"Nothing has ever happened like this. Nothing of this magnitude." Jennifer Kelly, USA president

"It's a little hard to sort out your feelings right now," said Christine Hill, a journalism student and UI student. "How are you supposed to know how to react to something like this?"

"It wasn't just as if we were just being in two towns that aren't exactly close, but here we were. Something that we're familiar with happened here."

"It's just as if a bullet looped way from the shooting, playing tricks," said Jeff Hennerson, friend from Schaeffer Hall for a number of years.

"I was just scared to death, and I couldn't believe it was happening here. That I was just a couple blocks away from the shooting, playing tricks,",

Iowa State University, the nation's largest public research university, said on Friday that it would not change its gun-control policies after the shooting at Van Allen Hall.

"That's the wrong message," said David Horgan, the university's chief of police. "Gun control is a serious issue, and we need to take it seriously."
