lurk behind the leaders, holds a 73-second lead over Erik Breukink of the Netherlands after Sunday's ninth stage. Mauro Ribeiro of Brazil, who broke away from the field in the final mile, won Sunday's 100-mile leg from Alencon to Rennes in three hours, 40 minutes, 51 seconds.

LeMond, shooting for his third Tour victory in a row, leads the field over two more flat stages before the racers take a break.

Then it's on to the Pyrenees mountains for the next few stages.

"I prefer to have a three or four-minute lead than be three or four minutes behind in the mountain stages," LeMond said after the first week of racing.

Most of the pack finished 53 seconds behind Ribeiro, including LeMond, who was 41st.

In third place overall, 75 seconds behind LeMond, was Djamilidine Abdoujalilov of the Soviet Union. Miguel Indurain of Spain was fourth, 2:17 behind the leader. The highest placed American behind LeMond was Andrew Hampsten, who is 40th overall, 8:25 off the pace.

LeMond took the overall lead for the third time on Saturday when he finished second in the individual time trial behind Indurain.

The defending champion's only worry is the amount of riders in the pack capable of winning. About 1,500 miles remain to be covered by the 194 riders.

"All the favorites remain favorites and they're always attacking me but I'm capable of attacking also," LeMond said. "Since the beginning of the Tour everybody attacks. That's why the yellow jersey changed so much."

Thierry Marie of France was the race's first leader, winning the prologue, but LeMond took the lead in the first stage and ended up wearing the yellow jersey.

He lost it during the team time trial the same day to Rolf Sorensen of Denmark, who fell and broke his collarbone in the fifth stage, and was forced to retire.

LeMond, who had been in second, technically moved into the lead for the sixth stage, but lost it to Marie, who staged one of the Tour's longest breakaways ever.

Marie held the lead for two days before LeMond once again took it away from him. The Frenchman is currently eighth overall.

Despite his poor efforts earlier this season, LeMond looks ready to win his fourth Tour.

"If I had the same motivation as I have on the Tour, I'll maybe win other races," he said. "But my career is the Tour, and the Tour is my career."

Other than Sorensen, several other riders are out of the competition, including Stephen Roche of Ireland (disqualified).

McDowell pitches Sox past Crew

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Jack McDowell came close to a no-hitter. Then again, he didn't.

McDowell pitched a one-hitter Sunday, allowing a leadoff home run to Paul Molitor as the Chicago White Sox routed the Milwaukee Brewers 15-1 behind four RBIs from rookie Warren Newson.

"That's one of those things," McDowell said. "It's either going to happen or it doesn't."

Molitor's home run was his 10th this season. It was fourth time this year and the 31st time in his career he led off a game with a home run.

"One fastball that got away," McDowell said. "It was the only big mistake I made all day."

McDowell (11-4) won for the sixth time in eight starts. He struck out four and walked one as he increased his career record against Milwaukee to 3-0.

"He's getting smart," Molitor said. "He was aggressive today. In a close game, he tries to throw more strikeouts. Today he threw a lot of groundballs and let the defense do the work. He wasn't worried about strikeouts. It shows how far he's come."

McDowell, who has pitched a pair of two-hitters, said he didn't think the one-hitter was his best performance.

"Statistically, I've struck out more and thrown it better," he said. "But it's kind of tough in a 15-1 game."

Mark Knudson (1-3) allowed six hits and six runs in three-plus innings. Chicago had 15 hits in all and had its highest run total this season.

Robin Ventura's two-run double in the third gave Chicago a 2-1 lead. Dan Pasqua walked with two outs and Newson hit a three-run homer, the first home run of his career.

"It puts you in a good state of mind out there," McDowell said of the cushion. "You can go out there and throw strikes in that situation."

Tim Raines hit a two-run single in the fourth off reliever James Austin, who walked Newson later in the inning with the bases loaded, putting the White Sox ahead 8-1.

Chicago added four runs in the sixth on Lance Johnson's two-run double of Julio Machado and Ron Karkovics's two-run single. Ventura hit his eighth home run in the seventh inning for a 13-1 lead.

Part of the problem was that Brewers pitchers walked nine.

