"It is very nice from the their standpoint, because it gives them an opportunity to showcase their talent," Klatt said. "And they are obviously thinking they know it better than other players." The main goal of the Hogan tour, Klatt said, is to give the younger players an opportunity to play professionally. Other players use to regain the form which got them into the PGA. Still others are winding down their PGA careers and hoping to join the seniors Tour once they reach the minimum age. "80 percent (of the Hogan players) are younger men working their way up hoping to win a tournament to get the competitive edge," Klatt said. Kennedy mentioned rape to nephew, man says

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A restaurant customer told police he overheard Sen. Edward Kennedy telling his nephew after an alleged attack at the family estate that the younger man could be accused of rape, a statement released Tuesday shows.

The customer told police he heard the senator saying to William Kennedy Smith "and she'll say it's rape" on the Sunday morning after Smith allegedly attacked the woman at the family's Palm Beach compound.

However, the witness made it clear he didn't know in what context the senator's statement was made, nor whether it was a declarative sentence or a question. And his statement contradicted other accounts that have put Kennedy at the restaurant with his son, Patrick, not his nephew.

In his sworn statement to police, Kennedy said he didn't find out details of the allegation against Smith until later that Sunday and that he believed it involved only sexual harassment.

Weed killer spill poisons California waters

DUNSMUIR, Calif. (AP) — Thousands of gallons of weed killer that had spilled from a derailed tanker car drifted toward the state's largest reservoir Tuesday, prompting a warning to boaters and fishermen.

The spill, at least 13 miles long, was expected to reach the Sacramento River arm of Lake Shasta late Tuesday. Since Sunday night, the spill has killed thousands of fish and sickened scores of people.

Boaters and fishermen were advised to avoid the arm of the reservoir, and business leaders said the spill threatened the area's summer tourist and sport fishing industries.

U.S. may abandon Clark Air Force in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The United States has tentatively decided to abandon Clark Air Base because of volcanic damage but still wants to keep Subic Bay naval base, U.S. and Philippine sources said Tuesday.

U.S. and Philippine negotiators resumed talks Tuesday on extending the lease on the two bases, which expires Sept. 16. U.S. officials made no comment on what they will offer for continued use of Subic, the Navy's largest supply depot overseas. But Senate President Jovito Salonga said the Americans offered $203 million a year.

Both bases were severely damaged when Mount Pinatubo erupted last month, killing more than 300 people. The volcano continued to spew ash Tuesday, and scientists say it may remain active for three years.

Croatia demands cease-fire monitoring team

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Croatia on Tuesday demanded that a European Community team monitoring a cease-fire in Slovenia also be sent to Croatia, the scene of ongoing ethnic violence.

A Croatian policeman was killed in a mortar attack Tuesday and two members of a foreign TV crew, including an American, came under fire and were slightly injured while filming in the Croatian countryside.

Yugoslavia's eight-member presidency had scheduled another meeting Tuesday to discuss the Yugoslav crisis, but the meeting collapsed when several republics refused to attend.

The pro-Western republics of Croatia and Slovenia declared independence June 25.

G7 not ignoring Soviet requests for aid

Summit leaders also endorse Mideast peace

Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

LONDON — Western leaders hailed Mikhail Gorbachev's efforts toward "an open and democratic Soviet Union" on Tuesday and worked to assemble a limited aid package.

On the eve of the Soviet president's precedent-setting appearance at a free-world economic summit, President Bush and Secretary of State James Baker promised Gorbachev would not leave London "empty-handed."

A draft of the group's concluding economic communiqué, which was obtained by The Associated Press, provided no specifics on what type of aid would be offered. It said only that the summit countries "stand ready to aid the integration of the Soviet Union into the world economy."

The package would contain more details by the time it was announced Wednesday by British Prime Minister John Major.

The seven largest industrial democracies also endorsed a universal register for arms transfers, vowed to leave all sanctions on Iraq until it complies with remaining U.N. sanctions and endorsed Bush's new push for a Middle East peace.

The Mideast effort, given new life with apparent conciliatory movements by Syria, may be the best chance yet for direct peace talks between Israel and her Arab neighbors, Baker told reporters. But he cautioned that there remain "plenty of hurdles. We're not there by a long shot."

The draft economic statement said the ground-breaking study of the Soviet economy done by international lending agencies last year provided a good outline on which the Soviets should proceed. That study called for the Soviets to move quickly to put a free-market system into place even though the transformation would involve economic pain and dislocation in the beginning.

"That study lists many of the elements necessary so that the reform be crowned with success, among which is fiscal and monetary discipline," the study said. See SUMMIT, Page 5

Gorbachev meets with Westerners

Bryan Brumley

LONDON — After months of buildup, Mikhail Gorbachev meets Western leaders today seeking their hearts and help at a "turning point" in his efforts to reform the Soviet economy.

Gorbachev, who arrived in London Tuesday night, also will probably discuss a strategic arms treaty with President Bush in hopes of concluding it in time to schedule a U.S.-Soviet summit later this summer.

Bush has declared there is no link between the two issues. But Gorbachev, in a letter to the economic summit leaders, mentioned them side by side.

Disarmament, he said, was off "to an effective start ... but the sphere of economic relations has seen no noticeable change. We feel the time is at hand to ... develop (ways) the Soviet economy ... could be integrated in the world economic system."

Scientists comb desert for signs of radioactivity

The inspection team travels through 'hell' and back in the search for nuclear weapons.

Michael Hirsh
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The job description is less than inspiring: 14-hour days spent in desert dust up to the kneecaps, 130-degree heat laced at times with radioactivity, the occasional gunshot.

But for the team of nuclear inspectors from 22 countries, many of them scholars types better suited to laboratories than deserts, the opportunity to seek out and destroy Iraq's nuclear capability is not to be missed.

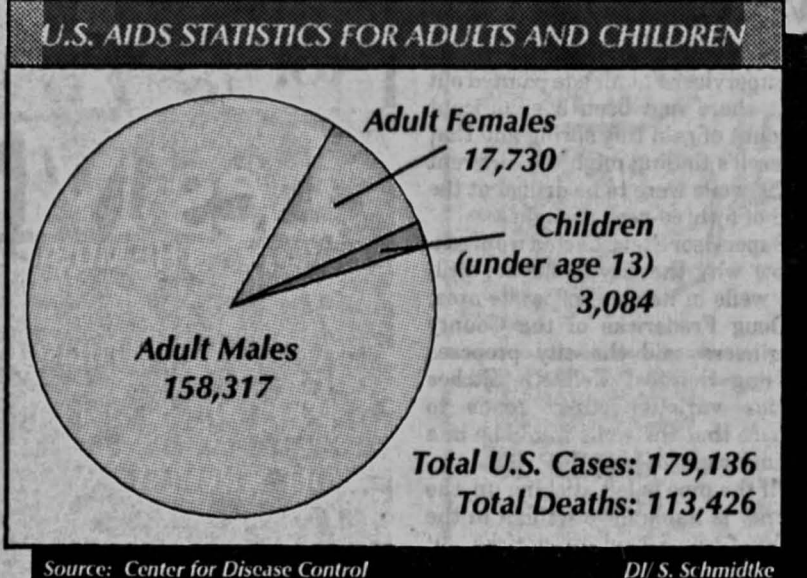

"I feel like I'm part of history. We're doing something the agency's never done before," said Richard Hooper, 49, a Seattle resident who has been a statistician for the International Atomic Energy Agency for 2½ years.

Under the cease-fire terms imposed on Iraq by the United Nations after the Persian Gulf war, the Vienna-based IAEA has been conducting surprise checks on the Iraqis with an aggressiveness unprecedented in its 35-year history as a global watchdog over nuclear development.

With just 200 full-time field inspectors operating worldwide, the agency normally makes only limited inspections of uranium stocks at a country's invitation. And it doesn't oversee destruction of facilities, as it is now assigned to do.

IC clinic works to clear up confusion on HIV infection

Heidi Pederson
Daily Iowan

A projected 1 million Americans are currently infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, according to the U.S. Center for Disease Control. The CDC predicts Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, of which the HIV infection is a precursor, may be the second leading cause of death in this country by 1993.

