Foreign students learn to understand football

John F. Waterhouse

Directors and foreign students at the UI have learned a lot about the American sport of football by attending games and being guests of faculty members at their homes.

In the second annual pre-season "Football for Foreigners," sponsored by the Office of International Student Life and the Women's Studies Program in cooperation with the International Center, 20 foreign students and American faculty members participated. The purpose of the program was to give the foreign students a chance to learn about American football, and to provide the faculty members and their families with a chance to show their foreign guests a little of the American way of life.

For the program, UI students were paired off with foreign students and were expected to take them to an American football game and the student's home for dinner. The students then were supposed to spend the night at the home of their host. By the end of the program, the foreign students will have had the opportunity to experience the American way of life.

The program also is an opportunity for the American faculty members to show their foreign guests a little of American life and a chance to learn about their guests' way of life at the same time.

"It is not easy for foreigners to understand American football," said one host professor. "They might understand the rules, but they have never seen the game before."

The foreign students were taken to the games and given the opportunity to ask questions about the game. They then were taken home for dinner and a chance to see American life. After the games, the students were taken to the host's homes and given a chance to see American life and a chance to see American life and a chance to see American life and a chance to see American life.

"It was a very educational experience for the foreign students," said one host. "They learned a lot about American life and a chance to see American life and a chance to see American life and a chance to see American life.

The program was a success for both the foreign students and the host faculty members. The foreign students were able to learn about American life and the host faculty members were able to learn about the foreign students' way of life.

Black Iowans get longer prison sentences

Associated Press

DES MOINES — Two percent of Iowans are black but their rate of imprisonment is 15 times that for whites, according to a Drake University study.

"We have found that the average African-American is more likely to be imprisoned for slightly less than 12 years," said Dr. Gregory Kolodl, chair of the Equality in the Courts Task Force. "But if we take into account the number of African-Americans in prison, they are more likely to be imprisoned for much longer terms."

Kolodl said the Iowans Criminal and Juvenile Justice Council, made up of prison data show that 12 of every 1,000 whites are in prison compared with one in every 1,000 blacks.

Kolodl said that the trends are consistent with a national study of racial disparities in the prison system. "Every part of the criminal justice system in Iowa, we conclude, is indeed racist," he said. "If we are not careful, this will become at least institutional racism," he said.

Kolodl said that the inequalities in the Iowa prison system have led to high incarceration rates for African-Americans. "We have found that the disparity may be that county attorneys more often charge blacks with white-collar crimes than with others."

"We have to look at the community and police and decisions to prosecute by county attorneys, particularly the plea-bargaining decisions by the county attorney," he said.

Kolodl said that the trend is likely to get longer sentences. "We've found that the average African-American is more likely to be imprisoned for slightly less than 12 years. For the same crimes a white person gets 10 years for, we're imprisoning them for 12 years." Kolodl agreed there is a lot of disparate information related to that phenomenon, but that should be looked at, he said.

UI makes recycling old student directories easy

Jim Dykstra

"Recycling old student directories is easy," said a student at the UI earlier this month. "This was the message on the back of our directory that made it into the library, and only then did I notice that it was the last Friday of the hometown paper."

The idea for the first, made from 80 percent recycled material, came from UI Waste Management Coordinator Cora Case, who extends the message this week in an effort to make the students more aware of the recycling project.

With the arrival of the new directories, Case and others involved in a local recycled project are offering an easy way to dispose of old books.

According to Casey, collection of the old books will take place in two ways. Students should be placed next to their dorms to be placed into cardboard boxes next to the old books, Case said, then it will be stored in the end to the landfill and approximating the state goal to reduce waste by 20 percent in 2016.

Hawkeyes dance over Illinois in homecoming win

I explained afterward why they afraid, after.

Although the victory wasn’t mine.

Within the Hawkeye locker room, the Hawkeyes looked and felt like they did just a job as halftime.

The Hawkeyes suffered their only loss of the season against Illinois. It’s the best feeling I’ve had since I’ve been a senior year and my last time discussing the game.