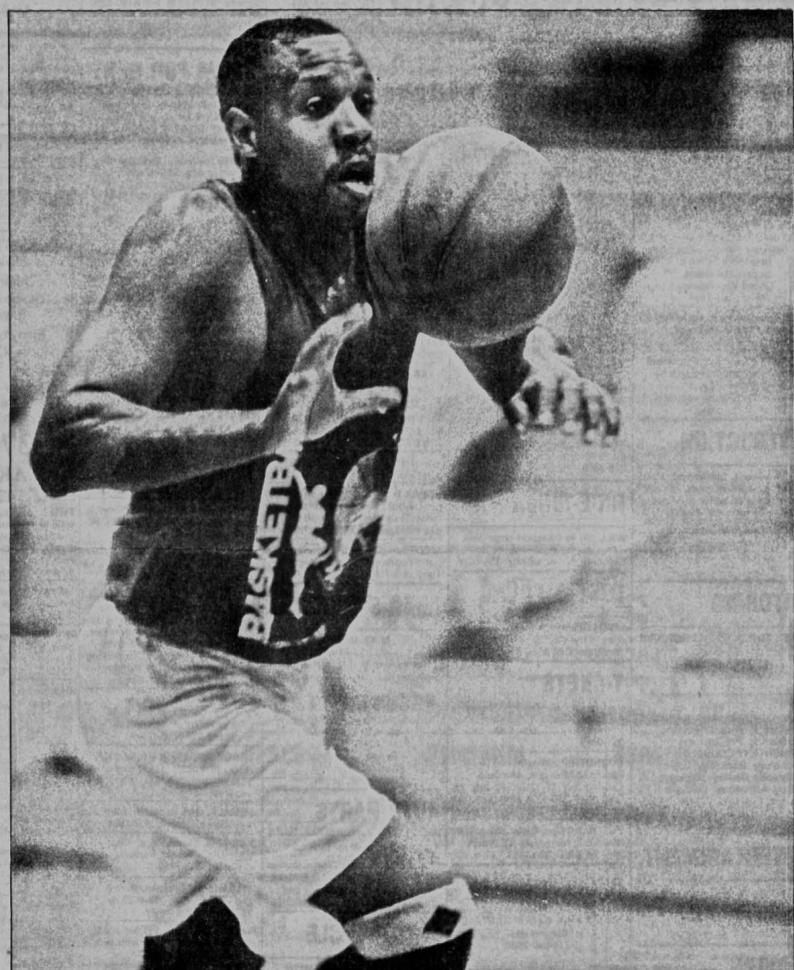

"We got hammered. We didn't throw strikes," Milwaukee manager Tom Trebelhorn said. "Then we got hammered a little bit more. People were screaming to change pitchers, we changed pitchers. Then they screamed to change pitchers again, but there's only so far you can go."

HAWKEYE OPEN

Monday's schedule.

At 5-10, Lefty Moore has been looking up at his opponents for most of his basketball career, but that hasn't stopped him from succeeding professionally and winning in the Prime Time League.

Moore making the right moves

Basketball has never been a game for the little guys. Most observers would agree that height is one of the most important aspects in the sport.

But there are some players out there who don't let a little fault like not being 6-foot-9 get to them.

These guys rely on speed, smarts and a little bit of flash when they go up against larger players. Lefty Moore is one of these players and the way he is tearing up the Prime Time League this summer, a trip to the City High gymnasium might be in order for all those 5-10 dreamers out there. His small size has only made his desire on the court more fierce.

He was a prominent member of the Iowa State Cyclones in the early eighties, leading the team in assists in 1981 and finishing 11th among the career leaders in that category. He also served as team captain in the '81 season, the first for current coach Johny Orr.

But the most remarkable attribute Moore displays is the need to play basketball, anytime, anywhere, against anybody.

"I just love to play the game," said Moore. "I never lost that desire after college and I work on my game and stay in shape by playing basketball whenever I can."

Winning a holiday tournament in his final season, Moore said, was among the highlights of his time as a Cyclone.

"It was coach Orr's first year and he had never won a holiday tournament before, not even when he was at Michigan with all those great teams," said Moore. "It was a very special time for me also, as my mother passed away that year and my teammates dedicated the tournament in memory of her."

After leaving Iowa State in 1981, Moore continued to play basketball in a wide assortment of places. He played in Australia, for a Marathon Oil-sponsored team, for Athletes in Action and for the CBA's Rockford Lightning. In the summer he sharpens his skills in the Prime Time League, where he says the competition is first rate.

"Prime Time is the best competition in the summer because I get to play against the current Hawkeyes, and some of the former ones also."

"There are also some smaller school guys who want to play their best against me and show everyone what they can do," Moore said with a grin.

Moore feels he would have had a chance to play in the NBA, but the league was leaning towards a "big" look when he came out of college.

"They're going back to smaller guards now, but when I came out there was a trend towards guys

Bielecki in unlikely role of Cubs' ace

Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Chicago Cubs expected George Bell to get a lot of big hits this season. They didn't think part-time starter Mike Bielecki would be leading the team in victories come mid-July, though.

Bell's hitting and Bielecki's pitching helped the Cubs beat the Houston Astros 4-3 on Sunday.