Much ignorance, confusion and fear has surrounded AIDS since the virus was discovered in 1984. The Iowa City Free Medical Clinic, 120 N. Dubuque St., is trying to improve this situation by educating the general public and offering support to people infected with the virus.

The clinic, located in the basement of Wesley House, has been offering anonymous HIV testing and counseling for four years. Clinic Director Susanne Watson said although awareness about AIDS has grown, the disease is still highly misunderstood.

"Across this nation and state there remains a denial that this virus is something that will affect everyone's lives," she said. "Grassroots efforts like the ones in Iowa City have helped, but it's time to expand on that."

Volunteer counselors at the clinic talk with every person who comes in for an HIV test, Watson said, because educating clients about the

'Gerbils' quilt sparks controversy

Dean of Students
Phillip Jones responds to the Campus Review's latest Union display.

Heather Chase
Daily Iowan

Controversy has again erupted in response to the most recent Campus Review display in the Union.

A "Save the Gerbils Memorial Quilt," sponsored by the Review, is currently on display in the cases near the Union Station dining area. The presentation includes a quilt with images of "deceased" gerbils and a report on "gerbiling" — an alleged sexual practice among some homosexual men.

A response to Kim Painter's June 24 Daily Iowan editorial titled "KGAN: Sex, Lies and TV News" is also included in the display. The response, written by Review contributor David Mastio, is titled "Censored by the DI."

Because of the controversy generated by the display, an open letter from Phillip Jones, dean of students, was placed in a nearby display case on July 15.

The letter, titled "Sensitivity Towards Others," states in part, "The university is a forum for the free exchange of ideas. While some views are repugnant and despicable to others in a university community, as well as to visitors to campus, the right to express those views is protected by the First Amendment to the Constitution."

According to Jones, the UI has had a number of complaints about the gerbil display, some made by visitors to campus. Freshman orientation is currently bringing many parents and new students to campus and into the Union.

"The (UI) has concerns about insensitive and degrading comments. The (UI) also has an obligation to allow all forms of expression. But the university does not have to condone degrading statements," Jones said, and added the open letter endorsed neither point of view on the issue.

The UI Department of Dance sponsored a display case in opposition to the gerbil display and included pictures of the famous AIDS quilt display in Washington, D.C., and a written rebuttal.

A section of the rebuttal states, "By creating the gerbil quilt, the people responsible are mocking everyone who has AIDS and who has died from AIDS."

The statement concludes by saying, "We, as members of both the university and Iowa City community, resent any perceived similarities between the 'victims' of an obscure sexual practice and the victims of a tragic disease."

The dance department refused to comment on the display.

Jeff Renander, editor of the Campus Review, said he was surprised by the controversy surrounding the display.

"I don't understand why people get so bent out of shape by a medical fact. It is common knowledge that gerbiling occurs among some (homosexual) men," Renander said. "I guess the bottom line for me is that all we did was repeat a fact. Gerbils die, too."

Renander said a lot of people liked the display case. "Maybe if nothing else, some gerbils will be saved by all this publicity."

The displays will remain in the Union until July 22.

Writer dedicated to helping Soviets

William Mueller puts his environmental and agricultural experience to good use in the Ukraine.

Natalie Glass
Daily Iowan

As if being a full-time freelance writer doesn't keep him busy enough, William Mueller also makes yearly trips to the Soviet Union as an activist.

It all started when a peacewalk came to Iowa in 1988. Mueller became involved, and when it left that fall for the Ukraine, he went with it.

"I was over there for about five weeks, and we had just intense contacts with individuals. We camped out; we stayed with people in their homes. It wasn't like traveling a couple of weeks in a bus. You're totally immersed in the culture. If I had just traveled to the Soviet Union, I doubt I would have been affected," he said.

Since then, Mueller has developed a deep interest in the Soviet people and the problems they face. He also has discovered he enjoys having an impact on people through more than just his writing. This has led him to make yearly trips to the Soviet Union to work on various projects.

"I'm not interested in just writing about the Soviet people; I'm interested in really helping them," he said.

In 1990, Mueller went with a group organized by the Center for U.S./U.S.S.R. Initiatives and the Earth Iowa Institute. They were to evaluate what had to be done to preserve Lake Baikal, a lake containing 1,600 species of plants and animals found nowhere else. Mueller, who helped evaluate pollution stemming from agriculture, said the lake faces pollution from agriculture, mines and factories.

While working on these projects, Mueller became close with Soviet people, even though he doesn't speak the language.

"They're a private people. In public they're very cautious; in private they're very warm," he said.

Mueller found that like most everything in the Soviet Union, working with its people was a learning experience.

"You don't just sit down and look eyeball to eyeball for a few minutes and make an agreement. They have to trust you. That means they have to take you home, they have to set you across the table and they have to drink with you."

"They have to see how you handle their children, and they have to see how you talk to their wives and how you talk to their husbands, and if you do OK with that then you gain their respect and confidence," he said.

"If you don't do that, they won't trust you," he added. "It's not just based on a mistrust built up during the Cold War. It's more ethnic; it's the way they are."

When he goes to the Soviet Union, Mueller doesn't neglect his freelance writing. Once he finished at Lake Baikal, he traveled around the nation covering such events as the summit meeting and a human rights conference.

While working on these assignments, Mueller keeps his eyes open and often turns a single project into several.

From his trip to Lake Baikal, Mueller decided to write a book of the lake as seen through the eyes of those living there.

"I want to show the lake through a number of local portraits of the people," he said.

Mueller, who specializes in agricultural writing, the environment, health and business, began writing freelance articles after graduating from college in 1972. He said he wasn't able to make much money at it until 1975.

Up until 1980, he held full-time jobs and continued to write. He said he worked as a high-school teacher, a security guard and a receptionist. He also taught journalism classes at the UI.

His writing career took off about six years ago, and he has since written for Harper's, Venture, The Saturday Evening Post and The Farm Journal.

Mueller, who grew up on a farm, began specializing in agricultural writing when he wrote an article for Harper's about farms.

Future projects in the Soviet Union include working with a group at Lake Baikal that is evaluating two parks nearby. The Soviets want to turn these into parks similar to Yosemite National Park.

Once finished, he will fly to Latvia to aid its farmers.

On a prior trip, Mueller noticed that farmers were trained for highly specific areas such as driving a tractor. He said they would need to learn the entire aspect of farming and needed more agribusinesses, such as veterinarian clinics and feed stores.

William Mueller

Mueller is also working with Kirkwood College in Cedar Rapids to bring some of its curriculum to Riga Technical University.

Outside of his writing and projects in the Soviet Union, Mueller teaches non-fiction writing classes during the summer at the UI Summer Writing Festival.

He said he enjoys teaching these classes because most of the students are going through changes as they experiment with writing. This is something he can relate to because he is undergoing change himself.

"With the Soviet Union, I got into a position of making an impact on people — that's what you dream about," he said.

"I think everyone ought to have an activist period. For me that's what this is. I'd never felt so good about my country before this."

Students flock to graduate schools

Associated Press

DES MOINES—Iowa universities and colleges are seeing sharp increases in applications for graduate programs.

Admissions officials are attributing the increase to a soured economy and poor job prospects.

"Graduate enrollment inversely follows the economy," said James Jakobsen, associate dean of graduate programs at the UI Graduate College.

"Students say, 'I'm having trouble finding a job. I may as well improve my credentials,'" he said.

Another reason is a significant drop in teaching assistant positions for graduate students caused by a nationwide decline in undergraduate enrollment. Jakobsen said that leads prospective graduate students who want a teaching assistant job to apply to more schools.

The university's Graduate College reports an 18 percent rise in applicants, with the number of applications increasing from 7,758 at this time last year to 9,197 this year, Jakobsen said.

The university's professional programs also are drawing more attention. Medical school applications climbed from 1,587 last year to 2,262 this year, dental school applications rose from 321 to 471 and law school applications jumped from 1,449 to 1,793, UI officials said.