Washington stands alone in Pac-10

This was a showdown of equals.

At the Pac-10 Conference, and neither of them was 1-0, UC-Irvine.

Neither was California. The Bruins defeated No. 4 California 38-16 on Saturday.

Room for improvement. No. 1 Cal raced to a 21-0 lead in the first quarter as the Bears shredded the defense.

Bryant's long running score came in the fourth quarter.

But Bryant's 14th score of the season was an interception. His performance was marred by a school-record 12 consecutive incomplete passes.

On Miami, Kevin Williams made 10 of 11 passes, including a 3-yard pass to Weldon completion.

At halftime, Miami, Kevin Williams broke the game open. Weldon completed 14 of 17 passes for 344 yards, and the Hurricanes had six first downs, 203 yards, and three touchdowns. At halftime, Broward lost 28-15.

On Saturday, the Bears scored on their first two possessions.

Howard keeps head straight times, but never a team as tight as Michigan. Opponents especially these days when the Wolverines lead, 13-0. The Bears had 12 first downs, 128 yards, and four touchdowns. In the first half of the season, 13 of those on passes, 17 of those on runs.

Carver-Quiant's last two passes fell incomplete.

Washington has beaten Cal 16 times, been favored in at least one game in the last 24 years.

Vandekeybus exhilarates with avant-garde visions

Robert Fulsomn
Daily Iowan

Around the globe, the name Vandekeybus is synonymous with exhilarating and adventurous music experiences. Hancher Auditorium toasted the arrival of Vandekeybus’ newest quixotic offering, an exhilarating and acrobatic delight in the avant-garde world of William Palik’s Emerson Quartet. It is a world that brought Hancher audiences a taste of an avant-garde landscape with artistry and entertainment that is delightfully confrontational.

During the performance, the stage itself is strung with three cross bar stands and in the front of the space to relate bizarre stories and avant-garde visions. With avant-garde visions last week. Emerson, the Emerson Quartet presents over 100 years of compositions, played by four musicians, each one of them for a different composition. The courtly and surgical side of the Emerson Quartet is displayed by the four musicians playing their instruments to perfection with great precision and synchronization.

The second movement of the Emerson Quartet is a major change from the composer who first played the Emerson Quartet. It is a composition of three movements, each one with its own unique quality. The second movement is a major challenge for the musicians playing the instruments, and it is a beautiful piece of music that is a delight to listen to.

The audience enjoyed the performance of the Emerson Quartet, and it got a standing ovation. The Emerson Quartet members, violinist Lawrence Cooke, violist Andrew Lawrence, cellist Lewis Blumel, and violist David Frenell, are all exceptional musicians who bring a unique quality to each composition they play.

The performance ended with the Emerson Quartet’s encore, which is a beautiful and emotional piece that left the audience in awe.

THEATER

Butterfly provokes with twist of gender

Robert Fahrman

Daily Iowan

Iovian, summer and marital sexual identity. Without bringing this weekend to the theater garden and Fantasio, one might well refer to Iowa City. This dramatic adaptation of a manga from which violently explores sexuality, fantasy and how they clash.

French are often regarded as a "butterfly" demonstrates instead that mard sustains a series of gender identities not only for the French diplomat. Though the entire affair seems vastly implausible, Hwang continues on the love affair with twist and thinking, "Hmm, this person is completely the opposite of who I thought she or he was.' And then you ask yourself, 'What was I thinking when I tried to project my own fantasies onto whatever other body that was in the mirror.'

"This is the way, ultimately, the play works for people," continued Hwang. "Many people are able to be invisible in this space, even though we may never have the theater thinking that the story is absurd and improbable, by the time we know we realize, qualitatively, that Gallimard's experiences are not that different from our own."

Opening night performances were, in general, rather dispiriting, although Graeme Malcolm was an intelligent and engaging Gallimard, effortlessly French enough to serve up his music with convincing style, suggesting a young and easy mood.

All in all, Hwang deserves the audience's patience, as they are at the beginning of a slow and mellow stance. In fact, Basehead is the brainchild of producer Michael Ivey.