Bell's double capped a three-run third inning off Darryl Kile (3-3), giving the left fielder seven RBIs in the four-game series, the last three of which were won by Chicago.

"There's no doubt about it," manager Jim Essian said, "George has been coming through in key situations for the last two months."

Bell says he is a free swinger, noting, "I'm not doing anything different here than I did with Toronto."

Coming to Chicago said Bell, "has been a job of trying to learn how to live with a new set of surroundings."

Bielecki (10-6), improved to 7-3 as a starter, giving up 10 hits in 5 1/2 innings. He has made 14 relief appearances.

"They were getting the bat on the ball and they were falling in. It was one of those days when the wind is blowing in and you think you're going to have an easy day," Bielecki said.

Bielecki was relieved in the sixth after allowing a two-out single to Eric Yelding and walking pinch-hitter Casey Candaele. But Chuck McElroy got Steve Finley to bounce out.

Dave Smith pitched 1 1/2 innings and Paul Assenmacher finished for his eighth save, stranding two runners.

Since May 22 when Bell was batting .236, he has hit .353 with eight homers and 32 RBIs in 47 games.

Braves 2, Cardinals 1
ATLANTA — All-Star game starter Tom Glavine pitched a six-hitter for his 13th victory as Atlanta beat St. Louis to complete a four-game sweep.

The slumping Cardinals have lost seven of their last eight games, and seven in a row to the Braves.

Glavine (13-4) walked none and struck out eight, including the side in the third inning, as he recorded his seventh complete game and became the first 13-game winner in the major leagues.

The Braves took the lead in the third with two runs off Bob Tewksbury (6-5).

Pirates 10, Reds 6
CINCINNATI — Pittsburgh completed a four-game sweep of Cincinnati, beating the defending World Series champions for the eighth straight time, by rallying for a 10-6 victory Sunday on homers by Barry Bonds and Bobby Bonilla.

Bonds hit a two-run homer — his third of the series — and sparked a five-run sixth inning with an RBI double that tied the score at 8-8.

Mike LaValliere followed with a two-run double off slumping reliever Randy Myers to send the Reds to their season-high eighth

Game show host Convy dies of cancer at 57

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Emmy award-winning game show host Bert Convy died Monday after a long battle with cancer. He was 57.

Convy died at his home in suburban Brentwood with his wife Catherine, at his bedside, manager Howard Hinderstein said.

He was diagnosed with a brain tumor in April 1990, Hinderstein said. Convy had been admitted to Cedars Sinai Medical Center after collapsing during a visit to his mother, who was hospitalized for stroke.

Killing of Joliet guard

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — Inmates who took three guards hostage at a state prison were retaliating for the killing of a fellow gang member by a guard, officials said Monday.

The eight inmates involved in Sunday's hostage-taking at Stateville Correctional Center belonged to the same Chicago-area street gang as the slain inmate, said Howard Peters, state corrections director.

On Saturday night, in another cellblock, convicted murderer Ronald Aponte stabbed a guard several times and was fatally shot by a guard after ignoring orders to halt and a warning shot.

Alzheimer's drug fails to get FDA approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first drug to be proposed for approval for treatment of Alzheimer's disease failed to win the endorsement of an advisory panel to the Food and Drug Administration on Monday.

The panel, by an 8-0 vote, adopted instead a statement saying the tests made to date were "an insufficient demonstration of clinical effectiveness" of the drug Tacrine.

The panel left open the question of whether the FDA should permit patients to have access to the drug while its safety and efficacy are tested further.

Baker sent on Mideast quest for peace talks

LONDON (AP) — President Bush, declaring he had reached a "breakthrough" in Mideast peace-making, directed Secretary of State James Baker on Monday to return to the region in a renewed drive to set up Arab-Israeli peace talks.

Bush said he was prompted by a "good response" from Syrian President Hafez Assad on arranging a Mideast peace conference. Now, Bush said, Israel will be tested.

"They've made statements to us of wanting to do these things, and now here will be a good test," the president told reporters after he had dinner with the leaders of six other industrialized democracies attending an economic summit meeting.

Late-night rampage kills 19 at Nairobi school

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Boys at a Roman Catholic boarding school went on a late-night rampage at a dormitory and killed 19 girls, according to news reports Monday.

The Daily Nation said 67 girls were injured in the assault Saturday night at St. Kizito Mixed Secondary School in Meru, 105 miles northeast of Nairobi. Some of the injured girls said they were raped.

The newspaper said the girls were either trampled or suffocated during the attack by more than 300 boys. Students at the school range in age from 14 to 19.

According to the newspaper, the boys were angry because the girls had refused to join in a demonstration against the headmaster, James Labon, over the boys' exclusion from an athletic competition Friday.