The increases were more dramatic at the University of Northern Iowa. Registrar Philip Patton said graduate applications jumped by more than 24 percent, from 417 at this time last year to 519 applications this year.

At Iowa State University, graduate applications went from 4,980 last year to 5,268 this year, an increase of nearly 6 percent, said Bill Yungclas, associate director of admissions. He said those figures do not include the veterinary medicine program.

City wants OK to test for water sources

The Board of Supervisors must give permission for drilling in county right-of-ways.

Larry Offner
Daily Iowan

Iowa City is asking Johnson County for permission to begin drilling five test water wells in county rights-of-way within the next month.

Ralph Russell, a consulting civil engineer, told the Johnson County Board of Supervisors Tuesday that his company needs to drill the wells to examine two aquifers, or water-bearing geological formations, beneath Johnson County.

Russell said the two aquifers in question are made up of sand and gravel, and lie from 150 to 300 feet beneath the surface.

Russell is president of Howard R. Green Co., which has been hired by Iowa City to investigate potential sources for its water over the next 20 years.

Russell said his company wants to drill four test wells in the Alluvial Well Field Aquifer, underneath six to 10 square miles of Johnson County east of the new Iowa City waste water treatment plant.

Russell also wants to drill another well in a 2-by-10 mile band of the Buried Channel aquifer south of Hills, Iowa. This aquifer is about 200 to 300 feet beneath the surface and extends for miles.

Ed Brinton, Iowa City water supervisor, said all five wells would be sampling wells. Brinton said that monitoring the wells would determine the amount of water contained in the sand and gravel which makes up each aquifer.

Supervisor Pat Meade pointed out that there had been a significant amount of rain this spring and that Russell's finding might be different if the wells were to be drilled at the end of a three-year drought.

Supervisor Steve Lacina wanted to know why the city could not drill the wells in its own corporate area.

Doug Fredericks of the County Engineers said the city proposes drilling the test wells in ditches beside various county roads to ensure that the wells would be in a county right-of-way.

"If the pipe is left sticking up, the county is liable for anything in the right-of-way," said Fredericks. "If the well is capped flush and is somehow opened, the county would be liable for any contamination of the water supply."

The board asked for further reports at its informal meeting Tuesday.

New Iowa law affirms criminality of sexually abusive therapists

Experts express concerns over patients' exploitation

Marcey Bullerman

Special to The Daily Iowan

When a person enters therapy, they can be vulnerable into the office believing it is an environment of trust.

However, the unbalanced therapist-patient relationship has often led distraught clients to sexual compliance with their therapists. This sexual involvement often increases the patient's emotional distress.

A new Iowa law, Iowa chapter code 709.15, which went into effect July 1, recognizes that sexual involvement by therapists with their patients is a crime that can ultimately carry a felony charge.

"Abusive therapists are not policing themselves. Criminal sanctions are the only way," said Julie Gumbiner, the client services coordinator at Iowa City's Rape Victim Advocacy Program, 17 W. Prentiss St.

Gumbiner said that while sexual exploitation occurs in the Iowa City area, many members of the "responsible" therapeutic community keep themselves aware of abusive clinicians. Most therapists denounce acts such as having sex with patients as unethical.

However, in rural Iowa, said Gumbiner, information is often unavailable so patients may be unaware of acts of sexual exploitation by therapists. Furthermore, they may also have a low number of therapists to choose from and less access to resources provided by programs such as RVAP.

The professional therapists' associations condemn sexual involvement with clients. However, they have been unable to thoroughly sanction therapists because the only therapists regulated in Iowa are physicians, psychologists, nurses, social workers and substance abuse counselors. Some licensed therapists have their licenses penalized, but still continue their practice or re-establish in another state.

Karen Thielman, a clinical social worker at the Community Mental Health Center, 505 E. College St., said she thinks licensing guidelines should be stricter. However, she said that would be "legally difficult."

"We as social workers protect the word 'social worker' through drawn up legislation," However, Thielman said, "The word 'counselor' is not protected. ... Anyone can claim to be a counselor."

Thielman said although most unlicensed counselors are quite professional, they have no defined responsibilities to their practice if they sexually exploit their clients.

Gumbiner said that professionals engaging in sex with their patients can be "extremely damaging." She said when a person goes to a counselor, they are seeking help from someone outside their personal life. They enter therapy "looking for an environment of sacred trust which is a vital aspect of the therapeutic process. Sexual exploitation destroys that trust."

The therapeutic term for this complete trust is called transference. Transference is often compared to a child's feeling for a parent. When this power imbalance is taken advantage of, the results can be children victimized by parental incest or a patient's sexual exploitation by a therapist, according to a December 1990 article in The New York Times.

Thielman said a therapist's relationship to the patient "is not an equal relationship to start with and that is one reason (sex) is a violation."

Countertransference is the intense feelings, ranging from lust to anger, that the therapist has for the patient.

Dr. Gary Shoener, executive director of the Walk-in Counseling Center in Minneapolis, Minn., said in a March 3, 1991, Des Moines Register article that almost every therapist occasionally experiences countertransference. However, he said ethical counselors do not act on those feelings.

Thielman acknowledged that her profession has been slow to police itself. She said having a law that recognizes engaging in sexual relations with clients is a crime "makes it clear to everyone that the state of Iowa thinks it is wrong, and that is important." She said attitudes can be affected as people become aware of the matter and as people being abused realize it is criminal.

The organization that pushed the legislation into reality was the Iowa Task Force on Sexual Exploitation by Helping Professionals. The establishment of the task force was led by Carole Meade, former executive director of the Iowa Coalition Against Sexual Assault.

In 1988, a three-year survey conducted by Iowa CASA concluded that 174 cases of sexual exploitation were recorded at 50 percent of the responding mental health centers and sexual assault centers in Iowa.

Last year the task force lobbied a similar bill through the Iowa General Assembly but it died after members of the Senate Judiciary Committee raised concerns whether sexual involvement with a therapist was consensual.

This year, after the bill passed the House unanimously, the committee approved it with some compromises. When the bill finally reached the Senate floor, there was only one vote against it.

The law itself criminalizes the actions of therapists who sexually exploit patients and prescribes various levels of penalty within the law using such criteria as determining "a pattern or practice or scheme of conduct" to engage in sex with the patient and to establish that client's "emotional dependency." A client is still considered dependent one year after termination of therapy.

A therapist charged with sexually exploiting a patient can, depending on the severity, receive a maximum of five years in prison.

Beth Barnhill, executive director of Iowa CASA, said agencies are developing policies and procedures for dealing with sexual misconduct. In addition, Barnhill said Iowa CASA and the task force will be presenting regional trainings about sexual exploitation by therapists.

Barnhill added that if someone in the Iowa City area has been sexually exploited by a therapist, they should go to the RVAP for more information or assistance.

UNION DISPLAY

Costly "free speech"

In response to the "controversy" surrounding two opposing display cases in the Union, the UI administration has created a neighboring display of its own.

The display is a statement titled "Sensitivity Towards Others" and signed by Dean of Students Phillip Jones. The message is directed toward a display of a "Save the Gerbils Memorial Quilt" by the Campus Review and accompanying commentary on the alleged homosexual practice of gerbiling, and toward a counterdisplay with photos of the actual AIDS quilt and a rebuttal to the gerbil display.

Jones' letter explains that the university is a forum for the free exchange of ideas and points out that the right to express one's opinion is protected by the U.S. Constitution. Yet the letter goes on to call some views — presumably the ones expressed in the gerbil display — "repugnant and despicable to others in the university community, as well as to visitors to campus."

Will this become standard practice when opposing displays are created, with the administration announcing its opinion of the debated issue or view expressed in a neighboring display? It seems the university is saying that while it is forced to allow such a forum because of the First Amendment, it can and will post what it considers the "correct" point of view.

But a permanent disclaimer near each display states the views expressed do not reflect the position of the university; this should sufficiently absolve the UI from any direct responsibility for what appears.

While Jones' letter does not affect the actual content of the display, it does not allow the free discourse a public forum is intended to provide. Such action in the name of free speech is hypocritical, even when the speech is as offensive as what appears in the gerbil display.

G7 SUMMIT

No handouts yet

Once again, leaders from the world's seven richest countries have opened their annual economic summit. And once again, the faltering Soviet economy is dominating the agenda of the meeting.

In what has become another annual economic event, Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev is again making his plea for Western aid to help prop up his country's crippled economy. Gorbachev is warning of impending disaster if he does not receive increased financial support. The United States and its rich allies must decide today whether to play doctor to the Soviet economy with a massive injection of Western aid.

To the Soviets it seems simple: more money, fewer woes. Such Western "donations," however, have not been the cure. Converting to a market economy seems as distant today as it was during the Brezhnev era. A monstrous bureaucracy and an astronomical military budget continue to devour the Soviet budget. The queues seem to be the only area of growth in the Soviet economy.

The Group of Seven needs a new approach when doling out money to the Soviets — a "carrot and stick" approach. First, G7 members must see substantive changes in the Soviet economy before additional money is allocated. Second, a multinational G7 committee should be formed to oversee proper spending of foreign aid. Third, the Soviet Union must pledge to its donors drastic military cuts and eliminate $5 billion in annual aid to Cuba.

Certainly, a new approach is not a panacea (the Soviets must eventually learn to help themselves). It will, however, provide some relief to G7 members to know that while their money is not always well spent, it is at least not being squandered.

Rape statistics often distorted for political agendas

The typical newspaper story on rape reports that between one out of four and one out of three women can expect to be raped during their lifetime. That's a lot of rapes. But now UC-Berkeley social welfare professor, Neil Gilbert, comes along and reports in a recent issue of Public Interest that, in fact, "one in every thousand women is victimized" by rape. That's a lot less rape.

Who's right?

Perhaps a better question is who's less wrong — and even then both sides make a horse race of it. Both sides succumb to the itch to report the headline-grabbing Really Provocative Number. They do this because they know that journalists are suckers for big numbers. Big numbers, after all, mean big stories — and journalists love to report big stories. Consequently, journalists have little incentive to push their sources on where they get their oftentimes ridiculously large or small numbers.

Since Gilbert claims to be blowing the whistle on the distorted numbers of the anti-rape brigade, we'll start with him. Gilbert writes that one in a 1,000 women is raped, and "there is a staggering difference between a problem in which one of every thousand women is victimized and an 'epidemic' of sexual assault that harms one of every two before they reach their mid-twenties."

But Gilbert skirts with being disingenuous here. That sentence was written for the newspaper leads. It's not until the next paragraph that Gilbert tells his readers that "part of the variance among these findings can be attributed to the distinctions between incidence rates (the number of cases per year) and prevalence rates (the proportion of women who, at some point in their lives, will be victimized)..."

I fear that in our numerically illiterate society that this admission is still too obscure for most to understand. Gilbert's sentence reporting the "staggering difference" between the numbers was really comparing apples and oranges. That is, he was comparing the risk of a woman being raped in one year (one in 1,000) with the risk of a woman being raped in her lifetime. (Here he chooses the highest claim he could find for the comparison — that one of two women will be raped. Most advocates of the idea of a rape epidemic use the somewhat lower proportions of one in three or four.)

To be sure, that one in 1,000 women will be raped in the next year still sounds like a really, really low number compared to the number of one in three during their lifetime.

Although it is a fairly easy matter to turn Gilbert's incidence number into a prevalence number, Gilbert never does it himself! In fact, later in the same article Gilbert makes the same comparison between apples and oranges, but even more stripped of its explanatory context: "The difference between a sexual-assault rate of 25 or 50 percent and one of 0.1 percent is more than a matter of degree."

And so it is. But since the work of transforming Gilbert's numbers is so easy, let's do the work that he neglected (or refused) to do. (And who said that Stats 153 was irrelevant?) It's a little bit easier to figure out the probability of a woman being raped during her lifetime based on Gilbert's number by first figuring out the probability of a woman not getting raped during her lifetime.

OK, since there is a 0.001 probability of a woman getting raped in the next year, that means that there is a 0.999 probability of not getting raped in the next year. The average American woman lives about 75 years. So the probability of a woman not getting raped at all is 0.999 raised to the 75th power, or 0.9277. Thus, the probability of a woman getting raped during her lifetime given Gilbert's number is 1 minus 0.9277, or about 0.072. That is, 7.2 percent of American women, or about one in 14 at the current rate, can expect to be raped during their lifetime.

Now that puts quite a different spin on Gilbert's story. After all, there is a big difference between one in 1,000 and one in 14 — a difference not least of which is their ability to command media attention. But that number is the translation that Gilbert didn't make in an article devoted to distorted rape statistics.

Now let's turn our attention to the proponents of the view that there exists a "rape epidemic." Even though there is not the huge difference between one in 1,000 and one in three as there is between one in 14 and one in three, the difference is still one of a factor of five. That is, even with the translation being made, Gilbert reports a level of rape almost five times lower than advocates of the idea of a rape epidemic.

At this point there is little question that Gilbert's base numbers are the most credible on which to compute prevalence statistics. (There is a difference between the accuracy of tember to the advisory council of the National Endowment for the Humanities. For months now she has been the subject of intense attack by the politically correct literary establishment (the Modern Language Association, PEN, American Council of Learned Societies, etc.). Here again, those trying to block her nomination don't say they object because she is politically conservative and writes articles with which they disagree in places like Commentary. They say she is unqualified.

The basis of her unqualification? The charge that she does not have the requisite academic credentials is phony. She holds a Ph.D. in literature and has taught it for 20 years. She is a full-time faculty member at New York University. Her real offense is having written that several books authored by blacks have been honored with awards not on merit but as a form of literary reparations.

You don't get put into the gulag.

The issue at stake in the Iannone nomination is whether it will be impermissible in this country to say such a thing. Rejection would mean that the public discussion of racial bias will be regulated by the liberal establishment. The public discussion of discrimination in favor of minorities is highly dangerous: It may be deemed such an act of defiance as to render the discussant unfit for public office.

Now, however, yet another fight in the PC wars is looming and if the Bork nomination was Fort Sumter this one looks to be Gettysburg. The nomination of Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court may turn out to be a decisive battle over whether certain conservative views will continue to be delegitimized. The Thomas nomination will be a test of whether a black who is conservative can be part of the American mainstream.

Thomas opposes racial preferences for groups. (Though as Juan Williams pointed out in an insightful 1987 profile in The Atlantic, he strongly favors remedial action for individual cases of discrimination.) He is therefore said to be against civil rights. But it is a travesty to call someone like Thomas who believes in colorblindness (which is what Hubert Humphrey, Martin Luther King and most Americans believe in) an opponent of civil rights.

The other line of attack on Thomas will be abortion. Thomas has been less outspoken on the issue, but the suspicion is that he would overturn Roe vs. Wade. The country is deeply divided on abortion and even some supporters of legalization (like me) think Roe was gross judicial usurpation. Yet Thomas' adversaries will try to paint his views on abortion as out of the mainstream.

Roe has far more popular support in the country than racial preferences. That is why Thomas' opponents would prefer to wage their campaign by focusing on abortion and other "privacy rights." They would prefer to duck a fight on racial preferences because it could turn politically disastrous for Democrats. They are terrified of the "quota party" label.

Yet, in the end it will be so important to liberals to bring down Thomas that I suspect we will see even this kind of Pickett's charge in favor of racial preferences. Thomas is a living threat. His confirmation would repeal the current official recognition of the civil rights establishment as the sole legitimate representative of black people in America. It would symbolically affirm that black conservatism is a respected and respectable current of the American mainstream. Most important, it would mean that, black or white, rich or poor, even the politically incorrect can aspire to serve on the highest court in the land.

PC stifles intellectual dissent

In retrospect, it is clear that the Bork Supreme Court nomination was the opening battle of the modern PC ("political correctness") wars. Remember: The charge against Bork by those who eventually voted him down was never "I don't agree with his political views." That, of course, was the essence of the opposition to Bork, but even his opponents maintained publicly that it is improper grounds on which to disqualify a Supreme Court nominee. (Whether or not it ought to be is another question.)

Instead, the charge against Bork was that he was not qualified to sit on the highest court. Not that he was intellectually unqualified — on that basis, he was then and remains now probably the most highly qualified jurist in the country — but "temperamentally" unfit. A new charge was minted which became the basis for his rejection by the Senate: He was "out of the mainstream," a political extremist unfit to hold high office.

The attack on Bork was the first live-fire exercise of that essential, now familiar PC weapon: stigmatizing as illegitimate those views (particularly views on race, gender and sexuality) that do not conform to current liberal orthodoxy. Dissenters are not just considered conservative, but out of the mainstream. Forty years ago, the word was un-American.

On a world scale, the tyranny to which such dissenters are subjected is fairly mild. You don't get put into the gulag. No one prevents you from going on the lecture circuit. You are a welcome guest on the chat shows. But you may not hold high office.

Even not so high office. Critic Carol Iannone was nominated last Sep-

Serb leader wants war

Upon reading Professor Kovacevic's column printed on the DI's Viewpoints Page ["Serbs want peace, not control," July 12], I was compelled to clarify some points that he glosses over in his understandable defense of Serbia and the remains of Yugoslavia.

Kovacevic's insightful article did dispel inaccurate illusions of a tyrannical Serbia enslaving Yugoslavia's other republics. It did not, however, even mention the extremely dangerous political course that Serbia has taken recently.

The blame for all the death and destruction can be placed squarely upon the shoulders of two Serbian leaders, Serbia's President Slobodan Milosevic and his confidant, Gen. Blagoje Adzic. Were it not for the moderating influences of defense minister Veljko Kadijevic and the hasty appointment of Croatian Stipe Mesic to his rightful turn as chairman of the collective presidency, Yugoslavia would now be in an all out civil war.

Milosevic and his cadre of Serbian generals remain a menace to the civilized world and have just begun to tap their diabolical bag of tricks. Their first tactic is identical to Saddam Hussein's less successful attempt to polarize the Gulf war into an Arab-Israeli conflict. Milosevic, however, has the world, his Serbian constituency and Croatian adversaries convinced that the Yugoslav crisis is in fact a Serbian-Croatian conflict. Originally, this couldn't have been further from the truth.

Today a rigorous propaganda campaign both within Serbia's borders and, more notably, the Serbian populated territories within Croatia has instilled panic amongst the Serbs by perpetuating the myth that the Croats are preparing to return to genocidal measures taken during WWII. [The same genocidal measures were used by all three warring parties during this period: the Cetniks (Serbian royalists), Partisans (communists) and the Croatian Ustashe (fascists), but that is another story.] Moreover, Milosevic's careful placement of armed Serbian terrorists within sensitive areas of Croatia, where mixed Serbian and Croatian peoples once lived harmoniously, has successfully polarized these regions.

One may wonder what motivates Milosevic's call to arms. Yugoslavia's, and Serbia's, economy is in such desperate shape that the only way to placate the disillusioned people is with nationalistic euphoria and military conquest.

Some of this nationalistic fervor can be found throughout Yugoslavia's republics, but Serbia is particularly vulnerable. Its disgruntled working class, facing high unemployment, needs a strong dose of nationalistic self-esteem. Yet the decisive factor in Serbia is that it was once the bureaucratic seat of the once powerful and moderately wealthy Yugoslavia. This disproportionately high percentage of federal bureaucrats, most notably, the army generals, is facing unemployment upon Yugoslavia's dissolution. When General Adzic boldly calls for swift and decisive military action against Croatia and Slovenia, he isn't fighting for Serbia or Yugoslavia. He is fighting for his villas, for his pension. In short, he is fighting for his life. Croatia's and Slovenia's secession — with 30 percent of the population — will result in a 65 percent loss to Yugoslavia's GNP.

Croatia and Slovenia, on the other hand, have everything to gain from their secession. After years of pouring hard earned income into an irresponsible federal bureaucracy, they would be more than happy to retain their own productivity. The last straw that broke the economic camel's back was Milosevic's printing of $3 billion to cover Serbia's governmental salaries, which was drawn against the accounts of the remaining Yugoslav republics.

Serbia's present leadership currently seems to be manipulating Saddam Hussein's stance last fall, knowing the situation lost and preparing to take a lot of innocent people down with it. It is critical that the remaining veneer of Yugoslavia's federal government — with strong support from Europe and the United Nations — keep these thugs from achieving their reckless objectives. The people within Yugoslavia must identify and disarm their true enemies before they repeat history and recklessly annihilate one another.

Still, members of the 28-person team now in Baghdad say they don't reflect much on the public suddenly surrounding them as most unlikely front-line troops in the allied campaign to neutralize Saddam Hussein.

There's not much time to reflect. A typical day for the nuclear team begins at the Palestine Hotel 5:30 a.m.

It ends 14 or 15 hours later when they return, grimy with dirt, sweat and desert dust, lugging metal suitcases full of radioactive detection equipment.

tary discipline and the basis for a market economy," the draft communiqué states.

A Bush administration spokeswoman on the condition of anonymity, said the communiqué scheduled to be released at Wednesday's conclusion of the annual summit but before leaders meet with Gorbachev would not include details on exact aid that would be offered.

In a political communiqué earlier Tuesday, the leaders of the United States, Britain, Japan, Germany, France, Italy and Canada urged their support for political and economic reforms undertaken by Gorbachev as a "strong ever."

"The scale of this undertaking is enormous: an open and democratic Soviet Union able to play its part in building stability and trust in the world," the joint statement said. It also credited Gorbachev with "new thinking" in foreign policy.

In private sessions, the summit leaders thrashed over what Western assistance to Moscow should take.

"There's no chance that he leaves here empty-handed," Bush said. "There are any number of things the countries here will agree should be done."

Dietrich, chief spokesman for German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government, said deputies from seven countries planned to convene through the night to reach agreement on G7 financing for Soviet projects in the energy transportation sectors.

The draft communiqué set a deadline of the end of the year for a successful conclusion of global trade talks, saying "no theme wider implications on the future prospects of the world economy than the positive conclusion of Uruguay Round."

However, last year's summit in Houston also set a deadline of December 1990, for conclusion of the trade talks.

"Part of my job is to help them assess whether or not they really need to be tested," Kashia said.

People at highest risk for contracting the virus, according to Watson, are those who are unaware of their partner's sexual history, needle-sharing drug and steroid users, and those who have had a blood transfusion, although transfusions are not as risky as they once were. Many of her clients want to be tested because they have participated in some form of unprotected sex, she said.

She stressed that AIDS does not discriminate, although some people still believe the myth that AIDS affects only homosexuals.

"Nobody has a corner on the market in terms of risky behavior," she said. "Gay men are still more affected than other groups, but the face of HIV is changing, both state and nationwide."

Kashia said her clients run the gamut.

"I've seen people from all socioeconomic classes, all educational levels and all sexual orientations," she said.

Watson said many people who come in for testing are what she calls the "worried well" — people at very low risk for contracting HIV, but who are still concerned. The clinic looks at this as a chance to educate people.

"We don't tell anyone they don't need the test. This is an opportunity to get at what a person's concerns are one-on-one," she said. "Once that client is educated and leaves, he can dispel the myths of his friends, etc. That in the long run will help."

Once a client's risk has been assessed, the counselor explains the actual HIV test.

"It is not a test for AIDS," Watson stressed. "Rather, it's to find out whether the (HIV) virus is in their bloodstream. If it is, they can infect others with the virus. A positive (HIV) test result does not mean that person has AIDS."

The test detects HIV antibodies, which take from three to six months to develop in the bloodstream after infection, she said. After HIV antibodies appear, symptoms of AIDS take an average of 10 years to develop. During that time, a person can infect others if precautions aren't taken.

Clinic counselors address this problem by discussing what risky behaviors should be changed.

"My objective isn't to frighten people. It's to get them to take this seriously," said Kashia, who has seen clients from ages 16 to 60. "I tell them unprotected sex is like playing Russian roulette. That's a pretty graphic description for it, and they generally get it when I say I don't want them to do something anymore."

While abstinence is the only sure way of preventing infection, Watson said precautions can make sex safer. In these discussions, all sexual orientations are addressed.

"We try to be as culturally sensitive as we can," she said. "If we weren't, that could be a tragic mistake."

Precautions include using latex condoms and a water-based lubricant such as K-Y jelly, Watson said. She also recommends rubber dams, known as dental dams, for oral and anal sex. While using such barriers may seem unromantic or undesirable, she said they are necessary.

"No, these methods aren't real aesthetically pleasing, but they are effective," she said. "It's life and death we're talking about here."

Results of the HIV test are known in seven to 10 days, and patients must come to the clinic in person for them, Watson said. The counselor talks with the client to assess his reaction to the results, as well as answering any more questions the counselor thinks the client may still have. But counselors understand their clients may not absorb all they are being told.

"When a person comes back for his results, they're only listening for a negative or positive," Kashia said. "Beyond that, they don't really hear anything."

The clinic offers counseling to those who test positive.

"We don't just say, 'You're positive. Goodbye,'" she said. "We give as much assistance as possible and try to help them with a strategy for staying well."

If a person is in good health, the likelihood of fending off the AIDS virus for a longer time is much stronger, Watson said. The period before the onset of AIDS symptoms, which may take up to 10 years, has probably made AIDS seem like less of a threat to people right now.

met for more than three hours with senior advisers, including Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh and Yevgeny Primakov, to discuss possible last-minute changes in his appeal.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Vitaly Churkin said "I expect no major revision" from the Gorbachev letter, but added "it's a working document."

"With Gorbachev, I always expect surprises," said one member of his inner circle, speaking on condition that he not be identified further.

Gorbachev has long sought a meeting with the world's wealthy democracies, sending a letter to the Paris summit in 1989 and dominating from a distance the discussion at Houston in 1990.

This year, he won an invitation, albeit at the conclusion of the official summit. And Gorbachev has put on an impressive effort to cast this meeting in do-or-die terms for his reforms.

In the Soviet Union, he said in the letter to the summit leaders, "there is a critical shortage of food, children items and medicine."

IRAQ

trekking through scorching desert wilderness and once-secret army bases has confirmed U.N. suspicions that Iraq had developed an elaborate clandestine program to manufacture weapons-grade uranium.

Still, members of the 28-person team now in Baghdad say they don't reflect much on the publicity suddenly surrounding them as the most unlikely front-line troops in the allied campaign to neutralize Saddam Hussein.

There's not much time to reflect. A typical day for the nuclear team begins at the Palestine Hotel at 5:30 a.m.

It ends 14 or 15 hours later when they return, grimy with dried sweat and desert dust, lugging metal suitcases full of radioactivity detection equipment.

First stop, the showers — then to the bar for beers.

"It's bloody hard, I can tell you," said the team leader, Dimitri Pericos, a Greek nuclear chemist with a perpetual grin and a talent for talking at length with reporters — and divulging little.

Another inspector, British physicist Leslie Thorne, described the day as "hell."

tary discipline and the basis for a market economy," the draft communiqué states.

A Bush administration source, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the communiqué, scheduled to be released at Wednesday's conclusion of the 17th annual summit but before the leaders meet with Gorbachev, would not include details on the exact aid that would be offered.

In a political communiqué earlier Tuesday, the leaders of the United States, Britain, Japan, Germany, France, Italy and Canada said their support for political and economic reforms undertaken by Gorbachev was as "strong as ever."

"The scale of this undertaking is enormous: an open and democratic Soviet Union able to play its full part in building stability and trust in the world," the joint statement said. It also credited Gorbachev with "new thinking" in foreign policy.

In private sessions, the summit leaders thrashed over what form Western assistance to Moscow should take.

"There's no chance that he will leave here empty-handed," Baker said. "There are any number of things the countries here will agree should be done."

Dietrich, chief spokesman for German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government, said deputies from the seven countries planned to work through the night to reach agreement on G7 financing for specific Soviet projects in the energy and transportation sectors.

The draft communiqué set a deadline of the end of the year for a successful conclusion of global free trade talks, saying "no theme has wider implications on the future prospects of the world economy than the positive conclusion of the Uruguay Round."

However, last year's summit in Houston also set a deadline, December 1990, for conclusion of the trade talks.

Mike Henneman (7-2) pitched the ninth for his second victory in two nights and increased his record to 32-6 in Tiger Stadium.

Mariners 5, Yankees 0

SEATTLE — Brian Holman pitched a six-hitter and stretched his scoreless streak to 17 innings as the Seattle Mariners beat the New York Yankees 5-0 Tuesday.

Holman (9-9) recorded his third shutout and fifth complete game of the season. After giving up consecutive singles to Don Mattingly and Mel Hall with two outs in the ninth, Holman preserved the shutout by getting Matt Nokes on a popout to shortstop.

Holman struck out three and walked three as the Mariners improved their record against the Yankees this season to 7-2. He pitched seven shutout innings in a 6-0 win over Cleveland last Thursday.

After Henry Cotto singled and Ken Griffey Jr. walked in the first inning, Alvin Davis singled them home to give the Mariners a 2-0 lead against Scott Sanderson (10-4).

third when Randy Ready singled and Chamberlain hit his second home run of the season, a two-out blow over the left field fence.

The Dodgers made it 2-1 in the fourth on Gary Carter's double, but the Phils got the run back in the fifth on Chamberlain's RBI single.

Padres 4, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Tony Fernandez doubled home three runs to high-light a four-run Padres seventh.

The loss was Montreal's first in six starts since the All-Star break. Expos starter Mark Gardner carried a three-run lead into the seventh inning, but saw that disintegrate after centerfielder Marquis Grissom misplayed a single by Tim Lincecum, allowing Benito Santiago to score from first. One out later, Gardner walked pinch-hitter Phil Stevenson.

Mel Rojas (0-1) came on and walked Bip Roberts to load the bases, before Fernandez grounded a double just inside the bag at first.

Bruce Hurst (10-5) started for the Padres and Lary Andersen pitched the last two innings for his fourth save.

HOGAN TOUR: Lehman comeback

club is an entirely different thing, it's not easy. You take a year and work there, you realize there's a lot to it.

"For a guy who plays a lot, who's played the (PGA) Tour, it's hard to adjust to being that responsible; having to be there at six in the morning and things like that. I respect guys that do that."

Lehman's experience as a club pro taught him one important thing: "I decided I really wanted to be a professional golfer, a tournament player."

Lehman went back to Tour school but found himself missing the Tour card cut "by one or two shots, or whatever." So he went overseas, to South Africa and Asia to keep getting tour experience. But globetrotting started to lose its appeal for Lehman.

"When you're young that's no problem — 24, 25, 26 — but now I'm 32 and that kind of thing is ...

You've got to draw the line somewhere, whether it's worth the sacrifice."

Upon returning to the U.S., Lehman decided to draw that line. He would either get back on the PGA Tour or find work elsewhere. For Lehman, the Hogan Tour couldn't have come at a better time. He could play organized golf and work his way back to the PGA Tour.

"I had to decide either to play the Tour or get a job. And then the Hogan Tour came along and I finally had the opportunity to prove myself over 30 tournaments.

"The Hogan Tour gave me the opportunity to get on an organized, professionally-run tour and the opportunity to gain my Tour card through a year-long series of tournaments, which I've always thought was the most fair thing: you play 30 tournaments and let the best guys get their Tour cards."

TOUR DE FRANCE: LeMond extends lead

seconds over Djamboldine Abdoujaparov of the Soviet Union.

Dr. Gerard Porte, the chief medical officer for the Tour de France organization, said the four PDM riders still showed effects of the illness.

"They are tired and their heart-beat is accelerating," Porte said. "They have a fever."

Gisbers said the PDM team will try and recover in time for the World Cycling Championships at Stuttgart in August. They may do some racing next week in Belgium and Spain.

France's Charly Mottet captured Tuesday's stage in a quick ride that finished an hour ahead of schedule.

Abdoujaparov managed to shave 18 seconds off LeMond's lead by placing well in special sprints during the stage.

Breukink's withdrawal helped Spain's Miguel Indurain move into third, 2:17 behind LeMond.

The cyclists have their only day off Wednesday, traveling by plane to Pau before two stages in the Pyrenees. The mountain stretches are one of LeMond's strongest points.

In 1986, LeMond made up four minutes in the Pyrenees on leader Bernard Hinault of France. Last year, the American chopped nine minutes off the margin of Italian Claudio Chiappucci in the mountain stages.

Both times he won the Tour.

The first Pyrenees stage is 122 miles of hard climbing from Pau to Jaca, Spain.

LeMond said he'll keep an eye over his shoulder on the Bannesto team because of its two good climbers, Indurain and 1988 winner Pedro Delgado.

"I'm not going to attack, although I'm sure that Bannesto will attack," LeMond said. "In that case, I feel strong enough to follow."

DiMAGGIO'S STREAK

Keltner remembers robbing DiMaggio

Rick Gano

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Ken Keltner never tires of talking about that summer night 50 years ago in Cleveland when he helped end the streak by which all others are measured.

Even more than his seven All-Star game appearances and one World Series championship, the former Cleveland Indians third baseman will be remembered most for the two back-handed defensive plays July 17, 1941, that helped end Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak.

"When we started that game and the streak is on, I'm just hoping and praying I get the ball hit to me so I can make the plays," recalled Keltner, now 74 and in retirement in his native Milwaukee.

"That's all. And it just happened that way. Somebody had to make the plays. I'm glad he hit them at me. If I don't make those plays they are base hits."

And if DiMaggio got a hit, his streak would have continued. After going 0-for-3 against Cleveland that night, DiMaggio started a new streak of 16 games.

"He was the greatest player I ever saw in my life," Keltner said. "I didn't play against everybody, a lot of them were before I came and after I left. But I played 13 years and he was the greatest. That's all I got to say."

But with a crowd of 67,468 at Municipal Stadium, DiMaggio's luck ran out.

Keltner made his plays in the first and seventh innings, DiMaggio grounded into a bad-hop double play in the eighth and also walked.

"The plays were almost identical," Keltner said. "The first time he was up I played him deep because he never bunted. I played him close to the line because if he hits one down the line, it's a double."

"I made two back-handed plays and when I wound up I was in foul territory after back-handing these two balls. The first one I had to straighten up in foul territory and throw him out by an eyelash. The second one the same thing, backhand down the line and I threw him out by an eyelash."

DiMaggio hit another hard shot in the eighth that shortstop Lou Boudreau somehow turned into a double play.

"It took a bad hop before he caught it. He caught it on his right ear," Keltner recalled. "He turned it to second to first for a double play."

"It just wasn't Joe's night. He hit the ball hard enough all the time to get base hits but they just weren't there."

Keltner's backhanded stabs earned him more than baseball immortality, it earned a police escort from the lockerroom to his car after the game.

"My wife and I walked out of the stadium in Cleveland and I got a policeman in front of me, a policeman behind me and one on each side of me all the way to the parking lot," he said.

Ken Keltner at County Stadium July 2. It was 50 years ago today that Keltner, then with the Cleveland Indians' third baseman, robbed Joe DiMaggio twice to kill the Yankee Clipper's hitting streak at 56 games.

"They just made sure there wasn't going to be anybody getting hurt. Joe had a lot of friends in Cleveland. You never know what's going to happen."

Even though Al Smith and Jim Bagby, the Indians pitchers that night, were also responsible for halting the streak, Keltner has gotten most of the credit.

And the legend has grown as so many in baseball do.

"At the time it happened I didn't believe it would be this way. At the time it happened it just wasn't that spectacular. I was just out there playing another ball game, trying to do the best I can. It just happened to be that way after it was over," he said.

"The newspapers got a hold of it. DiMaggio called me the culprit and they wrote about it after that."

After so many years, DiMaggio and Keltner are still tied to that one night in Cleveland. If there is one person Keltner hopes to see on July 17, it's DiMaggio.

"I've seen him a couple of times this year and he's one of my dearest friends. He and I are buddies," Keltner said. "If he's close I try to get to him."

What do they talk about?

"Baseball. Plays. Streaks," Keltner said. "Joe never talked too much about anything. He was not that kind of guy. He just played for keeps and that's the way it was. That's my kind of guy."

Sutcliffe gets rocked, socked in Des Moines

Associated Press

DES MOINES — Rick Sutcliffe is finding the comeback trail rough but encouraging.

Sutcliffe, trying to regain the strength in his right shoulder so he can return to the Chicago Cubs, was the losing pitcher in a Class AAA game Monday night.

Pitching for the Iowa Cubs of the American Association, Sutcliffe gave up six runs and seven hits in five innings in a 10-2 loss to Buffalo.

Sutcliffe walked three, struck out two and threw two wild pitches, both resulting in runs, in his second minor league stint in less than a week.

"I feel 100 percent better than I did last year," said Sutcliffe, who had surgery on his right shoulder in May 1990. "The numbers might not look any better, but physically I'm at a point where I can work things out."

While on a rehabilitation assignment with the Iowa Cubs last year, Sutcliffe allowed six runs and nine hits in 5 2-3 innings against Oklahoma City. He pitched for Peoria in a Class A game last Wednesday, giving up six runs and two walks and striking out six in nine innings.

The Chicago Cubs sent Sutcliffe to the minors for further rehabilitation after he went 2-4 with a 6.75 earned run average in nine games this season.

On Monday night, Sutcliffe threw 89 pitches, including 51 strikes. He threw 120 pitches for Peoria.

"His numbers may not have shown it, but his arm strength is coming back," Iowa catcher Russ McGinnis said. "One of the wild pitches was a fastball in the dirt and the other was a slider that was really breaking."

"But he has added speed to his fastball from when I caught him in spring training. That's got to be encouraging to him."

Sutcliffe, who helped the Cubs win division titles in 1984 and '89, will pitch again for Iowa on Saturday in Buffalo.

"He's here on rehab, so you've got to go with him a little longer than you normally would have," Iowa pitching coach Grant Jackson said. "He made some good pitches, but he got some up, too. But I'll work with him. He'll be all right."

Sutcliffe said he hopes to return to Chicago soon, although there is no timetable for his recall.

"There's a possibility that if I throw the ball well in Buffalo next Saturday that I can go up and maybe pitch against Atlanta (next week)," he said.

Rick Sutcliffe stretches before getting rocked in Des Moines Monday night.

NFL ROUNDUP

Cowboys get 'perfect' weather

Hostetler signing heats up Giants' quarterback controversy

Associated Press

It was Jimmy Johnson's 48th birthday and it was 100 degrees. Perfect.

"It was a great first workout," Johnson said Tuesday at the Dallas Cowboys' training camp at St. Edward's University in Austin, Texas. "It was hot, and there was a lot of lollygagging around. Everybody worked."

Tuesday was the Cowboys' first workout in full pads as NFL training camps continued to get cranked up around the country.

Few players knew it was Johnson's birthday. Offensive tackle Nate Newton shouted at Johnson: "Happy birthday, coach. That's all I can give you."

Johnson admitted the opening of practice was the biggest birthday gift of all.

"This is the best time of year for me," Johnson said. "I'll celebrate tonight by going to staff meetings. That will be my party."

Phil Simms of the Super Bowl champion New York Giants took most of the snaps Tuesday morning at training camp on Fairleigh Dickinson's Madison, N.J., campus, but he knew it wouldn't be long before things changed.

His backup quarterback, Jeff Hostetler, who led the Giants to the 1991 Super Bowl title after Simms was injured, signed an agreement with the club Monday night and began his drive to camp from West Virginia.

"I don't feel the pressure," Simms said. "It's hard to go out there and turn it up any more than in the past. It's really pretty simple. The situation is different, but as far as I'm concerned, there is nothing I can do any better."

In Cincinnati, Bengals coaches got an early look at some of their players in a session coach Sam Wyche said was only for players who want to excel.

"I've told all the players it's strictly voluntary," Wyche said. "It's only for the guys who want to win."

The two-day session at the team's Spinney Field training complex is a warmup for the regular training camp that opens Thursday night at Wilmington College in Wilmington, Ohio. The first full workouts are Friday.

In Fredonia, N.Y., where last season's Super Bowl losers train, Buffalo Bills lineman Leonard Burton awaited test results on the left knee he injured on the opening day of camp. In any case, Burton said the injury didn't feel as bad as the injured right knee that caused him to miss last season.

"I'm a lot better than I was last year," Burton said. "I'm not hobbling."

IOWA CITY — Iowa's Hayden Fry may have additional duties this fall besides coaching the Hawkeyes' football team, like appearing on a television sit-com.

Fry might be invited to appear on the show, "Coach," actor Craig T. Nelson said Tuesday. Nelson stars in the show as Hayden Fox, coach of the Minnesota State Screaming Eagles.

Nelson, a two handicap, is in town for this week's Hogan Tour golf tournament at the University of Iowa. Getting Fry to make an appearance on "Coach" is a goal of the writers, Nelson said. Nelson added that he and Fry have become good friends since Nelson was invited to the Hawkeyes' preparations last year when the team was preparing for the Rose Bowl.

"We won't give them lines. You know coaches can't read and write," Nelson joked.

Bo takes batting practice

CHICAGO — Bo Jackson took batting practice for the first time this season on Tuesday, and Chicago White Sox manager Jeff Torborg said the outfielder possibly could resume his baseball career next month.

Jackson faced about 75 underhanded pitches from teammate Frank Thomas in a batting cage beneath Comiskey Park. Jackson then went on the field and threw for about 10 minutes with pitcher Melido Perez.

Jackson will be examined Saturday by Dr. James Andrews, his personal doctor, and by Dr. James Boscardin, Chicago's senior team physician.

White Sox trainer Herm Schneider said that "if Bo continues to make progress, live batting practice could be in the near future for him."

Alzado undergoes tests

LOS ANGELES — Lyle Alzado, former All-Pro defensive end who has been battling inoperable brain cancer, underwent tests Tuesday after being hospitalized for possible dehydration, his agent said.

Alzado, a 14-year NFL player with Denver, Cleveland and the Los Angeles Raiders, was admitted to an undisclosed hospital Sunday after two days in which he could not hold down food or liquids, said agent Greg Campbell.

"So far the doctors think he had become dehydrated," Campbell said. "But a number of tests are still being taken."

Walker will vie for bobsled spot

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. — Minnesota Viking Herschel Walker, who secured a spot on the U.S. bobsled team last week, will have to win a special head-to-head push-off against a teammate in order to make the 1992 Olympic team, bobsled officials said Tuesday.

Walker has indicated that he will apply for a competition waiver this fall because he is committed to play with the Vikings. He will miss team training sessions in Lake Placid Sept. 15-21 and in Calgary Oct. 7-15 and the World Cup competitions that begins in late October in Calgary.

Hickey said he expects to grant Walker's waiver request, which, barring other injuries, would set up a special competition between the Vikings running back and alternate Thomas Allen.

As field thins, LeMond benefits

ST. HERBLAIN, France — Their numbers reduced by fever, Dutch cyclist Erik Breukink and his PDM team withdrew Tuesday from the Tour de France, leaving leader Greg LeMond in a powerful position entering the Pyrenees Mountains.

Breukink pulled out before the start of the 11th stage with a bacterial infection that dropped him from second to third and forced five of his PDM teammates to withdraw on Monday.

"It's an infection due to the drinks in the bottles and maybe some food," PDM director Jan Gisbers said. "But I'm relieved to know that it's a bacterial disease, because you can cure it easier than if it would have been a virus."

Breukink had been second overall behind LeMond on Monday, but struggled to finish the 10th stage as he rode with a fever of 100 degrees.

Gisbers withdrew Breukink and his three remaining team members — Sean Kelly of Ireland, Raul Alcalá of Mexico, and Joseph Van Aert of the Netherlands — before the start of the 154-mile leg Tuesday from Quimper to St. Herblain.

"I'm shocked about what happened to the team," said LeMond, who kept the overall lead for the fourth straight day. "It's going to be mentally hard for Breukink, because he was going well."

LeMond finished 22nd in the 11th stage and his lead shrunk to 51 seconds.

Lehman looking for PGA return

John Shipley
Daily Iowan

For the No. 1 player on the Hogan Tour, achieving the ultimate goal of making the PGA Tour wasn't a problem. The problem was staying there.

A freshman walk-on at the University of Minnesota, Tom Lehman had never thought much about making professional golf his career. But after a successful collegiate career and some promising summers on the links, Lehman decided to give it a shot.

"The (PGA) Tour was always kind of a dream I never really thought much about," said Lehman, who currently leads the Hogan Tour money list at $82,000. "As I played in college I got better and better. When I finished college I had a couple of pretty good summers as an amateur, and I decided to turn pro and try the Tour school."

"I made it the first time I tried." But Lehman soon found out that there was more to the PGA than earning one's Tour card and playing a lot of golf. For Lehman, a small-town kid from Alexandria, Minn., making the PGA Tour at all initially seemed good enough.

"It seemed like getting on the (PGA) Tour was as far as my goal went," Lehman said. "I played professional golf, I made the tour and my goal was met — it was like I'd made it."

"As a result I struggled for three years, didn't make much money ... lost my card."

Lehman is the guy the Hogan Tour was made for.

As this year's top Hogan player, Lehman is well on his way to winning back his PGA Tour card. After finishing a solid 17th on the money list last year, Lehman is on pace to finish at the top this year. But he still has quite a bit of golf to play before that can happen.

"There's 12 tournaments left and I'd like to finish No. 1, so I've just got to keep playing hard," Lehman said. "Some guys might start thinking they've got a nice cushion and just sort of coast along, but that's not a very good way to look at it."

If Lehman seems somewhat cautious it's because the 32-year-old knows what it's like not to be on an organized tour. After losing his card in the mid-'80s, Lehman worked for a year as a golf pro-an experience that did not agree with him.

"I took a job working at a club for a year, I didn't like that at all," said Lehman, who made $42,000 on the Hogan Tour last year. "The See HOGAN TOUR, Page 7"

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Minority Leader Bob Dole voted Wednesday not to let Robert Gates, President Bush's nominee to head the CIA, become a victim of a parliamentary water torture.

In a statement, the Kansas Republican termed "unfortunate" Tuesday's decision by the Senate Intelligence Committee to put off confirmation hearings for Gates until Sept. 16.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Intelligence analysts say they cannot conclude whether a photo of men purported to be American prisoners in Southeast Asia is authentic, even after nine months of analysis.

Relatives of the men said to be pictured say they have no doubt it's real.

The group that released the photo, American Defense Institute, has made claims before of MIA sightings, but none has been confirmed, an Army official said in 1987 letter.

The Pentagon has had the photo showing three men holding a sign with a cryptic message since September 1990, said a Pentagon source.

Israeli warplanes blast southern Lebanon

RASHAYA, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes blasted Shiite Muslim guerrilla bases in two bombing raids Wednesday after three Israeli soldiers were killed and four wounded in a ground battle in southern Lebanon.

The air raids were the first of the Lebanese army moved into parts of southern Lebanon this month to regain control of the area and curb guerrilla activity after years of civil war. No immediate casualty reports came from the bases.

Envoy: Hitler wanted to kidnap Pope Pius XII

ROME (AP) — Adolf Hitler wanted to kidnap Pope Pius XII, according to a letter German wartime envoy to Italy wrote in 1943.

The letter by Rudolf Rahn is the most recent of several accounts indicating the German leader ordered or at least considered taking Vatican officials hostage during the war.

"It's true that the Gen. Karl Wolff (head of the SS in occupied Rome), a little after my arrival in September 1943, informed me of his conversation with Hitler about the plan for abduction of the pope," Rahn wrote.
